1013. Except by permission of the judge of the provincial court, there is no appeal from any interlocutory order of that court which has not the effect of a definitive sentence ending the suit in that court. But an appeal lies to the archbishop, which is to be heard before the judge of the provincial court, from a judgment pronounced in the first instance by the bishop; and an appeal lies to the King in Council, which is to be heard before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, from a judgment of the provincial court, whether pronounced on an appeal from the judgment of a bishop, or, in the first instance, on a case sent to that court by letters of request (k).

Appeal.

1014. A monition not to commit the offence in future may be attached to the definitive sentence; and the clerk may be punished for disobeying it without a fresh suit (l).

Monition.

1015. Where the bishop who under the Act would do any act or exercise any authority other than sending a case by letters of request to the provincial court (m) is the patron of any preferment held by the accused clerk, the act or authority is to be done or exercised by the archbishop of the province (n).

Where bishop is patron of preferment.

(iv.) Procedure under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874.

1016. As an alternative to proceedings under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (o), proceedings may be taken under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (p), where in a cathedral or collegiate church, or in a parish or other church or churchyard or consecrated burial ground, (1) an alteration in or addition to the fabric ornaments or furniture has been made without lawful authority, or a decoration forbidden by law has been introduced, or (2) the person or persons in holy orders responsible for the performance of divine service in the church or of the burial service in the churchyard or burial ground have, within the preceding twelve months, used or permitted to be used an unlawful ornament of the minister or neglected to use a prescribed ornament or vesture, or (3) such person or persons have, within the preceding twelve months, failed to observe, or cause to be observed, the directions of the Book of Common Prayer as to cognisable.

Offences

(i) See note (p), pp. 641 et seq., post.

(j) Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), s. 14.

(k) Ibid., ss. 13, 15; Martin v. Mackonochie (1867), 36 L. J. (ECL.) 25, 28.

(l) Martin v. Mackonochie (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 697, C. A.; affirmed (1881)

6 App. Cas. 424, H. L.

(m) Cooper v. Dodd (1850), 2 Rob. Ecol. 270.

(n) Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), s. 24; Ex parte Denison (1854), 4 E. & B. 292; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1856), 6 E. & B. 546. Under s. 15 of the Act an appeal lies from the archbishop's decision to the provincial court (R. v. Arches Court (Judge) (1857), 7 E. & B. 315).

(o) 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86; see pp. 526 et seq., ante.

(p) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85; see s. 18, and Rules and Orders made by Order in Council of February 22nd, 1879 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 27 et seq.).

SECT. 4.
Practices.
—

the performance of the services, rites and ceremonies thereby ordered, or have made or permitted to be made an unlawful addition to, alteration of, or omission from such services, rites and ceremonies (q).

Proceedings before the
bishop.

1017. Proceedings are commenced by a representation to the bishop of the diocese in the form of a statutory declaration that the offence has been committed. It can be made by the archdeacon of the archdeaconry, or a churchwarden or three parishioners (r) of the parish, or, in the case of a cathedral or collegiate church, three inhabitants of the diocese of the male sex and of full age who have signed and transmitted to the bishop the prescribed declaration that they are members of the Church of England and have for the last year had their usual place of abode in the diocese (s). If the bishop, after considering the whole circumstances of the case, is of opinion that proceedings should not be taken on the representation (t), he states in writing the reason of his opinion, and the statement is deposited in the diocesan registry, and a copy is sent to the person or one of the persons who made the representation and to the accused person. Otherwise, within twenty-one days (u) after receiving the representation, the bishop transmits a copy to the accused person, and requires him and the person or persons making the representation to state in writing within twenty-one days whether they are willing to submit to the directions of the bishop in the matter without appeal. If both parties state their willingness so to do, the bishop proceeds to hear the matter in such manner as he thinks fit, and pronounces such judgment and issues any such monition as he thinks proper, without an appeal therefrom; but the judgment does not finally decide any question of law so as to prevent its being again raised by other parties (x). If the parties require the bishop to transmit to the judge of the provincial court for his opinion a special case stating questions arising in the proceedings and signed by them and by a barrister, the judge hears and determines the questions, and the judgment pronounced by the bishop is in conformity with his determination (y). If, on the other hand, either party does not, within the twenty-one days, express willingness to submit to the directions of the bishop in the matter, he is to transmit the representation in the prescribed mode to the archbishop of the province, who is to require the judge of the

(q) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), ss. 4—6, 8. In the case of an alteration in or addition to the fabric of a church, it must have been completed within the preceding five years (ibid., s. 8).

(r) The parishioners must be persons of the male sex and of full age, who before making the representation have signed and transmitted to the bishop the prescribed declaration that they are members of the Church of England and have for the last year had their usual place of abode in the parish (Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 6, Sched. A).

(s) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 8, Sched. B.

(t) If the bishop has come to this conclusion, his opinion cannot be overruled by mandamus (Allcroft v. London (Bishop), [1891] A. C. 666).

(u) If this time is exceeded, the proceedings are void (Howard v. Bodington (1877), 2 P. D. 203).

(x) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 9.

(y) Ibid.

provincial court to hear the matter at any place within the diocese or province or in London or Westminster (a).

SECT. 4.
Practice.

1018. The judge is to require security for costs from the accuser, and is to give not less than twenty-eight days' notice of the time and place of hearing. Within twenty-one days after the notice, the accused person is to transmit to the judge a succinct answer to the representation, and, in default of so doing, is deemed to have denied the truth or relevancy of the representation. The evidence is to be given orally on oath in open court; and the judge has the powers of a court of record, and may enforce the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents. The parties may appear in person, or by counsel, proctor, or solicitor. Unless the parties agree to the contrary, the judge must state the facts proved before him in the form of a special case; and, after pronouncing judgment, including such monition, if any, and such order as to costs as may be requisite, he must deliver to the parties on application a copy of the special case, and judgment, and send a copy to the bishop (b).

Proceedings
before the judge.

1019. An appeal from the judgment or monition lies to the King in Council (c).

Appeal.

1020. Where a bishop is the patron of the preferment held by the accused person or is disabled by illness, the archbishop of the province is to act in his place; and if an archbishop is such patron, or is so disabled, the King may appoint an archbishop or bishop to act in his place (d).

Where bishop is unable to act.

1021. In the case of a cathedral or collegiate church, the visitor takes the place of the bishop. The complaint is brought against the dean and chapter, if it is in respect of the fabric, ornaments or furniture, and against the clerk who has actually offended, if it is in respect of an ornament or vesture of the minister, or the conduct of the service (e).

Colleges and collegiate churches.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Enforcement of Sentences, Decrees, and Orders.

1022. A decree or order in a suit in favour of the promoter or plaintiff frequently contains or consists of a monition, admonishing the person charged or complained of not to continue or repeat the offence complained of, or to do some act making good the omission or the wrongful act in respect of proceedings in case of contempt (f).

Monition.

(a) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), ss. 9—15, 19; Hudson v. Tooth (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 46.

(b) Ibid.; Public Worship Regulation Act, Rules and Orders, rr. 14—81, and Appendix (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 30 et seq.).

(c) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), ss. 9, 11, 12; Rules and Orders, rr. 34—36 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 33, 34); and see pp. 500, 511, ante.

(d) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 16.

(e) Ibid., s. 17; Rules and Orders, rr. 43, 44 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, p. 35).

(f) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 191, 337; St. Puncras (Vestry) v. St. Martin-in-the-Fields (Rector) (1860), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 540; Fagg v. Lee (1873), L. R. 4 A. & E. 185, 141 et seq., 151; affirmed sub nom. Lee v. Fagg (1874), L. R. 6 P. O. 38.

SECT. 4.
Practice.
Contempt.

1023. If a person who is duly cited to appear in an ecclesiastical court or is required to comply with a lawful order or decree of the court, whether interlocutory or final, neglects or refuses to appear or to obey the order or decree, or if a person commits a contempt in the face of the court, the judge who issued the citation, or whose order or decree is being disobeyed, or before whom the contempt is committed, may pronounce him contumacious and in contempt, and may within ten days signify the same in the prescribed form (g) to the Lord Chancellor of England or Ireland, according to the domicile or residence of the person (h). Thereupon a writ de contumace capiendo in the prescribed form (i) issues out of the High Court in England or Ireland, as the case may be (k), directed to the sheriff or other officer to whom the serving and execution thereof appertains, or his deputy, returnable in the King's Bench Division in the term next after the teste of the writ, in the same manner and under the same regulations with respect to the proceedings thereon as was formerly the case in connection with the writ de excommunicato capiendo (l), and the sheriff, gaoler, or other officer thereupon executes the writ by taking and detaining the body of the person (m). On his due appearance or obedience to the decree or order, or submission in the case of having committed a contempt in the face of the court, the judge pronounces him absolved from the contumacy and contempt, and orders him to be discharged out of custody; and he is accordingly so discharged when he has paid the costs incurred by his custody and contempt (n). The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council or a judge of an ecclesiastical court, with the consent of the other parties to the proceedings, may at any time, if it seems

(g) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 127), s. 1, Sched. A.; R. v. Thorogood (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 183; R. v. Baines (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 210. A surrogate cannot signify the contempt (R. v. Jones (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 576).

(h) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3 c. 127), s. 1; Ecclesiastical Courts (Contempt) Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 93), s. 1; Hudson v. Tooth (1877), 2 P. D. 125. An order must be served on a party personally before he can be charged with contempt for disobeying it (Durant v. Durant (1822), 1 Add. 114).

(i) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 127), s. 1, Sched. B; Ecclesiastical Courts (Contempt) Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 93), s. 1; R. v. Buines, supra.

(k) Or out of the Chancery Court of Lancaster if the offender is within the County Palatine of Lancaster (Green v. Penzance (Lord) (1881), 6 App. Cas. 657).

(l) See stat. (1563) 5 Eliz. c. 23; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., pp. 250 et seq.; Dale's Case, Enraght's Case (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 376, C. A.; Green v. Penzance (Lord), supra.

(m) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 127), s. 1; Ecclesiastical Courts (Contempt) Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 93), s. 1.

(n) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 127), s. 1, Sched. C; Ecclesiastical Courts (Contempt) Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 93), ss. 1, 3; Baker v. Thorogood (1840), 2 Curt. 632, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 635; Dean v. Green (1882), 8 P. D. 79; Ex parte Cox (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 307. Where a beneficed clerk is in custody for contempt in disobeying an order made upon him in that capacity under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 86), and his benefice becomes vacant under s. 23 of the Act, the fact of his having vacated it purges his contempt and entitles him to his discharge without any submission on his part (Dean v. Green, supra). Where an incumbent was in custody for contempt in disobeying an order under the Act as to the mode of performing divine service, and the bishop appointed a curate who duly performed the service, the object of the punishment was held to be fit so to do, order the release of a person in custody under a writ de contumace capiendo issued in proceedings before them or him (o).

SECT. 4.
Practice.

1024. If a person is pronounced contumacious and in contempt for not paying money which he has been ordered by an ecclesiastical court to pay, sequestration may be issued out of the High Court of England or Ireland against his real and personal estate in England and Ireland respectively to enforce payment of the money (p).

Sequestration.

1025. Disobedience on the part of a clergyman to a decree or order of an ecclesiastical court is punishable by sequestration (q), suspension (r), and in some cases by deprivation (s).

Disobedience of clergyman.

Special provisions have been made by statute for cases of disobedience on the part of a clergyman to a monition or order of a bishop or the judge under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (t), or to a sentence or any requirement or direction in a sentence under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (u).

If a clerk wilfully disobeys a sentence under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (a), or any requirement or direction contained in the sentence, he may be cited before the consistory court in which the sentence was pronounced, instead of a writ de contumace capiendo being issued against him, and, subject to the like appeal as in the case of a judgment on a trial under the Act, he may be adjudged guilty and sentenced to such punishment as the gravity of the offence requires, including, where requisite, deprivation (b).

A clerk who has been suspended for a term and until after its expiration he produces a certificate of good conduct, and who resumes duty without producing such certificate, is guilty of contempt (c).

Resumption of duty during suspension.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Censures or Punishments.

1026. Ecclesiastical censures or punishments to which the clergy are liable consist of (1) monition (d); (2) inhibition unde. the Public attained, and the incumbent was released without submission and without payment of costs, but without prejudice to any other remedy for recovering the costs (Hudson v. Tooth (1877), 2 P. D. 125). As to discharge from custody, see also Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 93).

Classes of punishment.

(o) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 93); Baker v. Thorogood (1840), 2 Cur. 632; Hudson v. Tooth, supra, at pp. 137 et seq.

(p) Ecclesiastical Courts (Contempt) Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 93), ss. 2, 3.

(q) See pp. 616 et seq., post.

(r) Martin v. Mackonochie (1870), L. R. 3 P. C. 409; Hebbert v. Purchas (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 301; see p. 535, post.

(s) Combe v. De La Bere (1881), 6 P. D. 157; S. C. on prohibition (1882) 22 Ch. D. 316, C. A., per CHITTY, J., at pp. 319—323; Oxford (Bishop) v. Henly, [1909] P. 319, 330 et seq. But deprivation, deposition or excommunication cannot be inflicted by an interlocutory order for mere contumacy or contempt (Martin v. Mackonochie (1882), 7 P. D. 94, 101, P. C.).

(t) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85, s. 13; see p. 531, ante.

(u) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32, s. 7.

(a) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

(b) Ibid., s. 7; see p. 526, ante.

(c) Lincoln (Bishop) v. Day (1849), 1 Rob. Eccl. 724.

(d) See pp. 529, 531, ante, and p. 534, post.

SECT. 4.
Practice.

Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (e); (8) suspension; (4) sequestration (f); (5) deprivation and incapacity to hold preferment; (6) deposition from holy orders; (7) excommunication; and (8) penalties and forfeitures. They are inflicted as the result of proceedings duly taken for the purpose (g) and in consequence of the commission of some crime or ecclesiastical offence (h).

(i.) Monition.

Monition.

1027. Monition is a command or warning to a clerk to do or abstain from doing some act, the omission or commission of which constitutes an ecclesiastical offence, or to rectify some previous act, the commission of which was an ecclesiastical offence. It is usually accompanied by a condemnation of the offender to pay the costs of the proceedings (i).

(ii.) Inhibition under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874.

Inhibition.

1028. Obedience to a monition or order of a bishop or the judge in proceedings under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (j), for an offence cognisable under that Act, is enforced, if necessary by inhibition, in the prescribed manner (k).

37 & 38 Vict. c. 85, s. 13.

(f) See pp. 616 et seq., post.

(g) Ayl. Par. 209; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 50.

(h) Where a clerk is found guilty of an ecclesiastical offence, the court is bound to pass some sentence of censure or punishment upon him, but has, generally speaking, and in the absence of express enactment on the subject, a discretion as to its leniency or severity (Martin v. Mackonochie (1882), 7 P. D. 94, 99, P. C.). The sentence to be pronounced for publishing and maintaining doctrines contrary to the teaching of the Church is in the discretion of the court (Salisbury (Bishop) v. Williams (1862), 7 L. T. 472).

(i) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 191, 357. Monition is described in the books as of a preparatory nature, that is to say, as a warning or command to be followed in case of disobedience by some coercive sanction. It appears to have been a general, though not an invariable, rule of the canon law that monition ought to precede suspension or excommunication. It may be, and in practice it often is, issued for various purposes at the beginning or during the progress of an ecclesiastical cause; and it may be, and sometimes is, the sentence or part of a sentence upon the merits pronounced at the end of the cause (Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum, Vol. I., tit. 137, observat. 3; Gib. Cod. 1046, 1048; Mackonochie v. Penzance (Lord) (1881), 6 App. Cas. 424, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 433; Enraght v. Penzance (Lord) (1882), 7 App. Cas. 240, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 247). The ecclesiastical courts being organs of the Church for enforcing discipline, the power to make orders to do or abstain from doing something ascertained respectively to be right or wrong is part of their very essence; and without such power their use in many cases would be gone (Martin v. Mackonochie (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 697, C. A., per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 770). Disobedience to a monition can be punished by proceedings in the same suit on the footing of contumacy or contempt by further monition or inhibition and by suspension or excommunication (Hamerton v. Hamerton (1827), 1 Hag. Ecc. 23; Mackonochie v. Penzance (Lord), supra). A monition may prohibit not only the continuance or repetition of the same offence, but also the commission of offences of the same or a like nature (Cox v. Goodday (1811), 2 Hag. Con. 138, 142; Enraght v. Penzance (Lord), supra).

(j) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85. An inhibition on the ground of several acts of disobedience to a monition is good if it is justified by any one of the acts, although the others were not in fact breaches of the monition (Enraght v. Penzance (Lord), supra).

(k) Public Worship Regulation Act Amended Rules and Orders of 22nd February, 1879, rr. 37—42 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 34, 35, 49, 50).

(iii.) Suspension.

SECT. 4.

Practice.

Procedure in case of
suspension.

1029. Suspension may be ab officio only, or in the case of a beneficed clerk ab officio et a beneficio (l). In the former case it is an inhibition from performing clerical duties for a limited period (m). In the latter case, besides this inhibition from performing duties, it is for a limited period a deprivation of the enjoyment of the profits of the benefice (n), and during that period it virtually renders the benefice vacant (o). It is usually accompanied by a direction that at the end of the period a certificate from clergymen in the vicinity as to the offender's good behaviour during the period shall be produced before the suspension is taken off or relaxed (p). It is generally followed by the issue of sequestration to provide for the receipt and application of the profits of the benefice and the performance of the duties during the suspension (q). A sentence of suspension conditional on an affidavit being filed may be followed after the filing of the affidavit by an unconditional sentence of suspension (r). If a suspension is annulled upon appeal, the successful appellant is entitled to the profits of the benefice during the whole period of the suspension (a).

(iv.) Deprivation and Incapacity to hold Preferment.

1030. The punishment of deprivation of preferment (b) is imposed by statute in the case of certain offences or conduct either ipso facto or upon a declaration of deprivation which the statute requires to be made, and is decreed in the case of other grave offences by a definitive sentence in proceedings instituted for the purpose. When imposed.

(l) Ayl. Par. 501—503; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 667—669.

(m) Ayl. Par. 502, 503.

(n) Gib. Cod. 1047; Bunter v. Cresswell (1850), 14 Q. B. 825. Suspension deprives the incumbent of the profits although no sequestration has issued (Morris v. Ogden (1869), L. R. 4 C. P. 687). They belong, during the suspension, to the bishop, as paramount incumbent of all the parishes in his diocese, subject to proper provision being made thereout for the duties of the cure (Re Thakeham Sequestration Moneys (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 494). If at the time of the suspension the benefice is already under sequestration upon a judgment against the incumbent or for some other cause, the sequestration upon the suspension takes precedence, and the previous sequestration remains in abeyance during the suspension (Bunter v. Cresswell, supra).

(o) Gib. Cod. 1047; Pinder v. Barr (1854), 4 E. & B. 105, 114; Re Thakeham Sequestration Moneys, supra, at p. 499.

(p) Dickes v. Huddesford (1794), cited 1 Phillim. 278, n. (a); Watson v. Tharp (1811), ibid., 269, 271, 279, n. (a); Saunders v. Davies (1822), 1 Add. 291, 298—300; Lincoln (Bishop) v. Day (1849), 1 Rob. Eccl. 724; Ex parte Rose (1852), 18 Q. B. 751.

(q) Bunter v. Cresswell, supra; Morris v. Ogden, supra, at p. 702. Where suspension is inflicted in proceedings under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), the offender cannot during the period of suspension exercise or perform, without the leave of the court which inflicted the sentence, any right or duty belonging or incidental to the preferment, nor reside in the house of residence or within such distance therefrom as is specified in the sentence; and he is not readmitted at the end of the period until he has satisfied the court of his good conduct during the period (ibid., s. 6 (1) (c)).

(r) Combe v. De La Bere (1882), 22 Ch. D. 316, C. A.

(a) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 669.

(b) See also p. 533, ante.

SECT. 4. Where a statute imposes deprivation ipso facto as the punishment for an offence or misconduct, it is nevertheless necessary that the offence or conduct should be judicially proved (c).

Practice.

Refusing to use Book of Common Prayer.

1031. If an incumbent is convicted more than once in a temporal court of refusing to use the Book of Common Prayer and the forms therein prescribed, or of using any other form, or of preaching or speaking anything in derogation or deprivation of that book, he is, upon every or any such conviction after the first, deprived ipso facto of any preferment which he at the time holds (d).

In cases of inhibition.

1032. If for the purpose of enforcing obedience to a monition or order under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (e), either (1) an inhibition (f) is issued against the holder of a benefice or preferment and remains in force for more than three years from the date of the monition or the final determination of an appeal therefrom, or (2) a second inhibition is issued within three years after the relaxation of an inhibition, the benefice or preferment held by him in the parish in respect of which the inhibition is issued thereupon becomes void; but the bishop, for a special reason stated in writing, may postpone for not more than three months the date at which, unless the inhibition is relaxed, the benefice or preferment is to become void (g).

In cases of sequestration for non-residence.

1033. Where in proceedings under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (h), on account of the non-residence of an incumbent, a sequestration is issued against his benefice and continues for one whole year, or two sequestrations, from neither of which he is relieved on appeal, are issued within the space of two years, the benefice becomes void, and the incumbent cannot upon such avoidance be presented or nominated afresh to the benefice (i). "One whole year" does not mean one calendar year, but twelve calendar months from the date of the issuing of the sequestration (j).

Where on bankruptcy, or in aid of a writ of execution against property, a sequestration is issued against the benefice of an incumbent within twelve months after his institution, or a sequestration issued after that period continues for a whole year, or two

(c) Ayl. Par. 206—209. But a declaratory sentence of deprivation is not necessary (Green's Case (1602), 6 Co. Rep. 29 a, where the benefice was avoided, under stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 12, for not reading the Thirty-nine Articles as thereby prescribed).

(d) Stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 2; stat. (1559) 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2; Act of Uniformity, stat. (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 20. As to forfeiting a benefice by wilful failure to read the Thirty-nine Articles, and make the declaration of assent in the church of the benefice as required by law after institution or admission thereto, see p. 603, post.

(e) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85.

(f) See p. 534, ante.

(g) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 13. The provisions of the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 58, as to notice to the patron and as to lapse (see pp. 590 et seq., post) apply to any benefice or preferment so avoided; and the same person cannot again be promoted to it (Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 13).

(h) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 54—58.

(i) Ibid., s. 58.

(j) Re Bartlett (1848), 3 Exch. 28; Bartlett v. Kirwood (1853), 2 E. & B. 771.

SECT. 4.
Practice.

sequestrations are issued within the space of two years, the benefice becomes void; unless the bishop, within two months, by a notice by registered letter to the patron and incumbent of the benefice and the churchwardens of the parish, which is to be published in the London Gazette, directs that it shall not become void (k).

1034. If an incumbent is found guilty for a third time of unlawful trading or dealing he is to be deprived of his office and benefice (l). In cases of unlawful trading.

1035. The preferment of a clerk must be declared vacant under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (m), in certain cases enumerated above (n). Declaration of vacancy.

1036. In other cases an incumbent, if the interests of the parish or place in which he holds preferment appear so to require, may be sentenced to deprivation in proceedings against him in the consistory court of the diocese under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (o), when he is adjudged either to have been convicted by a temporal court of having committed an act constituting an ecclesiastical offence, or to have been guilty of any immoral act, immoral conduct, or immoral habit, or of any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, being an offence against morality, and not being a question of doctrine or ritual (p). For offences against morality etc.

1037. Where a sentence not amounting to deprivation is pronounced in the first instance, disobedience to it may be punished by a sentence of deprivation (q). For disobedience to sentence.

1038. A sentence of deprivation under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (r), is pronounced by the bishop (s). Sentence.

1039. Where under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (t), the preferment of an offender is declared vacant, or he is deprived thereof by sentence, he becomes incapable of holding preferment unless he receives a free pardon from the Crown, or except so far as his Incapacity to hold preferment.

(k) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 10; Benefices Rules, 1898, r. 14, Form No. 10 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. I., Benefice, England, pp. 3, 7). This does not apply to incumbents presented or collated before 1st January, 1899 (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 10).

(l) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 31.

(m) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

(n) See p. 523, ante.

(o) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

(p) Ibid., ss. 2, 6 (1) (a), (b). By s. 1 (5) of the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), these offences include the offence of having been knowingly party or privy to any transfer within the meaning of that section (see p. 583, post), or to a presentation or agreement which is invalid under that section, or of committing any breach of the promissory part of the declaration made under that section (see p. 594, post). In sentencing a clerk to deprivation or otherwise under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), regard is to be had to the interests of the ecclesiastical parish or place concerned and not to precedents of punishments (ibid., s. 6 (1) (a)).

(q) Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 7.

(r) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

(s) Clergy Discipline Rules, 1892, r. 31 (2) (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, p. 68); Canones Ecclesiastici (1803), 122; Canon Ecclesiasticus (1892), (t) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

SECT. 4.
Practices.

holding of some particular preferment is specially permitted by the bishop of the diocese and the archbishop of the province in which it is situate (a). If after he has been convicted by a temporal court and his preferment has been declared vacant he receives a free pardon from the Crown before another clerk is instituted to the preferment, he is to be again instituted and inducted into it without payment of any fee (b). In the case of an offending clerk who holds no preferment, a declaration that he is incapable of holding preferment is substituted for the declaration that his preferment is vacant, or he is sentenced to be incapable of holding preferment instead of being sentenced to deprivation (c).

Offences
other than against morality.

1040. In proceedings under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (d), for an offence in respect of doctrine or ritual, or for a breach of the laws ecclesiastical not being an offence against morality, the offender may be sentenced to deprivation (e) if adjudged guilty of any offences above mentioned as affording grounds for ipso facto deprivation on a second or subsequent conviction in a temporal court (f); or of any other breach of express ecclesiastical law (g); or of atheism, blasphemy, heresy, schism, or other false doctrine (h); or of assuming to exercise the episcopal function of ordination (i); or of flagrant and continued neglect of duty (k); or of waste or dilapidations (l). In proceedings either under that Act or under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (m), an offender may be sentenced to deprivation for incorrigible contumacy or disobedience to the orders of the bishop (n). The sentence may be pronounced either by the bishop or by the Dean of the Arches (o).

(a) Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 6 (2).

(b) Ibid., s. 1 (2).

(c) Ibid., s. 9 (1); Clergy Discipline Rules, 1898, r. 34 (in substitution for the previous r. 34 of the Clergy Discipline Rules, 1892) (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 69, 70).

(d) 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86.

(e) Ayl. Par. 208, 209. A sentence of deprivation need not be preceded by a previous suspension or monition (Burgoyne v. Free (1829), 2 Hag. Ecc. 456, 459, 662).

(f) Stat. (1559) 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 11 (see note (d), p. 655, post); Caudrey's Case (1591), 5 Co. Rep. (Of the King's Ecclesiastical Law) 1 u; Martin v. Mackonochie (1880), 6 P. D. 87; (1883) 8 P. D. 191; Combe v. De La Bere (1881), 6 P. D. 157; Heywood v. Manchester (Bishop) (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 404, 418—420.

(g) Cro. Jac. 37; Heywood v. Manchester (Bishop), supra.

(h) Specot's Case (1590), 5 Co. Rep. 57 a; stat. (1677) 29 Car. 2, c. 9; Gib. Cod. 1068; Heath v. Burder (1862), 15 Moo. P. C. C. 1; Voysey v. Noble (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 357.

(i) St Albans (Bishop) v. Fillingham, [1906] P. 163.

(k) Pullen v. Clewer (1684), 1 Hag. Ecc. 354, Appendix B.

(l) 3 Co. Inst. 204; Salisbury's (Bishop) Case (1614), Godb. 259; Ross v. Adcock (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 655, 664. But there is no recorded instance of deprivation inflicted on this ground (Gib. Cod. 1068).

(m) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85.

(n) Combe v. De la Bere (1881), 6 P. D. 157, 163—166, 169, 170; Oxford (Bishop) v. Henly, [1909] P. 319, 330 et seq.

(o) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 122; Pullen v. Clewer, supra, at p. 4; Rich v. Gerard (1690), 1 Hag. Ecc. 354, Appendix B, p. 7; Burgoyne v. Free (1829), 2 Hag. Ecc. 456, 494; Kitsen v. Loftus (1845), 4 Notes of Cases, 323, 350; Dunwell v. London (Bishop) (1861), 14 Moo. P. C. C. 395, 412, 413; Norwich (Bishop) v. Pearce (1868), 37 L. J. (ECCLES.) 90; Combe v. De la Bere, supra.

1041. The form of a sentence of deprivation by an ecclesiastical court extends to all ecclesiastical preferments within the jurisdiction of the court held by the offending clerk at the date of the sentence (p).

SECT. 4.
Practice.

Form of sentence.

(v.) Deposition.

1042. Where, under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (g), the preferment of a clerk is declared vacant or becomes vacant by virtue of a sentence of deprivation, or a clerk holding no preferment is either declared or sentenced to be incapable of holding preferment, and it appears to the bishop of the diocese that the clerk ought also to be deposed from holy orders, the bishop may, by sentence and without any further formality, depose him therefrom. But the clerk may within one month appeal against the sentence of deposition to the archbishop of the province, whose decision in the matter is final (r).

Deposition.

(vi.) Excommunication.

1043. An ecclesiastical court may pronounce or declare a person to be excommunicate in a definitive sentence or in an interlocutory decree having the effect of a definitive sentence, as a spiritual censure for an offence of ecclesiastical cognisance (s). A person so pronounced or declared excommunicate does not incur any civil penalty or incapacity in consequence of the excommunication, except such imprisonment, not exceeding six months, as the court pronouncing or declaring the excommunication directs (a).

Excommunication.

(p) Woodward v. Atwood (1666), Rothery's Precedents, No. 48, pp. 20, 21; Burgoyne v. Free (1829), 2 Hag. Ecc. 456; Voysey v. Noble (1871), 11 E. 3 P. C. 357, 408; Martin v. Duckenochie (1883), 8 P. D. 191.

(q) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

(r) Ibid., ss. 8, 9; Clergy Discipline Rules, 1898, r. 34 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 69, 70). The sentence of deposition is to be recorded in the registry of the diocese (Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 8). It need not be pronounced concurrently with the declaration or sentence of deprivation or of incapacity to hold preferment, but may be delivered after an interval has elapsed (R. v. Durham (Lord Bishop), [1897] 2 Q. B. 414), and may be pronounced by the bishop, after the archbishop has, in his absence or illness, declared the clerk to be deprived of his preferment, or to be incapable of holding preferment, under s. 1 (3) of the Act or the Clergy Discipline Rules, 1898 (ibid., per RIGBY, L.J., at p. 423). For deposition or degradation from holy orders, prior to and independently of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), see Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 122; Ayl. Par. 206—209; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., pp. 139, 140; Clarke v. II — (1846), 1 Rob. Eccl. 377, 380, n.

(s) Articles of Religion (1562), 33; Kemp v. Wickes (1809), 3 Phillim. 264, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at pp. 271, 272; Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 127), s. 2. Excommunication is the punishment prescribed for a violent assault in a church or churchyard (stat. (1552) 5 & 6 Edw. 3, c. 4, s. 2). By the Canons of 1603 excommunication ipso facto, or by condemnatory sentence, is prescribed as the penalty for impugning the position or constitution or the rites and ceremonies of the Church (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 2—12, 139—141). Ipso facto excommunication does not take effect without a declaratory sentence (Titchmarsh v. Chapman (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 370, at pp. 396, 397).

(a) Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 127), s. 3. If a term of imprisonment is directed, the excommunication and the term are signified or certified to the King in Chancery; and thereupon a writ de excommunicato capiendo issues, and the person being taken into custody remains in prison for the term or until he is absolved by the ecclesiastical court (ibid.). The punishment of excommunication has practically become obsolete.

SECT. 4.

Practice.

Penalties and forfeitures.

(vii.) Penalties and Forfeitures.

1044. Specific penalties or forfeitures are incurred by certain breaches of the provisions of the Pluralities Act, 1838 (b). If incurred by beneficed clerks they are recoverable in the consistory court of the diocese by a person authorised by the bishop, and the payment thereof may be enforced by monition and sequestration (c). If they are incurred by an unbeneficed clerk, or, under s. 59 of the Act, by a lay person, they may be recovered by any person by action in the High Court of Justice (d).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Faculty Cases.

(i.) Objects of Faculties.

When faculty is necessary.

1045. A faculty is generally necessary at law, and can in proper cases be obtained, to sanction an addition to, alteration in, or subtraction from a consecrated building (e) other than a cathedral (f) or the contents thereof, or a churchyard or other consecrated burial ground or the contents thereof (g). It is not

(b) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 114, 117—119; see pp. 557, 610, post. They can only be recovered in the same year in which they have been incurred, or in the following year (ibid., s. 118).

(c) Ibid., s. 114. The proceedings for their recovery from a beneficed clerk in the consistory court are in the nature of a civil suit and are not taken under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) (Bluck v. Rackham (1846), 5 Moo. P. C. C. 305; Rackham v. Bluck (1846), 9 Q. B. 691). The bishop is empowered to direct that, so far as not remitted, the penalties shall be applied towards augmenting or improving the benefice or the house of residence or any other buildings or property thereof (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 114). In other cases the penalties recovered are to be paid over to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty to be applied to the purposes of the Bounty (ibid., s. 119).

(d) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 117.

(e) Including a building on consecrated ground (Steeven v. St. Martin Orgars (Rector) (1824), 2 Add. 255; Campbell v. Paddington (Parishioners) (1852), 2 Rob. Eccl. 558; Hansard v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Parishioners) (1878), 4 P. D. 46).

(f) Phillpotts v. Boyd (1875), L. R. 6 P. C. 435, 456. The dean is the ordinary of a cathedral, and the bishop's only control over it is as visitor (ibid., at pp. 453, 454).

(g) Dewdney v. Good (1861), 7 Jur. (N. S.) 637, 638; Sieveling v. Kingsford (1866), 36 L. J. (ECC.) 1. Where anything has been added or altered without a faculty, what has been added or altered cannot legally be removed or restored without a faculty (Walker v. Clyde (1861), 10 C. B. (N. S.) 381; Ritchings v. Cordingley (1868), L. R. 3 A. & E. 113, 122; Vincent v. Eyton, [1897] P. 1, 12); but this does not affect the right of property in an article so added (Walker v. Clyde, supra).

When ground has once been consecrated, it cannot be definitely converted to secular purposes without an Act of Parliament (Campbell v. Paddington (Parishioners), supra, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 559; Harper v. Forbes (1859), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 275; R. v. Twiss (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 407, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 412). But faculties have in suitable cases been granted for the erection or construction on consecrated ground, in which no burials have taken place or can in future take place, of buildings or chambers for parochial or public purposes not of a purely ecclesiastical character (Campbell v. Paddington (Parishioners), supra; Russell v. St. Botolph, Bishopsgate (Parishioners) (1859), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 300; Re Bettison (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 294; Hansard v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Parishioners), supra; St. George's, Hanover Squares (Burial Board) v. Hall (1879), 5 P. D. 42; Re St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, Re necessary in the case of such trifling matters as hassocks and book-boxes (h). Burials can take place in churchyards and consecrated burial grounds without a faculty, and as regards churchyards the incumbent has the right, without a faculty, to sanction the erection of tombstones and monuments of an ordinary character and approve the inscriptions thereon (i), and as regards the consecrated portions of cemeteries established by cemetery companies and of burial grounds provided by local burial authorities, the control and management thereof respectively is in the companies (k) and the burial authorities (l). But an incumbent has no power to sanction the construction in a churchyard of monuments of an unusual size or character or of a vault or brick grave without a faculty (m), and his control over tombstones and ordinary monuments and the inscriptions thereon may be overridden by a faculty (n). Neither he nor the churchwardens nor a lay rector, where there is one, can erect or sanction the erection of any monuments or tablets on the walls of the church, St. Benet Fink Churchyard, [1893] P. 58), for a new footpath in a churchyard (Walter v. Mountague (1886), 1 Curt. 253), or the diversion of an old footpath therein (Tottenham (Vicar) v. Venn (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 221, 224, 225), for the laying out of consecrated ground as a public garden or otherwise for a non-ecclesiastical public purpose (Re St. George in the East (Rector) (1876), 1 P. D. 311), or for adding part of it to a public road for the sake of widening the road and rendering access to the rest of the ground more safe or convenient (St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar and One Churchwarden) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161; St. Nicholas, Leicester (Vicar) v. Langton, [1899] P. 19; Re Bideford Parish, Ex parte Bideford (Rector and One Churchwarden), [1900] P. 314). In such cases orders have been made dealing with private vaults (St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 173). See also title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 415 et seq.

SECT. 4.
Practices.

(h) Parham v. Templar (1821), 3 Phillim. 515, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 527.

(i) Maidman v. Malpas (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 205, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 208; Brecks v. Woolfrey (1838), 1 Curt. 880, 903; Keet v. Smith (1875), L. R. 4 A. & E. 398, per Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, at pp. 413, 414; Pearson v. Stead, Stead v. Pearson, [1903] P. 66.

An incumbent may level the ground above a grave without a faculty (Bennett v. Bonaker (1829), 3 Hag. Ecc. 17, 51, 52).

(k) Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 65); R. v. Tristram (1899), 80 L. T. 414. But the bishop of the diocese and all persons acting under his authority have the same right and power to object to and to procure the removal of a monumental inscription within the consecrated part of the cemetery as he has by law to object to and procure the removal of a monumental inscription in a church or the burial ground belonging thereto or in any other consecrated ground (Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 65), s. 51). And a body buried in the consecrated part of the cemetery is not removable from its place of burial without the like authority as is by law required for the removal of a body buried in the churchyard of a parish church (ibid., s. 26). See, generally, title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 520 et seq.

(l) Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), s. 38. Any question as to the fitness of a monumental inscription placed in the consecrated part of the burial ground is to be determined by the bishop of the diocese (ibid.). See, generally, title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 465, 511.

(m) Bardin v. Calcott (1789), 1 Hag. Con. 14; Rugg v. Kingmill (1868), L. R. 2 P. O. 59; and as to brick graves see Gilbert v. Buzzard (1821), 2 Hag. Con. 333, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 353.

(n) Rugg v. Kingmill, supra; Keet v. Smith, supra, reversed on appeal (1876) 1 P. D. 73, P. O.; Pearson v. Stead, Stead v. Pearson, supra. The interment in church of cremated ashes has been sanctioned by a faculty (Re Kerr, [1894] P. 284).

SECT. 4.
Practice.

whether inside or outside, without a faculty (o). And human remains, after having been once committed to consecrated ground, whether in a vault beneath a church or in a churchyard, or in the cemetery of a company, or in the burial ground of a local authority, cannot be disinterred for the purpose of reinterment elsewhere, or for any other purpose, without a faculty (p).

Faculties have been granted for appropriating a pew or seat in a church to a man and his family while continuing to inhabit the parish or a certain house in the parish, or to the occupiers for the time being of a certain house in the parish (q); and for conferring on an individual the perpetual and exclusive right of interment of himself and his family in a vault beneath a church or in a churchyard, or the right to construct a brick grave with or without the exclusive right of burial therein (r); but such faculties are not granted at the present day except under very special circumstances (a).

Faculties will be granted for the pulling down and rebuilding of a church (b), or the removal of a church to another site (c), or the pulling down of an old church on the erection of a new one elsewhere (d).

Faculties have been granted, in consideration of a specific sum of money or annual rent, for the construction and use of a private pathway, enclosed by railings, across a churchyard closed for

(o) Maidman v. Malpas (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 205; Seager v. Bowle (1823), 1 Add. 541.

(p) Gib. Cod. 454; St. Pancras (Vestry) v. St. Martin in the Fields (Vicar) (1860), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 540; Adlam v. Colthurst (1867), L. R. 2 A. & E. 30; St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar and One Churchwarden) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161; St. Helen's, Bishopsgate with St. Mary, Outwich (Rector etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 259; R. v. Tristram, [1898] 2 Q. B. 371; Lee v. Hawtrey, [1898] P. 63; St. Nicholas, Leicester (Vicar) v. Langton, [1899] P. 19; even though the removal has been directed by an Order in Council (St. Mary-at-Hill with St. Andrew Hubbard (Rector etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 394; St. Michael Bassishaw (Rector etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1893] P. 233). In certain circumstances a faculty will be granted for the removal of the remains to unconsecrated ground (Re Talbot, [1901] P. 1). But in that case the licence of the Home Secretary is also necessary (ibid., at p. 6), though unnecessary for a removal to consecrated ground (Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81), s. 25; Druce v. Young, [1899] P. 84). A faculty may be granted for the exhumation of remains for the purpose of inspection (Re Pope (1851), 15 Jur. 614; Druce v. Young, supra), but not for the purpose of cremation (Re Dixon, [1892] P. 386). See also title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 553 et seq.

(q) Fuller v. Lane (1823), 2 Add. 419, 426, 427; West Peckham (Vicar) v. Geary (1889), Trist. 189, 207, 208; Lightfoot v. Eastwood (1889), Trist. 248. A grant of a pew to a man and his heirs simply would be illegal (Drubin and Tradum's Case (1618), Poph. 140).

(r) Rosher v. Northfleet (Vicar) (1825), 3 Add. 14; Pitcher v. Northfleet (Vicar) (1825), 3 Add. 15; The Perivale Faculty, De Romana v. Roberts, [1906] P. 332.

(a) Fuller v. Lane, supra; Woollocombe v. Ouldridge (1825), 3 Add. 1; Rosher v. Northfleet (Vicar), supra; Pitcher v. Northfleet (Vicar), supra; West Peckham (Vicar) v. Geary, supra, at p. 207.

(b) Holy Trinity, Kingsway (1909), Times, August 6th.

(c) Clayton v. Dean (1849), 7 Notes of Cases, 46.

(d) Steven v. St. Martin Orgars (Rector etc.) (1824), 2 Add. 255; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 1; St. Mary, Bishopstoke (1909), 21 T. L. R. 86; S. C., on appeal sub nom. Paddington v. Sedgwick (1909), Times, December 17th, P. C.

burials (e), and for an easement of light and air over consecrated ground (f), and for interference with the ancient lights of a consecrated building (g). SECT. 4.
Practice.

1046. Where a monition is issued under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (h), to do an act which in the absence of a monition could not be lawfully done without a faculty, it is not necessary to obtain a faculty from the ordinary in order lawfully to obey the monition (i). If the monition directs that a faculty shall be applied for, such fees only are to be paid for it as are directed by the rules and orders (k). After monition.

1047. Where an addition, alteration or subtraction, which in law required a faculty, has been made without one, a confirmatory faculty will, in suitable cases, be granted to legalise what has been done (l). On the other hand, where ornaments have been improperly removed from a church without a faculty, and a faculty to confirm the removal is applied for, a faculty authorising and ordering their replacement will, in a proper case, be issued (m). Confirmatory faculty.

1048. The repair of tombs or monuments does not require a faculty, but the leave of the churchwardens, which they are bound to grant, should be previously obtained (n); and generally mere repairs do not require the sanction of a faculty (o). Repairs.

1049. Except where the bishop with the consent of the patron gives a written authority for the removal of an unnecessary building belonging to or forming part of the house of residence (p), a faculty Globe buildings.

(e) St. Gabriel, Fenchurch Street (Rector) v. City of London Real Property Co., [1896] P. 95.

(f) St. Stephen, Walbrook (Rector) v. Sun Fire Office (Trustees) (1883), Trist. 103; St. Martin Orgars (1890), Trist. 145.

(g) St. Mark's, Old Street (1903), Times, August 6th; Christ Church, Newgate Street (1909), Times, November 27th.

(h) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85.

(i) Ibid., s. 14.

(k) Ibid. Nothing in the Act is to be construed to limit or control the discretion vested by law in the ordinary as to the grant or refusal of a faculty; and a faculty is on application to be granted if unopposed on payment of such fee (not exceeding two guineas) as is prescribed by the Rules and Orders, in respect of any alteration in or addition to the fabric of any church or in respect of any ornaments or furniture, not being contrary to law, made or existing in any church at the time of the passing of the Act (ibid.). As to the fees payable for faculties generally, see p. 548, post.

(l) Sieveking v. Kingsford (1866), 36 L. J. (ECCL.) 1; Gardner v. Ellis (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 265; Bradford v. Fry (1878), 4 P. D. 93. Where a petition has been presented for a faculty for the removal of additions introduced without a faculty and citation has issued thereon and a petition is presented for a confirmatory faculty legalising the additions, a fresh citation is not necessary (Sieveking v. Kingsford, supra; Gardner v. Ellis, supra).

(m) Tetbury (Vicar) v. Churchwardens etc. of Same (1885), cited [1892] P. 271, n. (2).

(n) Bardin v. Calcott (1789), 1 Hag. Con. 14, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 16.

(o) St. Stephen, Walbrook (Rector) v. Sun Fire Office (Trustees), supra, at p. 108.

(p) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 71.

SECT. 4. is desirable and proper for the removal of or for any material alteration in glebe buildings (g).
Practice.

(ii.) Procedure to obtain Faculties.

Petition.

1050. Proceedings on an application for a faculty are instituted in the consistory court of the diocese, and are commenced by a petition, which is usually presented by the incumbent and churchwardens, with or without the addition of other parishioners (r) ; but it may be presented by any parishioner (s).

Consent of vestry.

1051. The whole body of parishioners are interested in the church and churchyard (t), and, therefore, except in the case of an application for a faculty for the placing of a monument or tablet in the church or churchyard (u), or for the removal of an illegal ornament or structure in respect of which no option is permissible (x), the petition must ordinarily show that the application has been approved by the parishioners in vestry assembled (a).

Intervention of bishop.

1052. The bishop cannot personally intervene in a matter requiring a faculty, and his doing so may lead to misapprehension and mistake (b).

Citation.

1053. On presentation of the petition, unless the faculty prayed for would be manifestly illegal or otherwise objectionable, a citation is issued in general terms to all persons interested, and, if the incumbent or churchwardens are not parties to the petition, to those individuals personally, requiring them to appear and show cause if they oppose the faculty. If any illegality or other objection appears on the face of the petition, the applicants will be heard upon it ex parte, and the citation will only issue if they justify the petition. But if the petition appears prima facie to be in order, the citation will at once issue. Where parties are cited individually, it is served upon them personally, but a general citation is published by being affixed at or near the church door and remaining so affixed for the time prescribed by the rules in force in the diocese.

(g) Huntley v. Russell (1849), 13 Q. B. 572, 589.

(r) The concurrence of both churchwardens is not essential (Bradford v. Fry (1878), 4 P. D. 93, per Dr. ROBERTSON, at p. 99; St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar and One Churchwarden) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161); and in a proper case a faculty will be granted in spite of the opposition of both churchwardens (St. Anne's, Limehouse (Rector) v. Parishioners of Same, [1901] P. 73).

(s) Kensit v. St. Ethelburga, Bishopsgate Within (Rector), [1900] P. 80; Davey v. Hinde, [1901] P. 95; S. C., on second hearing, [1903] P. 221. In the case of St. Margaret's, Westminster, a member of Parliament may petition (Vincent v. Eytton, [1897] P. 1, 10).

(t) St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar and One Churchwarden) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161, 167.

(u) Maidman v. Malpas (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 205.

(x) See cases cited in note (g), p. 545, post.

(a) Groves v. Hornsey (Rector) (1793), 1 Hag. Con. 188; St. John's, Margate (Churchwardens) v. Parishioners (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 198; Clayton v. Dean (1849), 7 Notes of Cases, 46, 53; Jackson v. Singer (1868), 37 L. J. (ECCL.) 9; Evans v. Slack (1869), 38 L. J. (ECCL.) 38. See pp. 545 et seq., post.

(b) Harper v. Forbes (1859), 5 Jur. (N. S.) 275, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 276.

The citation is then returned with a certificate indorsed thereon of due service or publication, as the case may be (c).

SECT. 4.
Practice.

1054. A faculty is opposed by the entry of an appearance and subsequent proceedings according to the practice of the different consistory courts (d). It can only be opposed by persons having the same interest as would entitle them to apply for a faculty (e). Parishioners who do not appear in response to the application must be taken to assent to the application (f).

Opposition.

(iii.) Grant of Faculties.

1055. A faculty will not be granted to sanction illegal ornaments or furniture (g), but will be granted as a matter of course to remove illegal furniture or ornaments, even though they were in the church at the time of its consecration (h). Where it is doubtful whether the grant of the faculty would contravene a statute, time should be given for proceedings in prohibition to be instituted (i).

Principles governing grant or refusal of faculty.

Where no question of illegality is involved, the grant or refusal of a faculty is in the discretion of the court; but it must be a sound discretion, having due regard to times and circumstances and to the rights and interests of all parties concerned (k). If it is applied for by the incumbent and churchwardens, with the consent of the vestry, and is not opposed, it will ordinarily be granted in the absence of any serious objection (l). If it is opposed, the case will be tried and decided according to the merits (m). The attitude of the vestry, though it must always be ascertained, except with regard to monuments and tablets (n), and great weight is always attached

(c) Rules of the Consistory Court of London (Trist. 289 et seq.; Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. IV., Ecclesiastical Court, England, pp. 1 et seq.); Rules of the consistory courts of the different dioceses (Phillimore, Ecclesiastical Law, 2nd ed., Vol. II., pp. 998 et seq.; and the annual Diocesan Calendars or Directories of the various dioceses; see p. 520, ante).

(d) See note (u), p. 520, ante.

(e) See p. 544, ante; Hansard v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Parishioners) (1878), 4 P. D. 46, 54, 55. A person on behalf of the bishop has no locus standi to oppose a faculty (Lee v. Fagg (1874), L. R. 6 P. O. 38).

(f) St. John's, Margate (Churchwardens) v. Parishioners (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 198, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir W. SCOTT), at p. 200.

(g) St. Barnabas, Pimlico (Vicar) v. Bowron (1873), Trist. 1, 16; St. Ethelburga Faculty Case (1878), Trist. 69, 71; Re St. James the Great, Buxton, St. John the Baptist, Buxton (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, [1907] P. 368, 376. As to what furniture and ornaments are illegal, see pp. 667 et seq., post.

(h) Westerton v. Liddell, Beal v. Liddell (1855), Moore's Special Report, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 77; Davey v. Hinde, [1901] P. 95, 116.

(i) Re Kerr, [1894] P. 284, 293.

(k) Woollocombe v. Ouldrige (1825), 3 Add. 1, 5; Butt v. Jones (1829), 2 Hag. Eco. 417, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 424; Sergeant v. Dale (1875), Trist. 33, per Dr. TRISTRAM, at p. 37; Egerton v. Odd Rods (All), [1894] P. 15; St. James, Norland (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, [1894] P. 256, 257, 258.

(l) St. Augustine, Haggerstone, Faculty Case (1877), Trist. 60, 63; St. Ethelburga Faculty Case (1878), Trist. 69; Woodward v. Folkestone (Parishioners) (1880), Trist. 177. A faculty for an object which, though not actually illegal, is inexpedient and likely to produce trouble, should be refused (Rugg v. Kingmill (1868), 3 Moo. P. O. O. 78, 88).

(m) Peck v. Trower (1881), 7 P. D. 21.

(n) Maidman v. Malpas (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 205.

SECT. 4.
Practice.

to it, is not an absolutely determining factor in the case (o). The absence of strict legal form in the summoning or holding of the vestry will not be regarded as absolutely essential (p); and a faculty may be granted in spite of the disapproval of the vestry or of the majority of the parishioners (q), or may be refused in spite of their approval (r). Under special circumstances the votes of Church members and non-Church members of the vestry will be discriminated (s). Memorials of parishioners for or against the faculty may be taken into account, though they do not ordinarily weigh against the resolution of the vestry on the subject (t). A faculty has been granted without the consent of the select vestry of the civil parish (a) and for the church of a new ecclesiastical parish without the consent of the vestry of the civil parish of which it forms part (b).

Consents of rector and vicar.

1056. The consent of a vicar, where he is not the freeholder of the fabric or soil which will be affected by the faculty, is not essential to the grant of it (c), but the rights of a rector over the fabric of the chancel and other common law rights cannot be overridden by a faculty (d).

Miscellaneous matters.

1057. A faculty will be granted, in a proper case, notwithstanding the opposition of persons interested in graves which will be affected by the proposed work (e).

On the hearing of an application for a faculty it may be necessary to decide whether any freehold rights will be affected by granting it (f).

(o) Groves v. Hornsey (Rector) (1793), 1 Hag. Con. 188, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 189; Clayton v. Dean (1849), 7 Notes of Cases, 46, 53.

(p) Thomas v. Morris (1823), 1 Add. 470.

(q) Groves v. Hornsey (Rector), supra; St. John's, Margate (Churchwardens) v. Parishioners (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 198, 200; Butterworth v. Walker (1765), 3 Burr. 1689, 1692; Nickalls v. Briscoe, [1892] P. 269; St. Anne's, Limehouse (Rector) v. Parishioners of Same, [1901] P. 73.

(r) Woodward v. Folkestone (Parishioners) (1880), Trist. 177; Peck v. Trower (1881), 7 P. D. 21.

(t) Tottenham (Vicar) v. Venn (1874), L. B. 4 A. & E. 221.

(s) Tetbury (Vicar) v. Churchwardens of Same (1885), cited [1892] P. 271, n. (2); but see Nickalls v. Briscoe, supra, at p. 273, and per Lord PENZANCE, at p. 279.

(a) Richmond (Vicar) and St. Matthias, Richmond (Chapelwardens) v. All Persons having Interest, [1897] P. 70, 76; St. Anne's, Limehouse (Rector) v. Parishioners of Same, supra.

(b) Re St. Mark's, Wimbledon, Wimbledon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. Eden, [1908] P. 167, 170.

(c) Rich v. Bushnell (1827), 4 Hag. Ecc. 164, 173.

(d) St. George, Hanover Square (Rector) v. Stewart (1739), 2 Stra. 1126; Maidman v. Malpas (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 205, 211; Rich v. Bushnell, supra, at p. 172. But a rector cannot claim, as a matter of right, to make a vault under a chancel or affix a tablet on the walls (ibid., at p. 171). If a faculty for work in the chancel, for which the rector's consent is necessary in law, is granted without that consent, the remedy lies not in prohibition, but in appeal (Bulmer v. Hase, (1803), 3 East, 217). If the work is carried on without his consent, he can, in spite of the faculty, maintain an action of trespass against the party executing it (ibid., at p. 220).

(e) St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar and One Churchwarden) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161, 166 et seq.; St. Andrew's, Hove (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. Mawn (1894), cited [1895] P. 228 et seq., n. (4).

(f) Shotton v. Friend (1689), 2 Salk. 547; Walter v. Mountague (1836), 1 Curt.

SMO. 4.
Practice
—

Where a faculty is granted, the work authorised must be done within a reasonable time (g).

A faculty for the erection of bells will not be granted where there is a risk of annoyance being caused by their being rung with unnecessary frequency or for an unnecessary length of time (h); and an agreement restricting the ringing of the bells will be sanctioned by a faculty (i).

A faculty may be granted subject to a reservation as to ordering the removal of the furniture for which it is granted if ornaments are afterwards introduced without a faculty or unlawful services are performed in the church (j).

A faculty has been granted to a corporation (k).

1058. Applicants for a faculty for alterations in a church or churchyard, except where it is applied for to redress a previous unauthorised alteration, pay the costs incurred by them in order to obtain it (l); but a party who unreasonably opposes the application is condemned in the costs occasioned by his opposition. Where, however, the opposition is reasonable, both parties are left to bear their own costs of the proceedings (m). Where the opposition of a party is partially successful, a proportion of his costs will be allowed against the applicants (n). Costs.

(iv.) Appeals.

1059. An appeal in a faculty case, as in other cases (o), lies from the consistory court to the provincial court (p), and thence to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (q). On an appeal to the provincial court an inhibition and citation will issue to the chancellor of the consistory court and the respondents to the appeal in the suit, inhibiting them from doing anything to the prejudice of the appellant pending the appeal (r). By the leave of the court and with the consent of all parties, additional parishioners may be allowed to intervene in the appeal for the purpose of praying for and obtaining a confirmatory faculty in connection with the matters in Procedure on appeal.

253, 260; Knapp v. St. Mary, Willesden (Parishioners) (1851), 2 Rob. Eccl. 358; West Peckham (Vicar) v. Geary (1889), Trist. 189, 215; and see note (d), p. 514, ante.

(g) St. Jude, South Kensington (Vicar) v. Parishioners (1877), Trist. 267, 270.

(h) Ibid.

(i) St. Jude's, Hampstead (1909), Times, August 6th.

(j) St. Anne's, Limehouse (Rector) v. Parishioners of Same, [1901] P. 73.

(k) St. Nicholas, Leicester (Vicar) v. Langton, [1899] P. 19, 35, 36; St. Mary-le-Strand Churchyard (1901), Times, March 5th.

(l) Lightfoot v. Eastwood (1889), Trist. 248, 265, 266.

(m) St. Sepulchre (Vicar) v. St. Sepulchre (Churchwardens) (1879), Trist. 92, 102; Lightfoot v. Eastwood, supra, at p. 266; Davey v. Hinde, [1901] P. 95, 125.

(n) Tottenham (Vicar) v. Venn (1874), Trist. 20, 32, 33.

(o) See pp. 500, 508, 511, ante.

(p) Cart v. Marsh (1737), 2 Stra. 1080; Butt v. Jones (1829), 2 Hag. Ecc. 417, 424; Bradford v. Fry (1878), 4 P. D. 93. For the Arches Court Rules of September, 1903, as to appeals in faculty cases, see Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, [1906] P. 262, n. (1).

(q) Keel v. Smith (1875), 1 P. D. 73. If the appeal is allowed, the suit is remitted to the Arches Court to give effect to the decision (ibid., at p. 80).

(r) Bradford v. Fry, supra, at p. 101.

SMOT. 4.
Practice.

dispute in the suit (s). Fresh evidence may be admitted on the appeal (t). But after a decision has been given on the appeal, the case cannot be reopened on fresh facts being adduced (a). If a faculty has been refused in the consistory court, and that decision is reversed either by the provincial court or in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the faculty may issue out of the provincial court (b), or the cause may be remitted to the consistory court in order that the faculty may issue thence (c).

(v.) Enforcement of Faculties.

Injunction. 1060. An injunction can be obtained from the High Court of Justice against making an alteration in a church or churchyard without a faculty (d).

Disobedience. 1061. Disobedience to a faculty, or action in excess of a faculty, will be censured by a monition requiring obedience or abstention from the excess in future, and by an order to pay the costs of the proceedings instituted to remedy it (e). Deviations from the terms of a faculty are a contempt of court; but if innocently perpetrated they may be condoned on payment of the costs of proceedings taken to rectify them (f).

Default. 1062. A faculty to a vicar and churchwardens to remove certain ornaments may provide that, in the event of their failing to do so within a specified time, the petitioners shall be at liberty to remove them (g).

(vi.) Fees for Faculties.

Fees. 1063. The fee payable for a faculty, if unopposed, for such minor alterations as the chancellor of the diocese enumerates (h), or for the removal of glebe buildings (i), is £2 2s., and for other alterations in churches and churchyards £4 14s. 6d. (j). The fee for a (e) Bradford v. Fry (1878), 4 P. D. 93, 102.

(t) Re St. Anselm, Pinner, [1901] P. 202, 211.

(a) Bradford v. Fry, supra, at pp. 111, 112.

(b) Keet v. Smith (1875), 1 P. D. 73, at p. 80; Bradford v. Fry, supra, at p. 111.

(c) Re St. James the Great, Buxton, St. John the Baptist, Buxton (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, [1907] P. 368, 381.

(d) Marriott v. Tarpley (1838), 9 Sim. 279; Cardinall v. Molyneux (1861), 4 De G. F. & J. 117, C. A. For remedies under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), see ibid., ss. 8, 9, 13, 14; and pp. 529 et seq., ante.

(e) St. Pancras (Vestry) v. St. Martin-in-the-Fields (Vicar) (1860), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 546; Lee v. Herne (Vicar) (1892), Trist. 217.

(f) Lee v. Herne (Vicar), supra.

(g) Davey v. Hinde, [1903] P. 221, 237, 238; Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, [1906] P. 239, 262.

(h) For the enumeration of these in the various dioceses, see the annual Diocesan Calendars or Directories.

(i) See p. 543, ante.

(j) Table of Ecclesiastical Fees settled pursuant to the provisions of the Pluralities Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106) and the Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 135), and published in the London Gazette, June 2nd, 1908. As to the fee for a faculty directed to be applied for in a monition under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), see note (k), p. 543, ante.

faculty for the disinterment and removal of human remains varies in different dioceses (k).

SECT. 1.
Practice.

(vii.) Revocation and Modification of Faculties.

1064. The grant of a pew to a parishioner and his family by faculty, if duly made, is irrevocable (l), unless it is of undue extent, or has been obtained fraudulently and surreptitiously (m). And generally, a faculty cannot be revoked even though it has been granted in error (n). But where a faculty is granted for movable seats, their position can afterwards be altered in case of complaint (o). And a faculty for furniture may reserve power to the court to order the removal of the furniture in the event of ornaments being introduced without a faculty or of any unlawful service being performed (p).

Revocation
etc.

A cause of faculty will not be reopened on new facts being adduced after the order in it has been made, except for very strong reasons (q).

An article of furniture or ornament introduced under a faculty may be removed under another faculty (r).

Part IV.—Clergy.

SECT. 1.—Orders.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Ordination.

1065. There are three orders of ministers (a) in the Church of England—bishops, priests, and deacons. Before they can execute the functions of those orders they must, unless they have already had episcopal consecration or ordination, be called, tried, examined

Orders of the ministry and admission
thereto.

(k) See note (n), p. 520, ante.

(l) Fuller v. Lane (1825), 2 Add. 419, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 431. But in the case of the erection of a new church or other change of circumstances the position of a faculty pew or vault may be changed, or the right to the faculty pew may be transferred to the new church (West Peckham (Vicar) v. Geary (1889), Trist. 189, per Dr. TRISTRAM, at pp. 207, 208; Lightfoot v. Eastwood (1889), Trist. 248; St. Botolph without Aldgate (Vicar and One Churchwarden) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161, per Dr. TRISTRAM, at pp. 167, 168).

(m) Butt v. Jones (1829), 2 Hag. Eec. 417.

(n) London County Council v. Dundas, [1904] P. 1.

(o) Eld v. Perry (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 228, 229.

(p) St. Anne's, Limehouse (Rector) v. Parishioners of Same, [1901] P. 73.

(q) Bradford v. Fry (1878), 4 P. D. 93, per Lord PENZANCE, at p. 110.

(r) St. John's, Margate (Churchwardens) v. Parishioners of Same (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 198, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 202.

(a) In stat. (1571) 13 Elis. c. 12, s. 4, and Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 31, 32, the word "minister" means a priest, in contrast to a deacon. But it may be applied to a person in any order of the ministry (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 33; Read v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1889), 14 P. D. 146). The word sacerdotium may include the diaconate, though it more properly refers to the priesthood (Re University College, Oxford (1848), 2 Ph. 521, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 524).

SECT. 1.
Orders.

Ages of admission.

and admitted thereto according to the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons authorised by the Act of Uniformity, 1662 (b). The minimum age for a bishop is thirty years; for a priest, twenty-four years; and for a deacon, unless he have a faculty from the Archbishop of Canterbury, twenty-three years (c).

Time and place of
ordination.

1066. The proper times for ordination are the Sundays immediately following the four Ember weeks (d), but on urgent occasions it may take place on some other Sunday or holy day (e). It should be held in the cathedral or parish church in the place where the bishop resides, in the time of divine service, in the presence of the archdeacon, and of the dean and two prebendaries, or of four other beneficed or licensed clergymen being masters of arts (f).

Title to
orders.

1067. A person desiring ordination either (1) must produce to the bishop a presentation of himself to some ecclesiastical preferment then void in the diocese, or a certificate that he is provided with a church in the diocese where he may attend the cure of souls, or a vacant minister's place in the cathedral church of the diocese or some other collegiate church situate therein, or that he is a fellow or about to be a fellow or conduct or chaplain in some college in Oxford or Cambridge; or (2) must be a master of arts of five years' standing living of his own charge in either of those universities; or (3) must be about to be admitted by the bishop to some benefice or curacy then void. A bishop who ordains a person having none of these titles is liable to maintain him until he is preferred to some benefice, on pain of suspension from conferring orders for the space of one year (g).

Examination and letters
testimonial.

1068. Before a person is ordained he must be examined and give proof as to his faith and learning, and must produce letters testimonial of his good life and character under the seal of some college in Oxford or Cambridge where he has resided, or from three or four responsible clergymen with the corroboration of other credible persons who have known his life and behaviour during the preceding three years (h).

(b) 14 Car. 2, c. 4. See the Preface to the Form of Ordination and Consecration. The term "holy orders" implies episcopal ordination (A.-G. v. Glasgow College (1846), 10 Jur. 676); St. Albans (Bishop) v. Fillipgham, [1906] P. 163).

(c) Preface to the Form of Ordination and Consecration; stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 12, s. 4; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 34; Roberts v. Pain (1685), 3 Mod. Rep. 67; Gib. Cod. 146, 146; Clergy Ordination Act, 1804 (44 Geo. 3, c. 43). For bishops, see pp. 396 et seq., ante.

(d) Namely, the weeks containing the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, after the First Sunday in Lent, the Feast of Pentecost, September 14, and December 13 (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 31; Gib. Cod. 139, 252).

(e) Preface to the Form of Ordination and Consecration; Rubric at the end of the Form and Manner of Making of Deacons; Gib. Cod. 139.

(f) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 31; Gib. Cod. 139, 140.

(g) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 83; Gib. Cod. 140, 141; Martyn v. Hind (1776), 2 Cowp. 437, per Lord MANSFIELD, C.J., at pp. 442, 443.

(h) Stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 12, s. 4; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 34, 35; Preface to the Form of Ordination and Consecration; Gib. Cod. 146, 147. A notice, called, from its opening words, a si quis, is also published in the 1069. If the person desiring to be ordained by a bishop is not of the bishop's own diocese or of one of the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, he must bring from the bishop of his own diocese letters dimissory authorising his ordination (i).

Stat. 1.
Orders.

Letters
dimissory.

1070. A bastard was formerly incapable of being ordained, except under a dispensation; and if he was so ordained, his illegitimacy was a good ground for refusing to admit him to a benefice. But these disqualifications are now to a certain extent obsolete (j).

Illegitimacy of candidate.

1071. A bishop has an absolute discretion as to whether he will ordain a person or examine him for ordination, and need not assign any reason for refusing to do so (k).

Ordination
at discretion
of bishop.

1072. Every person about to be ordained priest or deacon must, before ordination, in the presence of the bishop by whom he is to be ordained, make and subscribe, in the prescribed form, a declaration of assent to the Thirty-nine Articles and Book of Common Prayer, and of the Ordering of Bishops, Priests and Deacons, and of belief that the doctrine of the Church, as therein set forth, is agreeable to the Word of God, and of intention to use the form prescribed in that book in public prayer and administering the sacraments, and also take and subscribe the oath of allegiance, and in some dioceses the oath of canonical obedience to the bishop (l).

Declaration
and oaths.

1073. If any person directly or indirectly receives or agrees to receive any money or profit for effecting or promising the ordination of any clerk, beyond the lawful fees (m), he is to forfeit the sum

Penalties for corrupt
ordination.

church of the parish where the person to be ordained resides, that if anyone knows of any just cause for which the person ought not to be admitted to holy orders, he is to declare the same or signify the same to the bishop (Gib. Cod. 147; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 49). The fact of a person having taken part in excessive ritual beyond what is sanctioned by law is no just cause against his being ordained (Kensit v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter), [1905] 2 K. B. 249).

(i) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 34; Gib. Cod. 142—144.

(j) Specut's Case (1590), 5 Co. Rep. 57 a, 58 a; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 145; 1 Bl. Com. 459; Re Griffith (1884), 9 P. D. 63; Kensit v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter), [1905] 2 K. B. 249, 257. In practice, a dispensation from the Archbishop of Canterbury is still usually obtained for the ordination of a bastard.

(k) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 49, 50; R. v. Dublin (Archbishop) (1833), Alc. & N. 244.

(l) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), ss. 1, 4, 11, 12; Canon Ecclesiasticus (1865); Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), ss. 2, 8, 9. As to the oath of canonical obedience, see Long v. Cape Town (Bishop) (1863), 1 Moo. P. O. C. (N. S.) 411, 448, 465. In some dioceses this oath is only taken on admission to a benefice or curacy. Where it is taken on an ordination under letters dimissory, it should be of obedience to the bishop who has issued the letters.

(m) The fees for ordination are 5s. to the registrar or other officer by usage performing the duty, and £2 2s. to the bishop's secretary, being a total of £2 7s. See Table of Ecclesiastical Fees settled by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and the Archbishop of York, and submitted to the Privy Council on June 2, 1908, pursuant to the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), and the Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 135); see London Gazette, June 2, 1908. In all cases the tables of fees have to be submitted to His Majesty's Privy Council, who may disallow the same or any part thereof.

SECT. 1.
Orders.
—

of £40. The clerk so corruptly ordained is to forfeit the sum of £10; and if within seven years after his corrupt ordination he takes any benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment, such benefice or preferment will, immediately after his admission thereto, become void as if he were dead (n). A bishop who takes money for admitting to holy orders is guilty of simony and is liable to deprivation (o).

Letters of
orders.

1074. After ordination, letters of orders, under the seal of the bishop, are issued to the person ordained as a record of the transaction. He may be required to produce them at the visitation of the bishop or archdeacon in whose diocese or archdeaconry he is officiating (p). But they are not a deed, and confer nothing, since the ordination is complete without them (q).

Indelibility
of orders.

1075. A clerk cannot divest himself of his orders, except under the provisions of the Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870, but he may be deposed therefrom by a bishop on sufficiently grave cause (r).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Deacons.

Functions.

1076. The functions of a deacon in the church where he is appointed to serve are to assist the priest in divine service, and specially when he administers the Holy Communion, and to help him in the distribution thereof, and to read the Holy Scriptures and homilies in the church; to instruct the youth in the Catechism; to baptize infants in the absence of the priest, and to preach, if he be admitted thereto by the bishop; and, where provision is so made, to search for the sick, poor, and impotent people of the parish, and report them to the incumbent with a view to their being relieved by the alms of the parishioners and otherwise (s). A deacon may also perform the burial service and solemnise marriage, although marriage by a priest is more canonically correct (t).

Duration,
and admission to priest's
orders.

1077. A deacon must continue in that office for a whole year, unless the bishop for reasonable causes decides otherwise, in order that he may become perfect and expert in matters of ecclesiastical administration; and if he is found faithful and diligent in the

Such submission to the Privy Council is to be gazetted, and if within three months the same is not disallowed, such fees will be lawful fees, and thenceforward such fees and none other (subject to subsequent alterations) may be demanded or received by the respective officers becoming entitled thereto. The statutes also contain certain restrictions on the amount of the fees. The fees payable to apparitors, sealers, or record keepers cease on the death or resignation of the persons who held the office on 10th December, 1895.

(n) Stat. (1589) 31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 9.

(o) St. David's (Bishop) v. Lucy (1699), Carth. 484.

(p) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 137; Gib. Cod. 959.

(q) R. v. Morton (1873), L. R. 2 C. O. R. 22. Forging them is not a felony (ibid.).

(r) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 76; Barnes v. Shore (1846), 1 Rob. Eccl. 382; S. C. on rule for prohibition, 8 Q. B. 640. For deposition from holy orders, see p. 539, ante. As to relinquishment of the privileges and disabilities of a clerk under the Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 91), see p. 558, post.

(s) Form and Manner of Making of Deacons.

(t) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 146; R. v. Millis (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 534, 717, 746, 760, 786, 810, 859, 860, H. L.

office, he may then be admitted to the priesthood. But in no case can a person be ordained both deacon and priest on the same day (a).

SECT. 1.
Orders.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Priests.

1078. A priest by his ordination receives authority to preach the Word of God, and to administer the holy sacraments in the congregation where he is lawfully appointed to discharge those functions (b). No person is capable of being admitted to any benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment or dignity, nor may he presume to consecrate and administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, before he has been episcopally ordained priest, under a penalty of £100 for every offence, and of being disabled for one whole year from being admitted into priest's orders (c). Functions.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Colonial and Extraneous Orders.

1079. For the purpose of ministering to subjects or citizens of countries outside the King's dominions inhabiting and residing in those countries, who profess the public worship of Almighty God according to the liturgy of the Church of England, and desire that the Word of God and the sacraments should continue to be ministered to them according to that liturgy, persons who are subjects or citizens of those countries may be admitted to the order of deacon or priest by the Bishop of London, or any bishop appointed by him, without being required to take the oath of allegiance (d). The letters of orders in such cases must state the name of the person ordained, with the country of which he is a Ordination of aliens for ministrations out of the King's dominions.

(a) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 32; Rubric at the end of the Form and Manner of Making of Deacons.

(b) Form and Manner of Ordering of Priests; Watson. Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 147. At his ordination as priest a clergyman solemnly promises (1) to instruct the people committed to his charge out of the Holy Scriptures and to teach nothing, as required of necessity to eternal salvation but that which he is persuaded may be concluded and proved by them; (2) to give his faithful diligence always so to minister the doctrine and sacraments and the discipline of Christ as the Lord has commanded, and as this Church and realm has received the same, according to the commandments of God, and to teach the people committed to his cure and charge with all diligence to keep and observe the same; (3) to be ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word and to use both public and private monitions and exhortations as well to the sick as to the whole within his care, as need requires and occasion is given; (4) to be diligent in prayers and in reading of the Holy Scriptures, and in such studies as help to the knowledge thereof, laying aside the study of the world and the flesh; (5) to be diligent in framing and fashioning himself and his family according to the doctrine of Christ, and in making both himself and them, as much as in him lies, wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ; (6) to maintain and set forward, as much as in him lies, quietness, peace and love among all Christian people and especially among those committed to his charge; and (7) reverently to obey his ordinary and other chief ministers unto whom is committed the charge and government over him; following with a glad mind and will their godly admonitions and submitting himself to their godly judgments (Form and Manner of Ordering of Priests).

(c) Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), ss. 10, 11.

(d) Ordination of Aliens Act, 1784 (24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 35), s. 1.

Sect. 1.
Orders.

subject or citizen, and the fact of his not having taken the oath of allegiance (e).

Ordination for service in the colonies etc.

1080. Either of the two archbishops or the Bishop of London, or any bishop specially authorised by any one of them, may ordain as deacon or priest a person whom upon examination he deems qualified, specially for the purpose of undertaking the cure of souls or officiating in any spiritual capacity in the King's colonies or foreign possessions and residing therein. A declaration of such purpose and a written engagement to perform it is to be a sufficient title for the ordination; and the letters of orders must state that the person has been ordained for the cure of souls in the King's foreign possessions (f).

Restrictions on colonial and foreign
clergy.

1081. Until he obtains the archiepiscopal licence hereafter mentioned, a person who has been ordained deacon or priest for ministrations out of the King's dominions, or in the King's colonies or foreign possessions, or who has been ordained deacon or priest by any bishop other than a bishop of a diocese in the Church of England or the Church of Ireland, except in pursuance of a request and commission under the Colonial Bishops Act, 1852 (g), as amended by the Colonial Bishops Act, 1853 (h), (i) cannot, unless he holds or has previously held preferment or a curacy in England, officiate as deacon or priest in any church or chapel in England without the written permission of the archbishop of the province, and without also making and subscribing a declaration of assent similar to that contained in the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (i), but as to his intention to use the form prescribed in the Prayer Book, limited to the time of his ministering in England; and (ii.) is not entitled to be admitted to a benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment in England or to act as curate therein without the previous written consent of the bishop of the diocese (j). But any such person so holding ecclesiastical preferment, or acting as curate in any diocese in England, may, with the written consent of the bishop, after having held ecclesiastical preferment or acted as curate for a period or periods exceeding in the aggregate two years, request the archbishop of the province to give him a licence in the prescribed form to exercise his office of priest or deacon, as the case may be; and, if the archbishop thinks fit to issue the licence, it is to be registered in the registry of the province, and the person receiving it will thereafter be in the same position as to rights and

(e) Ordination of Aliens Act, 1784 (24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 35), s. 3.

(f) Ordinations for Colonies Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 60), s. 1.

(g) 15 & 16 Vict. c. 52.

(h) 16 & 17 Vict. c. 49.

(i) 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, s. 1; see p. 551, ante.

(j) Colonial Clergy Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 77), ss. 3, 4, 6—9. A person who commits the offence of officiating in any church or chapel in England contrary to the provisions of the Act, and the incumbent or curate of any church or chapel who knowingly allows such offence to be committed therein, is liable to forfeit, in respect of each offence, £10 to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, recoverable by action brought within six months by the treasurer of the Bounty in the High Court of Justice (ibid., s. 7).

advantages and duties and liabilities as if he had been ordained for ministering in England (k).

SECT. 1.
Orders.

1082. A person ordained by a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland, not holding or having held a benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment in England or Ireland, (i.) is liable to forfeit £10 to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty if he knowingly officiates on more than one day within three months in any church or chapel in any diocese in England without notifying the same to the bishop of the diocese, or officiates contrary to any injunction under the hand and seal of the bishop (l); (ii.) is not entitled to be admitted to any benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment in England without the consent and approbation of the bishop of the diocese in which it is situated, which the bishop may refuse without assigning any reason; and (iii.) if he seeks to be admitted to any such benefice or preferment, or to be licensed to any curacy, must, before being admitted or licensed, make and subscribe before the bishop the declaration and subscription required by law on ordination by a bishop of the Church of England (m).

Restrictions on Scottish
clergy.

SECT. 2.—Status.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Privileges.

1083. The clergy as such have always had certain privileges, recognised by law (n).

General
privileges.

They are privileged from arrest on civil process while going to and attending and returning from an episcopal visitation (o); and the clergy summoned to Convocation have the same liberty and immunity in coming, attending, and returning as the peers and commons summoned to Parliament (p).

Personal protection.

1084. A person obstructing or attempting to obstruct by threats or force, or striking or offering violence to, or, under pretence of a civil process, arresting a clergyman who is officiating in a church, chapel or other place of divine worship, or is performing his duty in a burial in a churchyard or burial place or, to the knowledge of the offender, is either about so to do or is on his way so to do or is returning from so doing, is guilty of a misdemeanour punishable with imprisonment for not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (q).

In performing clerical
duties.

(k) Colonial Clergy Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 77), s. 5.

(l) Episcopal Church (Scotland) Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 94), s. 6. The penalty is recoverable by action of debt brought in the name of the treasurer of the Bounty in the High Court of Justice in England or in the Court of Session in Scotland at the suit of the public prosecutor (ibid.).

(m) Ibid., s. 5.

(n) Stat. (1351) 25 Edw. 3, stat. 6. The title "reverend" is not by law confined to persons in holy orders (Kest v. Smith (1875), 1 P. D. 73, P. C.). As to "holy orders," see note (b), p. 550, ante.

(o) McGeath v. Geraghty (1866), 15 W. R. 127; Blane v. Geraghty (1866), ibid. 133.

(p) Stat. (1429) 8 Hen. 6, c. 1.

(q) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 38; see also pp. 663 et seq., post, and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX.

SECT. 2.

Status.

Exemption
from tolls.

1085. No toll is to be taken on any turnpike road from any person going to or returning from his usual place of religious worship tolerated by law on Sunday or any day on which divine service is by authority ordered to be celebrated; nor from any inhabitant of a parish, township, or place going to or returning from attending the funeral of a person who dies and is buried in the parish, township, or hamlet in which the turnpike road lies; nor from any rector, vicar, or curate going to or returning from visiting any sick parishioner or on other parochial duty within his parish (r).

Extent of liability for parochial action and sermons.

1086. The conduct of a clerk with reference to a special charity in his parish is not a matter of public interest on which fair public discussion and criticism are permissible under the law of libel (s). But a sermon by him is so, if printed and published, and probably without being printed or published (t). So, too, is a dispute between an incumbent and his churchwarden as to what he allows to be done during divine service and the uses to which he puts the church or vestry (a).

Privileges as to execution and distress.

1087. Although a clerk may be made bankrupt or have a judgment entered against him for debt, possession of the property and profits of any benefice which he holds can only be obtained under a warrant of sequestration issued by the bishop (b). The beasts of a beneficed clerk are not to be taken in distress in the highway nor upon the ancient glebe lands of his benefice (c).

Exemption
from secular
service.

1088. Clerks are exempt from serving on juries (d) or in the militia (e), and generally from the obligation to serve in any secular office or capacity (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Disabilities.

Incapacity to sit in House of Commons.

1089. A priest or deacon cannot be elected or sit as a member of the House of Commons, and is liable to forfeit the sum

p. 478. As to privilege from arrest, see 12 Co. Rep. 100; and as to priests in ordinary of the chapels royal, see p. 652, post.

(r) Turnpike Roads Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 126), s. 32. A temporary curate serving during a vacancy in the benefice is within this enactment (Temple v. Dickinson (1858), 1 E. & E. 34). The enactment extends to a turnpike gate outside the parish in which the duty is performed (ibid.), and the privilege is not lost by there being other persons in the carriage (Layard v. Ovey (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 415). But a curate of one parish was held not to be exempt from toll while going to officiate temporarily, without the licence or permission of the bishop, in another neighbouring parish during the absence of the incumbent (Brunskill v. Watson (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 418).

(a) Gathercole v. Miall (1846), 15 M. & W. 319.

(t) Ibid., at pp. 333, 337—339, 342, 345; Kelly v. Sherlock (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 686.

(a) Kelly v. Tinkling (1865), L. R. 1 Q. B. 699.

(b) 2 Co. Inst. 4; see pp. 616 et seq., post.

(c) Stat. (1315) 9 Edw. 2, stat. 1 (Articuli Cleri), c. 9; 2 Co. Inst. 4.

(d) Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), s. 9, Sched. In Beecher's Case (1377), 4 Leon. 190, a person who was ordained after being impanelled as a jurymen was compelled to serve on the jury.

(e) Militia Act, 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 90), s. 43.

(f) Co. Litt. 96 a; 2 Co. Inst. 3.

of £500 for every day during which he presumes to sit or vote in that House (g).

SMOT. 2.
Statute.

1090. A person in holy orders cannot be a mayor, alderman or councillor of a municipal borough under the Municipal Corporations Acts (h). But he may be an alderman or councillor of a county council (i), and a mayor, alderman or councillor of a metropolitan borough (k), and a member of the education committee of a local education authority (l).

Municipal boroughs and metropolitan and county councils.

1091. A clerk is prohibited from resorting to taverns or ale-houses, except for his own honest necessities, and from boarding or lodging therein. He must not give himself to any base or servile labour or to drinking or riot, or to spending his time idly by day or by night, or to playing at dice, cards, or tables, or any other unlawful game; but at all convenient times he is to hear or read the Holy Scriptures, or occupy himself with some other honest study or exercise, always doing things which appertain to honesty and endeavouring to profit the Church of God (m).

Restrictions as to general mode of life.

1092. A clerk who holds any cathedral preferment, benefice, curacy, or lectureship, or who is licensed or otherwise allowed to perform the duties of any ecclesiastical office, is subject to certain further restrictions as to engaging in secular pursuits. He must not take to farm for life, or for a term of years, or at will, more than eighty acres of land for the purpose of his own occupation, user, or cultivation, without a special written permission from the bishop, specifying the number of years, not exceeding seven, for which the permission is given; and will forfeit for every acre so taken to farm without permission, above eighty acres, the sum of 40s. for every year in which the same is so occupied, used, or cultivated by him (n).

Further restrictions.

As to farming.

With the exceptions hereafter stated he must not either by himself or by any other person for him, or to his use, engage in or carry on any trade or dealing for gain or profit, or deal in any goods or merchandise, unless such trading or dealing has been or is carried on by or on behalf of more than six partners (o), or such

As to trading or dealing.

(g) House of Commons (Clergy Disqualification) Act, 1801 (41 Geo. 3, c. 63). But see p. 558, post, as to relinquishment of orders.

(A) Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 12 (1) (b), 14 (3), 15 (1).

(i) Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 2 (2) (a).

(k) London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), s. 2 (4) (5).

(h) Education Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 42), s. 17.

(m) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 75; Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 12.

(n) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 28. As to enforcing the forfeiture, see p. 540, ante.

(o) No association or co-partnership consisting of more than six members or shareholders formed for the purpose of being engaged in and carrying on the business of banking or any other trade or dealing for profit, by means of boards of directors or managers, committees or other officers, acting on behalf of all the members or shareholders thereof or persons otherwise interested therein, is illegal or void or occasions any forfeiture by reason only of its having, as a member, partner or shareholder thereof, or as a person otherwise interested trade or dealing, or a share therein, has devolved upon him or upon some other person for him or for his use under a will, or by inheritance, intestacy, settlement, marriage, or bankruptcy; but in no such case may he act as a director or managing partner, or carry on the trade or dealing in person (p). By way of exceptions, however, to the foregoing prohibition:—(1) He may keep a school or seminary, and act as schoolmaster or tutor or instructor, and be concerned or engaged in giving instruction or education for profit or reward; and may buy and sell and do any other thing in relation to the management of any such school, seminary, or employment. (2) He may buy any goods or articles to be used for his family or in his household, and after so buying them may, even at an advanced price, sell the same or any parts thereof which he does not want or choose to keep. (3) He may dispose of books or other works to or by means of a bookseller or publisher. (4) He may be a manager, director, partner, or shareholder in any benefit society, or fire or life assurance society. (5) He may buy and sell again, for gain or profit, cattle, corn, and other articles necessary or convenient to be bought, sold, or kept by or for him, or to his use for the occupation, manuring, improving, pasturage, or profit of any glebe, demesne or other lands which may be lawfully held, occupied, possessed, or enjoyed by or for him or to his use; but he must not buy or sell any such cattle, corn, or other articles in person in any market, fair, or place of public sale. (6) He may sell minerals which are the produce of mines situated on his own lands (q).

SECT. 2.

Status.

Exceptions.

Contracts not invalidated by illegal trading or dealing.

1093. A contract is not invalidated by reason only of its having been entered into by a clerk illegally trading or dealing, either solely or jointly with others; and it may be enforced by or against such clerk, either solely or jointly with others, as the case may be, in the same way as if no clerk had been party to it (r).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Relinquishment of Status.

Deed of relinquish-
ment.

1094. A priest or deacon, after he has resigned every or any ecclesiastical preferment held by him, may execute a deed in the form set out in the Second Schedule to the Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870 (s), relinquishing all rights, privileges, advantages, and exemptions by law belonging to his office, and may cause the same to be enrolled in the Central Office of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and deliver an office copy of the enrolment, with a statement of his place of residence, to the bishop of the diocese in which he last held a preferment, or, if he has not held any preferment, to the bishop of the diocese in which he is resident; and he is to give notice of his having done so to the archbishop of the province in which the therein, a clerk who holds such preferment or post or is licensed or otherwise allowed to perform such duties as above mentioned; but no such clerk may act as a director or managing partner or carry on the trade or dealing in person (Trading Partnerships Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 14), s. 1).

(p) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 29.

(q) Ibid., s. 30.

(r) Ibid., s. 31; Ex parte Meynet (1747), 1 Atk. 196; Lewis v. Bright (1855), 4 E. & B. 917.

(s) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 91.

SMOT. 2.
Status.

bishop's diocese is situated (t). At the expiration of six months after the office copy of the enrolment has been delivered to the bishop, he or his successor in office, on the application of the relinquishing clerk, is to cause the deed to be recorded in the registry of the diocese (a). But if within such six months the bishop, or his successor, has notice of proceedings against the relinquishing clerk as a person who has been admitted to the office of minister in the Church of England, the deed, on the application of the clerk, is to be so recorded upon the termination of the proceedings by a definitive sentence or an interlocutory decree having the effect of definitive sentence and execution thereof, and no sooner (b).

1095. On the deed being so recorded, the clerk who has executed it becomes incapable of officiating or acting as a minister of the Church of England and of holding any preferment therein, and ceases to enjoy the rights, privileges, and exemptions attached to the office of such minister; and every licence, office, and place held by him, which must by law be held by a minister of the Church of England, becomes ipso facto void; and he also becomes discharged and free from all disabilities, disqualifications, and restraints to which he would otherwise by force of the House of Commons (Clergy Disqualification) Act, 1801 (c), the 12th section of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (d), and the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (e), or of any other law, have been subject as a person admitted to the office of minister in the Church of England, and from all jurisdiction, penalties, censures, and proceedings to which he would or might otherwise, under any of the same three enactments or any other law, have been amenable or liable in consequence of his having been so admitted, or of anything done or omitted by him after such admission (f). But he and his estate are not relieved from any liability in respect of dilapidations or from any debt or other pecuniary liability incurred or accrued before or after his execution of the deed of relinquishment (g).

Effect of
relinquish-
ment.SECT. 3.—*Beneficed Clergy.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Nature and Tenure of Benefices.

1096. The term "benefice" is in common practice confined to (1) rectories (or parsonages) with cure of souls; (2) vicarages;

Classification
of benefices.

(t) Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 91), s. 3. Before delivering the copy to the bishop the clerk is at liberty to abandon the proceedings and to have the enrolment of the deed vacated (Ex parte A Clergyman (1873), L. R. 15 Eq. 154).

(a) Ibid., s. 4. A copy of the record is to be given to the clerk on payment of a fee not exceeding 10s. for the recording and a copy; and a copy of the record, certified by the registrar, is evidence of the due execution, enrolment and recording of the deed, and of the fulfilment of the requirements of the Act in relation thereto (ibid., s. 7).

(b) Ibid., s. 5. For the purpose of any such proceedings the service of a citation, notice, or other document at the place stated by the clerk to the bishop as his place of residence is a good service (ibid., s. 6).

(c) 41 Geo. 3, c. 63.

(d) 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50.

(e) 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86.

(f) Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 91), s. 4.

(g) Ibid., s. 8.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

(8) perpetual curacies; (4) chapelries or districts belonging or reputed to belong, or annexed or reputed to be annexed, to any church or chapel, and districts formed for ecclesiastical purposes under statutory authority; (5) independent churches or chapels without districts; and (6) sinecure benefices (h). The holder of a benefice is called the incumbent, or minister (i); and, according to the nature of his benefice, he is also styled rector or parson (k), vicar, or perpetual curate.

Rectories.

1097. Where the whole of the tithe and glebe land of a parish has been always attached to the benefice for the maintenance of the minister or governor, the benefice is a rectory or parsonage with cure (or care) of souls (l). Other benefices have at different times been made rectories by statute (m).

(h) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 13 (1); Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 124; Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 3; Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 3; Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), s. 2; Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 15 (4). "Benefice" was originally a lay term and was applied to grants of land made to soldiers or feudal vassals (Watson, Olergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 1). In its wider sense it includes cathedral and capitular and other ecclesiastical dignities and preferments (3 Co. Inst. 155); as to which see pp. 416 et seq., ante. An office is not rendered a spiritual or ecclesiastical benefice by the mere fact of its being only tenable by a person in holy orders. It is a spiritual or lay office according to the object for which it was established (A.-G. v. St. Cross Hospital (1853), 17 Beav. 435, per Lord (then Sir JOHN) ROMILLY, at p. 465).

(i) The term "minister" is used of all incumbents in Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), and in the Acts of Uniformity (stat. (1559) 1 Eliz. c. 2, stat. (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 4. As to the term "incumbent," see note (b) p. 451, ante. The term "curate" is sometimes, in the Book of Common Prayer and elsewhere, used of any incumbent having the cure of souls; but it more frequently signifies a clerk who serves in a parish under the incumbent, or who, as in the case of a perpetual curate, has an independent cure of souls without the status of a rector or vicar (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 54). The terms "benefice" and "perpetual curacy" and "incumbent" do not in themselves necessarily imply a distinct and separate cure of souls or the status of a complete incumbent (Dowdall v. Hewitt (1863), 10 L. T. 823, 825).

(k) A rector is called "parson" or persona ecclesiæ because he is the local impersonification of the Church. When in complete possession of the benefice, he is also called persona impersonata, parson impersonæ (Co. Litt. 300 a, b). A rectory may be referred to as a "church"; and so also may a vicarage, where the rectory is inappropriate (Reynoldson v. London (Bishop) (1696), 3 Lev. 435, 436).

(l) Spelman, De Non Temerandis Ecclesiis, p. 1. A rectory must have some land belonging to it, but the church and churchyard are sufficient (Berry v. Wheeler (1662), 1 Sid. 91). In Boulton v. Richards (1819), 6 Price, 483, the existence of an ecclesiastical rectory was held to have been proved, although there was no church or burying ground, but only a room in a mansion-house fitted up as a chapel, in which divine service was performed and marriages and baptisms were solemnised.

(m) For instance, the Parish of Manchester Division Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 41), s. 2, provided that the churches of new parishes from time to time formed within the limits of the ancient parish of Manchester should be rectories. A distinct and separate parish formed under the Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), is a rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy, according to the nature of the parish out of which it was formed (ibid., s. 19); and by the Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 13, 14, in any case where the owner of an inappropriate rectory or the patron and incumbent of a sinecure rectory surrender the tithe, glebe, and other rectorial emoluments, or the tithe with or without a portion of the glebe, to the incumbent of a vicarage in

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.
Vicarages.

1098. Where the rectory of a parish is appropriate or inappropriate, and the cure of souls has been intrusted to a vicar, for whose maintenance an endowment has been provided out of the emoluments of the rectory, the benefice is a vicarage(n). A distinct and separate parish formed under the Church Building Act, 1818, out of a parish which is a vicarage, is itself a vicarage; and for a short time between 1865 and 1868 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners had statutory power to declare certain new district churches to be vicarages(o). Since 1868, in the case of every new ecclesiastical or other parish where the incumbent is not a rector but is authorised to publish banns and solemnise marriages, churchings, and baptisms in his church, and is entitled to receive for his own use the entire perpetuity, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, as the successors of the Church Building Commissioners (see note (i), p. 444, ante), are authorised and directed to convert the benefice into a rectory. Upon the suppression of the sinecure rectory of a parish under the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 48, the emoluments thereof could, by an Order in Council ratifying a scheme of the Commissioners, be annexed to the vicarage or perpetual curacy of the parish, which thereupon became a rectory (ibid., s. 55). Where a new parish or district has been constituted and endowed, an apportionment may be made of the endowments belonging to it and to any parish out of which it has been formed; and the new parish or district becomes a rectory, if, upon such apportionment, the whole of the prædial or rectorial tithe within its area is made payable to the incumbent thereof (New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 26).

(n) Smith v. Waller (1700), 3 Salk. 378. In old days the rectory of a parish with its emoluments (see note (h), p. 743, post), was frequently appropriated to or by a religious house or collegiate church. In such cases provision was made by ecclesiastical constitutions or ordinances, and afterwards by stat. (1391) 15 Ric. 2, c. 6, and stat. (1402) 4 Hen. 4, c. 12, for the adequate endowment in perpetuity of a vicar to serve the parish. Since the dissolution of the monasteries in Henry VIII.'s reign, many of these rectories have been in the hands of laymen, and are in that case strictly called "improper" to distinguish them from those in the hands of a bishop, or college, or in other ecclesiastical hands, which properly retain the title of "appropriate." But the two terms are frequently used interchangeably (Ayl. Par. 86—90, 509—513; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 157, per Lord Stowell (then Sir W. Scott), at pp. 163—165). In 1882 the rectory of Somersham in Huntingdonshire, which had previously been a benefice with cure of souls, was made a rectory appropriate, and a vicarage of Somersham was constituted and endowed with a portion of the tithes and emoluments of the rectory (Somersham Rectory Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 81)).

A vicarage may be reunited to the rectory or parsonage where this is in spiritual hands, but not when it is in lay hands (Robinson v. Bedel (1602), Cro. Eliz. 873; Britten v. Wade (1618), Cro. Jac. 515; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 198—202). If a parson, being patron of the vicarage, presents a clerk to the church by the name of the parsonage or rectory and not of the vicarage, this will disappropriate the parsonage and make the benefice a parsonage or rectory in future (The Queen and Lumley's (Lord) Case (1584), 2 Leon. 80; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 199, 200).

Where the rector is not the incumbent, he has no control over the cure of souls or the performance of ministerial duties in the parish (Herbert v. Westminster (Dean and Chapter) (1721), 1 P. Wms. 773; A.-G. v. Brereton (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 425, 429; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham, supra).

(o) Where tithe or an annuity in respect of tithe was granted to the incumbent of a district church in perpetuity under the District Church Tithes Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 42), the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were empowered by s. 9 (until that section was repealed by the Incumbents Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 117), s. 1), to declare that the church should be deemed a rectory or vicarage, as might under the circumstances seem proper.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

fees for the performance of those offices, he and his benefice are, for the purpose of style and designation only, to be deemed and styled the vicar and vicarage of the parish (p).

Perpetual curacies.

1099. Where the rectory of a parish is appropriate or inappropriate and there has been no endowment of a vicarage, the benefice is a perpetual curacy (q). The benefices of new ecclesiastical parishes, except where otherwise expressly provided by statute, are, in law, perpetual curacies, in spite of their being now styled vicarages (r).

Chapels with districts or chapelries
attached.

1100. Where a chapel has from time immemorial had a district or chapelry attached to it, and the inhabitants thereof have had rights of baptism and burial and other spiritual services in the chapel and not in the parish church, and fees and dues for these services have been received by the minister of the chapel as of right and custom, the chapelry is called a parochial chapelry, and is a perpetual curacy whether there is an endowment attached to it or not (s). A church or chapel to which a consolidated or district chapelry has been assigned is a perpetual curacy and benefice (t).

Churches or chapels without districts.

1101. A church or chapel without a district may in some cases be a benefice independent of the incumbent of the parish in which it is situate (a).

(p) Incumbents Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 117), s. 2.

(q) Arthington v. Chester (Bishop) (1790), 1 Hy. Bl. 419. In such cases the appropriator or impropiator is bound to nominate a curate to serve the parish, and has no power to remove him after he has been licensed by the bishop; whence he is called a perpetual curate (Gib. Cod. 819; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 157, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir W. SCOTT), at p. 166). A perpetual curate has a freehold interest in the buildings and lands belonging to the curacy, and holds them to himself and his successor as a corporation sole (Mason v. Lambert (1848), 12 Q. B. 795; Wallis v. Birks (1870), L. R. 5 Q. P. 222). Under Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 89, and general custom, he has the rights of a minister as to the appointment of churchwardens (R. v. Allen (1872), L. R. 8 Q. B. 69).

(r) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 25; Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 12; Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 8; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), ss. 9, 17. A perpetual curacy is not necessarily a separate and distinct cure of souls; see note (i), p. 560, ante.

(s) A.-G. v. Brevelton (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 425; R. v. Bloore (1760), 2 Burr. 1043; Dent v. Rob (1834), 1 Y. & O. (ex.) 1; Carr v. Mostyn (1850), 5 Exch. 69.

(t) See p. 446, ante; and Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), ss. 9, 17. The perpetual curate of a district chapelry has the freehold of the site of the church, but does not thereby acquire a parliamentary vote for the county (Kirton v. Dear (1869), L. R. 5 Q. P. 217).

(a) All churches, curacies, or chapels augmented by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty become thereupon perpetual cures and benefices, and their ministers are corporations sole (Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), s. 4; R. v. Chester (Bishop) (1786), 1 Term Rep. 396; Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 5). But the cure of souls in the parishes in which they are situate remains, as before, in the incumbents of the parish churches (Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), s. 5). The right of nomination of the ministers is subject to lapse and is recoverable by legal proceedings, and the incumbency is liable to be terminated, in the same manner as in the case of presentative benefices (ibid., s. 6). Provision has also been made by the Church Building Acts for the erection of independent churches and chapels (Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), ss. 5—18;

1102. In some parishes the rector acquired the right to obtain institution both of himself and a vicar to the church and benefice, so that both together had the cure of souls and the duty of officiating (b). But in course of time these functions were left to the vicar alone and the rectory became a sinecure (c).

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Sinecure
rectories.

1103. There may be two or more benefices in the same church and parish held by different incumbents (d). In that case each benefice or portion of the whole benefice is called a mediety (e). The bishop, after a formal inquiry, may apportion the spiritual duties of the parish between the several incumbents (f). He may also, with the consent of the patrons of the medieties, frame plans to be carried into effect by a scheme of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners ratified by an Order in Council for constituting the medieties separate benefices, or consolidating them into one benefice to be held by one incumbent, or for making other expedient arrangements for the pastoral duties of the parish (g).

Medieties,

1104. A benefice is a freehold office (h). The incumbent is a corporation sole (i) and has a freehold interest in the emoluments of the benefice until his death or until the benefice is otherwise legally vacated by him (k). He is entitled to be registered as a freehold voter in respect of tithe rentcharge which has been apportioned to his benefice under the Tithe Acts (l), and in respect of the pew rents of a church of which the freehold is vested in him (m).

Freehold tenure.

Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), ss. 2—10; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), ss. 7, 18).

(b) Britton v. Wade (1618), Cro. Jac. 515, at p. 518; Clarke v. Pryn (1669), 1 Sid. 426.

(c) Gib. Cod. 719. Provision was made by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), for suppressing sinecure rectories and vesting their emoluments in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and endowing therewith, in suitable cases, the vicarages or perpetual curacies previously dependent on such rectories (ibid., ss. 48, 54, 55). Where, however, a sinecure rectory had for the last twenty years been held together with the vicarage dependent thereon, it was not to be so dealt with, but the rectory and vicarage were to continue permanently united and be a rectory with cure of souls (ibid., s. 55). And where a benefice with cure of souls was held with, or was in the patronage of the holder of, a prebend or other sinecure preferment belonging to a college in either of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge or to any private patron, an arrangement might be made by a scheme ratified by an Order in Council, with the consent of the patrons, for permanently uniting the preferment with the benefice (ibid., s. 71).

(d) Stoughton v. Palmer (1639), W. Jo. 446.

(e) Welsh v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 432.

(f) Spiritual Duties Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 30).

(g) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), ss. 72, 83—87; New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), s. 9.

(h) Kirton v. Dear (1869), L. R. 5 C. P. 217, 220.

(i) Co. Litt. 250 a; and as to perpetual curates, see the enactments referred to in note (r), p. 562, ante.

(k) A.-G. v. Brereton (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 425, 429; Mason v. Lambert (1848), 12 Q. B. 795, 807; Wallis v. Birks (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 222.

(l) Representation of the People Act, 1884 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 3), s. 4 (1); see pp. 627 et seq., post, and title ELECTIONS.

(m) Bennick v. Alker (1872), L. R. 8 C. P. 265; Vickers v. Selwyn (1903), 52

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Advowson
and right of
patronage.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Patronage of Benefices.

(i.) Advowsons and Rights of Patronage.

1105. The initial right of a clerk to hold a church and benefice is acquired by presentation, or, if the benefice is in the gift of the bishop of the diocese in which it is situate, by collation (n). The right to fill a church and benefice by presentation or collation is called an advowson or right of patronage, and the owner of it is called the patron (o). An advowson is an incorporeal hereditament (p). It may be either appendant or in gross (q). An advowson

W. R. 153; Wolfe v. Surrey County Council (Clerk), [1905] 1 K. B. 439. See title ELECTIONS.

(n) Co. Litt. 119 b. It is there stated that every church is either presentative, collative, donative, or elective. Before 1st January, 1899, certain churches and benefices were donative and were filled by a donation thereof to a clerk by the patron without recourse to the bishop (Co. Litt. 344 a; 2 Bl. Com. 22, 23, 24); but since that date they have all become presentative (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 12). In the case of elective churches the elected clerk is presented to the bishop (A.-G. v. Rutter (1770), 2 Russ. 101 (n.), 104 (n.); Faulkner v. Elger (1825), 4 B. & C. 449, 450; Edenborough v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1826), 2 Russ. 93, 104; Carter v. Cropley (1857), 8 De G. M. & G. 680, 690, C. A.).

(o) Co. Litt. 119 b. The advocatio or jus patronatus of a church was first acquired by the founders, benefactors or maintainers of the church, who were called advocati or patroni (ibid.; 2 Bl. Com. 21; Watson, Clergyman's Law, pp. 57—59). A patron, as such, has no control over the cure of souls or the performance of ministerial duties in the parish (Herbert v. Westminster (Dean and Chapter) (1721), 1 P. Wms. 773; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 157).

(p) 2 Bl. Com. 21; Pannell v. Hodgson (1576), Cary, 74; Stafford (Earl) v. Buckley (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 171, 178; Mirehouse v. Rennell (1833), 7 Bli. (N. S.), 241, H. L., per Lord LYNDHURST, at p. 317. It will pass under a conveyance or devise of hereditaments (Anon. (1573), 3 Dyer, 323 b.; London v. Southwell (Chapter) (1618), Hob. 303; Albemarle (Earl) v. Rogers (1794), 2 Ves. 477); or tenements (London v. Southwell (Chapter), supra; Gully v. Exeter (Bishop) (1827), 4 Bing. 290, 295, 296); or real estate (Re Hodgson, Taylor v. Hodgson, [1898] 2 Ch. 545); but not under a conveyance or devise of lands (Westfaling v. Westfaling (1746), 3 Atk. 460, 464). It is not "land" under the Statutes of Limitations (Brooke v. Muckleston, [1909] 2 Ch. 519). Whether it will pass under a conveyance or devise of hereditaments, tenements, or real estate, situate and being in the parish or county in which the church and benefice are situate depends upon circumstances (Anon. (1573), 3 Dyer, 323 b.; London v. Southwell (Chapter), supra; Kensley v. Langham (1735), Cas. temp. Talb. 143; Crompton v. Jarratt (1885), 30 Ch. D. 298, C. A.; Re Hodgson, Taylor v. Hodgson, supra). It will pass by the word "church" (Ashgell v. Dennis (1589), 1 Leon. 191, per WALMESLEY, J.; Co. Litt. 17 b), or by the word "living," though this word may mean only a single presentation (Webb v. Byng (1856), 2 K. & J. 669). But where two benefices have been united, the advowson of the united benefice does not pass by the name of the advowson of one of them (Robinson v. Bristol (Marquis) (1851), 20 L. J. (O. P.) 208). On the death of the owner it is assets for payment of his debts (London v. Southwell (Chapter), supra, 303, 304; Tong v. Robinson (1730), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 114; Westfaling v. Westfaling, supra). But it does not pass under the words "commodities, emoluments, profits and advantages" (London v. Southwell (Chapter), supra); and where a testator, who was both patron and incumbent of a benefice, devised the advowson of the benefice and other real estate upon trust to apply the rents as income thereof as in his will mentioned, his heir-at-law was held entitled to present on the vacancy occasioned by his death (Martin v. Martin (1842), 12 Sim. 579).

(q) Tyringham's Case (1684), 4 Co. Rep. 36 b; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 59. When, as could legally be done before the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (b), the right of presentation for one or more

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

appendant passes by assurance or by devolution of law with the manor or other hereditament to which it is appendant (r). But it may be severed therefrom; and in that case, if the severance is complete, it becomes an advowson in gross, and cannot again be made appendant (s) except by operation of law (t). Where a benefice is held in mediety (a), there may be an advowson of each mediety (b).

1106. The right of presentation or legal patronage may be vested in one person and the right of nomination in another. In that case the legal patron is trustee for the person who has the right of nomination and is bound to present to the bishop the nominee of that person (c).

Right of
nomination.

turns was granted apart from the whole advowson, it was said to be in part appendant and in part in gross (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 60). The advowson of a rectory is normally appendant to a manor; but it may become appendant to some house or land formerly belonging to the manor by the alienation of such house or land with the advowson apart from the manor or the alienation of the rest of the manor apart from the house or land and the advowson (ibid., pp. 60, 61). The advowson of a vicarage is normally appendant to the rectory out of which it is extracted; but it may be severed therefrom and may be appendant to a manor (ibid., pp. 61, 62; Hill v. Grange (1556), 1 Plowd. 164, 174; Case of Assize (1576), Dyer, 350 b; R. v. Norwich (Bishop) (1615), Cro. Jac. 385; Sherley v. Underhill (1618), Moore (K. B.), 894; Reynoldson v. Blake (1697), 1 Ld. Raym. 192, 200).

(r) Co. Litt. 307 a; A.-G. v. Sitwell (1835), 1 Y. & O. (ex.) 559, 582, 583; Rooper v. Harrison (1855), 2 K. & J. 86). But a grant by the Crown of a manor or land with the appurtenances does not carry an appendant advowson unless mentioned expressly (stat. Prærogativa Regis (temp. incert.), c. 17; A.-G. v. Sitwell, supra) or by reference (Whistler's Case (1613), 10 Co. Rep. 63 a; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 9).

(s) 2 Bl. Com. 22; Watson, Clergyman's Law, p. 62; Reynoldson v. Blake, supra, at p. 198. If the appendancy is severed during an estate for life or other particular estate, or for a term of years, the advowson may become again appendant on the determination of the estate or term of years (Mallory, Quare Impedit, Part I., p. 39; Hartopp and Cocks' Case (1627), 11ut. 88, 89; Rooper v. Harrison, supra). If the manor is mortgaged in fee, excepting the advowson, and the mortgage is paid off on the appointed day, the advowson becomes again appendant; but if repayment is not made until afterwards, the advowson will be reputed appendant but will not in fact be so (R. v. Chester (Bishop) (1698), 1 Ld. Raym. 292, 301).

(t) Meath (Bishop) v. Winchester (Marquis) (1835), 4 Cl. & Fin. 445, 551, H. L.). If on a partition between coparceners an advowson appendant is allotted to one and the manor to the other, and afterwards one dies without issue whereby the law unites them again, the advowson, which had been severed by the partition, becomes again appendant (Finch's (Sir Moyle) Case (1606), 6 Co. Rep. 63 a, 64 a).

(a) See p. 563, ante.

(b) Co. Litt. 17 b, 18 a; Smith's (Richard) Case (1613), 10 Co. Rep. 135 b.

(c) Gib. Cod. 794; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 85, 86. The nomination is the substance of the advowson, and the presentation is only a ministerial interest (Sherley v. Underhill (1618), Moore (K. B.), 894). The Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (3), has made an agreement for an exercise of the right of patronage of a benefice on the nomination of a particular person invalid; but nothing in that section is to prevent the reservation or limitation in a family settlement of a life interest to the settlor or the reservation of a right of redemption in a mortgage (ibid., s. 1 (7)). As to where the advowson is held in trust, see pp. 573, 580, post, and as to where it is mortgaged, see p. 573, post. As to the remedy of the person entitled to nominate in case of the non-presentation of his nominee, see p. 573, post. But where, as in Queen

SECT. 3.

Beneficed
Clergy.

Patronage of vicarages.
Vesting of
patronage.

1107. The right of presentation to a vicarage (d) is ordinarily in the rector or parson (e); but it may be appendant to a manor (f) or have become vested in other hands or in the parishioners (g).

1108. Where in accordance with the rules of the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty a benefice is augmented by a benefaction of £200 or upwards in money or land or tithes, the patronage thereof may be vested in the benefactor, his heirs and successors, by an agreement made, with the consent of the governors, by the King under the sign manual, or any bodies politic or corporate, or any person of full age, tenant of the advowson in fee simple or in fee tail or for life with remainder to his own issue, but in case of a parson or vicar, with the consent of his patron and ordinary (h). An agreement by a guardian on behalf of an infant, if made with the approbation of the Chancery Division of the High Court, is as effectual as if the infant were of full age and himself entered into the agreement (i). The judge in lunacy may authorise the committee of the estate of a lunatic to enter into the agreement on behalf of the lunatic (k).

Patronage of churches and benefices.

1109. Provision is made by the Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts (l) for the patronage of churches and chapels and benefices established under those Acts. Before or during the building of a new church or previously to its consecration, the bishop of the diocese and the patron and incumbent of the parish may, by an agreement in writing, effectually vest the right of nomination to the church on its consecration, either in perpetuity or otherwise, in any corporation, aggregate or sole, or any person or persons and his or their heirs or assigns (m). Where no such agreement is entered into, the right of patronage varies according to the description of the church or benefice.

Distinct and separate
parishes.

Where distinct and separate parishes are formed, the patronage

Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), s. 6, and the Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), ss. 6, 12, 13, and the New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), ss. 20, 21, the legal patron is mentioned as having the nomination and the right to nominate to the bishop, the words have the same meaning or the same effect as "presentation" and "present."

(d) See p. 561, ante.

(e) Gib. Cod. 719; 2 Roll. Abr. 336; Sherley v. Underhill (1618), Moore (K. B.), 894; Code v. Hulmed (1623), 2 Roll. Rep. 304.

(f) 2 Roll. Abr. 336; Sherley v. Underhill, supra.

(g) Code v. Hulmed, supra. See p. 579, post.

(h) Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), ss. 8—12; Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 20), ss. 2—4; Church Patronage Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 88), s. 1.

(i) Infants' Property Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65), s. 26. See also title INFANTS AND CHILDREN.

(k) Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 120 (k). See Re Vavasour (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 275. See also title LUNACY.

(l) See note (e), p. 444, ante. For this purpose limited owners of patronage, whether individual or corporate, are empowered to surrender or arrange their patronage (Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 16; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 15; Church Building Act, 1836 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 15).

(m) Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 23; Church Building Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 37), s. 4.

of the church and benefice of each belongs to the patron of the original parish (n).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1110. The patronage of the church or chapel of a district parish belongs to the patron of the church of the parish out of which the district parish is taken; except where the chapel was built wholly or in part by means of rates raised in the original parish, in which case the patronage belongs to the incumbent of the church of that parish (o).

District
parishes.

1111. The patronage of the church of a consolidated chapelry belongs to the body or person designated in the representation made by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, upon which the Order in Council for the formation of the consolidated chapelry is founded (p).

Consolidated
chapelries.

1112. The patronage of a district chapelry, except where it has been otherwise legally vested, is in the incumbent of the parish out of which the chapelry is formed (q).

District
chapelries.

1113. Where a chapel is provided, and an endowment is created for the incumbent by a rentcharge on the emoluments of the benefice or by an apportionment of part of those emoluments, and no division of the parish or creation of a separate district for ecclesiastical purposes takes place, the right of presentation to the chapel is vested in the patron of the church to which the chapel appertains (r).

Chapel where no
ecclesiastical district is formed.

1114. Where a separate and distinct parish for spiritual purposes is created under the Church Building Act, 1831 (s), on the endowment of an existing chapel of ease with a sufficient stipend for the minister thereof, the right of nominating the minister is settled by a deed of agreement between the patron of the parish in which the chapel is situate and the bishop of the diocese (t).

Separate parish for spiritual purposes.

(n) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 13.

(o) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 67, 68. But where a church or chapel is provided under the Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), in part by means of rates, the patronage, upon its becoming a district church, vests in the patron of the church of the original parish in which it is provided (ibid., s. 13). As to churches built in extra-parochial places, see p. 571, post.

(p) Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 9 (amending the Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 15); Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), ss. 19, 20.

(q) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 16; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 17. As to where an extra-parochial place is formed into a district chapelry, see p. 571, post. Where a district chapelry is taken out of a distinct and separate parish or a district parish, the right of nomination to the chapel thereof belongs to the incumbent of such distinct and separate parish or district parish (Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 12). And where it is taken out of one or more previously formed district chapelries, the right of nomination belongs to the incumbent of the parish out of which the first assigned district chapelry was taken, unless it is legally vested in some other party, in which case it is to belong to such other party or is to be vested as may be agreed upon between such party and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with the consent of the bishop (Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 1).

(r) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 22.

(s) 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38, s. 23

(t) Ibid., s. 24; Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 7. If the

SECT. 3.

Beneficed
Clergy.Peal districts and parishes.

1115. The right of patronage of a district or new parish formed under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (a), unless or until it is otherwise assigned in perpetuity and except so far as it is otherwise assigned in part (b), is exercisable alternately by the Crown and the bishop of the diocese, the first nomination being vested in the Crown (c).

New parishes.

1116. On the constitution of a new parish under the New Parishes Act, 1856 (d), the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, if they think fit, until compliance with the requirements relating to the assignment of the patronage of the church thereof in consideration of an endowment contributed for the same (e), may assign such patronage to the then incumbent of the original parish out of which the new parish has been formed for the term of his incumbency, or, if the new parish has been formed out of two or more parishes, then to one or other of the then incumbents of such parishes for the term of his incumbency (f).

Churches
and chapels provided by private subscription.

1117. In the case of a church or chapel provided by private subscriptions under the Church Building Act, 1824 (g), the right of nomination for the first two turns, or for any number of turns occurring during forty years from the date of the consecration, is in three life trustees appointed by or representing the subscribers, and afterwards is in the incumbent of the parish or extra-parochial place in which the church or chapel was provided; or, if it was provided in part by means of rates, the right of nomination is, from the first, in the incumbent of the church of the original parish in which it was provided. But, in either case, if it becomes a district church, the right of nomination thenceforth belongs to the patron of the church of the original parish (h).

Churches
provided, endowed and supplied with a repair fund.

1118. Where a body or person provides a church and endows it to the satisfaction of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and also provides a competent fund for the repairs thereof, the Commissioners may, if they think it proper so to do, with the consent of the bishop, and whether they assign a particular district to the church or not, by an instrument under their common seal specially declare the patronage of the church to be in perpetuity in such body or person and their or his successors, heirs and assigns, or in their or his nominee, or in some trustees signified by them or him to the commissioners. If the church is provided and endowed by subscription, the patronage is to be declared to be in such body or person, incumbent does not consent, the separation and deed of agreement do not take effect till the next avoidance of the parish church (Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 24).

(a) 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37.

(b) See pp. 569 et seq.

(c) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 21; New Parishes Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 94), ss. 1—3.

(d) 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104.

(e) See pp. 569 et seq.

(f) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 22.

(g) 5 Geo. 4, c. 103.

(h) Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), ss. 12, 13; Fowler v. Gloucester (Bishop) (1869), L. R. 4 C. P. 668, Ex. Ch.; affirmed sub nom. Allen v. Gloucester (Bishop) (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 219.

SECT. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

their or his successors, heirs, and assigns, or such trustees, as the major part in value of the subscribers of not less than £50 each signify to the commissioners. The patronage is not at any time to be vested in or held in trust by more than five persons, except where it passes by descent to coparceners or by the custom of gavelkind to more than five persons, or is conveyed by will or deed to more than five children, grandchildren, nephews, or nieces of the grantor or deviser (i). But previous notice of the proposal to provide the church must be given to the patron and incumbent of the parish, district, or extra-parochial place in which the church is provided or proposed to be provided (k), and also, if a particular district is proposed for the church and is to be taken out of any parish, district, or extra-parochial place other than that in which the church is provided or proposed to be provided, to the patron and incumbent of such parish, district, or extra-parochial place, in order that they may have the opportunity of objecting to the proposal. And if any such patron gives security that he will himself within two years provide and endow a church in accordance with the proposal and to the satisfaction of the bishop, he is to be given the preference in so doing (l). Preference is also to be given to a proposal to enlarge an existing church over a proposal to provide a new church (m).

Churches built or endowed by corporations.

1119. In certain cases where an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate or sole, or either of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham, or any college therein respectively, or any person or persons, make a contribution towards providing a church or chapel for a district, parish, or benefice, or towards the permanent endowment of such church or chapel, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, by means of a scheme ratified by an Order in Council, assign the right of patronage of the district, parish, or benefice, either in

(i) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), ss. 2—12, 15, 19, 20; Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), ss. 12—18, 21; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), ss. 7—15; New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), ss. 12, 13; MacAlister v. Rochester (Bishop) (1880), 5 C. P. D. 194. In order to acquire the patronage of a chapel under the Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 2, the statutory conditions must be strictly complied with (Williams v. Brown (1835), 1 Curt. 53). The appointment of new trustees is vested in the surviving or continuing trustees or the majority of them, where more than two; unless a different mode of appointment or election is agreed upon in the first instance between the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the body or person providing and endowing the church, or where it is provided and endowed by subscription, between the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the major part in value of the subscribers thereto of not less than £50 each. Every trustee on his appointment, and also whenever he exercises or concurs in exercising the right of nomination of which he is a trustee, is to sign a declaration that he is a member of the Church of England; and upon an appointment of new trustees no conveyance of the right of nomination to the church need be made. The trustees may act notwithstanding vacancies in their number, unless otherwise prescribed. But if all the trustees die without having appointed any new trustee or trustees the bishop of the diocese may by deed appoint any requisite number of trustees not exceeding five (Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 10).

(k) MacAlister v. Rochester (Bishop), supra.

(l) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), ss. 7, 11, 15; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), ss. 7, 11, 12.

(m) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 8.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Consents to assignment.

Restriction on sale of
 patronage.

perpetuity or to the extent of one or more nominations, to such corporation, university, college, person, or persons, or to its, his, or their nominee or nominees. The districts, parishes, or benefices whereof the right of patronage may be so assigned are (1) a district or new parish formed under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (n); (2) a church or chapel to which a district belongs and of which the patronage is vested in the incumbent of the original parish, district or place out of which such district was taken, as such incumbent; (3) a new parish constituted under the New Parishes Act, 1856 (o), or a parish or district having neither incumbent nor patron, and (4) a benefice of which the patronage is vested in the Crown or in the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, or in the Duke of Cornwall, or in an ecclesiastical or lay corporation, aggregate or sole, and of which the permanent annual endowment does not exceed £100 per annum, nor the annual income from all sources £250 per annum. But the assignment can only be made with the consent of the patron in the case of a benefice in the patronage of the Crown or of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, or of the Duke of Cornwall, or of a bishop, or an ecclesiastical or lay corporation aggregate; or of the bishop of the diocese in the case of a benefice in the patronage of the incumbent of another benefice, or in the case of a district or parish having neither incumbent nor patron; and it can only be made in perpetuity if the contribution consists either of the building of a church for the district or parish or benefice with the provision of a clear yearly sum of at least £45 for its permanent endowment, or else of a permanent endowment of the church or chapel of the district or parish or benefice with the clear yearly sum of £150; and notice of an intention to make the assignment is to be sent to the patron of the benefice and the body or person whose consent thereto is required (p). Where any such assignment of patronage in perpetuity is made to a contributing body or person, and the benefice at the time of the assignment is already permanently endowed with an annual sum of not less than £100, or the annual income of the benefice from all sources, calculated on an average of the three years immediately preceding the contribution thereto, amounts to £150, no subsequent sale or disposition of the patronage for valuable consideration is to be made until thirty years after the assignment, unless the entire proceeds are legally secured for the further permanent augmentation of the benefice (q). Where any

(n) 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37.

(o) 19th & 20 Vict. c. 104.

(p) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 20; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 16—20, 22, 30; New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), ss. 10, 12, 13. In the case of a benefice in the patronage of the incumbent of another benefice, which is in private patronage, the private patron may require the amount of diminution (if any) in the value of his advowson likely to be caused by the contemplated assignment of patronage to be assessed or ascertained by arbitration, and may recover the amount from the body or person to whom the assignment of patronage is made (New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), s. 10).

(q) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 21. A presentation.

assignment of patronage in perpetuity is made to the nominees of a contributing body or person or of two or more contributing bodies or persons, the nominees must not exceed five in number. They are named in the deed of assignment by the bodies or persons making the contribution or the major part in value of the subscribers thereto of not less than £50, and become trustees for the exercise of the patronage (r).

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1120. In certain cases where the Ecclesiastical Commissioners build or assist in building a new church or chapel, they may vest the patronage of it either in perpetuity or for a limited time in the bishop of the diocese (s).

Patronage of bishop in certain cases.

1121. Where a new church is built in an extra-parochial place, the patronage of it, if not vested elsewhere, is to belong to the bishop of the diocese in which it is situate; and where an extra-parochial place has been formed into a distinct and separate parish or district parish, or district chapelry, the patronage of it is to belong to the bishop, except in cases where the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop, specially declare the patronage of a new church built in an extra-parochial place and endowed to their satisfaction (t).

Patronage
in extra-parochial places.

1122. Generally, where the advowson or right of patronage of a benefice is vested in two or more persons, the bishop is not bound to act on a presentation in which they do not all concur, and if they do not make a joint presentation within the allowed period of six months, he may collate by right of lapse (u). If, however, he admits a clerk to the benefice on a presentation in which they do not all concur, the common title of them all is not thereby disturbed (a); for the advowson is one entire thing, not in its nature severable except by partition (b). But a right of patronage may in law be exercisable by several patrons in turn (c); and if coparceners do not agree in a presentation, the eldest sister or her heir has the first turn, and so on (d), and they can severally assign their

Patronage of
coparceners,
joint tenants and tenants in common.

collation, institution, induction, or admission made under any such sale or disposition is void, and the patronage for that turn lapses to the bishop (ibid.).

(r) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 24. Every nominee on his appointment is to sign a declaration that he is a member of the Church of England. Vacancies among the trustees are to be filled in the manner provided by the deed. If the power of filling vacancies is vested in the trustees and all die without having appointed successors, or if a vacancy is not filled up for two years after its occurrence, the bishop of the diocese may fill up the number of trustees. But the trustees may act notwithstanding one or more vacancies in their number (ibid.).

(s) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 31.

(t) Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 26.

(u) See p. 590, post.

(a) Co. Litt. 186 b, 248 a; 2 Co. Inst. 365; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., pp. 14 a—18; Walter v. Dennison (1750), Amb. 82, 83. Trustees patrons must all join in a presentation (ibid.) unless otherwise provided in their instrument of trust; see p. 581, post. And where several cestuis que trust have the right of nomination, they must all join in exercising it (Seymour v. Bennet (1742), 2 Atk. 482, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 483).

(b) Barker v. London (Bishop) (1790), 1 Hy. Bl. 412, 417.

(c) Dolman's Case (1583), 4 Leon. 86.

(d) Gib. Cod. 765; Anon. (1537), 1 Dyer 55 a; Reynoldson v. Blake (1697), 1 Id. Raym. 192, 197; Barker v. London (Bishop), supra, at pp. 417, 418. The right is

SMOT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

turns without a partition of the advowson (e). But if coparceners, or joint tenants, or tenants in common make a partition of the advowson, whereby they agree to present by turns, then each becomes seised of her or his separate part of the advowson (f), with the right of presenting in the turn belonging to that part (g). The patronage of a new or consolidated benefice may be originally vested in several patrons in turns (h). If one of several part-patrons presents out of his or her turn, and the presentee is instituted or admitted, the presentation is an usurpation, and the patron entitled to the turn loses it for that turn, but the cycle of turns is not thereby altered (i). The turn is complete when the presentee is instituted or admitted. Therefore, if he is rejected by the bishop, or if his institution or admission is ipso facto void, the same part-patron may present again; but, if he is afterwards deprived, or his institution or admission is adjudged null and void by a declaratory sentence, the turn is gone and the part-patron next in turn has the presentation (k). The turn is lost if the part-patron allows his right of presentation to lapse to the bishop (l), or if he allows his right to be usurped by a stranger and does not vindicate it by quare impedit (m). But where, on the appointment of the incumbent to a bishopric, the King presents by royal prerogative (n), this presentation does not count as a turn (o).

assignable (Buller v. Exeter (Bishop) (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 340, per CLARKE, B.), and goes to her husband by the curtesy and descends to her issue (Co. Litt. 166 b; Buller v. Exeter (Bishop), supra; Thrale v. London (Bishop) (1790), 1 Hy. Bl. 376, 411, 412. If one of the coparceners dies leaving coheirs, they are entitled in turn to the turns of the deceased coparcener (Richards v. Macclesfield (Earl) (1835), 7 Sim. 257).

(e) Harris v. Nichols (1583), Cro. Eliz. 19; Reynoldson v. Blake (1697), 1 Ld. Raym. 192; Thrale v. London (Bishop), supra.

(f) Co. Litt. 18 a; Windsor v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1599), Cro. Eliz. 687; Windham v. Norwich (Bishop) (1615), 1 Brownl. 165; Bodicoate v. Steers (1737), 1 Dick. 69.

(g) Eveleigh v. Turner (1571), 3 Dyer, 299 a; Salisbury (Bishop) v. Philips (1700), 1 Ld. Raym. 535, Ex. Ch.; Advowsons Act, 1708 (7 Ann. c. 18), s. 2; 17 Vin. Abr. pp. 328—330, tit. Presentation, K, a; Matthews v. Bath and Wells (Bishop) (1785), 2 Dick. 652. In Seymour v. Bennet (1742), 2 Atk. 482, Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 483, said that in a partition case where parceners of an advowson could not agree in presenting one person, the court would direct them to draw lots as to who should have the first presentation; compare Johnstone v. Baber (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 439, C. A.

(h) Grocers' Co. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1771), 3 Wils. 214, 221; Keen v. Denny, [1894] 3 Ch. 169; Pluralities Act, 1638 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 16. As to the patronage of the benefice in Peel parishes being vested in the Crown and the bishop of the diocese alternately, see p. 563, ante.

(i) Stat. Westminster II. (1285), 13 Edw. 1, c. 5; Dolman's Case, (1583), 4 Leon. 86; Birch v. Lichfield and Coventry (Bishop) (1803), 3 Bos. & P. 444; Richards v. Macclesfield (Earl) (1835), 7 Sim. 257; Keen v. Denny, supra.

(k) Windsor's Case (1599), 6 Co. Rep. 102 a; S. C. sub nom. Windsor v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1599), Cro. Eliz. 687.

(l) 2 Bro. Abr. 149 b, 150 a, tit. Presentation, pl. 26; 17 Vin. Abr., p. 329, tit. Presentation, K, a, 7; Keen v. Denny, supra, per CHITTY, J., at p. 177. As to lapse, see p. 590, post.

(m) Leak v. Coventry (Bishop) (1801), Cro. Eliz. 811.

(n) See p. 575, post.

(o) Grocers' Co. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1771), 3 Wils. 214, 221, 232; Troward v. Calland (1796), 8 Bro. Parl. Cas. 71; Keen v. Denny, supra, per CHITTY, J., at p. 175.

1123. Where the legal estate in an advowson is vested in trustees, they are bound to present the nominee of the person or persons equitably interested in it (p). The person beneficially interested in an estate for life or other limited estate in the advowson of a benefice has the right of presentation or nomination when a vacancy in the benefice occurs during the continuance of such estate (q).

Sect. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Patrons with limited interests.

1124. Where the patronage of a vacant benefice is vested in an infant, of whatever age, the presentation is made by him and not by his guardian (r).

Infants.

1125. Where the patronage of a benefice is vested in a married woman, she holds it as if she were a feme sole, if she was married after 31st December, 1862, or if the title to it first accrued to her after that date, and can, apparently, in either of those cases, present to the benefice, when vacant, without the concurrence of her husband (s). Otherwise, he must concur with her in the presentation (t). In any case, if a child of the marriage has been living while she has been seised of or entitled to patronage in possession, and she dies possessed of it, her husband, if he survives her, has the patronage during the rest of his life as tenant by the curtesy, unless she has barred his right by a testamentary disposition which has legal force (a).

Married
woman.

1126. Where a husband dies seised of or entitled to the patronage of a benefice, leaving a widow whose right to dower in respect thereof has not been barred, she is entitled by reason of such dower to present on every third vacancy of the benefice which occurs during her life (b).

Dower.

(p) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 14. Where the advowson of a benefice is devised upon trust for sale, and the proceeds of sale and the income arising therefrom are to be applied for the benefit of a person or persons named in the will, and the benefice becomes vacant before the advowson is sold, the right of presentation or nomination is in the person or persons who, if the sale had taken place, would for the time being be beneficially interested in the proceeds of the sale or the income thereof (Hawkins v. Chappel (1739), 1 Atk. 621; Johnstone v. Baber (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 439, C. A.; Briggs v. Sharp (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 317). But where a testator devised an advowson to trustees upon trust to sell immediately after the death of the then incumbent, it was held that they would have the presentation on the vacancy occasioned by that death (Bristow v. Skirrow (1859), 5 Jur. (N. S.) 1379).

(q) Albemarle (Earl) v. Rogers (1794), 2 Ves. 477; Briggs v. Sharp (1875), L. R. 2 Eq. 317; Welch v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 432.

(r) 3 Co. Inst. 166; Gib. Cod. 794; Arthington v. Coverley (1733), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 518; Hearle v. Greenbank (1749), 3 Atk. 695, per Lord HARDWICKE, L. C., at p. 710. But there appear to have been instances in which the guardian has presented (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 140).

(s) Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 1 (1), 2, 5; Reid v. Reid (1886), 31 Ch. D. 402, C. A. See also title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(t) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 71, 140; except in the case of the Queen (ibid., p. 140; Gib. Cod. 794).

(a) Co. Litt. 29 a; Gib. Cod. 794; 2 Bl. Com. 127; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 71; Appleton v. Rowley (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 139; Eager v. Furnivall (1881), 17 Ch. D. 115; Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 1 (1), 2, 5; Hops v. Hops, [1892] 2 Ch. 336; see also note (d), p. 571, ante.

(b) Co. Litt. 379 a; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 72.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Lunacy of patron.
Patronage
when the advowson is mortgaged.
Patronage held by, or in trust for, a Roman Catholic.

Patronage held otherwise than as private property.

1127. When the patron of a benefice is a lunatic, the Crown has the right of presenting to it (c).

1128. Where the advowson of a benefice has been mortgaged, the mortgagee is the legal owner of the patronage, but, until foreclosure or sale, he is bound to present the nominee of the mortgagor (d).

1129. Where an advowson or right of patronage of a benefice is held by or in trust for a Roman Catholic, it cannot be exercised by the person or persons possessed thereof; but the University of Oxford, if the benefice is within the limits of the city of London or certain of the counties in the province of Canterbury (e), and the University of Cambridge, if the benefice is within the limits of the remaining counties in the province of Canterbury or any of the counties in the province of York (f), has the right of presenting to the benefice when it becomes void (g). But, where a patron who has been a Roman Catholic becomes a lunatic, it is questionable whether the right of the university is not superseded by the right of the Crown (h).

1130. As regards patronage held otherwise than as private property, different legal incidents attach to rights of patronage

(c) Com. Dig. tit. Idiot, C; Re Fitzgerald (1805), 2 Sch. & Lef. 432, per Lord REDESDALE, L.C., at p. 437. See title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND.

(d) Gib. Cod. 794; Jory v. Coz (1697), Prec. Ch. 71; Amhurst v. Dawling (1700) 2 Vern. 401; A.-G. v. Hesketh (1706), ibid., 549; Gally v. Selby (1720), 1 Com. 343; Croft v. Powel (1738), 2 Com. 603, 609; Gardiner v. Griffith (1726), 2 P. Wms. 404; Kensey v. Langham (1735), Cas. temp. Talb. 143, per Lord TALBOT, L.C., at p. 144; Mackenzie v. Robinson (1747), 3 Atk. 559. But in a case where the mortgage was of the advowson alone and was of long standing, and no interest had been paid, the mortgagee was considered to be entitled to present unless the mortgagor redeemed the mortgage (Dyer v. Craven (Lord) (1786), 2 Dick. 662).

(e) The counties of Oxford, Kent, Middlesex, Sussex, Surrey, Hants, Berks, Bucks, Gloucester, Worcester, Stafford, Warwick, Wilts, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, Dorset, Hereford, Northampton, Pembroke Carmarthen, Brecknock, Monmouth, Cardigan, and Montgomery (stat. (1605) 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, s. 13).

(f) The counties of Essex, Herts, Bedford, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Suffolk, Norfolk, Lincoln, Rutland, Leicester, Derby, Nottingham, Salop, Radnor, Denbigh, Flint, Carnarvon, Anglesey, Merioneth and Glamorgan; and Chester, Lancaster, York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland and Westmoreland (ibid.).

(g) Ibid.; stat. (1689) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 26, s. 2; Presentation of Benefices Act, 1713 (13 Ann. c. 13); Church Patronage Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 17); Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 16. The prohibition in the first two of those Acts against either university presenting a person holding at the time another benefice with cure of souls is now repealed (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 7). The university may elect to the benefice and exercise any other rights which they possess with respect to it in any way from time to time determined by them to be expedient by a university statute or ordinance made in the ordinary manner after 1st January, 1899 (ibid.). The right of the university attaches where a patron who has the right of nomination out of a limited class of clerks, so that a college is bound to present a qualified clerk nominated by him, is a Roman Catholic (Boyer v. Norwich (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 417, P. C.). But if one of two tenants in common of an advowson is a Roman Catholic, the other can present alone, and the university have no right (Edwards v. Exeter (Bishop) (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 652).

(h) Re Vavasour (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 275, per Lord TRURO, L.C., at p. 277; see p. 573, ante.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

belonging (1) to the Crown, the Duchy of Lancaster or Duchy of Cornwall; (2) to an office in the gift of the Crown; (3) to a municipal corporation or body; (4) to a university or college; (5) to other ecclesiastical or lay corporations aggregate; (6) to a bishop in right of his see or to other ecclesiastical corporations sole or dignitaries, in right of their office; (7) to parishioners or some other numerous class, or to trustees for them; and (8) to trustees in perpetuity whether with or without an expressed trust or specified cestuis que trust.

1131. The King, besides possessing the patronage of divers benefices in right of the Crown or of the Duchy of Lancaster, or of the Duchy of Cornwall, where there is not a Duke of Cornwall of full age, is the patron paramount of all the other benefices (i), and, as such, has the right to fill all such benefices as are not regularly filled by the patrons thereof, whether this happens by neglect, as where the patronage ultimately lapses to the Crown (k), or by incapacity to present, as where the patron is attainted or outlawed, or is an alien or a lunatic (l), or has been guilty of simony (m) or the like (n). Moreover, where a benefice becomes void by the promotion of the holder thereof to a see in the province of Canterbury or York, or where the advowson of a benefice is attached to a see, and the benefice is void during a vacancy in the see, or where the advowson of a benefice is attached to another ecclesiastical office and the benefice is void during a vacancy of the office occasioned by the promotion of the holder to a see in the province of Canterbury or York, the King has the prerogative of presenting to the void benefice (o). And as against the King a benefice is not deemed full by institution or collation until induction has supervened (p). In exercising Crown patronage of a benefice above the yearly value of £20 in the King's books, the King acts under the advice of the First Lord of the Treasury (q). But no Roman Catholic or Jew may advise the King as to the exercise of ecclesiastical patronage (r).

(i) Gib. Cod. 763.

(k) See p. 590, post.

(l) See p. 573, ante.

(m) See p. 593, post.

(n) Gib Cod. 763.

(o) Ibid.; Basset v. Gee (1800), Cro. Eliz. 790; R. v. London (Bishop) (1693), 3 Lev. 377; Potter v. Chapman (1750), Amb. 98, 101; R. v. Eton College (1857), 8 E. & B. 610, 632. But as to patronage lapsing to a bishop, see note (e), p. 590, post. The prerogative of presenting to a benefice vacated by the promotion of the incumbent to a bishopric must be exercised during the life of the person promoted (Armagh (Archbishop) v. A.-G. (1729), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 507, 514, n.). And if the King does not present and the presentee of another is admitted and dies without having been disturbed, the prerogative is lost (Basset v. Gee, supra).

(p) Gib. Cod. 763. Till induction he may revoke the presentation; and if his presentee dies after institution, but before induction, he may present another clerk (Wright v. Norwich (Bishop) (1590), 1 Leon. 156).

(q) See Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 126.

(r) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 18; Jews Relief Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49), s. 4. The offence is a high misdemeanor and disables the offender from thereafter holding any office under the Crown (ibid.).

SECT. 3.

Beneficed
Clergy.Patronage of Lord Chancellor.

1132. The Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal has the right to present to benefices in the patronage of the Crown which do not exceed the yearly value of £20 in the King's books (s). As regards such of these benefices as are enumerated in the First Schedule to the Lord Chancellor's Augmentation Act (t), he was by that Act empowered to sell the advowson of any such benefice for a sum of money or in consideration of a perpetual annuity or rentcharge, or tithe rentcharge, or land, which is to be devoted to the augmentation of the benefice (u). As regards any of the benefices in the gift of the Lord Chancellor of the clear annual value of not less than £200 nor more than £500, whether included in such First Schedule or not, but not exceeding altogether one hundred in number, the Lord Chancellor was empowered to sell and convey the advowson to any tenant in fee or in tail, whether in possession, remainder, or reversion, of freehold or copyhold land within the limits of the benefice, either absolutely or to or upon the uses or trusts of a settlement of such land, for a sum certified by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to be reasonable having regard to the age of the incumbent at the time of sale, and not being less than ten years' purchase of the clear annual value of the benefice; and the purchase-money was to be applied by him in the augmentation of benefices remaining in his gift (u). The purchaser of an advowson under the Act cannot himself sell it or contract for its sale until after the expiration of five years from the sale thereof to him; but this restriction does not operate in case of his death or bankruptcy (b).

Duchy of Lancaster.

1133. Patronage belonging to the King in right of the Duchy of Lancaster is exercised under the advice of the Chancellor of the Duchy (c).

Duchy of Cornwall.

1134. Patronage belonging to the Duchy of Cornwall, where there is a Duke of Cornwall of full age, is exercisable by him, and when that is not the case and the patronage belongs to the Crown in right of the Duchy, is exercisable by the same persons as the

(s) Gib. Cod. 763, 764; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 126. Where the Lord Chancellor presented to a benefice above the yearly value of £20 in the King's books, and the presentee was instituted and inducted, it was held that he could not be removed in favour of a subsequent presentee of the King (Lord Chancellor's Case (1611), Hob. 214).

(t) 26 & 27 Vict. c. 120.

(u) Lord Chancellor's Augmentation Act (26 & 27 Vict. c. 120), ss. 1—22, 28—37. The purchase-money, to the extent of not more than £500, might be applied in purchasing, building, or rebuilding a parsonage house on the benefice, if an equal sum for the same purpose was provided by or on behalf of the incumbent or the owner of the advowson (ibid., s. 8). The option accorded to the purchaser by s. 5, of giving security for payment of one half of the purchase-money with compound interest when a vacancy in the benefice accrued, see to be repealed by the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (3) (b);

(a) Id. post.

The Lord Chancellor's Augmentation Act (26 & 27 Vict. c. 120), ss. 22—37, £400, or station was not to cause the annual value of a benefice to exceed ss. 26, 27). exceed £1 for every four inhabitants within its limits (ibid.,

(b) Id., s.

(c) R. v. 21.

(1 & 2 Vict. c. 106) (Bishop) (1613), Moore (x. b.), 874; Pluralities Act, 1838 76), s. 126.

Crown patronage, namely, by the King on the advice of the First Lord of the Treasury if the benefice is above the yearly value of £20 in the King's books, and, if not, by the Lord Chancellor (d).

Sect. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1135. Where a right of presentation to a benefice belongs to an office in the gift or appointment of the Crown which is held by a Roman Catholic or a Jew, the right devolves on and is exercisable by the Archbishop of Canterbury (e).

Office held by
Roman Catholic or Jew.

1136. Before 1835 municipal corporations or particular bodies of members thereof (f) were in many cases possessed of advowsons and rights of nomination to benefices, ecclesiastical preferments, and offices of priest, curate, preacher or minister. All such advowsons and rights, if not vested in them as charitable trustees, were thenceforth directed to be sold (g). But notwithstanding any such sale the corporation and their property continue liable to any previously subsisting obligation of maintaining in whole or in part a priest, curate, preacher or minister; and the liability may be enforced in the same manner as if the advowson or right of nomination had remained vested in the corporation. And where a municipal corporation hold land subject to an obligation to provide a priest, curate, preacher, or minister, they may, with the approval of the Treasury, augment or endow his office by assigning a competent portion of the land, or charging thereon an annual

Municipal
patronage.

(d) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 128; Duchy of Cornwall Management Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 49), s. 38.

(e) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 17; Jews Relief Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.

(f) In Gape v. Hanley (1776), 3 Term Rep. 288, n. (a), where the advowson of a benefice had been granted by royal charter to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of St. Albans, uniform usage was held to interpret the charter as entitling the mayor and aldermen to present to the benefice.

(g) Where at the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), a municipal corporation, or any particular body of members thereof, were in their municipal capacity, and not as trustees of a charity, possessed of any advowson appendant or in gross, or any right of nomination to the office of priest, curate, preacher or minister, the advowson or right of nomination, if not already sold, is to be sold at such time and in such manner as the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England may direct, so that the best price be obtained for it, and is, with their consent, to be conveyed to the purchaser by the council of the borough under their corporate seal (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 122). This Act repealed similar provisions in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 26, and the Municipal Corporations (Benefices) Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 31). The proceeds of sale are to be invested, and the income is to be paid into the borough fund; or the proceeds may be applied in whole or in part towards the liquidation of a debt contracted by the corporation before the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76). Any vacancy in the benefice or preferment occurring before the sale is to be filled by the collation or nomination of the bishop or ordinary of the diocese in which the benefice or preferment is situate (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 122). Upon the sale of a right of nomination to a preferment which is not a benefice or perpetual curacy, such preferment becomes a benefice presentative, and the holder thereof and his successors become a body corporate with perpetual succession and capable of taking and holding in perpetuity property granted to or purchased for them by the Governors of Queen

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

University, college, and public school
patronage.

stipend in money or in kind, to or for the benefit of him and his successors in office (h).

1137. Provision has been made by statute for the sale, under the authority of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of advowsons and rights of patronage held wholly or partly by or in trust for the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, or any college therein, or the Colleges of Winchester and Eton, or the head or any other member of any such college, and for the purchase of advowsons by any such university or college under the same authority (i).

The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge may elect to benefices in their patronage and exercise any other rights which they possess in respect thereof in any way from time to time determined by them to be expedient by a university statute or ordinance made in the ordinary manner since 1st January, 1899 (k).

Statutes may be made by the governing bodies of the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, and the other public schools to which the Public Schools Act, 1868 (l), applies, with respect to the mode and conditions of appointment to any ecclesiastical benefice, the patronage whereof is vested in the governing body as such, or to which persons educated at or connected with the school have an exclusive or preferential claim (m).

The colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster are prohibited

Anne's Bounty or by other persons contributing with such governors as benefactors (ibid., s. 121 (3)). Where a municipal corporation or any members thereof in their corporate capacity were possessed of an advowson in trust for a charity, trustees in their place were to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor (Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 71; Re Shrewsbury School (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 632; A.-G. v. Powis (Earl) (1853), Kay, 186).

(h) Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 60), s. 121 (1), (2).

(i) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), ss. 69, 70, 83-8; Universities and College Estates Act Extension, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 59), ss. 7-10. A college in the University of Oxford or Cambridge may sell or may themselves purchase the advowson of a benefice attached to the headship of the college (Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 69). Or, where the endowments of the benefice are sufficient, the college may charge them with payment to the head of such annual sum, not exceeding one half of the total revenue, as in the opinion of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the bishop is adequate; and thereupon the advowson will be vested in the college free from any trust in favour of the head (Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1860 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 46), s. 5). Where under the statutory powers for the purpose an ecclesiastical rectory, prebend, or other preferment without cure of souls, or inappropriate rectory, belonging to a university or college, and having a right of patronage attached thereto, is sold or annexed to a benefice with cure of souls, and the right of patronage is intended to be excluded from the sale or annexation, it becomes thereupon severed from the rectory, prebend, or preferment sold or annexed, and is vested in the university or college who were the former patrons or owners of such rectory, prebend, or preferment (Universities and College Estates Act Extension, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 59), s. 8).

(k) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 7. For the right of one or other of the universities to present where the advowson of a benefice is held by or in trust for a Roman Catholic, see p. 574, ante.

(l) 31 & 32 Vict. c. 118.

(m) Ibid., s. 6 (5). See as to preferential claims, A.-G. v. Powis (Earl) (1853), Kay, 186.

from holding more advowsons than equal in number one moiety of the fellows or reputed fellows of the college, or in case of there being none such, one moiety of the students of the college in the year 1735, exclusive of advowsons annexed to or given for the benefit or support of the headship of the college (n).

Section.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1138. The chapter of a cathedral or collegiate church, unless otherwise arranged between themselves, exercise ecclesiastical patronage by the votes of a majority of their body, and the dean has no veto upon it (o). They can only present to a vacant benefice in their patronage a clerk possessing certain qualifications of connection with their church or with a university, or of service in the diocese (p).

Restriction on patronage of cathedral and collegiate chapters.

1139. A spiritual person cannot sell or assign any patronage or right of presentation belonging to him by virtue of a dignity or spiritual office held by him (q).

Patronage of
ecclesiastical
corporations sole in right of their office.

1140. Where a benefice was on or before 11th August, 1840, possessed by a dean in right of any separate estate held by him as part of the emoluments of his office, any succeeding dean may, upon its becoming vacant, present himself thereto (r).

Patronage of dean.

1141. In the absence of custom or agreement to the contrary, the incumbent of a parish is, in right of his benefice, entitled to the patronage of all chapels in his parish (s), and of any district chapelry which has been formed thereout (t).

Patronage of
incumbent.

1142. While a benefice is under sequestration, the incumbent is incapable of presenting to any vacant benefice of which he is patron in right of the sequestered benefice, and the right of presenting thereto is exercisable by the bishop of the diocese in which the vacant benefice is situate (u).

Benefice
under sequestration.

1143. Where a vicarage in the patronage of the rector becomes void during a vacancy in the rectory, the patron of the rectory has the right of presenting to it (a).

Exercise of patronage belonging to vacant
benefice.

1144. In some cases the advowson of a church or benefice is in the ownership of inhabitants, ratepayers, freeholders, or other persons

Patronage in inhabitants or numerous class.

(n) Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 36), s. 5.

(o) Stat. (1641) 33 Hen. 8, c. 27; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., pp. 115—118; Hascard (Doctor) v. Somany (Doctor) (1693), Freem. (K. B.) 504.

(p) See p. 599, post.

(q) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 42.

(r) Ibid., ss. 41, 50.

(s) A.-G. v. Brereton (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 425, 429; Line v. Harris (1752), 1 Lee, 146, 156; Dixon v. Kershaw (1766), Amb. 528; Farnworth v. Chester (Bishop) (1825), 4 B. & C. 555, per ABBOTT, C.J., at pp. 568, 569.

(t) See p. 567, ante.

(u) Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), s. 6.

(a) 3 Bell. Abr. 348, and see pp. 561, 566, post. As to the exercise by the Crown of patronage belonging to a vacant see, and to a vacant benefice when the incumbent has been promoted to a see, see p. 575, ante, and note (d), p. 585, post.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

forming a numerous class and deriving no pecuniary advantage from the exercise of the right of patronage, and is vested in them or in trustees appointed by or acting on behalf of them (b). The right is exercised by the owners by election; and the trustees or the churchwardens present the clergyman who has obtained the majority of the votes given (c). The election may be by ballot (d). The advowson is charitable property (e). The owners may direct a sale of it; and if ten of them so require the incumbent of the church or benefice is to convene a meeting of the owners to decide whether it shall be sold (f). If the decision is in the affirmative, the advowson and the duty of carrying out the sale are to vest absolutely in the existing trustees, if any, and, if there are none, in a body of trustees consisting of the incumbent and not less than five nor more than eleven owners, who are appointed for the purpose at the meeting or some adjournment thereof; and the advowson is to be sold with all convenient speed by public auction or private contract (g).

Trustee patrons in perpetuity.

1145. An advowson or right of patronage of a benefice may be held by trustees in perpetuity, and without power of alienation (h),

(b) Decisions on the right have been given in the cases of Sandford in Lincolnshire (A.-G. v. Davy (1741), 2 Atk. 212); Clerkenwell (A.-G. v. Parker (1747), 3 Atk. 576; A.-G. v. Rutter (1770), 2 Russ. 101, n.; A.-G. v. Forster (1805), 10 Ves. 335; A.-G. v. Newcombe (1807), 14 Ves. 1; Carter v. Cromptley (1857), 8 De G. M. & G. 680, O. A.; Shaw v. Thompson (1876), 3 Ch. D. 233); Leeds (A.-G. v. Scott (1750), 1 Ves. Sen. 413; Wilson v. Kershaw (1750), 7 Bro. Parl. Cas. 296); Painswick (Fearon v. Webb (1802), 14 Ves. 13); Willenhall (R. v. Stafford (Marquis) (1790), 3 Term Rep. 646; A.-G. v. Stafford (Marquis) (1796), 3 Ves. 77); St. Sepulchre, Cambridge (Faulkner v. Elger (1825), 4 B. & C. 449); St. Stephen, Coleman Street (Kidenborough v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1826), 2 Russ. 93; Re St. Stephen, Coleman Street, Re St. Mary the Virgin, Aldermanbury (1888), 39 Ch. D. 492) Sandford in Devonshire (R. v. Davie (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 374; Chudleigh (A.-G. v. Cumming (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 139); and Orton (R. v. Orton (Trustees) (1849), 14 Q. B. 139). Where an advowson is vested in the master and brethren of an eleemosynary hospital the majority are entitled to present and the master has no veto (R. v. Kendall (1841), 1 Q. B. 366).

(c) A.-G. v. Forster (1805), 10 Ves. 335; R. v. Orton (Trustees), supra; Carter v. Cromptley (1857), 4 De G. M. & G. 680, O. A., at p. 685.

(d) Shaw v. Thompson (1876), 3 Ch. D. 233, 252. The contrary was held before the ballot was prescribed for civil elections (Kidenborough v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1826), 2 Russ. 93).

(e) A.-G. v. Parker (1747), 3 Atk. 576; Re St. Stephen, Coleman Street, Re St. Mary the Virgin, Aldermanbury (1888), 39 Ch. D. 492.

(f) Sale of Advowsons Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 50), ss. 1—3.

(g) Ibid., ss. 4—16. The net money produced by the sale is to be applied to certain specified purposes in connection with a parsonage house, the augmentation of the benefice, if small, the repair of the church, the erection of schools or the building or endowing of a chapel of ease, or in aid of the rates, in the prescribed order; but with power for the meeting which resolves on the sale to modify the order of application of the money (ibid., s. 9). Vacancies among the trustees before the trust is completely executed are to be supplied in the prescribed manner, and the concurrence of two-thirds of their whole number is requisite to all their resolutions (ibid., ss. 11, 12). If the benefice becomes void before the sale is completed, the right of presentation is to be exercised as if no proceedings for the sale had been initiated (ibid., s. 14).

(h) A.-G. v. Floyer (1716), 2 Vern. 748; Foley v. A.-G. (1721), 7 Bro. Parl. Cas. 249, 254.

SECT. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

whether or not a trust is expressed or cestuis que trust are named (i). If no trust is expressed nor cestuis que trust named, or a trust is declared simply to present a fit person to the benefice, which is the legal duty of all patrons, the trust is not a charitable trust (k). But the trust is a charitable trust if the advowson is given to trustees for the benefit of a charity (l), or if the trustees are to present a clerk elected by the parishioners or some other class of persons (m), or a clerk holding special opinions in the interest of a particular school of thought in the Church (n). In the absence of any provision to the contrary, all the trustees must present (o), unless they are a corporation, in which case the majority may select the presentee without using the corporate seal (p). But a power for the majority to present may be contained in the instrument creating or regulating the trust (q). In the absence of a provision to the contrary in the instrument of trust the survivors or survivor of the trustees may present (r).

1146. Where the bishop of a diocese, as such, either alone or jointly with one or more other persons, is trustee of, or is invested with the power of exercising, the patronage of any church and benefice which, when he or his predecessor was first invested with the trust or power, were within the diocese, but owing to an alteration of the limits of the diocese have since become included in another diocese, the Charity Commissioners, with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, under their common seal, may make an order substituting for such bishop, in respect of the trust or power, the bishop of the diocese in which the church and benefice have become included (s).

Substitution of one bishop for another as trustee.

(i) Foley v. A.-G., supra; A.-G. v. Scott (1750), 1 Ves. Sen. 413; A.-G. v. Litchfield (Bishop) (1801), 5 Ves. 825; A.-G. v. Lawson (1866), 36 L. J. (CH.) 130. As to the appointment of patronage trustees under the Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts, see pp. 568 et seq., ante.

(k) Re Church Patronage Trust, Laurie v. A.-G., [1904] 2 Oh. 613, O. A. But a trust to present a fit and proper person duly qualified according to law has been held to require more than the mere presentation of a legally qualified person (A.-G. v. Powis (Earl) (1853), Kay, 186, per Lord HATHERLEY (then PAGE WOOD, V.-O.), at pp. 212, 213).

(l) A.-G. v. Ward (1829), 7 L. J. (O. S.) (CH.) 114; Re Shrewsbury School (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 632.

(m) Re St. Stephen, Coleman Street, Re St. Mary the Virgin, Aldermanbury (1888), 39 Ch. D. 492.

(n) Re Hunter, Hood v. A.-G., [1897] 2 Oh. 105 (reversed on other grounds in House of Lords, Hunter v. A.-G., [1899] A. C. 309); Re Church Patronage Trust, Laurie v. A.-G., [1904] 2 Oh. 643, 652, 654, 655, O. A.

(o) A.-G. v. Scott, (1750), 1 Ves. Sen. 413. But the presentation will be sustained where one trustee dissents (A.-G. v. Cuming (1843), 2 Y. & O. Oh. Cas. 139), or is incapable of assenting (A.-G. v. Lawson (1866), 36 L. J. (CH.) 130). A majority cannot present without consulting all the others who are capable of acting (ibid., per KINDERSLEY, V.-O., at p. 134).

(p) A.-G. v. Davy (1741), 2 Atk. 212. But the presentation ought to be under the common seal (Bro. Abr. tit. Corporation, 83).

(q) Foley v. A.-G. (1721), 7 Bro. Parl. Cas. 249, 254.

(r) A.-G. v. Litchfield (Bishop) (1801), 5 Ves. 825, where the heir of the surviving trustee was also held entitled to present; A.-G. v. Lawson, supra. But the number of trustees ought to be kept filled up (A.-G. v. Litchfield (Bishop), supra).

(s) Bishops' Trusts Substitution Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 71), ss. 1, 2.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Who to be deemed or act as patron in certain cases.

1147. Where, under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (g), or any of the Acts to which the provisions of that Act as to patrons are extended (a), the consent or concurrence of the patron of a benefice, or notice to him, is required in the case of a matter affecting the benefice, the person who, if the benefice were at the time vacant, would be entitled to present or nominate thereto is for those purposes to be deemed the patron (b). But where consent to the exercise of any power is required from a patron who is a minor, idiot or lunatic, or a married woman not having a separate interest in the advowson, the guardian, committee, or husband of such patron (but in the case of a married woman with her written consent), may execute the instrument by which the power is exercised, in testimony of the patron's consent (c). Where the patronage of a benefice is in the Crown, the consent of the patron to the exercise of any power and the notice to the patron are to be given by and to (1) the First Lord of the Treasury, if the benefice is above the yearly value of £20 in the King's books, and the Lord Chancellor, if the benefice does not exceed that yearly value, and (2) the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if the benefice is in the patronage of the Crown in right of the Duchy of Lancaster (d). Where the patronage of a benefice belongs to the Duchy of Cornwall, the consent of the patron to the exercise of any power and the notice to the patron are to be given by and to (1) the Duke of Cornwall, if of full age, and (2) the same persons as where the patronage is in the Crown, when the benefice is within the patronage of the Crown in right of the Duchy of Cornwall (e).

(ii.) Transfer and Transmission of Patronage.

Transfer and transmission
of patronage.

1148. An advowson or right of patronage is transferable or transmissible by conveyance or devise or by operation of law in the

(g) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.

(a) Namely, the Church Building Acts, 1818 to 1840 (see Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 21; New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37) (see ibid., s. 23); New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104) (see ibid., s. 20); and Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142) (see ibid., s. 24)).

(b) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 125. A parish or place in which there is no parish church, nor any known patron of the benefice, is to be treated as an extra-parochial place for the purpose of forming an ecclesiastical district thereout; and notices required to be sent to the patron are to be sent to the bishop of the diocese (New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), s. 11).

(c) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 127.

(d) Ibid., s. 126.

(e) Ibid., s. 128. The Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), ss. 14, 20, and the Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 25), ss. 10—12, contain similar provisions as to the consent of the patron to the exercise of powers given by those Acts where the right of patronage is in the Crown or belongs to the Duchy of Cornwall, or where the patron is a minor, idiot, lunatic, or married woman; and these provisions, with a provision that for the purpose of such consent the person who, if the benefice were vacant, would be entitled to present or nominate or collate thereto, shall be deemed the patron, are by the Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 22, extended to the consents of patrons required by that Act or by any of the earlier Church Building Acts (see note (i), p. 444, ante), or by Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10).

Sec. 2.
Benefices
Clergy.

same manner as other incorporeal hereditaments (f); but under the Benefices Act, 1898 (g), the transfer thereof as defined in that Act (h) is subject to the following restrictions: (1) It must be registered in the prescribed manner (i) in the registry of the diocese within one month from the date thereof or within such extended time as the bishop under special circumstances thinks fit to allow; (2) it must transfer the whole interest of the transferor in the advowson or right of patronage, except that in a family settlement a life interest may be reserved to the settlor, and in a mortgage a right of redemption may be reserved; (3) more than twelve months must have elapsed since the last institution or admission to the benefice; (4) except in the case of an advowson to be sold in conjunction with a manor or with an estate in land of not less than one hundred acres situate in the parish in which the benefice is situate, or in an adjoining parish and belonging to the same owner as the advowson, a right of patronage cannot be offered for sale by public auction (k). The following agreements are also invalid, namely: (1) An agreement for the exercise of a right of patronage in favour of or on the nomination of a particular person, and (2) an agreement on or in connection with the transfer of a right of patronage (i.) for the re-transfer of the right; (ii.) for postponing payment of any part of the consideration of the transfer until a vacancy in the benefice or for more than three months; (iii.) for payment of interest until a vacancy or for more than three months; (iv.) for any payment in respect of the date at which a vacancy occurs; and (v.) for the resignation of a benefice in favour of any person (l).

The advowson of a benefice may be legally transferred when the incumbent is in extremis, if an intended presentee is not privy to the transfer (m).

When incumbent is in extremis.

1149. The proprietor of an advowson may be registered under the Land Transfer Acts in the same manner and with the same

Registration.

(f) Co. Litt. 17 b, 332 a, 335 b; Com. Dig. tit. Advowson, c. 1; Pannell v. Hodgson (1576), Cary, 74; Holdsworth v. Fairfax (1834), 3 Cl. & Fin. 115, H. L.

(g) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48, s. 1.

(h) The definition includes any conveyance or assurance passing or creating a legal or equitable interest inter vivos, and any agreement for such a conveyance or assurance, but does not include a transmission on marriage, death, or bankruptcy, or otherwise by operation of law, nor a transfer on the appointment of a new trustee where no beneficial interest passes (ibid., s. 1 (6)).

(i) Benefices Rules, 1898, rr. 2, 3, Sched., Form, No. 1 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. I., Benefices, England, pp. 1, 4).

(k) A person who offers a right of patronage for sale by auction in contravention of this restriction, or who bids at any such sale, is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £100 (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (2)).

(l) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (3). As to what agreements for resignation of a benefice in favour of certain persons, entered into otherwise than on the transfer of a right of patronage, are valid under the Clergy Resignation Bonds Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 94), see pp. 627 et seq., post.

(m) Smith v. Shelbourn (1899), Cro. Eliz. 685; Barret v. Glubb (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1053; Fox v. Chester (Bishop) (1829), 6 Bing. 1, H. L.

SMOT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Descent where not effectually devised.

Exchange, transfer, or alteration of
patronage.

incidents as in the case of land, or as near thereto as circumstances admit (n).

1150. If the owner of an advowson dies without having devised his whole interest in it, the advowson or the undevised interest in it passes to his heir-at-law (o), although in the first instance, like other real estate of a deceased person, it vests in his legal personal representatives and is liable to be administered as his assets (p).

1151. An exchange or transfer of advowsons, or alterations in the exercise of patronage of benefices, with a view either to improve the value or make better provision for the spiritual duties of ill-endowed parishes or districts, or to make better provision for the cure of souls in the benefices affected by the transaction, may be effected by schemes of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners ratified by Order in Council, with the consent of the patrons and of the bishop of the diocese, or of each diocese if the benefices lie in different dioceses, and, where the bishop is himself one of the patrons, of the archbishop of the province (q). An exchange of advowsons or rights of patronage with a view to proceedings for the union of two or more benefices under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (r), may be effected by Order in Council, with the consent of the patrons, and, where a patron is an ecclesiastical corporation, aggregate or sole, of the bishop of the diocese, or of each diocese if the benefices lie in different dioceses, and, where the bishop is a patron, of the archbishop of the province (s). And, generally, the King, as regards patronage vested in him in right of the Crown or in right of the Duchy of Lancaster or the Duchy of Cornwall, and any archbishop or other ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, and any other corporation, and the head or governing body of any college or collegiate establishment or hospital, entitled in his or their corporate capacity to any patronage, may give and take, by way of exchange, advowsons and ecclesiastical patronage, by means of a scheme of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners 'ratified by Order in Council (t). Where the

(n) Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 82; Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 18, Sched. I.

(o) Kenney v. Langham (1735), Oas. temp. Talb. 143; Sherrard v. Harborough (Lord) (1753), 1 Amb. 165; Martin v. Martin (1842), 12 Sim. 579; Johnstone v. Baber (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 439, C. A.

(p) Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), ss. 1—3.

(q) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), ss. 73, 83—87; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), ss. 22, 24; Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 114), s. 12; Church Patronage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 39). The patronage may be transferred from or to an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate or sole, notwithstanding any statute of mortmain (Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 22; Church Patronage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 39)).

(r) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 16. See p. 606, post.

(s) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), ss. 23, 24.

(t) Ecclesiastical Commissioners (Exchange of Patronage) Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 50); Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), s. 42.

patronage of a benefice is given in exchange by the Crown, the benefice taken in exchange follows the course of patronage of the benefice so given in exchange (a).

SMO. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1152. When a benefice becomes vacant, the right of presentation thereto is said to be fallen. It has become a personal right or chattel, disannexed from the advowson (b); and it cannot be alienated (c), but must be exercised by the person who was patron at the time when it fell, or by the legal personal representative of such person (d). Consequently it does not pass by a transfer of the patronage which is not completed before the avoidance of the benefice (e).

Right of presentation when benefice vacant.

(iii.) Disturbance of Right.

1153. The right of the patron of a benefice may be disturbed by a pretending patron, if he presents a clerk to the benefice; by a clerk presented by a pretending patron, if he demands or obtains institution or admission to the benefice; and by the bishop, if he either institutes or admits a clerk presented by a pretending patron, or, without any adverse presentation having been made, collates a clerk selected by himself, or refuses or unduly delays (f) to institute or admit a clerk presented by the patron. Where both the patron and a pretending patron make presentations, the church of the benefice becomes litigious (g). If a clerk is instituted or admitted to a benefice upon the presentation of one who is not the lawful patron, it is called a usurpation (h).

How right
may be disturbed.

(a) Ecclesiastical Commissioners (Exchange of Patronage) Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 50), s. 4.

(b) Stephens v. Wall (1569), 3 Dyer, 282 b, 283 a; Gorge v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1587), Owen, 53; R. v. Fane (1589), 4 Leon. 107, 109; Baker v. Rogers (1600), Cro. Eliz. 788; Mirehouse v. Rennell (1833), 7 Bli. (N. S.) 241, H. L., per BOSANQUET, J., at p. 256; Alston v. Atlay (1837), 7 Ad. & El. 289, 293, 311, 312, Ex. Ch.

(c) Baker v. Rogers, supra; Lincoln (Bishop) v. Wolfstan (1764), 3 Burr. 1504, 1510, 1512, Ex. Ch.

(d) Stephens v. Wall, supra; Gorge v. Lincoln (Bishop) supra; R. v. Fane, supra; Repington v. Tamworth School (Governors) (1763), 2 Wils. 150; Mirehouse v. Rennell, supra, per Lord LYNDHURST, at p. 318. The rights of the king, upon the death of a bishop or a tenant in capite of the Crown, to present to a benefice in his patronage as bishop, or as such tenant in capite, which has fallen vacant previously to his death, are exceptions to the rule, arising out of the royal prerogative (ibid., at pp. 258, 259, 318, 319). Where a married woman entitled to the advowson of a benefice dies while the benefice is vacant, her husband is entitled to present (ibid., per Lord LYNDHURST, at p. 318; Co. Litt. 120 a). But where the advowson of a benefice belongs to the incumbent, so that his death creates a vacancy in it, the right of presentation goes to his heir or devisee, and not to his executor (Holt v. Winchester (Bishop) (1682), 3 Lev. 47; Hill v. London (Bishop) (1738), 1 Atk. 618; Martin v. Martin (1842), 12 Sim. 679).

(e) Mirehouse v. Rennell, supra, per Lord LYNDHURST, at p. 319; Alston v. Atlay, supra. If a vicarage in the patronage of the rector becomes vacant, and the rector before he presents is made a bishop or otherwise vacates the rectory by cession, he retains the right of presentation for that turn (Fitz. Nat. Brev. 34, N). If a prebendary, entitled in right of his prebend to the advowson of a benefice, dies while the benefice is vacant, the right to present belongs to his legal personal representatives (Mirehouse v. Rennell, supra).

(f) 2 Roll. Abr. 366.

(g) 3 Bl. Com. 244—246; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 227, 228.

(h) No usurpation upon the avoidance of a benefice has the effect in itself o

SECT. 3.

Beneficed
Clergy.

Remedies.

1154. The remedies for disturbance of right of patronage are fourfold, namely, an action of quare impedit (i); a suit of duplex querela (k); a jus patronatus (l); and an appeal to the court constituted under the Benefices Act, 1898 (m). Pending a dispute as to the patronage, the presentation, institution, and induction of the clerk of one of the claimants can be restrained by injunction (n).

Action of *quare
impedit*.

1155. An action of quare impedit (o) can be brought in the temporal court by the patron where the bishop refuses to institute or admit his presentee on the ground of unfitness in respect of doctrine or ritual (p), or on the ground of the patron's want of title, or of the church having become litigious (q). It can also be brought by a person having the right of nomination to the benefice against the legal patron, if he does not give effect to that right (r). If the disturbance arises from the action of the bishop alone, he alone is made defendant to the action. But if another clerk has been presented by a pretending patron, the action must be brought against the pretending patron (s), and it is important to join his clerk and the bishop as co-defendants (a). For if the clerk has already been instituted or admitted to the benefice, and is not joined in the action, a judgment in favour of the patron will not extend to remove the clerk, and the patron, though successful, will, displacing the estate of the patron; but if he is disturbed upon a subsequent avoidance, he may maintain his action of quare impedit notwithstanding such usurpation (Advowsons Act, 1708 (7 Ann. c. 18), s. 1), provided he is not barred by lapse of time; see p. 589, post.

(i) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 238—305.

(k) Ibid., pp. 231—235.

(l) Ibid., pp. 235—237.

(m) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48, s. 3.

(n) Potter v. Chapman (1750), 1 Dick. 146; Nicholson v. Knapp (1838), 9 Sim. 326; Greenslade v. Dare (1863), 17 Beav. 502.

(o) As to the indorsement on the writ, see R. S. O., Appendix A, Part III., s. 4. As to the pleadings, see Shireburne v. Hitch (1708), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 110; Marshall v. Exeter (Bishop) (1859), 6 C. B. (N. S.) 716; Exeter (Bishop) v. Marshall (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 17. The right to bring the action is lost by a grant of the advowson made after it has accrued, since it neither remains in the grantor nor passes to the grantee (Leak v. Coventry (Bishop) (1800), Cro. Eliz. 811). When a benefice is full, the King, like any other patron, cannot present to it without displacing the incumbent in possession by an action of quare impedit (stat. (1389) 13 Ric. 2, stat. 1, c. 1; stat. (1402) 4 Hen. 4, c. 22).

(p) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 3 (1), (5); Heywood v. Manchester (Bishop) (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 404. The bishop's defence must state the particulars of the presentee's unfitness (Exeter (Bishop) v. Marshall (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 17). As to refusal on any other ground of unfitness, see p. 588, post.

(q) Stat. Westminster II. (1285), 13 Edw. 1, c. 5; 3 Bl. Com. 246—250. A church is said to become litigious if two presentations are offered to the bishop upon the same avoidance by persons claiming adversely to one another (3 Bl. Com. 246).

(r) Quare Impedit de Hospital, Rast. 506 b; R. v. Stafford (Marquis) (1790)¹, 3 Term Rep. 646, per Lord KENYON, C.J., at p. 651; Welch v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 432.

(s) Hall v. Bath and Wells (Bishop) (1589), 7 Co. Rep. 26 b; Elvis v. York (Archbishop) (1619), Hob. 315, 316. The action does not abate on the death of the pretending patron (Hall v. Bath and Wells (Bishop), supra, at p. 26 b).

(a) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 43; Vol. II., p. 358.

Sec. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

therefore, lose the present turn (b). And if the action is not determined within six months after the benefice became void, the bishop, unless he is made a party to it, will become entitled to collate to the benefice by lapse (c). The bishop and the clerk, when so joined, usually disclaim all title, except as ordinary and presentee respectively, and leave the pretending patron to defend his title; and upon their disclaimer the party against whom judgment is given is ordered to pay their costs (d). In order that either the plaintiff or the pretending patron may obtain a judgment in his favour he must not only disprove the other's title, but must prove his own (e). The judgment for the party who establishes his right, whether plaintiff or defendant (f), is that he recover his right of presentation, the costs of the action, and also, where the plaintiff is the successful party, damages (g). If the church became void more than six months before the institution of the action, and a clerk has been admitted on the presentation of a person other than the plaintiff, or if the bishop, either before or during the action, having the right to do so by lapse, has collated to the benefice, the successful party loses his present turn (h). Otherwise the judgment

(b) Lancaster v. Lowe (1605), Cro. Jac. 92, S. O. sub nom. Boswel's Case, 6 Co. Rep. 48 b.

(c) Brickhead v. York (Archbishop) (1617), Hob. 197, 201; Elvis v. York (Archbishop), supra, 320. If lapse to the bishop is barred by his being made a defendant, the right by lapse will not pass on to the archbishop and the King (Lancaster v. Lowe S. O. sub nom. Boswel's Case, supra).

(d) 3 Bl. Com. 249. The bishop, unless he has collated, cannot counterplead the plaintiff's title (Apperley v. Hereford (Bishop) (1833), 9 Bing. 681; Storie v. Winchester (Bishop) (1850), 9 Q. B. 62; 17 Q. B. 653) except in the case of a title alleged in the King as against the bishop's collation by lapse (Ordinance for the Clergy, 1352 (25 Edw. 3, stat. 6, c. 7)).

(e) Tufton v. Temple (1666), Vaugh. 1, 6—8. He must prove that he or some one under whom he claims has made a presentation to the benefice (Meath (Bishop) v. Belfield (Lord) (1748), 1 Wils. 215; Tillard v. Shebbeare (1767), 2 Wils. 366; Cooke v. Elphin (Bishop) (1831), 5 Bl. (N. S.) 103, H. L., per Lord TENTERDEN, at p. 126). For the requisite evidence to support the claim of a bishop to collate, see Irish Society v. Derry (Bishop) (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 641, H. L. If the clerk of the pretending patron has been already admitted to the benefice, that is prima facie proof of his title (Curllise v. Whaley (1867), L. R. 2 H. L. 391, 418).

(f) Portman's (Sir Hugh) Case (1598), 7 Co. Rep. 27 b.

(g) Stat. Westminster II. (1285), 13 Edw. 1, c. 5; 3 Bl. Com. 249, 250; Gardiner v. Griffith (1726), 2 P. Wms. 404; Boteler v. Allington (1746), 3 Atk. 453, 458. If judgment is given for the plaintiff, inquiry has to be made into three further points: (i.) whether the church is full, and, if full, on whose presentation; (ii.) as to the yearly value of the church; and (iii.) whether six months have elapsed since the church became void (2 Co. Inst. 362, 363; 3 Bl. Com. 249; Peyner v. Chorleton (1556), Dyer, 135 a; Boswel's Case (1605), 6 Co. Rep. 48 b, 49 a). The damages are two years' full value of the benefice where the turn is lost, and six months' value if a clerk has been admitted to the benefice but is removable (Stat. Westminster II. (1285), 13 Edw. 1, c. 5; Henslow v. Salisbury (Bishop) (1551), Dyer, 76 b; 2 Co. Inst. 362; Boswel's Case (1605), 6 Co. Rep. 48 b, 51 a). As to the costs of an ecclesiastical patron reasonably defending the action before R. S. C., Ord. 65, see Edwards v. Exeter (Bishop) (1839), 6 Bing. (N. C.) 146.

(h) Stat. Westminster II. (1285), 13 Edw. 1, c. 5; 3 Bl. Com. 250; unless the holding of the benefice by the clerk in possession is void for simony (17 Vin. Abr. 338), or unless the successful party is the King, in which case the present turn is not lost by the expiration of the six months, provided a presentation is

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

in favour of the plaintiff orders the issue of a writ to the bishop to admit his presentee (i), and, if the church is full, orders the removal of the clerk who holds it (k).

*Duplex
querela.*

1156. Except where the bishop refuses institution or admission on some ground specified in s. 2 of the Benefices Act, 1898 (l), or on some other ground of unfitness or disqualification of the presentee sufficient in law to justify the refusal, not being a ground of doctrine or ritual (m), a presentee who is refused institution or admission by the bishop may bring a suit of duplex querela (n) against the bishop before the provincial court, or, if the refusing ordinary is an archbishop, before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council: and if another clerk has been also presented, he is made a co-defendant to the suit (o). The suit, however, cannot be brought after another clerk has been inducted to the benefice, since a temporal right has been then acquired which can only be questioned in a temporal court (p).

*Jus
patronatus.*

1157. A jus patronatus is a process instituted by the bishop, if he so thinks fit, at the request of either of the parties claiming to be patrons, or either of the clerks presented by them, when the church is litigious, or, when it is not litigious, if he has a doubt as to the title of the patron claiming to present. He may himself sit as judge, but the process is usually carried out by a commission issued by him. A jury of six clergymen and six laymen is summoned to inquire who is the rightful patron, and the bishop institutes or made within the next six months (stat. temp. incert. Prerogativa Regis, c. 10 (17 Edw. 2, stat. 1, c. 8, Ruff.)).

(i) Portman's (Sir Hugh) Case (1598), 7 Co. Rep. 27 b; 3 Bl. Com. 260.

(k) 3 Bl. Com. 249, 250.

(l) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48. The grounds specified in s. 2 are (i.) that at the date of the vacancy not more than one year has elapsed since a transfer as defined by s. 1 (see note (m), p. 599, post) of the right of patronage of the benefice, unless it be proved that the transfer was not effected in view of the probability of a vacancy within such year; (ii.) that at the date of the presentation not more than three years have elapsed since the presentee was ordained deacon; and (iii.) that the presentee is unfit for the discharge of the duties of the benefice by reason of physical or mental infirmity or incapacity, pecuniary embarrassment of a serious character, grave misconduct or neglect of duty in an ecclesiastical office, evil life, having by his conduct caused grave scandal concerning his moral character since his ordination, or having, with reference to the presentation, been knowingly party or privy to a transaction or agreement which is invalid under the Act (see p. 583, ante).

(m) Ibid., s. 3 (1), (5).

(n) Or double complaint. The proceeding, being also available in other cases of denial or delay of justice on the part of an inferior ecclesiastical judge or ordinary, was so called because it was usually instituted against both the judge and the party at whose instance the denial or delay of justice took place (Termes de la Ley, 271). A clerk who, as patron, claims to present himself to a benefice, cannot proceed to enforce his claim by a suit of duplex querela and an action of quare impedit concurrently (Walsh v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1874), L. R. 4, A. & E. 242).

(o) 2 Bl. Com. 247; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., pp. 159—162; Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop) (1850), 14 Jur. 443, P. O.; S. C. on applications for prohibition, 15 Q. B. 52; 10 C. B. 102; 5 Exch. 630.

(p) Hutton's Case (1614), Hob. 15; Rowth v. Chester (Bishop) (1615), Moore (K. B.), 861; Middleton v. Lawte (1617), ibid. 879; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 162.

admits the presentee of the person so found by their verdict and certified as such by the commissioners, where a commission is issued (q).

SECT. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Under the
Benefices
Act, 1898.

1158. Where a bishop on any ground mentioned in s. 2 of the Benefices Act, 1898 (r), or any other ground of unfitness, or disqualification of the presentee sufficient in law to justify the refusal, not being a ground of doctrine or ritual, refuses to institute or admit a presentee to a benefice, he must signify in writing the refusal and the grounds thereof to the person who presented and the person presented (s); and within one month after the signification either of these persons may require that the matter be heard by a court consisting of the archbishop of the province, or if the presentation was made to him, the archbishop of the other province, and a judge of the Supreme Court nominated from time to time by the Lord Chancellor for the purpose; and the bishop is to be made a party to the proceedings. The judge decides all questions of law and finds as to any fact alleged as a ground of unfitness or disqualification, and his decision and finding in these respects are binding on the archbishop. The archbishop directs institution or admission if the judge finds that no fact exists sufficient in law to be a reason of unfitness or disqualification, or, if the judge finds that any such fact exists, decides, if necessary, whether by reason thereof the presentee is unfit for the discharge of the duties of the benefice, and determines whether institution or admission ought, under the circumstances, to be refused; and in either case gives judgment accordingly, which is final (t).

1159. A patron cannot bring an action or suit to enforce a right of patronage after the expiration of the period during which the benefice has been held by three incumbents in succession, all of whom have obtained possession thereof adversely to the right of patronage of such patron or of some person through whom he claims, if the three incumbencies together amount to sixty years; or if the benefice has been so held for a period of less than sixty years, then after the expiration of such further time as with the times of the three incumbencies will make up the full period of sixty years; or after the expiration of one hundred years from the time at which an incumbent has obtained possession of the benefice adversely to the right of patronage of such patron or of some person through

Limitation of time for recovery.

(q) Clerke, Praxis in Curia Ecclesiastica, tit. xviii.—c.; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., pp. 24—28; 3 Bl. Com. 245, 247; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 235—237; Elvis v. York (Archbishop) (1619), Hob. 315, 317, 318.

(r) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48; see note (l), on p. 588, ante.

(s) Ibid., s. 3 (1); Benefices Rules, 1898, r. 13; Sched., Forms, Nos. 8, 9 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. I., Benefice, England, pp. 3, 7).

(t) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 3; Benefices Rules, 1899, rr. 1—16, 23—52, Sched. I.; Sched. II., Forms Nos. 1—16, 23—50 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. I., Benefice, England, pp. 8—11, 13—35). Where in cases to which s. 3 of the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), applies, the bishop signifies his refusal in the manner therein directed, no proceeding in the nature of quære impedit or duplex querela can be taken in any other court in respect of the refusal (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 3 (5)). The archbishop's official principal institutes or admits if the bishop fails to do so after judgment in that behalf (ibid. ss. 3, 4).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

whom he claims, or of some person entitled to some preceding or interest or undivided share or alternate right of patronage held or derived under the same title, unless an incumbent has subsequently obtained possession of the benefice on the presentation or gift of such patron or of some person through whom he claims, or of some other person entitled in respect of an estate, share or right held or derived under the same title (a). At the determination of the period limited for bringing an action or suit to enforce a right of patronage, the right to the advowson is extinguished (b). These limitations do not apply to the Crown; but by the Crown Suits Act, 1769 (c), the Crown cannot institute proceedings to recover an advowson by reason of any right or title which has not first accrued and grown within sixty years next before the proceedings are instituted, unless within such sixty years the Crown has enjoyed some possession thereof or the same has been duly in charge to the Crown or has stood insuper of record (d).

(iv.) Lapse.

By non-exercise of patronage within six months.

1160. If the patron of a benefice neglects to present to it within the allowed time, the patronage for that turn lapses to the bishop. If a bishop neglects to collate to a benefice within the allowed time after the patronage thereof has lapsed to him, or, being the patron thereof, within the allowed time after it has become void, the patronage for that turn lapses to the archbishop of the province. And if an archbishop neglects to present to a benefice within the allowed time after the patronage thereof has lapsed to him, or, being the patron thereof, within the allowed time after it has become void, the patronage for that turn lapses to the King as supreme patron (e).

(a) Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 1, 30—33, 43. A person claiming a right of patronage by virtue of an estate or interest, which a tenant in tail of the advowson might have barred, is to be deemed a person claiming through the tenant in tail (ibid., s. 32). If, after an incumbent has obtained possession of a benefice adversely to the right of the patron, the next avoidance is filled by the incumbent collated by the ordinary or presented by the King by reason of lapse, such incumbent is to be deemed to have obtained possession of the benefice adversely to the right of the patron. But where a benefice becomes void by the incumbent having been appointed to a diocesan bishopric in the province of Canterbury or of York, and a new incumbent is consequently presented by the King, his incumbency is to be deemed a continuance of the incumbency of the incumbent who was made a bishop (ibid., s. 31). The periods limited by the Act apply to the case of a bishop claiming a right as patron to collate to or bestow a benefice; but do not affect his right of collation by reason of lapse (Limitation of Actions Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 64), s. 3). Within the periods limited by the Act a usurpation upon the avoidance of a benefice does not displace the interest of the patron, but on a future avoidance he may present to it or may maintain his right by proceedings in quare impedit (Advowsons Act, 1708 (7 Ann. c. 18), s. 1).

(b) Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 34; Limitation of Actions Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 64), s. 3.

(c) 9 Geo. 3, c. 16.

(d) Ibid., ss. 1, 2, 10.

(e) Ordinance for the Clergy, 1352 (25 Edw. 3, stat. 6, c. 7); 2 Roll. Abr. 362—368; 2 Bl. Com. 276—278; Gib. Cod. 768—770; Beverley v. Canterbury (Bishop) and Cornwel (1586), 1 And. 148; Thornton v. Savill (1622), Palm. 306, 311. If patronage has lapsed to a bishop, and he dies or is translated or deprived before he exercises it, the patronage devolves on the archbishop of

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Where the patronage of a benefice is originally in the King or has come to him or to a preceding king by lapse, it is not lost by any delay in the exercise thereof (f).

The time allowed to the patron, the bishop, or the archbishop is in each case six calendar months (g).

1161. In the case of the patron the time begins to run from the date of the vacancy of the benefice if it becomes vacant by death or cession (h), or by other ipso facto avoidance not being in the nature of deprivation (i). But if it becomes void by resignation or deprivation, or if the patron presents and his presentee is refused by the bishop for unfitness or disqualification, the time begins to run only from the day when he receives notice from the bishop of the resignation or deprivation, or of such refusal of his presentee (k);

Calculation of time.

the province (Colt v. Coventry and Lichfield (Bishop) (1617), Hob. 140, 164; Gib. Cod. 770).

(f) 2 Co. Inst. 273; 2 Bl. Com. 276, 277; Gib. Cod. 770; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1634), Cro. Car. 354, 355.

(g) That is to say, half a year or 182 days (2 Co. Inst. 361; 2 Bl. Com. 276; Peterborough (Bishop) v. Outesby (1607), Cro. Jac. 166, Ex. Ch.; overruling Albany and St. Asaph's (Bishop) Case (1585), 1 Leon. 31). The time is exclusive of the day from which it begins to run (Cornwallis v. Hood (1665), Cart. 33, 44). This decision seems to have been overlooked by Sir WILLIAM GRANT, M.R., when he made his observation to the contrary in Lester v. Garland (1808), 15 Ves. 248, at p. 254.

(h) 2 Bl. Com. 278; and as to avoidance by cession, see Case of Quare Impedit (1665), 2 Dyer, 237 a; Holland's Case (1697), 4 Co. Rep. 75 a; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1634), Cro. Car. 354, and p. 633, post. (The distinction drawn in Alston v. Atlay (1837), 7 Ad. & El. 289, 304—311, Ex. Ch., between cases where the ceded benefice is under or over the yearly value of £8 in the King's books was abolished by the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 1, 11.) Before 1838 the six months began to run from the induction of the incumbent into the new benefice (Lincoln (Bishop) v. Wulforstan (1764), 3 Burr. 1504, Ex. Ch.); but the patron of the ceded benefice might, if he pleased, have presented to it after the incumbent had been instituted to the new benefice and before his induction (ibid., per WILMOT, J., at p. 1512). The six months apparently now run from the date of the institution to the new benefice (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 11). If the incumbent dies beyond the seas, the time is to be reckoned from the day on which the patron might reasonably have known of it (2 Roll. Abr. 363). If the avoidance is occasioned by a union of benefices, the time runs from the date of the agreement for the union, since the patron is a party to it (Mirehouse, Advowsons, ch. vii., p. 164).

(i) Case of Quare Impedit (1665), 2 Dyer, 237. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12 (1571), s. 7, provides "that no title to confer or present by lapse shall accrue upon any deprivation ipso facto, but after six months after notice of such deprivation given by the ordinary to the patron"; and in Green's Case (1602), 6 Co. Rep. 29 a, it was accordingly held that the patron was entitled to notice although he was a party to a suit brought to enforce deprivation for not reading the Thirty-nine Articles (compare R. v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1582), 1 And. 62; and see now the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 7). So, too, in the case of ipso facto avoidance or deprivation by virtue of the Clergy Ordination Act, 1804 (44 Geo. 3. c. 43), in consequence of the incumbent having been admitted to deacon's orders before the age of twenty-three, or to priest's orders before the age of twenty-four, the time for the accrual of a title to collate or present by lapse is to commence when notice of the avoidance or deprivation is given by the bishop to the patron (ibid., s. 1).

(k) 2 Roll. Abr. 364, 365; 2 Bl. Com. 278. An intimation of the refusal affixed to the door of the church of the benefice is not a sufficient notice to the patron, except, perhaps, where he cannot be found (Bacon v. Corbiate (Bishop) (1576), 3 Dyer, 346 a; 2 Roll. Abr. 365). The patron is not entitled to notice if his

SMOT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

except where the presentee of a spiritual patron is refused for insufficiency of learning, since the law presumes that a spiritual person was aware of the insufficiency before he made the presentation (l). But under the Benefices Act, 1898 (m), all patrons alike are entitled to notice in writing from the bishop of his refusal of a presentee on any ground mentioned in s. 2 of that Act, or on any other ground of unfitness or disqualification sufficient in law, not being a ground of doctrine or ritual (n).

Suspension
of the running of time.

1162. The running of time for lapse is suspended if the bishop collates or the archbishop presents before the right has lapsed to him (o), or if the bishop is made a party to a bonâ fide action of quare impedit or a suit of duplex querela (p), but is not suspended by a feigned and baseless action of quare impedit brought against himself (q), or by an action of quare impedit to which he is not a party (r). The bishop cannot bring about a lapse by delaying his examination or acceptance of the presentee (s); and in reckoning the time for lapse no account is to be taken, in the case of the first and second presentations to a benefice by a patron in respect of the same vacancy, of the period between a presentation by the patron and the refusal by the bishop to institute or admit the presentee, or of the period between the refusal of the bishop to institute or admit and the decision of the court constituted by the Benefices Act, 1898 (t), upon such refusal; nor, in the case of a bishop having a right to collate to a benefice, of the period between the service of the notice on the churchwardens under the provisions of that Act (a), and the expiration of a month from such service (b). When the running of time for lapse is postponed as against the bishop, the periods for lapse to the archbishop and the King are correspondingly postponed (c).

When patron may present notwithstanding lapse.

1163. If, after the patronage has lapsed to the bishop, the patron presents before the bishop collates, the presentation is as effectual as if it had been made within the allowed time (d). So, too, if the presentee refuses or neglects to be admitted to the benefice (R. v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1582), And. 62, 63).

(l) 2 Roll. Abr. 364; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 216, 217.

(m) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48.

(n) Ibid., s. 3 (1). As to the grounds mentioned in s. 2, see p. 599, post.

(o) 2 Roll. Abr. 350, 368.

(p) Elvis v. York (Archbishop) (1619), Hob. 315, 320; Co. Litt. 344 b; 3 Bl. Com. 247.

(q) Brickhead v. York (Archbishop) (1617), Hob. 197, 200.

(r) Ibid., at p. 201; 2 Roll. Abr. 365; Wilson v. Dennison (1750), Amb. 82, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C.

(s) 2 Roll. Abr. 366; Salisbury (Bishop) v. Philips (1700), 1 Ld. Raym. 535, Ex. Ch.; Wilson v. Dennison, supra.

(t) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48.

(a) Ibid., s. 2 (2).

(b) Ibid., s. 5.

(c) Co. Litt. 344 b., 345 a.; 2 Bl. Com. 278; R. v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra; Lancaster v. Lowe (1805), Cro. Jac. 92, 93; Colt v. Coventry and Lichfield (Bishop) (1617), Hob. 140, 154, Ex. Ch.

(d) 2 Co. Inst. 278; 2 Roll. Abr. 367, 368; Anon. (1568), 3 Dyer, 277 a, pl. 56; 2 Bl. Com. 277; Colt v. Coventry and Lichfield (Bishop), supra; Wilson v. Dennison, supra.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

bishop allows the patronage to lapse to the archbishop, and the patron presents before a presentation is made by the archbishop (e). But after lapse to the archbishop, a bishop loses his right to collate by lapse; since his right is merely temporary and accidental (f). After lapse to the King, the patron cannot defeat the King's right by a prior presentation. It will be overridden by a subsequent presentation of the King, and if the patron's presentee is admitted to the benefice, the King may remove him by an action of quare impedit, and present notwithstanding his admission. But if the patron's presentee is admitted and is not so removed during his incumbency, the right of the King is lost, for it was only for that turn (g). If the King dies before exercising the right, it will descend to his successor (h).

1164. Where the see of the bishop becomes vacant before he has collated to a benefice by lapse, the lapsed patronage, being not an interest but a spiritual trust, devolves on the archbishop of the province as guardian of the spiritualities of the see (i).

Right to lapsed
patronage
where bishop's see is vacated.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Simony.

1165. Simony, so called from Simon Magus, is the buying or selling of holy orders or of an ecclesiastical benefice or admission thereto (j). The procuring or acceptance of the presentation, institution, collation, induction, or admission to a benefice, in consideration of any money or profit or benefit, direct or indirect, or of any promise, agreement, or assurance of or for such money, profit, or benefit, whether before or after the benefice has become vacant, is simoniacal and void. Where it takes place, the King may present or bestow the benefice for that turn; and every person and body giving or taking any such money profit or benefit or making or taking any such promise, agreement, or assurance, forfeits double the value of one year's income of the benefice (k). And the person who so corruptly procures or accepts

Penalties and disability in case of
simony.

(e) 2 Bl. Com. 277; Booton v. Rochester (Bishop) (1618), Hut. 24. But if after lapse to the archbishop the bishop collates, the collation, though bad as against the archbishop, will prevent the patron from presenting (2 Roll. Abr. 350, 368).

(f) 2 Bl. Com. 277; 2 Roll. Abr. 350, 368.

(g) 2 Bl. Com. 277; Baskerville's Case (1585), 7 Co. Rep. 28 a; Lincoln's (Bishop) Case (1587), Owen, 89; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1634), Cro. Car. 354. But in the case of churches, curacies, and chapels augmented by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty and made perpetual cures and benefices by Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), s. 4, a nomination by the patron is good even after a lapse to the Crown, if made before the Crown has taken advantage of it (ibid., s. 7).

(h) R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop), supra.

(i) Gib. Cod. 770; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 360.

(j) 3 Co. Inst. 153—156; 7 Bac. Abr. 229, tit. Simony; 2 Bl. Com. 278—280; Com. Dig. tit. Eglise, N. 3. For simoniacal ordination, see pp. 551, 552, ante; and for simoniacal exchange and resignation of benefices, see pp. 628, 633, post.

(k) Stat. (1589) 31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 4; Simony Act, 1713 (13 Ann. c. 11), s. 2; Morse v. Killick (1881), 50 L. J. (q. b.) 300. Where a mortgagor patron made a simoniacal presentation, the mortgagee's title was not allowed to bar the King's title (A.-G. v. Sudell (1702), Prec. Ch. 214). As against a patron who has been guilty of simony, the King's right to present is not lost by the clerk

NOT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

the benefice becomes thenceforth disabled in law to hold it (l). A transaction may be simoniacal although neither the patron nor the presentee is a party or privy to it (m). If, however, the presentee is not cognisant of it, he is not himself simoniacal, although he is simoniacally promoted (n). A contract to pay money in consideration of being promoted to a benefice is void and cannot be enforced (o).

Declaration against
simony

1166. A clerk who is about to be instituted, collated, or licensed by a bishop to a benefice, lectureship, or preachership must previously make and subscribe in the presence of the bishop or his commissary the prescribed declaration against simony (p). A clerk

simoniacally promoted having died in undisturbed possession of the benefice (Winchcombe v. Winchester (Bishop) (1617), Hob. 165). But the forfeiture to the Crown will not prejudice a patron innocent of simony or his presentee after the death of the clerk simoniacally presented or promoted, unless such clerk or his patron was previously thereto convicted of the offence (stat. (1689) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 16, s. 1). The simony does not invalidate leases bonâ fide made by the simoniacal clerk to tenants for valuable consideration and without notice of the simony (ibid., s. 2), and a tenant to an incumbent cannot impeach the incumbent's title as landlord on the ground of simony (Cooke v. Lozley (1792), 5 Term Rep. 4). A clerk may purchase the entire advowson or an estate for life therein, and present himself to the benefice on a vacancy occurring (Walsh v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 618). The sale of an advowson when both vendor and purchaser knew that the incumbent of the benefice was in extremis has been held not to be simoniacal (Smith v. Shelbourn (1599), Cro. Eliz. 685; Barret v. Glubb (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1052; Fox v. Chester (Bishop) (1829), 6 Bing. 1, H. L.). Except in the particular cases specially authorised by statute, where a bond is given by a presentee on his presentation that he will resign the benefice at the request of the patron, both the bond and the presentation are simoniacal and void (Fletcher v. Soudes (Lord) (1826), 3 Bing. 501, H. L.; Doe d. Watson v. Fletcher (1828), 8 B. & C. 25). An agreement before presentation to give up a claim to some of the emoluments of the benefice is simoniacal (R. v. Oxford (Bishop) (1806), 7 East, 600). In Stevens' Case (1628), Litt. 176, the judges differed as to whether a presentation to the intent that the presentee might marry the patron's daughter was simoniacal (ibid. 177). The penalty is not incurred where the simoniacal presentation, though drawn up and sent in, is withdrawn before it is submitted to the bishop (Greenwood v. Woodham (1841), 2 Mood. & R. 363).

(l) Stat. (1589) 31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 4; Simony Act, 1713 (13 Ann. c. 11), s. 2; 3 Co. Inst. 154; Baker v. Rogers (1600), Cro. Eliz. 788; Lee v. Merest (1669), 39 L. J. (ECL.) 53. He can never afterwards hold that benefice, but is eligible for another (R. v. Norwich (Bishop) (1615), Cro. Jac. 385, 386; Com. Dig. tit. Eglise, N. 3), unless incapacitated by a sentence under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), ss. 6, 8. The incapacity to hold the benefice will not be removed by the King's pardon of the simony (Smith v. Shelbourn (1599), Cro. Eliz. 685; Winchcombe v. Winchester (Bishop) (1616), Hob. 165, 167, 168). If the simoniacally promoted clerk has been admitted to the benefice and does not voluntarily resign, he may be removed by quare impedit (R. v. Norwich (Bishop), supra), or by an action of ejectment brought by the king's presentee after admission to the benefice (Doe d. Watson v. Fletcher (1828), 8 B. & C. 25).
(m) Baker v. Rogers, supra; Hutchinson's Case (1610), 12 Co. Rep. 101; Boyer v. High Commission Court (1614), 2 Bulst. 182; Wilson v. Bradshaw (1624), 2 Boll. Rep. 463; R. v. Trussel (1667), 1 Sid. 329; Walker v. Hammersly (1683), 3 Lev. 115; R. v. Norwich (Bishop) (1692), ibid. 337; Whish v. Hesse (1831), 3 Hag. Ecc. 659.

Wilson v. Bradshaw, supra; Whish v. Hesse, supra.

(o) Mackaller v. Todderick (1634), Cro. Car. 337, 353, 361; Byrte v. Manning (1635), ibid. 425.

(p) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 5. The declaration is also to be made and subscribed on all other occasions on which before

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

who knowingly makes any false statement in this declaration is guilty of a misdemeanour and is liable to be punished for perjury; and if he commits a breach of the promissory part of the declaration (q), he is guilty of an offence in respect of which proceedings under s. 2 of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (r), may be taken against him (s).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Mode of Filling Benefices.

(i.) Presentation.

1167. The first legal steps towards filling a vacant benefice (t), except where the bishop collates by reason either of being himself the patron or of the right of presentation lapsing to him (a), is the presentation of a fit clerk to the bishop by the patron or other person entitled under the special circumstances of the case to present (b). Where the patron is under a legal obligation to present the nominee of some other person, a nomination of the clerk by that person to the patron precedes the presentation (c). In other cases the patron selects the presentee.

1168. A presentation is made when it is exhibited to the bishop (d), and cannot be made until the church and benefice are actually void (e). The presentation ought to be to the church of the benefice, and the document or announcement should show how the benefice became void, whether by death, cession, resignation or that Act an oath against simony was required to be taken (ibid., s. 10). The present form of the declaration is set forth in the schedule to the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48); see s. 1 (4).

(q) The promissory part of the declaration is that the clerk will not at any time thereafter perform or satisfy any payment, contract or promise made in respect of the presentation of the benefice to him by any person without his knowledge or consent (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (4), sched.).

(r) 55 & 56 Vict. c. 32.

(s) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (4), (5). Other breaches of the law against simony are not triable under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32) (Beneficed Clerk v. Lee, [1897] A. C. 226, P. O.).

(t) The benefice must be actually vacant; see note (e), infra.

(a) See p. 602, post; and as to lapse, pp. 590 et seq., ante.

(b) See pp. 564 et seq., ante. Before 1st January, 1899, certain benefices were donatives, and were filled by a donation of the benefice to a clerk by the patron without recourse to the bishop (Oo. Litt. 344 a). But since that date all such benefices have become presentative (Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 12).

(c) Gib. Cod. 794; Amhurst v. Dawling (1700), 2 Vern. 401, n. (2); Mackenzie v. Robinson (1747), 3 Atk. 559; R. v. Stafford (Marquis) (1790), 3 Term Rep. 646, 651. A presentation cannot be made on the nomination of a Roman Catholic (Presentation of Benefices Act, 1713 (13 Ann. c. 13), s. 1; Boyer v. Norwich (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 417, P. O.).

(d) Rud v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1623), Hut. 66. A presentation refused by the bishop and established by quare impedit can be afterwards again exhibited to the bishop; since the benefice, if full before, is made void by the judgment in the quare impedit (ibid.).

(e) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 217, 218; Harris v. Austen (1615), 1 Roll. Rep. 210, 213; Rud v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra; Owen v. Stainoe (1682), Skin. 45; Alston v. Atlay (1837), 7 Ad. & El. 289, 311, Ex. Ch. As to a presentation by the king when the benefice is full, see stat. (1399), 13 Ric. 2, stat. 1, s. 1; stat. (1402), 4 Hen. 4, c. 22.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

By the King.

deprivation (f). It may be made by word of mouth (g), except where a corporation aggregate is patron, in which case it must be under the common seal (h). But it is usually in writing; and in that case is in the nature of a letter missive to the bishop presenting to him a clerk for admission to the vacant benefice (i), and is not complete until it is sent or delivered to the bishop by the patron (k).

Co-patrons.

An instrument purporting to be a grant by the King of a benefice in his patronage to a clerk is a good presentation without any actual words of presentation (l). He may present generally without specifying by what title; but if he recites a particular title and has no such title, the presentation is void (m). The presentation may be either under the Great Seal or under the privy seal, but not under the exchequer seal (n).

Self-presentation.

Where two or more persons have the right to present jointly, the bishop may accept the presentation of one, but may require a presentation by all, unless one of them is the person presented (o).

1169. A patron cannot technically present himself; but, if he is in other respects fit, he may offer himself to the bishop

(f) Com. Dig. tit. Eglise, II. 7. See pp. 627 et seq., post.

(g) Co. Litt. 120 a.; Clerk v. Prinn (1669), 2 Keb. 484; A.-G. v. Brereton (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 425, 429; and as to a presentation by the King, R. v. Emerson (1612), 1 Brownl. 162.

(h) Bro. Abr. tit. Corporation, 83. But the choice of the presentee need not be made under the common seal (A.-G. v. Davy (1741), 2 Atk. 212).

(i) Co. Litt. 120 a; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 149, 150, where a form of presentation is given. The precise form is not material. But it should be made to the bishop "or in his absence his vicar-general in spirituals or any other person having sufficient authority in this behalf"; for in that case it will remain good, although the bishop himself, by death or otherwise, becomes incapable of acting upon it (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 150). A presentation to the benefice, instead of to the church, is good (R. v. — (1610), Cro. Jac. 247). In that case COKE, C.J., said that in the case of The Dean of Norwich it had been ruled that a presentation by the wrong name of a corporation was good; but in a subsequent case of Ayray v. Lovelas (1610), 1 Bulst. 91, it was held that a presentation by a corporation by a wrong name was void. As to where the improper rector of a church, being the patron, presents to the rectory or parsonage instead of to the vicarage, see note (a), p. 561, ante.

(k) Grendit v. Baker (1602), Yelv. 7; where it was said that if the writing was taken to the bishop without the privy or licence of the patron, it would be no presentation. A presentation by a wrong name, or reciting a wrong title in the patron, is void (Ayray v. Lovelas, supra; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 220, 221).

(l) 2 Roll. Abr. 353.

(m) R. v. Thorneborough (1677), 1 Mod. Rep. 253; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 220, 221.

(n) R. v. — (1610), Cro. Jac. 247. In Stephens v. Potter (1627), Cro. Car. 99, it was held that a presentation by the King in right of a ward might be either under the seal of the court of wards or under the Great Seal; but a presentation under the seal of the court of wards, if it was not in right of a ward, would be void. So too a presentation under the Great Seal to a benefice of which the advowson belongs to the Duchy of Lancaster is good (The Queen and York's Archbishop Case (1591), 1 Leon. 226; R. v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1613), Moore (K. B.), 874).

(o) Fuljambes's (Sir Godfrey) Case (1539), Moore (K. B.), 4; Harris v. Austin (1615), 3 Bulst. 38, 43; Co. Litt. 186 b; Gib. Ood. 794; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 226, 227.

to be admitted to the benefice, and the bishop is bound to admit him (p).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

When presentation is complete.

1170. A presentation by a spiritual patron is complete when it is received by the bishop, and cannot afterwards be varied or revoked (q), though, if his presentee is on good grounds refused by the bishop, he can make a fresh presentation (r). But a presentation by a lay patron, other than the King, is not complete until the institution or admission of the presentee; and before this takes place he may either (1) vary his presentation by presenting an additional clerk or clerks, in which case the bishop may elect which of the clerks presented he will institute or admit; or (2) revoke his presentation and present another clerk, in which case the bishop must institute or admit the later presentee. And if his presentee is refused by the bishop, he can make a fresh presentation within the permitted time (s). A presentation by the King is not complete until induction. Until that has taken place he may, even after institution or admission, make a fresh presentation (t). And his later presentation, although not in express terms revoking the former, has the effect of revoking it, so that the bishop cannot elect to act upon it (u).

1171. The death of a presentee of the King before he is inducted, or of the presentee of another patron before he is instituted or admitted, revokes the presentation (x). If the King dies before his presentee is inducted, his successor can revoke the presentation. But if another patron dies before his presentee is instituted or admitted, the presentation is not revocable; and if his executors make another presentation the bishop may elect between the two presentees (a).

Death of patron or presentee.

1172. The presentee must be a fit person (b); that is to say, a person (1) of the canonical age, and in priests orders by episcopal

Qualifications
etc. of presentee.

(p) Gib. Cod. 794; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 227; Walsb v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1875), L. E. 10 C. P. 518; Lowe v. Chester (Bishop) (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 407. As to the statutory right of a dean to present himself in certain cases, see p. 579, ante.

(q) Gib. Cod. 795; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 226.

(r) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 6 (2).

(s) Gib. Cod. 795; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 225, 226. A lay patron can vary, cumulando and can also revoke a presentation (Stoke v. Sykes (1627), Lat. 191; Evans v. Ascough (1626), Lat. 233, 248; Stoke v. Stiles (1626), Lat. 253; Rogers v. Holled (1775), 2 Wm. Bl. 1039). If the clerk first presented is refused by the bishop, and the patron thereupon presents another, the bishop cannot withdraw his refusal and admit the first clerk (Hereford's (Bishop) Case (1584), Cro. Eliz. 27).

(t) Gib. Cod. 795; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 223.

(u) Co. Litt. 344 b; Gib. Cod. 795; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 223—225; R. v. — (1610), Cro. Jac. 247, 248; Kitchin v. Calvert (1611), Lane, 100—102; Hutchins v. Glover (1617), Cro. Jac. 463.

(x) Holt's Case (1611), 9 Co. Rep. 131 b, 132 a; Brockham's Case (1628), Litt. 128, 135; A.-G. v. Wycliffe (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 80, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 81.

(a) Smalwood v. Lichfield (Bishop) (1589), 1 Leon. 205; Kitchin v. Calvert, supra, at p. 102; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 225.

(b) Freder (Bishop) v. Marshall (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 17, 39, 51.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

ordination, or who can obtain such ordination before he is instituted or admitted (c); (2) of sufficient learning; and (3) against whose orthodoxy and morals no charge can be established (d).

As regards orders, the bishop is at liberty to refuse a presentee if at the date of the presentation not more than three years have elapsed since he was ordained deacon (e).

As regards sufficiency of learning, the bishop is the judge; but if after examination and inquiry he decides that the clerk is deficient in this respect, he must give notice to the patron of his decision, and of the particulars of the deficiency, the adequacy of which is subject to judicial review (f). As regards orthodoxy, it is not enough that the bishop should notify that he finds the presentee schismatic or unfit, but he must specify particulars, and his decision is liable to be judicially overruled (g). As regards moral life, the presentee must produce a sufficient testimony of his former good

(c) Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 10; Gib. Cod. 805. As to clergymen ordained by bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland, see the Episcopal Church (Scotland) Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 94), s. 5 (p. 555, ante); and as to clergymen ordained by bishops of dioceses outside the United Kingdom, see the Colonial Clergy Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 77), s. 4 (p. 564, ante). By Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 39 (as to which see Exeter (Bishop) v. Marshall (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 17, at p. 54), it is required that a presentee applying for institution to a bishop who has not ordained him shall produce his letters of orders; as to which, see p. 552, ante. This was previously not essential (Palmer v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1691), Cro. Eliz. 241).

(d) In Heywood v. Manchester (Bishop) (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 404, at p. 418, POLLOCK, B., said that this enumeration cannot be treated as containing an exhaustive category of ecclesiastical offences which would justify refusal of a presentee. In 2 Co. Inst. 632 the following are enumerated as grounds of exception against a presentee: "1st, concerning the person, as bastardy, villenage, outlawry, excommunication, a layman, under age, and the like; 2ndly, concerning his conversation as if he be criminosus, etc.; 3rdly, concerning his inability to discharge his pastoral duty, as if he be unlearned and not able to feed his flock with spiritual food, etc." But an alien may be presented, if he is acquainted with English (Colt v. Coventry and Lichfield (Bishop) (1617), Hob. 140, 148, Ex. Ch.; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 214, 215); and now a bastard may be presented, even though he has been ordained without a dispensation (Kensit v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter), [1905] 2 K. B. 249, at p. 257). A person convicted of treason or felony, for which he is sentenced to death or penal servitude or to imprisonment either with hard labour or for more than twelve months, is, while undergoing punishment, incapable of holding a benefice (Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), s. 2). The fact that a presentee holds another benefice is no ground for refusal (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 1st ed., p. 216; see pp. 633, 634, post).

(e) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 2 (1) (b).

(f) Stat. (1315) 9 Edw. 2, st. 1, c. 13 (Articuli Cleri); Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 38; 2 Co. Inst. 631, 632; Hele v. Exeter (Bishop) (1691), 3 Lev. 313; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1812), 15 East, 117, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at pp. 143, 144; Willis v. Oxford (Bishop) (1877), 2 P. D. 192. Want of proficiency in the Welsh language is a ground for refusing a presentee to a benefice within any of the four Welsh dioceses (Alhany v. St. Asaph (Bishop) (1888), Cro. Eliz. 119; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 104; Abergavenny (Marquis) v. Llandaff (Bishop) (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 460).

(g) Specol's Case (1390), 5 Co. Rep. 57 a; Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop) (1850), Moore's Report, P. O. A bishop may refuse a presentee who has been guilty of ritual offences which, if he were beneficed, would be dealt with, in the first instance, not by deprivation, but by monition (Heywood v. Manchester (Bishop) (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 404, 421).

SACR. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

life and behaviour, if the bishop requires it (h). It is not sufficient for the bishop to refuse him on the general ground that he is criminous (i). The notice of refusal must specify the particulars of his moral unfitness (j). But any cause which would be sufficient to deprive an incumbent is a sufficient ground for refusing a presentee (k). The presentee may be refused on the ground that he is unfit for the discharge of the duties of the benefice by reason of physical or mental infirmity or incapacity, pecuniary embarrassment of a serious character, grave misconduct, or neglect of duty in an ecclesiastical office, evil life, having by his conduct caused grave scandal concerning his moral character since his ordination, or having, with reference to the presentation, been knowingly party or privy to any transaction or agreement which is invalid under the Benefices Act, 1898 (l). He may also be refused if, at the date of the vacancy, not more than one year has elapsed since a transfer, as defined by the first section of that Act, of the right of patronage of the benefice, unless it is proved that the transfer was not effected in view of the probability of a vacancy occurring within the year (m).

The bishop is allowed twenty-eight days for inquiring and informing himself of the sufficiency and qualifications of a presentee (n).

When a presentee has been refused, he cannot be presented again by the patron in respect of the same vacancy (o).

No second presentation
where refused.
Further
qualifications.

1173. Where a benefice is in the patronage of the chapter of a cathedral or collegiate church, the presentee must be either (1) a

(h) This sufficient testimony has, by long-established custom, consisted of a testimonial by three beneficed clergymen, countersigned, if they are not beneficed in the diocese of the bishop to whom the testimonial is produced, by the bishop of the diocese in which their respective benefices are situate, that the presentee has been personally known to them for the three years last past; that they have had opportunities of observing his conduct; that during the whole of that time they verily believe that he lived piously, soberly, and honestly; and that they have not heard anything to the contrary thereof, nor that he has at any time held, written, or taught anything contrary to the doctrine or discipline of the Church; and that they believe him to be, as to his moral conduct, a person worthy to be admitted to the benefice (Exeter (Bishop) v. Marshall (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 17, at p. 48).

(i) Specot's Case (1590), 5 Co. Rep. 57 a.

(j) Ibid.

(k) Specot's Case, supra; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 215. Probably, therefore, the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 12, with its reference to Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 75, has altered the law as laid down by the case of Bell v. Norwich (Bishop) (1566), 2 Dyer, 254 b, in which the fact that a presentee had continually frequented taverns and other unlawful and prohibited places and games was held an insufficient ground for refusing him. There is no fixed limit of time beyond which the bishop cannot inquire into the past life of the presentee (Marriner v. Bath and Wells (Bishop) (1876), reported [1893] P. 145).

(l) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48, s. 2 (1) (b). See p. 592, ante.

(m) Ibid., s. 2 (1) (a). "Transfer" is defined by s. 1 (6) to include any conveyance or assurance passing or creating any legal or equitable interest inter vivos, and any agreement for any such conveyance or assurance; but not (a) a transmission on marriage, death or bankruptcy, or otherwise by operation of law; or (b) a transfer on the appointment of a new trustee where no beneficial interest passes.

(n) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 95.

(o) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 6 (1).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

member of the chapter; or (2) an archdeacon of the diocese; or (3) a non-residentiary prebendary or honorary canon of their church, or (4) a clerk who has served for at least five years as minor canon or lecturer of their church, or as master of a grammar or other school attached to or connected with their church, or as incumbent or curate in the diocese, or as public tutor in either of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge; or, in the alternative, (5) in the case of the cathedral church of Durham, a clerk who has served for the like term as professor, reader, lecturer, or tutor in the University of Durham, or has been educated thereat and is a licentiate or graduate of theology therein, or who has served as incumbent or curate within the diocese of Durham for the like term (p). If no such qualified clerk is presented to the benefice within six months from the time of its becoming vacant, the bishop of the diocese in which it is situate may, within the next six months, collate or license thereto a clerk who has actually served for at least five years as incumbent or curate within the diocese; and in default of his so doing the presentation for that turn lapses to the archbishop of the province (q).

Notice of refusal to present.

1174. Where the ground of refusal to institute or admit a presentee is either a ground included in s. 2 (1) of the Benefices Act, 1898 (r), or any other sufficient ground of unfitness or disqualification, except a ground of doctrine or ritual, the bishop is to signify his refusal by a notice stating the grounds of refusal, and sent to the person presenting and to the presentee by registered letter (s).

Refusal when presenter has no title or church is litigious.

1175. The bishop has the right, and ought, to refuse, or rather suspend, the admission of a presentee where the person presenting appears to have no title (t), or when the church is litigious; that is to say, when two or more persons claiming adversely to one another present different clerks or the same clerk to be admitted to the church and benefice (u). If the bishop admits a clerk on one of such presentations, or admits a clerk on a presentation when a caveat against his so doing has been entered by another person, he will be liable as a disturber in the event of the title of the presenter being disproved. In either of such cases he ought to pause until the conflicting claimants or their clerks either take legal proceedings to establish their rights or pray him to award a writ de jure patronatus to inquire into and determine the right of patronage (x). If, however,

(p) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 44. Where the presentee holds the office of minor canon, lecturer, schoolmaster, professor, reader, or tutor, that office, if not previously resigned, becomes vacant at the expiration of one year from his admission to the benefice (ibid.).

(q) Ibid.

(r) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48. See notes (l) and (m), p. 599, ante.

(s) Benefices Rules 1898, r. 13, Sched., Forms Nos. 8, 9 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. I., Benefice, England, pp. 3, 7). For the remedies of patron and presentee in case of unjustifiable refusal, see p. 589, ante.

(t) Ayray v. Lovelace (1610), 1 Bulst. 91; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 217.

(u) See note (q), p. 586, ante.

(x) Elvis v. York (Archbishop) (1619), Hob. 315, 317; Degge, Parson's Counsellor, Part I., ch. 3, pp. 11—14; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 113, the bishop institutes upon a void presentation, the presentee thereby acquires the benefice, by the bishop's collation, against all persons except the lawful patron (y).

Sect. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

(ii.) Admission by Institution or Collation or by Licence.

1176. The bishop admits a clerk to a benefice in respect of the cure of souls, which is its spiritual part, either by institution after presentation; or by collation, where the bishop is the patron or acquires the right of appointment by lapse; or by licence, in the case of a perpetual curacy, whether a presentation has been made to the benefice or the bishop is himself the patron (a).

Admission.

1177. Before a person is instituted or admitted or collated to a benefice, notice that the bishop proposes to institute or admit him must be sent to the churchwardens by registered letter addressed to them as such. Immediately on the receipt of this notice the churchwardens fix it on the principal door or notice board of the church or chapel of the benefice, or, if there is more than one, of such one of the churches or chapels as the bishop determines, where it is left fixed for one calendar month, and take such other steps as they think expedient for giving publicity to the notice. At the end of the month they return it to the bishop with a certificate that they have complied with the directions as to fixing it (b).

Notice of intention to admit.

1178. Before a person is instituted or admitted or collated to a benefice by the bishop, he must in the presence of the bishop, or of the bishop's commissary, subscribe a declaration of assent to the Thirty-nine Articles, the Book of Common Prayer, and of the Ordering of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, and a declaration against simony, and take the oaths of allegiance and of canonical obedience (c).

Requisite declarations
and oaths.

1179. Admission of a presentee to the cure of souls and spiritualities of a rectory or vicarage is by institution (d). This act,

Institution.

227—230; Clarke, Praxis in Curia Ecclesiastica, tit. xxviii.—c. As to examining the title of the King to present, see stat. (1351) 25 Edw. 3, stat. 6, c. 3; stat. (1389) 13 Ric. 2, stat. 1, c. 1.

(y) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., pp. 221.

(a) Strictly speaking, admission is merely the declaration of the bishop that he approves of a presentee as a fit person to serve the cure of the church or benefice (Co. Litt. 344 a; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 154). But the word is more commonly used to signify generally the actual committal of the cure to the clerk, or particularly the committal of the cure in the case of a perpetual curacy by licence, as distinguished from institution or collation. As to the simoniacal admission of a clerk to a benefice, see pp. 593, 594, ante.

(b) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 2 (2); Benefices Rules, 1898, rr. 11, 12, sched., Form No. 7 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. 1., Benefice, England, pp. 2, 3, 6).

(c) Canon Ecclesiasticus (1865); Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), ss. 1, 5; as amended, with respect to the declaration against simony, by the Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (4), sched.; and, with respect to the oath of allegiance, by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), ss. 2, 8. As to the oath of canonical obedience, see Clarke, Praxis in Curia Ecclesiastica, tit. xci; Gib. Cod. 810; Long v. Cape Town (Bishop) (1863), 1 Mon. P. O. C. (N. S.) 411, at p. 465.

(d) The clerk kneels down before the bishop while he reads the words of institution out of a written instrument, drawn beforehand for the purpose, with which admits the clerk ad officium, may be performed either within or outside the diocese, and the particular seal used for the instrument of institution is not material (e).

SACR. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Collation.

1180. Where the bishop is himself patron of the rectory or vicarage, he institutes without a previous presentation; but the act, though in the same form, is, in that case, called collation (f).

Effect of institution
or collation.

1181. By institution or collation the cure of souls of the benefice is committed to the clerk. He is admitted ad officium to pray and preach, and he is thenceforth bound to discharge his duties as incumbent, and is liable for any neglect thereof. He may also enter into the glebe and receive the profits of the benefice, but until induction he has no title to sue for or deal with them. After presentation and institution the church is regarded in law as full, except as against the King, against whom it is not full until after induction, and except also in the case of an exchange, which is not complete until induction (g). But collation, if not rightful, does not render the church full, and is only a temporary provision for celebration of divine service until the lawful patron presents (h).

Admission
by licence.

1182. In the case of a perpetual curacy, admission by the bishop's licence puts the clerk in complete possession of both the spiritualities and temporalities of the benefice, without institution or induction (i). But where the perpetual curacy is a titular vicarage (k), a clerk is sometimes in practice instituted or collated and inducted to it, instead of being licensed.

Fees.

1183. The fees for institution, collation, and licence to a perpetual curacy are regulated by a table established under statutory authority (l).

(iii.) Induction.

Process of induction.

1184. The induction of an instituted or collated clerk into the church and benefice is performed by the archdeacon (m), to whom the episcopal seal appendant (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 168). The institution of a person not in holy orders is a nullity (R. v. Ellis (1888), 16 Cox, C. C. 469).

(e) Cort v. St. David's (Bishop) (1634), Cro. Car. 341, 342.

(f) Gib. Cod. 813; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 164. It is likewise collation if the bishop institutes upon a void presentation (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 221).

(g) See p. 633, post. Pending a dispute as to the patronage of the benefice, the institution of the presentee of one of the claimants can be restrained by injunction (Nicholson v. Knapp (1838), 9 Sim. 326; Greenlade v. Dare (1853), 17 Beav. 502).

(h) Gib. Cod. 813; Hare v. Bickley (1578), Plowd. 526 a, 528; Green's Case (1602), 6 Co. Rep. 29 a, 29 b; Hutchins v. Glover (1618), Cro. Jac. 463; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., pp. 164, 167, 170, 171.

(i) Gib. Cod. 819, 820; Bowell v. Milbank (1771), cited 1 Term Rep. 399, n., per Lord MANSFIELD, C. J., at p. 401, n.

(k) Under the Incumbents Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 117), s. 2; see pp. 561, 562, ante.

(l) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 131; London Gazette, June 2nd, 1808.

(m) By prescription or composition others may have the right to induct the bishop issues a mandate for the purpose, or by some person to whom the archdeacon by precept delegates the duty (n). The person who inducts usually takes the clerk by the hand and lays it upon the key or ring of the church door while he pronounces the words of induction. He then opens the door and puts into the church the inducted clerk, who thereupon tolls a bell to make known the fact of the induction. The mandate is then returned to the bishop with a certificate of the induction indorsed upon it (o).

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1185. By induction the instituted or collated clerk is put into complete possession of the church and benefice, with all the profits and emoluments, and, if the benefice is a rectory, becomes persona impersonata or parson imparsonee (p). Effect of induction.

1186. The fees for induction are settled by the same table as Fees, those for admission (q).

(iv.) Subsequent Requisites.

1187. After institution or collation to a benefice or licence to a perpetual curacy, the clerk must, on the first Sunday on which he officiates in the church of the benefice, or on such other Sunday as the ordinary appoints or allows, publicly in the presence of the congregation read the Thirty-Nine Articles of Religion, and immediately afterwards make the prescribed declaration of assent, adding after the words "Articles of Religion" the words "which I have now read before you" (r). Reading of Thirty-nine Articles and declaration of assent.

instead of the archdeacon (Gib. Cod. 815; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 172). As to the simoniacal induction of a clerk to a benefice, see p. 593, ante.

(n) If the archdeacon issues a general mandate for the induction to all and singular the clergy and literates within his archdeaconry, induction made by a clergyman not resident within the archdeaconry will be good (Dean's Case (1609), Noy, 134). A mandate for induction is not revoked by the accession of a new bishop before it is executed (Robinson v. Wolley (1677), T. Jo. 78).

(o) Gib. Cod. 815. No particular form of induction is requisite. If the church key cannot be had, or there is no ring on the door, the hand may be laid on the wall of the church or on the fence of the churchyard. Induction may also be made by delivery of a clod or turf and twig of the glebe (ibid.; Degge, Parson's Counsellor, Part I., ch. 2, pp. 7, 8; Johnson, Clergyman's Vade Mecum, Vol. I., p. 84).

(p) Hare v. Bickley (1578), Plowd. 526 a, 528; Ayl. Par. 302; 1 Bl. Com. 391; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 176. By the act of induction the incumbent is put into the actual possession of a part for the whole; and it is not necessary that he should actually go upon the glebe itself (Bulwer v. Bulwer (1619), 2 B. & Ald. 470). An injunction will be granted to restrain the induction of an incumbent who has been improperly presented (Potter v. Chapman (1760), 1 Dick. 146); and in case of obstruction to the induction of a lawful incumbent an injunction will be granted to restrain interference therewith (Ex parte Jenkins (1868), 5 Moo. P. O. O. (N. S.) 351). Induction will be presumed after possession of the benefice for several years (Chapman v. Beard (1797), 3 Anst. 942).

(q) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 131; London Gazette, June 2, 1908.

(r) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), ss. 1, 7. Failure to do so involves absolute forfeiture of the benefice or perpetual curacy (ibid., s. 7; see Green's Case (1602), 6 Co. Rep. 29 a). Reading the articles in the porch of the church, when entry into the church was unlawfully obstructed, and

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Holding of more than one benefice illegal, with exceptions.

When
benefices may be held together.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Pluralities.

(1.) Holding of Two Benefices together.

1188. With certain specified exceptions, no incumbent can hold more than one benefice at the same time; and if he is instituted or admitted to a second, he thereby ipso facto vacates the first (a).

1189. A clerk may, with a licence or dispensation from the Archbishop of Canterbury, hold together any two benefices, the churches of which are within four miles of one another by the nearest road, and the annual value of one of which does not exceed two hundred pounds. If one of the benefices has no church, the distance between the two benefices is to be computed in such manner as the bishop of the diocese may direct (a). In estimating the annual value of either benefice, a deduction or allowance is to be made for all taxes, rates, tenths, dues, and permanent charges and outgoings, but not for the stipend of any stipendiary curate, nor for such taxes or rates in respect of the house of residence of the benefice or of the glebe land belonging thereto as are usually paid by tenants or occupiers, nor for money expended in the repair or improvement of the house of residence and the buildings and premises belonging thereto (b).

Procedure for obtaining licence or dispensation.

1190. In order to obtain the requisite licence or dispensation the clerk must deliver to the bishop of the diocese in which each benefice is situate a written statement according to a prescribed form, verified as the bishop may require, setting forth, to the best of the clerk's belief, the yearly income of each benefice and the deductions to be made therefrom, on an average of the three years ending on the last preceding 29th day of September, and the amount of the population of each benefice, according to the last parliamentary returns, and the distance between the two. The bishop may make inquiries as to the correctness of the statement, and must, within one month after he has received it, transmit to the Archbishop of Canterbury a copy of the statement, with a certificate under his hand as to the amount at which he considers that the annual value and population of the two benefices, or of such one of them as is within his diocese, ought to be taken. In case of the benefices or either of them being in the diocese or jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the certificate is to be made out and retained by him (c). The certificate, when transmitted to or retained by the archbishop, is to be deposited in the Office of Faculties, and is to be conclusive evidence of the annual divine service was consequently being performed in the porch, has been held to be sufficient (Brown v. Spence (1663), 1 Keb. 502). Whether doing so in a chapel of ease of the benefice would be sufficient is doubtful (ibid.). The due reading will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary (Powel v. Milburn (1771), 3 Wils. 355; Chapman v. Beard (1797), 3 Anst. 942).

(a) See pp. 633, 634, post.

(a) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 14; see Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 129. See also, as to holding cathedral preferments and benefices together, pp. 633 et seq., post.

(b) Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 4.

(c) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 7.

SMCT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Issue of licence or dispensation.

value and population of each of the benefices and of their distance from each other; and the Registrar of the Faculties is to produce it to any person requiring to inspect it (d).

If the Archbishop of Canterbury is satisfied of the fitness of the clerk and of the expediency of allowing the two benefices to be held together, he may grant a licence or dispensation for such joint holding, under the seal of the Office of Faculties, in such manner and form as he thinks fit. If he refuses to grant it, the King in Council, upon the application of the clerk who desires to obtain it, may enjoin the Archbishop to grant it or to show sufficient cause to the contrary, and may thereupon make such order touching the refusal or grant of the licence or dispensation as to the King in Council seems fit (e).

(ii.) Union of Benefices.

Union of
benefices.

1191. Provision is made by the Pluralities Acts, 1838 and 1850 (f), for uniting into one benefice with cure of souls two or more benefices, or one or more benefices and one or more spiritual sinecure rectories or vicarages, situate in the same parish or contiguous to each other, and having an aggregate population of not more than one thousand five hundred persons (g). If it appears to the archbishop of the province with respect to his own diocese, or if in other cases it is represented to him by the bishop of the diocese or the bishops of two dioceses, that the union may be effected with advantage to the interests of religion, and upon inquiry he is satisfied that the union may be usefully made and will not be of inconvenient extent, and that the patron or patrons consent thereto in writing, he is to cause in his own diocese a statement of the facts, and in other cases a written copy of the representation, to be affixed on or near the principal outer door of the church, or in some public and conspicuous place, in each benefice and sinecure rectory or vicarage affected, with a notice that any person interested may,

(d) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 9.

(e) Ibid., s. 6. No stamp duty is payable on the licence or dispensation, nor any fee, except 30s. to the Registrar of the Office of Faculties, and 2s. to the seal keeper; and no confirmation thereof is necessary; nor is the clerk applying for it to be required to give any caution or security by bond or otherwise before it is granted (ibid.).

(f) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 98.

(g) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 16—20, 27; Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 8. These enactments extend to the metropolis (Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142), s. 30). For the union of mediocrities or several benefices in the same parish, see p. 563, ante. Before 1838 benefices were in some cases united by special Act of Parliament, as in the city of London, after the fire, by stat. (1670) 22 Car. 2, c. 11, ss. 55, 56 (Hardinge v. Winchester (Bishop) (1777), 2 Wm. Bl. 1162); or they could be united by the patrons and bishop at common law or under stat. (1546) 37 Hen. 8, c. 21 (St. Swithin Parish Case (1695), Holt (K. B.), 139; Reynoldson v. Blake (1697), 1 Ld. Raym. 192; Robinson v. Bristol (Marquis) (1851), 11 C. B. 241, Ex. Ch.). But since 1838 the union can only be effected under the provisions of the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), and subsequent enactments amending and extending those provisions (ibid., s. 20). A union of benefices constitutes them a single benefice (Wilson v. Van Mildert (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 394), but does not effect a union of the parishes (St. Swithin Parish Case, supra).

SMOY. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

within six weeks, show cause in writing against the union (h). If no sufficient cause against it is shown within that time, he is to certify the inquiry and consent to the King in Council, who may thereupon make an order for the union (i). The order may regulate the course and succession in which the patrons, if more than one, shall present or nominate to the united benefice, and may determine to which diocese it shall belong, if it is in two dioceses; and the order is to be registered in the registry of the diocese or each diocese to which it has belonged or is determined to belong (k). If at the time when the order is registered all the benefices and sinecure rectories and vicarages ordered to be united are not all held together, provision is made for their being ultimately held by the same incumbent, and when this takes place they become permanently united (l).

Exception and exchange of endowments and advowsons.

1192. In any such case, if it appears that the total income of any benefices and sinecure rectories or vicarages proposed to be united would be more than sufficient for the due maintenance of the incumbent of the united benefice, and that the whole or part of the tithes, rentcharges, buildings, and lands belonging to any of such benefices and sinecure rectories or vicarages might, and could with advantage to the interests of religion, be excepted out of the union and be exchanged for some tithes, buildings, and lands in another benefice in the same diocese having no competent provision for its incumbent, an Order in Council, upon a certificate of the archbishop of the province and with the requisite consents, may be obtained for the exchange, and for the assurance of the tithes, buildings, and lands taken in exchange for the further endowment of the benefice within which they arise or are situate (m). Moreover, upon a certificate of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners an exchange of advowsons may be effected by Order in Council with a view to proceedings for any such union (n).

Parish church of united
benefice.

1193. With the consent of the incumbent and the patron or patrons of the united benefice and two-thirds of the parishioners within its limits, one of the churches within it may by faculty be made the parish church of the whole united benefice (o).

In the metropolis.

1194. In the metropolis, as defined by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (p), either two or more contiguous benefices, or a benefice or contiguous benefices and one or more spiritual sinecure rectories or vicarages contiguous thereto, may be united in the manner provided by the Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (q), without regard to or limitation as to aggregate population or aggregate yearly value. Wherever a union appears to the bishop of the diocese to be

(h) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 16.

(i) Ibid.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Ibid.

(m) Ibid., ss. 17—19, 27.

(n) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 23.

(o) Union of Benefices Acts Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 90), s. 3.

(p) 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 250.

(q) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142.

SMO. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

advantageous in the interests of religion, he may issue a commission to five persons, nominated as the Act prescribes (r), to inquire and report as to the expediency of the proposed union; and, if they recommend the union, the bishop will cause proposals for a scheme for effecting it to be drawn up and sent, with the written consent of the patrons of the benefices affected, to the churchwardens of each of the parishes affected, in order that they may be considered by the vestry, who are to notify to the bishop their assent to the proposals, or any objections or suggestions in relation thereto (s). When the proposals have been finally approved by the bishop and assented to by the patrons and the vestries of the parishes affected, they are to be transmitted to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who will prepare a scheme for carrying out the proposed union and send it to the churchwardens of the parishes affected, that they may, if they so desire, show cause against the union or any parts of the scheme (t). If no cause is shown within two months, the scheme, after having been laid for two months before both Houses of Parliament (a), is certified with the consents thereto to the King in Council, who may thereupon make an order for effecting the union (b). If cause is shown against any provisions of the scheme, the objections may be considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the scheme may be affirmed, varied, or dismissed in accordance with their report (c).

The scheme may contain all proper regulations for the appointment of the first incumbent of the united benefice and for regulating the succession in which the patrons, if more than one, shall present or nominate to the united benefice, and other necessary provisions, including such as may be required for compensating any incumbents of the benefices to be united who may be willing to retire (d). If it is deemed expedient to unite only a portion of a benefice with some contiguous benefice, that portion may be severed and be included in the union as if it were a separate benefice; and the remaining portion will in that case continue as an independent benefice (e). If the total revenue of the benefices proposed to be united appears to be more than sufficient for the due maintenance of the incumbent of the united benefice and of any requisite assistant curates, a scheme may be prepared and carried into effect by an Order in Council for subjecting parts of the endowments of

Provisions
of scheme.

Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142), ss. 4, 32.

Ibid., ss. 3—8, 24.

Ibid., s. 8.

Ibid., s. 15.

Ibid., s. 8. The order may be corrected or supplemented by further orders l., s. 25). All orders are to be published in the London Gazette and registered in the registry of the diocese, and, after having been gazetted, have the force of law, without prejudice to the rights of any incumbent affected thereby who has not assented thereto (ibid., ss. 13, 23).

(c) Ibid., s. 16.

(d) Ibid., s. 9. An annuity provided by a scheme to a retiring incumbent and his assigns out of the income of a united benefice while performing the duties of curate of the united benefice is not a benefice with cure of souls within stat. (1671) 13 Eliz. c. 20, and may be validly mortgaged by him (McBee v. Darns (1885), 30 Ch. D. 521).

(e) Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142), s. 10.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

any of the benefices proposed to be united to a perpetual annual rentcharge in favour of, or transferring and annexing them to, some benefice in, or in the vicinity of, the metropolis having no competent provision for its incumbent (f). In order to facilitate a union the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may arrange for exchanges of advowsons (g).

Disuniting
of united
benefices.

1195. If it appears to the archbishop of the province with respect to his own diocese, or in other cases it is represented to him by the bishop of a diocese, that, from the increase of population or from other circumstances, one or more of the benefices of which a united benefice consists may be separated therefrom with advantage to the interests of religion, and upon inquiry he is satisfied that the union may be usefully dissolved as respects such benefice or benefices, he is to cause in his own diocese a statement of the facts, and in other cases a written copy of the representation, to be affixed on or near the principal outer door of the church, or in some public and conspicuous place in each of the benefices forming part of the united benefice, with a notice that any person interested may within six weeks show cause in writing against the disunion (h). If no sufficient cause against it is shown within that time, he is to certify the inquiry and the patron's consent, when necessary, to the King in Council, who may thereupon make an order for separating the benefice or benefices from the united benefice, and for declaring the rights of patronage of the several patrons, if there is more than one. The order is to be registered in the registry of the diocese, and thereupon, if the united benefice is then vacant, or if not vacant on the first avoidance thereof, the union is to be ipso facto dissolved as regards the benefice or benefices so to be separated (i). If the united benefice is full at the date of the order, the incumbent may resign the benefice or benefices proposed to be separated, to which a presentation or nomination may then be made in like manner as if the united benefice had been vacant at the date of the order (k). Upon any such disunion a portion of the endowments belonging to the united benefice may be assigned and attached to each benefice, notwithstanding that such portion may not arise or accrue within the limits of, or have originally belonged to, the benefice to which it is so assigned and attached; and the charges and outgoings which before the disunion were imposed upon the united benefice may be apportioned between the benefices; but where there are mortgages, with the consent of the mortgagees under their hands and seals (l). And where the house of residence of the united benefice is inconveniently situated for any of the disunited benefices, it may be sold, and the proceeds of sale may

f) Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142), s. 11.

Ibid., s. 12.

Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 21.

Ibid., ss. 21, 27; and as to the metropolis, Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142), s. 30. Benefices united for more than sixty years before 14th August, 1838, are not to be disunited without the written consent of the patrons thereof (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 21).

h) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 22.

i) Ibid., ss. 23, 24, 27.

be applied in or towards the erection or purchase of houses of residence for the disunited benefices (m).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

SUB-SECT. 8.—Rights and Duties of Beneficed Clergy.

(i.) Cure of Souls.

1196. The bishop has the general cure of souls throughout the whole of his diocese (n), and has the right accordingly personally to officiate at pleasure in any church within it. But he cannot exercise this right by deputy; and, subject to it, an incumbent has the exclusive cure of souls within his parish, and no other clergyman has any right publicly to officiate or perform clerical ministrations within the parish without his consent (o), except where the necessity for his consent has been abrogated by statutes or by arrangement, or has been forfeited by some default on his part (p). All parochial duties are committed to and imposed upon him, and all fees and emoluments arising from the performance of those duties belong to him (q). Except where it is dispensed with by the Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts (r), his consent is necessary to the erection of any chapel of ease or other public chapel or church within his parish (s). He has the nomination of the minister to serve in any chapel of ease in his parish (t), and all the offertory money collected in any such chapel is at the disposal of himself and the churchwardens of the parish (a).

Incumbent
under the bishop has sole care of souls in his parish.

1197. An incumbent has the right, without any licence from the bishop, to perform divine service in any consecrated building within his benefice, but he requires a licence to do so elsewhere in the parish (b). Subject to this legal requisite, he, or in case of his non-residence the curate in charge, or any person authorised by them respectively, may hold and conduct a congregation or assembly for religious worship anywhere within the parish (c).

Right to officiate.

(m) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 25.

(n) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 38; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 157, 161; see note (a), p. 442, ante.

(o) Clerks d. Prin v. Heath (1689), 1 Mod. Rep. 11; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham, supra, at p. 161; Carr v. Marsh (1814), 2 Phillim. 198, 206; Farnworth v. Chester (Bishop) (1825), 4 B. & C. 555, 568; Nesbitt v. Wallace, [1901] P. 354.

(p) MacAllister v. Rochester (Bishop) (1880), 5 O. P. D. 194, 203. For cases of default, see pp. 614, 626, 640—643, post.

(q) Moysey v. Hillcoat (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 30, 48.

(r) See note (i), p. 444, ante.

(s) Portland (Duke) v. Bingham, supra; Bliss v. Woods (1831), 3 Hag. Ecc. 486, 509; MacAllister v. Rochester (Bishop), supra, at p. 204.

(t) Dixon v. Kershaw (1766), 2 Amb. 528; Portland (Duke) v. Bingham, supra; Moysey v. Hillcoat, supra; Bliss v. Woods, supra.

(a) Dowdall v. Hewitt (1863), 10 L. T. 823; Magee v. Cashel (Bishop) (1846), 9 L. Eq. R. 319. But the incumbent and chapelwardens of a chapel to which a district chapelry is attached have not the disposal of the offertory money collected at an unconsecrated chapel situate within the chapelry (Liddell v. Rainesford (1868), 38 L. J. (EXCL.) 15).

(b) Moysey v. Hillcoat (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 30, 46.

(c) Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86), s. 1 (2). Previously to this Act it was against ecclesiastical law to preach in an unconsecrated place (Finch v. Harris (1702), 12 Mod. Rep. 641, per Holt, C.J.).

SECT. 3.

Beneficed
Clergy.

Must reside on benefice and in house of residence
thereto.

(ii.) Residence.

1198. It is the duty of an incumbent to reside on his benefice, or, if he holds two benefices, on one of them, and in the house of residence, if any, belonging thereto (d). If, without a licence for non-residence or legal exemption from residence (e), he absents himself therefrom for upwards of three months at one time or different times in any one year, he is liable to forfeit one-third of the annual value of the benefice, if the absence does not exceed six months; one-half, if it exceeds six months; two-thirds, if it exceeds eight months, and three-fourths if it lasts for the whole year (f).

(d) Butler and Goodale's Case (1598), 6 Co. Rep. 21 b; Wilkinson v. Allot (1776), 2 Cowp. 429; Wright v. Legge (1815), 6 Taunt. 48; Wright v. Flamank (1815), ibid., 52. Where an incumbent holds two benefices, one of which has, while the other has not, a house of residence, he may reside within the latter (Wynn v. Smithies (1815), 6 Taunt. 198). An incumbent is so called from his being incumbent or diligently resident on the benefice (Co. Litt. 119 b).

(e) The following persons, having a single benefice with cure of souls, are exempt from the penalties for non-residence: Heads of colleges and halls in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the warden of the University of Durham, and the headmasters of Eton, Winchester and Westminster schools (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 37). The following are exempt from penalties for non-residence during the time when they are actually discharging the duties of their office, and may count that time as residence: Deans of cathedral or collegiate churches; professors and public readers in either of the three above-mentioned universities; royal chaplains, chaplains of archbishops and bishops, and chaplains of the House of Commons; incumbents serving as chancellors or commissaries of a diocese or as archdeacons; deans, subdeans, priests, and readers in the Chapels Royal; preachers in the Inns of Court or at the Rolls; the provost of Eton, the warden of Winchester, the master of the Charterhouse, and the principals of Saint David's College and of King's College, London (ibid., s. 38). Prebendaries, canons, priest-vicars, vicars choral and minor canons of cathedral and collegiate churches, and fellows of Eton and Winchester, who reside and perform the duties of their office during the proscribed time, may reckon that residence as residence on their benefice. But they must not be actually absent from their benefice for more than five months in any one calendar year, except that where the year of residence in the cathedral or collegiate church or college commences at some other date than January 1st, and they keep the periods of residence required in respect of their office for two successive years in whole or in part in one calendar year, they may account such residence, although exceeding five months in the calendar year, as if they had resided on their benefice (ibid., ss. 39, 120).

(f) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 32; see ss. 10, 114, 118—121, and pp. 612, 613, post. A suit can only be brought in respect of penalties or forfeitures for non-residence incurred subsequently to 1st January in the year immediately preceding the year in which the suit is commenced. It can only be instituted in the consistory court of the diocese in which the benefice is situated and by a person authorised under the hand and seal of the bishop; and the bishop may direct that the penalties or forfeitures recovered in the suit, so far as not remitted in whole or in part, shall be applied towards augmenting or improving the benefice or the house of residence or other buildings or appurtenances thereof (ibid., ss. 114, 118). The suit is a civil proceeding (Bluck v. Rackham (1846), 5 Moo. P. C. C. 305; Rackham v. Bluck (1846), 9 Q. B. 691). Strict proof of the admission of the incumbent is not necessary to sustain it (Bevan v. Williams (1776), 3 Term Rep. 635, n. (a)). Where an archbishop or bishop after proceeding by motion for a penalty for non-residence exceeding six months remits the whole or any part, the King in Council in case of such remission by an archbishop, and the archbishop in case of such remission by a bishop, is to be informed of the remission and may allow or disallow the same in whole or in part (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 57). A house provided by Queen Anne's Bounty for a poor benefice outside

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Licence to reside in some other house.

1199. Where a benefice has not a house, or no fit house, of residence, the bishop, on the written application of the incumbent, may, by licence, permit him to reside in some specified fit house, although not belonging to the benefice, for a specified time not exceeding the end of the calendar year next after that in which the licence is granted, and may from time to time renew the licence; but the house must be within three miles of the church, or within two miles, if the church is in a city, or market or borough town (g).

Licence for non-residence
in certain

1200. Upon a petition by an incumbent stating certain prescribed particulars, the bishop may grant to him a licence to reside out of the house of residence, or out of the limits of his benefice, or out of the three or two miles limit above mentioned, (1) if he is prevented from so residing by any incapacity of mind or body (h); (2) if there is no house of residence, or the house is unfit for his residence from some cause other than his own negligence, default, or other misconduct, and he keeps the house of residence, if any, in good repair, and two neighbouring incumbents with the rural dean certify that no house, convenient for his residence, can be obtained within the parish or within the three or two miles limit above mentioned; (3) for a period not exceeding six months, renewable only with the permission of the archbishop, on account of the dangerous illness of his wife or child residing with him; and (4) for his residence in a mansion or messuage of his own within the parish, provided that he keeps the house of residence the limits of the benefice, if approved by the bishop, is to be deemed the house of residence belonging to the benefice (ibid., s. 34); and where there is a rectory appropriate or inappropriate, the residence of the vicar or perpetual curate in the rectory house is a legal residence, provided that the house belonging to the vicarage or perpetual curacy is kept in repair to the satisfaction of the bishop (ibid., s. 35). Moreover, the widow of a deceased incumbent may occupy the house of residence belonging to the benefice for two months after his decease (ibid., s. 36); and an incumbent is not liable to a penalty for not residing in the house of residence while it is occupied by a tenant to whom it has been let in good faith (ibid., s. 60). But an agreement for the letting of a house of residence in which the incumbent of the benefice is liable to be ordered by the bishop to reside, or which is liable to be appointed by the bishop as a residence for a curate, or of the buildings, grounds, or necessary appurtenances thereof, must be in writing and must contain a condition for the avoiding thereof upon a copy of the bishop's order or appointment being served on the occupier or left at the house; and a person who after such service continues to hold such house, buildings, grounds, or appurtenances beyond the day specified in an order or appointment by the bishop, forfeits the sum of 40s. for every subsequent day during which, without the written permission of the bishop, he wilfully continues to hold the same; and the incumbent or curate named in the order or appointment may obtain summary and, if necessary, forcible possession of the premises under a warrant of a justice of the peace. But a tenant in possession under a verbal agreement, or under an agreement not containing the prescribed condition, may recover damages for being turned out of possession from the person with whom the agreement was entered into (ibid., s. 59).

(g) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 33, 45—51. Where a benefice has no house of residence, the licence of the bishop is not requisite to enable the incumbent to reside in a particular house within the benefice (Wyn v. Smithies (1815), 6 Taunt. 198, 199).

(h) Scammel v. Willot (1799), 3 Esp. 29.

SECT. 5.

Beneficed
Clergy.

May reside outside benefice in certain

Duration of licences.

Revocation.

of the benefice in good repair. In case of any such licence being refused, an appeal lies within one month to the archbishop (i).

The bishop may grant a licence to an incumbent to reside out of the limits of his benefice in other suitable cases, but such licence will only be valid if and so far as it is allowed by the archbishop (k).

No licence for non-residence continues in force after the 31st of December of the year next after the year in which it was granted (l).

A licence for non-residence may be revoked by the bishop after the incumbent has had an opportunity of showing cause to the contrary, or by the King in Council; but an appeal from any revocation by the bishop lies within one month to the archbishop (m).

Enforcement of non-residence under licence.

1201. An incumbent who is non-resident with the licence of the bishop cannot, without the bishop's permission, resume the duties of his benefice before the expiration of the period mentioned in the licence; and, if non-resident for more than twelve months during that period, cannot interfere with the discharge of the duties of the benefice intrusted by the bishop to a curate or curates (n).

Annual returns by incumbents.

1202. The bishop must send yearly in January to every incumbent in each diocese certain prescribed questions as to his residence and service, and must make yearly, before 25th March, returns to the King in Council of the resident and non-resident incumbents in his diocese and of the substance of the answers received to the questions (o).

Enforcement
of residence.

1203. Where an incumbent is non-resident without a licence or legal cause of exemption from residence (p), the bishop, either instead of or after proceeding for the penalties for non-residence, may issue a monition to him to proceed to and reside on his benefice and perform the duties thereof, and to make a return to the monition after a period of not less than thirty days, and, in case of no return or an unsatisfactory return being made, may issue an order requiring him to proceed and reside within thirty days. If the order is not complied with, the bishop may, subject to an appeal to the archbishop, sequester the profits of the benefice until compliance or proof of sufficient reasons for non-compliance (q). If an incumbent

(i) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 43, 45-51.

(k) Ibid., ss. 44-51.

(l) Ibid., s. 46.

(m) Ibid., ss. 49-51.

(n) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 12; see p. 640, post.

(o) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 52, 53, Sched. I.

(p) Imprisonment for a crime is not a legal cause of exemption (Ex parte Bartlett (1848), 12 Q. B. 488; Re Bartlett (1848), 3 Exch. 28, 33).

(q) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 54, 56, 112, 113. Subject to the appeal, the decision as to the reasons for non-residence rests with the bishop (Re Bartlett, supra). The monition need not be preceded by a citation or other warning (Bartlett v. Kirwood (1853), 2 E. & B. 771). But before sequestration is issued the incumbent must be allowed an opportunity of showing cause against it; and the instrument of sequestration should recite the delinquency in respect of which it issues (Bonaker v. Beane (1850), 16 Q. B. 162, Ex. Ch.).

after a monition or order to reside on his benefice begins to reside and within twelve months thereafter wilfully absents himself from his benefice for one month together or at several times, the bishop, subject to the like appeal, may issue sequestration without any other monition or order, and may repeat the process as occasion may require (r).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

(iii.) Ecclesiastical Duties.

1204. An incumbent is bound, by himself or an assistant or substitute, regularly and duly to perform divine service on Sundays and holy days in his benefice(s), and to supply to the parishioners the rites and offices of the Church as and when lawfully required by them (a), and to perform within his benefice all the duties the performance of which was solemnly promised by him at his ordination (b).

Duties of
Incumbent.

1205. The bishop has express power to intervene to enforce on the part of an incumbent the regular and due performance of divine service on Sundays and holy days (c), and of all such other duties as an incumbent is bound by law to perform, or the performance of which was solemnly promised by him at his ordination (d), and the performance of which has been required of him in writing by the bishop, including, in the case of benefices within the four Welsh dioceses and the county of Monmouth, such ministrations in Welsh as the bishop directs to be performed (e). Where these duties appear to the bishop to be inadequately performed in a benefice(f), he may issue a commission of inquiry to six persons, namely, the archdeacon or rural dean, a canon residentiary, prebendary, or honorary canon of the cathedral church

Bishop may enforce
duties.

If, however, in response to the monition or order to return into residence, he sends an affidavit containing an insufficient excuse, the bishop may issue sequestration after the thirty days without further hearing him (Bartlett v. Kirwood (1853), 2 E. & B. 771). As to the sequestration, see pp. 622 et seq., post. An incumbent is also liable to suspension for non-residence (Pauet v. Head (1728), 2 Lee, Appendix, 566). As to deprivation in case of continued or repeated sequestration, see p. 536, ante.

(r) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 56. The bishop may, if he thinks fit, issue another order (Bonaker v. Evans (1850), 16 Q. B. 162, Ex. Ch.).

(s) See pp. 657, 661, post.

(a) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 68; Argar v. Holdsworth (1758), 2 Lee, 515; Kemp v. Wickes (1809), 3 Phillim. 264, 274; R. v. James (1850), 3 Car. & Kir. 167; Tuckniss v. Alexander (1863), 32 L. J. (ex.) 794, 806.

(b) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 2. For the promises made by a priest at his ordination, see note (b), p. 553, ante. As to the restrictions on an incumbent in respect of farming and trading, see pp. 557, 558, ante, and as to his exemption from tolls when in the performance of his duty and his liability to criticism in respect of his parochial actions and sermons, see p. 556, ante.

(c) See pp. 657 et seq., post.

(d) See note (b), p. 553, ante.

(e) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 2. A bishop cannot in any case require more than one Welsh service on every Sunday in such (sic) church or chapel of ease situated in any of these benefices, and due provision must be made for the English-speaking portion of the population (ibid.). The word "such" in the Act is probably a clerical error for "each."

(f) In the four Welsh dioceses imperfect knowledge of the Welsh language on the part of the incumbent is a sufficient ground for deciding that the duties are inadequately performed (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 105).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

of the diocese, elected by the cathedral body, a beneficed clergyman elected from among themselves by the beneficed clergy of the archdeaconry, and a lay justice of the peace of the county, and two other laymen, being either such justices or barristers or solicitors of at least ten years' standing, nominated respectively on the requisition of the bishop by the chairman of the last quarter sessions for the county or division of the county in which the benefice is situate or the lord lieutenant (g). The incumbent of the benefice is to have notice of the bishop's intention to issue the commission, and may within fourteen days nominate an additional commissioner, being an incumbent in the diocese or a justice of the peace (h). If the commissioners or the majority of them report that the duties of the benefice are inadequately performed, the bishop may require the incumbent, though resident and engaged in performing the duties, to nominate to him one or more persons, with sufficient stipend, with a view to being licensed as assistant curates, and, if the incumbent fails to make such nomination within three months, the bishop may appoint and license one or more curates; but an appeal from the requisition or appointment lies within one month to the archbishop (i).

Appointment
of curate and inhibition in case of negligence by
incumbent.

1206. The commissioners may report that the ecclesiastical duties of the benefice are inadequately performed owing to the negligence of the incumbent; and in case of their so reporting, the bishop, if he thinks the appointment of a curate desirable, is himself to appoint one or more curates, without requiring the incumbent to do so, and may, if he considers it expedient in the interests of the benefice, inhibit the incumbent from performing all or any of the duties (k); but an appeal from the appointment or the inhibition lies within one month to the court constituted under the Benefices Act, 1898 (l). An incumbent so inhibited is not to interfere with or control any curate in the performance of the ecclesiastical duties of the benefice; and any right of patronage vested in him as incumbent vests, while he is inhibited, in the patron of the benefice, or, if the incumbent is himself the patron, in the archbishop of the province (m). He is not, while so inhibited, liable to any penalty or forfeiture for non-residence; but the bishop may require the curate to reside in the house of residence of the benefice, and may assign the house and a portion of the glebe land to the curate in like manner and upon the same terms as if the incumbent were non-resident for four months in each year, and as if the curate's stipend were not less than the whole value of the benefice (n). The (g) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), ss. 3—5; Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 8.

(h) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 3.

(i) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 77; Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), ss. 3—8, 15.

(k) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 9.

(l) Ibid., ss. 3, 9 (6), 11. The procedure on the appeal is regulated by the Benefices Rules, 1899, rr. 17—52, Sched. I., Sched. II., Forms Nos. 17—60 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. I., Benefice, England, pp. 12—35).

(m) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 9 (4).

(n) Ibid., s. 9 (5); see pp. 640, 641, post.

incumbent remains liable for repairs, but may retain out of the curate's stipend such amount in respect of repairs during the curate's occupation, and may have such facilities for executing repairs, as the bishop in case of difference decides to be reasonable (o).

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Charges on Benefices.

1207. Charges on a benefice, or on any of the property or profits thereof, to secure the payment of money, or for any other purpose, are unlawful and void (p), except such charges as are expressly authorised by statute (q).

Unlawful
and void charges.

A mortgage by the incumbent of the pew rents of the church of a consolidated chapelry falls under this general prohibition and is void (r).

Mortgage of pew rents.

The charge is void whatever be its form. A lease of the benefice or its emoluments granted as part of, or to effect, a charge thereon is void (s). So, too, is a composition with creditors on the terms of the income of the benefice being applied in payment of the incumbent's debts (t).

Form of charge immaterial.

The charge alone is void, and not the instrument which contains it. Therefore a covenant in the instrument for payment of the money is valid (u).

Deed containing charge not void.

A warrant of attorney given by an incumbent to enter up judgment for debt is void, if declared to be for the purpose of securing money charged on his benefice or with a view to sequestration being procured (x). But a judgment against an incumbent is not of itself a charge on his benefice (y), even when registered (z); and, therefore, a simple warrant to enter up judgment does not constitute such a charge (a).

Warrant of attorney and judgment.

(o) Benefices Act, 1893 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 9 (5).

(p) Stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 20. This Act was repealed by stat. (1803) 43 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 10; but, so far as it related to charges, was revived by stat. (1817) 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, which repealed the repealing Act, while it again repealed parts of the Act of Elizabeth not relating to charges (Doe d. Broughton v. Gully (1829), 9 B. & C. 344, 354). Consequently charges on benefices made between 1803 and 1817 were valid (White v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1818), 3 Swan. 109; Doe d. Wilks v. Ramsden (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 608; Metcalfe v. York (Archbishop) (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 547).

(q) As to charges which are so authorised for the purpose of improving the property of the benefice, see pp. 755 et seq., post.

(r) Re Leveson, Ex parte Arrowsmith (1878), 8 Ch. D. 96, C. A.

(s) Shaw v. Pritchard (1829), 10 B. & C. 241; Walther v. Crafts (1851), 6 Exch. 1.

(t) Alchin v. Hopkins (1834), 1 Bing. (N. S.) 99.

(u) Mouys v. Leake (1799), 8 Term Rep. 411; Faircloth v. Gurney (1833), 9 Bing. 622; Sloane v. Packman (1843), 11 M. & W. 770.

(x) Flight v. Salter (1831), 1 B. & Ad. 673; Newland v. Watkin (1832), 9 Bing. 113; Saltmarsh v. Hewett (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 812; Long v. Storie (1849),

*3 De G. & Sm. 308.

(y) Cottle v. Warrington (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 447; Bates v. Brothers (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 609.

(z) Hawkins v. Gathercole (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 1, C. A.

(a) Gibbons v. Hooper (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 734; Kirlaw v. Butts (1831), ibid., 736, n.; Aberdeen v. Newland (1831), 4 Sim. 281; Britten v. Wait (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 915; Colebrook v. Layton (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 578; Faircloth v. Gurney (1833), 9 Bing. 622; Johnson v. Brazier (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 624; Moore v.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1208. A pension granted to a retiring incumbent under the Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (b), is a charge on the revenues of the benefice (c).

For endowing
a chapel of ease or a poorer
benefice.

1209. An incumbent, with the consent of his bishop and patron, may grant an annual sum in perpetuity to and for the benefit of the incumbent of a chapel of ease or parochial chapel, or district church or chapel, or chapel having a district assigned thereto, being within the limits or the original limits of his benefice, or having part of its district within the limits of his benefice, whether the church or chapel is within such limits or not, and may charge this annual sum on all or any part of the lands and profits of his benefice. Where contiguous parts of several parishes are united into a separate and distinct district and are constituted a consolidated chapelry, the incumbents of the several parishes may make and create similar grants and charges in favour of the incumbent of the consolidated chapelry. Any part of the lands and profits charged may afterwards be released from the charge by the incumbent of the church or chapel benefited by the charge, with the consent of his bishop and patron, provided that sufficient lands or profits to be a security for the charge remain unreleased (d).

For endowing
benefice in the metropolis.

1210. Where under the Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (e), benefices within the metropolis, as defined by that Act, are united by an Order in Council confirming a scheme of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, provision may be made for subjecting specific parts of the revenues of the united benefice to a perpetual annual rentcharge in favour of some other specified benefice in the metropolis or in the vicinity thereof (f).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Sequestration of Benefices.

(i.) Nature and Occasions of the Process.

Sequestration.

1211. Sequestration of a benefice is a process issued by the bishop or other ordinary, or by an ecclesiastical court, whereby the profits and income of the benefice are ordered to be taken by one or more persons, who are called sequestrators, and to be applied in the manner required by the circumstances of the case, care being taken that the duties of the church are provided for out of them (g). It is Ramaden (1838), 7 Ad. & El. 898; Bendry v. Price (1839), 7 Dowl. 753; Bishop v. Hatch (1839), ibid., 763. As to charges, see also p. 755, post.

(b) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 44.

(c) Ibid., s. 10. See pp. 629 et seq., post.

(d) Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 45), ss. 21–27; Church Building Act, 1836 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 14; Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 84), ss. 1, 3, 5–7. These enactments did not authorise a grant or charge for the benefit of a chapel of ease situate within a division which under the provisions of the Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), was intended to become a distinct parish (Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 22).

(e) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142.

(f) Ibid., s. 11.

(g) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 588 et seq.; Arbuckle v. Cowtan (1803), 3 Bos. & P. 321, 328. The word “sequestration” properly means the setting aside of a thing in controversy from the possession of both of the parties contending for it (Termes de la Ley, p. 609; Ayl. Par. 493).

Sec. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

issued either for the recovery of a debt from the incumbent or on his bankruptcy, or in the course of proceedings against him in an ecclesiastical court, or during a vacancy in the benefice, or in certain cases of default by the incumbent. It may be issued where the incumbent is a lunatic or of unsound mind (h).

(ii.) Sequestration for Debt or on Bankruptcy.

1212. Sequestration is the legal means by which the creditors of an incumbent can obtain satisfaction of their debts out of the profits of his benefice (i). It is obtained by a writ of fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis or a writ of sequestrari facias de bonis ecclesiasticis (h) sued out of the court in which a judgment or order has been obtained for payment of the debt, after a writ of execution has been issued to the sheriff and the sheriff has made a return that the debtor has no goods or lay fee out of which the debt can be satisfied, but that he is incumbent of a benefice named in the return (l). The writ can be issued in an action in the Chancery Division of the High Court where the defendant has been attached for non-payment of a sum which he has been ordered by the Court to pay, and non est inventus has been returned to the attachment, and the ordinary writ of sequestration has been thereupon issued, and the return has been made to it that the defendant has no lay property, but is incumbent of a benefice named in the return (m). The writ is admissible in evidence, although the judgment roll contains no entry of its having been awarded (n). It must not be issued for a sum exceeding the amount of the debt due (o). How obtained.

1213. The writ is directed to the bishop and commands him to enter into the benefice and church and take and sequester the Warrant of sequestration.

(h) Ex parte Hastings (1807), 14 Ves. 182.

(i) 2 Co. Inst. 4; Arbuckle v. Cowtan, supra. Without sequestration there can be no appointment of a receiver of the profits of the benefice (McCurdy v. Chichester (1837), 2 Jo. Ex. Ir. 358). A judgment against an incumbent does not in itself create a lien on his benefice (Wise v. Beresford (1843), 3 Dr. & War. 276).

(k) In former times there was also a writ of levari facias (Anon. (1552) Jenk. 206, 207; sub nom. Henlow v. Salisbury (Bishop) and Keble (1552), 1 Dyer, 76 b; 3 Bl. Com. 417, 418), but it was abolished by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 146 (2).

(l) R. S. C., Ord. 43, rr. 3—5, Appendix H, Forms Nos. 5, 6, 7 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. XII., Supreme Court, England, pp. 169, 353, 354). A writ for sequestration cannot properly issue until the sheriff has returned nulla bona to the writ of execution (Rabbitts v. Woodward (1869), 20 L. T. 693, 778). If it issues previously, it is irregular and may be set aside on an application for the purpose made within reasonable time (Bromage v. Vaughan (1852), 7 Exch. 223). The name and situation of the benefice must be stated in the return (R. v. Powell (1836), 1 M. & W. 321).

(m) Allen v. Williams (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 455. Where a defendant in an action for debt was incumbent of two benefices in different counties, but in the same diocese, and writs of special capias utlagatum were issued against him to the sheriffs of the two counties, to which returns were made that he had no goods or chattels or lay fee but was incumbent of the several benefices, one rule and one writ of sequestrari facias were granted in respect of both (R. v. Hind (1831), 1 Cr. & J. 389; S. C. sub nom. Re Hind (1831), 1 Tyr. 347).

(n) Pack v. Tarpley (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 468.

(o) Britten v. Watt (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 915.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

same into his possession, and hold the same until he has levied the debt, and incidental damages, costs and charges, out of the profits thereof, and to make a return of the amount levied on a given date (p). On its delivery to him, he issues a warrant of sequestration to a person named therein as sequestrator (q), which is published by being affixed on or near the door of the church or churches in the benefice (r). But the bishop is personally responsible for the execution of the writ, and for any wrong done by a sequestrator; and the sequestration is merely a direction by the bishop to his own agent to do what the court has ordered him to do (s). Possession is taken, and the property is bound, from the time when the warrant is issued and the sequestrator appointed, but publication is necessary to give priority against conflicting rights (t). After the warrant has been issued, the creditor cannot require the bishop to hand the writ back to enable him to indorse a claim for interest upon it (u).

Several sequestra-
tions.

1214. As between two writs of sequestration against the same benefice, the bishop, in the absence of a direction of the court to the contrary, must issue his warrants of sequestration under them in the order in which they are delivered to him, and not in the order of their teste (a). But where several judgments are entered against an incumbent, and writs of sequestration are granted in aid of them, the court can require the bishop to issue sequestration in the order in which the judgments are entered (b). Where a benefice is under sequestration at the suit of a judgment creditor, a subsequent judgment creditor who has taken out sequestration can obtain in the Chancery Division of the High Court an account of the surplus profits in the hands of the first sequestrator, and an order for payment of his debt thereout (c).

Continuance of a sequestration.

1215. A writ of sequestration is a continuing execution, and remains in force without reference to the date on which it is nominally returnable, until the debt and costs to be levied under it are realised, or until the bishop is ruled to return it, in which case

(p) Anon. (1552), Jenk. 206, 207; Harding v. Hall (1842), 10 M. & W. 42, 52, 53; R. S. O., Appendix H, Forms Nos. 5, 6, 7 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. XII., Supreme Court, England, pp. 353, 354).

(q) For forms of the warrant, see Chitty's King's Bench Forms, 13th ed., pp. 584, 587, and Lawrence v. Edwards, [1891] 1 Ch. 144, at pp. 145, 146.

(r) Parish Notices Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 4. Before that Act it was read in church (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 308; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 595). The warrant is sometimes itself called a writ. The bishop either names one or more sequestrators himself, or grants the sequestration to the person or persons named by the party who obtained the writ (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 590).

(s) Harding v. Hall, supra. The bishop is responsible to the creditor for the amount levied under the sequestration; and the creditor has a right to an account in respect of it against the bishop's legal personal representatives after his death (Hogg v. Garrett (1849), 12 L. Eq. R. 559).

(t) Doe d. Morgan v. Bluck (1813), 3 Camp. 447; Bennett v. Apperley (1827), 6 B. & C. 630, 634; Waite v. Bishop (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 507.

(u) Watkins v. Tarpley (1847), 5 Dow. & L. 226.

(a) Sturgis v. London (Bishop) (1857), 7 E. & B. 542.

(b) R. v. London (Bishop) (1822), 1 Dow. & Ry. (K. B.) 486.

(c) Cuddington v. Withy (1818), 2 Swan. 174.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

the return puts an end to the writ. If the bishop to whom the writ is directed dies during its continuance, his successor is bound to return it (d). Where a sequestration is granted to levy the amount of a mortgage debt, and the mortgaged property is foreclosed and sold for a sum not sufficient to satisfy the debt, the sequestration will not be set aside, but will continue for the levy of the balance (e). The sequestration need not be published before the day on which the writ is nominally returnable (f). Until the full amount is levied, the return of the writ should not be moved for, but an account should be demanded from the bishop from time to time as to the amounts which he has levied (g). If the bishop returns the writ before the execution is satisfied, it will be sent back to him to take the return off it and to certify instead what has been done under it (h). The sequestrator ought to make payment to the creditor at the earliest possible moment (i).

1216. The usual allowance to a sequestrator is a commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount of profits collected by him. He may be allowed the expense of audit dinners and payment of the rates on the house of residence while in the occupation of a curate in charge, if these items are at the time knowingly acquiesced in by the incumbent (k). Allowance of sequestration.

1217. A receiver may be appointed where the right to the sequestration is disputed (l), and on the application of a second incumbrancer where a third incumbrancer has obtained sequestration (m). A receiver can also be appointed in an action in the Chancery Division of the High Court, instituted by a mortgagee of tithe rentcharge against an incumbent and a creditor who has obtained sequestration (n). Appointment of receiver.

1218. If, during a sequestration in pursuance of a writ, the incumbent is suspended and a sequestration is issued under the suspension, the suspension deprives not only the incumbent, but also his creditors, of any right to the profits of the benefice, and the second sequestration accordingly overrides the first (o). Sequestration superseded.

1219. The return to the writ must not only set forth accounts of the sums received, but must also state that no other sums have been Return to the writ.

(d) Marsh v. Fawcett (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 582; Phillips v. Berkeley (1836), 5 Dowl. 279; Phelps v. St. John (1855), 10 Exch. 895.

(e) Long v. Williams (1872), 26 L. T. 878.

(f) Hennett v. Apperley (1827), 6 B. & C. 630.

(g) Marsh v. Fawcett, supra. The incumbent cannot institute an action in the Chancery Division of the High Court for an account, as it is a matter for the court out of which the writ of sequestration has issued (Williams v. Jernsey (1870), 23 L. T. 100).

(h) Disney v. Eyre (1831), Alc. & N. 34; Alderton v. St. Aubyn (1840), 6 M. & W. 150.

(i) Re Sanders v. Penlease (1859), 1 L. T. 54.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Silver v. Norwich (Bishop) (1816), cited 3 Swan. 112, n. A receiver of the profits of a benefice will not be appointed where no sequestration has issued (McCurdy v. Chichester (1837), 2 Jo. Ex. Lr. 358).

(m) White v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1818), 3 Swan. 109.

(n) Kenny v. Cumming (1841), Fl. & K. 321.

(o) Bunter v. Cresswell (1850), 14 Q. B. 825, 830.

§ 207. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

received by the bishop under the sequestration (p). A bishop who has succeeded since the issue of a writ of sequestration can only be called upon to return what has been levied since he came into office; and when the creditor's solicitor in the cause has been changed, the bishop cannot be called upon to make a return until the order for the change has been served upon him (q). On the application of the incumbent the court will refer the accounts to a master to ascertain whether the deductions contained in them ought to be allowed (r). But when the accounts have been filed and the writ paid off, the incumbent cannot, some years afterwards, require the bishop to certify what has been done under the writ (s).

Bankruptcy of judgment creditor or of
incumbent.

1220. If a judgment creditor who has obtained a sequestration becomes bankrupt, his trustee in bankruptcy succeeds to his rights under the sequestration (t).

Where the incumbent of a benefice becomes bankrupt, the trustee in bankruptcy may apply for a sequestration of the profits of the benefice (a).

Sequestration
under bankruptcy of the
incumbent.

1221. Where a benefice is sequestered under the bankruptcy of the incumbent, the bishop may, if he thinks fit, appoint to the incumbent such or the like stipend as he might by law have appointed to a curate licensed to serve the benefice in case the incumbent had been non-resident (b); and the sequestrator is to pay the stipend so appointed out of the profits of the benefice to the incumbent, by quarterly instalments, while he performs the duties of the benefice (c). And where, either on the bankruptcy of an incumbent, or under a judgment recovered against him, a sequestration of his benefice issues and continues for six months, the bishop, after the expiration of such six months and so long as the sequestration continues, is to take order for the performance of the services of the church of the benefice, and may appoint and license for that purpose one or more curates or additional curates,

(p) Elchin v. Hopkins (1838), 7 Dowl. 146.

(q) Phillips v. Berkeley (1836), 5 Dowl. 279.

(r) Nawson v. Symonds (1848), 12 Q. B. 830; Morris v. Phelps (1880), 4 Exch. 895. The incumbent cannot obtain an account against the judgment creditor and the sequestrator by proceedings in equity (Williams v. Ivimey (1870), 23 L. T. 100).

(s) Billing v. St. Aubyn (1861), 7 Jur. (N. s.) 775.

(t) Re Iveson, Ex parte Hall (1835), 1 Deac. 87.

(a) See title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 189. The profits do not vest in the trustee in bankruptcy until sequestration is issued (Hopkins v. Clarke (1864), 5 B. & S. 753, Ex. Ch.). A sequestration may be issued notwithstanding that the incumbent has obtained an order of discharge under the bankruptcy (Re Meredith, Ex parte Chick (1879), 11 Ch. D. 731, C. A.); and, if issued previously, it will continue in force while any debts remain to be satisfied, in spite of the incumbent's obtaining an order of discharge (Re Lawrence, [1896] P. 244; Lawrence v. Adams (1896), 75 L. T. 410). But the official receiver can agree to a relaxation or withdrawal of the sequestration in consideration of payment of a sufficient sum of money, and a registrar in bankruptcy can authorise him to accept the sum (Re Barratt (1906), 22 T. L. R. 427).

(b) See Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 83, 86—87; Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 9.

(c) Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 52 (2), (4).

SWOT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

as the case may require, with such stipend in each case, specified in the licence, as the bishop thinks fit. Every such stipend is to be paid by the sequestrator out of money coming to his hands under the sequestration, so long as it continues, in priority to all sums payable by virtue of the bankruptcy or the judgment under which the sequestration has issued, but not in priority of liabilities in respect of charges on the benefice (d). Where any such sequestration continues for more than six months, the bishop, if it appears to him that scandal or inconvenience is likely to arise from the incumbent continuing to perform the services of the church while the sequestration continues, may, after the expiration of such six months, inhibit the incumbent from performing any services of the church within the diocese during the continuance of the sequestration, and he may at any time withdraw such inhibition (e).

(iii.) Sequestration in Proceedings in Ecclesiastical Courts.

1222. Where a spoliation is brought in an ecclesiastical court to try which of two clerks presented to a benefice is the rightful incumbent, a sequestration will be granted, on the application of either of them, to the churchwardens, or some other sequestrator, to collect the profits and keep them for the use of the clerk who shall be found to have the right to them (f). On a spoliation

1223. Where an incumbent is punished with suspension ab officio et beneficio, he loses, during its continuance, the right to the profits of the benefice (g). The court will direct sequestration of them, and the sequestered profits belong to the bishop, who must, either in his own person, or by a substitute paid out of the profits, discharge the duties of the benefice during the suspension (h). The sequestration is enforceable by the bishop and not by the court which has directed it (i). On suspension generally.

1224. Sequestration will not ordinarily be issued by an ecclesiastical court, until a monition to show cause against it has been decreed and the incumbent has failed to appear or to show cause (j). After monition.

1225. Where the incumbent of a benefice is found guilty in proceedings against him for unlawful trading or dealing and is sentenced to be suspended, the bishop, during such suspension, is to sequester the profits of the benefice, and may in his discretion order the application of the sequestered profits, after deducting the necessary expenses of serving the cure, either in whole or in such proportions as he thinks fit, first in payment of the proceedings and the sequestration, and next, if the benefice is also under sequestration On suspension for unlawful trading or dealing.

(d) Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), ss. 1—4. See pp. 615, 616, ante.

(e) Ibid., s. 5.

(f) Ayl. Par. 495; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 308. A spoliation is a suit brought in a spiritual court for the fruits of a church or for the church itself (Termes de la Ley, pp. 511, 512).

(g) Morris v. Ogden (1869), L. R. 4 C. P. 687.

(h) Re Thakeham Sequestration Moneys (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 494.

(i) Trouser v. Hurst (1847), 1 Rob. Eccl. 697.

(j) Abbitt v. Gurney (1843), 2 Notes of Cases, 75.

SMOT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

at the suit of a creditor, towards the satisfaction of such sequestration, and after satisfaction thereof towards the augmentation or improvement of the benefice or the house of residence or any of the lands or buildings thereof; or may order the profits or any portion thereof to be paid to Queen Anne's Bounty for the purposes of the Bounty (k).

(iv.) Sequestration in Cases of Default by Incumbent.

Under mortgage for providing house of residence, or on neglect to insure against fire.

1226. If, after a mortgage has been effected under the Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (l), or any of the Acts extending the provisions of that Act, or under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (m), for the purpose of providing a house of residence for a benefice, the incumbent makes default in payment of either the principal or the interest on the mortgage, or if, after a mortgage for that purpose has been effected under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (m), he neglects to insure and keep insured the house and other glebe buildings against fire, the bishop may sequester the profits of the benefice until such payment or insurance is made (n).

For non-residence of the incumbent.

1227. Where it appears to a bishop that the incumbent of a benefice in the diocese, not having a licence to reside elsewhere than in the house of residence of the benefice, nor having a legal cause of exemption from residence (o), does not sufficiently, within the meaning of the Pluralities Act, 1838 (p), reside on the benefice, his residence thereon may be enforced by monition, and, if necessary, by an order, instead of, or after, proceedings for the statutory penalties for non-residence (q); and in case of non-compliance with the order the bishop may sequester the profits of the benefice until it is complied with, or sufficient reasons for non-compliance are stated and proved (r). The incumbent may, within one month after service

(k) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 31, 54.

(l) 17 Geo. 3, c. 53. See pp. 755 et seq., post.

(m) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.

(n) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), s. 6; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 67; Bluck v. Hodgson (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 167.

(o) Inability to reside in consequence of being imprisoned for a crime has been held to be not a legal cause of exemption from residence (Ex parte Bartlett (1848), 12 Q. B. 488; Re Bartlett (1848), 3 Exch. 28, 33)

(p) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. See pp. 610 et seq., ante.

(q) See p. 510, ante.

(r) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 54. The bishop may in his discretion order the application of the sequestered profits, after deducting the necessary expenses of serving the cure, either in whole or in such proportions as he thinks fit, first in payment of the penalties proceeded for, if any, and of the expenses of the monition and sequestration, and next, if the benefice is also under sequestration at the suit of a creditor, towards the satisfaction of such sequestration, and, after satisfaction thereof, towards the augmentation or improvement of the benefice or the house of residence or any of the lands or buildings thereof; or may order the profits or any portion thereof to be paid to Queen Anne's Bounty for the purposes of the Bounty. The bishop may also, within six months after the order for sequestration or after any money has been actually levied by the sequestration, remit to the incumbent any proportion of the sequestered profits, or cause the same or any part thereof, whether remaining in the hands of the sequestrator or paid to Queen Anne's Bounty, to be paid to the incumbent (ibid.).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

upon him of the order for sequestration, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who must make such order as may seem just in relation to the sequestration, or to the sequestered profits, for the return thereof or of any part thereof to the incumbent, or to a sequestrator appointed at the suit of a creditor or otherwise; but the sequestration is to be in force during the appeal (s). If, in obedience to a monition or order requiring him to reside, whether a sequestration has issued or not, the incumbent begins to reside, but within twelve months after commencing residence wilfully absents himself from the benefice for one month, either at one time or in the aggregate, the bishop may, without any further monition or order, sequestrate and apply the profits of the benefice in the same manner as in the case of a sequestration to enforce an original order for residence; and may proceed in like manner in similar circumstances as often as occasion requires. And in this case, too, the incumbent may, within one month after service upon him of the order for sequestration, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who is to make such order as may seem just in relation to the sequestration or to the sequestered profits; but the sequestration is to be in force during the appeal (t). If a benefice continues for a whole year (u) under sequestration for the incumbent's disobedience to a monition or order requiring his residence thereon, or if the incumbent incurs two such sequestrations in the space of two years and is not relieved with respect to either of such sequestrations on appeal, the benefice becomes void (a).

1228. In certain cases of non-residence of the incumbent the bishop may enforce delivery of possession of the house of residence to a curate by sequestration, and may enforce payment of the taxes, rates, and assessments in respect thereof by monition and sequestration (b).

For possession of house of residence and payment of taxes.

1229. If an incumbent wilfully neglects or refuses to pay the stipend of a curate, or the arrears thereof, the bishop may enforce payment by monition and sequestration of the profits of the benefice (c).

For paying curate's
stipend.

1230. In proceedings by monition and sequestration for non-residence and for non-payment of curates, the monition issues under the hand and seal of the bishop and is served personally on the incumbent (d), and immediately after service is returned into the

Mode of proceedings by monition and sequestration.

(s) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 54, 110—113. The monition need not be preceded by a citation, but the instrument of sequestration ought to recite the delinquency in respect of which it issues and the bishop's adjudication thereon; and sequestration must not issue without giving the incumbent an opportunity of showing cause why it should not issue (Bonaker v. Evans (1860), 16 Q. B. 162, Ex. Ch.; Bartlett v. Kirwood (1853), 2 E. & B. 771).

(t) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 56, 110—113.

(u) This means twelve months, and not a calendar year from 1st January to 31st December (Bartlett v. Kirwood (1853), 2 E. & B. 771, 784, 786).

(a) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 58, 110—113; Re Bartlett (1848), 3 Exch. 28, 33, 34.

(b) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 93, 94.

(c) Ibid., ss. 83, 90, 110—113; Sharpe v. Bluck (1847), 10 Q. B. 280.

(d) Service is to be effected by showing the original to the incumbent and

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

consistorial court of the bishop, and is there filed with an affidavit of the time and manner of the service. The incumbent may thereupon show cause by affidavit or otherwise why a sequestration should not issue according to the terms of the monition; and if he does not show sufficient cause to the contrary within the time assigned by the monition, the sequestration issues under the seal of the consistorial court of the bishop and is served and returned into the registry of the court in the same manner as is required with respect to the monition (e). Where a monition has been served on an incumbent requiring him to reside on his benefice, no sequestration is to issue until an order, requiring him to proceed and reside upon his benefice within thirty days, has been served upon him in the same manner as is required with respect to the monition (f).

For payment to Queen Anne's Bounty.

Where a new incumbent on entering upon a benefice, or an incumbent on a building insufficiently insured being destroyed or damaged by fire, does not, within the time specified in the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (g), pay to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty the money payable under that Act for the repair of dilapidations or reinstatement of the building, the Governors are to give notice to the bishop, and the bishop may raise the amount thereof by sequestration of the profits of the benefice (h).

(v.) During Vacancy.

Sequestration
on avoidance of benefice usually issued to churchwardens.

1231. On a benefice becoming void, sequestration is issued, usually to the churchwardens, to receive the profits, and pay thereout the cost of serving the cure during the vacancy (i), and to account for the net balance to the succeeding incumbent (j), who can maintain an action against the sequestrators for this balance (k). If the profits received by the sequestrators during the vacancy are not sufficient to pay the assigned stipend or stipends, the deficiency is to be paid by the succeeding incumbent out of the profits of the benefice; and the bishop may, if necessary, enforce such payment by monition and sequestration of these profits (l).

leaving a true copy with him, or, in case he cannot be found, by leaving a true copy at his usual or last known place of residence and by affixing another copy upon the church door of the parish in which such place of residence is situate, and by leaving another copy with the officiating minister or one of the churchwardens of that parish, and by affixing another copy on the door of the church of the incumbent's benefice (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 112). Where the incumbent has no other usual or last known place of residence, service by leaving a copy at the house of residence of his benefice will be sufficient (Green v. Cobden (1836), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 627).

(e) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 112.

(f) Ibid., s. 113.

(g) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 43.

(h) Ibid., ss. 43, 57. See p. 772, post.

(i) See pp. 635, 636, 644, post.

(j) Ayl. Par. 495, 496; Gib. Cod. 749; stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, ss. 1—3; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 100.

(k) Jones v. Barrett (1724), Bunb. 192; Russell v. Lay (1897), 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 582.

(l) Stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, s. 8; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 101.

(vi.) *Rights of Parties during Sequestration.*SECT. 8.
Beneficed Clergy.

1232. The issue of a warrant of sequestration puts the bishop in possession of the benefice and the profits thereof, except the house of residence (m).

Possession of
bishop,
Position of
sequestrator.

1233. The sequestrator is a bailiff or agent to the bishop, and gives security for duly accounting for the money received by him. His office does not pass to his executors, administrators or assigns (n). He is bound to provide out of the profits of the benefice for the repairs of the chancel, if the benefice is a rectory, and of the house of residence and glebe buildings, and for their reinstatement in case of fire, as well as for the performance of divine service; in fact, for all such outgoings as are inseparable from the benefice. But under the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (o), he will not be allowed any expenditure on the repair of glebe buildings beyond the amount estimated as sufficient by the diocesan surveyor (p). And where the incumbent dies during the sequestration, and the buildings are inspected under that Act during the vacancy, and an order is made under s. 34 stating the repairs and the cost thereof for which the executors or administrators of the deceased incumbent are liable, the sequestrator is not liable for this cost, and is not entitled to deduct it out of the profits of the benefice in his hands (q). A sequestrator who has been appointed merely to secure payment to curates is not a necessary party to a suit to recover arrears of an annuity charged on the benefice (r).

Proceedings
by sequestrator for recovery of profits.

A sequestrator may bring an action, levy a distress, and take any other proceeding in his own name as sequestrator of the benefice for recovering any profits of the benefice, or dues or fees, or rent issuing out of land of the benefice, payable to the incumbent, either against the incumbent himself, or against third parties to the same extent as the incumbent might have done if the benefice had not been under sequestration; but in the case of a sequestration issued at the instance of a creditor, he is not bound to commence any such proceeding until security to his satisfaction is given by the creditor for indemnifying him and the bishop or other ordinary, or the court by whom he was appointed, from all costs, charges, and expenses in connection with the proceeding (s).

1234. The payment or render to a sequestrator, with or without suit, by the party liable thereto of any profits of the benefice, or dues or fees or rent issuing out of land of the benefice, payable to the

Profits to be received by sequestrator.

(m) Pack v. Turpley (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 468.

(n) Harding v. Hall (1842), 10 M. & W. 42, 50, 52; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 308; Sequestration Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 67), s. 2; Noble v. Roast, [1904] P. 34, 38, 39.

(o) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 43.

(p) Hubbard v. Beckford (1798), 1 Hag. Con. 307; Whinsfield v. Watkins (1812), 2 Phillim. 1; Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), ss. 12—21, 45, 46, 48, 57; Kimber v. Paravicini (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 222.

(q) Jones v. Dangerfield (1875), 1 Ch. D. 438.

(r) Stannus v. Robinson (1837), 2 Jo. Ex. Ir. 498.

(s) Sequestration Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 67), s. 1. The expense of the security is to be deducted or allowed out of any money received by the creditor by virtue of the proceeding (ibid.).

SECT. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

incumbent, effectually discharges the party from all liability to the incumbent in respect thereof (t). A sequestrator is entitled to receive, as part of the profits of a benefice, the income of a fund bequeathed in augmentation of the benefice (u). But a sequestration does not extend to rent previously accrued or to arrears of tithes (x).

Priority of sequestra-
tions.

1235. A sequestration issued under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (a), has priority over all other sequestrations, except a sequestration under the Clerical Residences Repair Act, 1776 (b), which has been previously issued (c).

Appointment of curates during sequestration.

1236. Where a benefice is under sequestration, except for the purpose of providing a house of residence (d), the bishop is empowered, and, if the incumbent does not perform the duties of the benefice, is required, to appoint and license one or two more curates thereto, with stipends payable by the sequestrator out of the profits of the benefice and not exceeding in the case of any one curate the highest rate of stipend allowed by the Pluralities Act, 1838 (e), nor exceeding, where more than one curate is appointed, £100 a year to each; but not more than one curate is to be appointed to a sequestered benefice where there is not more than one church and the population does not exceed 2,000 (f).

Service of
cure by
incumbent.

1237. The sequestration of a benefice does not of itself interfere with the service of the cure by the incumbent or with his duty to reside on the benefice (g). But if the sequestration remains in force for more than six months, and scandal or inconvenience appears likely to arise from the incumbent continuing to perform the services of the church, the bishop may, as stated above, inhibit him (h).

Right of presentation during sequestration.

1238. While a benefice is under sequestration the incumbent is incapable of presenting or nominating to a vacant benefice of which he is patron in right of the sequestered benefice; and the right of so presenting or nominating is to be exercised by the bishop of the diocese in which the vacant benefice is situate (i). But the incumbent of a benefice under sequestration is not precluded from appointing the parish clerk (k).

Position of
incumbent.

1239. While a benefice is under sequestration, the incumbent cannot accept or be instituted or licensed to any other benefice or preferment, the holding of which would avoid or vacate the sequestered benefice, unless with the written consent of the bishop of the (t) Sequestration Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 67), s. 2.

(u) Re Parker's Charity (1863), 32 Beav. 654.

Waitt v. Bishop (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 507.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.

17 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 6.

Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 110.

) See p. 622, ante.

(e) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 85, 86.

(f) Ibid., s. 99.

(g) Doe d. Rogers v. Mears (1774), 1 Cowp. 129; Lawrence v. Edwards, [1891]

h. 144, per ORRIS, J., at pp. 149, 150.

(h) See p. 621, ante.

(i) Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), s. 6.

(k) Lawrence v. Edwards, supra. See p. 475, ante.

diocese in which the sequestered diocese is situate and of the sequestrator (l).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

SUB-SECT. 9.—Avoidance of Benefices.

(i.) Modes and Effect of Avoidance.

1240. A benefice is avoided by death, resignation, exchange, cession, and deprivation (m). Modes of avoidance.

The interest of the incumbent in the profits and emoluments and property of the benefice ceases on the day when he vacates it; and his successor, when admitted, becomes entitled to them as from that day, so far as they have not been applied in providing for the service of the cure of souls and for the costs of sequestration during the vacancy (n). Effect.

(a) Death.

1241. Where an incumbent farms glebe land of the benefice himself and dies after sowing the land and before harvest, the crops sown form, as emblems, part of his personal estate (o). Emblems

If the incumbent occupies at his death a house of residence annexed to the benefice and leaves a widow, she may continue in occupation of the house for a further period of not more than two calendar months (p). Continuance of widow in house of residence.

(b) Resignation.

1242. Resignation of a benefice must be made to the bishop, either in person or by a deed attested by two witnesses. The presence of a notary public at the execution of the deed and his attestation of it are usual but not essential (q). Except on an exchange, the resignation must be unconditional, but it may be made to take effect at a future fixed date (r). It may be made at the request of the bishop to avoid scandal or legal proceedings; and the bishop may agree to postpone the declaration of the vacancy until a future fixed date, in order to enable the incumbent to receive the tithe rent-charge accruing before that date or for any other reason (s). The bishop is not obliged to accept the resignation (t), and his acceptance of it need not be in any particular form or in Mode of resignation.

(l) Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), s. 7.

(m) Co. Litt. 120 a. The cognisance of the avoidance of benefices belongs to the ecclesiastical courts (stat. (1351) 25 Edw. 3, stat. 6, c. 8).

(n) Stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11; Farchild v. Gayre (1605), Cro. Jac. 63; Hilton v. Cove (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 538. For sequestration during the vacancy, see p. 624, ante; and for the performance of the duties, see p. 635, post.

(o) Stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, s. 4.

(p) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 36.

(q) Gib. Cod. 822, 823; Ayl. Par. 467—469; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 540—544; Reichel v. Oxford (Bishop) (1887), 35 Ch. D. 48, 74, 75, C. A., affirmed in (1889), 14 App. Cas. 259, 265, H. L. For forms of deeds of resignation, see S. C. 35 Ch. D. 48, at pp. 50, 51; Encyclopædia of Forms, Vol. III., p. 602.

(r) Reichel v. Oxford (Bishop) (1889), 14 App. Cas. 259, 268, 269.

(s) Ibid.

(t) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 543; Rockingham (Marchioness) v. Griffith (1755), 7 Bac. Abr. 246, tit. Simony (D); Fletcher v. Sondes (Lord) (1829), 3 Bing. 501, H. L.; per HULLOCK, B., at p. 544.

SECT. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Illegal agreements to resign.

Penalty for corrupt resignation.

Resignation
bonds.

writing. It is implied if the resignation was made at his request (a). The resignation takes effect upon its acceptance by the bishop, and cannot afterwards be revoked (b).

1243. The declaration against simony to be taken before admission to a benefice (c) contains a statement that the clerk has not entered, nor, to the best of his knowledge and belief, has any person entered, into any agreement or engagement otherwise than as allowed by ss. 1 and 2 of the Clergy Resignation Bonds Act, 1828 (d), that he should at any time resign the benefice (e). Any agreement, on the transfer of a right of patronage of a benefice, for the resignation of a benefice in favour of any person is invalid (f).

If an incumbent corruptly resigns his benefice or corruptly takes, directly or indirectly, any pension, sum of money, or other benefit for resigning it, both the giver and taker are liable to the penalty of losing double the amount or value (g).

1244. A bond or contract for the resignation of a benefice or ecclesiastical preferment entered into by a clerk either before or after his admission thereto is void (h), and if entered into in connection with his presentation or appointment thereto is simoniacal (i), unless it comes within the terms of the Clergy Resignation Bonds Act, 1828 (k). By that Act an engagement in writing entered into by a clerk before his presentation or appointment to a benefice or preferment in private patronage (l) for his resignation thereof, expressly to the intent that any one specified person whosoever, or one of two specified persons both being within the degrees of relationship to the patron or one of the patrons permitted by the Act, shall be presented or appointed thereto, is valid and may be enforced (m), provided that the instrument containing the engagement is deposited within two months in the registry of the diocese or peculiar jurisdiction in or to which the benefice or preferment is situate or subject (n). Where two persons are specified in the

(a) Heyes v. Exeter College, Oxford (1806), 12 Ves. 336; Reichel v. Oxford (Bishop) (1887), 35 Ch. D. 48, 69, O. A., affirmed (1889) 14 App. Cas. 259, H. L.

(b) Fane's Case (1607), Cro. Jac. 197; Reichel v. Oxford (Bishop) (1889), 14 App. Cas. 259. Whether a resignation can be revoked before it is actually accepted by the bishop is not clear (ibid., per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 271). After the resignation of a benefice has been held effectual in an action to which the patron was a party, the resigning incumbent cannot set up the invalidity of the resignation as against a successor instituted and inducted on the patron's presentation (Magrath v. Reichel (1887), 57 L. T. 850).

(c) See p. 594, ante.

(d) 9 Geo. 4, c. 94.

(e) Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (4), sched.

(f) Ibid., s. 1 (3) (e).

(g) Stat. (1589) 31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 7. A bond given to an incumbent to secure to him an annuity equal to the income of his benefice as an inducement to him to resign is void (Young v. Jones (1782), 3 Doug. (K. B.) 97).

(h) Fletcher v. Soudes (Lord) (1826), 3 Bing. 501, H. L.

(i) Ibid.

(k) 9 Geo. 4, c. 94.

(l) Ibid., s. 6.

(m) Ibid., ss. 1, 3.

(n) Ibid., s. 4. The instrument is to be open to inspection, and an office copy certified by the registrar is legal evidence thereof; and the registrar may engagement, each must be either by blood or marriage an uncle, son, grandson, brother, nephew or grandnephew of the patron or one of the patrons beneficially interested in the patronage (o) or of a married woman whose husband in her right is patron or one of the patrons (p). A resignation made in pursuance of any such engagement must refer to the engagement and state the name of the person for whose benefit it is made, and the ordinary cannot refuse the resignation except for good and sufficient cause. But it is only valid for the purpose of allowing that person to be presented or appointed to the benefice or preferment, and is void unless he is presented or appointed thereto within six months after notice of the resignation has been given to the patron or patrons (q).

Sect. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Resignation with a pension on account of infirmity.

1245. An incumbent who has held a benefice for seven years at least continuously may represent to the bishop in the prescribed form that he desires to resign the benefice under the provisions of the Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (r), on the ground of being incapacitated by permanent mental or bodily infirmity from the due performance of his duties; and the bishop may thereupon, if he sees fit, issue a commission to inquire and report upon the truth of the alleged ground and the expediency of the resignation. The commissioners are to be five in number, and are to be (1) either the archdeacon or rural dean; (2) an incumbent of the diocese nominated by the retiring incumbent; (3) an incumbent of the diocese nominated by the bishop; (4) a justice of the peace of the county who is a member of the Church of England, nominated by the presiding chairman at the last preceding quarter sessions for the county or division, or, if there is no such person, by the lord lieutenant of the county; and (5) a person nominated by the patron (s). A month's previous notice of the intended commission and of the required nomination of commissioners is to be sent to the incumbent, patron, chairman of quarter sessions or lord lieutenant, as the case may be, and churchwardens of the benefice; and if the patron, or the chairman of quarter sessions or lord lieutenant, neglects to nominate within the month, the bishop may nominate a commissioner instead (t). On receiving notice of the issue of the commission the commissioners are to cause seven days' notice of their first meeting to be affixed to the usual place of public notices in the church of the benefice. Three are to be a quorum, and they may, if they see fit, examine on oath persons desirous of giving evidence before them. In their return to the commission they are to certify all material charge the fees fixed by the Act for the deposit of the instrument and for searches and office copies (ibid.).

(o) 9 Geo. 4, c. 94, s. 2. Where the patronage is held in trust or in the right of another, the relationship must be with a cestui que trust or a person in whose right it is held (ibid.).

(p) Ibid., s. 2.

(q) Ibid., s. 5.

(r) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 44.

(s) Ibid., ss. 5, 6. If the patronage is alternate, the nomination is to be by the patrons jointly, or, in case of difference, by the patron entitled to the next presentation (ibid., s. 6).

(t) Ibid., s. 7.

SECT. 2.
Beneficed
Clergy.

matters, with their opinion as to the expediency or otherwise of the proposed resignation; and if at least three of them deem it expedient, they are to specify the amount of pension which in their opinion ought to be allowed out of the revenues of the benefice to the retiring incumbent (a). In the case of an incumbent who is found a lunatic by inquisition the committee of his estate may in his name and on his behalf exercise the right of resignation and of doing any act in connection therewith given to an incumbent by the Act (b).

Limit of pension.

1246. No benefice is at any time to be subject to the payment of more than one pension (c), and the pension must not exceed one third part of the annual value of the benefice (d), nor be an amount which will not leave sufficient income to secure the due performance of the services of the church (e).

Declaration
of pension.

1247. If the return certifies the resignation to be expedient and the patron consents to it in writing, or does not within one month in writing refuse his consent (f), or if after the patron has refused his consent the archbishop decides that the resignation should be accepted, the bishop is to sign in triplicate a declaration in the prescribed form, stating the amount of pension allowed (g), the day of the avoidance of the incumbency and commencement of the pension, not being less than one month after the date of the declaration, and the times of payment, not being oftener than twice a year. The declaration is to be sent to the patron and the retiring incumbent and to be filed in the diocesan registry, and is the title deed of the retired clerk to the pension, which is thenceforth a charge upon the revenues of the benefice and is recoverable as a debt at law or in equity from the incumbent of the benefice for the

(a) Clergy Resignation Bonds Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 94), s. 8. The Act makes provision for the expenses of the inquiry and for the fixing of the costs of the bishop's secretary and the diocesan registrar in carrying into execution the provisions of the Act (ibid., ss. 16, 17).

(b) Ibid., s. 18.

(c) Ibid., s. 9.

(d) Ibid., s. 8. The annual value is the net annual value, exclusive of the house of residence, after deducting all rates, taxes, and charges assessed upon and payable out of the benefice, including in such charges the salary of any curate who is compulsorily employed and any annual payments in respect of a mortgage created for securing the repayment of a loan by annual instalments, payments in the nature of a rentcharge, or otherwise, in a limited number of years, and having at the time of the sitting of the commission more than two years to run (Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871, Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 23), ss. 3, 5).

(e) Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871, Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 23), s. 5, which provides that the sufficiency of the income is to be calculated according to the scale of stipends set forth in the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 85.

(f) If the patron refuses his consent, the return is to be laid before the archbishop, who is within one month to give a final decision whether the resignation should or should not be accepted (Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), s. 9).

(g) The amount of pension fixed by the declaration cannot be impeached on the ground of its exceeding the statutory limit (Maning v. Hardy (1904), 20 T. L. R. 776).

time being by the retired clerk, his executors, administrators, or assigns, but is not transferable at law or in equity (h).

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Subsequent alteration or cesser of pension.

1248. In the case of pensions awarded after 8th August, 1887, where any part of the income of the benefice is derived from tithe rentcharge or glebe lands, the amount of each half-yearly payment varies and is from time to time regulated in accordance with the averages published under the provisions of the Tithe Act, 1836 (i), in the month of January next preceding the date of such half-yearly payment; but in other cases the amount of the pension, after being fixed by the declaration of the bishop, is not liable to alteration owing to the subsequent diminution of the income of the benefice from any cause (k). The right to the pension, however, ceases upon the enrolment by the retired clerk of a deed of relinquishment under the Clerical Disabilities Act, 1870 (l), or on the day on which he is admitted to another benefice. And if he undertakes clerical duties elsewhere than within the benefice from which he retired, the bishop, on the fact being brought to his notice by the incumbent of the benefice, is to make inquiries, and, upon being satisfied that the retired clerk has been undertaking such duties and receiving remuneration for them, may determine whether the pension shall cease or be diminished in any and what proportion and for any and what period. But the retired clerk has an appeal to the archbishop, who may confirm, annul, or vary the bishop's decision as he thinks proper (m).

1249. A pensioned clerk remains amenable to ecclesiastical discipline and liable to suspension from or forfeiture of pension for offences which would have involved suspension from or forfeiture of the benefice if he had remained incumbent; and proceedings under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (n), may be taken against him for an offence in the same manner as if he had remained incumbent and as if he had committed the offence within the benefice. If he resides elsewhere than in England or Wales or the Channel Islands, he may be required, by a letter or summons signed by the bishop and countersigned by the archbishop in token of consent thereto, and posted to his last known place of residence, to attend in England and appear to any proceedings instituted against him in respect of such offence, and to appoint a place in England for the service upon him of all subsequent process and documents. And if he neglects to appear to the proceedings and appoint such place for

Status and liability of pensioned
clerk.

(h) Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), ss. 9, 10. The incumbent cannot set off against the pension a debt due to him from the retired clerk (Gathercole v. Smith (1881), 17 Ch. D. 1, C. A.; Gathercole v. Smith (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 626, C. A.), except in respect of dilapidations (see p. 768, post).

(i) 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71.

(k) Robinson v. Dand (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 341; Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871, Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 23), s. 4.

(l) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 91.

(m) Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), s. 15. The cessation or any alteration of the pension is to be indorsed on the declaration filed in the registry; and a copy of the indorsement, signed by the bishop, is to be delivered on application to the incumbent and patron of the benefice (ibid.).

(n) 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86.

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

Rights of succeeding
 incumbent.

service within three months after the date of the letter or summons, the proceedings may be prosecuted in his absence (o).

1250. On the filing of the bishop's declaration the benefice will become ipso facto vacant on the day fixed in the declaration, and the patron may present a clerk thereto as if it had been vacated by the death of the incumbent. The clerk who is instituted, collated, or licensed to the benefice becomes entitled to the revenues thereof, subject to the payment of the pension to the retired clerk (p), and to the house of residence belonging to the benefice, free from any claim by the retired clerk; and he has the same right and claim in respect of dilapidations as if the benefice had been vacated by the death of the incumbent (q). And if a pensioned clerk has on retirement become liable to the payment to the succeeding incumbent of any sum on account of dilapidations under the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (r), and has not paid such sum in the manner prescribed by that Act, the incumbent for the time being of the benefice may withhold the amounts due from time to time in respect of the pension and apply the same in discharge of the sum due for dilapidations until the whole debt has been discharged. But the amount so withheld in any one year is not to exceed one-half of the total amount of the pension for such year without the consent of the bishop (s).

Emblements. An incumbent who resigns his benefice is not entitled to emblements (t).

(c) Exchange.

Consents to exchange.

1251. Two incumbents may exchange benefices with the consents of the patrons and of the bishops of the dioceses in which the benefices are situate. These consents are necessary because the exchange is effected by each incumbent resigning his own benefice and obtaining a presentation or collation to the other (a), and the bishop is not bound to accept the incumbent's resignation of the one, nor can the patron of the other be compelled to present or, in the case of the bishop being the patron, to collate such incumbent to it (b).

Mode of
 exchange.

1252. Having obtained the licence of the bishops to treat of the exchange and secured the concurrence of the patrons, the incumbents by an instrument in writing agree to exchange their benefices, and then each of them resigns his benefice into the hands of the bishop for the purpose of the exchange and not otherwise (c). The

-
- (o) Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), s. 13.
 (p) Ibid., s. 12.
 (q) Ibid., s. 14.
 (r) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 43.
 (s) Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871, Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 23), s. 6.
 (t) Bulwer v. Bulwer (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 470.
 (a) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 28.
 (b) Degge, Parson's Counsellor, Part I., ch. 14, pp. 202—204. Where patrons have alternate turns of presentation to a benefice, a presentation on an exchange of benefice is reckoned as a turn (Keen v. Denny, [1894] 3 Ch. 169).
 (c) Gib. Cod. 821; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 28; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., pp. 242, 243. The resignation may be made expressly exchange only takes effect if and when both incumbents are instituted and inducted, or licensed, to the benefices taken in exchange. If one is instituted and inducted and the other is instituted but dies or refuses to complete the exchange before induction, the whole proceedings are void, and the survivor, or each of them, if both are living, will be restored to his former benefice (d).

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

1253. If an incumbent corruptly exchanges his benefice or corruptly takes, directly or indirectly, any pension, sum of money, or other benefit for resigning it, both the giver and taker are liable to the penalty of losing double the amount or value (e). This does not preclude incumbents from stipulating on an exchange, with the assent of their patrons and diocesan bishops, that the dilapidations of the one benefice shall be set off against the dilapidations of the other (f). In the absence of such a stipulation dilapidations are recoverable on either side (g).

Penalty for
corrupt
exchange.

(d) Cession.

1254. A benefice becomes void by cession if the incumbent is created a diocesan bishop or takes another benefice or ecclesiastical dignity or preferment which he cannot lawfully hold therewith (h).

Vacation by cession.

The incumbent of a benefice may not hold another benefice with it except under the circumstances in which the holding together of two benefices is authorised by the law as to pluralities (i); and an incumbent holding two benefices, or holding with his benefice a preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church, may not hold in addition another benefice or a preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church (j), except that an archdeacon may hold with his archdeaconry either two benefices, of which one is within the diocese containing his archdeaconry, under the circumstances in which such joint holding is permitted by law (k), or one preferment conditional on the exchange being carried out, and may contain a proviso that it shall otherwise be void (Gib. Cod. 821). This condition, even if not actually inserted, is annexed by law to a resignation expressed to be made for the purpose of an exchange (Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 28). But it is otherwise if no such purpose is expressed and the resignation is in terms absolute (Rumsey v. Nicholl (1877), 2 O. P. D. 294, O. A.).

(d) Oromwel's (Lord) Case (1601), 2 Co. Rep. 69 a, 74 b; Colt v. Coventry and Lichfield (Bishop) (1617), Hob. 140, 152, Ex. Ch.; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 243.

(e) Stat. (1589) 31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 8.

(f) Goldham v. Edwards (1856), 18 C. B. 389, Ex. Ch.; Wright v. Davies (1876), 1 C. P. D. 638, C. A.

(g) Downes v. Craig (1841), 9 M. & W. 166.

(h) Termes de la Ley, p. 103; Edes v. Oxford (Bishop) (1667), Vaugh. 18; Burder v. Mavor (1848), 1 Rob. Eccl. 614. The practice of a bishop or the incumbent of another benefice holding a benefice in commendam (Termes de la Ley, p. 136; Godolphin, Repertorium Canonicum, pp. 230 et seq.; Le Case de Commenda (1611), Dav. Ir. 68; Colt v. Coventry and Lichfield (Bishop), supra, was abolished by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 18.

(i) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1835 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 64), s. 14.

(j) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 2, 124.

(k) See p. 604, ante.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

in a cathedral or collegiate church of that diocese and one benefice within that diocese (l); and except also that the holding of a preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church may carry with it the holding of any office in the same cathedral or collegiate church the duties of which are statutable or accustomably performed by the person holding such preferment (m). Moreover, these restrictions do not extend to an honorary canonry or to a prebend, dignity, or office unendowed or endowed to an amount not exceeding £20 a year (n). And a suffragan bishop may hold a benefice or, under the circumstances permitted by law (o), two benefices (p).

Avoidance of benefice.

1255. If the incumbent of a benefice or benefices is admitted to a benefice or to preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church which he cannot lawfully hold therewith, his previous benefice or benefices will become ipso facto void, as if he had died or resigned the same (q), except that if an incumbent holding two benefices or holding with his benefice a preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church accepts in addition a benefice or a preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church, and before he is admitted thereto declares in writing to the bishop of the diocese in which each benefice and preferment previously held by him is situate, which preferment and benefice or which two benefices, being by law capable of being held together, he proposes to hold together, then only such previous preferment and benefice as he does not declare his intention of continuing to hold or such benefice as is not by law tenable with the newly accepted benefice will become ipso facto void, as if he had died or resigned the same. A duplicate of the declaration is to be transmitted by the clerk making it to the registry of the diocese to be there filed (r).

Special provision as to deans.

1256. The dean of a cathedral or collegiate church can only hold with his deanery a benefice situate within the city or town of the cathedral or collegiate church and having an annual income not exceeding £500; and an incumbent who is appointed a dean and whose benefice does not fulfil these conditions ipso facto vacates the benefice at the expiration of six months from the time of his

(l) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 2, 124; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 10.

(m) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 2, 124. The head of a college or hall in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and the warden of the University of Durham, if he holds a benefice, cannot also hold another benefice or a preferment in a cathedral or collegiate church; and, if he holds such preferment, cannot also hold a benefice; but this restriction does not extend to any benefice or preferment which is permanently attached to or forms part of the endowment of his office (Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 6).

(n) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 3; Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 11.

(o) See p. 604, ante.

(p) Stat. (1334) 26 Hen. 8, c. 14, s. 7.

(q) Apperley v. Hereford (Bishop) (1833), 9 Bing. 681; Batham v. Gregg (1834), 10 Bing. 352; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 11, 124; Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 7. An incumbent of a parish who presents himself to a district church thereby vacates the benefice of the parish (Storis v. Winchester (Bishop) (1850), 9 O. B. 62).

(r) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 11, 124.

admission as dean (s). But this does not apply to a benefice expressly annexed to a deanery by statute (t).

SECT. 8.
Beneficed
Clergy.

(e) Deprivation.

1257. A benefice becomes vacant by the deprivation of the incumbent either (1) where there has been simony in connection with his presentation, institution, collation, or admission to the benefice, whether he was party to it or not (u); or (2) where the incumbent is otherwise by law disqualified from holding it; or (3) where he has been guilty of some other offence or conduct owing to which he is deprived of it by law or by a definitive sentence (a).

Avoidance of benefice by deprivation
of the
incumbent.

If a person who is not in priest's orders is instituted or admitted to a benefice, he cannot retain possession of it (b).

Not in priest's
orders.

If the ordination of a clerk has been corruptly procured, and within seven years after such corrupt ordination he is admitted into a benefice, it becomes void upon his admission (c).

Corrupt
ordination.

If a clerk who is admitted to a benefice wilfully fails to comply with the law as to publicly reading the Thirty-nine Articles and making the declaration of assent in the church of the benefice in the presence of the congregation (d), he absolutely forfeits the benefice (e).

Neglect to read Thirty-nine Articles.

(ii.) Cure of Souls and Income of Benefice during Vacancy.

1258. When a benefice becomes vacant a sequestration is issued (f), and the duties are performed by a curate or curates appointed by the bishop (g) or, in default of any appointment by him, employed for the purpose by the sequestrators (h). But any stipendiary curate who is licensed to the parish continues in office and his stipend is paid out of the income of the benefice during the vacancy (i), and this may sometimes render the employment of any other clerk unnecessary. The bishop may assign to every curate appointed to perform the duties a stipend during the vacancy at the rate of not above £200 per annum, but so that the rate of the stipend or aggregate of the stipends does not exceed the net annual income of the benefice (k). The sequestrators

Performance
of duties during vacancy.

(a) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 19.

(b) R. v. Champneys (1871), L. R. 6 O. P. 384.

(c) See pp. 593, 594, ante.

(d) See pp. 535 et seq., ante.

(e) 17 Vin. Abr. 338; Costard v. Winder (1600), Oro. Eliz. 775; Slader v. Smalbrooke (1664), 1 Lev. 138, where a layman had obtained a benefice under forged letters of orders. But his spiritual as well as temporal acts, while he holds the benefice, are valid (Costard v. Winder, supra; Hawke v. Corri (1820), 2 Hag. Con. 280, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 288).

(f) Stat. (1589) 31 Eliz. c. 6, s. 9.

(g) See p. 603, ante.

(h) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 7; see note (r), p. 603, ante.

(i) Gib. Cod. 749.

(j) Gib. Cod. 750; Pluralities Act, 1836 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 100; and p. 644, post.

(k) Dakins v. Seaman (1842), 9 M. & W. 777.

(l) See p. 644, post.

(m) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 10.

SECT. 3.
Beneficed
Clergy.

pay the amount out of the profits of the benefice which come to their hands, and if these are not sufficient, the incoming incumbent is liable to pay the balance out of the profits received by him (l). If, on the other hand, the sequestrators have a balance of profits after paying for the services and for the costs of the sequestration, the new incumbent is entitled to it (m).

SECT. 4.—Unbeneficed Clergy.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Position and Ministrations.

Classes, and condition of ministration.

1259. The unbeneficed clergy consist of clerks who are unattached and have no definite parochial or other ministerial charge, curates or ministers in charge of a parish or district, assistant curates, lecturers and preachers, ministers of chapels of ease, ministers of proprietary chapels, and chaplains. Whether they are unattached or have an appointed sphere of duty, they require, as a rule, in order to enable them to officiate anywhere, the licence or permission of the bishop of the diocese (n) and the consent of the incumbent of the parish (o).

Restrictions and exceptions.

An unbeneficed clerk who holds a curacy or lectureship, or who is licensed or otherwise allowed to perform the duties of any ecclesiastical office, enjoys the same exemption from tolls when in (l) Stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, ss. 3, 8; Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 100, 101. An unlicensed clerk not appointed by the bishop, but employed by the sequestrators, can recover a reasonable sum for his services from the new incumbent (Dakins v Seuman (1842), 9 M. & W. 777).

(m) Stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, ss. 1—3; Halton v. Cove (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 538; Betham v. Gregg (1834), 10 Bing. 852; Russell v. Lay (1897), 66 L. J. (q. b.) 582.

(n) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 48—50; Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 15; Finch v. Harris (1701), 12 Mod. Rep. 641; Trebec v. Keith (1742), 2 Atk. 498; Smith v. Lovegrove (1755), 2 Lee, 162; Barton v. Wells (1789), 1 Hag. Con. 21; Carr v. Marsh (1814), 2 Phillim. 198, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 206; Hodgson v. Dillon (1840), 2 Curt. 388, 392; Barnes v. Shore (1846), 1 Rob. Eccl. 382; Freeland v. Neale (1848), ibid., 643; Kitson v. Drury (1865), 11 Jur. (n. s.) 272. No stamp duty is payable in respect of a licence to preach or exercise any other spiritual function, where no emolument or salary is attached to the functions and the licence is not to hold the office of lecturer, reader, or chaplain (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I.). The bishop need not assign any cause for refusing his licence or permission, even though the clerk is beneficed or licensed in another diocese (Down' (Bishop) v. Miller (1861), 11 L. Ch. R., Appendix, pp. i., ix.). Except in the case of stipendiary curates (as to whom, see pp. 638 et seq., post), the licence is revocable at the discretion of the bishop (Hodgson v. Dillon, supra; Re Singyanki (1864), 12 W. R. 825; Sedgwick v. Manchester (Bishop) (1869), 38 L. J. (Eccl.) 30). Where an incumbent or churchwardens engage the ministrations of an unattached clerk, they are bound to ascertain that he is duly licensed (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 50). But a clergyman authorised to officiate elsewhere and not actually inhibited from officiating in the diocese, may give assistance in ministrations on exceptional occasions without obtaining the permission of the bishop (Gates v. Chambers (1824), 2 Add. 177, 191; Dakins v. Seaman (1842), 9 M. & W. 777, per PARKE, B., at p. 780).

(o) Carr v. Marsh, supra; Farnworth v. Chester (Bishop) (1826), 4 B. & C. 555, 568—570; Hodgson v. Dillon (1840), 2 Curt. 388, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at pp. 392, 393; Molyneux v. Bagshaw (1863), 9 Jur. (n. s.) 553, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 554; Jones v. Jelf (1863), 8 L. T. 399, 401; Richards v. Fischer (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 255. For exceptions, see pp. 609, 614, 626, ante, and 640—643, post.

the performance of his duty he is going to or from a place of worship or is engaged in some parochial business, and is subject to the same restrictions as to farming and trading, as the incumbent of a benefice (p). SECT. 4
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Curates or Ministers in Charge.

1260. Curates or ministers-in-charge include clerks who are (a) in charge of an ecclesiastical district not constituted a parish, or (b) in charge of a parish either (1) during a vacancy in the benefice, or (2) during a sequestration of the benefice when the incumbent is inhibited (q), or (3) during the non-residence of the incumbent (r), or (4) where the incumbent has been negligent in the performance of his duties and is inhibited (s). In the last three cases the clerk is appointed as a stipendiary assistant curate and acquires his position of curate in charge by the permitted or enforced withdrawal of the incumbent. An assistant curate may be also temporarily in charge of a parish during a short absence of the incumbent, but in that case acts as the representative of the incumbent and under his directions (t). Curates or ministers in charge.

(i.) Ministers in Charge of a District.

1261. Where a Peel district is constituted under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (a), a minister is nominated to it under the provisions of that Act (b), and when licensed thereto by the bishop (c) performs within it, independently of the incumbent of any parish out of which the district has been taken, all such pastoral duties of a minister of the Church as are specified in his licence, and also, when a building is licensed in the district for divine worship, all such services and offices as are specified in that or any further licence granted by the bishop, and to that extent has the cure of souls in the district; but no burials are to be performed in the licensed building, nor is the licence to include the solemnisation of marriages (d). He is in all respects subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop and arch-deacon, and is styled the minister of the district, and is a body politic and corporate with perpetual succession and power notwithstanding the statutes of mortmain to hold grants of endowment and augmentation made to him under the provisions of the Act, and any real or personal estate which may be given to him according to law; and is only removable from his office of minister for the like reasons and in the same manner as a perpetual curate is removable (e). When the district becomes a new parish, the Ministers appointed to
Peel districts.

(p) See pp. 556 et seq., ante.

Pinder v. Barr (1854), 4 E. & B. 105, 115, 116.

See p. 640, post.

See p. 642, post.

Martyn v. Hind (1785), Rothery's Precedents, No. 176, p. 89; Parnell v. Roughton (1874), L. R. 6 P. C. 46, 53.

(a) 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37. See pp. 448, 449, ante.

Ibid., ss. 20, 21.

New Parishes Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 94), s. 10.

New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), ss. 11—14.

Ibid., s. 12.

SECT. 4. church becomes a perpetual curacy and a benefice, and the minister becomes perpetual curate thereof (f).
Unbeneficed Clergy.

(ii.) Ministers in Charge of a Parish.

Powers of minister in charge.

1262. A curate who by reason of a vacancy in the benefice or of the absence of the incumbent (g) is the minister in charge of a parish has, while so in charge, the rights and duties of the incumbent with reference to the services in the church and the cure of souls of the parish (h). He has power to make a presentment (i), and occupies the same position as the incumbent in the choice of churchwardens and sidesmen (k). If the benefice is vacant, he has the right which the incumbent possesses of appointing the parish clerk (l); but not if the benefice is under sequestration owing to the bankruptcy of the incumbent (m).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Assistant Curates.

(i.) Licence, Stipend, and Status generally.

Admission to office of assistant curate.

1263. A clerk is admitted to the office of assistant curate in a benefice by the licence of the bishop on the nomination, except where there is a clear custom or a statutory enactment to the contrary, of the incumbent (n). Before he is licensed, the bishop must be satisfied by examination as to his personal fitness for the cure to which he is nominated; and if he comes from another diocese he must produce a testimonial from the bishop or ordinary of the place from which he comes as to his honesty, ability, and conformity to the law of the Church (o). Before obtaining a licence to a stipendiary curacy the clerk must present to the bishop a declaration, signed by himself and by the incumbent of the benefice

(f) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), ss. 15, 16.

(g) The mere fact of a benefice being under sequestration does not render the curate who is appointed to serve the cure (see p. 643, post) the minister in charge (Lawrence v. Edwards, [1891] 1 Ch. 144). But he is in charge if the incumbent is suspended (Pinder v. Barr (1854), 4 E. & B. 105).

(h) Pinder v. Barr, supra. But if there is an incumbent, who is not inhibited by the bishop or restrained by statute from interfering with the discharge of the duties of the benefice, the curate represents the incumbent and is subject to any lawful directions which the incumbent may give as to the discharge of those duties (ibid., at pp. 115, 116).

(i) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 113; Grove v. Elliot (1670), 2 Vent. 41.

(k) Hubbard v. Penrice (1746), 2 Stra. 1246.

(l) Pinder v. Barr, supra.

(m) Lawrence v. Edwards, supra.

(n) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 48; Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 16; Johnson, Clergyman's Vade Mecum, Vol. I., pp. 94 et seq.; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 209; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 61; R. v. Oxford (Bishop) (1806), 7 East, 345; Arnold v. Bath and Wells (Bishop) (1829), 5 Bing. 316, 325. The fee for the licence is 10s. (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 82). The licence is exempt from stamp duty (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I.). A curate is frequently engaged on trial in the first instance with the mere permission of the bishop without a licence; see note (i), p. 644, post.

(o) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 48; Gib. Ood. 896; Exeter (Bishop) v. Marshall (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 17, 54. The bishop's refusal of the licence, after inquiry upon grounds which appear to him sufficient, cannot be questioned to which he is to be licensed, to the effect that the incumbent bond fide undertakes to pay to him a specified annual sum as a stipend for his services as curate, and that he bond fide intends to receive the whole of it without any deduction or abatement in respect of rent or consideration for the use of the glebe house, or on any other account (p). On being licensed he must take the oath of canonical obedience to the bishop (q), and if he has not done so on ordination on the same day, must make and subscribe in the presence of the bishop by whom he is licensed, or the commissary of such bishop, the declaration of assent contained in the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (r), and must, on the first Lord's Day on which he officiates in the church or in one of the churches of the benefice to which he is licensed, make the same declaration at the time of divine service in the presence of the congregation (s).

SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

Every licence granted to a stipendiary curate, whether the incumbent is resident or non-resident, specifies the amount of the stipend to be paid to the curate (t). Any agreement made between him and the incumbent in fraud or derogation of the law as to curates' stipends, or whereby a curate undertakes or binds himself to take a stipend less than that which is assigned to him by his licence, is void; and, notwithstanding his acceptance of a less sum and any discharge given by him for it, he and his personal representatives remain entitled to the full amount specified in the licence; and on application to the bishop within twelve months after the curate has quitted the curacy or died, payment of the unpaid portion, together with full costs of recovering the same, is to be enforced by monition and sequestration of the profits of the benefice (u).

Stipend specified, agreement to take less void.

1264. The selling of a curacy is simony, and renders the incumbent liable to deprivation (a).

Sale of curacy.

1265. A difference between a curate and his incumbent as to his stipend, or the payment thereof, is to be summarily decided by the bishop without appeal; and in case of wilful neglect to pay the stipend or any arrears thereof, the bishop may enforce payment by monition and by sequestration of the profits of the benefice (b).

Decision on differences as to stipend.

(Johnson, Clergyman's Vade Mecum, Vol. I., p. 95; R. v. London (Bishop) (1743) cited 13 East, 420, n.; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1812), 15 East, 117; Down (Bishop) v. Müller (1861), 11 L. Ch. E., Appendix, pp. i., ix.; R. v. Liverpool (Bishop) (1904), 20 T. L. R. 485).

(p) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), ss. 3, 6, where the declaration is called the Stipendiary Curate's Declaration. Whether there is such an office as that of honorary assistant curate is doubtful (R. v. Liverpool (Bishop), supra).

(q) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 12.

(r) Ibid., s. 1. See p. 551, ante.

(s) Ibid., s. 8; Canon Ecclesiastical (1865). Wilful default in respect of making the declaration of assent renders the licence void (Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 8).

(t) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 83.

(u) Ibid., ss. 90, 112.

(a) St. David's (Bishop) v. Lucy (1899), Carth. 484.

(b) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 83, 112. A curate of a non-resident incumbent may be appointed sequestrator to recover payment of his own stipend (Daniel v. Morton (1850), 16 Q. B. 198). A curate cannot bring an

SECT. 4.

Unbeneficed
Clergy.

Appointment of curate
where incumbent is resident and duly performs the duties.

1266. Where the incumbent of a benefice is resident and duly performs the duties of the cure, the bishop cannot compel the appointment of a curate or assign to a curate a larger stipend than the incumbent is willing to pay (c), except where the benefice exceeds £500 in annual value, and either the population amounts to 8,000 or there is a second church or chapel with a hamlet or district containing 400 persons. In that case the bishop may require the incumbent to nominate a person to be licensed as curate to assist in performing the duties of the benefice and to be paid by the incumbent, and may, if such nomination is not made within three months, appoint and license a curate with a stipend not exceeding £150; but an appeal from the requisition or appointment lies within one month to the archbishop (d).

1267. Unless the incumbent is suspended or inhibited, a curate must act in accordance with his directions (e), and he is responsible for what is done by a curate under his directions or with his consent (f).

(ii.) During an Incumbent's Non-Residence or Neglect of Duty.

Appointment
of curate
where incumbent is non-resident.

1268. Where the incumbent of a benefice does not either actually reside thereon nine months in each year, or, with the written consent of the bishop, perform the duties thereof while resident on another benefice of which he is incumbent, or while having a legal exemption from residence, or a licence to reside out of the benefice or out of the usual house of residence thereof, the bishop may appoint one or more curates to the benefice if the incumbent either (1) absents himself from the benefice for a period or periods amounting together to more than three months in one calendar year (g), without having one or more curates licensed or approved by the bishop to perform the duties, or (2) for one month after the death, resignation, or removal of a curate neglects to notify the fact to the bishop, or (3) for four months after such death, resignation, or removal neglects to nominate to the bishop a proper curate (h). A curate actually employed by a non-resident incumbent may be licensed, although not expressly nominated to the bishop (i). The licence must specify whether the curate is required to reside within the benefice or not. If the incumbent does not reside or does not satisfy the bishop of his intention to reside during four months in the year, the curate must reside within the action against his incumbent for arrears of his salary in cases where the Act has placed the matter in the hands of the bishop (West v. Turpin (1837), 6 Ad. & Ell. 614), nor where the chancellor has ordered a writ of sequestration to issue, and has allowed the sequestrator's accounts, can the incumbent obtain an order from a civil court to reopen them (Burrow v. Tilson (1898), 14 T. L. R. 214). But where an incumbent contracts to provide a curate with board and lodging in addition to his salary, an action will lie for damages for breach of the contract (Frazer v. Denison (1888), 57 L. J. (Q. B.) 550).

(c) R. v. Peterborough (Bishop) (1824), 3 B. & C. 47, 50.

(e) Martyn v. Hind (1785), Rothery's Precedents, No. 178, p. 89.

(d) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), ss. 13, 15; and see note (w), p. 661, post.

(f) Farnell v. Boughton (1874), L. R. 6 P. C. 46, 53.

(g) Between 1st January and 31st December (Sharpe v. Bluck) (1847), 10 Q. B. 280.

(h) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 75.

(i) Ibid., s. 98.

benefice, if a convenient residence can be procured within it, and the licence must specify the place of residence. Under other circumstances the bishop may permit the curate to reside outside the benefice on grounds specified in the licence. But under all circumstances the curate must reside within three miles of the church or chapel of the benefice, except in cases of necessity approved by the bishop and specified in the licence (k).

SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

1269. If the population of the benefice exceeds 2,000, or there are two or more churches belonging thereto not less than a mile apart, the bishop may require the non-resident incumbent to nominate two or more persons to be licensed as curates, and may, if such nomination is not made within three months after the requisition, appoint and license two or more curates with stipends; but an appeal from such requisition or appointment lies within one month to the archbishop (l).

Two curates in certain cases.

1270. Where the incumbent is not resident for four months in each year, the bishop may require the curate to reside in the house of residence of the benefice, and may, during his service of the cure or the non-residence of the incumbent, assign to him the house with all or any part of the gardens and buildings belonging thereto, free of rent, and also not more than four acres of glebe land adjacent to the house at a rent to be fixed by the archdeacon or rural dean and a neighbouring incumbent; and the profits of the benefice may be sequestered to enforce delivery of possession of the assigned premises to the curate (m). If the bishop has assigned to the curate a stipend not less than the whole value of the benefice and has directed him to reside in the house of residence, he is liable, while serving the cure, to the same taxes and parochial rates and assessments as if he were the incumbent. In other cases where the curate is directed so to reside, the bishop may order the incumbent to pay to him all or any part of the amount of such taxes, rates, and assessments during the year ending at the Michaelmas day before the date of the order; and such payment may be enforced by monition and sequestration of the profits of the benefice (n). He must at any time give up possession of the house on six months' notice either from the incumbent with the written permission of the bishop or from the bishop himself; or, in case of the benefice becoming vacant, on six weeks' notice from the new incumbent, if given within six months after admission to the benefice (o).

Residence of curate in house of residence.

Where an incumbent is non-resident, the bishop is to appoint to the curate licensed to serve the benefice a stipend according to the prescribed scale (p).

Stipend of curate.

(k) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 75, 76.

(l) Ibid., s. 80; Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), ss. 3, 15.

(m) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 93.

(n) Ibid., s. 94.

(o) Ibid., s. 96. If he refuses to give up the house, he is liable to pay to the incumbent 40s. for every day of wrongful possession (ibid.).

(p) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 83; Daniel v. Morton (1850). 16 Q. B. 198. The yearly stipend is to be not less than £80 or the annual value

SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

Stipend when curate serving two benefices.

Appointment
of curate
when duties of benefice are inadequately performed.

Special circumstances.

1271. Where an incumbent of two benefices resides on one or other of them in different proportions for the full requisite period and employs a curate to serve interchangeably in the benefice from which he is absent during his residence on the other, the bishop may assign to the curate a reasonable stipend not exceeding the rate of stipend for the larger of the benefices nor less than the rate for the smaller. If the incumbent so residing employs one or more curates for the whole year on each of the benefices, the bishop may assign to each of them a stipend less than the prescribed rate (q).

1272. Where the duties of a benefice are duly reported to the bishop to be inadequately performed (r), he may require the incumbent, although resident and engaged in performing the duties, to nominate one or more curates with sufficient stipends to be licensed to perform or assist in performing the duties; and, if the incumbent does not within three months make such nomination, the bishop may appoint and license to the benefice one or more curates, and may assign to them stipends not exceeding by £70 the stipends allowed to curates in the case of a non-resident incumbent; but so that if the whole net income of the benefice does not exceed £300 a year, the stipend or aggregate of stipends must not exceed £150 (s).

1273. Where, however, an incumbent is non-resident or incapable of performing the duties of the benefice from age, sickness, or other unavoidable cause, and owing to these or other special circumstances hardship or inconvenience would arise if the full stipend were allowed to the curate, the bishop may assign to him a less stipend with the consent of the archbishop of the province, notified upon of the benefice if it does not amount to £80; nor less than £100 or the annual value if it does not amount to £100, where the population amounts to 300; nor less than £120, or the annual value if it does not amount to £120, where the population amounts to 500; nor less than £135 or the annual value if it does not amount to £135, where the population amounts to 750; nor less than £150 or the annual value if it does not amount to £150, where the population amounts to 1,000 (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 85). Where the annual value of the benefice exceeds £400, the bishop may assign to a resident curate serving no other cure a yearly stipend of £100, although the population does not amount to 300, and, if it amounts to 500, any larger yearly stipend not exceeding by more than £60 the respective amounts prescribed as above-mentioned (ibid., s. 86). Where the population exceeds 2,000, or the benefice has two or more churches not less than a mile apart, the bishop may require the incumbent to nominate two or more persons to be licensed as curates, and, in case of his not doing so within three months, may appoint and license two or more curates and assign to them yearly stipends not exceeding by £70 the respective stipends allowed as above mentioned; but so that the whole of the yearly stipends of the curates serving the benefice do not exceed altogether two-thirds of the net annual income of the benefice. The incumbent within one month after he is served with the requisition or with notice of the appointment of the curate may appeal to the archbishop of the province (ibid., s. 86; Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 9).

(q) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 88.

(r) See pp. 613, 614, ante.

(s) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 77; Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 8. An incumbent has a right to be heard by the bishop before he is required to appoint a curate on account of neglecting his duties (Capel v. Child (1832), 2 Cr. & J. 558).

the curate's licence, whereon it must also be stated that for special reasons the full stipend has not been assigned (c).

SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

1274. Where a stipend equal to the whole value of the benefice is assigned, it is to be subject to deduction in respect of all charges and outgoings legally affecting the value of the benefice and of any diminution of its value not owing to the wilful default or neglect of the incumbent (a).

1275. Where a stipend equal to the whole value of the benefice is assigned, the bishop, upon the application of the incumbent, may allow him to retain in each year so much of the annual value of the benefice, not exceeding one fourth part thereof, as has been actually expended during the year in the repair of the chancel and house of residence in respect of which he or his estate would be liable for dilapidations to his successor. And where the annual value of a benefice does not exceed £150, the bishop, upon the application of the incumbent, may allow him to deduct from the stipend assigned to a curate in each year any money actually expended in such repairs above the amount of the surplus of such value remaining after payment of the stipend; but so that the deduction shall not in any one year exceed one fourth part of the stipend (b).

Retention for repairs.

1276. Where in order to obtain the proper performance of ecclesiastical duties the bishop licenses an incumbent to serve as curate in an adjoining or other benefice, the stipend assigned to him may be less than the prescribed rate by a sum not exceeding £30. And where the bishop finds it necessary or expedient to license the same curate for two parishes, he may direct that the stipend for serving in each shall be less than the prescribed rate by a sum not exceeding £30 (c).

Licence to serve additional parish.

1277. Where an incumbent has been found a lunatic or a person of unsound mind, and the bishop assigns a stipend to a curate serving in the benefice, the committee of the incumbent's estate is to pay the stipend to the curate out of the profits of the benefice which come to his hands (d).

Incumbent a lunatic.

(iii.) In certain Cases of Sequestration.

1278. When a sequestration has issued under a judgment recovered against the incumbent of a benefice or under his bankruptcy, and remains in force for six months, the bishop may thereafter, so long as it remains in force, appoint and license for the due performance of the church of the benefice one or more curates or additional curates as the case may require, with such stipend as he thinks fit, specified in the licence and payable by the sequestrator out of money arising under the sequestration, and may at any time revoke any such appointment and licence (e).

Appointment
of curate
when benefice
sequestrated.

(c) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 87.

(a) Ibid., s. 91.

(b) Ibid., s. 92.

(c) Ibid., s. 89.

(d) Ibid., s. 79.

(e) Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 46), ss. 1—4. The yearly stipend

SECT. 4.

Unbeneficed
Clergy.Curate's stipend
during vacancy of benefice.(iv.) During Vacancy of Benefice.

1279. The bishop may assign to any or each curate appointed to perform the duties of a vacant benefice (f) a stipend not exceeding for each curate £200 a year for the period of the vacancy; but so that the stipend or aggregate of stipends does not exceed the net annual value of the benefice (g).

(v.) *Duration and Termination of Curacy.*By incumbent with bishop's permission.

1280. A stipendiary curate does not gain a settlement in a parish under the poor laws by officiating therein under the bishop's licence (h). After a vacancy in a benefice, the incoming incumbent, within six months after his admission thereto, can by six weeks' notice determine the curacy of any curate who has been serving the benefice; and in all other cases an incumbent, whether resident or non-resident, can, with the previous permission in writing of the bishop, determine the curacy of any curate by six months' notice; and, if the bishop refuses such permission to a resident incumbent or a non-resident incumbent who desires to reside on his benefice, he may within one month appeal to the archbishop of the province, who will confirm the refusal or grant the permission as may seem proper (i). But the bishop may at any time summarily revoke a curate's licence and remove him after having given him an opportunity of showing reason to the contrary, subject to the right of the curate to appeal against the revocation within one month to the archbishop of the province (k). On the other hand, a curate, at the expiration of three months after he has given notice of his intention so to do to the incumbent of the benefice of licence.

By revocation

on aggregate of the stipends is not to exceed in the whole two-thirds of the annual value of the benefice as defined by the Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), s. 11 (see note (d), p. 630, ante), nor £200 if the population does not exceed 500, or £300 if it exceeds 500 but not 1,000, or £500 if it exceeds 1,000 but not 3,000, or £600 if it exceeds 3,000 (Sequestration Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 45), s. 1). See also p. 620, ante.

(f) See p. 635, ante.

(g) Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1886 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 10.

(h) R. v. Over (Inhabitants) (1773), Burr. S. O. 746; R. v. Wantage (Inhabitants) (1801), 2 East, 65.

(i) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 95. The notice by the incumbent need not be in any particular form or be formally served, and, apparently, need not be in writing (Tanner v. Scrivener (1888), 13 P. D. 128). Where a curate is temporarily employed without a licence (see note (n), p. 638, ante), he is removable at pleasure (Martyn v. Hind (1776), Cowp. 437, per Lord MANSFIELD, C.J., at p. 440). The licence of a curate appointed to serve the church or chapel of a district chapelry is not affected by the avoidance of the church of the parish or district parish in which the chapelry is situate (Church Building Act, 1839 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 13; Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 11).

(k) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), ss. 98, 102, 111; Poole v. London (Bishop) (1859), 5 Jur. (N. S.) 522. The licence may be revoked for a felony without the curate having been convicted of it in a temporal court (Re Sinnanki (1864), 12 W. R. 825). The archbishop's decision is final (Poole v. London (Bishop) (1861), 14 Moo. P. O. C. 262). It ought to be given on the same ground as that on which the licence was revoked by the bishop (Re Sinnanki, supra), and before giving it the archbishop must hear the curate personally, or, if desired, by counsel (R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (1859), 1 E. & E. 545).

and the bishop, or sooner with the written consent of the bishop, may quit his curacy (l).

SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

(vi.) Record of Licences and Revocations.

1281. Copies of all licences and revocations of licences to stipendiary curates are to be entered in the diocesan registry, and copies thereof are to be transmitted to the churchwardens of the parish to which they relate, to be deposited in the parish chest (m).

To be entered in diocesan registry and deposited in parish chest.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Lecturers or Preachers.

1282. A lecturer or preacher is a person in holy orders, elected or otherwise appointed for the special purpose of delivering lectures or preaching sermons in the church or chapel of a parish. He must be licensed by the bishop or the archbishop of the province (n); but where there is a right to elect or appoint a lecturer or preacher, the bishop is bound to license him, if he is orthodox, an honest liver, and loyal (o). Unless there is an immemorial custom to the contrary, he cannot be elected or appointed without the consent of the incumbent (p).

Status.

1283. A clerk, before being licensed to a lectureship or preacher-ship, must, in the presence of the bishop or his commissary, make and subscribe the same declaration of assent and declaration against simony, and take the same oath of allegiance as is required of an incumbent before he is admitted to a benefice (q).

Requisites before licence.

1284. If a lecturer or preacher, who has a right to the office, is not permitted to exercise it, his remedy is by mandamus (r).

Mandamus.

1285. Where an endowment is provided for a lecture in a church during the afternoon of Sunday, the lecturer cannot prescribe the hour (s).

Cannot fix hour of lecture.

(l) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 97. If he quits earlier, he is liable to pay to the incumbent such sum not exceeding his stipend for six months as the bishop, in his discretion, specifies in writing; and the incumbent may deduct the sum from his stipend or recover it by action of debt (ibid.).

(n) Ibid., s. 102. The list is open to inspection on payment of a fee of 3s., and the incumbent of the parish must pay a like fee for the copy transmitted to the churchwardens (ibid.). If the revocation of a licence is annulled by the archbishop, the copies of the revocation are to be withdrawn from the registry and the parish chest (ibid.).

(n) Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 15; R. v. London (Bishop) (1811), 13 East, 419; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop) and London (Bishop) (1812), 15 East, 117. The stamp duty on the licence is 10s. (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I.).

(o) St. Bartholomew's (Churchwardens) Case (1700), 3 Salk. 87; R. v. London (Bishop) (1743), 1 Wils. 11, 15; 13 East, 420, n. The archbishop or bishop can refuse to license him on the ground of unfitness (R. v. London (Bishop) (1811), 13 East, 419; R. v. Canterbury (Archbishop), supra).

(p) R. v. London (Bishop) (1743), 1 Wils. 11; R. v. London (Bishop) (1786), 1 Term Rep. 331; R. v. Field (1791), 4 Term Rep. 125; R. v. Exeter (Bishop) (1802), 2 East, 462; Clinton v. Hatchard (1822), 1 Add. 96.

(q) Clerical Subscription Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 122), s. 5; Canon Ecclesiasticus (1865). See p. 601, ante.

(r) R. v. Barker (1762), 1 Wm. Bl. 352, per Lord MANSFIELD, C.J.

(s) R. v. Bathurst (1760), 1 Wm. Bl. 210, where the incumbent and the SECT. 4. 1286. Where under the Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (t), the Unbeneficed parish church, in which the lectures of an endowed lectureship have been customarily preached, is taken down or ceases to be a parish church, they are to be preached in the church which becomes the church of the parish; or the transfer of the lectures to other churches may be effected by schemes prepared by the bishop and approved by the Charity Commissioners and by the vestries of the parishes affected thereby, and assented to by the incumbents of such other churches (a).

Obligation to perform other duties.

1287. With the assent of the incumbent, the bishop may require a lecturer or preacher to perform other clerical or ministerial duties as assistant curate or otherwise within the benefice. If he neglects to perform such duties, the bishop may require him to appear, and, with the assistance of the chancellor and one or more of the archdeacons of the diocese, may summarily inquire into and adjudicate upon the facts, and, if necessary, suspend or remove him and declare the office vacant. But he has an appeal within fourteen days to the archbishop of the province. If there is no appeal, or, upon appeal, the sentence or declaration is affirmed, it is to be published in the church or chapel where the office has been exercised, and the office becomes thereupon vacant and the right of the lecturer or preacher thereto ceases; and a new election or appointment thereto is to take place as if he were dead (b).

SUB-SECT. 5. — Ministers of Chapels of Ease.

Chapels of ease.

1288. Chapels of ease (c) are served either by the incumbent or a stipendiary curate of the parish, or by a minister specially appointed thereto by the incumbent of the parish and removable by him, or appointed by some other person or persons in whom, in exceptional instances, the appointment is vested (d). In some cases, by a private Act of Parliament, a chapel of ease is made representative (e). The minister is then instituted and inducted by the bishop on the presentation of the patron (f). In all other cases he is licensed by the bishop to the chapel (g).

trustees of the endowment were held to be justified in fixing the lecture at 7 p.m.

(t) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142.

(a) Ibid., s. 26. The bishop has no power to license a lecturer without the consent of the incumbent of the church in which he is to officiate (ibid.).

(b) Lecturers and Parish Clerks Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 59), s. 1. The fact of a lecturer or preacher being required to perform other clerical or ministerial duties in a parish does not relieve an incumbent from any legal obligation which may rest upon him to employ a curate or other assistant (ibid., s. 4).

(c) See pp. 788, 789, post.

(d) Gib. Cod. 209, 210; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., pp. 56–61; Dixon v. Kershaw (1766), Amb. 528; R. v. Oxford (Bishop) (1806), 7 East, 600; R. v. Davie (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 374.

(e) R. v. Foley (1846), 2 O. R. 664.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 58. The incumbent of a parish has a right, and it is his duty, to nominate a minister to officiate in a consecrated building in the parish, and the bishop may be compelled by mandamus to license such minister (R. v. London (Bishop) (1838), 1 Will. Woll. & H. 161).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Ministers of Proprietary Chapels.

SECT. 4.

Unbeneficed Clergy.Proprietary chapels.

1289. The minister of a proprietary chapel (h) is appointed by the owner of the chapel or the persons having the right of appointment under the terms of any trust under which the chapel is held. He must be licensed by the bishop to perform service therein with the consent of the incumbent of the parish in which the chapel is situate (i), and the bishop can at any time revoke the licence (j). A succeeding incumbent may refuse consent to his officiating under a licence granted by the bishop with the consent of the previous incumbent (k).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Chaplains.

1290. A chaplain is a clerk who performs divine service in a chapel (l). Besides the ministers of chapels of ease (m) and proprietary chapels (n), who in a sense are chaplains, there are chaplains in England (o) of the army, the territorial force, the navy, cemeteries, asylums, gaols, workhouses, other institutions, and the Sovereign and other individuals.

Different kinds of chaplains.

1291. The duties of chaplains and officiating clergymen in the army are laid down in the "Instructions for the guidance of chaplains of the Church of England in their ministrations to the troops," and in the King's Regulations and Orders for the army (p). Under the directions of the general officer commanding in chief of the command in which they are located, they carry out the orders contained in the Army School Regulations as to the religious instruction of children (q).

Army chaplains.

The army chaplains are under the supervision of the Chaplain-General of the Forces (r).

1292. Where the precinct of an army camp, barrack, hospital, or arsenal is constituted an extra-parochial district by an Order in Council with the consent of the bishop of the diocese (s), the Secretary of State may from time to time appoint any army chaplain to be the chaplain of the district and perform the Army precincts.

(h) As to proprietary chapels, see pp. 789, 790, post.

(i) Moysey v. Hillecoat (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 30; Hodgson v. Dillon (1840), 2 Curt. 388; Richards v. Fincher (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 255.

(j) Sedgwick v. Manchester (Bishop) (1869), 38 L. J. (ECCLES.) 30.

(k) Richards v. Fincher, supra.

(l) Termes de la Ley, p. 110. The title is commonly used of one who depends upon the King or other man of quality for the instruction of him and his family, and the reading of prayers and preaching in his private house where there is a chapel for that purpose (ibid.). It is not generally used of the minister of a chapel of ease or other chapel in which public worship is conducted.

(m) See p. 646, ante.

• (n) See supra.

(o) For chaplains abroad, see pp. 497 et seq., ante.

(p) King's Regulations and Orders for the Army (1908), pars. 1320–1334. See also pars. 162, 1519, 1767.

(q) Ibid., par. 1332. See also title EDUCATION.

(r) Ibid., par. 1333; and see Clode, Military Forces of the Crown, Vol. II., pp. 371, 384.

(s) See p. 443, ante.

SECT. 4. functions of an army chaplain therein (t). If the district is by Order in Council declared to be during the pleasure of the Sovereign under the exclusive jurisdiction of an archbishop or bishop named in the Order, he exercises over an army chaplain appointed to officiate therein all the powers and authority which a bishop can by law exercise over any clerk holding preferment in his diocese, to the exclusion of all other ecclesiastical jurisdiction in respect of the district (a).

Unbeneficed
Clergy.

Where a building has been certified by the Secretary of State to the bishop of the diocese as used or intended to be used by the army as an unconsecrated chapel for the purpose of divine worship, the Secretary of State may from time to time appoint any army chaplain to perform all the functions of an army chaplain therein so long as the building is so used (b).

Territorial force
chaplains.

1293. There is a chaplains' department of the territorial force to which ministers of all denominations may be appointed as chaplains to the force, being attached for duty to a unit of a battalion or its equivalent (c). The president of the county association forwards recommendations to the general officer commanding in chief for submission to the Secretary of State for War, after first obtaining, in the case of Church of England chaplains, the concurrence of the chaplain-general in their nomination (d). Their ranks are similar to those in the army chaplains' department, and their duties are determined by the officer commanding the unit to which they are attached (e).

(t) Army Chaplains Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 83), ss. 2—7.

(a) Ibid., ss. 9, 10.

(b) Ibid., s. 8.

(c) Special Army Order of 14th January, 1909 (Army Order 30 of February, 1909). The appointment of each chaplain to a unit is contingent on whether the number of men belonging to his denomination amounts to at least 15 per cent. of the establishment of the unit; but the number of chaplains of any particular denomination appointed to a unit cannot exceed one for every 300 men of that denomination. If at any time the number of a denomination falls below the required strength, the officer commanding the unit is to report the fact with a view to the chaplain's appointment being cancelled. Additional appointments may be made to the staff of brigades or divisions, or in special cases at the discretion of the Army Council on the recommendation of the general officer commanding in chief (ibid., pars. 1, 2).

(d) Ibid., par. 1. The nomination is made by the bishop of the diocese (War Office Circular Memorandum No. 153 (Instructions relative to the Appointment of Chaplains to the Territorial Force), 25th March, 1909).

(e) Special Army Order of 14th January, 1909 (Army Order 30 of February, 1909), pars. 3—7. When called up for active service they are to receive the pay and allowances of chaplains to the forces. At other times their remuneration is that laid down in par. 419 of the Territorial Force Regulations (ibid.). By par. 419 of the Territorial Force Regulations the remuneration to officiating ministers appointed to perform divine service in camp on Sunday mornings and Good Friday is for each day on which service is performed £1 1s. where the number of their particular denomination is 100 and upwards, and 10s. 6d. where it is 25 and upwards but under 100, and nil if it is below 25. A chaplain cannot draw pay for more than one service on each Sunday in camp and is not entitled to any allowances, but is conveyed to camp by the county association which administers his unit (Special Army Order of 14th January, 1909 (Army Order 30 of February, 1909)).

1294. The qualifications of a clerk for appointment as a naval chaplain are that he must have been ordained deacon and priest in the Church of England, or the Church of Ireland, or the Episcopal Church of Scotland, is not above thirty-five years of age, and is unbeneficed. He must produce testimonials from the bishop of the diocese in which he was last licensed, and must have been examined and approved by the Chaplain of the Fleet, and must receive a special ecclesiastical licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury (f).

SMOT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

Naval
chaplains.

Clerks in priests' orders without restriction as to age can take temporary employment in the navy as acting-chaplains for temporary service (g).

Chaplains in the navy do not hold any naval rank, but retain when afloat the position to which their office would entitle them on shore (h).

The Chaplain of the Fleet is the head of the naval chaplains (i).

The duty of a naval chaplain is so to behave as to inspire the officers and the ship's company with reverence and respect towards him, to conduct the daily morning prayers and perform the duties of the Lord's day (k), to provide opportunities for receiving the Holy Communion regularly, and, when practicable, at least once a month, and to keep the books of devotion and the communion plate (l). He is to visit the sick (m), to conduct funerals (n), to arrange for prayer and consultation with men or boys who desire to meet him for the purpose (o), and to give religious instruction to young officers put under his care by the captain, and to all the boys in the ship, and to any men who voluntarily attend for the purpose (p); and is to supervise the naval schoolmaster and the ship's library and any ministrations of scripture readers (q). He is to be at all times treated with respect and regarded as a friend and adviser by all on board, and is not to be required to perform any executive duties (r). He is not to undertake duty in parishes on shore for which payment is received, but may assist in churches on shore occasionally without remuneration (s).

1295. Where a cemetery company are established under a special Act of Parliament which incorporated the provisions as to Chaplains of cemeteries.

(f) King's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions for the Government of His Majesty's Naval Service (1906), arts. 231, 272, 324. The pay of naval chaplains is regulated by arts. 656, 1390, 1470.

(g) Ibid., art. 272.

(h) Ibid., art. 217.

(i) Ibid.

(k) Ibid., arts. 645, 646. Divine service with a sermon is to be performed according to the liturgy of the Church every Sunday, unless otherwise ordered, or prevented by the ship's duties or the weather. Short prayers from the same liturgy are to be read every weekday after morning quarters or divisions (ibid., arts. 705, 706).

(l) Ibid., art. 647; Addenda (1908), art. 1713 a.

(m) Ibid., arts. 648, 709.

(n) Ibid., art. 649.

(o) Ibid., art. 650.

(p) Ibid., art. 651.

(q) Ibid., arts. 652—655.

(r) Ibid., art. 704.

(s) Ibid., art. 667.

SECT. 4. chaplains contained in the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (t), they from time to time appoint, with the approval of the bishop of the diocese, a clerk to officiate as chaplain in the consecrated part of their cemetery (a).

Unbeneficed
Clergy.

In certain cases a chaplain may be appointed to perform the burial service in the consecrated part of a burial ground provided by a local authority (b).

Chaplains of asylums.

1296. The visiting committee of every lunatic asylum are required from time to time to appoint as chaplain a clerk in priest's orders licensed by the bishop of the diocese, and to fix his salary (c). He, or his substitute approved by them, is to perform in the chapel of the asylum or some other convenient place belonging thereto, divine service on every Sunday, Christmas Day, and Good Friday, and also divine service and such other Church services as the visiting committee direct, at such times as they appoint (d). His licence is revocable by the bishop (e); but the visiting committee may dismiss him without the bishop's consent (f). They may grant to him, if he is incapacitated by confirmed illness, age, or infirmity, or has been chaplain for not less than fifteen years, and is not less than fifty years old, such superannuation allowance as they think fit, not exceeding two-thirds of the salary paid to him at the date of his superannuation, and, if they think fit, a further sum in respect of the value of lodgings, rations, and other allowances enjoyed by him (g).

Chaplains of gaols.

1297. A chaplain is appointed by the Home Secretary to every gaol, and an assistant chaplain is appointed by him to any gaol which is sufficiently large to require the appointment (h). Notice of every appointment is sent to the bishop of the diocese within one month after it has been made; and no chaplain or assistant chaplain can officiate in a gaol until he has obtained a licence for the purpose from the bishop, nor for longer than while the licence continues in force (i). But he may also be dismissed by the Home Secretary, and receives such salary as the Home Secretary directs (k). The same clerk may officiate as chaplain of two gaols within a convenient distance from each other, if they are together calculated to receive

(t) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 65, ss. 27—34.

(a) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 518, 519, 559, 560; and see ibid., p. 425, as to notice to the chaplain of a burial under the Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41).

(b) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 472, 473, 510.

(c) Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 276 (1) (a), (5).

(d) Ibid., s. 277 (2). See also title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND.

(e) Ibid., s. 277 (1).

(f) Ibid., s. 276 (3).

(g) Ibid., ss. 280—282. It is not essential, in order to entitle the chaplain to a superannuation allowance, that he should have resided in the asylum or given his whole time to the duties of the chaplaincy (R. v. Hereford County Council (1890), 63 L. T. 245).

(h) Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), ss. 10, 12, as amended by Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 5.

(i) Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), s. 13. See also title PRISONS.

(k) Ibid., s. 14, as amended by Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 6.

not more than one hundred prisoners (l). The chaplain of a gaol is a prison officer to whom a superannuation allowance or gratuity may be given on his retirement (m).

SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

1298. A chaplain of a workhouse is among the paid officers whom the Local Government Board may direct the overseers or guardians of a parish or union to appoint, with such qualifications as the Board think necessary. The Board may define and direct the execution of his duties and the mode of his appointment and dismissal, and his continuance in office, and the amount of his salary, and the time and mode of payment thereof (n). Before acting, he must obtain the licence or consent of the bishop (o), but can afterwards officiate in the workhouse without the consent and in spite of the prohibition of the incumbent (p). He can charge or mortgage his salary (q). The Board can remove him for unfitness without the consent of the bishop and without assigning any special grounds (r).

Chaplain of workhouse.

1299. The chapels and chaplains of the schools to which the Public Schools Act, 1868 (s), applies, and of any of the endowed schools subject to the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (t), are free from the jurisdiction and control of the incumbents of the parishes in which the chapels are situate (u). And when any college, school, hospital, asylum, or public or charitable institution has a chapel, whether consecrated or unconsecrated, the bishop of the diocese may license a clerk to serve the chapel and perform such offices and services of the Church therein (other than the solemnisation of marriage) as are specified in the licence (a). Where this is done,

Chaplains of schools and institutions.

(l) Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), s. 11.

(m) Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 36; Prison (Officers' Superannuation) Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 9); Prison Officers (Pensions) Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 9).

(n) Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), ss. 48, 109; Local Government Board Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 70); L. v. Braintree Union (Guardians) (1841), 1 Q. B. 130; General Consolidated Order, arts. 153—156, 171—175, 187, 190, 193, 195—198, 211 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. X., Poor, England, pp. 99—116). See also title POOR LAW.

(o) General Consolidated Order, art. 171 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. X., Poor, England, p. 102).

(p) Molyneux v. Bagehaw (1863), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 553; and as to where the workhouse has a chapel, see Private Chapels Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 66), ss. 1—3.

(q) Re Mirams, [1891] 1 Q. B. 594.

(r) Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 48; General Consolidated Order, art. 187 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, Vol. X., Poor, England, p. 104); Ex parte Molineux (1863), 7 L. T. 599.

(s) 31 & 32 Vict. c. 118. The Act applies to Eton, Winchester, Westminster, Charterhouse, Harrow, Rugby, and Shrewsbury (ibid., preamble, and s. 3). See title EDUCATION.

(t) 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56.

(u) Public Schools Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 118), s. 31; Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), s. 53.

(a) Private Chapels Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 66), s. 1. Under the Mission to Seamen, a society supported by voluntary contributions, chaplains in various ports in the United Kingdom and elsewhere are specially licensed by the bishops of the dioceses in which the ports are situate for spiritual ministrations among seamen at those ports, on board ships or in seamen's churches and institutes which have been provided by or in connection with the society. The licence, so

SECT. 4. the minister officiating in the chapel is, with respect to these offices and services, exempt from the control and interference of the incumbent of the parish or district in which the chapel is situate, and the offertory and alms collected at the chapel are at the disposal of the minister thereof, subject to the direction of the ordinary (b). The licence may at any time be revoked (c).

Royal and official chaplains and private chaplains.

1300. The Sovereign and peers of the realm, and certain other persons of position and dignity, have the right of appointing chaplains to serve in their own private chapels (d) and households (e). The Speaker of the House of Commons appoints a chaplain to read prayers each day when the House meets for business, and to attend him on state occasions (f).

The clerical staff of the Chapels Royal consists of a dean, sub-dean, clerk and deputy clerks of the closet, domestic chaplains, chaplains in ordinary and honorary chaplains, priests in ordinary, honorary priests and deputy priests.

A clerk serving as chaplain to the King or to a Queen Dowager or any of the King's children or brothers or sisters, or to an archbishop or bishop, or as chaplain of the House of Commons, or as clerk or deputy clerk of the King's closet, while actually attending and performing his duties, or serving as dean, sub-dean, priest or reader in any of the King's royal chapels at St. James' or Whitehall, or as a reader in the King's private chapels at Windsor or elsewhere, is not liable to any of the penalties or forfeitures imposed by the Pluralities Act, 1838 (g), for non-residence on a benefice, in respect of the time during which he is so in attendance or performing his duties or serving (h).

far as respects conducting divine service on shore in an English port, authorises the chaplain to officiate in a named chapel of the society, being an institution within the provisions of the Private Chapels Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 66) (The Missions to Seamen: Fifty-third Annual Report, 1909).

(b) Private Chapels Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 66), ss. 2, 3.

(c) Ibid., s. 1.

(d) As to these, see p. 789, post.

(e) Gib. Cod. 908, 909. The right exists in common law (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 71; Drury's Case (1601), 4 Co. Rep. 89 b, at p. 90 a; Acton's Case (1603), ibid., 117 a, at p. 118 a). Stat. (1529) 21 Hen. 8, c. 13, ss. 13—19, 22, 24, 25, and stat. (1541) 33 Hen. 8, c. 28, regulating the number of chaplains which archbishops, bishops, peers of different ranks, and certain commoners therein named were entitled to have, and the mode of their appointment and their power to hold benefices in plurality, were repealed by the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 1, and the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 125), s. 1, sched. A King's chaplain may be appointed by parol (Whetstone v. Higford (1595), Cro. Eliz. 424; but see contra, Brown v. Mugg (1700), 1 Salk. 161). Other private chaplains were by stat. 21 Hen. 8, c. 13 (1529), s. 22, required to be appointed under hand and seal (R. v. Savacre (1586), Godb. 41). As to the distinction between King's chaplains ordinary and extraordinary, see Brown v. Mugg, supra. A King's chaplain or priest in ordinary is privileged from arrest on civil process (Byrn v. Hibbin (1835), 1 Cr. M. & B. 821; Winter v. Dibdin (1844), 13 M. & W. 25; Harvey v. Dakins (1849), 3 Exch. 265; Swan v. Dakins, Ex parte Dakins (1855), 16 C. B. 77).

(f) May, Parliamentary Practice, 11th ed., p. 159.

(g) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.

(h) Ibid., s. 38.

* 1301. A private chaplain is only permitted to preach and administer the Communion in the chapel of the house in which he is chaplain (i). SECT. 4.
Unbeneficed
Clergy.

SECT. 5.—Ecclesiastical Offences (k).

SUB-SECT. 1.—Offences in respect of Doctrine.

1302. Offences in respect of doctrine are either heresy, avowing blasphemous and impious opinions contrary to the Christian religion, depraving the Book of Common Prayer, or maintaining doctrines repugnant to the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion. There are many points of doctrine which the Church has not decided and which are open to every member of the Church to decide for himself according to his own conscientious opinion (l). Offences as to doctrine.

1303. Heresy, in law, is only that which has, before 1559, been adjudged so to be by the authority of the canonical scriptures, or by any of the first four General Councils, or by any other General Council wherein the same was declared heresy by the express words of the canonical scriptures, or which, since 1559 may have been, or may be, determined to be heresy by Parliament with the assent of the clergy in convocation (m). Heresy.

1304. The offence of avowing blasphemous and impious opinions contrary to the doctrines and principles of the Christian religion on Blasphemy.

(i) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 71. The penalty for his preaching or administering the Communion elsewhere is suspension for the first offence and excommunication for the second (ibid.). In Kilmorey (Viscount) v. Corbett (1634), Rothery's Precedents, No. 35, p. 14, the Court of Delegates confirmed the consecration or dedication of a private chapel attached to Lord Kilmorey's house for the use of him and his successors and family for the celebration of divine worship, administration of the sacraments, solemnisation of marriages, and performance of all other divine and religious acts whatsoever, except the sepulture and interment of the dead; saving the rights of the church of the parish in which the house was situate and all emoluments belonging thereto. They declared that a chaplain to be approved and licensed by the bishop of the diocese must be maintained at Lord Kilmorey's expense for the performance of services in the chapel; that he must not solemnise any marriage without banns published in the parish church or licence from the ordinary, and must within one month certify to the rector of the parish, or his curate, or to the churchwardens, the names of all persons married and of all infants baptized by him. They further ordered that Lord Kilmorey and his successors dwelling in the house, and their families and the chaplain for the time being, should once every year at Easter or Pentecost receive the Sacrament of the Eucharist in the parish church in token of subjection to that church. See also p. 622, post.

(k) For other ecclesiastical offences and procedure in respect thereof, see pp. 520 et seq., ante; for brawling, see p. 663, post; for simoniacal offences, see p. 593, ante.

(l) Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop) (1850), Moore's Report, p. 464, P. C.

(m) 3 Co. Inst. 40; Gib. Cod. 351; 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 2; Burn. Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., pp. 304—307. Stat. (1559) 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 20, which contains this definition of heresy, was, among other obsolete enactments, repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863 (26 & 27 V. c. 125), with a saving of any principle or rule of law or equity affirmed, recognised, or derived by, in or from any enactment thereby repealed (ibid., s. 1). Where a clerk is accused of heresy, the articles of charge must distinctly state the obnoxious opinions and the exact terms in which he has uttered or published them (Williams v. Salisbury (Bishop) (1863), 2 Mo. P. C. C. (N. S.) 376, 423).

SECT. 8.
Ecclesiastical
Offences.

the part of a person who has been educated in or has at any time made profession of the Christian religion consists in law of asserting or maintaining that there are more gods than one or denying the Christian religion to be true or the Holy Scriptures to be of divine authority, by writing, printing, teaching or advised speaking (n).

Depraving
the Prayer Book.

1305. It is an offence to speak anything in derogation of, or by way of depraving or despising, the Book of Common Prayer or anything therein contained (o), and, in particular, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (p).

Contradicting
the Articles of Religion.

1306. No clerk is at liberty advisedly (q) to maintain or affirm any doctrine directly contrary or repugnant to any of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion (r).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Offences in respect of the Fabric or Ornaments of a Church or of Ritual.

Responsibility of
clergy.

1307. Any person in holy orders legally responsible for the due performance of divine service in a church (s), or of the burial service

(n) Stat. (1697) 9 Will. 3, c. 35, s. 1, as amended by stat. (1813) 53 Geo. 3, c. 160, s. 2. "Advised speaking" means deliberate speaking (Heath v. Burder (1862), 15 Moo. P. C. C. 1, at p. 80). Stat. (1697) 9 Will. 3, c. 35, does not limit or affect the common law offence of blasphemy or uttering a blasphemous libel; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 530 et seq.

(o) Stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 3; stat. (1559) 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 3; Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 20; Caudrey's Case (1591), 5 Co. Rep. (Of the King's Ecclesiastical Law), 1a; Sanders v. Heud (1843), 3 Curt. 565; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 27. Under this canon, which excludes from Communion common and notorious depravers of the Book of Common Prayer, the omission or even rejection of portions of the book does not constitute the offence of depraving it (Jenkins v. Cook (1876), 1 P. D. 80, 100, 101, P. C.).

(p) Stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1. See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 532.

(q) That is to say, deliberately (Heath v. Burder, supra).

(r) Stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 12, s. 2; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 5; Voysey v. Noble (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 357. The Articles must be construed in their literal and grammatical sense (Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop) (1850), Moore's Report, at pp. 462, 464, P. C.) If the interpretation of an article is doubtful, the ecclesiastical courts will not fix on one meaning of it and condemn all who interpret it differently (King's Proctor v. Stone (1808), 1 Hag. Con. 424, per Lord Stowell (then Sir W. Scott), at p. 429; Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop), supra, at pp. 463, 464). In order to constitute the offence it is not necessary to propound any intelligible heterodox doctrine. It is sufficient to propound doctrine directly contrary to that laid down in the Thirty-nine Articles (Heath v. Burder, supra, at pp. 82, 83, 88, 91); but any doubt as to whether the doctrine propounded is so contrary, will be construed in favour of the accused (Sheppard v. Bennett (second appeal) (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 371, 418). The Articles are not contravened by maintaining mere nonsense (Heath v. Burder, supra, at p. 30); and in charging the offence the portion of the Articles contravened, and the doctrine which is alleged to contravene it, must be specified (ibid., at p. 30; Williams v. Salisbury (Bishop) (1863), 2 Moo. P. C. C. (N. s.) 375, 423; Sheppard v. Bennett (first appeal) (1870), L. R. 4 P. C. 350, 362). But this was held unnecessary where the accused maintained all the doctrines of the Church of Rome (Hodgson v. Oakeley (1846), 1 Rob. Ecol. 322). It is immaterial whether the doctrine is preached or published in a book (Heath v. Burder, supra, at p. 79).

(s) Including any place of public worship in which divine service according to the Book of Common Prayer is by law or by the bishop's licence required to be conducted (Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 6).

in a burial ground (t), is amenable under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (a), or, in the alternative, under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (b), where (1) an alteration in or addition to the fabric, ornaments or furniture of the church has been made without lawful authority, or any decoration forbidden by law has been introduced into the church (c); or (2) he has used or permitted to be used in the church or burial ground an unlawful ornament of the minister of the church, or has neglected to use a prescribed ornament or vesture; or (3) he has failed to observe or cause to be observed the directions in the Book of Common Prayer as to the performance in the church or burial ground of the services, rites and ceremonies ordered by that book, or has made or permitted to be made an unlawful addition to, alteration of or omission from those services, rites and ceremonies (d).

SECT. 5.
Ecclesiastical Offences.

Unlawful
ornaments.

Unauthorised
services.

1308. Under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (e), proceedings must be commenced within two years after the commission of the offence, except where a conviction for the offence has been obtained in a court of common law, in which case they may be commenced within six months after the conviction, although the period of two years has elapsed (f). Under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (g), proceedings may be commenced in respect of an alteration or addition to the fabric of the church within five years after the completion thereof (h); but proceedings with respect to the use of an unlawful ornament of the minister of the church, or the neglect to use a prescribed ornament or vesture, or with respect to a matter connected with a service, or rite or ceremony, must be commenced within twelve months after the commission of the offence (i).

Time for proceedings.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Other Offences.

1309. It is an ecclesiastical offence for the incumbent of the parish or any other person, whether clerical or lay, to alter, add to,

Alterations.

(t) Including any churchyard or consecrated burial ground.

(a) 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. See pp. 526 et seq., ante.

(b) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85. See s. 18, and pp. 529 et seq., ante.

(c) For the general law as to faculties, and as to making unauthorised additions to or alterations in a church or churchyard, see pp. 540 et seq., ante, and pp. 667 et seq., post.

(d) Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), s. 8. A minister who does not use the prescribed form of prayer or of administering the sacrament when he ought so to do, or wilfully uses any other form, is also liable to be indicted and convicted thereof; and for a first offence is to be imprisoned for six months and forfeit one year's income of all his preferment; and for a second offence is to be imprisoned for a year and is deprived ipso facto of all his preferment, and for a third offence is to be similarly deprived and be imprisoned for life; or, if he is not beneficed, he is to be imprisoned for a year in case of a first offence and for life in case of a second offence (Act of Uniformity, 1559 (1 Eliz. c. 2), s. 2; Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 20; Flemming's Case (1584), 1 Leon. 295). See further as to ritual offences, pp. 529, 530, ante, and pp. 665 et seq., post.

(e) 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. See p. 526, ante.

(f) Ibid., s. 20.

(g) 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85. See p. 529, ante.

(h) Ibid., s. 8.

(i) Ibid., s. 8 (2), (3).

SECT. 8.
Ecclesiastical Offences.

Preventing entrance to church.

Offences in connection with clerical duties.

or take away, anything in, to, or from the fabric, fittings or ornaments of a church or a churchyard, without a faculty for the purpose (k).

1810. An incumbent who, by bolting and barring the doors of the church, prevents the churchwardens from entering it to keep it cleaned and in order, commits an ecclesiastical offence (l).

1811. The following are offences connected with the performance of a clerk's ecclesiastical duties (m):—Taking or demanding illegal or extortionate fees for performing any office of the Church (n); wittingly administering the Communion to a person who does not kneel (o); publishing banns of marriage, or solemnising marriage, in a parish between persons neither of whom is a parishioner (p); celebrating a marriage without banns or licence or registrar's certificate (q); lecturing or preaching in a place of public worship without having been approved or licensed by the archbishop of the province or the bishop of the diocese or, during a vacancy in the see, by the guardian of the spiritualities, under his seal (r); officiating in an unconsecrated building without a licence (s); officiating in a diocese against the inhibition or without the licence of the bishop (t); officiating in a parish without the consent of the incumbent (a); assuming to exercise the episcopal function of ordination (b), or keeping (k) Musgrave v. Russell (1777), Rothery's Precedents, No. 175, p. 87; Sieveling v. Kingsford (1866), 36 L. J. (ECCL.) 1; Vincent v. Eyton, [1897] P. 1. Unless the ecclesiastical courts are invoked to interfere with his discretion, the incumbent has the control over the erection of gravestones in the churchyard in ordinary cases and the inscriptions thereon (Hopper v. Davis (1754), 1 Loe, 640, 648; Keel v. Smith (1875), L. R. 4 A. & E. 398, per Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, at pp. 413, 414; S. C., reversed on appeal (1876), 1 P. D. 73, P. C.). But he may not disturb the graves; though he may level the mounds on the top of the graves, laying down the same turf after so doing (Bennett v. Bonker (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 25; (1830) 3 Hag. Ecc. 17, 51, 52).

(l) Bellars v. Grant (1741), Rothery's Precedents, No. 157, p. 77.

(m) As to ritual offences, see also pp. 529, 530, ante, and pp. 665 et seq., post.

(n) Burgoyne v. Free (1829), 2 Hag. Ecc. 456, 464—466, 493; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 145.

(o) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 27. The penalty for the offence is suspension (ibid.). See p. 691, post.

(p) Nicholson v. Squire (1809), 16 Ves. 259, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 261; Wynn v. Davies (1835), 1 Curt. 69; Tuckniss v. Alexander (1863), 32 L. J. (CH.) 794, per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., at p. 801.

(q) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 62, 63. The penalty is suspension for three years (ibid.; Lewys v. Cleter (1678), Rothery's Precedents, No. 67, p. 31). See also note (m), p. 693, and p. 703, post.

(r) Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 15 (repealed in part by the Clerical Subscription Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 122), s. 15, sched.). The offence is punishable by three months' imprisonment (Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 17).

(s) Wilcox v. White (1833), Rothery's Precedents, No. 192, p. 99; Kilson v. Drury (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 272. Except in the case of sickness, a clerk is not to preach or administer the Communion in a private house in which there is not a lawful chapel (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 71). The penalty for the first offence is suspension, and for the second, excommunication (ibid.).

(t) Marfatti v. Newcomb (1704), 2 Ld. Raym. 1205; Smith v. Lovegrove (1755), 2 Loe, 162; Barnes v. Shors (1846), 8 Q. B. 640; Nesbitt v. Wallace, [1901] P. 354.

(a) Richards v. Fincher (1873), L. R. 4 A. & E. 107; Wood v. Headingley-cum-Burley Burial Board, [1892] 1 Q. B. 713, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 729; Nesbitt v. Wallace, supra.

(b) St. Albans (Bishop) v. Fillingham, [1906] P. 163.

unauthorised fasts or practising unauthorised prophecies or exorcisms (c); wearing a graduate's hood when not entitled so to do (d).

A stipendiary curate who acts in defiance of the incumbent is guilty of an ecclesiastical offence (e).

1312. A clerk who holds ecclesiastical preferment is guilty of an ecclesiastical offence if he neglects duly to perform the duties attaching to that preferment (f) or commits a breach of the law as to residence in respect of it (g), or neglects to attend a visitation (h), or to keep in repair the chancel, house of residence, and other property maintainable by him by law (i).

Generally, all violations of Church order, and breaches of the canons and other laws ecclesiastical, and disobedience to the lawful commands of the bishop, are ecclesiastical offences, and punishable as such (k).

SECT. 3.
Ecclesiastical Offences.

Neglect of or refusal to perform duties.

Part V.—Public Worship and Church Ministrations.

SECT. 1.—Divine Service in General.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Duties of the Clergy.

1313. All ministers in all places of public worship are to use in the morning and evening prayers, in the celebration and

Performance of divine
service.

(c) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 72.

(d) Ibid., 58. The penalty for the offence is suspension (ibid.).

(e) Martyn v. Hind (1785), Rothery's Precedents, No. 178, p. 89.

(f) Pullen v. Clewer (1684), 1 Hag. Ecc. 354, Appendix B, p. 2; Davies v. Pope (1797), Rothery's Precedents, No. 82, p. 92. In Jones v. Jones (1671), Rothery's Precedents, No. 63, p. 29, an incumbent was suspended for refusing to obey a condition to read divine service in the old accustomed and most convenient place or desk. The following particular instances of neglect of duty are punishable as distinct ecclesiastical offences:—Refusing or delaying to baptize the child of a parishioner duly brought to be baptized on a Sunday or holy day (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 68), for which the penalty is suspension for three months (ibid.): Refusing or delaying to go and baptize an infant lying in weakness, and in danger of death (ibid., 69), for which the penalty, if the child dies unbaptized, is suspension for three months and until acknowledgment of the fault and promise not to repeat it (ibid.): Refusing to bury a baptized parishioner who is not excommunicate for a serious crime (ibid., 68; Kemp v. Wickes (1809), 3 Phillim. 264; Escott v. Martin (1842), 4 Moo. P. O. C. 104; Titchmarsh v. Chapman (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 370; Cooper v. Dodd (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 270), for which the penalty is suspension for three months (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 68): Refusing to administer the Communion to a confirmed parishioner who is not disqualified from receiving it (Jenkins v. Cook (1876), 1 P. D. 80, P. C.; Swayne v. Benson (1889), 6 T. L. R. 7; Banister v. Thompson, [1908] P. 362; S. C., on rule for prohibition, sub nom. R. v. Doblin, Ex parte Thompson (1909), 26 T. L. R. 150, O. A.): Refusing to marry persons entitled to be married (Argar v. Holdsworth (1758), 2 Lee, 515).

(g) Mugg v. Ley (1708), Rothery's Precedents, No. 124, p. 60; Pawlet v. Heud (1728), 2 Lee, Appendix, 566; Bluck v. Rackham (1846), 5 Moo. P. C. C. 305, at pp. 312, 313; and see pp. 610 et seq., ante, and p. 661, post.

(h) Clewer v. Pullen (1684), Rothery's Precedents, No. 79, p. 36.

(i) King v. Aylesbury (1635), Rothery's Precedents, No. 40, p. 16; Mugg v. Ley, supra.

(k) Ayl. Par. 208; Godolphin, Repertorium Canonicum, pp. 306, 307; Phillips v. Bury (1694), 1 Ld. Raym. 5, 9; Rugg v. Winchester (Bishop) (1868), L. R. 2 P. C. 223, 235, 236; Combe v. De La Bere (1881), 6 P. D. 157, 163—166, 169, 170.

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

administration of both sacraments (a), and in all other public and common prayer, the form set forth in the Book of Common Prayer (b); and the morning and evening prayers therein contained are to be openly and solemnly read on every Lord's Day and on all other days and occasions therein appointed, and at the times therein prescribed, by all ministers or curates in every place of public worship of the Church of England (c). But the shortened order for morning prayer or for evening prayer specified in the schedule to the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (d), may on any day, except Sunday, Christmas Day, Ash Wednesday, Good Friday, and Ascension Day, be used, in a cathedral in addition to, and in a church in lieu of, the order for morning prayer or for evening prayer prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer (e); and the tables of lessons and directions as to lessons and proper psalms contained in Part II. of the schedule to the Prayer Book (Tables of Lessons) Act, 1871 (f), were by that Act substituted for the lessons

(a) Flemming's Case (1584), 1 Leon. 295.

(b) The full title of the book is "The Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church according to the use of the Church of England, together with the Psalter or Psalms of David pointed as they are to be sung or said in churches and the Form or Manner of making, ordaining and consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons" (Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 1).

(c) Act of Uniformity, 1559 (1 Eliz. c. 2), s. 2; Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 1; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 14. All the clergy are to say daily the morning and evening prayer, either privately or openly, unless prevented by sickness or some other urgent cause; and the minister of every parish church or chapel, if at home and not reasonably hindered from so doing, is to say the same in such church or chapel, and cause a bell to be tolled for a convenient time before he begins, that the people may come to hear God's Word and to pray with him (Book of Common Prayer (Rubric after the Preface Concerning the Service of the Church)). But where under a trust deed the income of a fund was payable to the incumbent of a church for conducting the services of the church in strict and literal accordance with the order of the Book of Common Prayer, so long and during such time as he should so conduct the same, Lord (then Sir JOHN) ROMILLY, M.R., declined to hold that the terms of the deed required daily service (Re Hartshill Endowment (1861), 30 Beav. 130). The Litany is to be said or sung when and as set down in the Book of Common Prayer, and in particular on Wednesdays and Fridays weekly, by the ministers or curates in all churches and chapels in some convenient place according to the discretion of the bishop or other ordinary (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 15). In all parish churches and chapels where the sacraments are to be administered, the Holy Communion is to be administered by the minister so often and at such times as that every parishioner may communicate at least three times in the year (of which the feast of Easter is to be one) (ibid., 21); and he is to give public warning of every such administration to the parishioners on the previous Sunday (ibid., 22).

(d) 35 & 36 Vict. c. 35.

(e) Ibid., s. 2. The order and form prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer is to be used in divine service and administration of the Holy Communion in the colleges and halls of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 16); but on the request of the governing body of any college subsisting on 16th June, 1871, in any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, the visitor of the college may from time to time in writing authorise the use on weekdays of an abridgment or adaptation of morning and evening prayer in the college chapel, instead of the order set forth in the Book of Common Prayer (Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), s. 6).

(f) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 37.

previously prescribed by the book, and for the directions on the subject previously therein contained (g).

If evening prayer is said at two different times in the same place of worship on any Sunday (except a Sunday in which alternative second lessons are specially appointed in the table) the second lesson at the second time may at the discretion of the minister be any chapter from the four gospels or any lesson appointed in the table of lessons from the four gospels (h). Upon occasions to be approved by the ordinary other lessons may with his consent be substituted for those appointed in the calendar; and upon occasions to be appointed by the ordinary other psalms may with his consent be substituted for those appointed in the psalter (i).

The law as to uniformity of service does not preclude the addition or interpolation of hymns, or the discretion of the minister as to what portions of the service shall be sung (k).

1314. The order for morning prayer, the Litany, and the order for Holy Communion, or any of them, may be used together or in varying order as separate services; and the Litany may be said after the third collect in the order for evening prayer, either in lieu of or in addition to, the use of the Litany in the order for morning prayer; and any of them may be used with or without the preaching of a sermon or lecture or the reading of a homily (l). And a sermon or lecture may be preached without the prayers or services appointed by the Book of Common Prayer being read before it is preached, provided that it is preceded either by a service authorised by the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (m), or by the bidding prayer (n), or by a collect taken from the Book of Common Prayer, with or without the Lord's Prayer (o).

1315. In the declaration of assent (p) every clerk promises to use in public prayer and administration of the sacraments the form prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, and no other, except so far as shall be ordered by lawful authority; and the Act of Uniformity, 1662 (q), directs that in those portions of the Book of Common Prayer which relate to the King, Queen, or royal progeny, the names shall be altered from time to time as occasion requires according to the direction of lawful authority (r).

SACR. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Substitution
in certain cases of other lessons and psalms.

Interpolation of hymns and singing.

Order of services.

Variation by lawful authority.

(g) Prayer Book (Tables of Lessons) Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 37), s. 2.

(h) Ibid., sched., Part II.

(i) Ibid., s. 2, and sched., Part II.

(k) Hutchins v. Denziloe (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 170, 175—180; Read v. Lincoln Bishop, [1892] A. C. 644, 659—661, 1 P. O.

(l) Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 35), s. 5. The sermon is not part of the public prayers or ministering the sacraments or other rites of the Church referred to in Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 58 (Re Robinson, Wright v. Tugwell, [1897] 1 Ch. 85, 96, O. A.).

(m) 35 & 36 Vict. c. 35.

(n) See Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 55.

(o) Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 35), s. 6.

(p) See p. 551, ante.

(q) 14 Car. 2, c. 4.

(r) Ibid., s. 21. The lawful authority in that case is the King in Council (Gib. Cod. 280). The law does not recognise any general jus liturgicum in the archbishops and bishops, collectively or severally, beyond the limits expressly SMOT. 1.

Divine
Service
in General.

Special and additional forms of
 service.

1316. On any special occasion approved by the ordinary there may be used in any cathedral or church a special form of service approved by him, and containing nothing, except anthems or hymns, which does not form part of the Holy Scriptures or Book of Common Prayer (s). And an additional form of service varying from any form prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer may be used at any hour on any Sunday or holy day in any cathedral or church in which there are duly read, said, or sung, as required by law, at some other hours on the same day, the Order for Morning Prayer, the Litany, the part of the Order for Holy Communion required to be read if there is no Communion, and the Order for Evening Prayer; but there must not be introduced into such additional service any portion of the Order for Holy Communion, or anything, except anthems or hymns, which does not form part of the Holy Scriptures or Book of Common Prayer, and the form of service, and the mode in which it is used, must be approved by the ordinary (t).

Notices
 during
 divine service

1317. Where banns of matrimony can lawfully be published, they are to be published on three Sundays preceding the solemnisation of matrimony during morning service or evening service (if there is no morning service) immediately after the second lesson (u). After the Nicene Creed in the Communion Office the minister is to declare what holy days or fasting days are to be observed in the following week, and (when there is occasion for so doing) is to give notice of the Communion and of the celebration of divine service and of sermons. Nothing is to be proclaimed or published during divine service but by the minister, nor anything by him but what is prescribed in the rules of the Book of Common Prayer, or by the King, or by the ordinary of the place (v).

Two services every Sunday may be directed.

1318. The bishop may order that there shall be two full services on every Sunday throughout the year or any part of the year in the authorised by statute (Kemp v. Wickes (1809), 3 Phillim. 264, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 268; Read v. Lincoln (Bishop) (1889), 14 P. D. 148, 150).

(s) Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 45), s. 3.

(t) Ibid., s. 4.

(u) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 2; Wynn v. Davies (1835), 1 Curt. 69, per Sir HERBERT JENNER, at p. 81.

(v) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric after the Nicene Creed in the Communion Office); Parish Notices Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 45), s. 5. This Act abolished the practice of reading or publishing during or immediately after divine service decrees relating to faculties and other decrees, citations, and proceedings in ecclesiastical courts, and notices for vestry meetings and other matters, and provided that all proclamations or notices previously made or given in the church or chapel of any parish or place during or after divine service are to be affixed on or near to the doors of all the churches and chapels within the parish or place previously to the commencement of divine service on the days on which they were previously made or given, and when so affixed are to be in substitution for the proclamations and notices so previously made or given (ibid., ss. 1, 2, 4). A minister cannot lawfully give notice of the Communion in unauthorised language such as "a high celebration of the Eucharist," nor declare the observance of holy days or fast days other than those which are specified in the Book of Common Prayer in the Tables and Rules for the Movable and Immovable Feasts together with the Days of Fasting and Abstinence through the whole Year (Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66, 111, 112).

church or chapel of every or any benefice in his diocese, whatever be its annual value or population, and also in the church or chapel of every parish or chapelry where a benefice is composed of two or more parishes or chapelries, in which there is a church or chapel, if the annual value of the benefice arising from such parish or chapelry amounts to £150 and the population thereof amounts to 400 (w). If the aggregate yearly value of a consolidated benefice exceeds £500, the bishop may direct that there shall be two full services in each church of the benefice (a).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

1319. Except as above mentioned, a clerk has generally no right in performing divine service to alter, omit, or add anything to the prescribed form, including the lessons directed to be read (b). If less duty in the performance of divine service than that prescribed by law is in any case required, it is to be supposed that the relaxation has been adopted with the approbation of the bishop, and has been permitted owing to the circumstances of the parish; and as the service is to be performed for the use of the parishioners, such relaxation may properly be granted in certain cases. If it is granted, the minister must strictly adhere to the terms prescribed (c). Any omission or irregularity should, if possible, be avoided; but irregularities arising from reasonable causes and accidents are not to be criminally prosecuted or visited with ecclesiastical censures (d).

No unauthorised alterations etc. permissible.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Duties and Rights of Incumbents.

1320. The incumbent of a benefice is bound to observe the legal requirements and restrictions in reference to the performance of divine service (e). Subject thereto and to the rights of the bishop as paramount incumbent of all the parishes in his diocese (f), and to any legal limitation imposed by the existence within the benefice of an ecclesiastical district (g), or a chapel exempt by law from his control (h), or by the incumbent's suspension or inhibition (i), an incumbent has the control of the performance of divine service, including the singing, throughout his benefice (k), and he has the Performance of divine service by incumbent.

(w) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 80. In certain cases the bishop may order a third or additional service with a third sermon on Sundays and the great festivals, and the appointment of a curate for its performance (Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 65).

(a) Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 8.

(b) Carones Ecclesiastici (1603), 14; Colefatti v. Newcomb (1704), 2 Ld. Raym. 1205; Newbery v. Goodwin (1811), 1 Phillim. 282. The omission of words from a lesson, though not legally justified, is greatly extenuated, if done from feelings of delicacy (Newbery v. Goodwin, supra, at p. 284).

(c) Bennett v. Bonaker (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 25, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 27.

(d) Bennett v. Bonaker (1830), 3 Hag. Ecc. 17, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 42.

(e) Parnell v. Roughton (1874), L. R. 6 P. C. 46, 53.

(f) See note (a), p. 442, ante.

(g) See pp. 443, 448, ante.

(h) See pp. 651, 652, ante.

(i) See pp. 634, 635, 612, 614, ante.

(k) Hutchins v. Denzile (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 170; Wood v. Headingley-cum-Burley Burial Board, [1892] 1 Q. B. 713, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 729. An incumbent has the exclusive control of money collected in church, except money given at the offertory or collected for church expenses (R. v. O'Neill, Es).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

right and duty to conduct it or provide for its being conducted in all consecrated places of worship within the benefice (l). If the benefice contains more than one consecrated place of worship, he commits an ecclesiastical offence if he neglects to perform or provide for the performance of divine service in each (m), or if he closes one of them and disobeys the order of the bishop directing him to perform duty in it (n). Neglect of duty in the performance of divine service must, in order to constitute a criminal offence, be wilful and without just cause; but the absence of just cause will be inferred if none is shown (o).

Personal duty of resident incumbent who keeps a curate.

1321. In the absence of lawful impediment allowed by the bishop, an incumbent, who resides on his benefice and keeps a curate, must himself at least once a month read prayers and administer the sacraments and other rites of the Church in the church or chapel of the benefice (p), and must himself preach one sermon on every Sunday in the year (q).

Religious worship and service in unconsecrated
places.

1322. The incumbent, or, where he is non-resident, the curate in charge, of a parish or ecclesiastical district, or any person authorised by them respectively, may hold and conduct therein a congregation or assembly for religious worship in an unconsecrated place not certified and registered as by law required (r). But they cannot perform divine service in an unconsecrated place without the licence of the bishop (s).

Performance
of divine service by clerk.

1323. Where there is a resident incumbent not under suspension or inhibition, no clerk can perform divine service in whole or in part within the benefice without his consent (t), except in an parte Oliver (1867), 31 J. P. 742; Howell v. Holdroyd, [1897] P. 198. As to money given at the offertory, see p. 472, ante.

(l) Williams's Case (1592), 5 Co. Rep. 72 b; Jones v. Stone (1700), 1 Ld. Raym. 578; Moysey v. Hillcoat (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 30, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 46; Rugg v. Winchester (Bishop) (1868), L. R. 2 P. C. 223; see also p. 613, ante. The bishop cannot interfere with an incumbent's right to preach in any church in his own benefice (Colefatt v. Newcomb (1704), 2 Ld. Raym. 1205).

(m) Llandaff (Bishop) v. Belcher (1687), Rothery's Precedents, No. 91, p. 42; Hancock v. Bomer (1692), ibid., No. 99, p. 47; Jones v. Curtis (1715), ibid., No. 119, p. 58; Rugg v. Winchester (Bishop), supra, at pp. 234, 236, 237.

(n) Rugg v. Winchester (Bishop), supra, at pp. 235—237.

(o) Bennett v. Bonaker (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 25; (1830) 3 Hag. Ecc. 17, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 39.

(p) Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 5. The penalty for default is £5 for the poor of the parish recoverable before two justices and leviable by distress (ibid.).

(q) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 45.

(r) Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86), s. 1. The Act also exempts from the necessity of being certified and registered the cases of a congregation or assembly for religious worship meeting in a private dwelling-house or on the premises belonging thereto, and of a congregation or assembly for religious worship meeting occasionally in one or more buildings not usually appropriated to purposes of religious worship (ibid.).

(s) Finch v. Harris (1702), 12 Mod. Rep. 641; Moysey v. Hillcoat, supra, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 45; Down (Bishop) v. Miller (1861), 11 L. Ch. R., Appendix, p. i., per Dr. RADCLIFF, at p. ix.; Kitson v. Drury (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 272; Richards v. Fincher (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 255, at p. 262.

(t) Carr v. Marsh (1814) 2 Phillim. 198; Farnworth v. Chester (Bishop) (1825), 4 B. & C. 555, 568—570; Hodgson v. Dillon (1840), 2 Curt. 388, per Dr.

ecclesiastical district (u), or in a chapel exempt by law from the control of the incumbent (v). Where an incumbent has consented to a clerk being licensed by the bishop to minister in a proprietary chapel within his benefice, he cannot afterwards withdraw his consent, but that consent will not bind succeeding incumbents (w).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Brawling.

1324. The object of the law against brawling being to protect the sanctity of places set apart for the worship of the Supreme Being and for the repose of the dead, and to prevent them from being converted with impunity into scenes of disturbance and violence, it is no part of the inquiry, where more than one person is implicated in such scenes, which of them began the quarrel. Each person who engages in it violates the law, whether he be the most or the least blamable; each is bound to abstain from quarrelling, chiding, or brawling in the sacred place (a).

Object of the law against brawling.

1325. Any person who is guilty of riotous, violent, or indecent (b) behaviour (although such behaviour is in assertion of a bonâ fide claim of right (c)), whether during the celebration of divine service or at any other time (d), or who molests, lets, disturbs, vexes or troubles, or by any other unlawful means disquiets or misuses any preacher or any clergyman in holy orders ministering or celebrating any sacrament or any divine service, rite, or office (e) in any

Brawling in
church.

LUSHINGTON, at pp. 392, 393; Jones v. Jelf (1863), 8 L. T. 399, 401; Richards v. Fincher (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 255.

(u) See pp. 443, 448, ante.

(v) See pp. 651, 652, ante.

(w) Richards v. Fincher, supra.

(a) Palmer v. Roffey (1824), 2 Add. 141, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 144; Newbery v. Goodwin (1811), 1 Phillim. 282, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at p. 283: "The law also, not merely the statute of Edward VI. but the general ecclesiastical law, protects the sanctity of public worship,—and still more endeavours to prevent every circumstance which may lead to the disturbance of persons engaged in solemn acts of devotion;—it prohibits all quarrelling, chiding, and brawling in the church or churchyard, and requires decent and orderly behaviour." As to the general jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in cases of brawling independently of the statute law, see also Taylor v. Morley (1837), 1 Curt. 470; Hutchins v. Denziloe (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 181, where Sir WILLIAM SCOTT said that the statute of Edward VI. (1552), 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, s. 1, did not create the offence, as it subsisted by the common law before the statute was enacted. A party may proceed either upon the statute or upon the ancient law; for wherever a statute leaves an offence as it found it and only introduces additional punishment, a party may proceed on either; see also Wenmouth v. Collins (1702), 2 Ld. Raym. 850. As to the abolition of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in cases of brawling over persons not in holy orders, see s. 1 of Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32).

(b) What amounts to indecency depends upon circumstances of time and place; see Worth v. Terrington (1845), 13 M. & W., 795, 796. See also Jones v. Catterall (1902), 18 T. L. R. 367.

(c) Asher v. Calcraft (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 607; and see Kensit v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter), [1905] 2 K. B. 249, 257; see also A.-G. v. St. Cross Hospital (1834), 14 Beav. 601, where an injunction was granted.

(d) Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2. By s. 1 the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in cases of defamation and brawling was abolished against any person not being in holy orders.

(e) Ibid., s. 2, draws a distinction between a person "duly authorised to

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.
Apprehension of offenders.

cathedral, church, or chapel, or in any churchyard or burial ground, may be convicted (f), and every person so offending (g) may be apprehended by any constable or churchwarden of the parish or place where the offence has been committed and taken before a justice of the peace of the county or place where the offence has been committed, to be dealt with according to law (h).

Right to remove disturbers.

1326. A constable may be justified in removing a person from a church for disturbing the congregation at the time of divine service, although no part of such service was actually proceeding at the time (i). The duty of maintaining order and decorum in the

preach" in the church and "a clergyman in holy orders ministering or celebrating any sacrament or any divine service, rite, or office" in any church. The express provision for the case of a preacher who is not strictly ministering or celebrating any sacrament or any divine service, rite, or office shows that the legislature, in dealing with the case of a clergyman in holy orders, meant the latter words to apply to something in the course of being done which in its character could only be done by a clergyman in holy orders (Cope v. Barber (1872), L. R. 7 Q. P. 393, per WILLES, J., at p. 401, where the respondents having obstructed the appellant, the incumbent, whilst he was engaged in collecting the offertory during the reading of the offertory sentences by another clergyman, "the appellant then being a clergyman in holy orders celebrating divine service in a certain parish church etc.," it was held that the magistrates rightly decided that the respondents had not been guilty of the offence charged, inasmuch as the appellant was not at the time he was obstructed "ministering or celebrating any sacrament or any divine service, rite, or office," for while there is nothing improper in a priest making the collection, yet, if he does so, he is not whilst doing it "ministering etc.").

(f) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 477-479, and Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2.

(g) That is, against ibid., s. 2.

(h) Ibid., s. 3; and see p. 469, ante. Sect. 5 repeals c. 4 of stat. (1552) 5 & 6 Edw. 6, an Act against quarrelling and fighting in churches and churchyards, so far as relates to persons not in holy orders. By s. 6 it is provided that nothing in the Act shall be taken to repeal or alter the statutes of (1553) 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3 (1588) 1 Eliz. c. 2 (Act of Uniformity), or s. 18 of stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18 (Ruffhead), see p. 817, post. By s. 7 it is provided that nothing in the Act shall limit, restrain, or abolish the power possessed by the ordinary over the fabric of the church or over the churchyard or burial ground connected therewith.

(i) Williams v. Glenister (1824), 2 B. & O. 699, where the parish clerk had refused to read in church a notice which was presented to him for the purpose and the person presenting it read it himself, and it was held on the facts that the constable had no right to detain such person in custody afterwards for the purpose of taking him before a magistrate. But this case was decided before the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32); see ibid., s. 3. And if the disturber had been found as a fact to have acted with the purpose of molesting the person celebrating divine service the detention would have been justified under stat. (1553) 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3, and s. 18 of stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18. By the former statute, "if any person maliciously, wilfully or of purpose, molests any person saying or celebrating the mass or other such divine service as was most commonly used in the last year of King Henry VIII. or that at any time thereafter has been allowed, set forth or authorised by the Queen's majesty etc. [words wide enough to cover divine service under the present Prayer Book] every such offender may be forthwith apprehended and taken by any constable or churchwarden of the parish or by any other person then being present and be brought to any justice of the peace within the shire or city etc. where the offence was committed, who may punish the offender." By stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18, s. 18, if any person shall willingly and of purpose maliciously and contemptuously come into any church lies immediately upon the churchwardens, and if they are not present, or being present do not repress any indecency, they desert their proper duty. They are justified in removing a person from the church if they have reasonable grounds for believing that he will offer interruption during the celebration of divine service (k). If the minister introduces any irregularity into the service, the churchwardens have no authority to interfere; but they may complain to the ordinary of misconduct (l).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Ritual Offences.

(i.) In General.

1327. In cases relating to ritual offences, it is important to establish and maintain as far as possible a clear and unvarying interpretation of rules, the stringency and effect of which ought to be easily ascertained and understood by every clerk before his admission to holy orders. Still, in such cases there are not, as a rule, any rights to the possession of property which have arisen by the course of previous decisions, such as afford strong reasons for not reopening the decisions of final courts of appeal on questions of law affecting civil rights. Moreover, in proceedings which may assume a penal form a tribunal ought to be slow to exclude any fresh light which may be brought to bear upon the subject. Accordingly, the decisions, even of the highest court, on such matters are liable to be overruled where there is fresh light, meaning some fact which has not been under the consideration of the tribunal on the previous occasion; and even where there is no such fresh light, the tribunal is at liberty to examine the reasons upon which the decisions rest, and to give effect to its own view of the law (m).

As to the finality of decisions on matters of ritual.

cathedral, parish church, chapel or other congregation permitted by that Act, and disquiet and disturb the same, or misuse any preacher or teacher, such person upon proof thereof before any justice of the peace, by two or more sufficient witnesses, is to find two sureties to be bound by recognisance in the penal sum of £50, and in default of such sureties is to be committed to prison, there to remain till the next general or quarter sessions; and upon conviction of the said offence is to suffer the pain and penalty of £20 to the use of the King. Prosecutions under these statutes have been rare, but s. 6 of the Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), expressly leave the provisions above cited unrepealed and unaltered. Sect. 3 of the Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), allows an offender under that Act to be apprehended and taken before a justice of the peace; see p. 664, ante. For other Acts relating to brawling, see stat. (1552) 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 4 (repealed, so far as relates to persons not in holy orders, by the Ecclesiastical Courts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 5); stat. (1559) 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 3; Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3. c. 155), s. 12; Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 115); Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59), s. 4; Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 36. It is thought sufficient here to refer to those statutes without stating their provisions. See also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. LX., pp. 477, 478.

As to the provisions contained in the Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41), s. 7, when burials take place under that Act in a churchyard, see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 426, 427.

(k) See note (e), p. 470, ante.

(l) See note (f), p. 470, ante.

(m) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 654, 655, P. O.; Riddale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, 305—307 P. O.

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Historical
 investigation.
 Tests of legality or illegality.

The law does not exclude historical investigation in determining questions of ritual and ecclesiastical practice. Contemporaneous usage is of great value in determining such subjects, and where it is important to ascertain facts of a public nature the law permits historical works to be referred to (n).

1328. In testing the legality or illegality of ecclesiastical practices the following rules have been laid down as well founded in principle, reason, and law, namely, that what is expressly prohibited is prohibited altogether, and may not be evaded by any contrivance which, under a different name or appearance, attains the same end; and whatever is expressly ordered may not be evaded by an illusory or partial compliance; that whatever is subsidiary to what is ordered, and whatever, being in itself decent and proper and in accordance with primitive and catholic use, is not by any fair construction necessarily connected with those Roman novelties which the Church "cut away and clean rejected" (o) at the Reformation, is, generally speaking, lawful. There are, in other words, three categories of these things: (1) Things lawful and ordered; (2) things unlawful and prohibited; (3) things neither ordered nor prohibited expressly or by implication, but the doing of which must be governed by the living discretion of some person in authority (a).

Discretion of court when offence proved.

1329. When an ecclesiastical offence is found to be proved, the promoters of a suit have not in all cases a right to insist on

(n) Thus, in Ridgdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C., such authorities as Hooker, Baxter's Life and Times, Collier's Ecclesiastical History, Dr. Thomas Bennett's Paraphrase, Cosin's Works, and the like were quoted and relied upon, not by counsel only, but in the judgment ultimately pronounced; and this not upon questions of doctrine or opinion, but as leading to inferences of fact as to what was usual at the time of the writers referred to (Reed v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 653, P. C.). As to the use of historical material by an ecclesiastical judge, the Privy Council in the latter case on appeal from the court of the Archbishop of Canterbury said, at pp. 653, 654: "Without considering further how far an ecclesiastical judge has a right to act upon his own historical learning, when it becomes important to ascertain what was the ecclesiastical practice or what were the views entertained by eminent theologians, in remote times, it is enough to say here, dealing with the objection generally, that it is impossible to contend that if in other respects the archbishop's judgment was well founded, it could be invalidated by his having called to his aid for this purpose his own historical researches. Nor does it make the objection better that instead of pronouncing ex cathedra what in his opinion was the history of such and such a practice the archbishop has disclosed in his judgment the sources from which he derived his views."

(o) Book of Common Prayer.

(a) Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 A. & E. 116, per Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, at p. 191; affirmed (1868) L. R. 2 P. C. 365, 385. The person to whom such matters should be submitted is the bishop of the diocese (Book of Common Prayer, Preface, as applied in Martin v. Mackonochie, supra, per Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, at p. 191). The function of the bishop to whom the parties in doubt resort is not to pronounce a legal judgment, but to resolve, if possible, the doubt; and the bishop, if unable so to do, may send for the resolution thereof to the archbishop. This course was adopted in the cases of "Incense and Processional Lights" and the "Reservation of the Sacrament," upon which the archbishops pronounced their opinions at Lambeth (July 31, 1899, and May 1, sentence being pronounced, even if it be only a monition not to repeat the offence (b). If the court is satisfied that the offence will not be repeated, it is entitled to accept the assurance of future submission, and is not bound to inflict a penalty, and a monition is a penalty (c).

SECT. 1.
Divine Service
in General.

(ii.) Ornaments and Decorations of the Church.

1330. A bishop cannot by a sentence of consecration legalise the retention in a church of an ornament which is forbidden by law to be there (d). The rubric as to ornaments in the commencement of the Prayer Book is in these words: "And here is to be noted, that such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof, at all times of their Ministration, shall be retained, and be in use, as were in this Church of England, by the Authority of Parliament, in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward the VIth." The rubric deals with two kinds of ornaments—the ornaments of the church and the ornaments of the minister.

Ornaments
of the church.
The ornaments rubric.

1331. The term "ornaments" in ecclesiastical law is not confined, as by modern usage, to articles of decoration or embellishment, but it is used in the larger sense of the word "ornamentum," which is used pro quocumque apparatu, seu instrumento (e). All the several articles used in the performance of the service and rites of the church are "ornaments"; in modern times, organs and bells are held to fall under this denomination (f).

Meaning of
"ornaments."

The term "ornaments of the church" in the rubric is confined to those articles the use of which in the services and ministrations of the church is prescribed by the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. (g). Thus, the rubric provides for the use, inter alia, of an English Bible, the new Prayer Book, a poor man's box, a chalice, a corporas, a paten, and a bell. Though there may be articles not expressly mentioned in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. the use of which would not be restrained, they must be articles which are consistent with and subsidiary to the services,

Examples of ornaments.

1900, respectively). These opinions, which are hereafter referred to, were not meant in the strict sense of the term.

Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 669, P. C.

Ibid.

Davey v. Hinde, [1901] P. 95 (Chichester Consistory Court); see also Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, [1906] P. 230. As to the rights of non-residents to promote a suit, see Davey v. Hinde, [1901] P. 95; [1903] P. 221. As to the institution of criminal suits against churchwardens to obtain the removal of illegal ornaments, see Davey v. Hinde, supra. In Noble v. Reast, [1904] P. 34, following Lee v. Fagg (1874), L. R. 6 P. C. 38, it was held that a non-parishioner described as a solicitor and secretary to the Archbishop of York and Ordinary of the Diocese of York, who was proved to be the sequestrator of the living in question during a vacancy thereof, had no locus standi to promote a suit against the churchwardens during the vacancy for a motion to remove ornaments introduced without a faculty; see also Liddell v. Deal (1860), 14 Moo. P. C. C. 1.

(e) Elphinstone v. Furchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 68, per Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, at p. 89, citing Westerton v. Liddell, as reported in Moore's Special Report, at pp. 166, 167.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Ibid., per Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, at p. 89, citing Martin v. Mackonochie (1863), L. R. 2 P. C. 365, 390.

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

as an organ for the singing, a credence table from which to take the sacramental bread and wine, cushions or hassocks (h).

Further, a distinction must be drawn between those articles which are ornaments of the church in the strict sense of the term and those which are merely decorations. The test of the legality of the latter depends upon whether or not the decorations are in danger of being abused by superstitious reverence.

Painted windows.

1332. Painted windows or paintings will be held illegal, if the court is satisfied from the mode in which the subject is treated, the place which they occupy, or other incidents, that they are in real danger of adoration, worship, or superstitious reverence. So long as they are free from this charge, and fulfil no other function but that of fitly decorating the church, they are free from objection; the moment that from any cause, whether residing in the objects themselves or arising among those who worship in the church, the danger of their adoration is made manifest, they cease to be innocent and fall under the charge of illegality (i).

Stations of the Cross.

1333. The set of delineations used in Roman Catholic churches, and commonly called the Stations of the Cross and Passion, are not mere architectural decorations. Such of them as have no warrant in gospel history (k) are illegal decorations in themselves, while the legality of the others depends upon whether they are likely to be abused in the particular case (l).

Crosses and crucifixes.

1334. Although before the Reformation the symbol of the cross had been put to superstitious uses, yet crosses, which are to be distinguished from crucifixes (m), when used as mere emblems of the Christian faith, and not as objects of superstitious reverence, may

(h) Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66. The construction adopted in the cases cited is not applicable or is misleading if applied to vestments and to the ornaments of the minister (Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, 336 et seq.), as to which see p. 672, post.

(i) Clifton v. Ridsdale (1876), 1 P. D. 316, per Lord PENZANCE, at p. 358.

(k) As, for instance, the legend of St. Veronica.

(l) Clifton v. Ridsdale (1876), 1 P. D. 316, 359—363 (affirmed sub nom. Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C.), where the Court of Arches ordered the removal of all the delineations on the ground that they had been set up by the respondent "without lawful authority," no faculty having been granted or applied for to justify their erection, which constituted "an addition to the fabric ornaments or furniture of the church," but left it open to the respondent to apply for a faculty to authorise the introduction into his church of such of them as might turn out to be free from objection. There was no appeal to the Privy Council of this part of the case. For cases where the removal of the Stations of the Cross has been ordered, see Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, [1906] P. 239, where, however, an image of the Good Shepherd, erected without a faculty, was allowed to remain as being a decoration only, there being no proof that superstitious reverence was paid to it (Re St. Mark's, Marylebone Road, [1898] P. 114, following Sieveking v. Kingsford (1866), 36 L. J. (ECCLES.) 1; compare Re Christchurch, Basing, [1906] P. 289). As to the necessity of proving the general desire of parishioners to retain church ornaments not illegal in themselves on an application for a confirmatory faculty, see Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, supra.

(m) Westerton v. Liddell (1857), as reported in Moore's Special Report, cited in Clifton v. Ridsdale (1876), 1 P. D. 316, 350; Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, 350, P. C.

still lawfully be erected as architectural decorations (n). But a cross, whether movable or not, which by its position is closely connected with the communion table is forbidden by law (o).

Crucifixes and sculptured images are not necessarily illegal, even when placed on the top of a chancel screen (p). Those which have been set up for the purpose of decoration only and are not likely in the circumstances of the particular case to be abused by superstitious reverence are lawful decorations (q).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

(n) In Liddell v. Beal (1860), 14 Moo. P. C. C. 1, a metal cross placed on the end of the east window above the communion table was held to be legal. See also Westerton v. Liddell (1857), as reported in Moore's Special Report, cited in Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, 350, P. C. In Liddell v. Westerton (1857), 5 W. R. 470, P. O., the Privy Council decided that the wooden cross erected in that particular case "was to be considered a mere architectural ornament" (meaning "decoration"). In Phillpotts v. Boyd (1875), L. R. 6 P. C. 435, the Privy Council, in justifying the erection of the Exeter reredos, adhered to the position taken up in the previous case and pronounced that erection lawful, though it included many sculptured images, on the express ground "that it had been set up for the purpose of decoration only," declaring that it was "not in danger of being abused," and that "it was not suggested that any superstitious reverence has been or is likely to be paid to any of the figures upon it."

In Ridsdale v. Clifton, supra, at p. 353, the Privy Council in the circumstances of the case affirmed the decision directing the removal of the crucifix, while at the same time stating that it was important to maintain, as to representations of sacred persons and objects in a church, the liberty established in Phillpotts v. Boyd, supra, subject to the power and duty of the ordinary so to exercise his judicial discretion in granting or refusing faculties as to guard against things likely to be abused for purposes of superstition.

(o) Durst v. Masters (1876), 1 P. D. 373, P. C., where a movable wooden cross placed on a retable or ledge above the communion table with the intention that it should remain there permanently was held to be unlawful; see the discussion of this case, and those cited in the preceding note, in Re St. Mark's, Wimbledon, Wimbledon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. Eden, [1908] P. 167, where the chancellor of the diocese of Southwark was of opinion that the placing of a movable wooden cross, whether on or just above the holy table, is not illegal, stating that he was unable to reconcile Durst v. Masters, supra, with Liddell v. Beal, supra, where a movable ledge of wood with candlesticks upon it was held not to be inconsistent with the monition to provide "a flat movable table of wood." As to whether the decisions of the Privy Council bind the ecclesiastical courts, see Re St. Mark's Wimbledon, Wimbledon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. Eden, supra; Reid v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644; and p. 665, ante.

(p) See the cases cited in the following note.

(q) Phillpotts v. Boyd, supra (sculptured representations in high relief of the Ascension, the Transfiguration, and the Descent of the Holy Ghost on the Day of Pentecost), where the Privy Council, in holding that the reredos erected for the purpose of decoration in Exeter Cathedral was not illegal, since it was not suggested that any superstitious reverence had been or was likely to be paid to any figures forming part of it, considered the effect of the Injunctions of Henry VIII. and the 3rd and 28th Injunctions of Edward VI., stat. (1549) 3 & 4 Edw. 6, c. 10, ss. 1, 2, 6 (which Act the Judicial Committee held to remain unrepealed), the 23rd of the Injunctions of Elizabeth (1559), the Proclamation of Elizabeth (1560), the 22nd Article of Religion, and the Homilies against the Perils of Idolatry recognised in the 35th Article of Religion, and concurred in the opinion expressed by the Privy Council in Westerton v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, that the Act of Edward VI. "related to the destruction of images already ordered to be removed, but which either had not been removed or, having been so, were still retained for private devotion and worship"; Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C. (crucifix of metal in full relief on top of chancel screen with a row of candles on either side, which were lighted at evening service), where it was held by the Privy Council that in the absence of a proper faculty

SECT. 1.

Divine
Service
in General.Chancel screen gates.

1835. The court will issue a faculty for the erection of chancel screen gates on being satisfied in its discretion that the erection would be of utility (r).

the crucifix was unlawfully set up and retained, and that no such faculty ought to be granted, and the crucifix was ordered to be removed, on the ground that there was a likelihood and danger of superstitious reverence, which the Privy Council in Phillipotts v. Boyd (1875), L. R. 6 O. P. 435, pronounced to be fatal to the lawfulness of all images and figures set up in a church. As to this case, see p. 669, ante; see also R. v. London (Bishop) (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 213, O. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 237. Crucifixes and sculptured images have been allowed in the following cases:—Barham, Suffolk (Rector etc.) v. Parishioners of the Same, [1896] P. 256 (figures of our Lord on the Cross, the Virgin Mary and St. John on the chancel screen); Re St. Anselm, Pinner, [1901] P. 202, where it was held that the mere suggestion that such figures may cause offence is not sufficient ground for the ordinary refusing in his discretion to grant a faculty; Great Bardfield (Vicar) v. All having Interest, [1897] P. 185, where the ordinary was satisfied that the figures would be for the purpose of architectural decoration only, and that there was no ground for reasonable apprehension that they would be abused or made the subject of superstitious reverence; Hughes v. Edwards (1877), 2 P. D. 361, 368 (sculptured representation of the crucifixion immediately over the holy table).

In the following cases faculties have been refused:—Re St. Lawrence, Pitlington (1880), 5 P. D. 131 (decoration of reredos with a design to represent the Adoration of our Lord in Majesty by the Faithful, where the refusal was on the ground that there would be a danger of that representation being abused by receiving superstitious reverence; Kensit v. St. Ethelburga, Bishopsgate Within (Rector), [1900] P. 80 (crucifixes), where the court held that (1) they were either in themselves illegal church ornaments or illegal architectural decorations; and (2), if not in themselves illegal as such, they were, having regard to their use in the church for superstitious purposes, articles and things the retention of which in the church it would be an unwise exercise of the discretion of the court to authorise; Richmond (Vicar) and St. Matthias, Richmond (Chapelwardens) v. All Persons having Interest etc., [1897] P. 70 (crucifix with or without figures on either side placed on a chancel screen); Paington (Vicar) v. All having Interest, [1905] P. 111 (sculptured group of our Lord on the Cross, the Virgin Mary and St. John), where it appeared that the court, by granting the faculty, would be authorising the restoration of the pre-Reformation screen and rood formerly in the church; St. John the Evangelist, Clevedon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. All having Interest, [1909] P. 6, where the court was of opinion that the erection of a similar group was not contemplated simply and purely as a matter of decoration; Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, [1906] P. 239 (crucifixes over pulpits); Davey v. Hinde, [1903] P. 221 (crucifixes). See also St. Paul, Bow Common, [1909] P. 245 (rood beam).

A confirmatory faculty to retain ornaments not illegal in themselves should always be refused, unless there is sufficient evidence of a general desire amongst the parishioners to retain them (Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, supra).

(r) St. James, Norland (Vicar etc.) v. Parishioners of the Same, [1894] P. 256; Paington (Vicar) v. All having Interest, [1905] P. 111; Re St. Agnes (1885), 11 P. D. 1; Re St. John's Church, Isle of Dogs (1888), Trist. 67 (cited [1894] P. 258). In Westerton v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, at p. 77, Dr. LUSHINGTON refused to order the removal of a chancel screen with gates on the ground that they were not prohibited by ecclesiastical law, but added that he should not advise a bishop to consecrate a church with side gates, as he considered the separation of the chancel from the body of the church as objectionable. Faculties have been refused in the following cases, no reason being shown for departing from the ordinary rule laid down in Westerton v. Liddell, supra:—Re St. Augustine, Haggerston (1877), 4 P. D. 111; Annunciation, Chislehurst (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same (1877), 4 P. D. 114; Bradford v. Fry (1878), 4 P. D. 93; Richmond (Vicar) and St. Matthias, Richmond (Chapelwardens) v. All Persons having Interest etc., [1897] P. 70; St. Andrew, Romford (Rector) v. All Persons etc., [1894] P. 220, where the chancellor of St. Albans, being of opinion that the grant of a faculty authorising the erection of the gates would be an exercise of his discretion in opposition to the decision

1336. The legality of a reredos depends upon whether it is a mere architectural decoration which is not likely to be the object of superstitious reverence(s).

1337. A tabernacle for the reception of the reserved sacrament is not a lawful church ornament (a).

1338. The ringing of one of the church bells as a sanctus bell is an additional ceremony, and the court will refuse to sanction by faculty alterations to enable one of the church bells to be used from the interior of the church as a sanctus bell (b).

1339. It is lawful to place vases of flowers on the holy table and to keep them there during the performance of divine service, provided they are used as decorations only (c). It is unlawful to have the communion table wholly uncovered during divine service (d).

1340. A movable marble communion table is not a legal article of church furniture (e). A second communion table in a side chapel

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Reredos.

Tabernacle.
Sanctus bell.

Vases of flowers.

Communion
table to be covered.

Marble
communion
table.

Second
communion
table.

in Bradford v. Fry, supra, refused the faculty as prayed, but intimated that, if the petitioners desired, the court would decree a faculty to issue for the erection of the chancel screen without any gates to it. The question whether a chancel screen with gates is of practical utility in modern times would usually be answered in the affirmative.

(a) See pp. 668, 669, ante, where the cases of the legality of crucifixes and images have been considered in connection with a reredos. In R. v. London (Bishop) (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 213, C. A., it was held that where a representation had been sent to the bishop requesting him to allow proceedings to have the reredos in St. Paul's removed as being unlawful, and the bishop had refused, his reason being based on his view that such litigation in his opinion entailed mischievous results, the answer of the bishop was sufficient. In R. v. London (Bishop), Leighton's Case, [1891] 2 Q. B. 48, where the representation was the same as in the earlier case, except that it alleged that the reredos had in fact encouraged idolatrous practices, and the bishop, relying on his former consideration of the question, had refused the petition. HAWKINS, J., held that the answer was sufficient. These decisions were affirmed in the House of Lords, which held in both cases that, whether the reasons of the bishop were good or bad, he had acted within his jurisdiction and honestly exercised his discretion and judgment (R. v. London (Bishop), supra; A. Croft v. London (Lord Bishop), Leighton v. London (Lord Bishop), [1891] A. C. 666). See also Great Bardfield (Vicar) v. All having Interest, [1897] P. 185, 189.

(a) Kenst v. St. Ethelburga, Bishopsgate Within (Rector), [1900] P. 80. As to the reservation of the sacrament, see p. 683, post.

(b) St. John the Evangelist, Clevedon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. All having Interest, [1909] P. 6, where it was further decided that the tolling or ringing of one of the church bells of a parish church during the consecration prayer in the Communion Service at the moment of the elevation of each of the sacred elements as a sanctus bell is illegal.

(c) Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66.

(d) Ibid. As to the covering of the communion table, see Canon 82 and the Rubric.

(e) St. Luke's, Chelsea (Rector) v. Wheeler, [1904] P. 257, where it was also held that a faculty may, in the discretion of the ordinary, be granted for a wooden communion table on the front and sides of which are suspended slute slabs decorated with marble mosaics and detachable at will without injury to the table, but see as to this decision Hayes (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Fulford, [1910] P. 18. There is nothing illegal in elevating the communion table above the floor of the church (Re St. Andrew's, Haverstock Hill (1909), 25 T. L. R. 408); and it is legal to fix curtains behind the communion table and at the north and south ends of it, but not so as to prevent the minister, if so desirous, officiating in the communion at the north end of the table (Re St. Mark's, Wimbledon, Wimbledon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. Eden, [1908] P. 167).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Credence
table.

Tablet inviting prayers for the dead.

may be sanctioned on the ground of convenience and economy (f). Where necessary, a credence table may lawfully be placed in a church as subsidiary to the administration of the Holy Communion (g).

1341. The practice of praying for the dead is of much earlier date than the doctrine of purgatory (h). Prayers for the dead do not fall under the same condemnation as the Roman doctrine of purgatory; but as prayers for the dead are associated in the popular mind with the later exaggerations referred to in the 22nd Article of Religion, and a bequest made for such prayers being offered would be void by the common law as superstitious (i), the ordinary ought not in his discretion to grant a faculty for the introduction of a memorial tablet or window bearing an inscription inviting them (k).

(iii.) Ornaments of the Minister.

1342. The rubric as to the ornaments of the minister in the commencement of the Prayer Book, which prescribes that such ornaments of the minister at all times of their ministration shall be retained and be in use as were in the Church of England by the authority of Parliament in the second year of Edward VI., requires for the legalisation of the ornaments of the minister at the time of prayers and sacrament that they must have the parliamentary authority of the first Prayer Book of Edward VI., but it is a misapprehension to suppose that the rubric was intended to have, or did have, the effect of repealing the law as it previously stood, and of substituting for that previous law another and a different law, formulated in the words of that rubric, and of thus making the year 1662 a new point of departure in the legislation on this subject (l). If it were so, the rubric would not merely "authorise" the use of the vestments referred to, but would make it imperative.

(f) Re Holy Trinity Church, Stroud Green (1887), 12 P. D. 199; St. Peter's, Eaton Square (Vicar etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1894] P. 350; St. Anne's, Limehouse (Rector) v. Parishioners of Same, [1901] P. 73; Faignton (Vicar) v. All having Interest, [1905] P. 111; Re St. James the Great, Buxton, St. John the Baptist, Buxton (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, [1907] P. 368; Re St. Mark's, Murgyleboue Road, St. Mark's (Vicar) v. St. Mark's (Parishioners), [1898] P. 114; Re St. Micharl, Bromley (1908), 25 T. L. R. 95; Re St. Paul's, Brentford (1908), 25 T. L. R. 228. The circumstances which warrant the faculty and the structural and other arrangements to be made are matters to be decided by the court granting the faculty in each case (Re St. James the Great, Buxton, St. John the Baptist, Buxton (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, supra).

(g) Westerton v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, at p. 187, P. C., overruling Faulkner v. Litchfield (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 184.

(h) Brooks v. Woolfrey (1838), 1 Curt. 880, per Sir HERBERT JENNER.

(i) See title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 120—122.

(k) Egerton v. All of Odd Rode, [1894] P. 15. The second Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1553) omitted prayer for the dead. As to inscriptions on tombstones in parish churchyards inviting them, see Pearson v. Stead, [1903] P. 68.

(l) Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C., affirming the decision of the Arches Court that the wearing during the service of Holy Communion of the vestments known as the alb and chasuble is illegal, and approving Hibbert v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 P. C. 605. As to Westerton v. Liddell, supra, everything said and done in that case to which the Rubric of 1662 was material had reference exclusively to ornaments of the church. The court "had nothing to do with the ornaments of the minister or anything appertaining thereto" (Moore's Special Report, p. 31). See Ridsdale v. Clifton, supra, at p. 336. In Martin v. Markonochie (1868), L. R. 2 P. C. 365, it

The view accepted by the Privy Council is that (omitting all reference to hoods and to the ornaments of bishops) the law existing up to the year 1667 (m) was not inconsistent with the

Sect. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Construction
of the rubric.

was sufficient to consider the effect of the mere words of the Rubric of 1662, repeating (as it did) in 1662 the language of the Act of the first year of Elizabeth on a point unaffected by anything done in the meantime. See Ridgdale v. Clifton, supra, at p. 338. The construction of the Rubric of 1662 in Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66, to the effect that it authorises the use of the vestments mentioned in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. was not accepted by the Privy Council (see the same case on appeal sub nom. Hebbert v. Purchas (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 605).

(m) Some reference to the history of this subject is rendered necessary by the fact that the legality of particular vestments depends upon the history of the question up to the year 1662.

In the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1549) the directions as to the vestures of the ministers officiating in the public services of the Church (omitting all that relates to hoods and the directions as to bishops) were as follows:—In the saying and singing of matins and evensong, baptizing, and burying, the minister was to use a surplice. In the administration of the Holy Communion the celebrant was to "put upon him a white alb plain, with a vestment or cope," and the assistant ministers (priests or deacons) were to "have upon them likewise the vestures appointed for their ministry, namely, albes with tunicles." These directions were omitted from the second Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1552); and instead a rubric was inserted immediately before the order of Morning Prayer, in these words: "And here it is to be noted, that the minister at the time of the communion and at all other times of his ministration, shall use neither alb, vestment, nor cope; but . . . being a priest or deacon, he shall have and wear a surplice only." Upon the accession of Elizabeth after the Marian reaction no new or revised Prayer Book was annexed to Queen Elizabeth's Act of Uniformity (1558) (1 Eliz. c. 2), but the second Prayer Book of Edward VI., with certain alterations and additions immaterial to this subject, was directed to stand and be in full force from the 24th of June, 1559. The enactment was, however, qualified by the provisos contained in ss. 25 and 26, of which the former is in these words: "Provided always and be it enacted, that such ornaments of the church, and of the ministers thereof, shall be retained and be in use, as were in this Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of King Edward the Sixth, until other order shall be therein taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty, with the advice of her commissioners appointed under the Great Seal of England for causes ecclesiastical, or of the metropolitan of this realm." In this way the directions as to ornaments of the first Prayer Book were kept in force until the order should be taken in the way provided by the Act. The Privy Council have decided (Ridgdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C.) that the advertisements issued by Elizabeth and dealing with the vestments of ministers in 1566 (but not the injunctions of Elizabeth) were a "taking of order" within the Act by the Queen with the advice of the metropolitan.

These advertisements were in these words: "In the ministration of the Holy Communion in cathedral and collegiate churches, the principal minister shall wear a cope, with gospeller and epistoller agreeably; and, at all other prayers to be said at that communion table, to use no copes, but surplices.

"That the dean and prebendaries wear a surplice with a silk hood in the choir; and, when they preach, to use their hoods.

"Item, that every minister saying any public prayers, or ministering the sacraments, or other rites of the Church, shall wear a comely surplice with sleeves, to be provided at the charge of the parish."

Accordingly the Privy Council, holding that the advertisements had the force of law under stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 25, read the order as to vestures in the Book of Advertisements into the 25th section of stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2, and, omitting (for the sake of brevity) all reference to hoods, decided that that section from 1566 to 1662 had the same operation in law as if it had been expressed in these words: "Provided always that such ornaments of the church and of the ministers thereof shall be retained

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

ornaments rubric and was not repealed by the Act of Uniformity of that year, and that consequently they are to be read together. Accordingly, while the general standard of ornaments of the ministers is that established by authority of Parliament by the directions contained in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI., Queen Elizabeth's Act of Uniformity and the further order taken thereunder engraft on this standard a qualification that as to the vestures of parish ministers the surplice, and not the alb, vestment, or tunicle, should be used at all times of their public ministrations, and that a cope may not be used except at the ministration of the Holy Communion in cathedral and collegiate churches (n).

and be in use as were in this Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of King Edward VI., except that the surplice shall be used by the ministers of the church at all times of their public ministrations, and the alb, vestment or tunicle shall not be used, nor shall a cope be used except at the administration of the Holy Communion in cathedral and collegiate churches"; that the 25th section of stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2 has not been repealed; that there is nothing inconsistent between the Rubric of the present Prayer Book and the section, and that the Rubric of 1662 did not make any change in the law. In arriving at this decision the Privy Council relied on evidence that after 1566 vestments, albs and tunicles (copes also in parish churches and in non-collegiate churches) are only mentioned in contemporary documents as things associated with superstition, and to be defaced and destroyed. The advertisements were accepted as law, as having the Queen's authority. They were referred to as of legal authority in several of the Canons of 1571, showing (though those canons were not confirmed by the Crown) the sense of the convocations of both provinces. The 24th and 25th canons of 1603-4 (which received the royal assent) repeated with express reference to the advertisements the substance of their directions as to the use of copes, surplices etc. in cathedral and collegiate churches; and the 58th Canon, which relates to the use of surplices at Holy Communion in parish churches, followed with scarcely any variations the exact words of the advertisements. The Canons of 1640 (also confirmed by the Crown) carry on the public evidence of the same understanding to the time of the Great Rebellion. Since the decision further light has been thrown on these points by historical research, and a large amount of evidence was laid before the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline (Parliamentary paper, 1906, Vol. XXXIII., p. 10) in support of contentions that the decision is incorrect in substance (1) in holding that the ornaments rubric refers as a standard for ornaments to what was authorised by the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. (it being alleged that the standard should be the standard in the second year of Edward VI. before the first Prayer Book came into force), and (2) in holding that the advertisements of 1566 ought to be read with this rubric. The Commission, without dealing with the question, pointed out that the judgments of the Privy Council are open to reconsideration by the court itself, which will not only look carefully at the fresh light of facts not before it on a previous occasion, but will also examine the reasons upon which the previous decision rests and give effect to its own view of the case (see also p. 665, ante).

(n) Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C., which must be taken to lay down the present state of the law as to vestments. It follows from the fact that a cope is a proper vestment at Holy Communion in cathedral and collegiate churches that the cope is not illegal in parish churches on the ground that it has any special doctrinal signification. The following extracts from the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. are taken from Hierurgia Anglicana (1902), Part I., pp. 135, 136, which (pp. 135-235) is a storehouse of information on the subject of ecclesiastical vestments:—"Upon the day, and at the time appointed for the ministration of the Holy Communion, the priest that shall execute the holy ministry, shall put upon him the vesture appointed for that ministration, that is to say, a white albe plain, with a vestment or cope. And where there be many priests or deacons, then so many shall be

A biretta may lawfully be used by the minister during divine service as a protection to the head when needed (o), but the use of a biretta as a vestment in the services of the church is illegal (p).

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

(iv.) Rites and Ceremonies.

1343. The terms "rite" and "ceremony" as used in the Prayer Book are terms of ecclesiastical and ritual art, and are to be construed with reference to their use in the works of writers on ritual unless they receive a different meaning from a comparison of other passages or parts in the Prayer Book or statute in which they are found. There is a legal distinction between a rite and a ceremony; a rite consists in services expressed in words, a ceremony in gestures or acts preceding, accompanying, or following the utterance of those words (q).

Definition of
"rites" and
"ceremonies."

It is not open to a minister of the church, or even to the highest ecclesiastical tribunal of appeal, to draw a distinction, in acts which are a departure from or violation of the rubric, between those which are important and those which appear to be trivial. The object of a Statute of Uniformity is to produce an universal agreement in the worship of Almighty God (r), an object which would be wholly

Trivial violations
of the rubric.

ready to help the priest in the ministration, as shall be requisite; and shall have upon them likewise the vestures appointed for their ministry, that is to say albes with tunicles."

"Though there be none to communicate with the priest, yet these days [Wednesdays and Fridays], after the Litany ended, the priest shall put upon him a plain albe or surplice, with a cope, and say all things at the altar (appointed to be said at the celebration of the Lord's Supper,) until after the offertory."

"And the same order shall be used all other days, whensoever the people be customably assembled to pray in the church, and none disposed to communicate with the priest."

"In the saying or singing of matins and evensong, baptizing and burying, the minister, in parish churches and chapels annexed to the same, shall use a surplice. And in all cathedral churches and colleges, the archdeacons, deans, provosts, masters, prebendaries, and fellows, being graduates, may use in the quire, beside their surplice, such hood as pertaineth to their several degrees, which they have taken in any university within this realm; but in all other places, every minister shall be at liberty to use any surplice or no. It is also seemly, that graduates, when they preach, should use such hood as pertaineth to their several degrees."

"And whensoever the bishop shall celebrate the Holy Communion in the church, or execute any other public ministration, he shall have upon him, beside his rochet, a surplice or albe, and a cope or vestment; and also his pastoral staff in his hand, or else borne or holden by his chaplain."

As to mitres, which are not mentioned in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI, see Hierurgia Anglicana, Part I., pp. 223 et seq.

(o) Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66.

(p) In Heblert (therefore Elphinstone) v. Purchas (1871), L. R. 3 P. O. 605, p. 651, all that was said was: "With respect to the cap called a biretta, which the respondent is said to have carried in his hand, but not to have worn in church, their Lordships would not be justified, upon the evidence before them, in pronouncing that the respondent did an unlawful act." The use of a biretta as a vestment in divine service is unlawful within the principle of the later case of Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C.; see p. 672, ante.

(q) Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 A. & E. 116.

(r) These are the words of the preamble cited in Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 P. C. 365, 382, 383.

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

The rubrics must be observed without omission or addition.

frustrated if each minister, on his own view of the relative importance of the details of the service, were to be at liberty to omit, to add to, or to alter any of those details (s). In cases where there is doubt the Preface to the Prayer Book provides that "the parties that doubt or diversely take anything should always resort to the bishop of the diocese." But in matters which involve what is expressly ordered and prohibited by the rubric the bishop can have no jurisdiction to modify or dispense with the rubrical provisions (t), and in the performance of the services, rites, and ceremonies ordered by the Prayer Book, the directions contained in it must be strictly observed; no omission and no addition can be permitted (u).

(s) Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 P. C. 365, 383.

(t) Ibid., at p. 385. In the case of Incense and Processional Lights before the archbishops at Lambeth Palace (July 31, 1899, Macmillan & Co.'s Official Report), the following opinion was expressed: "The ministrations of the ministers is contained in and prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer. It is there that we find what is the form to be observed in all the offices of public worship. Every clergyman is required by the 38th Canon to use the form in the Book of Common Prayer proscribed, and none other. And the only authority which can bind or authorise the clergyman to make any variation whatever from what is contained in the Book is either an Act of Convocation, legalised when necessary by Parliament, or the order of the Crown, issued with the advice and consent of the metropolitan under the Act of 1559, or a direction of the ordinary under the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 35)."

(u) Westerton v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, p. 187, adopted and approved in Martin v. Mackonochie, supra, at p. 383. The present Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), is entitled "An Act for the uniformity of public prayers, and administrations of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies; and for establishing the form of making, ordaining, and consecrating bishops, priests, and deacons in the Church of England." S. 1, after reciting that "nothing conduceth more to the settling of the peace of the nation, nor to the honour of our religion and the propagation thereof, than a universal agreement in the worship of Almighty God, and to the intent that every person in this realm may certainly know the rule to which he is to conform in public worship and administration of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church of England," enacts that "all ministers shall be bound to say and use the morning prayer, evening prayer, and celebration and administration of both sacraments, and all other the public and common prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the book annexed and joined to the Act, intituled The Book of Common Prayer and administration of the sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the church, according to the Church of England." By s. 13 it is enacted that no form or order of common prayers, administration of sacraments, rites or ceremonies, shall be openly used in any church, chapel or other public place, or in any college or hall in either of the universities, the colleges of Westminster, Winchester or Eton, or any of them, other than what is prescribed and appointed to be used in and by that book. S. 20 enacts that statutes then in force for the uniformity of prayer and administration of the sacraments shall stand in full force and shall be applied for the punishment of all offences contrary to the said laws with relation to the present Prayer Book. By stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. 2, c. 2, s. 27 (the Act of Uniformity), it is enacted "that all laws statutes and ordinances wherein or whereby any other service, administration of sacraments, or common prayer is limited, established or set forth to be used within this realm, or any other the Queen's dominions or countries, shall from henceforth be utterly void and of none effect." It was held in Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. O., that the Act of Uniformity of Charles II. expressly confirms the Act of Uniformity of Elizabeth. As to punishment by admonition, see s. 23 of the latter statute.

This general rule must be interpreted as permitting acts of the minister which are necessarily implied though not defined. Further, the doing of an act before a service cannot be treated as the addition of a ceremony to the service (a).

Sect. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

1844. Universal and unbroken usage is of great force. And so it would be impossible now to contend that singing a hymn at all during the service, in itself, and apart from any interference with the due order of the service or anything objectionable in the hymn sung, is illegal (b). On this principle the use of the words "Glory be to Thee, O God" at the reading of the Gospel in the Communion Service is a lawful addition to the service (c). Similarly the singing of the Agnus Dei immediately after the prayer of consecration and while the administration is proceeding is not an illegal addition to the service (d).

General and unbroken usage.
Hymns.

1845. The rubric which is appended to the service of Holy Communion directs, with the expressed object of taking away all occasion of dissension and superstition which any person has or might have concerning the bread and wine, that it shall suffice that the bread be such as is usual to be eaten, but the best and purest wheat bread that conveniently may be gotten. In this rubric the words "it shall suffice" contain a positive direction (e). It is the composition of the substance employed, and not the shape, that is material, so that, although, if it is averred and proved that the wafer properly so called has been used, the court would hold that an

The Elements

(a) See Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 657, P. C.; and p. 678, post.

(b) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra, at p. 660. Whether or not the origin of the usage is the permission given by stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 7, "to use openly any psalms or prayer taken out of the Bible at any due time, not letting or omitting thereby the service or any part thereof mentioned in the said book," it was, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee, immaterial to inquire.

(c) In the Incense Case before the archbishops the opinion expressed was that the practice is in strictness illegal. "It is quite true that there may be variations which are so brief, so long in use, so unimportant, that a bishop would be justified in refusing to allow a clergyman to be prosecuted because of his use of them. No authority has been found for the short sentences which in many churches the people are accustomed to say or sing immediately before and after the reading of the gospel in the communion office. There is no authority for the practice of the people saying the general thanksgiving aloud with the minister. There is no authority for shortening the exhortation which the minister is to read when giving notice of the Holy Communion. These practices are probably in strictness all illegal; but no bishop would be wise in allowing a prosecution for such unimportant deviations from the strict letter of the law. This, however, cannot be said of the introduction of any ceremony which is conspicuous, not sanctioned by long-continued custom in our Church, and of such a nature as to change the general character and aspect of the service" (Lambeth Opinion, July, 1899, on Incense and Processional Lights (Macmillan & Co.'s Official Report of Opinions, p. 8)). The archbishops pronounced that in their opinion the liturgical use of incense and processional lights was illegal.

(d) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra, at pp. 659—661, overruling Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66, 98, and Martin v. Mackonochie (Second Suit) (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 279. In Clifton v. Biddale (1876), 1 P. D. 316, 340, counsel admitted the illegality when the case was before Lord PENZANCE.

(e) Hebbert v. Purchas (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 605, 666.

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Mixing of the wine with water.

Position of
celebrant.

illegal act had been committed, yet, where it is averred and proved that "bread made in the form of circular wafers instead of bread such as is usual to be eaten" has been used, the accused will be entitled to the benefit of the ambiguity in the form of the charge (f).

The mixing of the wine with water in and as part of the Communion Service is against the law of the Church, but there is no ground for pronouncing the use of a cup mixed beforehand to be an ecclesiastical offence (g).

1346. The rubric prefixed to the Communion Service directs that the priest, standing at the north side of the table, shall say the Lord's Prayer with the Collect following, the people kneeling. This rubric, which has been the subject of much litigation, does not touch matters of doctrine (h). When the terms of the rubric are considered in connection with the circumstances existing at the time it was framed (i), it cannot be regarded as so definitely and unequivocally enjoining that the priest shall, no matter how the table may be placed, stand at that end of the table which faces the north when saying the opening prayers that no other position can be assumed without the commission of an ecclesiastical offence. It does not render obligatory on a clergyman who thinks it desirable during the prayer of consecration to stand at the side of the table, which now ordinarily faces westward, to stand during the earlier

(f) Ridsdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C. See also Hebbert v. Purchas (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 605, and Canon 20 (1603-4), which directs that the churchwardens of every parish, against the time of every communion, shall, at the charge of the parish, with the advice and direction of the minister, provide a sufficient quantity of fine white bread, and of good and wholesome wine etc. The decision in Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66, that it is lawful to administer to the communicants wafer bread which is not such as is usual to be eaten, provided the wafer bread be broken by the priest, is wrong.

(g) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 658, P. C., "the removing from the service the act of mingling, which the judgment in Hebbert v. Purchas (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 605, treated as of no moment, is the removal of the very thing which as an added ceremony was unlawful"; see also Martin v. Muckonochie (1868), L. R. 2 A. & E. 116. In the Incense Case before the archbishops at Lambeth (Macmillan's Official Report of the Opinions, July, 1899, p. 12) the archbishops said: "Though our Lord used the wine of the Passover, which was a mixed cup, there is no record of His having mixed it afresh for the purpose of His sacrament, nor is there any reason to believe that He did so. The mixing of the chalices as part of the ceremonial was therefore omitted, though nothing was said to prevent it being mixed beforehand."

(h) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra, at p. 661. Whatever the position of the priest may be, it is the same whether there is or is not a celebration of the Lord's Supper (ibid., at p. 661).

(i) At the period when the rubric was framed the table was, at the time of the Holy Communion, placed in almost all parish churches lengthwise in the body of the church or chancel, the smaller sides or ends facing east and west, and the longer sides north and south. The rubric was framed with reference to this position of the table. When at a later period the holy table came to be placed altar-wise, a controversy arose as to the position of the priest, which was still being carried on when the present Prayer Book came into force; but the rubric prescribing the position of the priest at the commencement of the Communion Service was left unaltered in its terms, and no attempt was made to solve the controversy.

part of the service at a different part of the table. This does not import that it would be contrary to the law to occupy a position at the north end of the table when saying the opening prayers. It is, however, now settled law that it is not an ecclesiastical offence to stand at the northern part of the side which faces westwards (k).

Although the rubric which directs that "When the priest, standing before the table, hath so ordered the bread and wine, that he may with the more readiness and decency break the bread before the people, and take the cup into his hands, he shall say the prayer of consecration, as followeth," taken literally as it stands applies the actual expression "before the people" to only one of the manual acts prescribed, which are five in number, yet, on its proper construction, the order of the Holy Communion requires that all the manual acts must be performed in such wise as to be visible to the communicants properly placed (l); and it is not a sufficient answer to a charge that they have been rendered invisible to reply that there was no wish or intention to prevent their being seen (m); but a court, if satisfied that the offence will not be repeated, is entitled to accept the assurance of future submission (n).

The celebrant during the prayer of consecration must stand, and not kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated Elements during the reciting of the prayer; and the words "standing before the table" apply to the whole sentence in the rubric, and to all the acts directed to be done. Therefore a change of posture is a violation of the rubric which immediately precedes the prayer of consecration, and constitutes an ecclesiastical offence within the meaning of the Acts of Uniformity (o) and is punishable by admonition (p), and does not belong to the category of cases which, according to the Preface to the Prayer Book, should be referred to the bishop of the diocese for his direction (q).

The elevation of the Elements when consecrated is illegal (r).

SECT. I.
Divine
Service
in General.

Manual acts to be visible to the communicants properly placed.

Posture of celebrant.

Elevation of the Elements.

(k) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 663—665 P. C. (in which Habbert v. Purchas (1871), L. R. 3 P. C. 605, and Ridgdale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C., were considered; see also Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), as reported [1891] P. 9, 23 et seq. (Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury).

(l) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1891] P. 9, 63.

(m) Ibid. It is probable that this decision would be followed by the Privy Council in the future, although the Privy Council in Ridgdale v. Clifton, supra, at p. 343, merely held that "he must not interpose his body so as intentionally to . . . prevent that result."

(n) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra, at p. 699.

(o) (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 4, ss. 1, 13, 20, taken in conjunction with stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2.

(p) Under s. 23 of stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2.

(q) Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 P. C. 365. A monition ordering the respondent to abstain from kneeling and prostrating himself before the consecrated Elements during the prayer of consecration was held to be disobeyed when the ordinary course pursued in the respondent's church was for the celebrant to bow his head down towards the table when the consecrated Elements had been placed thereon and remain some seconds in that position before administering the sacrament, although the knee was not bowed (ibid., at p. 379). As to what is and is not disobedience to a monition, see also Martin v. Mackonochie (1869), L. R. 3 P. C. 52.

(r) In Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 A. & E. 116, it was held by the Arches Court that it is unlawful for a clerk in holy orders to elevate the

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

A priest who is proved to have consecrated and received the Elements when less than three persons (the number required by the rubric as a minimum (s)) communicated with him, must establish that he did in fact believe that the requisite number would communicate with him before he can set up any exculpation based on the imperfect state of his knowledge (t).

Notices.

1347. It is unlawful for a minister to announce that there will be "a high celebration of the Holy Eucharist," the epithet "high" having no sanction from the rubric; and it is unlawful for a minister to give notice that any holy days are to be observed which are not found after the Preface to the Prayer Book under the head of "A Table of all the Feasts that are to be observed in the Church of England throughout the year" (u). An omission to give notice of the holy days or fasting days to be observed in the week following is an ecclesiastical offence (a). Although in strictness it is not lawful to announce anything except that which is prescribed by the Prayer Book, without at least the authority of the ordinary, yet paten and cup above the head after consecration of the Elements. And in Martin v. Mackonochie (1869), L. R. 3 P. C. 52, when it appeared that the elevation for which the respondent had been article and complained of in the court below was an elevation above his head, which was the only mode of elevation pleaded in the article after it had been reformed to have been practised by him, and was therefore that prohibited by the sentence of the court below, but that the respondent had substituted an elevation only to the level of his head (in the state of the pleadings the illegality of the elevation since practised not being raised), it was held by the Privy Council that the respondent had technically complied with the terms of the original sentence and order and could not be held to have disobeyed the monition in that respect. The Privy Council, however, disapproved and discountenanced any elevation of the Elements whatever. And in Martin v. Mackonochie (1870), L. R. 3 P. C. 409, the Privy Council seems to have considered that as the 28th of the Articles of Religion prohibits all elevation of the Elements by declaring that "the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped," it is not necessary to article and describe a particular elevation during the prayer of consecration, but sufficient to state and prove that such elevation occurred during the administration of the Holy Communion.

(s) See p. 692, post.

(t) Clifton v. Ridsdale (1876), 1 P. D. 316, where it was proved in a proceeding under the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), that a like infringement had taken place on several previous occasions during the respondent's incumbency, and that no steps were taken by him to prevent its recurrence, and the Court of Arches admonished the respondent to obey the rubric. The rubrics do not direct that non-communicants should retire from the church. Lord PENZANCE suggested (ibid., at p. 348) that the most formal method of procedure would be for the clergyman to apply to his ordinary, and with his leave to read out during the service a notice describing what those who intended to communicate should do to declare themselves; but this formality would seem to be unnecessary, in spite of the judgment in Westerton v. Liddell, Moore's Special Report (cited in Clifton v. Ridsdale at p. 348), as it is improbable that any court would hold that an announcement from the pulpit, even without the leave of the ordinary, that communicants should conveniently place themselves apart from the rest was unlawful.

(u) Stephinston v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 68, 111, 112, where the defendant was admonished to abstain from giving notices of such holy days as the feasts of St. Leonard, St. Martin, and St. Britius.

(a) The rubric is imperative (ibid., at p. 111); see p. 690, post.

notices which concern the congregation and ordinary church business and are not contrary to the spirit of the Prayer Book would seem to be unobjectionable (b).

Sec. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

1848. To cause lighted candles to be held one on each side of the priest when reading the gospel, such lighted candles not being required for the purpose of giving light, is illegal as an addition to the ceremonies prescribed by the law (c).

Lighted candles.

The ceremonial lighting and burning of candles placed on a ledge or shelf over the holy table, and of candles placed on each side of the holy table, is, during the Communion Service, illegal (d). But the court will not now find sufficient warrant for declaring that the law is broken by the mere fact of two lighted candles, when not wanted for the purpose of giving light, standing on the holy table continuously through the service, nothing having been performed or done, which comes under the definition of a ceremony, by the presence of two still lights alight before it begins and until after it ends (e).

(b) Compare the decision of the Privy Council as to hymns in Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 660, P. O.

(c) Sumner v. Wix (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 58, 62.

(d) Ibid., at pp. 64, 65. Weight was apparently given to the Injunctions of Edward VI. in Westerton v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, but they were rejected in Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 P. O. 365, where they were relied upon for the purpose of showing that the burning of two candles to represent the true light of the world was legal. The Injunctions of Edward VI. only applied to the case of lights on the "high altar."

(e) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 644, 660, P. O.: "It is not charged that there was any act of lighting or carrying lights about, nor was there any evidence of their use as a matter of ceremony, unless it be afforded by the mere fact that they were alight during the Communion Service. If the proof corresponded with the allegation in all respects, it would be matter for grave consideration how far the archbishops' elaborate exposition of the history of the question, and in particular the decision of two learned judges in 1628" (Sir James Whitelocke; State Papers, Domestic Series, Charles I., Vol. CXIII., 19, Calendar, p. 259, cited in Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1891] P. 9, at p. 83) "and 1629" (Sir Henry Yelverton, State Papers, Domestic Series, Charles I., Vol. CXLVII., 15, 35, Cosin, Corresp. I. lxxxvii.; cited ibid., p. 84), "have afforded new materials for consideration since the decision of this Board in Martin v. Mackonochie (1868), L. R. 2 P. O. 365, upon the same subject; but their Lordships are unable to see that the charge against the bishop raises the same question." The Privy Council in Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra, attached importance to the passage in the judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie, supra, at p. 387: "There is a clear and obvious distinction between the presence in the church of things inert and unused and the active use of the same things as a part of the administration of a sacrament or of a ceremony. Incense, water, a banner, a torch, a candle, and a candlestick may be part of the furniture or ornaments of the church, but the censuring of persons and things, or, as was said by the Dean of the Arches, the bringing in incense at the beginning or during the celebration and removing it at the close of the celebration of the Eucharist, the symbolical use of water in baptism, or its ceremonial mixing with the sacramental wine; the waving or carrying the banner; the lighting, cremation, and symbolical use of the torch or candle—these acts give a life and meaning to what is otherwise inexpressive, and the act must be justified, if at all, as part of a ceremonial law." The decision of the Privy Council in Martin v. Mackonochie, supra, was (1) that it is unlawful to place lighted candles on the communion table during Holy Communion when not required for the purpose of giving light (see also Westerton v. Liddell and Read v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report), as the use

SECT. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.

Processions.
Processional lights.

Incense.

1349. Processions proceeding round the interior of the church immediately before the commencement or immediately after the conclusion of morning or evening service, so conducted as to constitute an additional rite or ceremony in connection with the service, are illegal (f). There is no authority for carrying lights in procession (g).

1350. The use of incense in the public worship and as a part of that worship is not enjoined nor permitted by the law of the Church of England. If used at all it must be used to sweeten the church and outside the worship altogether. Even now the liturgical use of incense is not by law permanently excluded from the Church's ritual. The section in the Act of Elizabeth which allows the Crown with the consent of the Archbishop of Canterbury to order new ceremonies does not forbid the inclusion of the use of incense in such new ceremonies if such are ordered (h).

of lighted candles, if intended as a ceremony or ceremonial act, is not among the ceremonies which are retained in the Prayer Book and must therefore be included among those that are abolished and prohibited by stat. (1538) 1 Eliz. c. 2, ss. 4, 27, which statute is applicable to the present Prayer Book, and by which the royal injunctions issued in the first year of Edward VI. (1547), even if they possessed statutable authority, were, so far as they could be taken to authorise the use of lights as a ceremony or ceremonial act, abrogated and repealed; and (2) that if candlesticks and candles were intended to be used as ornaments when lighted and used with reference to a service in which they are to act as symbols and illustrations, they are not ornaments within the meaning of the rubric, as they are not prescribed by the authority of Parliament as mentioned in the rubric to the first Prayer Book; nor are the injunctions of 1547 "authority of Parliament" within that rubric; nor are lighted candles subsidiary to the service, for they do not facilitate, much less are they necessary to, the service; nor can a separate and independent ornament, previously in use, be said to be consistent with a rubric which is silent as to it, and which, by necessary implication, abolishes what it does not retain. As to the construction of the rubric, see, however, Rid-dale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C. In Re St. Mark's, Wimbledon, Wimbledon (Vicar and Churchwardens) v. Eden, [1908] P. 167, 173, the Chancellor of Southwark, having referred to the refusal of Dr. Lushington in Worster v. Liddell, supra, to order the removal of candlesticks and candles placed on the holy table, stated that it was held in the court of the archbishop in Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), supra, that such lights are lawful, and he refused to condemn as illegal church furniture which was otherwise perfectly innocent merely on the ground that it might be used in a way which that authority pronounced to be illegal. See also Re St. Paul's, Camden Square (1898), 14 T. L. R. 85.

(f) Elphinstone v. Purchas (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 66.

(g) See the opinion of the archbishops as to processional lights (Lambeth, 1899). "It is obvious," said the archbishops, "that precisely the same line of reasoning is applicable to the case of processions carrying lights as we have applied to the case of incense. There is no authority for such processions, and they are, therefore, neither enjoined nor permitted. To light up the church for the purpose of adding to its beauty or its dignity stands on the same footing with hanging up banners, decorating with flowers or with holly or the like. The ceremonies of carrying lights about have a different character. And in this case, as in that of incense, we are obliged to request the clergy to discontinue what the law of the Church of England does not permit: the carrying of lights in procession. And in this decision we have the support of the late Archbishop Benson in his judgment in the case of the Bishop of Lincoln" (Opinion of the Archbishops, Macmillan's Official Report, p. 14).

(h) The above remarks are taken from the Opinion of the archbishops on the liturgical use of incense and the carrying of lights in procession pronounced at 1351. Anything like the ceremony of ablution, such as the pre-Reformation practice, according to which the minister after receiving the communion in both kinds himself long before he gave it to other persons went through forms of washing and wiping the chalice and his own fingers with other acts and with several prayers in places and in postures prescribed for him and for other ministers, as a distinct and integral part of the service still in progress is illegal; but the reverent consumption of what remains and ablution of the vessels are contemplated by the rubric. The consumption of the remains is ordered to be done "immediately after the blessing," when, upon the true construction of the rubric, the service is at an end; and the cleansing of the vessels is not an improper completion of this act which is ordered to follow the close of the service without any break or interval (i).

SMO. 1.
Divine
Service
in General.
—
Ceremony of ablution.

The minister would most properly complete the consumption of the consecrated elements at the credence, or in the place where they had been prepared. But the minister, who after the service is ended and the benediction given, in order that no part of the consecrated Elements should be carried out of the church, cleanses the vessels of all remains in a reverent way, without ceremony or prayers, before finally leaving the holy table does not subject himself to penal consequences by so doing (k).

1352. The practice commonly spoken of as reservation takes three distinct forms. In the first place it is sometimes the practice to treat sick persons who are not in the church, but are living close by, as if they were part of the congregation, and at the time of the administration to the communicants generally to take the Elements out of the church to them as well as to those who are actually present. It has been claimed that this is not reservation at all, because the administration goes on without interruption, and it cannot be said that what is sent in this way is part of what remains after the service is over. The second form of the practice is, instead of consuming all that remains of the consecrated Elements as the rubric directs, to keep a portion back and to administer this portion to people known to be sick at some later period of the day. Thirdly, the Elements after consecration are sometimes reserved, not only to be used for those who are known to be sick at the time, but to be used for any case of sudden emergency which may occasion a demand for the sacrament in the

Reservation
of the sacrament.

Lambeth Palace, July 31, 1899 (published by Macmillan & Co.). It had been held by the Court of Arches in Martin v. Mackintosh (1868), L. R. 2 A. & E. 116, 215, that "to bring in incense at the beginning or during the celebration and remove it at the close of the celebration of the Eucharist" is "a distinct ceremony, additional, and not even indirectly incident to the ceremonies ordered by the Book of Common Prayer." In Sumner v. Wier (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 58, it was held that the ceremonial use of incense immediately before the celebration of the Holy Communion, so as to be preparatory or subsidiary to the celebration of the Holy Communion, is unlawful.

(i) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1891] P. 9, 30—32; [1892] A. C. 644, 659, P. C.

(k) Ibid.

SECT. 1.
Divine
Services
in General.

Sign of the cross.

course of the week. The Church of England does not at present allow reservation in any form (l).

1353. The making the sign of the cross during the absolution and the benediction is a ceremony additional to the ceremonies of the Church and unlawful (m).

SECT. 2.—Baptism.

Nature of,
and by whom administered

1354. Baptism is the sacrament by which a person is admitted into the Church of Christ (a). Like the sacrament of the Lord's

(l) Opinion of Archbishop Temple, Lambeth, May, 1900 (Macmillan & Co.'s Report, pp. 1, 2 and 12); see also the Opinion of Archbishop MacLagan, Lambeth, May, 1900 (Macmillan & Co.'s Report). Archbishop Temple relied chiefly on the canon which requires that every clergyman shall promise that in the administration of the sacraments he will use the form prescribed in the Prayer Book and none other, except so far as shall be otherwise ordered by lawful authority. He stated that there is no allusion to the practice of reservation except in the close of the 28th Article, where it is said that the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped (see also Article 25, which states that "the sacraments were not ordered of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about, but that we should use them," as bearing on the subject). Against this was urged the practice of the early Church, and the archbishop stated that as early as the time of Justin Martyr the first form of reservation is mentioned as common, and this not merely for the sick, but for any who were absent though in good health; and that the practice of reserving in the second and third manner can certainly be found in not much later times. He was therefore of opinion that the practice was not wrong in itself. But the Church of England by the 34th Article had authority to change the mode of administering the Holy Communion to the sick, and he was of opinion that the 28th Article abolished the practice altogether. The Archbishop of Canterbury, it seems, did not rely on the rubric that "if any remain of that which was consecrated, it shall not be carried out of the church." As to this the Archbishop of York, at p. 12, said that it is quite possible, and there may be some reason to believe, that this was partly intended to meet a possible irreverence, of which actual instances had occurred by the clergyman taking to his own home for his own use even the consecrated bread and wine which had not been used in the Communion Service. The expression therefore, he said, may not apply directly to the question of reservation, but in the absence of any provision for reservation the phrase must evidently cover the whole of the remaining consecrated bread and wine. He was of opinion that the practice of reservation was deliberately abandoned at the time of the Reformation; see ibid., at p. 15. All the Prayer Books after the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. have omitted the service for the reservation for the sick. A tabernacle for the reception of the reserved sacrament is not a lawful church ornament (Kensil v. St. Ethelburga, Bishopsgate Within (Rector), [1900] P. 80). The Archb. Court of Canterbury decided in Oxford (Bishop) v. Henly, [1907] P. 88, that reservation of the sacrament is illegal, and directed a monition to issue to the incumbent requiring him to abstain from keeping or causing and permitting to be kept in his church, either over the altar or elsewhere, the consecrated Elements not consumed at or immediately after the celebration, and also from keeping burning, or causing or permitting to be kept burning, a light in front of the consecrated Elements.

(m) Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), [1891] P. 9.

(a) Articles of Religion (1562), 26, 27; Gib. Cod. 359—372; Ayl. Par. 102—106. It is not only a sign and distinguishing mark of the Christian profession, but also a sign of regeneration or new birth, whereby, as by an instrument, they that receive baptism rightly are grafted into the Church, the promises of the forgiveness of sin, and of their adoption to be the sons of God by the Holy Ghost are visibly signed and sealed, faith is confirmed and grace increased by virtue of prayer to God (Articles of Religion (1562), 27; Book of

SECT. 2.
Baptism.

Supper, it ought properly to be administered by persons in priests' orders (b). But the duties of a deacon include the baptising of infants in the absence of the priest (c); and baptism by a dissenting minister or by a layman or a woman in the name of the Trinity is good and effectual (d). The normal mode of administering the sacrament is by immersion in water; but the affusion or sprinkling of water is sufficient (e). Except in cases of urgent necessity it should be administered in church (f) and upon a Sunday or other holy day, so that a large number of people may testify to the reception of the baptized person into the Church and be reminded of their own profession in baptism; but children may, if necessary, be baptized on any other day (g). The rite should be administered immediately after the second lesson at morning or evening prayer (h). The act of baptism is immediately followed by the signing of the cross on the baptized person's forehead (i). A person brought to be baptized who has been already baptized is conditionally rebaptized, if the validity of the former baptism is doubtful, or, if there is no doubt about it, is simply received into the Church by a formal service and with the signing of the cross (k).

1355. Every child brought to be baptized requires, if a male, two godfathers and one godmother, and if a female, one godfather and two godmothers (l). Godparents must have received Holy Communion (m). Their part in the baptismal service is prescribed

Godparents.

Common Prayer (Offices for Public Baptism of Infants, Private Baptism of Children, and Baptism of such as are of Riper Years); Ayl. Par. 104; Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop) (1850), Moore's Report, 1st C.).

(b) Book of Common Prayer (Form of Ordering of Priests).

(c) Ibid. (Form of Making of Deacons); Ayl. Par. 104.

(d) Ayl. Par. 104; Kemp v. Wickes (1809), 3 Phillim. 264; Escott v. Martin (1842), 4 Moo. P. C. C. 104; Nurse v. Henslowe (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 272; Titchmarsh v. Chapman (1844), ibid., 370; Cope v. Barber (1872), L. R. 7 O. P. 393, per WILLER, J., at p. 402.

(e) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric in Office for Public Baptism of Infants); Ayl. Par. 103. Public baptism must be administered at the font (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 81).

(f) The Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts (see note (i), p. 444, ante) make provision for the administration of baptism in churches or chapels of distinct and separate parishes, district parishes, district chapelries, and consolidated chapelries (Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 27—29; Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 11, 16, 17; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 17), in extra parochial places (Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 18), in churches or chapels with particular districts (Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), ss. 10, 14; Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 18), in Peel districts (New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), ss. 11, 13), and in churches of new ecclesiastical parishes (ibid., s. 15; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 11, 12, 14, 15).

(g) Book of Common Prayer (Rubrics before Offices for Public Baptism of Infants and of such as are of Riper Years).

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. (Offices for Baptism); Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 30.

(k) Book of Common Prayer (Office for Private Baptism of Children).

(l) Ibid. (Rubric before Office for Public Baptism of Infants).

(m) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 29.

SECT. 2.
Baptism.

in the Book of Common Prayer (n). No parent is to be urged to be present at the baptism, nor can he be admitted as godfather for his own child (o).

Duty of minister to baptize.

1356. A minister must not refuse or delay either to baptize the child of a parishioner brought to him for the purpose on a Sunday or holy day (p), or to go and baptize, when desired so to do, an unbaptized infant in the parish who is lying weak and in danger of death (q).

Register to be kept by the minister in every parish.

1357. The minister of every parish (r) is required to keep a register of the public and private baptisms performed in the parish (s) in a book provided for the purpose by the King's printer at the expense of the parish (t), which must be preserved by the minister in a proper locked iron chest in a dry and secure place in his house of residence, if he is resident in the parish, or in the parish church (a). The prescribed particulars of every baptism, whether public or private, are to be entered in the register book by the minister as soon as possible after its solemnisation, and in no case later than seven days thereafter unless he is unavoidably prevented from so doing (b).

(n) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 29. They must not make any answer or speech other than what is prescribed (ibid.).

(o) Ibid. In 1865 the Canterbury Convocation, with the royal licence, framed a canon repealing the restriction on parents being godparents to their own children. But the York Convocation did not concur in their action, and the canon was not ratified by the Sovereign.

(p) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 68. The penalty for such refusal or delay is suspension for three months (ibid.).

(q) Ibid., 69. If in consequence of such refusal or delay the infant dies unbaptized, the minister is to be suspended for three months, and until he acknowledges his fault and promises not wittingly to repeat it (ibid.). But where there is a curate or substitute, the obligation rests on him, and not on the incumbent (ibid.).

(r) Including chapelries where baptism is lawfully performed (Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 1). The provisions of the Act extend, so far as circumstances permit, to cathedral and collegiate churches and chapels of colleges and hospitals (ibid., s. 20).

(s) Ibid., s. 1, modifying Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 70.

(t) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 2.

(a) Ibid., s. 6. As to unlawfully destroying, defacing, or injuring any register of baptisms and forging or fraudulently altering any entry therein or any certified copy thereof, or knowingly and unlawfully inserting any false entry therein or in any certified copy thereof, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 741. A minister incurs no penalty if he discovers an error in the form or substance of the entry in the register of any baptism solemnised by him and within one calendar month after the discovery corrects the erroneous entry according to the truth of the case by entry in the margin, without any alteration or obliteration of the original entry, and signs the marginal entry, adding the date of the correction, in the presence of the parent or parents of the child baptized, or, in case of their death or absence, in the presence of the churchwardens or chapelwardens, who are to attest the correction and signature (Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66), s. 21). The minister must certify the correction in the copy of the register transmitted by him to the registrar of the diocese (ibid.; see p. 687, post).

(b) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), ss. 1, 3, Sched. A; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 70.

SECT. 2.
Baptism

Baptism
elsewhere than in parish
church.

1358. When a baptism is solemnised by another minister elsewhere than in the church of a parish which has its own register of baptisms, he must, on the same or the next day, transmit a certificate of the baptism, in the prescribed form, to the minister of that parish or his curate, who is to make an entry of the baptism in the register noting that the entry is made according to the certificate (c).

If the baptism is solemnised in an extra parochial place where there is no church or chapel, the officiating minister may within one month thereafter deliver to the minister of such adjoining parish as the ordinary directs a memorandum of the baptism signed by a parent of the child and containing the prescribed particulars, and the memorandum is to be entered by the minister to whom it is delivered in the register of his parish and is to form part thereof (d).

1359. Copies of the register are to be annually made by or under the direction of the minister of the parish, and are to be signed by him and attested by the churchwardens, or one of them, and transmitted by them on or before the 1st of June in every year to the registry of the diocese to be there recorded and kept (e).

Transmission
of copies of the register to the diocesan registry.

1360. Searches of the register may be made at all reasonable times, and certified copies must be given when required; and the register can be produced as evidence in a court of law (f).

Searches and copies of the register.

(c) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 4, Sched. D. This course must be followed in the case of a Peel district under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), where the minister is authorised to baptize under s. 11 of the Act, until the district becomes a new ecclesiastical parish under s. 15.

(d) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 10.

(e) Ibid., ss. 6—9, 11, 12, 17, 20, Sched. E.

(f) Ibid., s. 5; Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 35; Anon. (1733), 2 Barn. (K. B.) 269. When the birth of a child has been registered without a name or with a name which is altered at its baptism, the name given at its baptism may, within twelve months after the registration of the birth, be inserted in the register of births on delivery to the registrar or superintendent registrar of a certificate in the prescribed form signed by the minister or person who performed the baptism, who is required to deliver such certificate on demand on payment of a fee not exceeding 1s. (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 88), ss. 8, 43, Sched. I.). The fees for searches and certified copies of entries in any register of baptisms are 1s. for every search extending over a period of not more than one year and 6d. additional for every additional year, and 2s. 6d. for every single certificate (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 35). The duty of 1d., which may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, cancelled by the person signing the copy or extract before delivery thereof, is to be paid by the person requiring the same on every certified copy or extract from any register of baptisms, except (1) a copy or extract furnished pursuant to and for the purposes of an Act of Parliament, or furnished to a general or superintending registrar under any general regulation; and (2) a copy or extract, for which the person giving the same is not entitled to any fee or reward (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 1, 64, and schedule, Copy or Extract, Certified). The age of a person cannot be proved by the date of his birth entered in the register of his baptism (Wiken v. Law (1821), 3 Stark. 63; R. v. Clapham (1829), 4 O. & P. 29). Whether the register of the baptism of a person is evidence of the place of his birth depends upon whether it is accompanied with proof of

ECCLIASTICAL LAW.

SECT. 2. Baptism.

No fees.

1361. By the general ecclesiastical law, baptism, being a sacrament, was required to be administered free of charge in the absence of a special local custom to the contrary (g); and now, by express enactment, no fee or reward may be demanded by any minister, clerk in orders, parish clerk, vestry clerk, warden or other person, for the administration or registration of baptism (h).

SECT. 3.—Confirmation.

What is, and when to be administered.

1362. Confirmation is the laying on of hands by the bishop upon persons who are baptized and instructed in the Church Catechism and are come to years of discretion (i). The godparents of baptized infants are to take care that they are brought to the bishop to be confirmed so soon as they can say the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments, and are further instructed in the Church Catechism (j); and persons baptized when of riper years should be confirmed by the bishop as soon as conveniently may be after their baptism (k). Ministers having cure of souls are to do their best to procure and prepare as many as possible for confirmation when the bishop has fixed a time for it, and are to take care other circumstances (R. v. Creech St. Michael's (Inhabitants) (1774), Burr. S. C. 765; R. v. North Peltherton (Inhabitants) (1826), 5 B. & C. 508). Where owing to the infirmity of the minister a baptism was not entered in the register at the time, but the parish clerk kept a memorandum of it on a slip of paper from which the succeeding incumbent afterwards entered it in the register, neither the entry nor the memorandum was admitted as evidence of the baptism (Doe d. Warren v. Bray (1828), 8 B. & C. 813). As to admitting in evidence registers not duly kept and copies of registers, see Walker v. Wingfield (1812), 18 Ves. 443, per Lord Eldon, L.C. In Huet v. Le Mesurier (1786), 1 Cox. Eq. Cas. 275, a copy of a register of a person's baptism in Guernsey was not admitted as evidence of his being of age. As to knowingly and unlawfully giving a false certificate of baptism, or certifying a writing to be a copy or extract from a register of baptisms knowing the same or the part of the register of which it is a copy or extract to be false in any material particular, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 742. As to registration of births generally, see title REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

(g) Ayl. Par. 106; Burdeanz v. Lancaster (1698), 1 Salk. 332; St. David's (Bishop) v. Lucy (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 447, per Holt, C.J., at p. 450; Andrews v. Cawthorne (1745), Willes, 536, 539, n.

(h) Baptismal Fees Abolition Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 36), s. 1. An exception was made by the Act in favour of the then holder of an office who was at the time of the passing of the Act entitled by statute to demand such fees (ibid.). The taking or demanding of an illegal fee is an ecclesiastical offence (Burgoyne v. Free (1829), 2 Hag. Ecc. 456, 464–466). As to fees for certificates of baptism, see note (f), p. 687, ante.

(i) Book of Common Prayer (Order of Confirmation); Articles of Religion (1562), 25; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 60; Gib. Cod. 375–379. Persons at their confirmation openly before the Church ratify and confirm what their godparents promised for them in baptism, and promise by the grace of God to endeavour faithfully to observe what they have so assented to; and the bishop lays his hands upon them, praying over them and blessing them (Book of Common Prayer (Order of Confirmation); Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 60). They are to have as a witness of their confirmation one godfather or godmother, who must be a communicant (Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Catechism); Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 29).

(j) Book of Common Prayer (Exhortation at the end of the Office for Public Baptism of Infants; Rubric at the end of the Catechism).

(k) Ibid. (Rubric at the end of the Office for Public Baptism of such as are of Riper Years).

that those who are presented for it to the bishop can render an account of their faith according to the Church Catechism (l)

SECT. 3.
Confirmation.

1363. The bishop may at confirmation for good reason add to or alter the christian name of a person who is confirmed (m).

Change of name.

SECT. 4.—Holy Communion.

1364. Holy Communion is the sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ and of redemption by His death (n). It cannot be consecrated and administered by a person who has not been episcopally ordained priest (o).

What is, and by whom administered.

1365. Holy Communion is to be administered in all cathedral and collegiate churches and colleges where there are many priests and deacons on every Sunday (p), and in all cathedral and collegiate churches upon principal feast days (q); and the priests and deacons in those churches are all to receive the Communion every Sunday at least, unless they have a reasonable cause to the contrary (r); and they and the singing men and all others on the foundation are to receive it at any rate four times in every year (s). And in all colleges and halls within the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge it is to be administered on the first or second Sunday of every month, and is to be received by all the masters, fellows, scholars, and other students, and all the officers and servants who are members of the Church of England (a), at least four times in each year (b).

Time of administration.

(l) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 61. It is the canonical duty of the bishop of every diocese, by himself or his suffragan, to administer confirmation in the course of his visitation (see p. 409. ante) every third year, or, if unavoidably prevented from so doing, in the following year (ibid., 60).

(m) Co. Litt. 3 a; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 484. When this is desired, the bishop, in his prayer at the laying on of hands, mentions the person by the new or altered name, and at the conclusion of the rite signs a certificate of his having confirmed the person by that name, the effect of which is afterwards noted in the register of the person's baptism. As to change of name generally, see title NAME, CHANGE OF.

(n) It is variously called the most comfortable Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, the Sacrament of the Altar, the Supper and Table of the Lord and the Communion and partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ (stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, preamble). By it those who rightly, worthily, and with faith receive the bread and the cup of blessing partake of the Body and Blood of Christ (ibid., s. 1; Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office); Articles of Religion (1562), 28–31; Sheppard v. Bennett (Second Appeal) (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 371).

(o) Act of Uniformity, 1562 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), s. 10. The penalty for every offence against this restriction is (1) £100, payable as to one half to the Crown and as to the remaining half equally between the poor of the parish where the offence is committed and the person or persons suing for it in a court of law; and (2) disability to be ordained priest for a year thereafter (ibid.). As to the vesture of the priest in celebrating Holy Communion, see p. 672, ante.

(p) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office).

(q) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 24.

(r) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office).

(s) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 24.

(a) Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), s. 3.*

(b) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 23. The masters and fellows, especially those who have pupils, are to be careful that all the pupils and students who

SECT. 4.
Holy Communion.

In parish churches and chapels, where the sacraments are administered, Holy Communion is to be administered by the minister so often and at such times as that every communicant may perform his duty (c) of communicating at least three times in the year, of which Easter is to be one (d). The order for Morning Prayer, the Litany, and the Communion Office may be used together or in varying order as separate services (e).

Provision for Communion.

1366. The churchwardens of every parish, under the direction of the minister, are to provide a sufficient quantity of fine white bread and good wine for every Communion, and the wine is to be brought to the communion table in a clean and sweet standing-pot or stoop of pewter or some purer metal (f).

Notice of and intention to partake.

1367. Whenever a minister intends to administer Holy Communion, he is to give warning thereof to his parishioners publicly in the church at morning prayer on the Sunday or on some holy day immediately preceding (g); and the rubric directs that so many as intend to be partakers thereof are to signify their names to him at least some time the day before (h).

Notices
during the Communion
Service.

1368. After the Nicene Creed in the Communion Office the minister is to declare what holy days or fasting days are to be observed in the week following, and give notice of the Communion if there is occasion for it (i); and nothing is to be proclaimed or published in church during divine service but by the minister, nor anything by him but what is prescribed in the rules of the Book of Common Prayer or enjoined by the King or by the ordinary (k).

Sermon.

1369. The sermon, which follows, is not itself part of the administration of Holy Communion (l).

are members of the Church of England are carefully instructed in religion, and that they frequent divine service and sermons and receive the Communion (ibid.; Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), ss. 3—5).

(c) See p. 481, ante.

(d) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office); Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 21.

(e) Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 35), s. 5.

(f) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 20; Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office); Franklyn v. St. Cross (Muster) (1721), Bunb. 78, 79. It suffices that the bread is such as is usually eaten; so as it be the best and purest wheat bread that can conveniently be got (ibid.; Riddale v. Clifton (1877), 2 P. D. 276, P. C.). As to the use of wafers, see p. 677, ante.

(g) Stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 8; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 22; Book of Common Prayer (Rubrics in the Communion Office).

(h) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Communion Office).

(i) Ibid. (Rubric in Communion Office).

(k) Ibid.; Parish Notices Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 45), s. 5. The rubric adds that banns of matrimony are to be then published; but this has been altered by the Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 2 (Wynn v. Davies (1835), 1 Curt. 69, per Sir HERBERT JENNER, at p. 81). The rubric also directs that briefs, citations, and excommunications shall be then read. But this direction is abrogated by the Parish Notices Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 45), s. 4; see note (v); p. 660, ante. As to notices relating to ordinary church business, see p. 680, ante.

(l) Re Robinson, Wright v. Tugwell, [1897] 1 Ch. 85, 98, C. A. Therefore preaching in a black gown is not illegal (ibid.).

SECT. I.
Holy Communion.
Offertory.

1370. While the offertory sentences are being read the deacons, churchwardens, or other fit persons appointed in that behalf (m) receive the alms for the poor and other devotions of the people in a decent basin provided for the purpose by the parish, and reverently bring it to the priest, who humbly presents it and places it upon the holy table (n). After the service the money given at the offertory is to be disposed of to such pious and charitable uses as the minister and churchwardens think fit; and if they disagree, it is to be disposed of as the ordinary appoints (o).

1371. A minister, when he celebrates the communion, is first to receive the sacrament himself (p) and then to administer it to the people in both kinds, delivering both the bread and the wine to every communicant severally (q). He is not without lawful cause to deny it to any person who devoutly and humbly desires it (r). But he is not wittingly to administer it (1) to any who do not kneel, under pain of suspension (s); nor (2) under the like pain to any who refuse to be present at public prayer according to the order of the Church of England; nor (3) to any who are common and notorious depravers of the Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, or of the orders, rites and ceremonies therein prescribed, or of anything contained in the Forms of Ordering of Priests and Bishops or in the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion (t), or who speak against or deprave the sovereign authority of the King in causes ecclesiastical, unless in the prescribed manner they acknowledge repentance for their fault and promise not to repeat it (u); nor (4) to any who are open and notorious evil livers, or have wronged their neighbours by word or deed so that the congregation be thereby offended, until they have openly declared as well their repentance and amendment of living, as also, in case of

Order of
service.

(m) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric in Communion Office). The appointment of another fit person may be made by the priest (Cope v. Barber (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 393, per WILLES, J., at p. 403). The "other fit person" refers to a layman (ibid., per WILLES, J., at p. 403), and, though a priest or bishop may make the collection (ibid., per WILLES, J., at p. 403), he, in doing so, performs a lay function, and is not ministering or celebrating any sacrament, divine service, rite or office, within the meaning of the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2 (Cope v. Barber, supra).

(n) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric in the Communion Office).

(o) Ibid. (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office); Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 6 (as to churches of district chapelries and consolidated chapelries).

(p) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 21.

(q) Ibid.; stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 8.

(r) Stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 8; Clovell v. Cardinall (1661), 1 Sid. 34; Henley v. Burstow (1666), 1 Keb. 947; Jenkins v. Cook (1876), 1 P. D. 80, P. C.; Swayne v. Benson (1889), 6 T. L. R. 7. He cannot refuse it to parties whose marriage is valid as a civil contract under the Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 47) (Banister v. Thompson, [1908] P. 362; S. C. on rule for prohibition sub nom. R. v. Dibdin (1909), 26 T. L. R. 150, C.A.).

(s) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 27; Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office).

(t) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 27; Jenkins v. Cook, supra.

(u) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 27.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

SECT. 4. having wronged their neighbours, their having made, or their intention to make, compensation for the wrong (x).
Holy Communion. In every case of repelling an offender from Communion the minister must, upon complaint, or upon being required by the ordinary, signify the cause to him and obey his order and direction in the matter (y); and in case of repelling a person for open and notorious evil living, or for having wronged a neighbour, whether at the time of Communion or by warning him not to present himself at the Lord's table, the minister must within fourteen days report the circumstances to the ordinary (a).

Number of communicants. 1372. There is to be no Communion unless there is a convenient number to communicate with the priest, at his discretion; nor, even if there be not more than twenty qualified communicants in the parish, unless four, or at least three, communicate with him (b).

Administration in private houses. 1373. The Holy Communion is not to be administered in private houses, except in cases of necessity when anyone who is desirous of partaking of it is unable from weakness to attend the church or is dangerously ill (c).

Penalties for depraving Holy Communion. 1374. A person who depraves or treats contemptuously the sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, either by word or in any other manner, may be indicted within three months after having committed the offence, and if found guilty when tried before the justices at quarter sessions, is liable to imprisonment and fine at the King's pleasure (d).

SECT. 5.—Holy Matrimony.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Right of Marriage.

Nature and conditions of. 1375. Holy matrimony is the estate into which a man and a woman enter when they consent and contract to cohabit with each (x) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Communion Office); Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 26; Jenkins v. Cook (1876), 1 P. D. 80, P. C.; Bunister v. Thompson, [1908] P. 362; R. v. Diddin (1909), 26 T. L. R. 150, O. A. In such cases the minister, if he knows of the facts, is to warn the offenders beforehand not to presume to come to the Lord's table until they have made their open declaration of repentance and amendment, and, where the circumstances require it, of restitution (Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Communion Office)).

(y) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 27.

(a) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Communion Office). The direction in Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 28, that strangers from other parishes are to be forbidden to come to the Holy Communion and are to be sent back to their own parishes and ministers, to receive the Communion there with their neighbours, is practically obsolete.

(b) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric at the end of the Communion Office). It is an ecclesiastical offence for a priest to celebrate the Communion without at least three other communicants (Parnell v. Roughton (1874), L. R. 6 P. O. 46; Clifton v. Rutstale (1876), 1 P. D. 316), except when administering to a sick person (see p. 710, post). As to other offences in connection with the administration of Holy Communion, see pp. 677 et seq., ante.

(c) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 71; Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Communion of the Sick). As to administering the Communion to sick persons unable to come to the church, see p. 710, post. For administration of the Communion in the chapels of private houses, see p. 653, ante.

(d) Stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, ss. 1—7. See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 532.

SACR. 5.

Holy Matrimony

other and each other only (e). The solemnisation of matrimony in church is on their part the attestation in the presence of God and of the Church of their consent and contract so to do, and on the part of the Church its blessing on their union (f). Persons legally qualified to intermarry (g) are in general entitled to be married according to the rites of the Church of England (h) in an authorised place (i) if one of them possesses the legal qualification of residence (k). Marriage in England (l) can only lawfully be solemnised after banns (m), or with a proper licence (n), or on a registrar's certificate (o). In the case of a party to the marriage being under twenty-one years of age and not being a widower or widow the consent is required of the person authorised by the Marriage Act, 1823 (p), to give it, unless there is no such person in existence (q).

(e) Book of Common Prayer (Office of Matrimony); Harrod v. Harrod (1854), 1 K. & J. 4, per Lord HATHERLEY (then PAGE WOOD, V.-C.), at pp. 15, 16). For marriage generally, see titles CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., pp. 252—263; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(f) Book of Common Prayer (Office of Matrimony); Harrod v. Harrod supra. As to reading or celebrating the marriage service where the parties have been previously married at a registry office, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(g) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 62, 99, 100, 102; and see title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(h) Argar v. Holdsworth (1758), 2 Lee, 515; R. v. James (1850), 3 Car. & Kir. 167, 172, C. C. R., per ALDERSON, B., at p. 175. Persons who are not members of the Church of England are entitled to be so married (R. v. James, supra, per ALDERSON, B., at p. 173). The question whether unbaptized persons can claim to be so married has never been decided (Jenkins v. Barrett (1827), 1 Hag. Ecc. 12); but their marriage according to the rites of the Church of England, if otherwise legal, will be valid (James v. Robinson (1815), 2 Phillim. 285). Banns must be published with the true christian names as well as surnames of the parties (see p. 698, post); but for that purpose the names by which persons are usually known are their true christian names (see note (a), p. 699, post).

(i) See p. 694, post.

(k) See pp. 694, 701, post.

(l) The law as to previous publication of banns or licence does not apply out of England (Culling v. Culling, [1898] P. 116).

(m) A clergyman who solemnises a marriage without due publication of banns, unless by licence or on a registrar's certificate, is liable to be convicted of felony if prosecuted within three years after the commission of the offence (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 21). See also p. 656, ante.

(n) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 62, 63, 101; Book of Common Prayer (Rubrics in the Office of Matrimony); 1 Bl. Com. 439; Middleton v. Crofts (1736), 2 Atk. 650.

(o) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 4.

(p) 4 Geo. 4, c. 76.

(q) Ibid., s. 16; and see title HUSBAND AND WIFE. The consent need not be express, but may be implied (Hodgkinson v. Wilkie (1795), 1 Hag. Con. 262; Smith v. Huson (1811), 1 Phillim. 287). It may be expressly retracted (Hodgkinson v. Wilkie, supra, per Lord STOWELL (then SIR WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 263). The consent does not hold good if the person who gives it dies before the marriage is solemnised (Ex parte Reihy (1843), 12 L. J. (CH.) 436). A marriage solemnised without the requisite consent is nevertheless valid (R. v. Birmingham (Inhabitants) (1828), 8 B. & O. 29). Where a minor is married after publication of banns without any notice of dissent to the marriage, the requisite consent is implied (Jiddar v. Fawcett (1821), 3 Phillim. 580, 581), and the minister who solemnises it is not liable to ecclesiastical censure (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 8). But if he does so after any person whose consent was requisite has openly and publicly

SECT. 5.

Holy Matrimony.

Duty of minister to solemnise marriage.

Marriage of persons divorced for adultery.

Marriage with deceased wife's sister.

Marriage to be solemnised in parish church or authorised chapels.

1376. A minister who without just cause refuses to marry persons entitled to be married in his church or chapel commits an ecclesiastical offence for which he is punishable in the ecclesiastical courts (a).

No clergyman is compelled to solemnise the marriage of a person whose former marriage has been dissolved on account of his or her adultery, nor is he liable to any suit, penalty, or censure for solemnising or refusing to solemnise the marriage of such person. But when an incumbent refuses to solemnise such a marriage between persons who but for his refusal would be entitled to have it solemnised in his church or chapel, he must allow it to be solemnised therein by any other clergyman entitled to officiate within the diocese (b).

A clergyman is not liable to any suit, penalty, or censure for refusing to publish banns of marriage or to solemnise marriage between a man and his deceased wife's sister. But when an incumbent refuses to solemnise such a marriage between persons who but for his refusal would be entitled to have it solemnised in his church or chapel, he may allow it to be solemnised therein by any other clergyman entitled to officiate within the diocese (c).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Place of Banns and Marriage.

1377. Banns must be published, and marriage, whether after banns or by licence, must, unless under a special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury (d), be solemnised in the parish church or some public chapel authorised for the publication of banns and the solemnisation of marriages (e) of or belonging to the parish or chapel in which one of the parties dwells (f).

expressed dissent to the marriage in the church or chapel where the banns were published at the time of the publication he incurs the penalty of three years' suspension (ibid.; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 62).

(a) Argar v. Holdsworth (1758), 2 Lee, 515. It is doubtful whether in case of refusal he is liable to an action for damages (Davis v. Black (1811), 1 Q. B. 900), or to be indicted (R. v. James (1850), 3 Car. & Kir. 167, C. C. R.), for the refusal. The offence of refusal is not committed unless a definite request for the marriage has been made to the minister by both parties (Davis v. Black, supra) and the parties have presented themselves to him to be married at a time when he was not engaged in some other duty (ibid.), and when he could legally have performed the service (R. v. James, supra). As to the duty of marrying by licence, see p. 703, post.

(b) Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 57, 58.

(c) Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 1; Banister v. Thompson, [1908] P. 362; S. C. on rule for prohibition, sub nom. R. v. Dibdin (1909), 26 T. L. R. 150, C. A.

(d) 1 Bl. Com. 439; Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 20; see p. 701, post.

(e) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 2. As to churches and chapels so authorised, see R. v. Northfield (Inhabitants) (1781), 2 Doug. (κ. B.) 659; Perreia v. Tomdeaf (1790), 1 Hag. Con. 136; Taunton v. Wyborn (1809), 2 Camp. 297; Marriages Confirmation Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 92), s. 2. Marriage in a private house, or elsewhere than in an authorised church or chapel, except under special licence, is illegal (Middleton v. Crofts (1736), 2 Atk. 650), and the person solemnising it is guilty of felony (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 21; Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 39).

(f) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 2; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 62, 102; More v. More (1761), 2 Atk. 157, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 159; Nicholson v. Squire (1809), 16 Ves. 259, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 261; Wynn v. Davies (1835), 1 Curt. 69, 83—87; Tuckniss v. Alexander (1863), 32 L. J. (CH.) 794, per KINDERSLEY, V.-C. at p. 801. The word "dwell"

SECT. 5.
Holy Matrimony.

With the consent under hand and seal of the patron and incumbent of a parish in which a public chapel, with a chapelry annexed thereto, is situate, or of the patron and incumbent of a chapel situate in an extra-parochial place, the bishop may under his hand and seal authorise the publication of banns and solemnisation of marriages in such chapel for persons residing within the chapelry or extra-parochial place(g). And where a church or chapel has been provided for an extra-parochial place under the Church Building Acts, 1818, 1819, or 1822(h), the law as to banns and marriages applies to such places as if the same were an ancient parish(i).

1378. Banns may be published and marriages solemnised in the churches or chapels of distinct and separate parishes and district parishes(k), consolidated chapelries(l), district chapelries(m), particular districts(n), and new ecclesiastical parishes(o) constituted

In new
ecclesiastical areas.

is stronger than "reside," and implies living and sleeping (Kerr v. Haynes (1860), 29 L. J. (Q. B.) 70; A.-G. v. McLean (1863), 1 H. & C. 760, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 761; see also p. 701, post). But a person may have several dwelling places at the same time (Bailey v. Bryant (1858), 1 E. & E. 340; Butler v. Ablewhite (1859), 23 L. J. (Q. B.) 292). If a person has a permanent dwelling place, he cannot be said to dwell at a place where he has lodgings for a temporary purpose only (Macdonnell v. Paterson (1851), 11 C. B. 755, 769); but if he has no dwelling place of his own, he must be taken to dwell where he for the time abides (Alexander v. Jones (1866), L. R. 1 Exch. 133). It is an ecclesiastical offence on the part of a clergyman, punishable in the ecclesiastical courts, to marry, publish banns, or solemnise marriage, after banns in a church, between persons neither of whom dwells in the parish (Wynn v. Davies, supra); and a clergyman who solemnises a marriage without due publication of banns, unless by licence (see p. 701, post) or on a registrar's certificate (see p. 703, post), is liable to be convicted of felony if prosecuted within three years after the commission of the offence (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 21).

(g) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 3. The consent and authority are to be registered in the registry of the diocese (ibid.). A notice that "banns may be published and marriages solemnised in this chapel" is to be placed in a conspicuous part of the interior of the chapel (ibid., s. 4). See also Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 18, 19; Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (20 Vict. c. 19), ss. 9, 10; Marriage Confirmation Act, 1890 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 24).

(h) 58 Geo. 3, c. 45; 59 Geo. 3, c. 134; 3 Geo. 4, c. 72.

(i) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 18, 19.

(k) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 27—29; Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 17; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 12, 19; Marriage Confirmation Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 18), s. 3.

(l) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 17; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 12, 19; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 10.

(m) If the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, as the successors of the Church Building Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, so decide (Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 11, 16, 17; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 17, 19); Church Building (Banns and Marriages) Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 56), s. 4.

(n) Under the Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 10, if the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, as the successors of the Church Building Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, so decide (Church Building (Banns and Marriages) Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 56), ss. 1, 2; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 18).

(o) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 15; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 11, 12, 14, 15.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

SMOT. 5. under the Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts (p).
Holy Where any such new ecclesiastical area, with the right of pub-Matrimony. lishing banns and solemnising marriages in the church or chapel thereof, has been constituted, it becomes, for the purposes of banns and marriages, the parish of the persons who dwell therein, in lieu of the ancient or other parish out of which it has been constituted (q).

Banns of marriage in certain cases in adjoining parishes or chapelries. For the purpose of publishing banns and solemnising marriages, parishes where there is no parish church or chapel, or none in which divine service is usually solemnised every Sunday, and extra-parochial places having no public chapel in which banns may be lawfully published, are to be taken as belonging to any next adjoining parish or chapelry (a).

When church is demolished or under repair. 1379. Where the church or chapel of a parish or area in which marriages have been usually solemnised is demolished in order to be rebuilt, or is under repair, and is on that account disused for public service, the bishop may direct that banns may be published and marriages solemnised in some consecrated chapel of the parish or area until the church or chapel is again opened for divine service; and during that period such consecrated chapel is to be deemed the church or chapel of the parish or area for all purposes relating to the publication of banns and the solemnisation of marriages (b).
 Where no such direction is given, the banns may be published in any place within the parish or area which is licensed by the bishop for divine service during the period of rebuilding or repair, or in a church or chapel of any adjoining parish or chapelry in which banns are usually proclaimed; and the marriages, whether after banns or by licence, may be solemnised in the place so temporarily licensed for divine service (c), or, where no place is so licensed, in the church or chapel in which the banns have been published in the adjoining parish or chapelry (d). All banns published and marriages solemnised in any place so licensed within a parish or area during the rebuilding or repair of the church or chapel thereof are to be considered as published and solemnised in the church or chapel of the parish or area, and are to be so registered (e).

Where a church or chapel in which marriages could previously be legally solemnised is rebuilt, repaired, or enlarged, marriages subsequently solemnised therein are valid without a reconsecration of the church or chapel, notwithstanding that the external walls may not have remained entire, and that the position of the communion table may have been altered (f).

(p) See note (i), p. 444, ante.

(q) Jones v. Gough (1865), 3 Moo. P. C. O. (N. S.) 1; Tuckniss v. Alexander (1868), 32 L. J. (CH.) 794; Fuller v. Alford (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 418.

(a) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4. c. 76), s. 12.

(b) Marriage Confirmation Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 18), s. 2.

(c) The place will be presumed to have been so licensed if divine service was several times performed therein (R. v. Creswell (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 446).

(d) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 13; Marriage Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 32), s. 1.

(e) Marriage Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 32), s. 3.

(f) Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 133), s. 12.

SECT. 6.

Holy Matrimony.

Licensing of chapels for banns and marriages of persons residing within a limited district.

1880. Where there is a public chapel with or without a chapelry, or a chapel which is licensed for the celebration of divine service according to the rites of the Church of England, or of which the minister is licensed to officiate therein according to those rites, the bishop of the diocese, if he thinks it necessary so to do, for the due accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants (g) may by a licence under his hand and seal, with the consent, under hand and seal, of the patron and incumbent of the parish or area in which the chapel is situate, or without such consent after two calendar months' notice in writing given by the registrar of the diocese to such patron and incumbent, authorise the publication of banns and solemnisation of marriages in such chapel for persons residing within a district limited in the licence (h), under such provisions as to the amount and appropriation or apportionment of the dues and as to other particulars as seem fit to the bishop and are specified in the licence (i). Where the licence is granted without the consent of the patron or the incumbent of the parish or area under hand and seal, he may appeal within one month to the archbishop of the province, who, after hearing the matter in a summary way, is to make an order confirming, revoking, or varying the licence (k). The licence may at any time be revoked by the bishop by writing under his hand and seal with the written consent of the archbishop of the province (l). Until it is revoked, marriages solemnised in the chapel are as valid as if solemnised in the parish church or in a chapel duly authorised for the solemnisation of marriages before the 17th August, 1836 (m). But notwithstanding the licence, persons,

(g) Re St. George's Chapel, Albemarle Street (1890), Trist. 134 (licence to celebrate marriages).

(h) The licence authorises the publication of banns and solemnisation of marriage where only one of the persons resides within the limited district (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), s. 34). The licence does not make the district an ecclesiastical parish under the New Parishes Act, 1836 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 14 (Re v. Perry (1861), 3 E. & E. 640).

(i) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 26; Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), s. 33. A notice that "banns may be published and marriages may be solemnised in this chapel" is to be placed in a conspicuous part in the interior of the chapel (ibid., s. 33). A patron or incumbent who refuses or withholds consent to the granting of the licence may deliver to the bishop under hand and seal a statement of reasons for so doing, and the bishop is not to grant the licence until he has inquired into such reasons (Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 26). Instruments of consent of the patron and incumbent, or, if consent is refused or withheld, a copy of the notice by the registrar, and statements of reasons delivered by a patron or incumbent, with the adjudication thereon of the bishop under hand and seal, are to be registered in the registry of the diocese (ibid.). No stamp or other duty is payable on the licence or on any other instrument necessary for authorising the solemnisation of marriage in the chapel.

(k) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 28. The order is to be registered in the registry of the diocese, and is conclusive and binding on all parties (ibid.).

(l) Ibid., s. 32. The revocation and consent are to be registered in the registry of the diocese, and the registrar is to give notice thereof in writing to the minister officiating in the chapel, and also public notice thereof by advertisement in some newspaper circulating in the county and in the London Gazette (ibid.). As to the disposal of the registers of marriages solemnised in a chapel under a licence after the licence is revoked, see p. 706, post.

(m) Ibid., s. 26. The law as to marriages and registers and copies of registers

ECCLIASTICAL LAW.

SECT. 5. residing in the district may, if they think fit, have their marriage Holy solemnised in the parish church or in any chapel in which the Matrimony. marriage of them or either of them might have been legally solemnised before 17th August, 1836 (n).

List of chapels in which marriages may be solemnised to be sent yearly to the Registrar-
General.

1381. The registrar of every diocese is to send yearly to the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages a list of all the chapels in the diocese in which marriages may lawfully be solemnised according to the rites of the Church of England, distinguishing those which have a parish, chapelry, or other ecclesiastical area annexed to them and those which are licensed by the bishop for limited districts; and the Registrar-General is yearly to make out and print a list of all such chapels (o).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Publication of Banns.

Place of publication.

1382. Banns of matrimony (p) between two persons must be published in the church or some chapel in which banns are authorised to be published of the parish or chapelry in which they dwell, and, if they dwell in different parishes or chapelries, the banns must be published in the church or some chapel in which banns are authorised to be published of each of the parishes or chapelries (q).

Notice of banns.

1383. No clergyman is obliged to publish the banns of matrimony between two persons unless at least seven days before the requisite time for the first publication thereof they deliver to him a notice in writing, dated on the day of the delivery, of their true christian names and surnames and of the house or houses of their abode within the parish or chapelry and of the time during which they have dwelt or lodged in such house or houses (r).

Register book.

A register book of banns marked and ruled in the same manner as a register book of marriages (s) is to be provided in all churches of marriages solemnised in a parish church, and as to the duties of the incumbent and churchwardens of a parish church in relation thereto, extends to a chapel in which the solemnisation of marriages is authorised by licence for persons within a limited district, and to the minister and chapelwardens thereof or other persons exercising analogous duties therein, in like manner as if the chapel were a parish church (ibid., s. 30). As to the fees in respect of such marriages, see p. 707, post.

(n) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 31.

(o) Ibid., s. 34.

(p) The word "banns" signifies a proclamation or any public notice given of a thing (Termes de la Ley, p. 73).

(q) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 2; Book of Common Prayer (Rubrics in the Office of Matrimony); see pp. 695 et seq., ante. As to publication of banns, see also title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(r) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 7; Pouget v. Tomkins (1812), 2 Hag. Con. 142, 146; Warter v. Yorke (1815), 19 Ves. 451, 453. A clergyman need not insist on this notice, but if, not using due diligence, he marries persons neither of whom resides in the parish, he is liable at least to ecclesiastical censure and perhaps to other consequences (Priestley v. Lamb (1801), 6 Ves. 421; Nicholson v. Squire (1809), 16 Ves. 259, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 261; Wynn v. Davies (1835), 1 Curt. 69, per Sir HERBERT JENNER, at pp. 83, 84). As to the names, see note (a), p. 699, post. "House of abode" means dwelling place (R. v. Hammond (1852), 17 Q. B. 772).

(s) See note (f), p. 694, ante.

and chapels in which marriages are solemnised; and banns are to be published from this book by the officiating minister, and after publication are to be signed by him or by some person under his direction (t).

SMOT. 5.
Holy Matrimony

1384. Banns are to be published in the form of words prescribed by the rubric prefixed to the Office of Matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer (a) on three Sundays preceding the solemnisation

Mode of publication of banns.

(t) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4. c. 76), s. 6.

(a) Ibid., s. 2. The form and the statute contemplate mention of the true names of the persons (Wakefield v. Wakefield (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 394, 401; Cope v. Burt (1809), ibid. 431, 438; Ponget v. Tomkins, supra, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 146; Stante v. Farquharson (1826), 3 Add. 282; Tongue v. Tongue (1836), 1 Moo. P. C. C. 90) and of the parish or parishes in which they dwell, but not of their descriptions. Mention of these is therefore not essential, and a misdescription is immaterial (Cope v. Burt (1811), 1 Phillim. 224; Mayhew v. Mayhew (1812), 3 M. & S. 266, n.; Fendall v. Goldsmid (1877), 2 P. D. 263). The form need not be rigidly adhered to; it is sufficient that it should be followed in substance (Standen v. Standen (1791), Peake, 32, per Lord KENYON, C.J., at p. 34). For the purpose of banns a person's true name is not necessarily the full and exact christian name given in baptism and the original surname (Diddear v. Fawcett (1821), 3 Phillim. 380). If a man has adopted a new christian name in such a way as to supersede his original name, and so that it is known as his proper designation, it will be his true name for the purpose of banns (Wyllatt v. Henry (1817), 2 Hag. Con. 215, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at pp. 220, 221; see Mayhew v. Mayhew, supra; R. v. Burton-upon-Trent (Inhabitants) (1815), 3 M. & S. 537); and banns are not unduly published where part of the christian name is suppressed, not for the sake of concealment, but because the party has not been in the habit of using it (Orme v. Holloway (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 267, per Sir H. JENNER FUST, at pp. 273, 274). A woman loses her maiden surname on marriage (Bon v. Smith (1596), Cro. Eliz. 532). If a person has acquired a name by repute, the use of the true name in the banns is an act of concealment, and not a due publication (Frankland v. Nicholson (1805), 3 M. & S. 259, n. (1), per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 260; see also Wilson v. Brockley (1810), 1 Phillim. 132; R. v. Billingham (Inhabitants) (1814), 3 M. & S. 250; R. v. St. Faith's, Newton (Inhabitants) (1823), 3 Dow. & Ry. (K. B.) 348; Orme v. Holloway, supra; Tooth v. Barrow (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 371). So, too, is the use of a surname which the person has never borne, though entered by mistake in the register of baptisms (R. v. Tishelf (Inhabitants) (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 190). But the use of the true name is only wrong where another name has been so far obtained by repute as to obliterate it (Fendall v. Goldsmid, supra, at p. 264). The liberty of a person to change his surname was discussed by Sir JOSEPH JEKYLL, M.R., in Barlow v. Bateman (1780), 3 P. Wms 65, and by Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT) in Wakefield v. Wakefield (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 394, at pp. 399—402; see also title NAME, CHANGE OF. Illegitimate children usually in practice bear the surname of their mother (Sullivan v. Sullivan (1818), 2 Hag. Con. 238, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 253). If, however, they have acquired a different name by repute, their banns should be published by that name; though they might be held valid if, from an innocent misapprehension of what is correct, the name of the mother was used instead of that subsequently acquired (Tooth v. Barrow, supra, per Sir JOHN DODSON, at p. 374). The name conferred on a woman by marriage becomes her actual name unless obliterated by repute (Bon v. Smith, supra; Fendall v. Goldsmid, supra). The publication of banns in a wrong name from mere thoughtless levity, without fraud or any necessity for concealment, is an undue publication (Mather v. Nry (1807), 3 M. & S. 265, n. (3)). But a slight error in the name is immaterial (Dobbyn v. Corneek (1813), 2 Phillim. 102). The publication will be undue or otherwise, according as the addition or omission was for the purpose

SECT. 8. of marriage during the time of morning service or of evening service (if there is no morning service in the church or chapel on the Holy Matrimony. Sunday on which they are published) immediately after the second lesson (b).

Forbidding banns. 1385. In the event of the parents or guardians of a person under twenty-one years of age whose banns of marriage are published, or one of them, openly and publicly declaring, or causing to be declared, in the church or chapel where the banns are published, and at the time of the publication, their, his, or her dissent to the marriage, the publication is absolutely void (c).

Republication of banns. 1386. If the marriage does not take place within three lunar months (d) after the complete publication of the banns, it must not be solemnised, unless by licence, until they have been duly republished on three several Sundays (e).

Certificate of banns. 1387. Where persons who are to be married after banns dwell in different parishes they are not to be married in either parish without a certificate from the minister of the other parish of the banns having been thrice asked therein (f). Where one of the persons dwells either (1) in a parish where there is no parish church or chapel, or none in which divine service is usually solemnised every Sunday, or (2) in an extra-parochial place having no public chapel wherein banns may be lawfully published, and the banns are accordingly published in the church or chapel of an adjoining parish or chapelry, the minister who publishes the banns is to certify the publication thereof in the same manner as if the person had dwelt in that adjoining parish or chapelry (g).

of fraud or concealment or was innocently made, in cases where a name is added to the true names (Heffer v. Heffer (1812), 3 M. & S. 265, n. (3); Tree v. Quin (1812), 2 Phillim. 14; Sullivan v. Sullivan (1818), 2 Hag. Con. 238; Dobbyn v. Cornock, supra; Fellows v. Stewart (1814), 2 Phillim. 238, 240; Green v. Dalton (1822), 1 Add. 289 or is omitted from them (Pouyet v. Tomkins (1812), 2 Hag. Con. 142, 143; Diddar v. Faucit (1821), 3 Phillim. 580; Stanhope v. Baldwin (1822), 1 Add. 93; Wiltshire v. Prince (1830), 3 Hag. Eco. 332; Brealy v. Reed (1841), 2 Curt. 833; Orme v. Holloway, supra). In Holmes v. Simmons (1868), L. R. 1 P. & D. 523, at p. 530, Lord PLENZANOE doubted whether a marriage would be invalidated by undue publication of banns if there was no one in existence who had a legal right to assent to or dissent from its solemnisation or if those who had such legal right assented to it; but see Mather v. Ney (1807), 3 M. & S. 265, n. (3). The fact of the banns having been published in a wrong name is not sufficiently proved by a wrong name being entered in the record of banns (Capps v. Follon (1794), 1 Phillim. 145, n. (b)), nor by the fact of the party having been married in a wrong name (Heffer v. Heffer, supra).

(b) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 2, modifying the rubrics on the subject in the Book of Common Prayer (Office of Matrimony) and the direction in Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 62; see Hynn v. Davies (1835), 1 Curt. 69, per Sir HERBERT JENNER, at p. 81. As to fees for publication of banns, see p. 707, post.

(c) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 8; see p. 693, ante.

(d) 2 Bl. Com. 141; Peterborough (Bishop) v. Catesby (1607), Cro. Jac. 168, 167; Lacon v. Hooper (1795), 6 Term Rep. 224.

(e) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 9.

(f) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric in the Office of Matrimony).

(g) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 12.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Marriage Licences.

SECT. 5.

Holy Matrimony.

Marriage
licences,
common and
special.

1388. A common licence to solemnise a marriage without publication of banns in a lawful place in a diocese and at a lawful time can be granted by the bishop of the diocese or by the Archbishop of Canterbury (h). The Archbishop of Canterbury can also grant special licences for the solemnisation of marriage at any convenient time or place (i). With that exception, licences can only be granted to solemnise marriage in the parish church or some public chapel of or belonging to the parish or chapelry within which the usual place of abode of one of the persons to be married has been for fifteen days immediately before the granting of the licence (k), and must contain a condition that the marriage shall be solemnised between eight o'clock in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon (l). The obtaining of a marriage licence is a matter of favour, and not of right (m). The licence can only be used for the (h) Stat. (1533) 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, ss. 2—12; Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 98), s. 5; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 101, 104; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 482 e; Balfour v. Carpenter (1810), 1 Phillim. 204. The earliest mention of a bishop's licence dispensing with the publication of banns is in the Constitutions of William la Zouche, Archbishop of York, A.D. 1347, incorporated into those of his successor, John Thoresby, A.D. 1367 (Johnson, Ecclesiastical Laws, Vol. II., A.D. MCCCXLVII.; Wilkins, Concilia, Vol. III., p. 72). A bishop's licence dispensing with the marriage taking place in church is mentioned in No. 11 of the Decrees of Archbishop Hubert Walter made in the Council of London at Westminster, A.D. 1200, and in Archbishop Simon Mepham's Constitutions, A.D. 1328 (Johnson, Ecclesiastical Laws, Vol. II., A.D. MCC., A.D. MCCCXXVIII.; Wilkins, Concilia, Vol. I., p. 507, Vol. II., p. 554). The power to grant marriage licences is not affected by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85) (see a. 2). Marriage licences can be granted by the commissary for faculties and vicars-general of the archbishops and bishops when the sees are full, and, when they are vacant, by the guardian of the spiritualities or ordinaries exercising of right episcopal jurisdiction (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 101). The stamp duty on a common licence is 10s. (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I.). The fees for it vary in different dioceses (Report of the Royal Commission on the Laws of Marriage (1868), p. vii.).

(i) Stat. (1533) 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, ss. 2—12; Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 20; Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 1; Doe d. Egremont (Earl) v. Grazebrook (1843), 4 Q. B. 406. The stamp duty on a special licence is £5 (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I.), and a heavy fee is payable for it (Report of the Royal Commission on the Laws of Marriage (1868), p. vii.). During a vacancy in the see of Canterbury licences grantable by the Archbishop of Canterbury may be granted by the guardian of the spiritualities of the see (stat. (1533) 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, s. 10). As to the power of the Bishop of Sodor and Man to grant special licences in the Isle of Man, see Piers v. Piers (1849), 2 H. L. Cas. 331, 362, 364.

(k) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), ss. 10, 14. "Place of abode" means a person's residence, where he lives and sleeps at night (R. v. Hammond (1852), 17 Q. B. 772). A person may have more than one place of abode (Courtis v. Blight (1861), 31 L. J. (C. P.) 48). See also note (f), p. 694, ante.

(l) Marriage Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 14), s. 1; Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 2.

(m) See an opinion to this effect given by Sir C. PRATT, afterwards Lord CAMDEN (Forey's Cases and Opinions on Constitutional Law, p. 479); see also Capua (Prince) v. De Ludolf (Count) (1836), 30 L. J. (P. M. & A.) 71, n. Licences are only to be granted to persons of good state and quality (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 101). But if the Archbishop of Canterbury, or the guardian of the spiritualities of the archbishopric during a vacancy, refuses a licence without

SECT. 5.
Holy Matrimony.

marriage of the parties for whose marriage it was intended to be obtained (n), but their true names and addresses need not be stated in it, if it sufficiently identifies them (o). It must state the name of the parish in which they are to be married (p).

Affidavit previous to grant of licence.

1389. Before a common marriage licence is granted, an affidavit must be made by one of the parties before a surrogate (q), or other person having authority to grant it, to the effect that the party believes that there is no impediment of kindred or alliance or of any other cause, nor any suit commenced in any court of competent jurisdiction to bar or hinder the marriage from proceeding according to the tenor of the licence, and that for the fifteen days immediately preceding the licence one of the parties has had his or her usual place of abode (r) within the parish or chapelry within which the marriage is to be solemnised, and, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow (s), is under the age of twenty-one years, that the consent of the person or persons, whose consent to the marriage is required by statute (t), has been obtained thereto (u).

Caveat against grant of licence.

1390. The grant of a licence for a marriage may be opposed by the reasonable cause, an appeal lies to the Lord Chancellor, who may, if it seems fit, enjoin the archbishop or guardian to grant it, and, in the event of his refusal to do so, may commission two other bishops to grant it (stat. (1533) 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, ss. 11, 12). No appeal lies against the refusal of the Archbishop of York or any other diocesan prelate to grant a marriage licence under the dispensing power reserved to them by s. 9 of the Act.

(n) Cope v. Burt (1809), 1 Hag. Con. 434, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 439; Lane v. Goodwin (1843), 4 Q. B. 361, per PATTESON, J., at p. 366. As to forgery of a marriage licence, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. LX., p. 743.

(o) Cope v. Burt (1811), 1 Phillim. 224; Ewing v. Wheatley (1814), 2 Hag. Con. 175; R. v. Burton-upon-Trent (Inhabitants) (1815), 3 M. & S. 537; Clowes v. Jones (1842), 3 Curt. 185; Lane v. Goodwin (1843), 4 Q. B. 361; Beran v. M'Alahm (1861), 2 Sw. & Tr. 240, where the licence was held good, although, for the purpose of concealing the woman's identity from the surrogate, one of her names was suppressed and her residence was falsely stated; Haswell v. Haswell (1881), 51 L. J. (P.) 15, where two christian names had been added in the licence to the man's true name. The licence is not vitiated by an immaterial alteration in it after it has been granted (Ewing v. Wheatley, supra).

(p) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), ss. 10, 14. The fact of the name of the parish not having been inserted until after the licence was issued had previously been held not to vitiate the licence (R. v. Beck (1741), 2 Stra. 1160).

(q) Before a surrogate deputed by an ecclesiastical judge grants any licences he must take an oath before such judge, or a commissioner appointed under the seal of such judge, faithfully to execute his office according to law, to the best of his knowledge, and must give security by his bond in the sum of £100 to the bishop of the diocese for the due and faithful execution of the office (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 18).

(r) See note (k) on p. 701, ante, and note (f) on p. 694, ante.

(s) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 104; Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 14.

(t) See p. 693, ante.

(u) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 14. No caution or security by bond or otherwise is required of any person applying for a marriage licence (ibid., s. 16). A layman who makes a false affidavit in order to obtain a marriage licence is guilty of a criminal offence (R. v. Chapman (1849), 2 Car. & Kir. 846), but cannot be punished for it in the ecclesiastical courts (Phillimore v. Machon (1876), 1 P. D. 481).

entering of a caveat, signed by or on behalf of the person who enters it and stating his place of residence and the ground of objection on which it is founded (b). In that case no licence is to issue for the marriage until either the caveat or a copy thereof is transmitted to the judge out of whose office the licence is to issue, and he certifies to the registrar that he has examined into the matter of the caveat and is satisfied that it ought not to obstruct the grant of the licence, or until the caveat is withdrawn by the person who entered it (c).

Sect. 5.
Holy Matrimony.

1391. Where the church of a parish or the chapel of a chapelry in which marriages have been usually solemnised is being rebuilt or is under repair, licences for the solemnisation of marriages therein are to be deemed licences for the solemnisation of marriages in any place within the parish or chapelry licensed by the bishop for divine service during the rebuilding or repair, or, if no place is so licensed, in the church or chapel wherein marriages have been usually solemnised in any adjoining parish or chapelry (d).

Licences
when church is under repair.

1392. If the marriage does not take place within three lunar (e) months after the grant of the licence, it is not to be solemnised, unless after due publication of banns, until a new licence has been obtained (f).

Issue of new licence if marriage postponed.

1393. Where a marriage is solemnised by licence, the responsibility as to whether one of the parties dwells within the parish or district of the church or chapel in which it is proposed to be solemnised, and whether the marriage law is in other respects observed, rests with the bishop granting the licence, and not with the officiating minister; and if a licence is produced to a minister directing or authorising the marriage of two persons in his church or chapel, he is required both by his canonical obedience and by the rights of the parties to solemnise the marriage according to the licence (g). If from his knowledge of certain facts he takes the responsibility of refusing to solemnise the marriage in spite of the licence, he does so at his peril (h).

Responsibility of minister on marriage
by licence.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Registrar's Certificate.

1394. A marriage which might lawfully be solemnised in a church or chapel after publication of banns may with the consent

Marriage with the consent of the minister on registrar's certificate.

(b) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 11.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Marriage Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 32), s. 2.

(e) 2 Bl. Com. 141; Peterborough (Bishop) v. Catesby (1607), Cro. Jac., 166, 167; Lacon v. Harper (1795), 6 Term Rep. 224.

(f) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 19.

(g) Tuckniss v. Alexander (1863), 32 L. J. (CH.) 794, 806.

(h) Ibid. But it may turn out that the bishop was misled in granting the licence (ibid.). A clergyman who is aware that a statement in the licence as to the name or address of a party or otherwise is not in accordance with the fact is justified in hesitating before he solemnises the marriage (Ewing v. Wheatley (1814), 2 Hag. Con. 175, per Lord Stowell (then Sir William Scott), at p. 185); and a clergyman who solemnised a marriage under a licence obtained by a false oath that the woman was of age, when she evidently appeared not to be so, was severely reprimanded in the Court of Chancery (Millet v. Rowse (1802), 7 Ves. 419).

SECT. 5.

Holy Matrimony.

of the minister of the church or chapel (i) be solemnised in like manner without such publication, on delivery to the officiating minister of a certificate of the superintendent registrar of the district in which the church or chapel is situate (k), and also, if one of the persons resides in another district, of a certificate of the superintendent registrar of that district (l).

The marriage must be solemnised within three calendar months after the date specified in such certificates as the date of entry of notice of the marriage in the marriage notice book of the district (m).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Solemnisation of Marriage.

Who may solemnise
marriage.

1395. Marriage according to the rites of the Church of England is properly solemnised by a priest (n), but may be solemnised by a deacon (o). A clergyman cannot solemnise his own marriage (p).

Hours.

1396. Marriage must be solemnised between eight o'clock in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon, unless by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury (q).

(i) Marriage and Registration Act, 1836 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119), s. 11.

(k) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), ss. 1, 4, 16; Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 21), s. 36; Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119), ss. 4, 8, 11. For the form of and the mode and conditions of obtaining the certificate, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE; and as to forgery of a certificate, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 743. A superintendent registrar has no power to grant a licence for a marriage in a church or chapel of the Church of England (Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 11).

(l) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), ss. 4, 16. If one of the parties dwells in Scotland, the delivery of a certificate of the proclamation of banns in Scotland, under the hand of the session clerk of the parish in which the proclamation was made, has the same validity for authorising the solemnisation of marriage as the production of a certificate of the superintendent registrar of the district in reference to a party residing in such district (Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119), s. 8).

(m) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 15.

(n) R. v. Millis (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 534, H. L.; Catherwood v. Caslon (1844), 13 M. & W. 261; Du Moulin v. Druitt (1860), 13 L. C. L. R. 212; Beamish v. Beamish (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 274; Culling v. Culling, [1896] P. 116. If both parties knowingly and wilfully consent to or acquiesce in the solemnisation of their marriage by a person who is not in holy orders, the marriage is void (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 22), but it would be otherwise if he pretended and was believed to be in holy orders (Hauke v. Corri (1820), 2 Hag. Con. 280, 288; R. v. Millis, supra, per Lord CAMPBELL, at p. 784; per Lord LYNCHURST, L.C., at p. 860; per Lord COTTENHAM, at p. 906). A person who solemnises matrimony according to the rites of the Church, falsely pretending to be in holy orders, is liable to be convicted of felony if prosecuted within three years after the commission of the offence (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 21; R. v. Ellis (1888), 16 Cox, C. C. 469).

(o) R. v. Millis, supra, per TINDAL, C.J., at p. 656; per Lord ABINGER, at p. 748; per Lord LYNCHURST, L.C., at pp. 859, 860; Cope v. Barber (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 393, per WILLES, J., at p. 403.

(p) Beamish v. Beamish, supra.

(q) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), ss. 20, 21, as amended by the Marriage Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 14), s. 1; Canones Ecclesiastici (1838), 1. A person who solemnises matrimony at any other time, unless by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury, is liable to be convicted of felony if prosecuted within three years after the commission of the offence (Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 21); but the marriage so solemnised would not 1397. Marriage is directed by statute to be solemnised in the presence of at least two witnesses besides the clergyman who performs the service (r). But in spite of this direction a marriage in the presence of only one such additional witness is not invalid (s).

SECT. 5.
Holy Matrimony.
Witnesses.

1398. The actual marriage should take place in the body of the church, in the presence of the congregation, and the minister and the parties afterwards go up to the Lord's table and the altar rails for the conclusion of the office (t).

Solemnisation in body of
church.

The essential parts of the ceremony are the reciprocal agreement of the parties to take each other for wedded wife and wedded husband till parted by death, and the joining together of their hands, and the pronouncement by the clergyman that they are man and wife (a).

Essential parts.

The marriage ceremony is sometimes performed between persons who are already married to one another (b).

Parties already married.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Registration and Certificates of Marriage.

1399. A clergyman, immediately after solemnising a marriage, must register in duplicate in two of the marriage register books furnished by the Registrar-General (c) the statutory particulars relating to the marriage (d); and each entry must be signed of marriages.

Registration

be void (see Catterall v. Sweetman (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 304, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 317). See also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. LX., p. 535.

(r) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 28.

(s) Wing v. Taylor (1861), 2 Sw. & Tr. 278, 286.

(t) Book of Common Prayer (Rubrics in Office of Matrimony); R. v. James (1850), 3 Car. & Kir. 167, 172, C. C. R., per ALDERSON, B., at p. 177; see p. 694, ante. But a marriage in the vestry of the church is valid (Wing v. Taylor (1861), 2 Sw. & Tr. 278, 286). The ceremony need not be performed during divine service (Canones Ecclesiastici (1888), 1).

(a) Harrod v. Harrod (1854), 1 K. & J. 4, 15, 16; Beamish v. Beamish (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 271, 339. Neither the use of the language of the marriage service, nor observance of the directions of the rubric respecting the opening address to the congregation, nor the adjuration to the parties as to confessing any lawful impediment to their union, nor the demand, Who giveth this woman to be married to this man? nor the putting of the ring on the finger of the bride, nor the benediction, are absolutely essential to the validity of the marriage (Weld v. Chamberlaine (1683), 2 Show. 300; Beamish v. Beamish, supra, per WILLES, J., at pp. 329—331; per Lord CAMPBELL, L.C., at p. 339). The giving away of the woman is not essential (More v. More (1741), 2 Atk. 157, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 158); nor is the repetition by the parties of the words of the service essential (Harrod v. Harrod (1854), 1 K. & J. 4, per Lord HATHERLEY (then PAGE WOOD, V.-C.), at p. 16). Therefore deaf and dumb persons can legally be married (ibid.).

(b) Piers v. Piers (1849), 2 H. L. Cas. 331, per Lord CAMPBELL, at pp. 354, 384, 385; per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 363; per Lord BROUGHAM, at pp. 371—373. In cases where a ward of court has been married clandestinely the court always directs a second marriage (ibid., per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 354). In such cases the woman is described by her maiden name (ibid., pp. 354, 385). As to the addition of the marriage service to a marriage contracted at a registry office, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE. The service, if read in a church or chapel of the Church of England, can only be read by a minister in holy orders (Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119), s. 12).

(c) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 56), s. 30. See title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(d) The particulars are to be inserted according to the form in Sched. C of the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 56). The

SMO. 5.
Holy Matrimony.

Copies for superintendent registrar.

by the clergyman and by the parties married and by two witnesses (e).

1400. In the months of January, April, July, and October the minister of every church or chapel in which marriages may lawfully be solemnised is to make and deliver to the superintendent registrar of the district in which the church or chapel is situate, on durable materials, a true copy, certified under his hand, of all the entries of marriages in the register books kept by him since the last certificate; and if no marriage has been entered therein since the last certificate, he is to certify the fact (f).

Custody of register books.

1401. The marriage register books are to be kept safely until filled (g); and, when they are filled, one copy is to be delivered to the superintendent registrar of the district, and the other is to be kept by the minister together with the registers of baptisms and burials of the parish or chapelry (h).

Transmission of registers.

1402. Where a licence authorising the publication of banns and solemnisation of marriages in a chapel for persons residing within clergyman may ask the parties married the several particulars required to be registered as to the marriage (ibid., s. 40), and any person who wilfully makes or causes to be made, for the purpose of being inserted in the register, any false statement as to any of the particulars, is liable to the same penalties as if he were guilty of perjury (ibid., s. 41). But no penalties are incurred by the clergyman if he discovers an error in the form or substance of the entry and within one calendar month after the discovery, in the presence of the parties married, or in case of their death or absence in the presence of the superintendent registrar and of two other credible witnesses, who attest the same, corrects the erroneous entry according to the truth of the case by entry in the margin without any alteration of the original entry, and signs the marginal entry adding the date of the correction (Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66), s. 21; Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86) s. 44). In such case he must make the like marginal entry, attested in like manner, in the duplicate marriage register book and in the certified copy of the register book which he is required to make, or, if that copy has already been made, he must make and deliver to the superintendent registrar of the district a separate certified copy of the original erroneous entry and of the marginal correction therein made (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 44). As to keeping a marriage register in the church or chapel of an extra-parochial place, see Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (20 Vict. c. 19), s. 10).

(e) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 31. The number of the place of entry in each duplicate marriage register book is to be the same (ibid.). A clergyman who refuses or without reasonable cause omits to register a marriage solemnised by him is liable to forfeit a sum not exceeding £50 (ibid., s. 42).

(f) ibid., s. 33. The minister is to be paid 6d. for every entry contained in a certified copy (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), s. 27).

(g) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 33. If a minister carelessly loses or injures a marriage register book, or carelessly allows a marriage register book to be injured while in his keeping, he is liable to forfeit a sum not exceeding £50 (ibid., s. 42). As to unlawfully destroying, defacing, or injuring a marriage register book, or forging or fraudulently altering an entry therein, or knowingly and unlawfully inserting or permitting to be inserted a false entry therein, or in a certified copy thereof, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 741, 742.

(h) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 33.

a limited district (i) is revoked, all registers of marriages solemnised in the chapel under the licence, which are in the custody or possession of the minister of the chapel, are to be forthwith transmitted to the incumbent or officiating minister of the parish church, and are to be thenceforth preserved and dealt with in the same manner, and will be of the same force and validity for all purposes, as if they had been originally made and deposited with such incumbent or officiating minister (j).

Sect. 5.
Holy Matrimony.

1403. Every minister who has the custody for the time being of any marriage register book must at all reasonable times allow searches to be made of any such book and give a copy certified under his hand of any entry or entries in the same on payment of 1s. for every search extending over not more than one year, and 6d. additional for every additional year and 2s. 6d. for every single certificate (k).

Searches.

SUB-SECT. 8.—Fees.

1404. In an ancient parish the minister can only demand, for publishing banns, giving certificates of the publication of banns, and solemnising marriage, such fees, if any, as have been taken by immemorial custom in the parish (l), or have been settled for the parish by the Church Building Commissioners, or by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as their successors (m). In a new ecclesiastical parish he can demand such fees as have been duly

Fees in
parishes.

(i) See pp. 697, 699, ante.

(j) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 33. When the incumbent or officiating minister of the parish church next transmits to the superintendent registrar copies of the registers of marriages solemnised in the parish church, he is to transmit therewith copies of the entries made in the registers of marriages solemnised in the chapel subsequently to the date of the last entry a copy whereof was transmitted to the superintendent registrar, and is also to transmit to the superintendent registrar one copy of every register book received by him of which no copy has been already transmitted to the superintendent registrar, having first signed his name at the foot of the last entry therein (ibid.).

(k) Ibid. s. 35. The duty of 1d., which may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, cancelled by the person signing the copy or extract before delivery thereof, is to be paid by the person requiring the same on every certified copy or extract from any register of marriages, except (1) a copy or extract furnished pursuant to and for the purposes of an Act of Parliament or furnished to a general or superintending registrar under any general regulation, and (2) a copy or extract, for which the person giving the same is not entitled to any fee or reward (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 1, 64, and schedule, Copy or Extract, Certified). As to knowingly and unlawfully giving a false certificate relating to a marriage, or certifying a writing to be a copy or extract from a marriage register knowing the writing or the part of the register whereof a copy or extract is given to be false in any material particular, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 536, 742.

(l) Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 585; St. David's (Bishop) v. Lucy (1809), 1 Ld. Raym. 447, per HOLT, C.J., at p. 450; Patten v. Castleman (1753), 1 Lee, 387, per Sir GEORGE LEE, at p. 393. A fee cannot be demanded for the marriage of a parishioner which is solemnised in another parish (Patten v. Castleman, supra). A customary marriage fee must be of such a moderate amount that, having regard to the then value of money, it could conceivably have been taken as of right in the reign of Richard I.; otherwise it is bad for rankness (Bryant v. Foot (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 497, Ex. Ch.). It must be a fixed sum, and cannot be of a varying amount (ibid., at p. 500).

(m) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 131), ss. 11, 17, 18.

SECT. 5.

Holy Matrimony.Fees in limited
districts.

settled by the Church Building Commissioners, or the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or the chancellor of the diocese (n).

1405. When a bishop grants a licence for the publication of banns and solemnisation of marriages in a chapel for persons residing within a district limited in the licence, he may in the licence declare that the whole of the fees, dues, and emoluments on account of the solemnisation of marriages in the chapel, or such part thereof as is specified in the licence, shall be receivable by or for the minister and clerk of the chapel (o).

When church pulled down or under repair.

1406. When on the pulling down, rebuilding, or repairing of a parish church the bishop orders that banns may be published and marriages solemnised in a consecrated chapel of the parish until the church is reopened for divine service, the fees in respect thereof are to be applied during that period as the bishop, with the consent of the incumbent of the parish, directs (p).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Validity of Marriage.

Validty.

1407. If persons intending to be married according to the rites of the Church of England either (1) knowingly and wilfully intermarry in any other place than a church or a public chapel in which banns may be lawfully published, unless by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury, or (2) knowingly and wilfully intermarry without due publication of banns (q) or a licence from a person having authority to grant it (r), or (3) knowingly and wilfully consent to or acquiesce in the solemnisation of their marriage by a person not in holy orders, their marriage is null and void (s). In other

(n) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 11, 17, 18; New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 16; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 11–14.

(o) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 27.

(p) Marriage Confirmation Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 18), s. 2.

(q) Including no publication at all (Wright v. Elwood (1837), 1 Curt. 662, per Sir HERBERT JENNER, at pp. 672, 673).

(r) Balfour v. Carpenter (1810), 1 Phillim. 204.

(s) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 22; Wiltshire v. Prince (1830), 3 Hag. Ecc. 332; Tongue v. Tongue (1836), 1 Moo. P. C. C. 90; Brealy v. Reed (1841), 2 Curt. 833; Orme v. Holloway (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 267; Tooth v. Barrow (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 371; Midgley v. Wood (1860), 30 L. J. (P. M. & A.) 57; Wormald v. Neale (1868), 19 L. T. 93. Guilty knowledge and wilfulness on the part of one of the persons will not invalidate the marriage unless the other participates in it (R. v. Wroton (Inhabitants) (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 640, 646; Wright v. Elwood (1835), 1 Curt. 49; (1837), ibid., 662; Dormer v. Williams (1838), 1 Curt. 870; Holmes v. Simmons (1868), L. R. 1 P. & D. 523; Gomperts v. Kemsal (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 369; Templeton v. Tyree (1872), L. R. 2 P. & D. 420; R. v. Kay (1887), 16 Cox, C. C. 292). A marriage is valid although solemnised without either banns or licence, unless both parties were aware of the defect at the time of the ceremony (Greaves v. Greaves (1872), L. R. 2 P. & D. 423), and although solemnised after the expiration of three months from the last publication of banns, if the parties did not wilfully intermarry with knowledge that there had been no previous effective publication of banns (R. v. Clarke (1867), 16 L. T. 429). A marriage by a person professing and believed by the parties to be in holy orders, though not so in fact, is valid (Costard v. Winder (1660), Cro. Eliz. 775; Hawks v. Corri (1820), 2 Hag. Cen. 280, per Lord STOWELL (then Sir WILLIAM SCOTT), at p. 288). As to civil marriages, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

cases irregularity or a breach of the law does not invalidate the marriage (a).

SMOR. 5.

Holy Matrimony.

—
Proof of necessary
preliminaries.

1408. After a marriage has been solemnised it is not necessary, in support of it, if it took place after publication of banns, to give any proof of the actual dwelling of the parties in the parishes or chapelries wherein the banns were published, nor, if it took place by licence, to give any proof that the usual place of abode of one of the parties for the space of fifteen days immediately before the granting of the licence was in the parish or chapelry where the marriage was solemnised; and no evidence in either case is admissible to prove the contrary in any suit respecting the validity of the marriage (b).

SECT. 6.—Churching of Women.

1409. The churching of a woman is the first Church service which she attends after childbirth, and is her act of thanksgiving for her safe delivery (c). She is to come for its performance into the parish church (d) decently apparelled (e), and is to kneel down in the place accustomed or prescribed by the ordinary (f). If there is a communion it is convenient that she should partake of it (g). She is at the churching to offer the accustomed offering to the priest (h).

Service for the churching of women.

(a) R. v. Wroton (Inhabitants) (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 640, 646; Wright v. Elwood (1835), 1 Curt. 49; ibid., 662; Dormer v. Williams (1838), 1 Curt. 870; Templeton v. Tyne (1872), L. R. 2 P. & D. 420; R. v. Clarke (1867), 16 L. T. 429; Greaves v. Greaves (1872), L. R. 2 P. & D. 423. A marriage of a minor actually solemnised without the requisite consent (see p. 693, ante) is valid (R. v. Birmingham (Inhabitants) (1828), 8 B. & C. 29). As to settling the property of the parties in such cases, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(b) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 26; Nicholson v. Squire (1809), 16 Ves. 259, per Lord Eldon, J.C., at p. 261; Robinson v. Grant (1811), 18 Ves. 289; Tree v. Quin (1812), 2 Phillim. 14; R. v. Hind (1813), Russ. & Ry. 253, C. C. R.; Diddear v. Faucit (1821), 3 Phillim. 580, 581; Ray v. Sherwood (1836), 1 Curt. 173, 193, 235.

(c) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Churching of Women).

(d) The Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts (see note (i), p. 444, ante) make provision for the performance of churchings in churches or chapels of distinct and separate parishes, district parishes, district chapelries and consolidated chapelries (Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 27—29; Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 11, 16, 17; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 12; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 17), in extra-parochial places (Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 18), in churches or chapels with particular districts (Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), ss. 10, 14; Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 18), in Poor districts (New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), ss. 11, 13), and in churches of new parishes (ibid., s. 15; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 11, 12, 14, 15).

(e) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Churching of Women). In Shipden v. Redman (1822), Palm. 296, a diocesan order that a woman should come in a white veil to be churched was held to be enforceable as being in accordance with ancient ecclesiastical custom.

(f) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Churching of Women).

(g) Ibid. (Rubric after the Churching of Women).

(h) Ibid.; Naylor v. Scott (1729), 2 Ld. Raym. 1558. A custom that a fee shall be paid at the usual time of churching, whether the woman is actually churchd or not, is void (Naylor v. Scott, supra). In Poor districts (New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 13), and in new parishes under the

SECT. 7.

Visitation
of the Sick.

Visiting the sick.

SECT. 7.—Visitation of the Sick.

1410. When any person is dangerously sick in a parish, the minister or curate, on becoming aware thereof, is to resort to such person and give instruction and comfort according to the order of the Book of Common Prayer if he is not a preacher, or, if he is a preacher, as he thinks most needful and convenient (i). A form of service for the purpose is provided in the Book of Common Prayer (k).

Communicating the sick.

1411. Where a sick person who is unable to come to the church desires to receive the Communion, he must give timely notice to the minister, signifying how many there are to communicate with him, which must be three or at least two (l), except that, on special request, the minister may communicate with him alone in time of the plague or other contagious disease, when no parishioners or neighbours can be got to communicate with him for fear of infection (m).

SECT. 8.—Burial.

Burial Office,
by and for whom to be used in consecrated, ground.

1412. The Order or Office for the Burial of the Dead is to be said by a minister in holy orders (n) at the burial in consecrated ground of every person buried therein (o), except (1) where the person has died unbaptized (p) or excommunicate (q), or has laid violent hands upon himself (r); (2) where any relative, friend, or legal representative having the charge of or being responsible for the burial of the deceased person gives the prescribed notice in writing that it is intended that the burial shall take place without the use of the Burial Office (s); and (3) where, in a case in which the use of

New Parishes Acts, 1843 and 1856 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, s. 15; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, ss. 1, 2, 14, 15) the minister is entitled to such fees for churchings as are fixed for the parish by the chancellor of the diocese in which it is situate (New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict., c. 37), ss. 13, 15).

(i) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 67.

(k) Book of Common Prayer (Order for the Visitation of the Sick).

(l) Ibid. (Rubric before the Communion of the Sick).

(m) Ibid.

(n) Book of Common Prayer (Rubric before the Order for the Burial of the Dead); Johnson v. Friend (1860), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 280; Wood v. Headingley-cum-Burley Burial Board, [1892] 1 Q. B. 713, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 729.

(o) As to burial in consecrated ground, see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 404, 407 et seq., 413, 416—466 et seq., 517 et seq.

(p) A person who has been baptized with water in the name of the Trinity by a dissenting minister or by a lay person is not within this exception (Kemp v. Wickes (1809), 3 Phillim. 264; Escott v. Mastin (1842), 4 Moo. P. O. C. 104; Nurse v. Henslow (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 272; Titchmarsh v. Chapman (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 370).

(q) Kemp v. Wickes, supra, per Sir JOHN NICHOLL, at pp. 271, 272; see p. 539, ante.

(r) That is to say, has put an end to his own life, being, at the time, of years of discretion and in his senses (4 Bl. Com. 189; Clift v. Schwabe (1846), 3 C. B. 437, per POLLOCK, C.B., at pp. 472—476; Dufaur v. Professional Life Assurance Co. (1858), 25 Beav. 599, 602). As to the burial of a person found felo de se, see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 421, 422.

(s) Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41), s. 1, Sched. A. In such cases the burial may take place at the option of the person so having the charge of or being responsible for the same, either without any religious

SMO. 8.
Burial.

the Burial Office is unlawful (i), or in which the relative, friend, or legal representative having the charge of or being responsible for the burial so requests, the minister uses a service prescribed or approved by the ordinary, and consisting of prayers taken from the Book of Common Prayer and portions of Holy Scripture (a). With these exceptions if a corpse entitled to burial (b) is brought for burial to a church or churchyard after convenient notice has been given beforehand (c), the minister must not refuse or delay to bury it with the Burial Office (d). The relative, friend, or legal representative having the charge of or being responsible for the burial of a deceased person who has a right of interment in any unconsecrated ground vested in a burial authority or provided under an Act relating to burial is entitled, if he thinks fit, to have the burial performed therein with the Burial Office by any minister in holy orders who is willing to perform the same; and no minister in holy orders is liable to any censure or penalty for using the Burial Office in any unconsecrated burial ground or cemetery, or part of a burial ground or cemetery, or in any building thereon, in any case in which, if it had been consecrated, he might have lawfully used that office (e).

The Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts (f) make provision for burials in distinct and separate parishes, district parishes, district chapelries, and consolidated chapelries (g), extra-parochial places (h), particular districts (i), and new ecclesiastical parishes (k).

Burials in parishes and places under the Church Building Acts
and New Parishes Acts.

1413. The incumbent of an ecclesiastical parish is not bound to perform a funeral service before at, or after the cremation within

Service in case of cremation.

service or with such Christian and orderly religious service at the grave as he thinks fit; and any one or more persons invited or authorised by him so to do may conduct the service or take part in any religious act thereat (ibid., s. 6). See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 424—428.

(e) See exception (1), p. 710, ante.

(a) Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41), s. 13.

(b) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 413—415.

(c) Titchmarsh v. Chapman (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 370, 412, 416; Cooper v. Dodd (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 270.

(d) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 68; see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 420. The penalty for the offence is three months' suspension (Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 68; Escott v. Mastin (1842), 4 Moo. P. C. C. 104; Nurse v. Henslow (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 272; Cooper v. Dodd, supra, at p. 283).

(e) Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 41), s. 12. A minister cannot be compelled to perform any part of the Burial Service on unconsecrated ground (Rugg v. Kingsmill (1868), 5 Moo. P. C. C. (N. S.) 79, 89, 90).

(f) See note (i), p. 444, ante; and title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 414.

(g) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 27—29; Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 11, 16, 17; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 12; Church Building Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 2; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 17.

(h) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 18.

(i) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), ss. 10, 14; Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 18.

(k) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 15; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 11, 12, 14, 15, 32.

SECT. 8.
Burial.

the ground of a burial authority of the remains of a parishioner or of a person dying in the parish. But if he refuses to do so, any other minister in holy orders, not being prohibited under ecclesiastical censure, may, with the permission of the bishop and at the request of the executor of the deceased person or of the burial authority or other person having charge of the cremation or interment of the cremated remains, perform such service within the ground (l).

Fees for
burial.

1414. In the absence of custom no fee is by common law payable for burial (m), and in an ancient parish the minister and parish clerk and sexton can only demand and recover such burial fees (if any) as are payable therein by custom (n), or according to a table of fees duly fixed for the parish (o). In churchyards elsewhere they may demand and recover such burial fees as have been lawfully fixed under statutory authority (p).

Registration of burials.

1415. A minister must, as soon as possible after solemnising a burial, register it in the prescribed manner (q).

(l) Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 8), s. 11. As to cremation generally, see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 568—575.

(m) Burdeaux v. Lancaster (1698), 1 Salk. 332; St. David's (Bishop) v. Lucy (1699), 1 Id. Raym. 447, per HOLT, C.J., at p. 450; Exeter (Dean and Chapter) Case (1707), 1 Id. Raym. 334; Andrews v. Canthorne (1745), Willes, 536, 539, n.

(n) Gib. Cod. 452, 453; Watson, Clergyman's Law, 4th ed., p. 585; Topsall v. Ferrers (1617), Hob. 175; Burdeaux v. Lancaster, supra; St. David's (Bishop) v. Lucy, supra; Exeter (Dean and Chapter) Case, supra; Andrews v. Canthorne, supra. See also Anderson v. Wandsworth Borough Council, [1908] 2 Ch. 81.

(o) See next note.

(p) By the Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), the Church Building Commissioners were, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (see Church Building Commissioners (Transfer of Powers) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 55)) are, empowered to settle a table of fees for any parish with the consent of the vestry or select vestry or persons exercising the powers of vestry in the parish and of the bishop of the diocese (Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 11), and for any consolidated chapelry or extra-parochial place or any district chapelry or parochial chapelry in which a church or chapel has been built or appropriated under the provisions of that Act or of the Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), and apparently of later Church Building Acts (see Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 25), with the consent of the bishop of the diocese (Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 11); and the table is to be registered in the registry of the diocese (ibid., s. 18), and the fees so fixed may be demanded and recovered in like manner as ancient legal fees of the same nature (ibid., ss. 6, 11, 17). And by the New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 15 (extended by the New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), ss. 1, 2, 11—15), such fees are authorised to be demanded and recovered in any new parish under those Acts as are fixed by the chancellor of the diocese in which it is situate. See further title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 428—432. As to the fees on burials in a burial ground provided by a burial authority, see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 479—483; and as to the fees on burials in a cemetery under the Public Health (Interments) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 31), see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 510. As to the appointment and stipend of chaplains of cemeteries provided under the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 65), see pp. 649, 650, ante; and title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 518.

(q) Canones Ecclesiastici (1603), 70; Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), ss. 1—4; see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 555—564.

Part VI.—Property of the Church of England.

SECT. 1.—Characteristics of Ecclesiastical Property.

SECT. 1. Charac- teristics of Eccle- siastical Property.

Ecclesiastical property.

1416. The existence of property capable of recognition by a court of law presupposes the existence of a person recognised by the law and of some legal right vested in such person, either of a corporeal or of an incorporeal nature (a).

Where the relations existing between such recognised person and such legal right arise out of or have relation to a Church (ecclesia) regarded as an organism distinct from the individual members composing it (b), the property is regarded as ecclesiastical property.

Accordingly, where property is appropriated for use only in connection with or for the benefit of a Church, or is appropriated for use only by or for the benefit of officers or members of a Church as such (c), or is held for a spiritual purpose (b) in connection with a Church, or is owned by any person in the capacity of a representative of a Church (d), such property is called ecclesiastical property (e).

1417. The recognition by the law and the legal characteristics of the persons who own property on behalf of the Church of England, and the ecclesiastical characteristics of the property which is owned for use by or for the benefit of officers or members of that Church as such, have to a great extent arisen out of and now depend on the parochial system, and can best be realised by reference to the stages of the growth of that system.

Legal recognition.

(a) Property may denote the thing to which a person stands in a certain relation, and also the relation in which the person stands to the thing (Re Earnshaw-Wall, [1894] 3 Ch. 156).

(b) These distinctions are illustrated by the decision of the House of Lords in Westminster Corporation v. St. George's, Hanover Square (Rector and Churchwardens) (1910), 27 T. L. R. 327, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, [1909] 1 Ch. 592, C. A., and approving the dissentient judgment of BUCKLEY, L.J. (ibid., at p. 611). The money there in question was to be applied "for the benefit of such parish as the vestry of such parish shall direct." BUCKLEY, L.J., pointed out that there is a difference between a trust for a parochial charity and a trust for persons residing in a parish, and it was held that the property, having been bought with church money, was vested in the rector and churchwardens in their ecclesiastical capacity, and did not pass to the borough council under the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14).

(c) Even though the benefit to the members of a Church is of a temporal nature, yet if they derive it as members of the Church, the property is ecclesiastical property (Re Perry Almshouses, Re Ross's Charity, [1899] 1 Ch. 21, C. A.).

(d) Where land is owned by a person in his ecclesiastical capacity, it is ecclesiastical property, although it need not necessarily be applied to an ecclesiastical purpose (Westminster Corporation v. St. George's, Hanover Square, supra). But where land bought with money representing part of the endowment of a rectory is conveyed to the rector, but not in his capacity as rector, it may cease to be ecclesiastical property (Power v. Banks, [1901] 2 Ch. 487).

(e) These characteristics of ecclesiastical property are based on those set out in the definition clause as characterising an ecclesiastical charity in the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 75 (2), by which that Act and the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), s. 23, distinguish charities which, being ecclesiastical, are not to be transferred to the local authority from those which, not being ecclesiastical, are so transferred (see note (c), p. 355, ante).

SECT. 1.
Characteristics of Ecclesiastical
Property.

Primitive characteristics.

Localisation of ministra-tions.

During the earlier stages, while the Church still retained a missionary character (f), the predominant characteristic of such ecclesiastical property was that it was dedicated to God or to the service of God. The persons who held the immediate possession of such property (g) held it only in a representative capacity and usually as property held as a common fund on behalf of all who were working together for the common cause. In most districts the ministrations of the Church were provided either by regular clergy working from and under the control of the monastery or abbey to which they belonged, or by secular clergy working from a diocesan centre under the control of the bishop, who had his seat there (h). In the former case the immediate possession and control of the property were as a rule vested in the abbot in his representative capacity; in the latter case the immediate possession and control of the property were vested in the bishop (i) as the representative of the parochia or mother church, and he awarded such stipend as he thought fit to the clergy working under him (k).

Gradually, as more churches were built, the ministrations of the Church became more localised, and partly by the deliberate acts of the bishop and those serving under him, partly by the allocation by (f) As Christianity spread in England the representatives of the Church acquired property for ecclesiastical purposes, in part by succession to the temples formerly occupied and customary payments formerly received by the heathen priests, in part by voluntary gifts, and in part by payments based on the ordinances of the Church (Bede's Ecclesiastical History of England, Vol. I., pp. 30, 32; Lingard's History of England, Vol. I., p. 261; Haddan and Stubbs, Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents (relating to Great Britain and Ireland), Vol. I., p. 37).

(g) The means by which the Roman law gave effect to gifts of property for the benefit of the Church without requiring that the property should be vested in some person capable of owning it (see note (q), p. 337, ante), are not recognised by the law of England, but in the period from the introduction of Christianity into Britain until the Conquest there were frequent instances of gifts being dedicated to pious uses without any more specific statement as to their ownership than that they were the property of "the Church" or "dedicated to God," and so long as the bishop and clergy of a diocese worked from a centre and were sustained from a common fund, and the regular clergy held no other property than that which belonged to their order in common, such a statement as to ownership practically sufficed, the bishop or abbot, as the case might be, being in effective control, and being himself precluded from selling Church property (see note (i), infra), but as the division of the parochia into several parishes grew, and parish churches were separately endowed, the necessity, or at least the expediency, arose of vesting the endowment in some person recognised by the law capable of securing it as a reward for the spiritual care of the inhabitants for ever (1 Bl. Com. 469).

(h) See note (a), p. 442, ante. For the first six or seven centuries the parochia was the diocese or episcopal district wherein the bishop and his clergy lived together at the cathedral church, and all tithes and oblations were brought into a common fund for the support of the bishop and his college of priests and deacons and for the repair and ornaments of the church, and for other suitable works of piety and charity, so that before the distribution into parishes all tithes, offerings, and ecclesiastical profits whatever belonged to the bishop and his clergy for pious uses, and by their original nature could not be in the hands of any layman or be employed to any secular purpose (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 66).

(i) Council of Chelsea, clause 7 (816 A.D.), "That neither bishops nor abbots should sell any church property"; Haddan and Stubbs, Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents, Vol. III., p. 582.

(k) Council of Chelsea, clause 11.

the monasteries of particular districts to be served by individual members of their number, and partly by agreement between great nobles and ecclesiastical authorities, smaller ecclesiastical districts were formed and the parochial system was evolved (2). The evolution of this system naturally varied with the variation of the forces which evolved it, but certain rules which are known to have been more or less generally enforced at different stages of this evolution may be usefully stated as an assistance to forming a true view of the growth of the existing system, and of its characteristics as finally evolved.

SECT. 1.
Characteristics of Ecclesiastical
Property.

1418. The ordinances of the Church provided (1) that although any subject might, so far as the mere building went, erect a church or chapel, yet until consecration by the bishop of the diocese the building could not be used without licence of the bishop for the celebration of the sacraments (m), nor was it recognised as a church in any legal sense, and (2) that the building should not be consecrated as a church until a competent endowment was made for the priest and that this competent endowment should include the assignment of a house and glebe. The effect of these rules was that no person or body (n) could consistently with the law of the Church erect any new church with rights of burying and christening without obtaining the sanction of the bishop and satisfying him as to the endowment.

Governing principles.

1419. A bishop was not at liberty to invade the territory assigned to a monastery or religious house, nor the parochia of another diocese, but within the limits of his own parochia was as universal incumbent in a position to allot any particular district within his jurisdiction to be served by one cleric as incumbent and to assign to him as incumbent such stipend as he thought fit (o).

Foundation
of churches.

(2) 1 Bl. Com. 111, 112, 113. The statement that the lords obliged all the tenants upon their demesnes to appropriate their tithes to an officiating minister instead of leaving them at liberty to distribute them among the clergy of the diocese in general, and that the tract of land the tithes whereof were so appropriated formed a distinct parish, requires qualification, since such liberty, if it ever existed, had in general ceased before the parish was formed. A statement which would probably be more generally applicable is that when a great lord founded a church the boundaries of the district allocated as that in which the duties should be performed and the fees and tithes should be received usually followed the boundaries of the area in which the founder held sway, whether as the lord of a hundred or of one or more manors. Such an allocation was not arbitrary, inasmuch as it was in general made with the assent of the bishop (Lord Selborne's Ancient Facts and Fictions concerning Churches and Tithes, pp. 309—314).

(m) The test whether a building is a church or not is, "Is it of right that the sacraments are administered there?" (2 Co. Inst. 363).

(n) Even the religious houses were bound by this rule (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 322).

(o) The discretion thus given to the bishop became in time qualified by rules providing for the division of the emoluments arising in a particular district between the church of the district and the mother church, and the principles governing such division recognised a distinction between the more important and less important of the district churches. Thus the laws of King Edgar provided:—"If there be any thane who on his boc land has a church at which there is a burial-place, let him give the third part of his own tithes to his church. If any one have a church at which there is not a burial-place, then of

SECT. 1.
Characteristics
of Ecclesiastical
Property.

Rights of religious houses.

The King and anyone by the King's licence, and by the general custom of the realm any bishop, earl, or baron, without the King's licence, might, with the assent of the bishop, build a church or chapel (p) and provide a permanent endowment, and before the Statutes of Mortmain (q) might appropriate the endowment and right of patronage to any spiritual corporation; while, if no appropriation were made, the church after consecration was recognised with full rights by the law throughout the district in which the incumbent (r) had the cure of souls, and the incumbent was recognised as owning the endowment in his spiritual capacity, with perpetual succession to his successors in the incumbency (s).

A monastery or other ecclesiastical house founded by the King was exempt from all other ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and was entitled within the limits assigned by its grants to enforce its own rights of property. It was therefore in a position to allot any particular district within its jurisdiction to be served by one cleric and to assign to him such stipend as it thought fit (t), and in this manner as well as by appropriations pleno jure the interests in the benefice both temporal and spiritual were annexed to the religious house (a), the duties being performed by members of the house or by stipendiary curates who were at first removable at pleasure, but later became regularly endowed vicars (b).

In other cases a religious house with the assent of the King and bishop might receive an appropriation in temporalibus only, that is, temporal interests only, such as tithes or patronage, were conveyed, and the cure of souls resided in an endowed perpetual curate or vicar (c), who was instituted by the bishop.

Division into parishes.

In these various ways the major part of the country was by the nine parts let him give to his priest what he will and let every church-scot go to the old minster according to every free hearth" (Thorpe, Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, p. 111). Subject to such qualifications the bishop had power to divide off from his parochia such portions as he thought fit to be served as separate parishes (Council of Chelsea, Haddan and Stubbs, Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents, Vol. III., p. 582).

(p) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 321.

(q) See title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL.

(r) As to the word "incumbent," see p. 451, and note (i), p. 560, ante.

(s) 3 Co. Inst. 201, 202.

(t) Such a cleric had no particular interest in the profits, because he was a mere nominee of the monastery (Jones v. Ellis (1828), 2 Y. & J. 265; Greenslade v. Darby (1868), 1 L. R. 3 Q. B. 421, 429).

(a) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, 8th ed., Vol. I., p. 66, n.

(b) By stat. (1402) 4 Hen. 4, c. 12, the monasteries were compelled to appoint a secular person, not a member of their house, and not removable at pleasure and sufficiently endowed (Greenslade v. Darby, supra). See stat. (1391) 15 Ric. 2, c. 6; stat. (1402) 4 Hen. 4, c. 12).

(c) As to the meaning of "curate," see note (i), p. 560, ante; as to "vicar," see p. 561, ante, p. 718, post. Sometimes the rectory belonged to a monastery under such circumstances as to exempt it from stat. (1402) 4 Hen. 4, c. 12, and it appointed a curate who had no endowment, and before the Reformation no possession beyond that which was required for the fulfilment of his duties. After the Reformation the lay impropriator was compelled to appoint a curate whom the ordinary could not change capriciously and who became to a certain extent perpetual (Greenslade v. Darby, supra). As to whether a perpetual curate can be said to have an estate in fee in right of his church, see Doe d. Richardson v. Thomas (1839), 1 Per. & Dav. 578).

SECT. 1.
Characteristics of Ecclesiastical
Property.

Ownership of endowments.

about the end of the thirteenth century divided into parishes, but some lands were never united to any ancient parish; and in respect of these lands the King, as supreme ecclesiastical head, was entitled to the ecclesiastical emoluments in trust that he should distribute them for the good of the Church (d).

1420. Before the division into parishes, while the property of the parochia or of the monastery was still treated as a common fund, the bishop or abbot was recognised in his representative capacity as the owner of the property of the whole parochia or of the monastery, and was precluded from alienating it; and as the division into parishes (e) proceeded a need arose for some person who might be similarly recognised in a representative capacity as the owner of the property allotted to each parish. Accordingly, the law recognised that not only was the bishop in his spiritual capacity a corporation having perpetual succession, but that in respect of every parish a person might be recognised as the parochianus, or person who should in his representative capacity be a corporation capable of preserving the original endowment for his successors in perpetuity (f).

1421. The determination of the question who is the person thus recognised as parson in each particular parish depends on the question whether the benefice has been appropriated or impropriated, and on the nature of the appropriation or impropriation. Where a benefice has been annexed to the perpetual use of some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living which was bound to provide for the cure of souls within the parish, the benefice is said to have been appropriated, and the appropriators are recognised as the parson or rector of the parish (g).

Appropriation.

1422. Where a benefice is in lay hands it is said to be impropriate, and the lay rector is said to be the impropricator. Whenever the impropricator was a layman (h) it was essential that some spiritual person should be appointed to have the cure of souls, and in many cases where the benefice was appropriated to a spiritual corporation the actual cure of souls was intrusted to one individual, who officiated in the place of the parson and received some portion of the emoluments. * Where one thus holds a spiritual office under the parson as officiating in his place or stead he is called

Impropriation

(d) 1 Bl. Com. 112; 2 Co. Inst. 647.

(e) A parish is that circuit of ground which is committed to the charge of one parson or vicar or other minister having cure of souls therein (Selden's History of Tithes, p. 260; and see p. 442, ante). The fact that the vicar of a parish receives the vicarial tithe of a chapelry, and that the inhabitants in the chapelry are in the habit of being married in the parish church, is almost conclusive evidence that the chapelry is part of the parish (Re Sandbach School and Almshouse Foundation, A.-G. v. Crewe (Earl), [1901] 2 Ch. 317).

(f) As to the word "parson," see note (k), p. 560, ante.

(g) See also note (n), p. 561, ante.

(h) No layman could have cure of souls, and the granting of a benefice to a layman was against the law of the church, at least after the year 1200 A.D. (see 1 Co. Inst. 641), and probably before that date; but grants were in fact in some cases made, and were confirmed by statute, and after the dissolution of the monasteries a great number of the rectories which had been appropriated to the monasteries were granted to laymen and so became impropriate.

SECT. 1.
Characteristics of Ecclesiastical
Property.

a vicar, and his office is called a vicarage (i). The emoluments of a vicar usually consist of the house held by the person officiating as vicar, called the vicarage, and a part of the emoluments of the benefice in kind, called the small or vicarial tithes (k), and may include a part of the great tithes and also of the glebe (i). The same grounds existing for such recognition as exist in the case of a rector, the law also recognises the vicar as a corporation, and he and his successors are the owners in perpetuity of such portions of the property as appertain to his office, including as a rule such property in the churchyard as is necessary for the performance of his ecclesiastical duty, and the site and fabric of the church, excepting the chancel, which appertains to and is owned by the rector.

Forms of
ecclesiastical property in parishes.

1423. In the case of an impropriate rectory, that portion of the endowment which is owned by the lay rector for other than spiritual purposes is not ecclesiastical property (l), but where a benefice is appropriate the endowment as a whole, and where a benefice is impropriate that part of the endowment which forms the emoluments of the vicar, or is otherwise owned for spiritual purposes, is ecclesiastical property, and where a benefice is impropriate, if the owner entitled in fee simple to the rectory or tithes is willing to restore the tithes, glebe, and other rectorial rights, the vicarage may be converted into a rectory (m), and the tithes and glebe restored will thereupon be ecclesiastical property again. The ecclesiastical property owned in connection with a parish thus usually includes: (1) The church and churchyard; (2) the tithes, rectorial or vicarial, as the case may be; (3) the parsonage house and glebe (n).

SECT. 2.—Property Ecclesiastical in its Nature.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Consecrated Churches and Churchyards.

Consecration.

1424. The property owned for the benefit of the Church of England which is most directly ecclesiastical in its nature is that which by an act of consecration has been set aside for ever to

(i) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. IV., p. 9; see also p. 561, ante. In some cases a vicarage may be converted into a rectory upon a surrender of the great tithe by the impropriator (see infra).

(k) See p. 743, post.

(l) Although the ecclesiastical property of the monasteries, which on their dissolution was granted to non-ecclesiastical persons, and became impropriate, was to be held by the new owners as it was held by the religious house from which it was transferred, yet in fact the impropriations in the hands of laymen became inheritances of a merely temporal nature entirely freed from any spiritual jurisdiction. See p. 801, post.

(m) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 13. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may direct the conversion to be made either for a parish or a separate division of a parish where a proportion of the tithe and glebe satisfactory to them is restored (ibid.).

(n) Every archbishop and bishop is bound as far as in him lieth to procure a true note and torrier of all the glebes, lands, meadows, gardens, orchards, houses, stocks, implements, tenements and portions of tithes lying out of their parishes which belong to any parsonage or vicarage or rural prebend within his diocese to be taken by the view of honest men in every parish appointed by the bishop, whereof the parson is to be one, to be laid up in the bishop's registry, there to be set a perpetual memorial thereof (Canons (1603), 87).

sacred uses, and the most important part of such property, and that which is most essential for the due performance of the ministrations of the Church, consists of the churches and churchyards which belong to, or are used in connection with, the parishes to which they appertain.

As a building does not become a church in the eye of the law until it is consecrated, a church must be so set aside before it can become the church of a separate parish (o). There is no corresponding necessity for the consecration of a churchyard (p), but the practice of consecrating a churchyard in connection with every parish church has become so general that a consecrated church and churchyard have come to be regarded as requisite for the complete performance of the offices of the Church in a parish, and as the natural centre and basis of the parochial organisation.

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

Necessity of consecration.

(i.) Acquisition of Churches and Churchyards.

1425. A building intended for use as a church or chapel may be erected by anyone (q), and may, with the consent of the bishop, be used for divine service and the administration of sacraments, but the law does not take notice of such a building as a church or chapel of the Church of England until it has been consecrated by the bishop (r). The right of the bishop to give or withhold his sanction to the foundation of a church, and to consecrate or to refuse to consecrate a building erected for that purpose, is absolute (s).

Acquisition of churches.

(o) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 323.

(p) The provision of a churchyard was never required as an essential preliminary to the erection of a church, the practice in England having been to bury persons of pre-eminent sanctity of life in the church, and to bury persons of less memorable merit in inclosed places not connected with the church, but after the year 750 A.D. the practice arose of carefully inclosing a space of ground adjoining the church and consecrating it and appropriating it to the burial of those who had been entitled to attend divine service in the church (Gilbert v. Buzzard and Boyer (1821), 2 Hag. Con. 333, 343), and when this practice became general it was recognised that every parishioner had a right to be buried in the churchyard without payment for the ground occupied or for the performance of the office (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 257). Even when it is proposed to erect on a part of the churchyard which has not been consecrated, there is jurisdiction to grant a faculty authorising the erection (Re Holy Trinity, Hoxton (1909), 25 T. L. R. 570).

(q) By a constitution of Otho it was provided that all cathedral, conventual, and parochial churches then built and the walls thereof perfected were to be consecrated within two years, and that it was to be so done within the like time in all churches thereafter to be built under penalty that they should be interdicted from the solemnities of the mass until consecrated unless they be excused for some reasonable cause (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 321), and on the principle that omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta it may therefore fairly be inferred that all ancient parochial churches have been duly consecrated. The fact that the sacraments have not been administered in a chapel thus affords strong ground for thinking that it is a chapel of ease and not a parochial chapelry (Carr v. Mostyn (1850), 5 Exch. 69).

(r) Within the limits of the possessions of a religious house which was exempt from ecclesiastical jurisdiction anyone with the assent of such religious house might erect a church or chapel, and outside such limits any bishop, earl, or baron might erect a church or chapel with full rights (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 321).

(s) Even if the incumbent of the existing church of the parish objects to the consecration of another building the bishop may overrule his objection (Winchester (Bishop) v. Bugg (1868), L. R. 2 A. & E. 247). The bishop's discretionary

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.
—
Foundation
of church.

Where the building is consecrated as a church, the church so founded (t) includes the cure of souls and the rights attached within the district assigned to it, and will continue to exist in the eye of the law as a church, even though the material building is destroyed (u), and the body corporate which has been endowed in respect of it will remain in possession of the endowment (x).

The bishop before consecrating a church is bound to ascertain that a competent endowment, including a manse and glebe, has been provided, and accordingly it is necessary before commencing to build a church to obtain the bishop's approval of the site, plans, and endowment, so as to secure that, when the church is finished, the bishop will be willing to consecrate it (a).

Modern acquisitions.

1426. After the end of the thirteenth century the realm having, as stated (b), become divided into parishes and extra-parochial places, the foundation of churches according to the ancient manner ceased, and churches and chapels were thenceforth acquired and consecrated either (1) for the purpose of replacing existing churches (c), or of making better provision for the cure of souls in existing parishes or extra-parochial places; or (2) in connection with some alteration in the boundaries of existing parishes or power to refuse consecration could not be defeated by the action of the religious houses (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 322).

(t) A chapel erected for the private use of a lord of a manor and his servants and tenants, even though consecrated and used on exceptional occasions for baptisms and other offices excepting burial, is not necessarily to be regarded as a parochial chapel (Nevill v. Studdy (1906), 94 L. T. 391).

(u) It was formerly thought that the material building would if it were polluted or absolutely destroyed require reconsecration (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 336; Baltiscombe v. Eve (1863), 7 L. T. 697; Turner v. Hanwell (Rector etc.) (1842), 1 Notes of Cases, 368), but these cases have been doubted, and it has been said that even the material building will not require reconsecration if it is rebuilt on the same foundations; or at least this will be so when the offices of the church have continuously been performed, and what remained of the building has remained subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary (Parker v. Leach (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 312).

(x) Where a church was thus founded with full rights throughout a defined district under the charge of one incumbent, the district became a parish and the church became the parish church (see p. 442, ante).

(a) The ancient manner of founding a church was that on the founder applying to the bishop and receiving his sanction, the bishop or his commissioners set up a cross and set forth the ground where the church was to be built, and when the church was finished and endowed the bishop consecrated it (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 323).

(b) See p. 717, ante.

(c) Where a church had been consecrated and used for twelve years for divine worship in place of an ancient chapel which had fallen into decay, it was held that although christenings and burials were still performed in the chapel, the new church had become de facto the church of the parish, for the purpose of the Act requiring notices to be affixed to the door before the commencement of service (Ormerod v. Chadwick (1847), 16 L. J. (M. C.) 143). When an existing church which served certain purposes was compulsorily acquired at a price enhanced on the ground of the ornamental style in which it was built, there is no obligation to rebuild it in similar style provided the accommodation is equally good for such purposes, and the enhancement of price may be devoted to augmenting the endowment (Clephane v. Edinburgh Town Council (1864), 4 Macq. 608, H. L.).

extra-parochial places for the purpose of providing for the cure of souls in some newly formed parish or district.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Substitution of new church for old church.

1427. Where a new church is built in any parish or chapelry and the bishop, patron, and incumbent of the parish or chapelry certify to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners that it will be convenient for the new church to be substituted for the existing church, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may declare, with the consent of the bishop, patron, and incumbent, that on consecration the new church shall be so substituted, and may transfer the endowments, emoluments, and rights, and thereupon the trustees, if any, must transfer the same according to the directions of the commissioners, and all glebe lands, tithes, endowments, emoluments, fees, and profits are vested in the incumbent of the new church (d), and the incumbent of the old church becomes the rector, vicar, perpetual curate, or vicar, as the case may be, of the new church (e). After such substitution the bishop may by faculty provide for pulling down the old church (f), and for the use or preservation of the site either by the incumbent or by the churchwardens, or by an owner of some adjoining freehold (g), and in granting such faculty must take care that all tombstones, monuments, and monumental inscriptions are, as far as may be, preserved by the churchwardens or are transferred to the substituted church (h).

1428. The various modes in which a parish may be subdivided or a new ecclesiastical district formed, or an extra-parochial place may be formed into a parish, have already been considered (i), and it is here necessary to deal only with the acquisition and consecration of the church and churchyard in connection with such subdivision or formation. The difficulties in the way of providing sites for churches and churchyards arose in part from the laws of mortmain and the laws relating to charitable trusts, and in part from the law against perpetuities. The law of mortmain, which formerly prevented the provision of sites for churches and churchyards without the consent of the King and the lord of the fee, now provides that where land or personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of land is assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use, so much land as is required for actual occupation for the purpose of the charity may be retained or purchased, provided the High Court or the Charity Commissioners are satisfied that it is so required and sanctions such retention or purchase (j), and that any assurance

Churches for new divisions or districts.

(d) Such a substituted endowment may be sufficient satisfaction of the rule that a new church shall not be consecrated until provision has been made for the church and the incumbent thereof to justify the consecration of the new church (Re St. Mary, Bishopstoke (1909), 26 T. L. R. 86).

(e) Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 1.

(f) Ibid.

(g) New Parishes and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), s. 8.

(h) Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 1.

(i) See pp. 443—451, ante.

(j) Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), s. 8. A certificate of the Charity Commissioners is not required before an application is made to the court under this section (Re Church Patronage Trust, Laurie v.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Faculties
for erecting churches.

otherwise than by will to trustees on behalf of any society or body of persons associated together for religious purposes of land, not exceeding two acres, for the erection thereon of a building for such purposes, if made in good faith and for full and valuable consideration, is exempt from the provisions (k) required to be fulfilled in order to validate an assurance of land to charitable uses (l).

1429. For the purpose of erecting or providing any church or chapel (m), any person of full age and sane (n) may, by will executed not less than three months before his death, or by deed enrolled, give land not exceeding five acres, or goods and chattels not exceeding £500 (o), or the Crown or the lord of any manor may grant land, not exceeding five acres (p), for or towards the erecting, rebuilding, repairing, purchasing, or providing any church or chapel of the Church of England, or any mansion-house for the residence of the minister officiating in such church or chapel, or any churchyard or glebe (q) for the same, to be applied with the consent of the ordinary in accordance with the directions in the will or deed, or if there are

A.-G., [1904] 1 Ch. 41). As to the application of the Mortmain Acts to charities generally, see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 124 et seq.

(k) These provisions are contained in Part II. of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42).

(l) Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), s. 7 (ii.).

(m) The word "church" according to the ordinary interpretation includes the chancel, and in the Church Building Acts the word bears this ordinary meaning unless the chancel is separately mentioned (Ripplin v. Bastin (1869), L. R. 2 A. & E. 386).

(n) Gifts for Churches Act, 1803 (43 Geo. 3, c. 108), s. 1. The section contained an exception of women covert without their husbands, and it was held in Re Smith's Estate, Clements v. Ward (1887), 35 Ch. D. 589, that this exception was not impliedly repealed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), but in Re Douglas, Douglas v. Simpson, [1905] 1 Ch. 279, it was held that the exception is impliedly repealed by s. 7 of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73).

(o) A gift of £500 on trust to apply the income in repairing a churchyard is good under the Act of 1803. Where the income of the £500 was directed to be in part applied to keeping a family vault in repair, and the residue in keeping in repair a tomb and the churchyard in which it was situated, it was held that the trust to keep the vault in repair was void and the residuary trust was void so far as it related to keeping the tomb in repair and the £500, less so much as would have provided sufficient income to keep the tomb in repair, was applied to the repairs of the churchyard (Re Vaughan, Vaughan v. Thomas (1886), 33 Ch. D. 187). Even without the statute such a gift might have been good as a charitable gift (Re Manser, A.-G. v. Lucas, [1905] 1 Ch. D. 68; Re Pardee, McLaughlin v. A.-G., [1906] 2 Ch. 184). Where a bequest was to pay £2,000 to the vicar of M. to be used at his discretion for the purposes of restoring, altering, enlarging, and improving the church parsonage house and school, it was held that the bequest was valid to the extent of the restoring etc. the church, and such other of the objects as were already in mortmain, and that such of the objects as were within the Gifts for Churches Act, 1803 (43 Geo. 3, c. 108), were payable out of the impure personality to the full extent of £500 (Champney v. Davy (1879), 11 Ch. D. 949); but see now Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), s. 7, and title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 138, note (f).

(p) Gifts for Churches Act, 1811 (51 Geo. 3, c. 115). The power of a lord of the manor under this Act is restricted by the Commons Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 30), s. 22, Sched. L.

(q) No glebe above fifty acres in extent can be augmented by such a gift to the extent of more than one acre (Gifts to Churches Act, 1803 (43 Geo. 3, c. 108), s. 3).

no such directions, in accordance with the directions of the patron and ordinary and with the consent of the incumbent (r).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.
Provision of land for churches.

1430. All bodies politic, corporate, or collegiate, or corporations sole or aggregate, tenants for life or in tail, guardians (s), trustees, committees, executors or administrators (a), or commissioners, or other persons having the control, care, or management of any hospitals, schools, charitable foundations, or other public institutions (b), may effectually contract for the sale of and convey for full consideration any lands or enfranchise copyholds, so as to bind all parties interested, to the commissioners appointed under the Church Building Acts, now the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, for the purpose of building churches or chapels (c), or for enlarging any churchyard or burial ground or providing any new burial ground (d), or by sale or exchange only may convey a site not exceeding five acres for the house of residence of any incumbent (e), and the Commissioners of Woods and Forests (with the consent of the Treasury) or the Lords of the Treasury, or the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, or the Chancellor of the Duchy of Cornwall, or any body politic, corporate, or collegiate, or corporation, aggregate or sole, may grant any building or buildings, or site or sites, sufficient for the building of any church or chapel providing a churchyard and access or approach thereto, or any house, garden, and appurtenances, or land for the erection thereof, not exceeding ten acres, for the residence of any spiritual person serving such church or chapel (f), and may grant timber, stone, slate, or other materials from the estates belonging to them for the purpose of such building (g).

1431. Where the commissioners cannot agree on the price to be paid for lands taken for the purposes of church building, they may proceed to have the amount to be paid settled by a jury (h), and on payment of the amount so settled may enter into possession of the lands (i). After the expiration of five years from the transfer or conveyance to the commissioners their title become absolute (k), provided the transfer or conveyance is justified by the provisions by virtue of which it has been made (l). For the purpose of providing the purchase-money of a site the commissioners have power to advance money, and the parish had power to raise moneys on the security of the church rates (m), but this latter power has been

Compulsory acquisition of land.

-
- (r) Gifts for Churches Act, 1803 (43 Geo. 3, c. 108), s. 1.
 (s) Including a father as natural guardian; see note (h), p. 725, post.
 (a) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 36.
 (b) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 1.
 (c) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 36.
 (d) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 37.
 (e) Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 9.
 (f) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 33.
 (g) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 20.
 (h) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 40—49.
 (i) Ibid., s. 43.
 (k) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 29.
 (l) A.-G. v. Manchester (Bishop) (1867), L. R. 3 Eq. 436.
 (m) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 54, 55.

SECT. 2.

Property Ecclesiastical in its Nature.

Gifts for new ecclesiastical districts.

rendered inoperative since 1860 by the abolition of compulsory church rates (n).

1432. Any person or body corporate (o) having in his or their own right any estate or interest in possession, reversion, or contingency of or in any lands, tithes, or other hereditaments (p), or any property in any personal estate whatsoever (q), may by deed enrolled in the case of lands, or without any deed in the case of personal estate, or by will, give to and vest in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners all or any part thereof for the endowment (r) or augmentation of ministers or perpetual curates appointed to serve districts where the provision for public worship and for pastoral superintendence is insufficient for the spiritual wants of the inhabitants, or for or towards providing any church or chapel for such district, and to be applied for such purpose according to the directions of the donor, or when no such directions are given, then in accordance with directions framed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, and approved by His Majesty in Council (s).

Enlargement of churchyards.

1433. For the purpose of providing for the enlargement of churchyards or burial grounds, limited owners may utilise all the facilities (t) for conveyance given by the School Sites Acts to persons desirous of providing lands for schools (a), and may on any such gift reserve the exclusive right in perpetuity of burial and of placing monuments and gravestones in one-sixth of the land given (n) Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1860 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109). Accordingly the Church Building Acts, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), and 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), are repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 91), so far as they provide for enforcing any rate.

(o) Including any ecclesiastical or collegiate corporation, aggregate or sole (New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 4).

(p) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 22; District Church Tithes Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 42), s. 7.

(q) New Parishes Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 94), s. 7.

(r) These provisions extend to the giving of tithes or the giving of land or personal estate for the purchase of tithes with the view of annexing such tithes to a district church (District Church Tithes Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 42), s. 7).

(s) A gift by will for such a purpose is valid although at the death of the testator no district had been formed (Baldwin v. Baldwin (No. 2) (1856), 22 Beav. 419).

(t) The Schools Sites Acts, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 37), 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 49), 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 24), and 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 49), provide facilities to limited owners for providing sites for schools, subject to a reverter on the land ceasing to be used for the purposes in the Acts mentioned, and to ascertain what this purpose is the terms of the grant of the land are to be looked at (A.-G. v. Shadwell, [1910] 1 Ch. 92), and a reverter will take place if the land has ceased to be used for that purpose even though it is still used for other purposes within the Acts, but not within the purpose of the grant (ibid.). Any number of sites may be conveyed, provided that not more than one acre is conveyed in any one parish or ecclesiastical district (Schools Sites Acts, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), s. 9, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 49), s. 3, and 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 24). The School Sites Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 49), s. 5, also enables an absolute owner to vest any quantity of land in a corporation in trust for the purposes of the Acts. As to the Schools Sites Acts, see further title EDUCATION.

(a) Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 133), s. 4.

subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary as to the inscriptions thereon (b).

1434. Any person entitled in fee simple, fee tail, or for life to any manor or lands, and having the beneficial interest therein and being in possession (c), and any corporation, ecclesiastical or lay, sole or aggregate, and any officers, justices of the peace, trustees, or commissioners holding land for public, ecclesiastical, parochial, charitable, or other purposes (d), may grant or enfranchise, by way of gift or sale or exchange (e), any quantity, not exceeding one acre, of land not being part of a demesne attached to a mansion-house as a site for a church, chapel, or other place of worship, or for the residence of a minister officiating in a place of worship within one mile of such site, or for a burial place (f), or any number of such sites, provided each site does not exceed one acre, and that when the person conveying is seised only for life the concurrence of the person next entitled (g), if he be legally competent, or if such person be a minor, married woman, or lunatic, the concurrence of the guardian (h), husband, or committee is required; that when an ecclesiastical corporation sole below the dignity of a bishop conveys, the concurrence of the bishop of the diocese is required; that when a municipal corporation conveys, the consent of the Treasury is required; that when parochial property is conveyed, the concurrence of the ratepayers and owners of property in the parish (i), of the Local Government Board, and of the guardians of the poor is required; and that when charitable property is conveyed, the consent of the Charity Commissioners is required. Where a grant is made of real estate to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, pursuant to any of the foregoing provisions, there is power to accept the grant (k). In many cases

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature
—
Grants by limited owners.

(b) Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 133), ss. 9, 10, amended by Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 47). As to those Acts, see further title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. II. pp. 413, 441, 442, 528.

(c) Places of Worship Sites Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 50), s. 1.

(d) Places of Worship Sites Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 21), s. 1.

(e) As to the powers of sale or exchange of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL.

(f) On the land ceasing to be used for the purpose, it is to revert (Places of Worship Sites Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 50), s. 1).

(g) If the person entitled to the immediate remainder is unborn or unascertained, the grant may be made, with the concurrence of the person entitled in remainder expectant, on the estate of such unborn or unascertained person (Places of Worship Sites Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 21), s. 2).

(h) A father who is tenant for life can, as guardian by nature of his infant son, concur on his behalf if the son is entitled to the inheritance in remainder (Re Salisbury (Marquis) and Ecclesiastical Commissioners (1876), 2 Ch. D. 29, O. A.).

(i) See Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73). The express power given to the parish meeting to give consent on behalf of the owners and ratepayers under the Schools Sites Acts and Acts relating to the relief of the poor (s. 52) may make it doubtful whether the parish meeting could give such consent under this Act.

(k) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 33; New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 22, amended by New Parishes Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 94), s. 7; Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 8; Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), s. 4.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Church
vested in trustees.

statutory forms of grant which may be adopted are provided and are, when adopted, given statutory force (l). A conveyance made in the form prescribed by the Church Building Act, 1822 (m), does not require to be enrolled and is free from stamp duty (n).

1435. A body of church trustees may be appointed in any parish for the purpose of accepting and holding any contributions which may be given to them for ecclesiastical purposes in the parish (n), and in any parish or extra-parochial place where the churches and chapels are inadequate for the accommodation of one-fourth of the parishioners, and twelve householders certify this to the bishop, and that they desire to build or purchase a church or chapel out of subscriptions, and to provide out of pew rents for the stipend of the minister and other expenses, such church or chapel may, with the approval of the bishop, be built (o) and vested in three life trustees to be elected by persons subscribing not less than £50 each (p). The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, with the consent of the majority of the subscribers having the right to elect, and of the patron and incumbent, make any such church or chapel a district church or chapel (q), and after forty years it must become a district church if the parish has been divided, or a parochial chapel if no division is made (r).

Vesting of
site in new parish.

1436. Where a new parish is created under the New Parishes Acts the freehold of the site of the church and churchyard, burial ground and vaults belonging thereto, with the rights, members, and appurtenances thereof, and the house of residence and all endowments belonging to or held for the exclusive benefit of the incumbent, vest on the creation of the parish in the incumbent and his successors in right of such incumbency, provided that where the church or churchyard is by any local Act of Parliament vested in any vestry, the consent of such vestry has been given (s).

Augmenta-
tion of endowments.

1437. Various provisions have been made for the augmentation of endowments and for securing endowments for the support of the minister and the repair of the church or chapel of an ecclesiastical district, new parish, or district parish, either by providing (1) a

(l) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 37, repealed Statute Law Revision Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 91); Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 20), s. 20; Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 6; Places of Worship Sites Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 50), s. 4.

(m) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 2.

(n) See p. 474, ante.

(o) Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), s. 5.

(p) Ibid., s. 6.

(q) Ibid., s. 16.

(r) Ibid., s. 17.

(s) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 10. Where under a local Act a new church was made the parish church, and the old parish church was converted into a "parish chapel," and the adjacent part of the parish into a new district, this section did not operate to vest the old churchyard in the incumbent of the new district. (Champerne v. Arrowsmith (1867), L. R. 3 C. P. 107 Ex. Ch.).

parsonage house and glebe; (2) tithes; (3) pew rents; (4) fees; or (5) income from investments or from the fund of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and such provision may be made either by transference of property or rights from the endowments of the mother church or by the creation of new endowments.

Any owner or proprietor of any impropriation or tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes (a), in any parish of chapelry may, without any licence in mortmain, annex the same to the parsonage or vicarage of the church or chapel where they arise (b), and the incumbent of any benefice, the income of which does not amount to a clear £100, may, without licence, accept or purchase lands, tithes, or other hereditaments (c).

Any ecclesiastical corporation (d), or college, or hospital (e) may, out of any rectory impropriate or portion of tithes, or other hereditaments, reserve and grant a rent by way of augmentation to any incumbent of any church or chapel in any parish in which such rent arises, or of which the grantors are patrons (d), provided that the income of the benefice does not before augmentation exceed £300, nor after augmentation exceed £350 without counting surplice fees (f).

The incumbent of any benefice, with the consents of the ordinary and patron, may annex any land or tithe to which he is entitled in right of his benefice to any church or chapel within the parish, district, or place in which such land or tithe is situated or arises (g), and may charge his benefice with the payment of any annual sum, to be paid quarterly or half-yearly to the incumbent of any chapel of ease, parochial chapel, or district church or chapel within the original limits of his rectory or vicarage (h), provided that no such charge can be made in favour of a chapel of ease which is to become the church of a distinct parish after the existing incumbency of the mother church (i).

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, in cases where they do not deem it expedient to divide a parish for ecclesiastical purposes, allot a portion of the endowment not exceeding one half to the incumbent of or person serving a chapel within the parish in which the celebration of marriage has been authorised by the bishop (k).

A chapelry served by a chapel-of-ease may be made into a distinct and separate parish by the bishop, with the consents of the incumbent and patron, if the bishop is satisfied that some person will

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

By tithe
owner.

By rector.

Endowment of chapel by incumbent.

By Ecclesiastical
Commissioners.

(a) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 23.

(b) Stat. (1665) 17 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 7. This statute was repealed by the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 15; but ss. 7 and 8 were revived by the New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 25.

(c) Stat. (1665) 17 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 8.

(d) Stat. (1677) 29 Car. 2, c. 8, extended by Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 45); Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 84); and by the District Church Tithes Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 42).

(e) Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 3.

(f) Ibid., s. 16.

(g) Ibid., s. 20; and Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 84), ss. 2, 3.

(h) Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 21.

(i) Ibid., s. 22.

(k) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, s. 72), s. 22.

SECT. 2.

Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Apportionment by scheme.

Apportionment by Court of Chancery.

endow the chapel with a competent stipend for the minister (l). Before the bishop can grant the patronage of a privately built church to the donor an endowment certified to be worth £1,000 must be provided (m).

On the formation of a distinct and separate parish (n), but not on a division only into district parishes (o), the endowment of the divided parish and any charges on it (p) may be apportioned without regard to local situation (q) by scheme on the recommendation of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

Where a distinct and separate parish or a district parish or a district chapelry is formed out of any parish or extra-parochial place a Court of Chancery may apportion any gifts, devises, or bequests given for the use of such parish or place, and any charges thereon (r).

Further provisions for the endowments of benefices and their augmentation are made by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty (s) and by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (t), and by the assignment of fees (a) or of pew rents (b).

(ii.) Consecration of Churches and Churchyards.

Act of consecration.

1438. Property which has been dedicated to God or to the service of God may be stamped with an ecclesiastical character in a real sense by an act recognised by the law, which is called an act of consecration, and when real estate has thus been legally consecrated it will retain the ecclesiastical character thus bestowed upon it, whoever may be the actual owner and whatever may be the nature of his tenure (c). Consecration is effected by the decree of a competent ecclesiastical court. The act or sentence of consecration signed by the bishop setting aside land or buildings in sacros usus is what constitutes the legal act of consecration, and the effect of such act is that the property consecrated is separated for ever from the common uses of mankind (d), and is set apart solely for sacred purposes for all time or until the decree has been set aside by the like authority (e).

(l) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 23; Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 7.

(m) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 2; Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 12.

(n) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 16, 17.

(o) Ibid., s. 30.

(p) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 8.

(q) Ibid., s. 9.

(r) Church Building Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 22.

(s) See p. 781, post.

(t) See pp. 774, 783, post.

(a) See p. 778, post.

(b) See p. 786, post.

(c) Where ground is consecrated and dedicated to sacred purposes, nothing short of an Act of Parliament can divest it of its sacred character (R. v. Twiss (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 407, 412).

(d) Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379, 399, C. A. Under the Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 43, lands taken under that section are to vest "as may be declared in the sentence of consecration" for the purposes of the Act for ever.

(e) Wood v. Headingley-cum-Burley Burial Board, [1892] 1 Q. B. 713, 726.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.
—
Preliminaries.

1439. A church or chapel may be erected before consecration of the ground, and may with the consent of the bishop be used for divine service and the administration of sacraments, but it does not thereby become a church in the eye of the law (f). For this consecration is essential, and in order that the dedication may be certain, it is always required that the freehold of the ground on which the church is to be erected shall have been secured (g). This having been done, and the conveyance of the land having been effectively executed in the form appropriate in the particular circumstances so as to vest the land in the incumbent or in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or in some corporation or persons as trustees as the case may be (h), a petition is presented to the bishop (i) reciting the conveyance and requesting him to separate the land or land and buildings from all profane and common uses and to dedicate the same to God and divine worship, and to consecrate it for the celebration of divine offices therein, or for such other ecclesiastical purposes as are desired according to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England (k).

1440. Thereupon the bishop, with such religious ceremonial as he thinks fit, proceeds to consecrate the land or land and buildings, and to declare by sentence (l) that he thereby separates and sets them apart from all profane and common uses whatsoever, and dedicates them to the service of Almighty God for the performance of divine offices therein according to the liturgy and usages of the Church of England as by law established, and consecrates them for the use Ceremony.

The act of consecration is effective notwithstanding that a statutory provision requiring the sanction of a Secretary of State to the allocation of the land to be consecrated has not been complied with (Williams v. Briton Ferry Burial Board, [1905] 2 K. B. 565). No further act of consecration is required where the church is rebuilt on the same foundations (Parker v. Leach (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 312); but where an extension of the chancel is built on unconsecrated ground, it must be consecrated (Re St. Barnabas, Kensington (1909), 25 T. L. R. 571).

(f) See p. 719, ante.

(g) The ancient manner of founding churches was that the founders applying to the bishop and receiving his licence the bishop or his commissioners set up a cross and set forth the ground where the church was to be built, and when the church was finished and endowed the bishop consecrated it, but before consecrating it the bishop was bound to ascertain that a competent endowment had been provided, which provision was commonly made by an allotment of manse and glebe by the lord of the manor, who thereby became patron of the church (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 324). Whether the sixteenth canon of the Council of London, 1102 A.D., "ne ecclesia sacratur donec providiantur necessaria et presbytero et ecclesie," ever became binding as part of the canon law of the Church of England or not, it provided a rule which has in the main been adhered to (Re St. Mary, Bishopstoke (1909), 26 T. L. R. 86).

(h) For forms of conveyance appropriate for the purpose, see Encyclopædia of Forms, Vol. III., pp. 604—617.

(i) For forms of petition, see Encyclopædia of Forms, Vol. III., pp. 713—716.

(k) The fees to be paid on the consecration of churches, chapels, cemeteries, and burial grounds are prescribed in Tables of Fees, settled from time to time, pursuant to the Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 135), by the two archbishops and their vicars-general and the Lord Chancellor with the consent of the Treasury.

(l) For forms of sentences on consecration, see Encyclopædia of Forms, Vol. III., pp. 717—719. Where an addition to a churchyard is consecrated under the Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 133), the statutory form set out in s. 5 of that Act should be used; a gift for the purposes of that Act is exempt from stamp duty (ibid., s. 6).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

intended, and openly and publicly pronounces decrees and declares the same to be so separated, dedicated and consecrated, and that they ought to remain so for ever, saving, in the case of a chapel of ease, any rights which are reserved in favour of the mother church. When a church is consecrated and is to be vested in trustees, the sentence itself describes the site and declares that it is vested in the trustees and their successors as the trustees of such church (m).

Vesting of freehold.

1441. The churchyard, when dedicated and consecrated, is regarded as the soil of the church (n), and the freehold is in the rector (o), the fee being in abeyance and the freehold being vested in him for the use of the soil by the parishioners for the purpose of their burial therein (p), the management being vested on their behalf in the incumbent and churchwardens, who have a discretion as to the part of the churchyard in which any burial shall take place, any alleged custom to the contrary being bad (q). Where the rector is a layman the enjoyment of the property so far as it can be exercised by a layman belongs to him as owner of the freehold, but the vicar or perpetual curate has such possession as is necessary for the performance of his sacred duties (r).

(iii.) Effect of Consecration.

Effect of decree of consecration.

1442. As has been already stated, the effect of the decree or sentence of consecration is in itself to vest the property covered by it in the person in whom the fee is, subject to a limitation in sacros usus, and when the site of a church has been conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners under the Church Building Acts, not only does the site which is covered by the consecration thereupon vest in the incumbent by virtue of the statute (s), but even a portion

(m) When a church or chapel is built by subscribers under the Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), and is to be vested in trustees elected by them, the sentence of consecration declares the land, ground, and site to be vested in them and their successors for ever by such name and style as is therein specified (ibid., s. 14).

(n) Stat. (1306-7) 35 Edw. 1, stat. 2.

(o) By his induction into his living he has full and entire possession of it and can maintain an action of trespass in respect of it (Beckwith v. Harding (1818), 1 B. & Ald. 508; Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, [1910] A. C. 7; Maidman v. Malpas (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 205; Ex parte Blackmore (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 122; St. Gabriel, Fenchurch Street (Rector etc.) v. City of London Real Property Co., [1896] 1 P. 95, 101; and see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. IV., pp. 413-415).

(p) The inhabitants of the parish have a general right of sepulture in the churchyard which may be enforced by mandamus (R. v. Coleridge (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 806). Originally the land was the property of some lay person which, when the rectory was formed, was dedicated to the church and conveyed by him to the rector. Thus the freehold was vested in the rector, and he was entitled to the land, including the grass herbage and everything else, as fully as the original owner had been, but as the land had been set apart by consecration for the church and churchyard, his right was proportionably diminished because he could not desecrate it or use it for any purpose which was inconsistent with its use as a graveyard (Greenlade v. Darby (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 421).

(r) Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, supra. A lay rector can maintain an action of trespass (Batten v. Gedge (1889), 41 Ch. D. 507), but when a lay rector applied as a parishioner for a mandatory injunction to compel the incumbent and churchwardens to restore a churchyard path, it was refused on the ground that it might be rendered nugatory by a faculty (ibid.).

(s) Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 13.

of the site which is is not consecrated vests as part of the site (c). When the fabric of the church has thus become devoted in sacros usus it cannot ever be used as a habitation for man (a), nor has a judge any power to sanction the use of it for secular purposes (b), and no alteration or addition can be made to it without a faculty (c).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

1443. A church or churchyard when consecrated ceases to be the property of the donor, who, by dedicating his property to God, voluntarily sacrifices it for the attainment of sacred objects (d). Thenceforth it may be possible to authorise by faculty the use of a portion of the consecrated ground for purposes which do not alienate it completely from sacred uses and are advantageous to persons using the church (e), or to the parishioners (f), or to the public (g), or to a private person without any detriment to the parishioners (h); but it is not possible to alienate it completely from sacred uses and to appropriate it to secular uses without the authority of an Act of Parliament (i). When such an appropriation to secular uses takes place by virtue of an Act of Parliament, the value of the property taken is not to be estimated on the basis of, but independently of (k), that irrevocable appropriation which has been withdrawn.

Appropriation
to sacred

1444. The effect of consecration is to subject the land consecrated to the ordinary, who thenceforth has jurisdiction to see that in the consecrated ground the laws of the Church are observed and in particular to see that in consecrated places of burial all conditions which the laws of the Church require in relation to the bodies of persons buried there are observed. This jurisdiction is not confined to occasions when it is necessary to remove a body, but extends to all such acts as are necessary in the interests of justice or of the decent and respectful treatment of the dead, and is not affected by the

Subjection
to the ordinary.

(t) Plumstead District Board of Works v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, [1891] 2 Q. B. 361.

(a) Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379, 391, 399, C. A.

(b) Campbell v. Paddington Parishioners (1852), 2 Rob. Ecol. 58; R. v. Twiss (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 407, 413.

(c) Hutchins v. Denzilor (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 170; Lee v. Hawtrey, [1898] P. 63. An additional building in order to be regarded as an enlargement of a consecrated church must serve directly or indirectly that which is the primary purpose of a church, namely, public worship, and it will not suffice to make it an enlargement that it serves purposes, which are lawful in a church but could equally well be carried out elsewhere (London County Council v. Dundas, [1904] P. 1). See also St. Margaret's, Lothbury (Rector and Churchwardens) v. London County Council, [1909] P. 310.

(d) Hilcoat v. Canterbury and York (Archbishops) (1850), 10 C. B. 327, 347.

(e) St. Nicholas, Leicester (Vicar) v. Langton, [1899] P. 19; St. Botolph Without, Abgate (Vicar etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1892] P. 161.

(f) Re St. Benet Sherehog (1892), cited [1893] P. 66, n.

(g) Re St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, [1893] P. 58; Lee v. Hawtrey, [1898] P. 63; Re St. John the Baptist, Cardiff, [1898] P. 165; Re Bideford Parish, Ex parte Bideford (Rector etc.), [1900] P. 314.

(h) See p. 542, ante.

(i) Harper v. Forbes (1859), 5 Jur. (n. s.) 275.

(k) Re City and South London Railway and St. Mary Woolnoth and St. Mary Woolchurch Haw, [1903] 2 K. B. 728, C. A.; affirmed, sub nom. City and South London Railway v. St. Mary Woolnoth and St. Mary Woolchurch Haw (United Parishes), [1905] A. C. 1. The Court of Appeal approved Hilcoat v. Canterbury and York (Archbishops), supra, in preference to Siebbing v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1870), L. R. 6 Q. B. 37; R. v. Tristram (Dr.), [1898] 2 Q. B. 371.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

provisions in the Burial Acts which require a licence from a Secretary of State before a body can be removed, although a faculty authorising removal may be inoperative until the licence is obtained. Where such licence has been obtained a faculty may be granted authorising removal from consecrated to unconsecrated ground (l), or to ground consecrated in accordance with the use of the Roman Catholic Church (m).

Ornaments
not included.

1445. The bishop by the act of consecrating a church does not necessarily consecrate or approve all the ornaments and fittings therein (n). He is assured by the petition presented to him that all things have been rightly done, and is entitled to act on that assumption, and if there are any ornaments therein which are not in accordance with ordinary usage it is the duty of those who apply for consecration to call the attention of the bishop to them in order that he may exercise his discretion (o). Where this has not been done, or where ornaments have been retained in spite of an objection by the bishop, and the decree of consecration does not refer to them, the act of consecration of the church does not stamp them with his approval, and they may, if adjudged to be improper, be removed by a decree of the Ecclesiastical Court (p).

(iv.) Repairs.

Repair of
church.

1446. The repair of the church of a parish (q), which by the canon law belonged to the rector as the person who received the tithes (r), is transferred by custom so far as the nave is concerned to the parishioners (s), and so far as the chancel is concerned to the (l) Re Talbot, [1901] P. 1.

(m) Re Sevard and Casella (1909), Times, 27th November.

(n) Westerton v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, pp. 21, 22.

(o) Markham v. Shirebrook Overseers, [1906] P. 239.

(p) Ibid.; Darey v. Hinde, [1901] P. 95; Beal v. Liddell (1857), Moore's Special Report, p. 82.

(q) By s. 4 of the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), the provisions of that Act as to buildings belonging to a benefice (as to which see pp. 753 et seq., post) apply to all chancels, walls, fences and other buildings and things which the incumbent is by law or custom bound to maintain in repair.

(r) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 350. The incumbent of a church is not in receipt of rents and profits of the church in such a sense as to subject him to the liabilities of an owner within the meaning of the Metropolitan Management Acts, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120) and 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102) (R. v. Lee (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 75, decided on the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), nor is a church a "house," nor are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners "owners" of a consecrated church, within the meaning of those Acts (Amyell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714), but churchwardens have been held liable to pay a paving rate in respect of a district church erected under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37) (Mills v. Rydon (1854), 10 Exch. 67), as have also the owners of dissenting chapels (Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379, C. A.; Catger v. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry (1881), 50 L. J. (M. C.) 59), and a church has been held to be a house within the meaning of a local Act (Folkestone Corporation v. Woodward (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 159), and the effect of the decision in Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, [1910] A. C. 7, may be that a person who receives or who might receive substantial emoluments from a churchyard might be held to be the "owner" thereof within the meaning of the Metropolitan Management or Public Health Acts.

(s) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 350. The neglect or refusal to parson, unless there is a custom in the parish for the parishioners or the estate of a particular person to repair it (t).

Where the parson is bound to repair the chancel and there is a rector and a vicar, the vicar and the rector or rectors, whether spiritual or lay, contribute in proportion to their respective benefices (u). When the parson repairs the chancel he is thereby discharged from contributing as parson to the repair of the nave (v).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.
Of chancel.

1447. Any person having a house within the parish may be liable for the repair of an aisle of the church as having been built for the proper use of those whose estate he has in the house (w), and where the chancel is in fact a chapel coeval with the church which has been and is held and used exclusively as appendant to some estate, the person entitled to the exclusive use of it will be liable for its repair, notwithstanding that the freehold is not in him (x).

Of private aisle.

1448. When part of the parishioners repair a chapel where they bury and christen, and have time out of mind not repaired the parish church, they may prescribe to be discharged provided it is possible for the chapelry and the parish to be coeval, or if they have rights of burial only in the parish church they may prescribe to pay a sum of money or to repair a part of the churchyard wall in lieu of reparation of the church (a).

Of chapel.

Where a church or chapel is acquired, appropriated, built, enlarged or improved in aid of the church of any parish or place, whether any district is assigned to it or not, unless some special provision applies it is to be repaired by the parishioners at large in the same manner as the church of such parish or place (b).

Where a church or chapel has been provided for a new district, parish, or chapelry (c), or for a consolidated chapelry, the inhabitants of the district, parish, or chapelry are liable to repair it, and a voluntary church rate may still be levied for that purpose (d). Where a particular patronage district is formed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners a repair fund is provided (e), and the inhabitants of the district may also levy a rate for repairs (d). Where a church is built by subscribers and vested in trustees, repairs may be provided for by a fund derived from the sale of vaults or burial places (f).

Of new
district
church.

In separate and disunited benefices formed by scheme and Order in Council provision is made for the repairs in the scheme (g).

Of church of separate benefice.

perform this duty will subject those who neglect or refuse to punishment in the ecclesiastical court (Gosling v. Veley (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 679).

(t) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 350.

(u) Ibid., p. 351.

(v) Ibid., p. 353.

(w) 3 Co. Inst. 202.

(x) Churton v. Frewen (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 634.

(a) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 354.

(b) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 20.

(c) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 70.

(d) Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109), s. 6.

(e) Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 7.

(f) Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), s. 15.

(g) Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 12, provides for the acceptance by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty of an endowment to be provided for, inter alia, "the use or benefit of any church or chapel."

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Churchwardens' duty
to repair.

In Peel parishes and districts (h) and in other new parishes formed by scheme and Order in Council the inhabitants are released from any liability to repair the mother church, and are subjected instead to a liability to repair the new church or chapel (i).

1449. It is the duty of the churchwardens to take care and provide that the churches be well and sufficiently repaired and so kept and maintained, that the windows be well glazed, and that the floors be kept paved plain and even (j), and also that the churchyards be well and sufficiently repaired, found and maintained with walls, rails and pales at their charges unto whom by law the same appertaineth (k); and it is the duty of every dean and chapter, archdeacon and others having authority to hold ecclesiastical visitations, to survey the churches within their jurisdiction once in every three years (l) and to report any want of repair there found to the bishop.

Church-
wardens' power to borrow.

The churchwardens of any parish may, with the consent of the vestry, bishop, and incumbent, borrow on the security of the rates (m), and, with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, on the security of surplus pew rents (n), the money necessary for repairs of any church (o) or chapel, but, the provisions as to the recovery of rates in the Church Building Acts having been repealed (p), the security of the rates is confined to such liability of individual persons to pay the voluntary rate as in fact results from the nature of the transaction in connection with which the rate is made; and when a contract is made by the vestry of a parish it does not necessarily follow that the churchwardens are liable on it (q).

(v.) Alterations and Extensions.

Alterations.

1450. When a church, churchyard or chapel has been consecrated it is not lawful for any person other than the ordinary to make any alteration in it, or in any fittings or ornaments appertaining to it, without a faculty for the purpose (a). The consent of the vestry is not essential, but is generally required before such a faculty is

(h) See p. 448, ante.

(i) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), ss. 15, 17; New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 15.

(j) Canon 85. Their duty is to take all reasonable steps to provide funds for this purpose by, if necessary, inviting the parish in vestry to levy a church rate, but as they cannot any longer enforce payment of this rate there is no legal obligation on them to incur expenditure beyond the amount which they receive.

(k) Canon 85. And see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 411, 412.

(l) Canon 86.

(m) Church Building Acts, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 14, and 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 14. Such a power must be exercised in exact accordance with the authority given (R. v. All Saints, Wigan (Churchwardens) (1876), 1 App. Cas. 611.

(n) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 27.

(o) Including repairs of the chancel (Ripplin v. Bastin (1869), L. R. 2 A. & E. 386; Smallbones v. Edney (1870), L. R. 3 P. C. 444; Asterley v. Adams (1871), L. R. 3 A. & E. 361). Stat. (1824) 5 Geo. 4, c. 36, under which money for the purpose could be borrowed from the Public Works Loan Commissioners, has been repealed by the Public Works Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 89), s. 57.

(p) Statute Law Revision Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 91).

(q) Klenck v. Farris (1904), 69 J. P. 41, C. A.

(a) See p. 468, ante. Although the High Court has no jurisdiction to direct the restoration of fittings of a church which have been improperly altered, the court may grant an interim injunction to restrain further alterations pending an granted (b), especially in relation to alterations affecting the architecture of the church or the convenience of the public; and where a proposed alteration will affect the comfort and convenience of those who attend the church, the opinion of the majority of the parishioners who are members of the Church of England may be taken into account (c), even though it differs from a resolution of the vestry, including, as the vestry may, persons who do not regularly attend the church (d).

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

(vi.) Fittings and Decorations.

1451. It is the duty of the churchwardens to provide, at the charge of the parish, in every church or chapel, or to see that provision is made for, all the fittings which are required for the due administration of divine worship and of the sacraments of the Church, including, besides those already mentioned (e), a fair linen cloth at the time of ministration, a table of the Ten Commandments (f), a convenient seat for the minister to read service in (g), a comely and decent pulpit for the preaching of God's Word (g), and a book for recording the names and licences of strangers who preach in the church (h); also a strong chest for alms, having three keys, set and fastened in the most convenient place (i).

Fittings.

application for a faculty to restore (Cardinal v. Molyneux (1861), 4 De G. F. & J. 117). Where a faculty was granted for a vault under a church to be entered from unconsecrated ground, it was made a condition that the ground round the entrance should be consecrated so as to bring it under the jurisdiction of the ordinary (Rugg v. Kingsmill (1868), 37 L. J. (ECL.) 13, P. C.).

(b) See p. 454, ante. In the case of St. Margaret's, Westminster, which is the national church for the use of the House of Commons, the consent of the speaker was required (Re St. Margaret's, Westminster, [1905] P. 286).

(c) Tottenham (Vicar) v. Venn (1874), L. R. 4 A. & E. 221.

(d) The weight to be attached to this consideration has been much diminished by the transfer from the vestry by the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), and the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), of the powers, duties, and liabilities of the vestry except so far as relates to the affairs of the church or to ecclesiastical charities, which has resulted in the vestry called together for ecclesiastical purposes being more likely to express the wishes of the parishioners who are members of the Church of England. The alteration of a churchyard pursuant to a faculty granted for that purpose and the granting of faculties enabling a portion to be used for secular purposes have been considered in the article on Burial (see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 411, 423, 424). In that article also will be found full details as to the closing of churchyards (pp. 412, 423, 424, 525—536), and the provision of substituted or additional burial grounds under the Burial Acts (pp. 445—505), Church Building Acts (pp. 436—441), Consecration of Churchyards Acts (pp. 441, 442), Gifts for Churches Acts (pp. 434, 435), New Parishes Acts (p. 441), Places of Worship Sites Acts (pp. 442—444), Trustee Appointment Acts (pp. 444), Cemeteries Clauses Acts (pp. 514—525), and Public Health (Interments) Act (pp. 506—512), and the enactments as to the rights and obligations of incumbents to perform burial services and to receive fees when such closing or new provision takes place (pp. 449, 472, 480, 481, 510, 522, 569).

(e) See p. 471, ante.

(f) Canon 82. Where it was impossible to place the table of the Ten Commandments in the East end without removing monuments there, a faculty was granted, allowing these to be placed in the West end where they could be most conveniently seen (Re St. Giles, Crisplegate (1901), 17 T. L. R. 672).

(g) Canon 83.

(h) Canon 82.

(i) Canon 84. Where a prisoner was indicted for breaking into a church and

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

In addition to these canonical requirements, it is necessary for the churchwardens to provide a chalice or communion cup, with one or more flagons (k), and a bier for the dead (l). Register books for baptisms, marriages, and burials according to the rites of the Church of England must be kept by the rector, vicar, curate, or officiating minister of every parish or chapelry (m), the books being supplied by His Majesty's printer at the expense of the parish (m). In addition to the above-mentioned necessary fittings, it is usual and permissible for the incumbent and churchwardens, or other persons with the consent of the ordinary, to provide seats, either movable or fixed, and hassocks for the use of persons attending service, an organ, a clock, church bells, and other fittings or decorations for the purposes of use or ornament which are not forbidden by law. In so far as such fittings and decorations are ornaments of the church within the meaning of the rubric, they must either come within the express terms of the rubric or be consistent with and subsidiary to the services of the church (n); and where they are merely decorations, they are permissible with the consent of the ordinary if they are not in danger of being abused by superstitious reverence (o).

Where fittings or decorations have been placed in and devoted to the use of the church of a parish they are under the control of the incumbent (p), and the keys of the church belong to him (q).

Protection of goods in
church.

1452. Goods appertaining to and contained in a church are exceptionally protected by the sanctity of the place (r). It is sacrilege feloniously to take any goods out of a parish church (s) or other church or chapel (t), whether the goods are intended for use stealing a box and money and the box had been fixed by screws to a pew and inscribed "Remember the poor," it was held that the box might be presumed to have been so placed pursuant to canon 84, and that the money therein was constructively in the possession of the vicar and churchwardens, and that, they not being a corporation, the property was properly laid in the vicar by name "and others" (R. v. Wortley (1846), 1 Den. 162, C. C. R., cited Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., p. 764).

(k) Lynd. 252.

(l) Ibid.

(m) See p. 741, post.

(n) See p. 667, ante.

(o) See p. 668, ante.

(p) Redhead v. Wait (1862), 6 L. T. 580; Harrison v. Forbes (1860) 6 Jur. (N. S.) 1353; Lee v. Matthews (1830), 3 Hag. Ecc. 169, 173; Dalnt v. Crocker (1867), L. R. 2 A. & E. 41; but where bells were rung without the consent of the incumbent the ringing must be against his express wish to found criminal proceedings (ibid., at p. 43).

(q) Ritchings v. Cordingley (1868), L. R. 3 A. & E. 113.

(r) It is the violation of the sanctity of the place which stat. (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 12, s. 10 (now repealed), depriving persons committing sacrilege of their clergy, was intended to prevent (R. v. Bourke (1819), Russ. & Ry. 386, 387, C. C. R.).

(s) A tower which has a separate roof, but can only be entered through the church, is for this purpose a part of the church (R. v. Wheeler (1829), 3 C. & P. 585), and so is a vestry formed out of what was the church porch, having a door into the churchyard which could not be unlocked from outside (R. v. Evans (1842), Car. & M. 298).

(t) 2 Hale, P. C. 366.

in connection with divine worship or not (a), and the breaking and entering any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship, and committing any felony therein, or the committing any felony therein and breaking out, is a felony punishable with penal servitude for life (b). The property in goods feloniously taken is sometimes laid in the parishioners and is sometimes laid in the churchwardens, or in the rector, as guardians of the goods of the parish, either alone or together (c). In a private chapel the property ought, perhaps, to be laid in the private owner (d).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

(vii.) Parishioners' Rights in Church.

1453. Every parishioner who does not dissent from the doctrines of the Church of England is under a duty to attend his parish church (e), and is clothed with a corresponding right to enter and remain there for the purpose of participating in divine worship so long as there is accommodation available (f). Subject to certain rights (g), he is entitled to a seat so long as there is a seat available, and, although he must obey the reasonable directions of the churchwardens, acting as the officers of the bishop, as to which seat he shall occupy, he cannot be prevented by them from entering and standing if no seat is available, nor can his rights be affected by reference to any payment, excepting pursuant to the express provisions of some statute (h). Accordingly, the seats are in general to be built and repaired, as the church is to be, at the general charge of the parishioners, and, whether they are or are not affixed to the freehold, are to be regarded as erected for the use of the inhabitants and for the accommodation alike of all the parishioners (i).

Right to attend
church.

Where, owing to increase of population, more seats are required, and, there being no unanimous agreement of incumbent, churchwardens, and parishioners as to how they are to be provided (k), a faculty is necessary, it is usual to require that the opinion of the parishioners in vestry assembled should be ascertained before a faculty is granted (l).

Provision of additional seats.

(viii.) Pews.

1454. A pew signifies an enclosed seat in a church (m). By the common law there is no property in nor any right to sell or let a pew or

Pews.

(a) R. v. Bourke (1819), Russ. & Ry. 386; R. v. Wheeler (1829), 3 C. & P. 585, 586, n.

(b) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 50. See also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 675.

(c) 1 Hale, P. C. 512; 2 Hale, P. C. 181.

(d) 2 Hale, P. C. 181; Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., p. 765.

(e) See p. 481, ante; Marshall v. Graham, [1907] 2 K. B. 112.

(f) See p. 471, ante.

(g) See p. 470, ante; p. 740, post.

(h) See p. 471, ante.

(i) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 358.

(k) Where there is unanimous agreement there is no necessity for the interpretation of the ordinary (ibid., p. 359; Presgrave v. Shgewsbury (Churchwardens) (1705), 1 Salk. 167).

(l) As to parishioners' rights, see further, p. 480, ante.

(m) The word "pew" is said to be derived from the Dutch "puye," and to

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Right by faculty or prescription.

seat in the body of a parochial church or chapel (n), but a right to use particular seats may have been acquired, as appurtenant to a particular messuage (o), by faculty or prescription (p), and where the seats in respect of which such right has been acquired are enclosed they are called a pew. The right thus established in a pew (q) is essentially a right to use it for the services of the Church signify a seat enclosed in a church (Brumfitt v. Roberts (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 224, 232). It appears to have been formerly used of a raised standing place, stall or desk in a church to enable an officiant to be seen or heard, e.g., 1662 A.D., Book of Common Prayer, Communion, "The priest shall in the reading pew or pulpit say"; and later of a place often enclosed, usually raised, seated for, and appropriated to certain of the worshippers (New English Dictionary). Before the Reformation no seats were allowed for the use of parishioners in a church except in private chapels of which the fee simple was vested in the owner (Claverley (Vicar etc.) v. Claverley (Parishioners etc.), [1909] P. 195; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 358). After the Reformation it was held that any question as to seats in the body of a church was to be decided by the ordinary, because the place is common to all the inhabitants, and it belongs to the bishop to order it so that the service of God may be best celebrated and that there be no contention (Corven's Case (1612), 12 Co. Rep. 105).

(n) By the general law and of common right all pews belong to the parishioners at large for their use and accommodation, but the distribution of seats among them rests with the ordinary, and the churchwardens as his officers, and subject to his control, place the parishioners according to their rank and station (Pettman v. Bridger (1811), 1 Phillim. 316, 323); and this law applies in a cathedral which is also a parish church, although in a cathedral which is not also a parish church the ordinary may have the allocation of the seats (Re Londonderry Cathedral Church Pews (1863), 8 L. T. 861). Every man who settles as a householder has a right to call on the parish for a seat, and on the allotment by the churchwardens acquires a possessory right to it (Groves v. Hornsey (1790), 1 Hag. Con. 188; Walter v. Gunner (1798), 1 Hag. Con. 314) against any more disturber (Kenrick v. Taylor (1752), 1 Wils. 326; Cross v. Sauter (1794), 3 Term Rep. 639), but not against the churchwardens or the ordinary (Pettman v. Bridger, supra). The allotment by the churchwardens must be in general terms entitling the allottees to occupy the seats allotted at all ordinary services of the church, and will entitle them to claim the seat so allotted at any time prior to the commencement of the service (Claverley (Vicar etc.) v. Claverley (Parishioners etc.), [1909] P. 195). In allotting seats, where an allotment can be made the churchwardens may give a preference to parishioners who pay a church rate or who contribute to a fund formed in lieu of a church rate for the repair of the church (St. Saviour, Westgate-on-Sea (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, [1898] P. 217, 221).

(o) Rogers v. Brooks (1783), 1 Term Rep. 431, n. If the messuage is divided the right to use the pew may be apportioned (Harris v. Drewe (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 164). The messuage need not necessarily be within the parish (Lousley v. Hayward (1826), 1 Y. & J. 583); but the pew must be appurtenant to a messuage (Mainwaring v. Giles (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 356). A faculty to a man and his heirs is bad (Stocks v. Booth (1786), 1 Term Rep. 428).

(p) Where a question of prescription is raised it must be dealt with by the temporal courts (Byerley v. Windus (1826), 5 B. & C. 1; Knapp v. St. Mary, Willeston (Parishioners) (1851), 15 Jur. 473), and where the house to which a pew was alleged to be appurtenant was being replaced by a new mansion-house and the owner had applied for a faculty to annex the pew to the new house or alternatively that he might be allotted a pew, and the rector denied that any pew ever was appurtenant by prescription to the old house, a prohibition was granted to prevent the question of prescription being tried in the consistory court (R. v. Tristram (1909), Times, 17th June); but where a prohibition was sought on the ground that it was proposed to make a grant by faculty of a gallery and pews to a corporation, the prohibition was refused (Hallack v. Cambridge University (1841), 1 Gal. & Dav. 100).

(q) A pew in the chancel legally may belong to a person, whether a parishioner or not (Fuller v. Lane (1825), 2 Add. 419, 427), in respect of the at times when it is open for use, subject to the regulations of the church, and there is no right of access to it or to use it for other purposes or in any other manner (r), and although the seats are permanently enclosed and affixed to the freehold, the freehold of the land remains vested in the parson, and the ownership of the pew carries with it no more than an easement in the nature of an exclusive right to occupy during divine service and the times of other religious observances (s). Where a rent is paid for a pew it is a profit arising from the use of the freehold and gives to the person paying the rent a right to have the use and occupation of a certain portion of the freehold for the purpose above defined (t); but the receipt of the rent by the freeholder, while it may constitute a freehold interest entitling the freeholder as such to a vote (u), does not constitute an occupation of the land for the purpose of the Representation of the People Act, 1832 (b).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

The right to a pew by prescription may be established whenever there is evidence of exclusive possession of the pew inconsistent with mere possession by permission (c) and so long continued that the grant of a faculty ought to be presumed, and even where the first possession arose in a form which gave no legal title a faculty may be presumed when it is consistent with the later long-continued user (d).

Evidence of exclusive possession.

Such a right to a pew involves the burden of repairing the pew (e), and the carrying out of repairs by a claimant or by his predecessors in title without leave from the churchwardens, which would be illegal in the absence of any title, affords strong grounds for presuming the grant of a faculty (f), but it is not essential to prove

Repairs to pew.

ownership of a house or may belong to a lay rector, differs from a pew in the body of the church, which can only be acquired by virtue of a faculty or by prescription founded on a presumed faculty (Parker v. Leach (1866), L. 16. 1 P. C. 312, 327; Mainwaring v. Giles (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 356). A grant of a portion of the chancel to a man and his heirs is bad (Clifford v. Wicks (1818), 1 B. & Ald. 498).

(r) Hinde v. Chorlton (1866), L. R. 2 C. P. 104, 115; Brunnitt v. Roberts (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 224.

(s) Even where by a private Act of Parliament trustees were empowered to sell and convey for the purpose only of attending divine service certain pews, and by a subsequent Act it was enacted that the fee simple and inheritance in the pews should be vested in the proprietors, their heirs and assigns for ever, it was held that they had not such an estate of freehold in the soil as would support a claim to a parliamentary vote (ibid.); and see also Greenway v. Hockin (1870), L. R. 5 O. P. 235.

(t) Re Leveson, Ex parte Arrowsmith (1878), 8 Ch. D. 96, C. A.

(u) Vickers v. Selwyn (1903), 89 L. T. 747.

(b) 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45; Beswick v. Alker (1872), L. R. 8 C. P. 265, per BOVILL, G.J., at p. 268, followed in Wolfe v. Surrey County Council (Clerk), [1905] 1 K. B. 439. See title ELECTIONS.

(c) Mere occupancy is not sufficient (Crisp v. Martin (1876), 2 P. D. 15).

(d) Philipps v. Halliday, [1891] A. C. 228; and see Griffith v. Matthews (1793), 5 Term Rep. 296, and Morgan v. Curtis (1828), 3 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 389.

(e) Crisp v. Martin, supra; Churton v. Freuden (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 634. Where three pews adjoining each other are used under one claim in respect of one message, repair done to one is evidence as to all (Bypper v. Barnard (1843), 12 L. J. (Q. B.) 361).

(f) Kenrick v. Taylor (1752), 1 Wils. 328; Philipps v. Halliday (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 48, C. A.; affirmed, [1891] A. C. 228

SECT. 2.

Property
Eccle-
siastical in its Nature.From other acts.Control of sittings by churchwardens.

acts of repair where evidence is given of other acts or user which are inconsistent with possession by mere permission (g).

Where there is no prescription the ordinary, or the churchwardens on his behalf and subject to his control, may take order for the placing of parishioners in any public consecrated church or chapel (h), and neither the minister nor the vestry has any right to interfere with them in so doing, although they may reasonably defer to the advice of the minister and the wishes of the vestry. Their duty is to provide to the best advantage for the accommodation of all parishioners, so that as far as practicable everyone may have a seat, and they are bound not to accommodate the richer classes beyond their real wants to the exclusion of their poorer neighbours (i). If they find it necessary to dispossess anyone of a sitting which he has enjoyed for a time they should give him notice before doing so (j).

Re-allotment of seats.

1455. Where churches are under a faculty enlarged, restored, or repaired, it has been usual to re-allot seats in the church in cases where there have been a large number of faculty seats in the church or seats allotted by the churchwardens to houses in the parish, or where the funds for the alterations have been mainly subscribed by parishioners who desire to have faculty pews annexed to their houses, and such re-allotment has usually been confirmed by faculty (k); but in view of the increase in the population to be accommodated, such faculties will only be granted with the greatest prudence (l); and where the allocation is made by the churchwardens and not confirmed by faculty it gives no legal right to the allottees to claim the sittings allotted as faculty seats or pews (k), unless there is evidence from which the consent of the ordinary may be inferred (m).

Allotment
under Church Building
Acts.

1456. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have power under the Church Building Acts (n), in cases to which those Acts are applicable, to allot one seat or pew for the use of the minister and his family, and one for the use of his servants, and after setting apart not less than one-fifth of the whole of the sittings as free seats may provide that the rest of the sittings shall be chargeable with specified rents, but they have no power to appropriate seats for children, and where they have done so it is competent for the (g) Such as locking the pew and keeping the key (Phillips v. Halliday (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 48, C. A.), or removing the woodwork and substituting chairs for the former seats (Stileman-Gibbard v. Wilkinson, [1897] 1 Q. B. 749).

(h) 3 Co. Inst. 202; Reynolds v. Monkton (1841), 2 Mood. & R. 384; Proud v. Price (1893), 63 L. J. (Q. B.) 61, C. A.; and see Battiscombe v. Eve (1863), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 210.

(i) Fuller v. Lane (1825), 2 Add. 419, 425; Re Londonderry Cathedral Church Pews (1863), 8 L. T. 851; see also p. 470, ante.

(j) Horsfall v. Holland (1859), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 278.

(k) Claverley (Vicar etc.) v. Claverley (Parishioners etc.), [1909] P. 195.

(l) Fuller v. Lane (1825), 2 Add. 419.

(m) Claverley (Vicar etc.) v. Claverley (Parishioners etc.), supra, at p. 203.

(n) 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 75, 76; 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 32; 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 24; 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 11. See further as to pew rents and the letting of sittings under the Church Building Acts and New Parishes Acts, p. 786, post.

ordinary to treat the appropriation as ultra vires and to authorise by faculty the re-allotment of the seats so appropriated (o).

SECT. 2.

Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

Surrender of pews or sittings.

1457. Any pews or sittings in any church or chapel consecrated or unconsecrated which are in the disposal of or are the property of any persons by virtue of any Act of Parliament, deed, or instrument, whether subject to any trust or not, may be surrendered to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with or without consideration for such surrender by the persons having the disposal of or the property in them (p), by deed executed by them and by the bishop of the diocese (q), or may be transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (r).

(ix.) Parishioners' Rights in Churchyard.

1458. Every parishioner and inhabitant of a parish and every person dying within the parish has the right to be buried in the parish churchyard or burial ground (s). The rector has the right to permit the burial of strangers or to permit the burial of parishioners in other than an ordinary manner (t). This right vests in him as owner of the freehold of the churchyard, and his power to exact fees for such permission constitutes a beneficial occupation of the churchyard, which makes him rateable in respect of it (u).

Rights as to burial.

(x.) Registers.

1459. Registers of public and private baptisms and burials solemnised according to the rites of the Church of England must be kept by the rector, vicar, curate, or officiating minister of every parish or of any chapelry (a), cathedral, or collegiate church, chapel of a college or hospital, or burying ground belonging thereto (b), where such baptisms and burials have been or may be performed, in books to be provided by His Majesty's printer at the cost of the parish, or in a non-parochial place at the cost of the body having right to appoint the officiating minister (b) for the purpose (a).

Registers.

(o) St. Saviour, Westgate-on-Sea (Vicar) v. Parishioners of Same, [1898] P. 217.

(p) New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), s. 2.

(q) Ibid., s. 3.

(r) Ibid., s. 6.

(s) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 413, 415. This right has been there so fully dealt with that it is only necessary to add that since that article was published the decision in the case of North Manchester Overseers v. Winstanley therein referred to has been affirmed by the House of Lords (Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, [1910] A. C. 7).

(t) See p. 777, post.

(u) Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, supra.

(a) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 1. Separate books must be kept for baptisms and for burials (ibid., s. 2). They must be of parchment or durable paper, and the pages and entries must be numbered consecutively (ibid., s. 1). When the benefice is full the incumbent is the proper custodian of the parish books (R. v. Cumley, Ex parte Holloway (1855), 3 W. R. 247). As to registration of baptisms, see p. 686, ante; as to registration of marriages, see p. 705, ante; and as to registration of births and deaths, see further, title REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

(b) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 20.

SECT. 2.

Property
Eccle-
siastical in its Nature.Property held for spiritual purposes.SUB-SECT. 2.—Property held for Spiritual Purposes on behalf of the Church of England.

1460. In addition to the churches, chapels, and churchyards, and property appurtenant thereto, various descriptions of property are held for spiritual purposes on behalf of the Church of England (c), either by the incumbent of a parish or by some other corporation or body of trustees in connection with the parish, or for the benefit of the incumbent as incumbent (d); or by a corporation or other legally constituted body as trustees for the benefit of the Church of England as a whole, or of particular officers or territorial divisions of it other than a parish (e). The property so held in connection with a parish ordinarily includes (1) the whole or some part of the tithes of the parish (f); (2) the parsonage house and glebe (g); (3) Easter offerings (h); (4) fees (i).

In addition, large estates and funds are held by Queen Anne's Bounty (k), the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (l), and other bodies, for spiritual purposes on behalf of the Church of England, but not necessarily in connection with a particular parish, although the trusts affecting much of such property admit of the allocation of the property or of the income therefrom for parochial purposes.

The most important provision for the endowment of the clergy of the Church of England in connection with each parish is the tithe, or the rentcharge in lieu of tithe, into which it has been commuted.

(i.) Tithes and Tithe Rentcharge.

Tithes.

1461. Tithes are the tenth part of all fruits, prædial, personal, and mixed, which are due to God and consequently to His Church's ministers for their maintenance (m). Tithe is in its inception an ecclesiastical inheritance collateral to the estate of the land (n), and of its proper nature due only to an ecclesiastical person by the ecclesiastical law (a).

Tithes are payable yearly out of all things which with the aid of (c) Any spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole is allowed a period of two incumbencies and six years or sixty years, whichever is the longer, in which to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover any land or rent (Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 29, amended by Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57). See also pp. 745, 748, post, and title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS).

(d) See note (d), p. 713, ante.

(e) See pp. 800, 802, post.

(f) See pp. 743 et seq., post.

(g) See p. 753, post.

(h) See p. 775, post.

(i) See p. 776, post.

(k) See p. 780, post.

(l) See p. 783, post.

(m) Cowell's Interpreter, sub voce "Tithe." See also 2 Bl. Com. 24, 25.

(n) Neither was the tithe nor is the rentcharge into which it has been commuted a charge on the inheritance (Bailey v. Badham (1885), 30 Ch. D. 84). Tithes are an incorporeal hereditament, and as such are included in s. 2 (10) (i.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 38) (Re Esdaile, Esdaile v. Esdaile (1886), 54 L. T. 637).

(a) Priddle and Napper's Case (1612), 11 Co. Rep. 8 b, 13 b.

cultivation (b) yield increase by the act of God, although the increase be not realised every year (c).

Tithes which arise merely and immediately from the ground, as grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, and herbs, are called prædial tithes (d).

Tithes which arise from things immediately nourished by the ground, as colts, calves, lambs, chickens, milk, cheese, eggs, are called mixed tithes (e). Tithes which arise from the profits of labour and industry, being the tenth part of the clear gain after charges deducted, are called personal tithes (f).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

1462. Where the tithes are divided into great and small tithes, the great tithes, which are ordinarily the rectorial tithes, are those of corn, hay, and wood, the small tithes, which are ordinarily the vicarial tithes, are the remainder of the prædial tithes, and the mixed and personal tithes (g).

Great and small tithes.

1463. Tithes, being regarded as an ecclesiastical inheritance set apart as due to God, were primarily payable in each place to the ecclesiastical person whose duty it was to provide for the cure of souls of that place (h).

Nature of tithes.

(b) Animals feræ naturæ are not titheable (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 685) except by custom, nor is land which is in its nature barren, until it shall have been cultivated for seven years (ibid., p. 685).

(c) As, for example, saffron though gathered but once in three years (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 684), and silva cadua (Page v. Wilson (1821), 2 Jac. & W. 513, 523).

(d) 2 Co. Inst. 649.

(e) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 680.

(f) 2 Co. Inst. 656—7.

(g) Whether small tithe is grown in great or small quantity makes no difference (Smith v. Wyat (1742), 2 Atk. 364).

(h) Caudrey's Case (1591), 5 Co. Rep. 1 a, 15 a. According to the fundamental principles of the common law all land is equally charged with tithes. To suppose a single acre not charged is quite a mistake (Page v. Wilson (1821), 2 Jac. & W. 513, 528). As the division of the country into parishes developed (see p. 715, ante) the tithe became payable to the person or body whose duty it was to provide for the cure of souls in each parish, and in extra-parochial places was payable to the King as having the supreme ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and therefore bound to provide a sufficient pastor where no other provision was made (1 Bl. Com. 384). Where the parish formed part of a district which was ministered to by a monastery it was usual for the monastery to appoint a vicar to undertake the ministrations of the parish and to allot him a portion of the tithe in respect of his ministrations (Trimsdale v. Darby (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 421, 429). Where the parish formed part of a parochia (see p. 714, ante) ministered to by secular clergy working under a bishop from a common centre, the payment of all receipts into a common fund was gradually replaced by an allocation of part of the receipts from the particular district to the priest of the church of that district (see note (c), p. 715, ante). Where a church was newly erected at the instance or expense of some noble, the whole or part (which in the case of a district church with rights of burial was frequently a third (Lingard's History, Vol. I., p. 186)) of the tithe of the district served might be allocated to the priest of that parish, while the remainder was allocated to the mother parish which claimed the district as belonging to it. By these means the tithe became divided in some cases into apportioned parts which might or might not be burdened with a corresponding apportionment of duties, in other cases according to the nature of the material tithes into great tithes which, being easy of collection, were usually appropriated to the rector, and small

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Lands regarded as exempt.

1464. Although tithes were primarily payable in respect of all lands which were not naturally barren, the following lands were regarded as exempt:—

1. Forest lands while in the occupation of the Crown or its lessee (i).

2. Church lands or glebe of a parish while in the occupation of the parson or incumbent of the parish in his ecclesiastical capacity (k), but not the glebe of another parish (l).

3. Lands in the occupation of an owner deriving title from one of the privileged orders, Cistercians, Templars, or Hospitallers (m).

4. Lands held free and discharged from tithe by one of the greater monasteries at the time of their dissolution (n).

5. Lands in respect of which an arrangement, called a composition real, had been made by the owner of the tithe, with the consent of the ordinary and the patron, that the lands should be discharged from tithe (o).

6. Lands in respect of which an arrangement, called a modus, could be proved to exist for the discharge of the liability in some other customary mode (p).

7. Lands in respect of which a prescriptive right not to pay can be shown to have arisen against the Crown or any lay person not being a corporation sole or any corporation aggregate, or a discharge from tithe can be proved, or non-payment or the payment of a modus can be proved for thirty years (q), without any written consent to such non-payment or payment tithes which, being less easy to collect, were usually allocated to the vicar and were called vicarial tithes.

(i) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 686.

(k) Priddle and Napper's Case (1612), 11 Co. Rep. 8 b, 14 a.

(l) The maxim Ecclesia ecclesie decimasolvere non debet is confined to ecclesiastical persons belonging to the same church (St. Paul's (Warden etc.) v. St. Paul's (Dean) (1817), 4 Price, 63, 74; Sheris v. Baskerville (1714), 1 Eag. & Y. 709).

(m) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 688.

(n) The greater monasteries of the yearly value of £200 or upwards were dissolved by stat. (1539) 31 Hen. 8, c. 13, and by s. 17 of that Act the King and every other person who should have any parsonages appropriate, tithes, pensions and portions and other hereditaments of the said monasteries should enjoy them discharged and acquitted of payments of tithes as freely and in as large and ample a manner as the abbots or other ecclesiastical governors of them had. A list of the greater monasteries is given in Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., pp. 690—695. But lands held free by an alien monastery which passed to the Crown, and thence through lay hands to a greater monastery, are not exempt (Page v. Wilson (1821), 2 Jac. & W. 513).

(o) A composition real was where the present incumbent with his patron and ordinary did agree by deed or by fine in the King's Court that certain lands should be freed and discharged from all manner of tithes in specie by reason of sown land or other real recompense given to the parson in lieu thereof (2 Co. Inst. 490 (Ekins v. Dormer (1747), 3 Atk. 534; A.-G. v. Bowles (1754), 3 Atk. 806, 809).

(p) Modus decimandi is money or other thing of value given annually in lieu of tithes (Termes de la Ley). A modus must be certain and invariable, beneficial to the parson himself, and different from the thing compounded for. As to the difference between a modus and a composition real, see Ekins v. Dormer, supra.

(q) Tithe Act, 1632 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100), commonly called Lord Tenterden's Act. The exemption is absolute after sixty years. As to the evidence of non-payment required, see Salkeld v. Johnston (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 242. Where a modus is set up as existing from time immemorial it need not be proved for each of a modus (r), or where the tithe is claimed by a corporation sole, non-payment or payment of a modus can be proved during two incumbencies and three years or sixty years, whichever is the shorter period(s).

1465. The inconvenience of collecting tithe in kind, and the fluctuating nature of the income derived from it, made it desirable that it should be replaced by some more convenient form of property, and by the Tithe Act, 1836 (t), provision was made for substituting in every parish, where possible by agreement (a) between the owners of lands and the owners of the tithes (b), or where necessary by compulsion (c), a corn rent payable half-yearly

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Tithe rent-
charge.

of the sixty years fixed by the statute for an indefeasible prescription, but the evidence is liable to be rebutted by proof of payment of tithe in kind before the sixty years (Stamford (Earl) v. Dunbar (1845), 13 M. & W. 822). Where the tithes were commuted before the time limited had expired, the time under this Act ceased to run (A.-G. v. Durham (Earl) (1882), 46 L. T. 16).

(r) The consent must be expressly given for that purpose, as is expressly provided in the Tithe Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100) (Toynbee v. Brown (1848), 3 Exch. 117).

(s) Mere non-payment of tithes apart from the statute is no evidence to defeat the title even of a lay impropriator (Andrews v. Drew (1835), 3 Cl. & Fin. 314, H. L.). The payments in the city of London of annual sums under the name of tithes were not tithes within the Tithe Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100) (Payne v. Esdaile (1888), 13 App. Cas. 613), but they were annuities or periodical sums of money charged upon land within the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 1, as amended by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57) (ibid.). As to the application of the Statutes of Limitation to tithes, i.e., to an estate in tithes, see Fly (Dean) v. Bliss (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 459, and as to their application to tithe rentcharge, see note (e), p. 748, post.

(t) 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71.

(a) The owners of not less than one-fourth in value of the land subject to tithes or of the tithes could call a meeting, and a majority of not less than two-thirds in value of the lands and two-thirds of the great tithes and two-thirds of the small tithes might proceed to make and execute a parochial agreement (ibid., s. 17) binding all the parish for the payment of an annual rentcharge instead of the great and small tithes of the parish collectively or severally. The proportioned values were determined by the values at which the lands were rated for poor rate (ibid., s. 19). By agreement land not exceeding twenty acres might be given to any ecclesiastical owner of tithes in lieu of the whole or any part of the rentcharge (ibid., s. 29, extended by the Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 19, and the Tithe Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 54), s. 6), and vested absolutely upon the confirmation of such agreement (Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 20).

(b) "Owners of lands" and "owners of tithes" mean and include every person in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of any lands or tithes (except a tenant for life or for years under a lease or agreement at not less than two-thirds of the net value, or for a term which did not exceed fourteen years) without regard to the real amount of the interest of such person (Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 12).

(c) Tithe Commissioners were appointed (ibid., ss. 1—11), and in case of no agreement being arrived at provision was made for the appointment of valuers and for compulsory action by the Commissioners after October 1st, 1838 (ibid., s. 36). The Tithe Commissioners became the Land Commissioners by s. 48 (1) of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), and all their powers and duties under the Tithe Acts were transferred to the Board of Agriculture by the Board of Agriculture Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, and to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 31). For the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, see generally title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., p. 237.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature

in money, known as tithe rentcharge, for all tithe moduses and compositions real not already commuted. Failing an agreement, the clear average value of these charges for the seven years preceding the year 1836, after deducting expenses, except parochial and county rates, was ascertained, any moduses, compositions, real or prescriptive or customary payment being treated as tithe (d), but special provisions being made for separate valuations of hops, orchards, or gardens (e), and of coppice wood (f), and for dividing the tithe on hop-grounds or market gardens into ordinary and extraordinary tithe rentcharge, the latter being chargeable only so long as the land continued to be used as hop-grounds or market gardens respectively (g).

Amount of rentcharge.

1466. The total sum to be paid for the tithes of the parish thus determined was apportioned by valuers appointed by the owners of land subject to tithe in the parish (h), or, in default of the completion of the valuation, by the commissioners (i), and the apportioned part of the rentcharge was by the final award of the commissioners charged on each parcel of land on which it was apportioned (k). The effect of this final award after its final confirmation by the commissioners is absolutely to discharge the lands from tithes, and instead thereof to charge each parcel of the lands with a sum of money in the nature of a rentcharge issuing thereout (l). The amount payable in respect of this rentcharge is to be paid by equal half-yearly payments on the 1st of January and 1st of July in each year, and is to vary so as always to consist of the price of the same number of bushels of wheat, barley, and oats, calculated according to the weekly averages in the preceding seven years as published in the London Gazette (m). This rentcharge is subjected to the same rights and incidents as the tithe which it replaced (n), and in particular is subject to all parliamentary, parochial, and county and other rates and charges as the tithes had

(d) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 37.

(e) Ibid., s. 40.

(f) Ibid., s. 41.

(g) Ibid., s. 42. See Walsh v. Trimmer (1867), L. R. 2 H. L. 208.

(h) Ibid., s. 53.

(i) Ibid., s. 54 (now repealed).

(k) Ibid., ss. 55, 58, 61, 63, 66, 67. And on those lands only (Walker v. Bentley (1852), 9 Hare, 629).

(l) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 67. The proceedings, properly authenticated, of the commissioners under the Act are public evidence of the matters therein stated (Giffard v. Williams (1869), 38 L. J. (CH.) 597), but the award, though conclusive between the owner and tithe payer, is not necessarily conclusive between different tithe owners (Clarke v. Yonge (1842), 5 Beav. 523; Edwards v. Bunbury (1842), 3 Q. B. 885), nor is the map attached to the award evidence in a dispute as to title to land (Wilberforce v. Hearfield (1877), 5 Ch. D. 709). One copy of the apportionment was deposited with the incumbent and churchwardens of the parish (Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 64), but the parish council are under the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), entitled to require the custody of that copy to be handed over to them (Lewis v. Poole, [1898] 1 Q. B. 164).

(m) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 67.

(n) Ibid., s. 71. It is apportionable under the Apportionment Act (Heasman v. Pearce (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 599).

been (o). No person is personally liable to pay the rentcharge (p). The commutation does not extend, unless by special provision in some parochial agreement, to any Easter offerings, mortuaries, or surplice fees, or tithes of fish or of fishing (q), or to any personal tithes (r), other than the tithes of mills or any mineral tithes, nor to the city of London, nor to any rentcharge or payment in lieu of tithes calculated on the rent or value of any houses or lands in any city or town under any custom or private Act of Parliament (a).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

(o) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 69. Prior to the Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), these rates might be assessed upon the occupier and recovered from him, and might by him be deducted from his rent, and might then in turn be deducted by the landlord from his tithe rentcharge, and a tenant holding his tenancy tithe free was allowed to pay this tithe rentcharge and deduct the amount from his rent (Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 70), s. 80). An owner of tithe rentcharge is liable to be assessed in respect of it to a rate made for repayment of money raised under the Church Building Acts (Smallbones v. Edney (1870), 24 L. T. 241, P. O.).

(p) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 67; Griffin v. Daubus (1854), 4 E. & B. 230. An injunction will not be granted to restrain a distress for tithe rentcharge on property of a company in liquidation, seeing that the company is under no liability (Re Trimmaran Coal, Iron, and Steel Co. (1876), 24 W. R. 900).

(q) Fish, being feræ naturæ, were not titheable (2 Co. Inst. 651), except by custom. Oysters and oyster lay were not titheable (Murray v. Skinner (1713), 1 Eag. & Y. 706).

(r) The statute for the true payment of tithes (1548), 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, which enacted (s. 7) that every person exercising merchandise, bargaining and selling clothing, handicraft, or other art or faculty, who had within the preceding forty years customably paid, or of right ought to pay, personal tithes, other than such as be common day labourers, should yearly account for them, was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 59), except as to tithes, offerings, and duties which have not been commuted or are otherwise still payable.

(a) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 90. As to the application of the Tithe Acts to corn rents, rentcharges, and money payments payable out of lands by virtue of any Act of Parliament in lieu of tithes, see p. 752, post. Power was given to the Land Tax Commissioners, and afterwards extended to the Tithe Commissioners, and is now vested in the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, to alter the apportionments on the application of the owner of the lands charged whenever the lands charged with one rentcharge become vested in different owners, provided that no sub-division of rentcharge is less than 5s. (Tithe Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 54), s. 14), but in the absence of an agreement so to do a purchaser cannot call on his vendor to obtain an apportionment (Re Ebnorth and Tidy's Contract (1889), 42 Ch. D. 23, C. A.). The Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), was amended in many minor respects by statutory provisions relating to the commutation and apportionment which have to a great extent become obsolete through the completion of the commutation and apportionment and have so far as they are obsolete been repealed. One of the first difficulties to arise was caused by the uncertainty of the boundaries, especially of parishes, and the Tithe Acts, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69); 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), ss. 34—36; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 15), s. 28; and 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 54), s. 5, provided machinery for overcoming these difficulties by determinations of the Tithe Commissioners which might be removed into court. On such removal the court might, by s. 35 of the Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), direct an issue at its discretion (R. v. Aterson (1842), 3 Q. B. 895), and the determination of the commissioners, or after removal into court of the court, was made final and conclusive (Tithe Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69), s. 3; Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 35) as to the boundary after the award is made, but not before (R. v. Madeley (Inhabitants) (1850), 15 Q. B. 43), provided the initiation of the proceedings is regular (R. v. Hobson (1850), 19 L. J. (Q. B.) 262), even though the boundary line defined is part of the

SMO. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Payment of tithe rentcharge.

1467. The tithe rentcharge issuing out of lands and payable in pursuance of the Tithe Acts (b) is payable by the owner of the lands, notwithstanding any contract made between him and the occupier (c), and the tithe owner whenever any sum due on account of tithe rentcharge is three months in arrear may apply to the county court for an order for payment thereof, and tithe rentcharge cannot be recovered in any other manner (d). No sum is recoverable under the Acts unless proceedings are commenced before the expiration of two years from the date at which it became payable (e).

boundary of a county (Re Dent Commutation (1845), 8 Q. B. 43); but where two parishes in different counties adjoined, and the commutation in one was fixed by voluntary agreement and in the other compulsorily, the commissioners cannot against the wish of one of the parishes proceed to determine the county boundary between the two (Re Ystradgunlais Commutation (1844), 6 Q. B. 32). The power which the commissioners had of defining boundaries was applied to the definition of glebe lands where the quantity of glebe is known but cannot be identified, and the commissioners were also given power on the application of any spiritual person to exchange glebe lands for other lands within the same parish (Tithe Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 54), s. 5; Tithes Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 73), s. 22). The Ecclesiastical Corporations Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 80), enables an ecclesiastical corporation by agreement with any tenant to refer the settlement of unknown or disputed boundaries or quantities of the manorial or other estates of such corporation to arbitration, but the necessity for using this Act has been much diminished by subsequent legislation.

(b) Including any rentcharge into which a corn rent has been converted under the Tithe Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 93), see p. 752, post, but not including a rentcharge payable under the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54) (see p. 751, post), nor a rentcharge in respect of tithes on a gated or stinted pasture (see p. 752, post), nor a sum payable for each head turned on land subject to common rights (Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), ss. 1 (1), 9 (2)).

(c) Tithe Act, 1891 (51 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 1 (1). Not only is a contract by the tenant to pay the tithe rentcharge prohibited, but also a contract to reimburse the landlord sums paid by him for tithe rentcharge (Ludlow (Lord) v. Pike, [1904] 1 K. B. 531; and see also Davies v. Pitton (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 225). Special provision is made for cases where the occupier is liable under a contract made before March 26th, 1891 (ibid., ss. 1 (2), (3), 2 (6)), and any sum due from him is to be recoverable by distress and not otherwise (ibid., s. 1 (3)). This is an absolute bar to its being recovered in any other manner (Church v. Marsted (1898), 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 823). As to notice of liability to occupier under contract made before the Act, see Re Tithe Act, 1891, Hughes v. Rimmer, [1893] 2 Q. B. 314.

(d) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 2 (1). As to the proceedings in the county court for the recovery of tithe rentcharge, see title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., pp. 690, 691, and Rules under the Tithe Act, 1891, Yearly County Court Practice, 1909, Vol. II., pp. 413 et seq. and title DISTRESS, ante, pp. 217, 218.

(e) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 81; Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 10 (2). This limitation only precludes the recovery of the rentcharge due for a particular half-year, but a rentcharge is a "rent" within the meaning of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 1, and is not tithe within the meaning of that section, so as to be exempt from that statute when belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation (Payne v. Esdaile (1888), 13 App. Cas. 613), and consequently the owner of the rentcharge may be barred in the case of a lay owner by twelve years' adverse possession, or in the case of an ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporation by adverse possession during two incumbencies and six years, or sixty years, whichever is the larger period (Irish Land Commission v. Grant (1884), 10 App. Cas. 14). A payment made under a mistake of fact in respect of tithe may be recovered after two years, notwithstanding that the tithe owner meanwhile has lost his remedy (Durrant v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 234).

1468. The county court appoints an officer who, when the lands are occupied by the owner, has the powers of distraint which were conferred by the Tithe Acts on the tithe owner (f), and accordingly may, where the owner of the lands is in occupation of them, distraint upon the lands liable to the charge or on any other lands within the parish occupied by the same owner (g). In any other case the officer acts as a receiver of the rents and profits of the lands or of any lands held therewith (h). If the court is satisfied that the rentcharge exceeds two-thirds of the annual value of the land out of which it issues, it may remit the sum and may also order a remission of a proportionate amount of any current rate assessed on the owner of the rentcharge (i).

1469. Any rate (k) to which tithe rentcharge is subject (l) is to be assessed on and may be recovered from the owner of the tithe rentcharge as from an occupying ratepayer (m), on an assessment

SECT. 2.
Property Ecclesiastical in its Nature.

Recovery of tithe rentcharge.

Rates assessed on tithe rentcharge.

(f) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 2 (2). A growing crop may form a sufficient distress, although not yet ripe for cutting (Ex parte Arnison (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 56); but cattle not actually on the land do not, unless their absence is merely accidental and temporary (Ex parte Jones (1889), 5 T. L. R. 512).

(g) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 2 (2); and title DISTRESS, ante, p. 217. Prior to that Act, this provision for distress applied whether the owner was the occupier or not, and the distress might be levied on any lands occupied under the same landlord (Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 81, 82, 85). As to the issue of a writ of possession when there is no sufficient distress, see Yearly Supreme Court Practice (1910), p. 491.

(h) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 2, including lands held therewith in another parish, in which case an apportionment between the two parishes takes place (ibid., s. 2 (3)). No rentcharge can be so recovered in respect of land which has been washed away or otherwise destroyed by a natural casualty (Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 85).

(i) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 8 (1). As to the assessment of the value of the land for this purpose, see R. v. Petersfield Tax Commissioners (1893), 63 L. J. (Q. B.) 357, and R. v. Barnstaple Tax Commissioners. [1895] 2 Q. B. 123.

(k) Including any rate assessed by a public authority for public purposes (Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 6 (4)).

(l) The provisions of the Tithe Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 69, 70, and 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69), s. 8, for the assessment and recovery of rates on tithe rentcharge, formed a code which replaced the existing law as to the assessment of tithes (Lamplugh v. Norton (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 452, 459, C. A.), and have rendered it unnecessary to consider the numerous cases whereby it was finally established that the parson was rateable in respect of tithes (R. v. Boldero (1825), 4 B. & C. 467; R. v. Capel (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 382); and for a rentcharge in lieu of tithes, excepting in so far as some express exemption extended (ibid.; R. v. Joddrell (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 403). With regard to the deductions to be made, much doubt existed as to whether any deduction was to be allowed in respect of services rendered (e.g., for the salary of a curate (Hackney and Lamberhurst Tithe Commutation Rent Charges (1858), E. B. & E. 1); but it is now settled law that no such deduction is to be allowed (R. v. Sherford (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 503, overruling Hackney and Lamberhurst Tithe Commutation Rent Charges, supra); and even where on the formation of a new parish under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), a rentcharge for its endowment is secured on the rectory of the old parish, no deduction can be made from the tithe rentcharge of the old parish in respect of the portion thus voluntarily granted away in arriving at its rateable value (Laurence v. Tolleshunt Knights Overseers (1862), 2 B. & S. 533).

(m) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 6 (1). As to the modes of recovery, see title RATES AND RATING.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

according to the sum for which the rentcharge might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, allowing for the expenses of collecting, for bad debts, and for legal and other expenses, if any, which would be necessary to induce a tenant to take it (n), provided that the owner of tithe rentcharge attached to a benefice (o) is liable to pay only one half of the amount assessed on him as owner, the remaining half being paid by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (p). If the collector satisfies the county court that he is unable to recover any rate so assessed, the court may order the owners of the lands out of which the rentcharge issues to pay the tithe rentcharge to the collector until the rates, including a sum due in respect of any future rate, have been paid (q).

Redemption.

1470. Redemption of tithe may be effected by payment of a sum of money which, in the case of a rentcharge not exceeding 20s., the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries may, on the application of the owner either of the rentcharge or of the land, order to be paid at the rate of twenty-five years' purchase (r), or which in the case of a rentcharge exceeding 20s. is, with the consent of the owner of the land and of the rentcharge (s), ordered by the Board, such sum not being less than twenty-five years' purchase (t). The Board may also order redemption of rentcharge by payment of twenty-five years' purchase when any rentcharge has by mistake as to boundaries or otherwise been charged on lands not in the parish in respect of which the apportionment was made (a), or when land is taken for certain purposes, including the building of any church, chapel or other place of public worship, or the making of any place of burial (b), and may order redemption by payment of not less than twenty-five years' purchase of tithe apportioned on lands divided into numerous plots (c). The money payable for redemption of any rentcharge which is payable to any spiritual person in respect of a (n) St. Asaph (Dean and Chapter) v. Llanrhaidr-yn-Mochant Overseers, [1897] 1 Q. B. 511, O. A.; see also Stevens v. Bishop (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 442, C. A. As to the recovery of rates in tithe rentcharge before 1891, see Lamplugh v. Norton (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 452, O. A.

(o) Including all chapelries or districts reputed to belong or to be annexed to any church or chapel, and districts formed for ecclesiastical purposes by statutory authority (Tithe Rentcharge (Rates) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 17), s. 2 (1) (b)).

(p) Ibid., s. 1.

(q) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 8), s. 6 (2).

(r) Tithe Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 42), s. 3. The practice of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries now is to conduct by means of their own officers all proceedings for altered apportionments and for such redemptions as are compulsory on the landowners concerned, and to collect themselves the expenses of so doing (Parliamentary Paper, Cd. 4,127, 1908, p. 6). The County Court has jurisdiction to enforce the payment of the redemption money (R. v. Paterson, [1895] 1 Q. B. 31).

(a) When the owner owns the rentcharge in right of a benefice or cure, the consents of the bishop and patron are required (Tithe Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 42), s. 24).

(b) Ibid., s. 4.

(a) Tithe Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 93), s. 33.

(b) Tithe Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 42), s. 1.

(c) Ibid., s. 5.

PART VI.—PROPERTY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

benefice is to be paid to Queen Anne's Bounty, and appropriated for the augmentation of such benefice (d).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.
—
Merger.

1471. Any person or persons seised in possession of an estate in fee simple or fee tail, whether legally entitled or only entitled in equity (e), or having the power of acquiring or disposing of the fee simple in possession of any tithe rentcharge, may by a deed in such form as the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries approve, to be confirmed by such Board, release, assign, or otherwise dispose thereof, so that it shall merge in the freehold and be extinguished (f), whatever the tenure of the land may be (g). Any tenant for life of tithe rentcharge and of the land on which it is charged may by a deed similarly approved and confirmed merge the tithe rentcharge in the land (h). The effect of the merger is to subject the lands to any charge to which the tithe rentcharge was liable to the extent of the value of the rentcharge, and the Board may apportion such charge on any portion of the land which is three times the value of the charge (i). These provisions as to merger extend to glebe or other lands in all cases where the tithe rentcharge belongs to the same person by virtue of his benefice or of any appointment held by him (k).

1472. Extraordinary tithe rentcharge on hop grounds, orchards, fruit plantations, and market gardens newly cultivated as such since June 25th, 1886, has been abolished, and replaced by an annual payment calculated at 4 per cent. on the capital value of the charge ascertained by the Land Commissioners for England (l), after taking into account, inter alia, the fact that the owner of the land had the right to discontinue the special cultivation from which the extraordinary charge resulted (m). Such annual payment is payable half-yearly (n) by the landlord (o), and is recoverable in the same way as tithe rentcharge (p), and is chargeable on the farm or parcel of land in respect of which the extraordinary charge was payable described in the certificate of the Board of Agriculture (q).

Extraordinary tithe rentcharge.

(d) Tithe Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 73), s. 8.

(e) Ibid., s. 19. If the estate is insufficient to effect the merger, the declaration may effect it and the parties affected by it be left to their remedy against the person making the declaration (Walker v. Bentley (1852), 9 Hare, 629).

(f) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 71; Tithe Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 64), s. 1. Such deed is free from stamp duty (ibid., s. 2).

(g) Tithe Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 64), s. 4.

(h) Ibid., s. 3.

(i) Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), ss. 1, 2.

(k) Ibid., s. 6.

(l) Now the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries; see note (e), p. 745, ante.

(m) Extraordinary Tithe Acts, 1886 and 1897 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54, ss. 1-4; 60 & 61 Vict. c. 23).

(n) Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 4 (3).

(o) Ibid., s. 7.

(p) Ibid., s. 4 (5). Where the ownership of the land on which the rentcharge has been assessed becomes divided the claim of the owner of one part against the owner of the other part for contribution should be enforced before justices under the Tithe Act, 1842 (6 & 6 Vict. c. 54), s. 16, and not in the county court (Simmonds v. Heath, [1894] 1 Q. B. 29, C. A.).

(q) Simmonds v. Heath, supra; and Extraordinary Tithe Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 23), s. 1.

SECT. 2.

Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

It is exempt from rates (r) and from land tax (s), and may be redeemed at any time by payment of the capital value, such payment being made, where the person entitled is the incumbent of a benefice, to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty (t), who have power when the income of the benefice is thereby diminished to modify the incidence of any mortgage charged thereon (a).

Corn rents and other rights.

1473. Corn rents payable under any local Act of Parliament may be converted into tithe rentcharge by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, and apportioned upon the lands which were subject to such rents on the application of the majority of owners of the lands or of the rents at any time when the rents are subjected to variation (b) under the local Act, or on the joint application of the majority of owners of the land and of the rents at any other time (c). In the case of lammas lands, commons, and gated or stinted pastures, where by reason of the peculiar tenure the rentcharge cannot be fixed on the lands so as to be borne fairly by the owners of such rights, a supplemental agreement or award may be made fixing the rentcharge by reference to the different rights enjoyed (d), but such rentcharge may, on the application of any person entitled to receive or liable to pay the same, be converted into a gross rentcharge payable out of the land (e).

Annexation of tithes to district
church.

1474. For the purpose of annexing to any chapel of ease or parochial chapel, or district church or chapel, any part or parts of the tithes or other revenues of any rectory or vicarage, the rector or vicar may (f), with the consent of the patron and of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese (g), agree with the incumbent of any district church within the limits of the rectory or vicarage for such annexation in consideration of a sufficient compensation out of the endowments of such district church, and such agreement may be carried into effect by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, which has the effect of vesting the tithe in the incumbent of the district church and securing the compensation to the rector or vicar (h).

Tithes in London.

1475. The law relating to tithes in London has been and is distinct from the law elsewhere. By a decree made in the year 1545 by commissioners appointed by statute (i) for the purpose

(r) Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 4 (5).

(s) Carr v. Fowle, [1893] 1 Q. B. 251.

(t) Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 5. As to the procedure for recovery, see title COUNTRY COURTS, Vol. VIII., p. 647.

(a) Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 12.

(b) But not at any other time except on a joint application (R. v. Lindsey (Justices) (1849), 13 Q. B. 484.

(c) Tithe Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 93), ss. 1—10.

(d) Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 13 (now repealed); Tithe Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 15), s. 14 (now repealed).

(e) Tithe Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 93), ss. 18, 19.

(f) District Church Tithes Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 42), s. 3.

(g) Ibid., s. 4.

(h) Ibid., s. 8, as amended by Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 22.

(i) Act for Tithes in London, stat. (1545) 37 Hen. 8, c. 12. Where tithe was of appeasing strife between the parsons, vicars and curates, and the citizens and inhabitants of the city of London concerning the payment of tithes (k), it was decreed that the citizens and inhabitants of the city of London and the liberties of the same (l) should for ever pay their tithes after specified rates commencing with 16½*d.* on every 10*s.* rental of every house, shop, warehouse, cellar and stable, and rising by 16½*d.* for every additional 10*s.* rental (m). The payment thus decreed was not necessarily a payment in lieu of tithe nor in the nature of tithe, and in the absence of any evidence that any tithe was payable in the city of London, it is to be regarded merely as a new personal imposition which is not tithe nor in lieu of tithe and is therefore not rateable as such (n). By a private Act of Parliament the payments thus decreed were in the year 1879 (o) commuted except in a certain parish, where they were separately commuted by a subsequent Act (p).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

(ii.) Glebe and Parsonage Houses.

1476. Glebe is a portion of land belonging to or parcel of the parsonage or vicarage, over and above the tithes (q). "Glebe."

A parsonage house is a house which belongs to or is parcel of the parsonage, that is, of the endowments of the benefice (r). "Parsonage house."

The house and glebe are both comprehended under the word claimed on a house in Southwark not within the city of London, and therefore not within this statute, the claim was allowed without proof of custom or prescription on the ground that the tithe was the only provision for St. Saviour's Church (Poock v. Titmarsh (1721), Bumb. 102).

(k) 2 Co. Inst. 659.

(l) Immunities which were not expressly included in the Act for Tithes in London must be taken to have been excluded (St Paul's (Warden etc.) v. St. Paul's (Dean) (1817), 4 Price, 65).

(m) Esdaile v. London (City) Union Assessment Committee (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 599, 600, where the decree is set out; affirmed 19 Q. B. D. 431, C. A.

(n) Esdaile v. London (City) Union Assessment Committee, supra; nor is it "tithe" within the Tithe Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100) (Layne v. Esdaile (1888), 13 App. Cas. 613). See also London and Blackwall Rail. Co. v. Letts (1851), 3 H. L. Cas. 470; and Wagstaff v. London (City Common Council) (1908), 99 L. T. 791.

(o) London (City) Tithes Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. clxxvi.).

(p) London (City) Tithes (St. Botolph Without Aldgate) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. cxvii.).

(q) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 297. The word properly means a hard turf or clod of earth with grass growing thereon (Ayl. Par. 285). "Glebe land" includes any manor, land or tenement, forming the endowment or part of the endowment of a benefice (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 12). A gift of land in trust to pay the income to an incumbent so long as no pew rents are charged is not a gift of glebe (Re Randell, Randell v. Dixon (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 899).

(r) "Parsonage" in legal parlance means the various properties which constitute the endowments of the benefice. "A parsonage or rectory is a certain portion of land, tithes and offerings established by the laws of this kingdom, for the maintenance of the minister that hath the cure of souls, within the parish where he is rector or patron, and properly comprehends integra ecclesia parochialis cum omnibus suis juribus, prædiis, decimis aliisque proventuum speciebus: alias vulgo dictum beneficium" (Spelman's Glossary) (Re Alms Corn Charity, Charity Commissioners v. Bode, [1901] 2 Ch. 750, 758). The use of the word "parsonage" as equivalent to parsonage-house, occurs in Fitzherbert's Boke of Surveying and Improvements (1523), and the use of "parsonage-house" is as old as 1666 (New English Dictionary, sub voce "parsonage").

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

"manse" (s). The parsonage house (t) and glebe are owned (a) by the incumbent as a corporation sole for the benefit of himself (b) and his successors in the incumbency, and he is entitled to use them for his own enjoyment or profit so far as such use is consistent with the due preservation of them for the use of his successors (c). He may cultivate the glebe in any way he thinks fit, provided he does not commit any waste, and he may work mines already opened, but he may not cut down trees except for purposes beneficial to the Church, such as repairs to buildings belonging to or repairable by the benefice; nor may he open mines, nor may he quarry except for the purpose of repairs (d).

Provision of parsonage.

1477. Notwithstanding the rule that no church should be consecrated without the provision of a parsonage house and glebe (e), many of the clergy for want of proper habitations were compelled or induced to reside at a distance from their benefices (f), and to remedy this evil, as well as to provide for the acquisition of houses of residence where new parishes or ecclesiastical districts are formed, many facilities have been afforded by statute for the purpose of purchasing a house of residence, or purchasing a site and building a house of residence thereon, or rebuilding or improving an existing house of residence. In addition to the facilities for acquiring sites already referred to in connection with the acquisition of sites for churches (g), where a residence house is inconveniently situate or for other reasons it is thought desirable to sell it, the incumbent may, with the consent of the ordinary, patron, and archbishop, sell the house with contiguous land not exceeding twelve acres, or any other house belonging to the benefice which is ruinous beyond repair, or which for other reasons it is advisable to sell, the purchase-money being paid to Queen Anne's Bounty and applied in the erection or purchase of another site and house, with land not exceeding twelve acres, approved by the ordinary and patron (h).

(a) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 297.

(t) Where the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty require for a benefice a house not within the parish, but so near as to be convenient and suitable for a residence, such house when approved by the bishop is to be deemed the house of residence (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 34).

(a) The nature of the estate of the incumbent is described as a fee simple qualified (Co. Litt. 341).

(b) Where in fixing a price for glebe land a sum has been allowed in respect of inconvenience or annoyance to the incumbent, it may be paid out to him (Re East Lincolnshire Rail. Co., Ex parte Little Steeping (Rector) (1848), 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 207; Re Saunderton Glebe Lands, Ex parte Saunderton (Rector), [1903] 1 Ch. 480).

(c) Surplus profits are primarily applicable to keeping the house in repair (Ex parte Claypole (Rector) (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 574).

(d) See p. 768, post.

(e) See p. 720, ante.

(f) Preamble to Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53). This Act and the Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1780 (21 Geo. 3, c. 66), the Clergy Residences Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 66), the Parsonages Act, 1838, and the Parsonages (Amendment) Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. cc. 23, 29), the Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), and the Incumbents and Benefices Loans Extension Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 25), are commonly known as the Gilbert Acts.

(g) See pp. 722 et seq., ante.

(h) Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), ss. 7—9; amended by the 1478. The principal officer of any public department holding lands on behalf of His Majesty or for the public use or use of his department and every body politic, corporate or collegiate, and corporation, aggregate or sole, and all trustees or other persons having the management of any charitable foundation or public institution, or other person empowered under the Lands Clauses Acts to convey or release lands by an assurance under seal, may convey to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, by way of voluntary, gift or on sale, any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, provided, that any lands given must not exceed one acre, including the site of any buildings thereon, to be used as parsonages or residences, or for enlarging parsonages or residences of incumbents, or as gardens or appurtenances thereto (i).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Grants of land by public bodies.

(iii.) Mortgages for Expenditure on House of Residence or Glebe or Chancel.

1479. An incumbent of a benefice (k) may borrow at interest on mortgage of the glebe and profits of his benefice in the prescribed form any sum or sums, not being less than £100 and not exceeding three years' net income of the benefice (l), for all or any of the following purposes, namely: (1) For building a new or repairing or improving an existing house of residence for the benefice (m); (2) for purchasing a site for a house of residence and other necessary buildings; (3) for purchasing not more than twenty acres of land, where the existing glebe does not exceed five acres, for a site for a house of residence with outbuildings and for gardens and glebe; (4) for purchasing not more than twelve acres of land contiguous to or desirable to be used or occupied with the house of residence or glebe of the benefice; (5) for building offices, stables, outbuildings, or fences for the house of residence; (6) for repairing the chancel of the church of the benefice where the incumbent is liable to repair the chancel (n); and (7) for building, improving, or purchasing a farm-house or farm buildings or labourers' dwelling-houses belonging to or desirable to be acquired for a farm or lands appertaining to the benefice (o). The incumbent must first submit

Mortgage by
incumbent.

Parsonages (Amendment) Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 29), the Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 25, and the Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 17.

(i) Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), s. 4.

(k) The incumbent of any benefice which has been augmented under the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), cannot raise money by mortgage of his benefice for purchasing, building, or improving a parsonage house without the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (Ecclesiastical Houses of Residence Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 26), s. 13).

(l) The rule of the Governors of the Bounty is that the outside limit of the loan which they will sanction is three years' net income, and they rarely lend more than two years' net income except for a new house.

(m) This includes making additions to the house (Boyd v. Barker (1859), 4 Drew. 582).

(n) See p. 732, ante.

(o) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), ss. 1—7, 12—20; Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1780 (21 Geo. 3, c. 66); Glebe Exchange Act, 1815 (55 Geo. 3, c. 147), s. 6; Clergy Residence Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 66); Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), ss. 1, 4, 5; Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), ss. 1, 3. The objects recognised by the Governors of the Bounty

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

a scheme and estimate (p) to the bishop of the diocese and the patron of the benefice, and obtain their written consent to it (q). The mortgage is to be for the term of thirty-five years, or until repayment of the principal sum secured with interest and incidental costs; and after the first year of the term the incumbent is to repay yearly one thirtieth part of the principal sum with interest thereon or on so much as remains unpaid (r). But the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty may lend money to incumbents for any of the above-mentioned purposes at interest not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum for shorter terms and under different forms of mortgage, and repayable either by annual instalments as above mentioned or by fixed yearly sums in the form of a terminable annuity (s). Colleges and halls in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and other corporate bodies possessing the patronage of benefices are also as those for which a loan may be sanctioned are:—(1) Purchasing house and land or site for residence, or purchasing land, not exceeding twelve acres, contiguous to the residence or glebe or desirable for use or occupation therewith; (2) Building, rebuilding, enlarging, and altering residence and offices, or building necessary stables, outbuildings, or fences; (3) Restoring, rebuilding, or repairing the fabric of the chancel where the incumbent is liable to repair or sustain it, provided the fabric of the church is in good preservation, or is about to be restored; (4) Building, improving, or purchasing farm-houses, buildings, or cottages desirable to be held with lands belonging to the benefice; (5) Water supply and sanitary improvements to residence; (6) Purchasing movable fixtures in the residence.

(p) The incumbent must procure a certificate showing the condition of the buildings, the value of the timber and materials on the glebe to be used, and an estimate of the work to be done, and verifying on oath the annual profits of the living. The estimate must follow the form and be in accordance with the instructions which are supplied by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, so as to comply with the statutory requirements, and the estimate and plans must be signed by the bishop and patron before the application will be considered by the Governors of the Bounty.

(q) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53). In the case of a benefice augmented under the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), the consent of the Commissioners under their common seal must also be obtained (Ecclesiastical Houses of Residence Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 26), s. 13). The bishop and patron, as consenting parties, are precluded from themselves advancing money on the mortgage (Greenlaw v. King (1840), 3 Beav. 49), but the incumbent may do so (Boyd v. Barker (1859), 4 Drew. 582). The money can be borrowed on mortgage only to pay for future works and not to repay money already expended (Lidbetter v. Hatch, [1907] 1 Ch. 404). It is essential that before any loan is obtained or any building is commenced application should be made to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, and that the necessary preliminaries shall have been completed in accordance with the instructions which will be given by them, and that the formal consent prepared by them shall have been duly executed.

(r) Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), s. 1.

(s) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), s. 12; Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), s. 4; Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), s. 3; Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 96), ss. 1, 2. By the Incumbents of Benefices Loans Extension Acts, 1881, 1886, and 1896 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 25, 49 & 50 Vict. c. 34, and 59 & 60 Vict. c. 13), and the Incumbents of Benefices Loans Extension Act, 1886 Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 8), the Governors were empowered during a limited time to make certain extensions in the terms for the repayment of money lent by them by suspending for a few years the payment of the annual instalments of principal (see note (u), p. 757, post). By the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 12, whenever it should appear to the Governors that the income empowered to lend money to assist in any of the above-mentioned purposes in respect of benefices in their patronage (t).

1480. Where the object of the loan is the purchase of sites or houses or the building or repair of houses (u), the money must be paid into the hands of some person nominated to receive and apply the same for the purpose by the ordinary, patron, and incumbent (v). Where there are buildings on the glebe, the bishop, before giving his consent, is bound to make inquiries (w), which he usually does through two neighbouring beneficed clergymen, respecting dilapidations, unless a certificate has within the last preceding five years been given under the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act covering all the buildings of the benefice (x). If the site for building is not already part of the glebe, it must be secured to the benefice through the medium of the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty or of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

1481. If the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have at any time augmented the income of the benefice, or are contributing towards the object for which the loan is sought, they usually appoint their own nominee and surety, and their approval of the proposal should be obtained before application is made to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, unless the loan asked for, with the sum contributed by the commissioners, is less than £300, and the sum so contributed is

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

—
Loan for purchase, building, or repair.

Ecclesiastical
Commissioners' consent, when required.

of a benefice on which a mortgage to them existed had been diminished by the operation of that Act, they were empowered on the application of the incumbent, with the consent of the patron, to modify the conditions of the mortgage, or the term fixed for the repayment of the principal sum secured thereby, as might seem to them reasonable.

(t) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), s. 13; Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), s. 5; Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), s. 3.

(u) Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69). The mortgage cannot be validly made if the money has already been expended (Lidbetter v. Hatch, [1907] 1 Ch. 404). The rule of the Governors of the Bounty is that the outside limits of the term for repayment are thirty years for a purchase of land, twenty-five years for a new house, fifteen years for alterations, additions, or improvements, and seven years for fixtures. The Governors of the Bounty have been granted powers by certain statutes to pass resolutions extending the time for repayment of loans, but the powers for this purpose given by Incumbents and Benefices Loans Extension Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 25), were not exercisable beyond three years (ibid., s. 2); and those given by the Incumbents of Benefices Loans Extension Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 34), amended by Incumbents of Benefices Loans Extension Act, 1886, Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 8), were to be exercised by resolutions passed before 31st December, 1887. As to extension of the mortgage terms where the income of a benefice is reduced under the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), see note (s), p. 756, ante; Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), s. 1; Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 96), s. 1.

(v) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), s. 4. The nomination is to be in the form contained in the schedule to the Act, and should not substantially depart from it (Lidbetter v. Hatch, supra). In addition to the nominee there must be a surety who will join him in a bond in double the value of the loan to secure that it is duly laid out.

(w) Clergy Residences Repair Act, 1776 (17 Geo. 3, c. 53), s. 5. The bishop's secretary is entitled to a fee of one guinea on issuing a commission of inquiry as to dilapidations.

(x) See p. 772, post

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

less than the loan. In order that a loan may be sanctioned it is requisite that the income of the benefice must be sufficient to pay the annual interest and instalments (y), as well as the curate's stipend in case of non-residence, and in cases where the income consists principally of pew rents the patron or three of the parishioners may be required to enter into a deed of guarantee as a collateral security for payment of the interest and principal.

Where the Ecclesiastical Commissioners hold any money which is applicable for the proposed purpose, and their consent to the application of such money is required, the plans of any proposed work must, before being finally approved by the Commissioners, receive the approval of the bishop. The Commissioners require that before any building of a house is commenced, or contracts are entered into, either one of their two model plans of a house should be with their approval adopted (z), or plans, specifications, and estimates should be submitted to and approved by them; and in case of purchase of a house they require that the tenure shall be freehold and that plans shall be submitted.

Loan for erection of house of
residence.

1482. Where new buildings are necessary for the residence of the incumbent of a benefice having an income exceeding £100 a year, the bishop may, on the avoidance of the benefice, after obtaining a report from four beneficed clergy of the diocese, including the rural dean, if any, of the district, that a fit house of residence can be conveniently provided on the glebe, and that the income exceeds £100, obtain a certificate of a surveyor as to the buildings, if any, and materials, and a plan or estimate for the erection or repair of such a house (a), and after transmitting copies of the report, plan, estimate, and certificate to the patron and incumbent, if any, and considering any objections raised within two calendar months in writing by them, and modifying the plan if he thinks fit (b), raise the sum so estimated by mortgage of the profits of the benefice, such sum to be paid to a nominee appointed by the bishop, and expended by him in such buildings or repairs, or, if not all required for such purpose, then in permanent improvements in building on the glebe or payment of the mortgage debt (c). Where a fit house of residence cannot be conveniently provided on the glebe, the bishop may contract, either personally or through a nominee, for the purchase of a house and land, or for land upon which a house can be built in a convenient situation for such residence, and may raise money for the purpose by mortgage of the glebe, tithes, and other profits of the benefice (d), such buildings

(y) No instalment becomes payable until after the expiration of the first year of the term (Parsonages Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 23), s. 1).

(z) The respective costs of these model houses is calculated not to exceed £1,800 and £1,600. The plans, quantities, and specifications are supplied by the Commissioners at a cost of one guinea, but a responsible architect must be employed to superintend the erection, for which the Commissioners allow 2½ per cent. on the cost out of funds (if any are available) in their hands.

(a) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 62.

(b) Ibid., s. 63.

(c) Ibid., s. 68.

(d) Ibid., s. 70.

and land being conveyed to the patron, his heirs and successors, for the use and benefit of the incumbent of the benefice (e). The mortgage is to be in the prescribed form for the term of thirty-five years or until repayment of the loan with interest and incidental costs. The Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty may lend the money at interest not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum; and colleges and halls in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and other corporate bodies possessing the patronage of benefices may lend the money without taking any interest for it (f).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

(iv.) Other Authorised Charges.

1483. With the consent of the bishop and patron, a loan on the security of the possessions of a benefice may be made by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty: (1) of the whole or any part of the sum stated in the final report, together with a sum for costs and expenses, in cases where, when the benefice is not vacant, a report is made as to the costs of the works needed to repair dilapidations in the buildings of the benefice, and (2) of the whole or any part which the Governors do not receive from the new incumbent of the sum stated in the order, together with a sum for costs and expenses in cases where, on the avoidance of a benefice, an order is made as to the repairs necessary to make good the dilapidations and the cost of such repairs (g).

For dilapida-
tions.

1484. An incumbent, with the consent of the patron or of the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, after paying compensation to an outgoing tenant of land belonging to the benefice, or after expending the amount necessary to execute an improvement which the tenant has notified his intention to execute, may obtain from the county court a charge upon the tenant's holding of the amount so paid or expended. Or, instead of the incumbent, the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty may pay the compensation to the tenant, and obtain from the county court a charge on the holding in respect thereof in favour of themselves (h).

For compensation paid to tenant of glebe.

1485. Under certain local and personal Acts constituting companies with power to advance money for the improvement of lands, and under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (i), incumbents may create a terminable charge on the lands of their benefices for securing the repayment of money borrowed for the improvement thereof; but the patron of the benefice and the bishop of the diocese

For improvement of land.

(e) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 71.

(f) Ibid., ss. 62—74, Sched. II. Loans under this Act by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty were included in the provisions of the Loans Extension Acts, and the section of the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act mentioned in note (a), p. 756, ante.

(g) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), ss. 17, 18, 38, 39, 62—64; Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 96), ss. 1, 2; see pp. 770, 771, post. Loans for repair of dilapidations were included in the provisions of the Loans Extension Acts, and the section of the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, mentioned in note (a), p. 756, ante.

(h) Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 28), ss. 15, 16, 40 (2), (3). See title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., p. 268.

(i) 27 & 28 Vict. c. 114.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

must give their written consent to every such improvement and charge (k). Arrears of the charge can be recovered by a sale of the lands charged (l), but if a portion of the lands is compulsorily purchased under statutory powers, the remaining payments of the charge will not be ordered to be paid off in advance out of the purchase-money (m).

For redemption of land tax.

1486. Mortgages and charges can be made on the lands of a benefice by the incumbent, or a sequestrator, or the patron, for the purpose of redeeming the land tax thereon or purchasing an assignment of the redeemed land tax (n).

For expenses of commuting
tithe.

1487. Incumbents have power to charge the expenses defrayable by them in connection with the commutation of the tithe of their benefices upon the rentcharge for which the tithe is commuted, or to borrow the expenses on the security of a charge on such rentcharge; but the charge must be paid off in twenty years (o).

(v.) Leases and Sales.

Alienation of Church
property.

1488. No person holding a spiritual office can alienate the possessions of the Church committed to him as the holder of such office, save in accordance with certain provisions imposed by law on such alienations. Thus, a bishop cannot alienate without the consent of the chapter, nor other ecclesiastical corporations sole without the consent of the bishop (p). With the requisite consent alienation was possible prior to the year 1571, but after that date all leases, gifts, grants, feoffments, conveyances, or estates made or suffered by any dean and chapter (q), parson, vicar, or any other person having any spiritual or ecclesiastical living, or any houses, lands, tithes, or other hereditaments being part of the possessions of or appertaining to any parsonage or other spiritual promotion (r), other than a lease

(k) Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114), s. 20; Improvement of Lands (Ecclesiastical Benefices) Act, 1881 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 67).

(l) Scottish Widows' Fund v. Craig (1882), 20 Ch. D. 208; Northern Assurance Co. v. Harrison, [1889] W. N. 74.

(m) Re Louth and East Coast Rail. Co., Ex parte Grimoldby (Rector) (1876), 2 Ch. 1). 225; Re Hull Railway and Dock Act, Ex parte Kirksmeaton (Rector) (1882), 20 Ch. D. 203; Ex parte Castle Bytham (Vicar) and Ex parte Midland Rail. Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 348.

(n) Land Tax Redemption Act, 1802 (42 Geo. 3, c. 116), ss. 69, 78, 79; Land Tax Redemption Act, 1805 (45 Geo. 3, c. 77), s. 1; Land Tax Redemption Act, 1810 (50 Geo. 3, c. 58), s. 2; Land Tax Redemption Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 123), ss. 26—31; Kilderbee v. Ambrose (1851), 10 Exch. 454.

(o) Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 77, 78; Tithe Act 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. 62), s. 16.

(p) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 298.

(q) A lease by dean and chapter, executed for them by the dean, though signed by the dean only, binds the chapter (Ely (Dean and Chapter) v. Stewart (Sir Simeon) (1740), 2 Atk. 44), but the fact that a majority of the chapter have signed an entry as to a lease in the chapter books does not bind the chapter (Carter v. Ely (Dean) (1835), 7 Sim. 211); nor will an agreement not under seal unless it has been in part executed (Winne v. Bampton (1747), 3 Atk. 473).

(r) Where by statute South Sea Annuities were vested in a rector as an endowment, with a proviso for reinvestment in land with consent of the bishop, and the proceeds were without consent invested in land which was conveyed to a succeeding rector, his heirs and assigns, and was by him conveyed to his successor, his heirs and assigns, it was held that as the purchase of the land did not for twenty-one years, or three lives, at the accustomed yearly rent or more, are utterly void and of no effect (a). From this date until the year 1842 (excepting between the years 1803 and 1817 (t)) it was not possible for the incumbent, even with the consent of his bishop or of the patron and ordinary, to grant a lease of glebe lands which was not within the above reservation, nor could he open mines in the glebe or let any mines in the glebe which had not been open before that date (u). Where a lease, though not made in accordance with the statutory provisions, can be regarded as voidable only, and not as absolutely void, it may be good as against the grantor during his incumbency if he is a corporation sole (v), or during the lifetime of the head if the grantor is a corporation aggregate (w), and may be adopted by the grantor's successors (x); but a lease for more than twenty-one years of ecclesiastical property of which the grantor is a trustee within the Charitable Trusts Acts is absolutely void unless made with the approval of the Charity Commissioners (a).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

1489. Since the year 1842 it has been possible for any incumbent of an ecclesiastical benefice, with the consents of the bishop and patron (b), and when the lands are of copyhold or customary tenure, with the consent also of the lord of the manor, to let (c) any part of the glebe or other lands of or belonging to the benefice (d), with or leases.

Ecclesiastical

purport to be and was not made under the private statute, the land did not form part of the benefice and was not subject to stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 10 (Power v. Banks, [1901] 2 Ch. 487).

(a) Stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 10, s. 2. A lease not within the provisions of the section is utterly void, and consequently the right of the grantors to re-enter exists from the moment of the execution of it, and where no rent is reserved the Statute of Limitations begins to run from that date (Magdalen Hospital (President and Governors) v. Knotts (1879), 4 App. Cas. 324), but not if a rent, however small, were reserved so as to create a tenancy from year to year (ibid., per Lord SELBORNE, at p. 335). Where under a private Act a lease by a dean and chapter is voidable only and not void, it may be set up by the receipt of rent (Doe d. Pennington v. Tanquer (1818), 12 Q. B. 998), so as to be binding for the life of the dean who received the rent (Pennington v. Curdale (1858), 3 L. & N. 656). So also a lease for years may bind a parson personally if he so long continues parson, and if he voluntarily breaks such term by resigning he may be liable in damages (Price v. Williams (1836), 1 M. & W. 6).

(t) During this period stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 10, having been repealed by stat. (1803) 43 Geo. 3, c. 84, was not in force, but it was resuscitated by the repeal of the latter Act by stat. (1817) 57 Geo. 3, c. 99 (Doe d. Cates v. Somerville (1826), 6 B. & C. 126).

(u) Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Wodehouse, [1895] 1 Ch. 552.

(v) Salisbury's (Bishop), Case (1613), 10 Co. Rep. 68 b.

(w) Roe d. Berkeley (Earl) v. York (Archbishop) (1805), 6 East, 86, 103; Co. Litt. 45 a.

(x) Co. Litt. 45 a.

(a) Bangor (Bishop) v. Parry, [1891] 2 Q. B. 277.

(b) In the case of a perpetual curacy, where the patron is a vicar, the consent of the rector as patron paramount is also required (Doe d. Brammall v. Collinge (1849), 7 C. B. 939).

(c) Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 27). This Act does not abridge any right of leasing which incumbents enjoyed independently of it (Green v. Jenkins (1860), 1 De G. F. & J. 454, C. A.).

(d) Including any lands vested in any trustee for the benefit of any incumbent (Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 27), s. 13); but not including any part of the churchyard (St. Gabriel, Fenchurch Street v. City of London Real Property Co., [1896] P. 95).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

without any farm-houses, cottages, or other agricultural buildings on it, on lease at the best rent obtainable for farming purposes for fourteen years, or on an improving lease for twenty years, provided the parsonage house and ten acres of land adjoining it are reserved, or if there is not ten acres adjoining, then ten acres, or as much, being less than ten acres, as is within five miles of the parsonage or of the church where there is no parsonage(e). The lease must contain covenants to pay outgoings, not to sublet without the consents of the bishop, patron, and incumbent, to cultivate according to the most improved system of husbandry in the locality so far as such system is not inconsistent with any express stipulation in the lease, to keep all lands and fixtures thereon in good condition and repair, and to repair and insure against fire all buildings; the lease must contain reservations of all timber saplings and underwood and of all mines and minerals, but the lessor may covenant that the lessee may take brick, earth, stone, lime, timber, or other materials for the erection or repair of buildings or gates or for other improvements(f), and the lease must be reported on by a surveyor appointed by the bishop, patron, and incumbent, who must provide by actual survey, or by copy from an existing map, a plan showing the lands to be leased and the other lands belonging to the benefice(g). Where the patron or lord of the manor is under incapacity or abroad, consent may be given on his behalf by the guardian, committee, or attorney as the case may be(h), and when the patronage is in the Crown, the consent may be testified by the First Lord of the Treasury if the benefice is above the value of £20, or by the Lord Chancellor if it is not(i). All the incumbent's documents relating to the lease are deposited in the diocesan registry(k), and a receipt in writing of a counterpart or attested copy of the lease indorsed on the lease and signed by the lessor is conclusive evidence that the lease has been duly executed by him, and the execution of the lease by the bishop and patron is conclusive evidence that the lands leased might properly be included, and that the conditions as to rent and covenants have been complied with(l).

Building
lease.

1490. An incumbent or other ecclesiastical corporation (m), with (e) Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 27), ss. 1, 2. For form of lease, see Encyclopædia of Forms, Vol. III., p. 668.

(f) Ibid., s. 1.

(g) Ibid., s. 3. The practice of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, where their approval is required under the Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts (see pp. 763, 764, post), is to accept in general an extract from the 25-inch scale Ordnance Survey map for the purpose of showing the land to be dealt with and the ownership of all adjoining property, which must be marked thereon, and to accept, at any rate in the first instance, a 6-inch scale map where a considerable quantity of land is to be dealt with.

(h) Ibid., s. 7.

(i) Ibid., s. 8.

(k) Ibid., s. 14.

(l) Ibid., s. 4.

(m) Ibid., as amended by the Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 57), and the Ecclesiastical Leases Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 57). These Acts make it lawful for any ecclesiastical corporation, aggregate or sole, except any college or corporation of vicars choral, priest vicars, senior vicars, the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (n) and with the consent of the patron, and, when required, with the consent of the lord of the manor (o), may also grant a building lease of any land (p), excepting any house of residence of any corporation sole or of any member of a corporation aggregate, and any offices, gardens, orchards, or pleasure grounds convenient for actual occupation therewith, and except any mines or easements the grant whereof might be

SECT. 3.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

custos and vicars, or minor canons, and except also any ecclesiastical hospital or the master thereof, to grant leases subject to the restrictions set out in the Acts.

(n) By the Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts (see note (m), p. 762, ante), it is competent to an incumbent, with the consent of the patron of his living and with the approval of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to sell, lease, or exchange any lands, houses, mines, minerals, or other property belonging to his benefice, including the dealing with glebe lands for building purposes either by way of lease or ground rents or grant on chief or fee farm rents, and the creation of easements in or over land, but parsonage houses and their appurtenances and tithe rent-charges or corn rents are not dealt with under these Acts, and in cases where the property has been acquired for the benefice under the Acts administered by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, the Commissioners do not take proceedings for its sale under the Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts, unless a reservation of or special questions in connection with minerals have to be considered. Exchanges of properties of equal value can in certain cases be effected with greater facility under the Tithe and Inclosure Acts (see p. 748, ante, and title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., p. 544). Excepting moneys payable by way of perpetual annual chief or fee farm rent or rentcharge, the whole of the proceeds from the sale of glebe, or from the sale or working of minerals belonging to a benefice, is required to be paid to the Commissioners. The provisions (see p. 800, post) for the appropriation in certain cases of part of the proceeds to the Commissioners' common fund do not affect the incumbent in possession, and are subject to the conditions that the average annual income of the benefice shall not be left at less than £600, if the population amounts to 2,000, nor at less than £500 if the population amounts to 1,000, nor in any case at less than £300, and that in making provision for the cure of souls out of the proceeds, the wants and circumstances of the place in which the lands or minerals dealt with are situated are to be primarily considered. In the case of a lease the costs, which, in accordance with the usual practice, are payable by the lessee, should include the costs of the Commissioners. In the case of a sale the Commissioners allow such costs as they in their discretion think fit to be deducted out of the proceeds of sale, but as a rule they do not consider it necessary that the patron should be separately represented, nor allow anything for such separate representation, and in no circumstances do they allow the incumbent's solicitor remuneration in excess of the scale which they have fixed, excepting that they allow a small fee for a duplicate conveyance where necessary, and a further fee, not exceeding £2, when the incumbent's solicitor also acts for the patron. The scale commences with £2 2s. on a purchase price not exceeding £50; £3 3s. up to £100; £4 up to £150; £5 up to £200; £6 up to £300; £2 per cent. additional up to £1,000; £1 per cent. additional up to £3,000; 10s. per cent. additional up to £10,000; 6s. per cent. additional up to £25,000; and 2s. 6d. per cent. additional above £25,000. Where the consideration is not less than £250 the Commissioners are, with the concurrence of the incumbent, prepared to consider the acceptance of 15 to 20 per cent. according to the circumstances of the price, in cash, together with a mortgage deed providing for payment of the balance by equal half-yearly instalments of principal and interest combined.

(o) Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108), s. 20.

(p) Including any land held in trust for the corporation (ibid., s. 28), or held upon trusts under which not less than three-fourths of the net income is payable to the incumbent of a benefice (Ecclesiastical Commissioners' directions); but not including any portion of the churchyard (St. Gabriel, Fenchurch Street (Rector &c.) v. City of London Real Property Co., [1896] P. 96).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

prejudicial to the enjoyment of such residence (q), for not more than ninety-nine years, to any person willing to improve or repair existing houses, or to erect new houses on the land, or to annex any part of the land to buildings erected or to be erected thereon, and may grant a renewal of such a lease, so long as one-fourth part of the term remains unexpired (r), and may grant a mining lease for any term not exceeding sixty years (s). A building lease so granted must reserve the best rent obtainable (t), excepting that a smaller rent may be reserved for the first six years (a), and must contain covenants for erecting, repairing, and insuring any buildings to be erected pursuant to the lease (b). The incumbent or other ecclesiastical corporation may, with the like consents, appropriate any part of the land which might be leased for streets, or squares, or for places convenient for the carrying on of any manufacture or trade, or otherwise for the general improvement of the estate or the accommodation of the occupiers (c). Provisions as to the consent of the Crown as patron, and of any patron or lord of a manor who is under incapacity, similar to those set out above in respect of leases at a rack rent, apply (d).

General power of permanent improvement.

1491. The incumbent or other ecclesiastical corporation may also, with the same consents, in cases where it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners that it will be to the permanent advantage of the estate, lease in any manner, sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of any part of the property in any manner and on any terms which the Commissioners by an order under their seal approve, but no sale by an incumbent can be so authorised until one month's notice has been given to the bishop of the diocese (e). All moneys paid by way of premiums on any lease, or by way of royalties on minerals, or on any sale, exchange, or partition are to be paid to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and may by them be reinvested in lands convenient to be held by the corporation on whose behalf the money was received (f).

Sale of glebe
lands.

1492. The incumbent may, if he is desirous of selling any of the glebe except the parsonage house and any lands appurtenant

(q) Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108), s. 9.

(r) Ibid., s. 5. A lease for twenty-one years made by a vicar within three years of the expiration of a former lease of premises in London belonging to the vicarage, not being the residence nor above ten acres, was held not to be within stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 10, nor the amending Acts (Vivian v. Blomberg (1836), 3 Scott, 681).

Ibid., s. 6.

Ibid., s. 1.

Ibid., s. 2.

Ibid., s. 1.

(c) Ibid., s. 3.

(d) Ibid., ss. 22, 23, 34.

(e) Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 57), s. 1. The notice of sale required to be given to the bishop is now limited to one month, and is issued from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners' office. Where the sale was to trustees of a settlement and the purchase was not authorised by the trust for investment, it was held that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners had no remedy against the owners of the settled estates for specific performance (Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Pinney, [1900] 2 Ch. 736, O. A.).

(f) Ibid., s. 2.

thereto (g), apply to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries for their approval of the proposed sale, but before so doing he must give notice to the bishop of the diocese and to the patron of the living (h), and also to the parishioners and to the sanitary authority of the district (i) of his intention to make such application. If the land is subject to any mortgage or other debt, notice, which must be in the prescribed form, must also be given to the mortgagee or other creditor (k). After the notices have been given to the bishop and the patron the incumbent may apply to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to approve the sale, and the Board, if satisfied of the prima facie expediency of the proposed sale, will nominate a competent valuer and instruct him to report as to the value and quality of the land, value of timber, existence and value of minerals, state of the buildings, whether the value is likely to be diminished by any dilapidations which the incumbent is liable to make good (l), whether the land possesses any accommodation value to adjoining owners, whether there is likely to be a demand for small allotments (m), and as to the outgoings. If the Board are then satisfied that the application has been duly made by an incumbent authorised to apply, that the prescribed notice has been given to the bishop and patron that an objection to the sale either has not been made, or if made ought not to prevail, and that the sale will be for the permanent benefit of the benefice, they may approve the sale subject to the provisions of the Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (n), but the Board cannot

Sect. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

(g) This exception includes the outbuildings, garden, or other appurtenances of the parsonage house, or such part of the glebe as the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries consider to be necessary for the convenient enjoyment of that house (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), ss. 2, 3 (1); Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, r. 2). For the Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, dated August 13th, 1909, see [1909] W. N. 317.

(h) The notices must be in the form in the schedule to the Sale of Glebe Land Rules, with map annexed, and must contain such particulars of the objects and advantages of the proposed sale, and of the situation of the land as will enable the bishop and patron to judge whether they ought to object. If the patron is a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, the notice must be given respectively to the guardian, committee, or husband and wife (Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, r. 1). It was held in a case under a private Act, which gave trustees the right of presentation during a minority, that this did not constitute them patrons for the purpose of consenting to a sale of glebe, and that the guardian was the proper person to consent (Leigh v. Leigh, [1902] 1 Ch. 400).

(i) The notice to the parishioners must be posted on the notice board of the parish church, at the post office, and other usual places, on three successive Sundays, and if the land is in another parish notice must be given in both places (Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, r. 1).

(k) Ibid., r. 1; for the prescribed form, see ibid., schedule, Form No. 3.

(l) If there are any such dilapidations, either the incumbent must make them good before the sale, or the Board must provide for the amount of such diminution of value being recouped to the benefice by an immediate money payment or by the application of part of the income of the benefice, with a continuing liability on the incumbent until the amount is made good (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 5 (1); Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, r. 8).

(m) Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 8 (1); Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, rr. 4, 5.

(n) 51 & 52 Vict. c. 20. If a bishop or patron has objected, the Board must

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

approve any sale of land subject to a lease originally created for a term exceeding twenty-one years, or let for any term where through the rent reserved being less than two-thirds of the value, or for any other reason, the incumbent is not in possession of the full rents and profits, or of mines or minerals which appear likely to become of considerable value (o).

Investment of proceeds.

1493. Where the Board have approved the sale the incumbent may sell the land subject to the conditions required by the Board and to the provisions of the Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (p). The expenses of the sale are defrayed out of the purchase-money, and the balance of the purchase-money, after discharging any mortgage or other debt which the Board decide ought to be discharged (q), is paid to the Board (r), and by them invested in trustee securities selected by the incumbent if he desires, in the name of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (s), or in redemption of land tax, chief rent or inform the person objecting in writing of their reasons for being so satisfied (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 3 (2)).

(o) Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 5 (2); Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, r. 2.

(p) 51 & 52 Vict. c. 20. Although lands are vested in the incumbent "and his successors," this does not constitute a trust for "persons by way of succession" so as to make it a settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Acts, and consequently the incumbent has not the powers of a tenant for life under those Acts (Ex parte Castle Bytham (Vicar) and Ex parte Midland Rail. Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 348, approved in Re Bath and Wells (Bishop), [1899] 2 Ch. 138), but the Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), by s. 8 (4) expressly provides that in effecting the sale the incumbent has as far as circumstances admit powers similar to those of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts (for which see title SETTLEMENTS), and may enter into a contract for the sale as a tenant for life may. No contract should be entered into, nor should any material expense be incurred (Sale of Glebe Land Rules, 1909, r. 4), until the Board has decided that the sale is expedient. The prescribed notice of the proposal to sell having been given to mortgagees and creditors, any mortgagee or creditor may within one month (ibid., r. 1) object on the ground that his security will be damaged, and the Board may make provisions for securing his rights, or if satisfied that he will not be damaged may approve the sale. Where a mortgage debt is repayable by annual instalments or the land is subject to any permanent annual charge in favour of another benefice, these become payable by the incumbent out of the interest of the purchase-money, and the Board may make any provisions for preventing prejudice to the future interest of the benefice, which will be binding on the incumbent for the time being, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may set apart an adequate part of the security for the purpose of meeting any such permanent annual charge (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), ss. 6 (2), 7).

(q) Ibid., s. 5 (1). Where purchase-money of glebe lands taken by a railway company had been paid into court before the Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), the court allowed part of it to be devoted to repairs of the rectory, and refused to allow any part to be devoted to repaying money borrowed from Queen Anne's Bounty (Re Louth and East Coast Rail. Co., Ex parte Grinoldby (Rector) (1876), 2 Ch. D. 225), and in another case refused to allow it to be applied in the repayment of money already spent on repairs (Re Nether Stovey Vicarage (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 156).

(r) The receipt of the Board is a good discharge to the purchaser (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 4 (1)).

(s) The securities may from time to time be varied on the request of and at the expense of the incumbent with the approval of the Commissioners (ibid., s. 4 (3)). Where land belonging to an ecclesiastical corporation was subject to a lease and was purchased compulsorily and the lessee's interest was acquired independently, the sum paid for the reversion was ordered to be accumulated quit rent charged on any unsold part of the glebe, or in the purchase of lands adjacent to the parsonage the possession of which in the judgment of the Board would be for the benefit of the benefice and for the convenient enjoyment of the parsonage house (c).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

(vi.) Dilapidations and Wastes.

1494. A dilapidation is the pulling down or destroying in any manner any of the houses or buildings belonging to a spiritual living (a) or suffering them to run into ruin or decay, or wasting (b) or destroying the goods of the church, or committing or suffering any wilful waste (b) in or upon the inheritance of the church (a). It is Dilapidation.

until the expiration of the lease (Ex parte Gloucester (Dean and Chapter) (1860), 15 Jur. 239; Ex parte Christchurch (Dean and Chapter) (1853), 23 L. J. (OH.) 149); and where such land was subject to a lease with fines upon renewal the corporation was held entitled to so much only of the dividends as represented the rent reserved, with liberty to apply as to accumulations (Ex parte St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter) (1863), 11 W. R. 482; but see Ex parte Merton College (Warden) (1862), 1 New Rep. 176).

(c) Any land so purchased is conveyed to the incumbent and forms part of the glebe (Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 4 (6)). Where purchase-money of part of a churchyard was in court the court allowed it to be expended in part in purchase of a house of residence which was not suitable but was capable of being made so, and in part in alterations and repairs required to make it suitable (Ex parte St. Botolph, Aldgate (Vicar), [1894] 3 Ch. 541). Generally, the court sanctions beneficial expenditure out of capital for the building (Ex parte Bradfield St. Claire (Rector) (1875), 32 L. T. 248), completion (Ex parte Hartington (Rector) (1875), 23 W. R. 484), or permanent improvement (Ex parte Champole (Rector) (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 574) of a parsonage house or of other buildings belonging to the benefice (Re Whitfield (Incumbent) (1861), 1 John. & H. 610; Ex parte Shipton-under-Wychwood (Rector) (1871), 19 W. R. 649), or in the inclosure of other lands belonging to the benefice (Ex parte Lockwood (1851), 14 Beav. 158), and even in some cases in repayment of money already expended (Ex parte Holywell-cum-Needingworth (Rector) (1879), 27 W. R. 707; Ex parte Gamston (Rector) (1876), 1 Ch. D. 477), but not in paying off money borrowed for the purpose (Williams v. Aylesbury and Buckingham Rail. Co. (1874), 43 L. J. (OH.) 825, C. A.; and note (g), on p. 766, ante), nor without the consent of the patron in reducing a rentcharge (Ex parte Castle Bytham (Vicar) and Ex parte Midland Rail. Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 348), nor in restoration of the chancel (Re Louth and East Coast Rail. Co., Ex parte Grimoldby (Rector) (1876), 2 Ch. D. 226). The combined effect of s. 32 of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), and s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), is that when purchase-money of glebe has been paid into court under the last-named Act, it may be dealt with as capital moneys under the Settled Land Acts (Ex parte Castle Bytham (Vicar) and Ex parte Midland Rail. Co., supra); as, for instance, in discharging incumbrances or buying up leases on other lands held on the same trusts (Re Byron's Charity (1883), 23 Ch. D. 171; Ex parte London (Bishop) (1860), 2 Do G. F. & J. 14, C. A.; Ex parte Manchester (Dean and Canons) (1873), 28 L. T. 194; Re Queen Camel (Vicar) (1863), 11 W. R. 503).

(a) This includes in the case of a benefice all such houses of residence, chancels, walls, fences, and other buildings and things as the incumbent is by law or custom bound to maintain in repair (Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 4). Before this Act it was held that a vicar could not recover in respect of repairs of buildings which were held by a college in trust, to permit the vicar to receive the rents after deducting the expense of repairs (Broune v. Ramsden (1818), 2 Moore (C. P.), 612).

(b) It is waste for a rector to cut trees in the churchyard except for repairing the chancel of the church (stat. (1306—7) 35 Edw. 1, stat. 2), or for a bishop to cut down and sell the trees of his bishopric (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 146 c; Winchester (Bishop) v. Woolgar (1629), 3 Swan. 349, n.), or for a parson to open mines (Knight v. Moseley (1753), Amb. 176), without the

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

the duty of every person occupying a spiritual office and receiving the emoluments thereof to prevent the dilapidation of the property belonging to it, and any breach of this duty may be visited with ecclesiastical censures, while the next occupant of the office, in respect of any dilapidations outstanding on the office becoming vacant, may recover damages in the spiritual court or at common law against the predecessor or his estate (c).

Diocesan surveyors.

1495. In order to make provision for the better sustentation of buildings which ecclesiastical persons are thus liable to repair, as well consent of the patron and ordinary (Holden v. Weekes (1860), 1 John. & H. 278; Huntley v. Russell (1849), 13 Q. B. 572), but not for a parson before the restraining Acts of Elizabeth with the consent of the patron and ordinary to dig new coal mines in a glebe (Rutland's Countess's Case (1663), 1 Lev. 107), or since the restraining Acts for him to work mines already opened, provided the opening was duly authorised (Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Wolehouse, [1895] 1 Ch. 552), or to cut trees for the purpose of repairs (Strachy v. Francis (1741), 2 Atk. 217), or for the purpose of applying the proceeds of sale to purchasing other timber for repairs of buildings belonging to the benefice (Sowerby v. Fryer (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 417; Wither v. Winchester (Dean etc.) (1817), 3 Mer. 421; Marlborough (Duke) v. St. John (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 174), or to alter the system of cultivation for the purpose of meliorating the land (St. Albans (Duke) v. Skipwith (1845), 8 Beav. 354), or to suffer a building to go to decay if he replaces it by a better building (Huntley v. Russell, supra). As to the removal of fixtures placed by the incumbent, see Martin v. Roe (1857), 7 E. & B. 237. As to trees in the churchyard, the statute "No rector prosterнат arbores in cemiteris" stat. (1306--7) 35 Edw. 1, stat. 2, enacts that "Forasmuch as a churchyard that is dedicated is the soil of a church and whatsoever is planted belongeth to the soil it must needs follow that those Trees which be growing in the churchyard are to be reckoned amongst the goods of the Church the which Laymen have no authority to dispose but as the Holy Scripture doth testify The charge of them is committed only to Priests to be disposed of And yet seeing those trees be often planted to defend the force of the wind from hurting the church We do prohibit the Parsons that they do not presume to fell them down unadvisedly, but when the Chancel of the Church doth want necessary reparations; neither shall they be converted to any other use except the body of the Church doth need like repair. In which case the Rectors of poor parishes of their charity shall do well to relieve the Parishioners with bestowing upon them the same Trees which we will not command to be done but we will commend it when it is done."

(c) The action is based not on the general law of the land, but on custom which had become part of the common law, and therefore all the incidents of the custom attached (Bryan v. Clay (1852), 1 E. & B. 38). The principle is that the law cast a duty on the incumbent or prebendary (Radclyffe v. D'Oyly (1788), 2 Term Rep. 630) to maintain the houses, buildings, and other premises belonging to the benefice because he enjoyed the benefit of them, but that neglect to perform it constituted no civil tort during his lifetime, and occupation of the benefice either to his successor who was unknown, or to the patron who had no right of action for spoil or waste, and only enured to the successor when he was ascertained (Jones v. Hill (1690), 3 Lev. 268; Wheatley v. Lane (1669), 1 Wms. Saund. 216 a, b; Mason v. Lambert (1848), 12 Q. B. 795; Sollers v. Laurence (1743), Willes, 413; Bird v. Relph (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 773; Wise v. Metcalfe (1829), 10 B. & C. 299; Bunbury v. Hewson (1849), 3 Exch. 558; Huntley v. Russell, supra), not as a debt, but as a liability to damages which was to be satisfied out of assets after simple contract debts (Bryan v. Clay, supra). It is confined to dilapidations to houses and buildings, and does not extend to waste by digging gravel in the glebe (Ross v. Adcock (1868), L. R. 3 O. P. 655). The action for damages of which the above-named cases afford examples has been practically abolished by the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (Re Monk, Wayman v. Monk (1887), 35 Ch. D. 583, 588). As to the liability of a bishop to account for waste, see Crampton v. Meath (Bishop) (1837), Sau. & So. 297.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature

as for the relief of such persons and their representatives (d), a surveyor or surveyors of ecclesiastical dilapidations is or are appointed for each diocese (e) by the archdeacons and rural deans at a meeting at which the bishop, or in his absence the senior archdeacon, presides (f). The appointment is subject to the approval of the bishop, who has power to hear any complaint against a surveyor of neglect, breach of duty, or unfitness for his office, and to remove him after giving him an opportunity of showing cause to the contrary (g). The surveyor is paid according to a rate of charges fixed or revised at a meeting of the bishop, archdeacons, rural deans, and the chancellor of the diocese (h). The surveyor must not be interested directly or indirectly, except as shareholder in a public company, in any work or contract to be entered into for the repair of ecclesiastical dilapidations (i).

At the request of an incumbent, or on complaint in writing of an archdeacon or rural dean or patron of a benefice (k), that the buildings of a benefice (l) are in a state of dilapidation, or within three calendar months after the avoidance of a benefice (m), unless the late incumbent is free from all liability to dilapidations, or where a benefice is under sequestration within six months after the sequestration issues,

Inspection by surveyor.

(d) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), preamble. It was formerly necessary for every bishop as soon as he was installed, and for every rector or vicar as soon as he was inducted, to procure a survey of the state of the premises, and evidence of the amount required to repair them (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. II., p. 147).

(e) A building belonging to a benefice is deemed to be in the diocese of the bishop under whose jurisdiction the benefice is (Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 5).

(f) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 8.

(g) Ibid. The appointment may be general or for a term, and for the whole or part of the diocese.

(h) Ibid., s. 10.

(i) Ibid., s. 11.

(k) Ibid., s. 12. A copy of the complaint must be forwarded to the incumbent one month before the inspection is ordered. An agreement by two incumbents, made with the assents of their respective patrons and bishops, to exchange their livings without any payment for dilapidations on either side was not simoniacal, nor is it so contrary to the policy of the Act as to be invalid (Wright v. Davies (1876), 1 O. P. D. 638, C. A.; Goldham v. Edwards (1856), 18 O. B. 389, Ex. Ch.), but the mere fact that at the time of the agreement to exchange neither party contemplated such a claim will not estop either party from enforcing it (Downes v. Craig (1841), 9 M. & W. 166).

(l) Benefice includes all rectories with cure of souls, vicarages, perpetual curacies, donatives, endowed public chapels, and parochial chapelries, and chapelries or districts belonging or reputed to belong to, or annexed or reputed to be annexed to, any church or chapel (Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 3).

(m) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 29. The Act contains two distinct sets of provisions: ss. 12—24, relate to inspection when a benefice is not vacant; ss. 29—43 relate to inspection when it is vacant; s. 20, therefore, has no bearing on an inspection made under the latter sections, and, consequently, where a benefice was under sequestration at the death of the incumbent and the inspection was made after the avoidance, and the bishop's order was made pursuant to s. 34, it was held that the sequestrator was not liable for, nor entitled to deduct out of the profits in his hands, the cost of the repairs required (Jones v. Dangerfield (1876), 1 Ch. D. 438).

SECT. 2.

Property
Eccle-
siastical in its Nature.Proceedings
in respect of
dilapidations.
Report.

and thenceforth every fifth year while it continues (n), the bishop may direct the surveyor to inspect the buildings of the benefice.

1496. Where such a complaint is made, if within twenty-one days of notice thereof the incumbent informs the bishop that he intends to do the repairs, the bishop may allow him a reasonable time to execute them (o), but if he does not or the bishop during the time so directs (p), then the surveyor inspects, and within one month sends to the bishop his report, and a copy to the incumbent and to the sequestrator (if any) (q), showing, if any works are needed for putting into repair any dilapidated building belonging to the benefice, what they are, specifying them in detail, what he estimates to be the probable cost, and at or within what time or times such work respectively ought to be executed, or, in the case of an avoidance of the benefice, stating what sum will be required to make good the dilapidations (r).

Objections to report.

The incumbent (s) or sequestrator may, within one month, state in writing to the bishop objections (t) to the report on any grounds of fact or law, and the bishop may, at the expense of the objector, direct a second report by another surveyor or take counsel's opinion on a question of law, and shall, after due consideration, make an order giving his decision in writing, which is final (a).

Execution of repairs.

The incumbent must then proceed to execute the repairs within the time named or such extended time as the bishop shall allow (b). For that purpose he may borrow, and the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty upon his request, with the consent of the bishop, may lend, upon the security of the possessions of the benefice, the whole or any part of the sum stated as the cost, with such sum as the Governors think fit in respect of costs and expenses (c). If the benefice is under sequestration the sum stated (d) becomes a (n) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 13.

(o) Ibid., s. 22.

(p) In the case of avoidance of a benefice the Act says (ibid., s. 29), "The bishop shall direct"; but it was held that the section is directory and not imperative, and that a direction made by the bishop more than three months after the avoidance (Caldow v. Pixell (1877), 2 C. P. D. 562) and an inspection made after three months pursuant to a direction within three months are valid (Gleaves v. Marriner (1876), 1 Ex. D. 107).

(q) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 14.

(r) In the case of an avoidance of the benefice the report may state any special circumstances, and a copy is to be sent both to the new incumbent and to the late incumbent, his executors or administrators (ibid., s. 30), and either the new incumbent or the late incumbent, his executors or administrators, may state objections to the report.

(s) Including both the new and the late incumbent in the case of a vacant benefice (ibid., ss. 16, 32).

(t) Ibid., ss. 16, 32. An objection by letter from the executor of a deceased incumbent should be considered by the bishop, even though it does not expressly purport to be within s. 32 of the Act (De Beauvais v. Green (1907), 24 T. L. R. 43, Q. A.).

(a) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), ss. 16, 34—35. The placing of the bishop's signature on the order by means of a stamp is a sufficient signature (De Beauvais v. Green (1906), 22 T. L. R. 816, reversed on another point (1907), 24 T. L. R. 43, C. A.).

(b) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), ss. 19, 42. This section says eighteen months for a new incumbent.

(c) Ibid., ss. 17, 38.

(d) The sequestrator has no authority to expend on repairs out of the profits charge upon the net profits of the benefice in priority to all other charges except the stipends of the curate or curates appointed to perform the duties (e). If the benefice becomes vacant while under sequestration a fresh inspection and report is made by the surveyor (f), and in all cases of a benefice becoming vacant a report already made stands good, subject to any modification which may be made in it (g).

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

If the incumbent refuses or neglects to duly execute the repairs, the bishop may raise the prescribed sum, if not otherwise provided by the incumbent, together with all costs, by sequestration of the profits of the benefice (h).

In case
incumbent refuses.

In the case of an avoidance of the benefice the order is signed by the bishop in triplicate (i), and the sum stated in the order as the cost of the repairs (k) is a debt to the new incumbent recoverable from the late incumbent or his estate (l), which is recoverable pari passu with other debts due from the estate (m), and the new incumbent, as and when he receives it or any part, is bound forthwith to hand it over to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty (n), and at the end of six months from the date of the order, or such further period not exceeding twelve months as the bishop may allow, is bound to pay to the Governors whatever sum is required to make up the sum so stated as the cost of the repairs (o). The new incumbent may, with the consent of the patron and bishop, elect to rebuild the premises and apply the said sum thereto, but if not he must execute the repairs within eighteen months (p).

In case of avoidance of the benefice.

1497. Where money is standing to the credit of a dilapidation account in the books of the Bounty, the repairs must be executed to the satisfaction of the surveyor (q), and in the cases of sequestration or refusal to execute they must be executed under the direction of the surveyor (r), who certifies (s) from time to time for payments out of the money so standing until the whole of the repairs have been executed or the money is exhausted, and when the repairs of the benefice a larger sum than that estimated in the surveyor's report (Kimber v. Paravicini (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 222).

Certificates.

(e) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 20.

(f) Ibid., s. 21.

(g) Ibid., ss. 24, 49.

(h) Ibid., ss. 23, 43. A failure to repair by reason of inability to pay for repairs may be equivalent to a refusal or neglect (Ex parte Loughman (1907), 52 Sol. Jo. 47).

(i) One copy is sent to the new incumbent, one to the late incumbent, his executors or administrators, and the third is filed in the diocesan registry (ibid., s. 35).

(k) If in doing the repairs timber growing on the glebe is used, the value of it should not be included in the cost charged against the late incumbent's estate (Percival v. Cooke (1828), 2 O. & P. 460).

(l) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 36.

(m) Re Monk, Wayman v. Monk (1857), 35 Ch. D. 583; Bisset v. Burgess (1856), 23 Beav. 278.

(n) Ibid., s. 37.

(o) Ibid., ss. 40, 41.

(p) Ibid., s. 42.

(q) Ibid., s. 44.

(r) Ibid., s. 45.

(s) The certificate is countersigned by the bishop.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Repair of episcopal
property.

have been finished to his satisfaction, the surveyor gives a final certificate, which is filed in the registry and is conclusive evidence of the due execution of the works (t) and protects the incumbent and his estate from any claim in respect of the buildings for dilapidations, except for wilful waste, in the event of the benefice becoming vacant within five years (a).

The Estates Committee of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may (b) inspect any property assigned as an endowment for any see, and may serve notice on the archbishop or bishop of such see of any want of repair, and requiring him at his own expense, or at the expense of his tenants, to do the repairs specified in such notice, and they may, at the request of any archbishop or bishop, undertake or authorise any permanent improvements of such property and advance money for the purpose out of their common fund and charge it thereon (c). The Estates Committee are also clothed with all the rights which any archbishop or bishop might have had against his predecessor or his estate in respect of dilapidations on the estate forming the endowment of the see other than the houses of residence, and are empowered in enforcing such rights to have regard to the state of repair at the preceding succession (d).

Repair of episcopal
residence.

1498. Any archbishop or bishop, or the holder of any dignity or office in any cathedral or collegiate church, may employ a surveyor approved by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to report what works are needed for putting into a proper state of repair any residence which he is bound to maintain in repair at his own personal cost (e), and a certificate by such surveyor that such works have been duly executed is, when filed in the registry, conclusive evidence of the due execution of such works, and protects such dignitary and his estate from any claim for dilapidations other than wilful waste or damage by fire arising on the office becoming vacant within five years (f).

(vii.) Insurance.

Insurance.

1499. The incumbent of every benefice is obliged to keep insured against fire, in at least three-fifths of the value, the parsonage house and farm and other buildings standing on land belonging to the benefice, and their outbuildings and offices, and also the chancel of the church if the incumbent is liable to repair it (g). The insurance must be effected with an office approved by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty in the joint names of the incumbent and the Governors, and the receipt must be produced at the first visitation

(t) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 46.

(a) Ibid., s. 47.

(b) Either at the request of the archbishop or bishop, or without such request (Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 13.

(c) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), ss. 9, 10.

(d) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 12.

(e) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 25.

(f) Ibid., ss. 27, 28.

(g) Ibid., s. 54. As to the inclusion of a covenant to insure in ecclesiastical leases, see pp. 762, 764, ante.

after payment (h). If a building is burnt and the insurance office elects to pay instead of reinstating it, the sum paid is received by the Governors and dealt with as if it were a payment in respect of dilapidations (i). If the building is not insured, or a further sum beyond the insurance money is required to reinstate the building, the surveyor certifies in triplicate to the bishop, the Governors, and the incumbent or sequestrator the amount required, and unless the incumbent pays the sum certified within three months to the Governors, the bishop raises it by sequestration, or, if the benefice is already sequestrated, the sequestrator pays the sum certified out of the net profits of the benefice, and the sum is expended in reinstating the buildings as if it were a sum provided for making good dilapidations (k). The incumbent of a benefice which is subject to a mortgage for the building of a house of residence is also under a liability to keep such house insured in an office in London or Westminster at a sum to be determined by the bishop (l). Any house of residence built, rebuilt, altered, or improved under the Ecclesiastical Houses of Residence Acts must also be kept insured by the bishop, dean, or canon for the time being in occupation in such offices and to such amount as the Ecclesiastical Commissioners deem fit (m).

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

(ix.) Private Benefactions.

1500. Private benefactions given for a spiritual purpose for the benefit of the Church of England are donations for a charitable purpose (n). A trust for the building of a church or for maintaining and propagating the worship of God, without any more precise expression of intention as to the denomination to be benefited, is construed as for the advancement of the Church of England as the established religion of the country (o), and this exceptional position of the Church of England is expressly preserved by the Charitable Trusts Acts (p). Every gift, appointment, settlement, devise, or bequest for a spiritual purpose is an assurance for the benefit of a charitable use, and if the subject-matter is land, or personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of land, it comes within the scope of the laws as to mortmain and charitable uses, and must comply with the provisions required by those laws unless it is within some exemption. If such assurance is to a corporation it must be under the authority of a licence from the Crown or of a statute for the

Benefactions

(h) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 55. The incumbent must also include the name of the office and the date and amount of the last annual payment in the return which he has to make under the Pluralities Act, 1838 (ibid., s. 55, and Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), Sched. I.).

(i) Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 43), s. 56.

(k) Ibid., s. 57.

(l) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 67.

(m) Ecclesiastical Houses of Residence Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 26), s. 11.

(n) See title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 112, 113. A gift of money upon trust to invest and pay the income to the incumbent of a church as long as no pew rents are charged is not void for perpetuity (Re Randell, Randell v. Dixon (18th 57 L. J. (OH.) 899).

(o) See title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 162.

(p) Charitable Trusts Act, 1863 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 46.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Augmentation of benefice.

time being in force (q), and, whether it is to a corporation or not, it must, in so far as it is not exempt (r), comply with the provisions required to be fulfilled in order to validate an assurance of land to charitable uses (r).

1501. The effective augmentation of the endowment of the incumbent of a benefice by means of a private benefaction may be enhanced whenever the benefaction consists of money or Government securities, or other securities approved by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or of land, house, tithe, or rentcharge (s), and exceeds £100 in value by the addition by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of an annuity payable half-yearly out of their common fund at the rate of £3 per annum for every £100 of the capital value of the benefaction, and similar grants are made to meet benefactions of not less than £100 for the provision or improvement of parsonage houses (t). The addition by the Commissioners takes the form of a grant of an equivalent capital sum, which in the case of any one benefice or proposed district may not be larger than £1,000, and which, with any part of the benefaction which is paid to the Commissioners in money, will, while in their hands, bear interest at £3 per cent. per annum, or may, in the case of an existing benefice, with the consent of the Commissioners and the bishop, be laid out in the purchase of land or hereditaments within the parish or district, or the purchase or erection or improvement, not already executed, of a parsonage house for the benefice.

Similar grants, not exceeding £60 per annum, are made to meet

(q) As to corporations and other bodies and persons having authority to accept assurances for ecclesiastical purposes, see pp. 792, 802, post.

(r) As to exemptions see p. 721, ante; and as to the laws relating to mortmain and charitable uses, see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 124 et seq. If a bequest is for a purpose which involves expenditure in building, as for building a parsonage, if there is land already in mortmain available as a site the bequest is valid (Cresswell v. Cresswell (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 69). Where an estate in a parish was admittedly liable to a rentcharge of £40 a year in favour of the vicar, and there was evidence from which it might be inferred that an additional £60 per annum had been claimed as of right, and paid for over a century, it was held that the estate was liable to a rentcharge for the full £100 a year (Robinson v. Smith (1908), 24 T. L. R. 573).

(s) A benefaction which is to be so met may be the gift of an individual, or of a number of contributors, or of a diocesan or other society, and may take either of the forms indicated above, or may consist of ground rents or chief rents, but must not include grants from Queen Anne's Bounty or benefactions met by such grants, money borrowed on mortgage of a benefice or arising from a sale of any property of a benefice or church, or land intended as a site for a church, burial ground, church hall, or mission room, or money to be expended in building a church, church hall, or mission room, a temporary or reversionary interest, or transfer or surrender of or charge on any revenues of an ecclesiastical corporation, a gift already secured for the benefit of a benefice or church, or any consideration given for the transfer of the patronage of an existing benefice. As to grants from Queen Anne's Bounty to meet benefactions, see p. 782, post.

(t) Applications for grants to be made in the ensuing year must be made not later than December 1st, and must contain an offer of a specific benefaction in favour of a benefice or proposed district; but where such proposed district is being formed under Acts administered by the Commissioners no grant will be made unless the scheme or representation has been sealed by the Commissioners on or before January 1st, or the benefaction or grant will raise the endowment to £150 per annum without, in the case of a Peel district, including the parsonage house. As to other augmentations of benefices and grants in aid of pensions by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, see p. 783, post.

benefactions of not less than £500 value towards the maintenance of assistant curates at stipends of not less than £120 in parishes or cures containing a population of not less than 5,000. Such a grant and benefaction are held for the permanent spiritual benefit of the parish or cure, and if, owing to material alteration in the circumstances, the Commissioners think right to withdraw the grant, they continue to hold the benefaction on the same trust.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

1502. Easter offerings are a well-known and widely recognised form of contributions to the emoluments of the clergy (a):

Easter
offerings.

By the rubric it is directed that yearly at Easter every parishioner shall reckon with the parson, vicar or curate, or his or their deputy or deputies, and pay to them or him all ecclesiastical duties accustomedly due then and at that time to be paid, and every person who by the laws or customs of the realm ought to make or pay any offering is bound, if he has not already paid in the preceding year, to pay at Easter (b).

Easter offerings are due of common right from every householder in the parish at the rate of twopence for every member of his family of sixteen years of age (c), unless a larger sum is due by custom (d), and where due they may be recovered summarily before two justices (e).

(a) Cooper v. Blakiston, [1907] 2 K. B. 688, 700, C. A. Even though they are not demanded as of right but are paid voluntarily, they are profits accruing to the incumbent by reason of his office, and as such are subject to income tax (ibid.; affirmed Blakiston v. Cooper, [1909] A. C. 104). Similarly, wherever a payment is received by an incumbent substantially in respect of his services as incumbent (Poynting v. Faulkner (1903), 93 L. T. 367, C. A.) without the fulfilment of any further condition on his part (Herbert v. McQuade, [1902] 2 K. B. 631, C. A.) it accrues to him by reason of his office, while if it is a gift of an exceptional kind having particular relation to him as an individual (Turner v. Cuzon (1888), 22 Q. B. D. 150; Turton v. Cooper (1903), 92 L. T. 863), such as a testimonial or a contribution for a specific purpose, as to provide for a holiday or a subscription peculiarly due to the personal qualities of the particular clergyman, it may be regarded not as a voluntary payment for services, but as a mere present (Blakiston v. Cooper, [1909] A. C. 104, 107), and therefore not subject to income tax. In computing the income of a benefice the Ecclesiastical Commissioners take into account income from all sources, including fees, pew rents, offertories and Easter offerings, while as to outgoings they follow the rule for estimating annual value in the Pluralities Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 98), s. 4, which provides that there shall be deducted from the gross amount of the income of a benefice all taxes, rates, tenths, dues, and permanent charges and outgoings, but not any stipend of a curate, nor such taxes or rates in respect of the house of residence or of the glebe as are usually paid by the occupier, nor moneys expended in the repair or improvement of the house of residence and buildings and premises belonging thereto. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners do not allow deductions in respect of income tax or property tax, or a pension to a retired incumbent, or instalments or interest in respect of a mortgage of the endowment.

(b) Stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, s. 10.

(c) Lawrence v. Jones (1724), 1 Hag. & Y. 801; Egerton v. Still (1726), Bunb. 198; Carthew v. Edwards (1749), 2 Hag. & Y. 121.

(d) R. v. Hall (1866), L. B. 1 Q. B. 632.

(e) Stat. (1695) 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 6. This statute and stat. 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, were repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 59), except as to tithes, offerings and duties which have not been commuted or are otherwise still payable. Easter offerings are expressly excepted from the law as to commutation of tithe (Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 90), unless a special provision relating to them was inserted in the parochial agreement, and stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, and stat. (1695) 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 6, remain in

SECT. 2

Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Surplice fees.

(ix.) Fees, Dues, and Offerings.

1503. In addition to the tithes, which were matter of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, fees have from very early times been recognised by custom as due for the performance of the services of the Church (f). In particular, fees, now called surplice fees, are recognised as due on the performance of those offices of the Church which are for the benefit of individual members of the Church (g), namely, marriages, churchings, and burials. On marriage, the bridegroom is directed by the rubric, when laying the ring upon the book, to lay with it the accustomed duty to the priest and clerk, and on being churched, the woman who comes to give her thanks is directed by the rubric to offer accustomed offerings. It is a law of the Church that no sacrament should be denied on account of non-payment of money, and neither must matrimony be hindered, nor must burial be denied (h), on account of the non-payment of the fee, but a moderate fee may be shown to be due by custom on marriage (i) or on burial (j), and where so shown to be due is recoverable (k). A table of fees may, with the consent of the bishop, be fixed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for any parish with the consent of the vestry, or persons exercising the powers of vestry or for any extra-parochial place, or in or for any district chapelry, or parochial chapelry, in which any church or chapel is built or appropriated under the Church Building Acts, and fees where so fixed are recoverable in the same manner as any ancient legal fees (l). When a new parish for ecclesiastical purposes is constituted under the New Parishes Acts, the chancellor of the diocese may fix the fees to be due for marriages, churchings, and burials in the church of such new parish (m).

forces in respect of such Easter offerings as are still payable. By the Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 9 (now repealed), it was provided that the landowners and tithe owners might at any time before confirmation include in the parochial agreement an agreement for the commutation of Easter offerings, mortuaries, or surplice fees. If the custom to pay a particular sum is bonâ fide disputed, the jurisdiction of the justices is ousted (R. v. Kidd (1867), 16 L. T. 203).

(f) In the time of King Alfred light scot, plough alms, and Rome scot were paid (Thorpe, Ancient Laws and Institutes, p. 73). In the time of Athelstan church scots and soul scots were payable at the places to which they rightly belonged, and plough alms yearly as a reward for serving the Church (ibid., p. 83). An ordinance of Ethelred and his witan provided that plough alms should be paid fifteen days after Easter and light scot thrice in the year (ibid., p. 131), and the Council of Ensham (1009) directed that soul scot should be paid at the grave, but that if the corpse was buried out of its proper district (ibid., p. 136) nevertheless soul scot should be paid to the minister to which it belonged.

(g) No fee is payable in respect of baptism (see p. 688, ante).

(h) Lynd. 278; Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 268; Vol. II., p. 480; and p. 712, ante.

(i) As to fees on marriage, see p. 707, ante.

(j) As to fees on burial, see also p. 712, ante.

(k) Bryant v. Foot (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 497, Ex. Ch.; Gilbert v. Buzzard and Boyer (1821), 2 Hag. Con. 333. Sir Simon Degge says that the accustomed fee to the parson for breaking the soil in the churchyard is for the most part 3s. 4d., and for breaking the floor in the chancel 6s. 8d. (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., 268).

(l) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 11; and see note (p), p. 712, ante.

(m) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 15.

1504. Every burial authority is required to submit to the Secretary of State a table of fees to be received in respect of services rendered by any minister of religion or sexton in their burial grounds (n).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Fees for monuments.

1505. In addition to the customary fee for burial, a fee may be due by custom to the rector or vicar for, allowing the erection of a monument in the church (o), and a charge may also be made by the parson, as owner of the freehold of the churchyard, for permitting the erection of a monument over a grave in the churchyard (p). It is in the power of the ordinary to permit or to refuse to permit the erection of such a monument, and a faculty will not be granted for the erection if the monument, or an inscription on it, tends to superstition or is contrary to the law and doctrine of the Church of England (q), and while the inscription is in the first instance subject to the control of the incumbent, any decision by him is subject to review by the ordinary (r). The payment demanded must not include any sum in respect of the ground occupied by the grave of a parishioner or person dying in the parish, nor of the performance of the office, but may take account of the particular place in the churchyard in which the burial is permitted or the longer occupation of the ground by reason of the nature of the monument or of the mode of burial (s).

1506. In the case of a person who is not a parishioner and neither lived nor died in the parish, a fee beyond the usual fee may be demanded for permission to be buried in the churchyard (t). In each of these cases the rector exacts the fee by virtue of the same right, namely, his right to the occupation of the soil of the churchyard, and he is, therefore, rateable in respect of such occupation (u).

On burial of nonparishioner.

1507. A faculty may be granted and a proper fee be demanded for the permanent placing of an urn containing the cremated ashes of a dead body in a niche formed for the purpose in the wall of a church, even though the church has been closed for burials (a). Fees may be fixed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of a burial service before, at, or after cremation, and if no

On cremation

(n) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 479. As to the law relating to such fees, and to the provisions as to fees in the Burial Acts, see ibid., pp. 428—432, 473—483.

(o) Rich v. Bushnell (1827), 4 Hag. Ecc. 164.

(p) Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, [1910] A. C. 7. See p. 730, ante; and title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 430.

(q) Egerton v. All of Odd Rode, [1894] P. 15; and see p. 672, ante.

(r) Pearson v. Stead, [1903] P. 66. Where the proceedings are civil in form, the burden lies on the person asking for a faculty confirmatory of the retention of an inscription to satisfy the court that it is unobjectionable (ibid., at p. 73).

(s) Andrews v. Cawthorne (1745), Willes, 536; affirmed on error (1748), Gilbert v. Buzzard and Boyer (1821), 2 Hag. Con. 333; as to the quantum of such a fee, see ibid., pp. 363 et seq.

(t) Nevill v. Bridger (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 214. No fee is due for burial of common right, but where a licence is required the parson may stand upon his own price (Exeter (Dean and Chapter) Case (1707), 1 Salk. 334).

(u) Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, supra.

(a) Re Kerr, [1894] P. 284.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Right to fees
of new districts.

fee is fixed the fee, if any, fixed in respect of a burial service applies (b).

1508. Provisions have been made in the various Acts under which new parishes or ecclesiastical districts are formed for preserving the rights to fees of existing incumbents of the mother church (c). Under the Church Building Acts the fees continue payable to the incumbent of the mother church until avoidance of the mother church, unless he receives compensation for or relinquishes them (d), except in the case of an endowed chapelry made into a separate parish in which the offices of the Church may be performed and the fees received by the incumbent of the new parish after separation (e); and in the case of a district chapelry formed under the Church Building Act, 1819, in which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, with the bishop's consent, determine how the fees shall be appropriated, until avoidance or relinquishment (f). When a benefice is separated by scheme under the Pluralities Act the fees, after avoidance or with the consent of the incumbent of the benefice affected before avoidance, may be given to the new benefice under the scheme (g). Under the New Parishes Acts, when a new parish is formed, the incumbent is entitled to perform all the offices and to take all the fees (h), but where the fees have been reserved or of right belong to the incumbent of the original parish, until the first avoidance or payment of compensation awarded by the bishop to or relinquishment of fees by such incumbent, the incumbent of the district is bound to receive and account for the fees (i) to the incumbent or incumbents out of whose parishes the district has been formed (k). In a Peel district, until a church is consecrated for the district, no burials or marriages can be performed nor fees taken for them (l), and the

(b) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 569.

(c) See pp. 445—450, ante. Until such rights have been legally transferred, any minister receiving fees at any chapel is accountable for them to the parson of the mother church (Moysey v. Hillcoat (1828), 2 Hag. Ecc. 30, 48; Liddell v. Rainesford (1868), 37 L. J. (ECCLES.) 83; King v. Alston (1848), 12 Q. B. 971; and see Inclosure Act, 1846 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 10).

(d) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 32; Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 12; Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 14; Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 18; Church Building (Banns and Marriages) Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 56), ss. 1, 2; Church Building Act 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 18; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), ss. 10, 15.

(e) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 23; Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 7.

(f) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 16. As to a consolidated chapelry under this Act, see ibid., s. 6, and Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 10.

(g) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 26; Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), ss. 6, 8.

(h) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 15; Fuller v. Alford (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 418.

(i) Ibid., s. 12.

(k) Jones v. Gough (1865), 3 Moo. P. O. C. (N. S.) 1; and see p. 450, ante.

(l) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 11. The incumbent of a chapel of a district chapelry must pay over the alms collected at an unconsecrated chapel within his district, notwithstanding that he has the exclusive cure of souls therein (Liddell v. Rainesford (1868), 38 L. J. (ECCLES.) 15).

incumbent can only take such fee as is specified in his licence for churchings (m).

1509. A fee is due to the incumbent for making a search in or an extract from the parochial registers of baptisms, marriages, and burials (n).

1510. In addition to Easter offerings, which have been already considered, other dues and offerings may be payable by custom. Any person who by law or custom is liable to pay any offerings must pay the same on the four offering days to the parson of the parish where he happens to dwell, or in default must pay them at Easter (o). Mortuaries or corse presents can only be demanded in places where they were payable by custom in 1529, and then only in respect of persons who have had their most usual habitation in the parish (p).

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Fees for search.
Customary
fees.

(x.) First Fruits and Tenths. Queen Anne's Bounty.

1511. First fruits, primitiæ, or annates, were the first year's whole profits of the spiritual preferment according to a valuation determined in 1292. Tenths, or decimæ, were the tenth part of the annual profit of each living by the same valuation (q).

First fruits and tenths.

The payment of any sum for annates to the Pope having been made illegal (r), the Crown was given the right to have from every person nominated, elected, presented, collated or otherwise appointed to any archbishopric, bishopric, college, archdeaconry, deanery, parsonage, vicarage, chauntry, free chapel, or other dignity, benefice, or spiritual promotion the first fruits, revenues, and profits for one year (s), and also one yearly rent or pension amounting to the tenth part of all the revenues, rents, farms, tithes, offerings, emoluments, and other profits, spiritual and temporal, belonging to any archbishopric, bishopric, archdeaconry, deanery, college, prebend, cathedral church, conventual church, parsonage, vicarage, chauntry, free chapel, or other benefice or spiritual promotion (t), and a new valuation was made (a), provided

(m) New Parishes Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 13.

(n) Parochial Registers Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 146), s. 16; Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 49. By s. 35 of the latter Act the fee for a search over a period of one year is 1*s.* and 6*d.* additional for every additional year, and the fee for a certificate is 2*s.* 6*d.*

(o) Stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, s. 10. The four offering days are Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, and the feast of the dedication of the church; as to the qualified repeal of this statute, see note (c), p. 775, ante.

(p) Stat. (1528) 21 Hen. 8, c. 6, s. 2. If the person dying leaves movable estate clear of debts worth less than 10 marks nothing is due, if 10 marks or over but less than 30 marks 3*s.* 4*d.* is paid; from 30 to 40 marks 6*s.* 8*d.*; and if 40 marks or over, 10*s.* is paid. See further title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 431, 432.

(q) First fruits and tenths were first introduced into this country by Pandulph, the Pope's Legate during the reigns of King John and Henry III. (1 Bl. Com. p. 284; Becheater (Bishop) v. Le Fanu, [1906] 2 Ch. 513).

(r) Stat. (1533—4) 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, s. 2.

(s) Stat. (1534) 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, s. 1.

(t) Ibid., s. 8.

(a) Ibid., s. 9. The names of the benefices liable will be found with few exceptions in Bacon's Liber Regis.

SMOT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

that for the first year the year's tenth is to be deducted from the first fruits (b). Exemptions have been granted to the Universities and to Eton and Winchester (c), and benefices with cure of souls not exceeding £50 per annum are discharged from the payment (d). The persons accountable become debtors to the Crown, and the debt is enforceable by writ of extent (e), but an incumbent can, if he so desires, enter into a bond with a surety to pay the sum due by four equal half-yearly instalments, commencing from the date of vacancy of the preferment, provided such bond is given immediately after presentation and before meddling with the profits of the preferment (f).

Queen Anne's Bounty.

1512. By letters patent passed pursuant to statute (g), and dated 3rd November, 1704, a corporation was established by the name of "The Governors of the Bounty of Queen Anne for the Augmentation of the Maintenance of the Poor Clergy," and to this corporation Queen Anne granted all her revenue of first fruits and tenths (h), which are collected by the treasurer of the Governors (i), who exercises all the powers of the collector and receiver formerly appointed by the Crown (k), including the power to compel payment of any amount due as a Crown debt (l).

(b) Stat. (1535—6) 27 Hen. 8, c. 8. The marginal note in Ruffhead's Statutes to s. 1, which runs, "No spiritual persons shall pay any tenths the same year they pay their first fruits," is misleading, since s. 3 expressly provides that they shall pay their tenths, and s. 1 provides that they may deduct the amount out of the first fruits.

(c) Stat. (1558—9) 1 Eliz. c. 4, s. 7.

(d) Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1706 (6 Ann. c. 24).

(e) Stat. (1541—2) 33 Hen. 8, c. 39, s. 37. This statute expressly mentions first fruits and tenths. As to the writ of extent, see title CROWN PRACTICE, Vol. X., pp. 14 et seq.

(f) Stat. (1534) 26 Hen. 8, c. 3; stat. (1558—9) 1 Eliz. c. 4. The bond is issued by the Bounty Office without any charge for costs, the only charge being for stamp duty.

(g) Stat. (1703) 2 & 3 Ann. c. 20. By letters patent which were passed under the Great Seal on November 3rd, 1704 (see s. 3 of Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), the Governors include the archbishops, bishops, including bishops of newly founded sees (Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 20), s. 16), deans, Speaker of the House of Commons, Master of the Rolls, Privy Councillors, lieutenants and custodes rotulorum of counties, judges, Attorney and Solicitor General, Advocate-General, chancellors and vice-chancellors of Oxford and Cambridge, mayor and aldermen of London, and by a supplemental charter, King's Counsel and the clerks of the Privy Council. The Governors are bound to hold one general meeting annually between February 1st and July 1st (Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 20), s. 17). They may recommend rules to be made by the Crown under the sign manual for the collection of first fruits and tenths (ibid., s. 19). Five of the members, of whom three at least must be archbishops or bishops, constitute a quorum, and suffice at any court for the conduct of business by a majority (Parsonages Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 69), s. 6).

(h) Rochester (Bishop) v. Le Fanu, [1906] 2 Ch. 513.

(i) Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1716 (3 Geo. 1, c. 10).

(k) Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 20), s. 4. The Governors have been advised by Treasury counsel that they have no power to forego these payments, or to alter or vary the amounts in any way.

(l) The first fruits and tenths, being Crown debts, are not affected by the Apportionment Act, and are not apportionable against the Crown (Rochester

By an Order in Council (m) first fruits have been commuted for an annual payment of £1 for every £100 of the annual value, and tenths for an annual sum of 17s. 6d. for every £100 of the annual income, and these annual sums represent a proportionate part of each year's income payable to the Crown, and as between the incoming and the outgoing holder must be regarded as accruing de die in diem (n).

In addition to first fruits and tenths, the Governors of the Bounty also receive such portion of the profits of a benefice sequestered for non-residence as the bishop orders to be paid to them for the purposes of the Bounty (o).

The Governors also, in numerous classes of cases, receive sums which are appropriated for the purpose of augmenting particular benefices (p).

1513. The primary object of the Bounty is the augmentation of the maintenance of parsons, vicars, curates, and ministers officiating in any church or chapel in England or Wales where the liturgy and rites of the Church of England are used and observed (q). By the letters patent the Governors are authorised to propose rules for the receiving, managing, and distributing the Bounty and any other gifts which might be given or bequeathed for the same purpose (r), and such rules become effectual when approved by the Crown under the sign manual (s). The rules in force are:—

No benefice is eligible for a grant the net income of which exceeds £200 per annum.

No grant can be made unless a church shall have been provided and consecrated; and the Governors require that a district shall have been assigned.

Each grant consists of a capital sum, the amount of which is determined by the number of applications under consideration and the amount of the Governors' available surplus revenue. No grant

SECT. 3.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

Objects of the Bounty.

Rules as to grants.

(Bishop) v. Le Fanu, [1906] 2 Ch. 513). The archbishops and bishops make half-yearly returns to the judges of the King's Bench Division of all institutions, and thereupon an application is made by the treasurer to the incumbents liable to first fruits. The yearly tenths become due on December 25th, and in accordance with the provisions of Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1716 (3 Geo. 1, c. 10), must be paid at the beginning of each year without other notice than that in the London Gazette.

(m) Made November 27th, 1852, pursuant to Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 20), s. 19.

(n) Rochester (Bishop) v. Le Fanu, supra.

(o) Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 54.

(p) For the proceeds of sales of parsonage houses and glebe, see p. 754, ante; for proceeds of redemption of tithes, p. 750, ante. Compensation money may be paid to the Governors under the Copyhold Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 46), for the use of any spiritual person in respect of any benefice or cure, which must be appropriated by the Governors for the augmentation of the benefice or cure (ibid., s. 7).

(q) Stat. (1703) 2 & 3 Ann. c. 20, s. 1.

(r) A benefaction may be offered and a grant sought for the following objects: (1) the augmentation of the endowment of a benefice; (2) providing, altering, or improving a parsonage; (3) the purchase of land or other real estate. As to grants for fixtures, see p. 782, post.

(s) Queen Anne's Bounty Act, 1714 (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 10), s. 3.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

can exceed the benefaction offered or be more than £600 in any one year (f).

In endowment cases no benefaction may consist of a less sum than £100, or land, tithe rentcharge etc. of the capital value of £100. In parsonage cases the minimum benefaction is £10.

The Governors do not make grants to meet grants by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, nor to meet benefactions which have been accepted by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

Money previously expended in or towards the building of a parsonage; standing on glebe, cannot be treated by the Governors as part of a benefaction.

Transfer of benefaction to Governors.

1514. On the Governors agreeing to make a grant the benefaction must be transferred to them on behalf of the benefice (a), and in cases where no grant is made any gift of personal or real estate in augmentation of a benefice may be transferred to them, and they may accept such gifts for the use or benefit of any church or chapel built, or to be built, under the Church Building Acts, or under any other authority, or for the use or benefit of the incumbent of, or the spiritual person serving, such church or chapel (b).

Grants for fixtures.

1515. The Governors also have power, where the net annual value of a benefice does not exceed £200, to make a grant for the purpose of acquiring for the benefice such movable fixtures in the parsonage house and premises as should in their opinion belong to it when such fixtures are the personal property of an incumbent or his representatives (c), and on such fixtures being so acquired they become part of the property of the benefice, and are liable to be surveyed for dilapidations.

Other powers
of the Governors.

1516. The Governors also have power to lend money for the improvement of residence houses (d), and to lend, receive, and expend money in respect of dilapidation of ecclesiastical property (e), and powers in relation to the approval of insurance of such property against fire and the receipt of the proceeds of such insurance (f). The Governors have also power to authorise an incumbent of an ecclesiastical benefice to exercise any of the powers which are conferred on him by the Agricultural Holdings Act as landlord in respect of any lands belonging to the

(f) The offer of a benefaction is absolutely necessary to secure a grant. Where the benefaction is derived from one of the special charities which augment benefices in conjunction with the Bounty, such benefaction must be supplemented by at least an equal sum from local or private sources.

(a) The whole transaction, both on such transfers and on a sale of glebe land, can be carried out through the Bounty office, so that the whole of the benefaction, without deduction on account of costs, may go for the benefit of the fund.

(b) Church Building Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 49), s. 12.

(c) A detailed list and valuation by the diocesan surveyor must be obtained at the cost of the incumbent applying for a grant and submitted to the Governors; one-half of the surveyor's charges may be included in the grant. No grant is made if the value of the fixtures is less than £10. If a grant is made, three lists of the fixtures purchased are made, one to be kept by the Bounty, one to be kept in the diocesan registry, and one to be kept in the parish chest.

(d) See p. 756, ante.

(e) See p. 759, ante.

(f) See p. 772, ante.

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical in
its Nature.

benefice (g), and to pay on his behalf out of money in their hands, if they think fit, to the tenant any compensation due to him under that Act (h), and to obtain from the county court a charge on the holding in respect thereof in favour of themselves, which is effectual notwithstanding any change of incumbent (i).

(xi.) Common Fund of Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

1517. All the moneys and revenues paid to, and all rents, profits of lands, tithes, and other hereditaments vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and all accumulations of interest arising therefrom, are, in so far as they are not allocated to specific purposes by statute, carried to a common fund (j), in order that additional provision may be made by the Commissioners for the cure of souls in parishes where such assistance is most required in such manner as may be deemed most conducive to the efficiency of the Established Church (k), due regard being had to the wants and circumstances of the places in which such tithes arose or in which lands or hereditaments are situate which are or have been vested in the Commissioners or from which they have derived any income (l).

Common
fund.

Such provision may be made not only by payments or investments out of the fund, but by an actual assignment of lands, tithes, or hereditaments (m), and preference may be given without prejudice

(g) Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 40 (2). The incumbent may also exercise such powers, with the previous approval in writing of the patron of the benefice, and he may enter for the purpose of viewing the state of the holding without any previous authorisation (ibid., s. 40 (1)).

(h) Ibid., s. 40 (3).

(i) Ibid., ss. 15, 16.

(j) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 67.

(k) The provision of grants out of the common fund to meet benefactions has been dealt with (see p. 774, ante). The Commissioners have framed a scheme for making grants in aid of pensions for retired incumbents with the view of facilitating retirements in proper cases, not merely by increasing the provision for retiring incumbents (see p. 629, ante), but also by lightening the burdens imposed upon benefices by the charges for pensions. The grants, which must be met by an equivalent additional provision apart from any pension out of the benefice, are confined to cases of retirement under the Incumbents Resignation Acts, 1871 and 1887 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44; 50 & 51 Vict. c. 23) (see p. 630, ante), and to cases in which the value of the benefice when diminished by the pension charged under these Acts is not greater than £300. The grant does not exceed £50, in each case, and where the value of the benefice as diminished by the pension charged on it is not less than £250, the whole grant is paid to the retired incumbent; where such value is less than £250 the grant is apportioned, such part not exceeding two-fifths as will rest on the value as diminished to £250 or to the value as undiminished by the charge if less than £250, being applied to increase the income of the benefice. Where the value as diminished by the charge is less than £150, an additional grant may be made sufficient to restore the income to £150, or to the value as undiminished by the charge if less than £150. The required additional provision to meet the grant may be made by a grant of an annuity from the Clergy Pensions Institution or other society approved by the Commissioners, whether purchased by the retired incumbent or not, or by an assured annual contribution from a diocesan fund.

The Commissioners have also framed a scheme for the augmentation of benefices in public patronage where the population exceeds 6,000 and the income is less than £300, or where the population is not less than 500 and the income is less than £200.

(l) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), s. 12. The fund is not applicable for the benefit of the diocese of Sodor and Man.

(m) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 67.

SECT. 2.
Property
Eccle-
siastical in
its Nature.

to the considerations above mentioned to places in respect of which contributions from other sources are made (n), and such grants to meet benefactions may in mining districts be, for the purpose of making temporary provision for the cure of souls (o).

The moneys and revenues received by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners do not include any moneys provided by Parliament, and are derived solely from properties vested in or transferred to them for the benefit of the Church of England (p).

SECT. 3:—Property Ecclesiastical by reason of its Ownership.

Property owned by ecclesiastical person.

1518. Property which is owned by any person in the capacity of a representative of the Church of England is ecclesiastical property (q). The capacity in which a person owns property may be limited by reference to the spiritual functions to be performed on behalf of a church not only by limiting the functions of such person, but also by limiting the relation between the person owning anything and the thing owned, and where such relation arises out of and can be defined by reference to spiritual functions to be performed on behalf of the Church of England, the property is owned by the person in the capacity of a representative of the Church of England, and is ecclesiastical property.

Thus, ecclesiastical property includes every legal right and every description of property which is vested in any person for the purpose of furthering the spiritual work of the Church, such as the right to levy a church rate, the right to demand pew rents, and buildings or other property conveyed upon trust to be used for furthering the spiritual work of a parish or of the Church at large.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Church Rates.

Church rates.

1519. As the churchwardens have various duties imposed on them which involve the expenditure of money on behalf of the (n) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), s. 14; and see p. 774, ante.

(o) Ibid., s. 15.

(p) During the first half of the nineteenth century grants for ecclesiastical purposes were made by Parliament not only in connection with the Church of England, but also towards the support of dissenting ministers both in England and Ireland. From the year 1804 (see stat. 44 Geo. 3, c. 110, s. 19) to the year 1843 (see stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 99, s. 21) the Appropriation Act included provision for allowances to Protestant dissenting ministers. In the year 1818, as a thank-offering for the successful close of the Napoleonic war, a sum of one million pounds was provided by Parliament for the purpose of erecting and maintaining for the celebration of divine service according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland additional churches and chapels containing a certain number of free seats in great and populous parishes, and extra-parochial places where the church accommodation was inadequate for the inhabitants, and a body of Church Building Commissioners was constituted to administer the fund and any private benefactions contributed for the same purpose (Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45)), and, this grant having proved inadequate for the purpose, an additional sum of half a million was voted in the year 1824 (Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103)). The powers and duties of Church Building Commissioners are now exercised by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; see p. 801, post.

(q) St. George's, Hanover Square (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Westminster Corporation (1910), 26 T. L. R. 327, H. L.; reversing [1909] 1 Ch. 592, C. A. See also p. 713, ante.

parish, it is the duty of the parishioners who are members of the Church of England to provide them with the funds so required, and it is the duty of the churchwardens to take all reasonable steps to obtain such funds. The regular mode by which the parishioners and churchwardens may perform their duties in so far as the required funds are not otherwise provided is by making and levying a church rate (r). Such a rate cannot be recovered by legal process (s) except in case (1) where a rate called a church rate is in fact applicable to secular purposes (t); (2) where a sum of money was on the 31st July, 1868, due on the security of church rates or of rates in the nature of church rates, or any money in the name of church rates was ordered to be raised under the provisions of any statute (a); or (3) where, under the authority of any private or local Act of Parliament, church rates may be levied in consideration of the extinguishment or appropriation to other purposes of any property previously appropriated to ecclesiastical purposes, or upon any contract made or for good consideration given (b); but the making of a rate affords to the churchwardens the means of informing each parishioner of the amount of money required, and of what is the share of that amount which, according to the law of the Church of England, he may reasonably be expected to pay.

When such a rate becomes necessary the churchwardens lay before the parish in vestry assembled an estimate of the amount which they require for the due performance of their duties, and the vestry thereupon make a rate which is assessed on the parishioners who are members of the Church of England in proportion to their rateable value. Although such a rate cannot be enforced except in the cases above mentioned, yet in all other respects the rate is valid, and the inhabitants of any district legally constituted out of a parish and having within it a consecrated church used for divine worship may make and assess themselves to a rate in relation to their church instead of joining in and being assessed to a rate in relation to the parish church (c). Any person refusing to pay a church rate is precluded from exercising any right in respect of the expenditure of such rate, and when an occupier refuses to pay, the owner may pay and become entitled to stand in the occupier's place (d). All bodies

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason of its Ownership.

Making of rate.

(r) As a church rate applicable to ecclesiastical purposes can no longer be recovered by legal process, the necessity for considering the numerous points which have been raised in cases as to the legal validity or recovery of such rates no longer exists. For the law as to meetings of a vestry for ecclesiastical purposes, such as the making of a church rate, see pp. 453 et seq., ante.

(a) Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109), s. 1.

(c) Ibid., s. 2. If it is made in part for ecclesiastical and in part for secular purposes it may be good as to the secular part and bad as to the rest (Watson v. All Saints, Poplar, Vestry (1882), 46 L. T. 201).

(a) Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109), s. 3.

(b) Ibid., s. 5. "Ecclesiastical purposes" is defined to mean the building, rebuilding, enlargement, and repair of any church or chapel and any purpose to which by common or ecclesiastical law a church rate is applicable or any of such purposes, and "church rate" means any rate for ecclesiastical purposes as so defined (ibid., s. 10). The contract made or the consideration given must be found in or gathered from the Act which authorises the levy (ll. v. St. Marylebone Vestry, [1895] 1 Q. B. 771, O. A.).

(c) Ibid., s. 6.

(d) Ibid., s. 8.

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason
of its Ownership.

corporate, trustees, guardians, and committees who, or whose cestuis que trustent, are occupiers of property may pay any church rate made in respect of such property (e). In parishes where, by reason of a local Act, a church rate may still be recovered, it stands upon the same footing as an ordinary rate (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Pew Rents.

Pew rents.

1520. There is no right by the common law to let or sell any seat or pew in a church (g), but express power has in many cases been given by statute to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or other bodies or persons to fix a scale of payment to be received for sittings or pews in certain churches and chapels in order to provide funds for repaying the expense of building or for maintaining the ministrations of the Church in connection therewith. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may fix a scale of pew rents to be charged in any church or chapel in aid of the building of which they have made a grant either in a district parish (h) or in a consolidated (i) or district chapelry, or with the consent of the bishop if sufficient funds cannot be provided from other sources in parochial districts or new parishes formed after July, 1856 (k).

Disposal of sittings.

Before consecration of any church or chapel built under the Church Building Acts (l), ten sittings for which no charge is to be made are assigned to the minister, and one-fifth of the sittings are to be marked with the words "free seats" (m), and thereafter the remainder of the sittings may be disposed of privately (n) to parishioners with a preference to subscribers (o) to the building, who may be discharged from the payment of rent for life (p), and where no parishioner desires to take sittings, then to parishioners of adjoining parishes (q).

Readjustment on union of benefices.

1521. Upon any union of benefices the bishop is required by faculty to alter and readjust the seats and the appropriation thereof in the church of the united benefice, so that not less than one-half

(e) Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109), s. 7.

(f) Rose v. Watson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 90. It can be recovered although the rector for whom it makes provision no longer performs duties within the parish (Hay's Wharf, Ltd. v. St. Olave's, Southwark, Rectors Rate (Trustees) (1909), 25 T. L. R. 648).

(g) See p. 471, ante.

(h) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 63.

(i) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), ss. 6, 15; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 11.

(k) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 6.

(l) The same rules apply to a church built by subscription under the Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), s. 10.

(m) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 75; see also Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), s. 10.

(n) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 32.

(o) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 76.

(p) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 33; Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 21.

(q) Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 24. A pew so let must be advertised as vacant at the end of each year in case a parishioner desires to take it (ibid.).

of the sittings are left unappropriated, and all the seats are to be made as near as possible of the same size and appearance (r).

SECT. 8.
Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason of the Ownership.

Payment
of rents.
Alteration
of rents.

1522. Pew rents are payable in advance (s), and in case of non-payment of such rents of any pew or seat the wardens of the church or chapel may enter upon and sell the same, or may bring an action for the rents (t). Pew rents in any church or chapel provided under the Church Building Acts may be altered by the church or chapel wardens, with the consents of the bishop, patron, and incumbent, and, where the pew rents have been assigned to the parish, with the consent of the vestry (a). Under the New Parishes Act, 1856, the Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop, may make an alteration in any instrument fixing pew rents under that Act to take effect on avoidance, or with the consent of the incumbent (b).

1523. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop, may apply part or the whole of any surplus pew rents, not invested for a fund for building or providing a residence, to augment the stipend of the minister (c), and may declare that any pew rents fixed by them shall cease in the whole or part of a church or chapel where such pew rents have not been assigned or appropriated under any local Act, if a permanent endowment has been provided in lieu of such pew rents which is satisfactory to them and the bishop, and thereafter the seats are at the disposal of the wardens, as in a parish church (d), or they may with the like consent, where a permanent endowment is provided and the pew rents are not appropriated by law for any specific purpose, either make a reduction in the scale of charge or declare certain sittings to be free (e).

Application of surplus.

1524. Where a new church is made the parish church and the old church becomes a district church or chapel of ease, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, with the consent of the bishop, make such provision as they think fit out of the pew rents of either church for the maintenance of the minister and clerk of the respective churches (f), and revoke or alter such provision from time to time (g).

Allocation between old and new
church.

(r) Union of Benefices Acts Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 90), s. 7.

(s) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3. c. 134), s. 32.

(t) Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), s. 16. Under the Church Building Acts such action may be brought in the name of "the churchwardens of the church or chapel of X." without giving the names of the churchwardens (Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 73).

(a) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 78; Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 31. In a church built by subscribers under the Church Building Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 103), s. 15, a surplus of pew rents is applied to a rateable reduction or to making seats free as the bishop directs.

(b) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 8.

(c) Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 5.

(d) Church Building Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 97), s. 1.

(e) New Parishes Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 7.

(f) Church Building Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 107), s. 18; Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 1.

(g) New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 65), s. 4.

SECT. 3.

Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason
of its Ownership.

Payment of stipend.

1525. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the consent of the bishop (h), may assign a stipend to the minister or clerk to be paid out of the pew rents, but the parish is not liable to pay more than the amount of rent actually received in the preceding year (i). A duty is imposed on the churchwardens to pay over the pew rents applicable to the stipend accrued due to the minister as soon as they are received (k). Surplus pew rents above such stipend are to be accumulated to form a fund to be used for the purchase of a house of residence, and after the completion of such purpose for the augmentation of the stipend or the reduction of the pew rents or the increase of the accommodation as directed by the bishop, or if the Commissioners think fit, are to be chargeable with money raised for the purpose of building or repairing a church or chapel, or purchasing a site therefor (l).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Chapels, Mission Rooms, Sunday Schools, and other Buildings.

Chapel.

1526. The word "chapel" is commonly applied to any building habitually used for the purpose of divine worship, whether in connection with the Church of England or not (m), but in strict legal parlance a chapel is a building consecrated (n) for the purposes of divine worship in accordance with the tenets of the Church of England (o) other than the church of a parish or the cathedral church of a diocese (p).

(h) In case of difference between the Commissioners and the bishop the amount is to be settled by the Archbishop (Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 64).

(i) Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), s. 64; Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 26.

(k) Lloyd v. Burrough (1868), L. R. 4 Exch. 63. This duty does not extend to the payment over of pew rents received in advance until the stipend in respect of which they ought to be paid over has accrued due (ibid.).

(l) Church Building Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 134), s. 27.

(m) Thus, the Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14), entitles the Act for the regulation of suits relating to meeting-houses and other property held for religious purposes by persons dissenting from the Church of England and Ireland (7 & 8 Vict. c. 45) the Nonconformists Chapels Act, 1844. In Hornsey Local Board v. Bowers (1890), 60 L. J. (M. C.) 48, the court apparently assumed that the Nonconformist meeting-house to which the case referred was capable of being a "chapel."

(n) The word "chapel" is derived from capella, a little cloak. The capella or cloak of St. Martin, preserved by the Frankish kings as a sacred relic, was borne before them in battle and used to give sanctity to oaths, and hence the name was applied to any sanctuary or holy place used for worship not being a church. In earlier times it was always consecrated (New English Dictionary, sub nom. "Chapel"). Private chapels were anciently all consecrated by the bishop of the diocese and ought to be so still (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 296).

(o) The legal meaning of the term "chapel" is a chapel of the Church of England (Caiger v. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry (1881), 50 L. J. (M. C.) 59). The New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 94), s. 14, defines the meaning of "church" and "chapel" in that Act as applying only to churches and chapels of the Established Church of England, and therefore, seeing that it applies to a "chapel consecrated or unconsecrated" (ibid., s. 2), seems to imply that a building may be legally a chapel of the Church of England although it is not consecrated.

(p) A chapel may be annexed to or form part of the structure of a parish church or cathedral church, and where this is the case the question whether it does or does not form part of such church is one of fact to be decided by

A chapel may have a district attached to it called a chapelry (q), or it may be built for the convenience in prayer and preaching only of parishioners who live far from the parish church, in which case it is called a chapel of ease (r). A chapel which has an ancient division of a parish attached to it by immemorial custom, with the parochial rights of christening and burying, is a parochial chapel (s).

SECT. 3.
Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason
of its Ownership.

1527. A chapel of ease can only be erected with the consent of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent (t), and the person serving such chapel is, unless some exceptional provision applies, subordinate to the incumbent of the mother church (u), to which church all the rights of performing the sacraments appertain,* but, as already stated, such a chapel may by virtue of statutory provisions be separately endowed and have an ecclesiastical district assigned to it, and become either the church of a distinct and separate parish or the chapel of such district (b).

Chapel of ease.

A chapel may be founded by the King, or by a subject specially authorised by him, without being subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary. A chapel so founded is called a free chapel (c).

Free chapel.

1528. Private chapels are such as persons have at their own charge built in or near their own houses for them and their families to perform religious duties in (d). They are repaired and maintained at the expense of the person to whom they belong, who may appoint whom he pleases to minister there, provided that divine service may not be performed there without the consent of the bishop (e), and that the owner and his family must once in every year receive the communion at the parish church (f).

Private
chapel.

The attendance at divine worship in a private chapel need not be confined to the members of the family of the owner (g),

Proprietary
chapel.

reference to the history of the foundation (Norfolk (Duke) v. Arbutnot (1880), 5 C. P. D. 390, C. A.). Where it does form part of such church and is intended to be separately used for the performance of divine worship and of the sacraments, it should be physically separated from the aisle of the church (St. Peter's, Eaton Square (Vicar etc.) v. Parishioners of Same, [1894] P. 350).

(q) A chapelry is the same thing to a chapel as a parish to a church, being the precinct and limits thereof. It is mentioned in stat. (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 9 (Jacob, Law Dictionary, sub nom. "Chapelry").

(r) Jacob, Law Dictionary, sub nom. "Chapel." In such case sacraments and burials ought to be performed in the parish church (2 Roll. Abr. 340; Selden, History of Titles, 267).

(s) A parochial chapelry must be coeval with the parish, but its existence may be inferred from modern usage, provided such usage is immemorial (Carr v. Mostyn (1850), 5 Exch. 69).

(t) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 301.

(u) See p. 646, ante.

(b) See pp. 446, 447, ante.

(c) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 298; and see p. 652, ante.

(d) Ibid., p. 296.

(e) Ibid., p. 297.

(f) Canon 71.

(g) Open Prayer, in the Act for Uniformity of Service and Administration of Sacraments, 1548, is defined as meaning that prayer which is for others to come unto or hear either in common churches or private chapels or oratories (stat. (1548) 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 2).

SECT. 8.

Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason
of its Ownership.

and any person or several persons together may provide a building for the purpose of celebrating divine worship and the sacraments for the benefit of such persons as desire to attend and the proprietors of the building are willing to admit (h). Such a building is commonly called a proprietary chapel. It need not necessarily be consecrated (i). The sanction for the performance of divine service by a minister of the Church of England therein can in England only be derived from a licence from the bishop, given with the consent of the incumbent of the parish and valid during his incumbency (k), but not beyond it (l).

Chapels in Wales.

In Wales, wherever ten or more inhabitants in any parish, district, or place certify to the bishop that they desire to have divine service and the sacraments administered in the English tongue, and undertake to provide a building to be used as a chapel for the purpose, and to provide for a minister and for other expenses, the bishop may license any building so provided from year to year, or for a term not exceeding two years, as a chapel, the minister being nominated by the incumbent of the parish, district, or place, or in case of the incumbent's failure to nominate, or of dispute, being nominated by the bishop subject to an appeal to the archbishop (m).

Chapel of
army district.

1529. Where an extra-parochial district is formed in connection with an army station, a chapel may be consecrated as the chapel of such district (n), or an unconsecrated building may be certified by a Secretary of State to the bishop of the diocese as used, or intended to be used, by His Majesty's forces as an unconsecrated chapel (o).

School
chapel.

1530. The chapel of any one of the great public schools (p), and the chapel of any other endowed school if it is consecrated or authorised in writing by the bishop to be used as a chapel for such school (q), may be used for the performance of public worship and the administration of the sacraments free from the control of the incumbent of the parish.

Mission room.

1531. An unconsecrated building may be used by the incumbent of a parish or with his authority as a place of assembly for the purpose of religious worship in accordance with the liturgy of the Church of England (r). When an unconsecrated building is habitually so used, it is commonly called a "mission room." Buildings used for this and for cognate purposes, such as Sunday schools, and parish halls or rooms, and parochial schools, are (h) The proprietors may refuse to admit any one at their discretion (Bosanquet v. Heath (1860), 3 L. T. 290).

(i) Hodgson v. Dillon (1840), 2 Curt. 388.

(k) See pp. 662, 663, ante.

(l) See p. 647, ante.

(m) Church Services (Wales) Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 82).

(n) Army Chaplains Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 83), s. 7.

(o) Ibid., s. 8; and see p. 647, ante.

(p) Public Schools Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 118), s. 31; and see p. 651, ante.

(q) Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), s. 53.

(r) Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86), s. 1; and as to the necessity of the licence of the bishop, see p. 662, ante.

ecclesiastical property, if the purpose for which they were founded or built is a spiritual purpose (s). Where the question whether such purpose is a spiritual purpose can be answered by reference to a trust deed or deeds relating to such property, it must be so answered, but in many cases (t) there is either no trust deed or the terms of such deed cannot be ascertained or are insufficient to determine the purpose, and in such cases the question must be answered by reference to the history of the foundation of the charity or of the erection of the building, and this history if otherwise in doubt must be ascertained by reference to the purposes for which the property has in fact been used (a).

SECT. 2.
Property
Ecclesiastical
by reason
of its Ownership.

1532. The exemption from rates which applies to all consecrated churches and chapels does not extend to other buildings used for parochial purposes, which are capable of being let at a rent, but no person is liable to be rated or to pay any poor rate in respect of any church, chapel, or premises exclusively appropriated to public religious worship in accordance with the liturgy of the Church of England on the ground that they or any vestry rooms belonging to them are used for charitable education (b), and any rating authority may exempt any Sunday school (that is, any school used without any pecuniary benefit being derived therefrom for giving religious

Exemption
from rates.

Sunday school.

(s) See pp. 713, 784, ante.

(t) Parochial property, whether held for ecclesiastical or secular purposes, was formerly vested in the churchwardens and overseers on behalf of the parish and was dealt with by them by the direction of the inhabitants in vestry assembled with the consent in cases of alienation of two justices (Poor Relief Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 12), ss. 8, 9 (now repealed); and see title POOR LAW). By the Union and Parish Property Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69), powers of dealing with parochial property held for poor law purposes was given to the overseers and guardians, and by the School Sites Acts power was given to grant land held for parochial purposes to trustees to be held for the purposes of the School Sites Acts, which include religious education of children and adults and theological training (see School Sites Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), s. 6; School Sites Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 49)). By the Church Building Acts the commissioners under those Acts had power to appropriate any land given gratuitously with the consent of the grantor (Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), s. 34; see also School Sites Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), s. 19), or any land for which they had given valuable consideration (Church Building Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 60), s. 19), to any ecclesiastical purpose or for the purpose of any parochial or charitable school or any other charitable or public purpose relating to the parish or place concerned. The result of these and other enactments giving similar powers is that until the division of parochial charities into ecclesiastical charities and non-ecclesiastical charities was effected by the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), and the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14) (see note (c), p. 355, ante), the nature of a parochial charity could not in general be ascertained by reference to the persons in whom the property was vested, and as the former Act did not affect the trusteeship, management, or control of any elementary school (Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 66), the question whether such a school is or is not an ecclesiastical charity has in general been unaffected by it and remains undetermined. See title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 155.

(a) The printed reports of the Charity Commissioners appointed in 1818 are prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated (Charitable Trusts (Recovery) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 17), s. 5). As to schools, see Education Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 42), s. 11 (4); and title EDUCATION.

(b) Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 37), s. 2. See title RATES AND RATING.

SECT. 3. education on Sundays, and on weekdays for the holding of classes and meetings in furtherance of the same object)(c), and must exempt any voluntary school(d) (that is, any public elementary school not provided by a local education authority)(e), from the payment of rates.

Property Ecclesiastical by reason of its Ownership.

SECT. 4.—Ecclesiastical Persons and Corporations as Owners of Property.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Ecclesiastical persons as owners of property.

1533. Property which is owned by a person solely in the capacity of a representative of the Church of England is ecclesiastical property—that is to say, whenever the relation between the person owning property and the thing owned arises out of and can be defined by reference to the person regarded as performing spiritual functions on behalf of the Church of England, the property is ecclesiastical property(f). Thus, property may be affected with an ecclesiastical character by being vested in a person or succession of persons as trustees thereof for spiritual purposes(g). So far as the relation of the owner to the thing owned is concerned, a corporation is within the limits of its powers as capable of standing in that relation as a person or body of persons(h), and having regard to the necessity of securing that property given for the purpose of promoting the performance of particular functions shall be permanently devoted to that purpose, and the impossibility of any individual holder of an office affording such permanent security(i), ecclesiastical property is in general vested in an ecclesiastical corporation recognised by the law as having a permanent capacity in right of some office or function of holding property, and thereby securing that it shall be applied to the purpose intended(k).

Ecclesiastical corporations.

1534. A corporation sole which is recognised by the law as having perpetual succession in right of an office or function of a spiritual character is an ecclesiastical corporation(l). A corporation aggregate which is constituted for a spiritual purpose is an ecclesiastical corporation(m).

(c) Sunday and Ragged Schools (Exemption from Rating) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 40).

(d) Voluntary Schools Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 5), s. 3.

(e) Ibid., s. 4. See title EDUCATION.

(f) St. George's Hanover Square (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Westminster Corporation (1910), 26 T. L. R. 327, H. L., reversing [1909] 1 Ch. 592, C. A. See also p. 713, ante.

(g) It does not necessarily follow that the person in whom the property is so vested is an owner thereof for the purposes of the Metropolis Management Acts (Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714).

(h) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), ss. 2 and 19. A body corporate is capable of acquiring and holding any real or personal property in joint tenancy as if it were an individual (Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20).

(i) 1 Bl. Com., p. 470.

(k) See title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 301, 305.

(l) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, 8th ed., Vol. II., p. 30.

(m) It is not the description of the persons who are the members of a corporation, but the purpose of its institution, which characterises it to be a lay or a

All ecclesiastical corporations, whether sole or aggregate, are public, that is, they do not aim only at private objects but contemplate some benefit to the public or the undertaking some public duty or responsibility (n).

SECT. 4.
Ecclesiastical
Persons etc
as Owners
of Property.

1535. Archbishops, bishops, some deans, prebendaries, vicars choral (o), canons (p), all archdeacons (q), parsons, including rectors and vicars and perpetual curates, are corporations sole (r). They are all ecclesiastical corporations excepting a rector while the rectory is in lay hands (a).

Ecclesiastical
corporations
sole

1536. A corporation aggregate may be either composed of constituent parts not essentially different, or it may be a body with one or more members or classes of members essentially differing from other members (b). Any of the constituent members may themselves be corporations (c), and where the members are entirely spiritual, that is to say, where they are members solely in their spiritual capacities, the corporation is an ecclesiastical corporation (d); but even where the members are all spiritual persons, unless they are such in an entirely spiritual capacity, the corporation is not ecclesiastical unless the intention of its foundation is spiritual (e).

Ecclesiastical
corporations
aggregate.

Chapters of cathedrals are ecclesiastical corporations aggregate (f), as are also colleges or corporations of vicars choral, priest vicars, senior vicars, custos and vicars, or minor canons (g), which are expressly excepted from the powers of leasing given by the Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts to ecclesiastical corporations in general. A hospital may be an ecclesiastical corporation (h); the question, whether it is so or not depends upon the object for which it is founded (i).

1537. A body corporate of church trustees may be appointed in any parish for the purpose of receiving and holding any property for trustees.

Church

spiritual foundation (Kyd on Corporations, Vol. I., p. 23). See also Hargraves, note to 1 Bl. Com. 470.

(n) Grant, Law of Corporations, p. 9.

(o) See title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 306.

(p) See p. 427, ante.

(q) 1 Bl. Com. 470.

(r) See p. 563, ante.

(a) See p. 718, ante, and pp. 801, 802, post.

(b) See title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 305.

(c) Thus a dean and chapter is a corporation aggregate, while the canons are, and the dean may be, a corporation sole.

(d) Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, 8th ed., Vol. II., p. 30.

(e) See note (m), p. 792, ante; A.-G. v. St. Cross Hospital (1853), 17 Beav. 435.

(f) As to their constitution, see pp. 423—425, ante; and as to their patronage, see p. 426, ante.

(g) Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108), s. 1.

(h) Ibid.

(i) A.-G. v. St. Cross Hospital, supra. By the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 65, the Commissioners are required to inquire and report as to all hospitals which were returned as promotious spiritual in the reign of Henry VIII., and to make suggestions for affording a better provision for the cure of souls within the parishes with which they were connected in cases where there was a surplus available after satisfying the founder's bounty.

SECT. 4.
Ecclesiastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

ecclesiastical purposes in the parish (k), and the trustees of any charity for religious charitable purposes may apply to the Charity Commissioners to be registered as a corporate body, and, if the Charity Commissioners deem expedient, may thereupon become a body corporate (l). Churchwardens are for some purposes a corporation (m), and the minister and churchwardens of a parish or ecclesiastical district are also for some purposes a corporation (n).

Leases by
ecclesiastical
corporations.

1538. Ecclesiastical corporations, sole or aggregate, may, excepting those above mentioned as excepted, grant building leases not exceeding ninety-nine years and mining leases not exceeding sixty years (o), and may, with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, sell, exchange, or enfranchise any of their lands (p).

SUB-SECT. 2.—The Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

(i.) Constitution.

Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

1539. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners (q) are a corporate body constituted by Act of Parliament for the purpose in the first instance of laying before the King in Council such schemes as appeared to them best adapted for carrying into effect the recommendations made by two commissions which had been appointed to consider the amount of the revenues and the duties assigned to the episcopal sees and the state of the cathedral and collegiate churches in England and Wales and had suggested measures to render them more conducive to the efficiency of the Established Church and to provide in the best mode for the cure of souls, with special reference to the residence of the clergy in their benefices (r).

The members of the corporation, originally thirteen in number (s),

k) See p. 474, ante.

l) Charitable Trustees Incorporation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 24).

m) See p. 465, ante.

n) See the School Sites Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), s. 7, amended by the School Sites Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 37), s. 4; and see title EDUCATION. In the City of London the minister and churchwardens are by custom always a corporation.

o) See Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108), amended by Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1857 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 57); and pp. 762—764, ante.

p) Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 104), amended by Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 116), and Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124).

q) In any Act the expression "Ecclesiastical Commissioners" means the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England for the time being (Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 12 (16)).

r) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 17), s. 1. For an account of the royal commissions of inquiry into the state of the various dioceses in England and Wales, their revenues and the distribution of episcopal duties, and other ecclesiastical matters, which preceded the establishment of the Ecclesiastical Commission, and the reports and recommendations of those commissions, see the preamble to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77). The object of the first Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts of 1836 and 1840 was to carry out the recommendations above referred to; the subsequent Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts have gone far beyond the recommendations of the early commissions. For the existing functions of the Commissioners, see pp. 796—801, post.

s) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 1, were subsequently added to (t), and now consist of the following spiritual and lay persons, the majority being ex officio, namely, the two archbishops, all the bishops of England and Wales, and the deans of Canterbury, St. Paul's, and Westminster, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, the First Lord of the Treasury, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, a principal Secretary of State nominated by the Sovereign, the Lord Chief Justice and the Master of the Rolls, and the two judges of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division. The Sovereign has also power to appoint seven, and the Archbishop of Canterbury two, lay persons as commissioners (a).

Sect. 4.
Ecclesiastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

1540. Three other Ecclesiastical Commissioners were subsequently added, styled Church Estates Commissioners—two appointed by the Crown, by the title of First and Second Church Estates Commissioners, and one by the Archbishop of Canterbury (b).

Church
Estates
Commissioners.

Any non-official Ecclesiastical Commissioner may be appointed a Church Estates Commissioner. Removal from or resignation of the office of Church Estates Commissioner does not ipso facto involve loss of office as Ecclesiastical Commissioner (c).

1541. The Church Estates Commissioners are constituted a committee of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and styled "The Estates Committee." The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may appoint annually, in the month of February, two members of the corporation, one of whom at least shall be a non ex-officio member, to be members of the Estates Committee in addition to the other Church Estates Commissioners, to hold office for a year and to be capable of being re-appointed (d).

The Estates
Committee.

Any two members of the Estates Committee may do all acts required by law to be done by the committee (e), and any two Church Estates Commissioners may do all acts required by law to be done by the Church Estates Commissioners (f).

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may from time to time make general rules, which shall be laid before Parliament, for the direction of the Estates Committee relating to the business to be transacted by

(t) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 78.

(a) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77) s. 1; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 78. The holders of certain other judicial offices, since abolished, were also made Commissioners by the latter Act.

(b) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 1. Publication in the London Gazette of the notice of the appointment of a Church Estates Commissioner is conclusive evidence of the fact (Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 46), s. 2). As to the salaries of the Church Estates Commissioners, which are payable out of the common fund, see Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 2. The first Church Estates Commissioner may sit if elected in the House of Commons (ibid., s. 3).

(c) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 1.

(d) Ibid., s. 7. See ibid., s. 9, for appointment of chairman of this committee. He has a casting vote in case of equality.

(e) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 2. See Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 10.

(f) Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 46), s. 1.

SECT. 4.
Ecclesiastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

Tenure of office.

Membership
of Church of England.

Treasurer.

Meetings.

them, and declaring the general principles which shall guide the decision of the committee (g).

1542. Non-official members of the Ecclesiastical Commission are not removable except for improper execution of their duties (h). But the Church Estates Commissioners hold office only during the pleasure of their respective appointors (i).

Vacancies occurring by death or resignation among the non-official Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and vacancies occurring by death, resignation, or removal among the Church Estates Commissioners are filled up by the Sovereign or the Archbishop of Canterbury, as the case may be (k).

Every lay commissioner, including lay Church Estates Commissioners, must be a member of the Church of England, and must, before acting as such commissioner, subscribe a declaration to that effect in the minute book of the proceedings of the Commissioners (l).

1543. The three Church Estates Commissioners are joint treasurers of the Ecclesiastical Commission, and the receipt of any two of them, or of any one of them, with the counter-signature in the latter case of the accountant or assistant accountant, is a good discharge for money due and payable to the Commissioners (m).

(ii.) General Administrative Functions and Powers.

1544. At a meeting of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of which due notice has been given to all, five form a quorum for transacting business (n), provided that two or more of the Church Estates Commissioners are of the number (o). Proceedings which require to be ratified by the corporate seal cannot be finally concluded, nor can the seal be affixed to any deed or instrument, unless two at least of the episcopal Commissioners are present. If two only of such Commissioners are present, and object, the ratification of the proceedings cannot take place at that meeting (p).

Due notice of intended meetings must as a rule be given to all the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (g); but notice need not be given

(g) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 12.

(h) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 81.

(i) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 1.

(k) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 2; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 79; 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 1.

(l) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), ss. 1, 2, 3; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), ss. 78, 80; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 4.

(m) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 3; see also Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 7; 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 5; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), s. 43. As to the appointment, removal, and salaries of officers, clerks etc. of the Ecclesiastical Commission, see Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 7, and as to superannuation allowances to such persons, see Ecclesiastical Commissioners (Superannuation) Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 68).

(n) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 4. As to minutes of the proceedings of the Commissioners, see ibid., s. 8.

(o) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 10.

(p) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 5.

(q) Ibid., s. 4.

to Commissioners who are out of England and Wales, or who have intimated to the secretary their inability to attend. Nothing affecting any Commissioner, being a bishop or dean, or the see, or diocese, or cathedral, or collegiate church of such Commissioner, is to be done at any meeting of which due notice has not been given to the Commissioner affected, unless his written consent has been previously obtained (r).

Meetings may be adjourned from day to day if necessary (s).

The Archbishop of Canterbury, if present at the commencement of a meeting, is to be chairman; if not present, the chairman is to be chosen by the votes of the Commissioners present (t).

1545. The Commissioners, by summons under the hand of the chairman, may cause the attendance of and examine witnesses, make inquiries, and call for answers and returns, and require the production of all documents relating to any matter within their jurisdiction. They are empowered also to administer oaths or to require witnesses to make declarations regarding the truth of their evidence (a).

1546. In each year, on or before March 1st, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners must furnish a report to one of the Secretaries of State of all their proceedings for the year preceding the previous November 1st, annexing copies of the schemes sanctioned and approved by the Sovereign in Council during the year and also an abstract of the accounts of the commission, and the report must be laid before Parliament (b). Copies of all instruments made under the sole authority of the seal of the commission without an Order in Council are to be annexed to the report (c).

The Church Estates Commissioners must similarly furnish reports of their general proceedings, with a schedule of all applications for enfranchisement or purchase of interests of lessees, specifying the terms proposed, the terms on which such enfranchisement or purchase has been effected, and, if refused, the ground of such refusal (d).

1547. The duty of the Estates Committee, or any two of them, being Church Estates Commissioners (e), is to consider all matters relating to the sale, purchase, exchange, letting, or management, by or on behalf of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of any lands, tithes, or hereditaments, and for these purposes, and subject to the general rules made by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (f), to do

SMO. 4.
Eccle-
siastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

Power to take evidence.

Annual report to Parliament.

Duties of Estates
Committee.

(r) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 82.

(s) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 1.

(t) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 13.

(a) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 9; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 90; 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 30.

(b) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 26; Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 116), ss. 8, 10.

(c) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 6.

(d) Episcopal and Capitular Estates Acts, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 104), s. 10; 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 116), ss. 8, 10.

(e) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 2.

(f) See p. 795, ante.

SECT. 4.
Eccle-
siastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

any act, including the affixing of the corporate seal to any scheme or other instrument, within the power of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (g).

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners may from time to time refer to the consideration of the Estates Committee special matters in addition to those referred to (h), for the report of the Estates Committee, and by an instrument under their common seal may authorise such Committee, or the Church Estates Commissioners, or any two of them, to do any act within the powers of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in addition to those referred to, except affixing the common seal to any scheme to which the Estates Committee are not authorised to affix such seal without reporting to or requiring further instructions from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (i).

The Estates Committee are also intrusted with sundry powers relating to the improvement, management, and re-arrangement of episcopal and capitular estates (k), and in respect of claims for dilapidations on estates forming the endowment of a see (l). Their consent is also necessary before a bishop, being a landlord, can exercise the powers conferred on landlords by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (m). The Commissioners may employ and pay agents in the management of their estates and for the transaction of their business generally (n).

Schemes and Orders in Council.

1548. The principal function of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners is to prepare and lay before the Sovereign in Council such schemes as shall appear to the Commissioners best adapted for carrying into full effect the provisions of the various Acts giving jurisdiction to the Commissioners (o). Before laying such scheme before the Sovereign in Council, notice must be given to any corporation, aggregate or sole, which may be affected thereby, and the objections, if any, of such corporation, together with the scheme, are to be laid before the Sovereign in Council (p). The Commissioners may propose in any scheme modifications as to matters of detail and regulation which are not substantially repugnant to the provisions of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts (q).

When a scheme has been approved by the Sovereign in Council, an Order in Council may be made ratifying it and specifying the date of its coming into operation (r).

(g) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 8.

(h) Ibid., s. 11.

(i) Ibid., s. 8.

(k) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), ss. 5, 8—11.

See further p. 800, post.

(l) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), ss. 12, 13. See further p. 772, ante.

(m) 8 Edw. 7, c. 28, s. 40 (1). See title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., p. 269.

(n) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 27.

(o) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 10; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 83; 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 30.

(p) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 10; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 83.

(q) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 83.

(r) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 12; 1840

1549. Every order must be registered by the registrar of the diocese, whereof the bishop, or within which any cathedral or collegiate church, dignitary, chapter, member of a chapter, officer, incumbent, or any other person or body corporate, may be affected thereby (a), and in cases coming within the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (a), in the diocesan registries specified in the order (b).

Every such Order in Council, when made, is to be inserted as soon as may be in the London Gazette, and when registered and gazetted is to have the same force and effect as if every part thereof were included in the first Act establishing the Commissioners (c). Copies of Orders in Council must be laid before Parliament in January in every year, or if Parliament is not then sitting, within one week after the next meeting thereof (d).

In some cases schemes made under the Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 1868 (e), operate to vest the property expressed to be transferred without any further conveyance (f).

1550. Certain payments and investments or conveyances and assignments of lands are to be made by grants or instruments under the common seal of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners instead of by Orders in Council ratifying schemes (g).

Agreements as to the transfer of tithes to a district church may be ratified by any instrument under the corporate seal of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners made in pursuance of such agreement, instead of by Order in Council (h).

1551. Another important feature in the constitution of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners is that in their corporate capacity they are empowered to hold a large amount of the revenues of the Church of England as one common fund, and to apply the same by scheme ratified in the usual manner for such purposes as they may think fit to propose (i).

SECT. 4.
Ecclesiastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

Registration
of order.
Gazetting
of order.

Vesting of
property.

Instruments
under common seal.

Common
fund.

(3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 84; 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 30. Orders made under these Acts need not recite any of the provisions of the Acts (Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 85).

(a) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), ss. 12, 16; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), ss. 84, 88.

(a) 29 & 30 Vict. c. 111.

(b) Ibid., s. 10. No fee is payable for registration, but a fee of 3s. is payable for searches for an order, and a fee of 4d. per folio of 90 words for every certified copy or extract of an order. Copies of entries certified by the registrar are admissible as evidence in all courts and places (Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 17; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 89; see also title EVIDENCE).

(c) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), ss. 12, 13, 14.

(d) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 15; 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 87; 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 30.

(e) 31 & 32 Vict. c. 114.

(f) Ibid., ss. 6, 12; see further, p. 800, post.

(g) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), ss. 5, 6; Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 14), s. 15.

(h) District Church Tithes Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 42), s. 8; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 111), s. 22.

(i) The common fund was created by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 87; see p. 783, ante.

SECT. 4.
Eccle-
siastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

The estates of all sees (k), suspended canonries (l), suspended deaneries (m), and the separate estates of non-suspended canonries and deaneries (n), archdeaconries (o), and sinecure rectories (p), are all carried over to the common fund, subject, in the case of the estates of sees and non-suspended canonries and deaneries and archdeaconries, to various provisions for the reassignment or transfer of part of the property as, endowments (q).

Other properties.

The moneys and revenues payable to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and carried over to the common fund include the rents and profits of land, tithes, and other hereditaments vested in them (r), the episcopal fund (s), any increase of income of ecclesiastical corporations resulting from sales, enfranchisements, exchanges, purchases, or investment (t), the produce of sales effected under the New Parishes Act, 1843 (u), penalties for not making returns of ecclesiastical fees (a), and fees of court payable in respect of proceedings taken under the Benefices Act, 1898 (b).

Power to enforce payment.

1552. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, for the purpose of enforcing payment of all profits and emoluments to be paid to them and of obtaining possession of all lands, tithes, or other hereditaments vested in or accruing to them, and of recovering the rents and profits thereof, have all the legal and equitable rights, powers and remedies otherwise exercisable by the holder of the deanery, canonry, prebend, dignity or office, or the rector of the rectory, in respect to the property affected (c).

The Commissioners also have power to sell or exchange lands belonging to a see or chapter with the consent of the bishop or of the chapter as the case may be (d).

Application of common fund.

1553. The Commissioners are empowered to make payments for various purposes out of the common fund. These purposes include inter alia the augmentation of bishoprics, and poor livings, the endowment of new churches, the employment of additional ministers, and the payment of the Church Estates Commissioners (e).

(k) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), s. 2.

(l) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 49. As to the extent of their estate, see Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 39), s. 6; Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 114), ss. 7, 8; and A.-G. v. Windsor (Dean and Canons) (1857), 24 Beav. 679.

(m) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 51.

(n) Ibid., s. 50. See, as to effect of this section, R. v. Champneys (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 384.

(o) Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 114), s. 13.

(p) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 54.

(q) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 124), ss. 2, 3, 5; Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 114), s. 13.

(r) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 67.

(s) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 15.

(t) Episcopal and Capitular Estates Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 104), s. 8.

(u) 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 71), s. 1.

(a) Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 76), s. 4.

(b) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 48, s. 11.

(c) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113), s. 57.

(d) Ibid., s. 68.

(e) See Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94); and pp. 774, 783, ante.

1554. The Commissioners, their successors and assigns, are empowered as a corporation to take, purchase, and hold lands, tenements and hereditaments for the purposes of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Acts, notwithstanding any mortmain restrictions (f).

SECT. 4.
Ecclesiastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

Lands and hereditaments held in trust for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are vested in the first Church Estates Commissioner (g).

Power to hold lands.
Audit.

The accounts of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are subject to audit as directed by the Treasury (h).

Church Building
Commissioners.

The powers formerly exercisable by the Church Building Commissioners were upon the abolition of such Commissioners transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (i).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Lay as distinguished from Ecclesiastical Corporations.

1555. Lay as distinguished from ecclesiastical corporations include all corporations sole or aggregate, whether the members are spiritual persons or not, the object whereof is not spiritual (k). Thus, the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, and the colleges therein, are lay foundations (l).

Lay corporations.

1556. At the dissolution of the monasteries and other religious and ecclesiastical houses and places, their property was transferred to the Crown, and such transfer was confirmed by statute (m). The statutes of dissolution provided that the persons to whom any grants should be made by letters patent from the Crown should hold the lands, tithes, churches, chapels, advowsons, patronages, and other hereditaments so granted, in like manner, form, and conditions as the abbots, priors, and other chief governors of the religious houses held them (n), but as such grants could be, and were in fact, made to laymen, who by the law of the Church could not have cure of souls, the effect of the patents in such cases was that benefices which had been appropriations in the hands of a

Dissolution
of the monasteries.

Lay rectors.

(f) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77), s. 1. As to mortmain restrictions, see generally title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 367 et seq.

(g) Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 94), s. 6.

(h) Ibid., s. 14.

(i) Church Building Commissioners (Transfer of Powers) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 55), s. 1. As to the powers of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners under the Church Building and New Parishes Acts, see further pp. 447 et seq. and 721 et seq., ante.

(k) See p. 793, ante.

(l) R. v. Cambridge (Vice-Chancellor etc.) (1765), 3 Burr. 1647, 1656. As to the freedom from religious tests of these universities and the colleges already founded at the passing of the Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), see pp. 805, 812, post.

(m) Stat. (1535) 27 Hen. 8, c. 28, and stat. (1539) 31 Hen. 8, c. 13.

(n) Stat. (1535) 27 Hen. 8, c. 28, s. 2. Stat. (1539) 31 Hen. 8, c. 13, s. 2, provided that the King should hold, possess, and enjoy the possessions in as large and ample manner and form as the religious houses had held them, and that grants by the King's patent of any of the monasteries, abboties, priories, personages, appropriate advowsons, tithes, franchises, and other hereditaments should be good and effectual against the King and his successors without any other licence or dispensation (ibid., ss. 18, 19).

SECT. 4.
Eccle-
siastical
Persons etc.
as Owners
of Property.

monastery became impropriations (o) in the hands of the lay persons or corporations to whom they were granted, while the impropiators who received such grants were, by virtue of the patent by which the grant was made, corporations and were recognised as lay rectors (p).

A lay rector is liable to repair the chancel (q), and is entitled to the chief seat in it, unless another person can show a prescriptive right thereto (r).

SUB-SECT 4.—Diocesan Associations.

Diocesan
associations.

1557. An association formed for the purpose of promoting or assisting the performance of the functions of some or all of the officers or organisations of that part of the Church of England which is included within the limits of a diocese (s) is called a diocesan association. There is no legal definition or limitation of such an association, but, as the principal objects for which it is formed usually include the acquisition of real and personal property, and the holding of it in trust for ecclesiastical purposes, it is essential that it should be in a position to comply with the provisions of the law relating to mortmain and charitable uses, and for that purpose, when incorporated, the incorporation, unless it is by licence from the Crown, must be under the authority of some statute (t).

Incorporated.

Without incorporation.

A diocesan association may be formed without incorporation, the property being vested in a body of trustees appointed for the purpose (u); and for religious purposes in connection with Church of England elementary schools associations on a diocesan basis have in many dioceses been formed under the Voluntary Schools Act, 1897 (v).

(o) See Portland (Duke) v. Bingham (1792), 1 Hag. Con. 157; and p. 717, ante.

(p) 1 Bl. Com. 386.

(q) See pp. 516, 733, ante.

(r) Hall v. Ellis (1609), Noy, 133; Spry v. Flood (1840), 2 Curt. 353, 357; and see p. 470, ante.

(s) As to the division of England and Wales into dioceses, see pp. 395 et seq. ante. As to the reasons for defining ecclesiastical functions by reference to the territorial limits of a diocese, see Natal (Bishop) v. Gladstone (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 1, 30.

(t) The statutes under which such incorporation may be effected are—(1) the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), ss. 19, 20, under which the Board of Trade may permit an association for religious objects, not involving the acquisition of gain by the association or its members, to hold any quantity of land, and to be registered as a company without the addition of the word "limited"; (2) the Charitable Trustees Incorporation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 24); see p. 794, ante. For a form of memorandum and articles of association of a diocesan association incorporated under the first-named Act, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. III., p. 634.

(u) Such a body of trustees may be appointed under the Trustee Appointment Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 28); as to which see p. 370, ante, and p. 821, post. For a foundation deed of an unincorporated diocesan association, see Encyclopædia of Forms, Vol. III., p. 651.

(v) Such associations remain in effective existence notwithstanding the repeal of s. 1 of the Voluntary Schools Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 5), under which they were originally formed (Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 33(2)(b)) by virtue of the approval by the Board of Education of their constitution where such approval has been given for a permanent purpose pursuant to s. 1 (3) of the Voluntary Schools Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 5), and to Sched. XI., 12, of the Education Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 42).

Part VII.—Religious Bodies other than the Church of England.

SECT. 1.—Recognition by the State.

SECT. 1.

1558. All religious bodies enjoy the same general recognition by law (a), strengthened in the single case of the Church of England (b) by the circumstances of its connection with the State, and modified in the case of other religious bodies by such special enactments as survive to mark in each case the history of its evolution.

Recognition
by the State.

Recognition
by the State.

It is now intended to examine the distinctive marks that attend the recognition of certain religious bodies, all of whom have this in common, that they are unconnected with the State (c).

SECT. 2.—Roman Catholics.

1559. In the case of the religious body known as Roman Catholics (d) these distinctive marks have their origin in two facts, namely, that that body, unlike other nonconforming religious bodies, has its central authority outside this kingdom and derives the whole of its system of organisation from abroad; and that at earlier periods in the history of this kingdom the Church of England was within that system of organisation, and that jurisdiction was claimed and from time to time exercised over it by that central authority.

Roman Catholics.

1560. A long series of statutes passed in the centuries succeeding the disruption of the ties between the Church of England and the See of Rome has, in spite of numerous repeals, left many traces of the conflict, and hence the law as it affects the Roman Catholic Church in England consists not alone of provisions affecting the

Continuation of papal jurisdiction.

(a) Such general propositions as bear upon the mutual relations of the State and religious bodies of all kinds were considered in the preliminary note (see pp. 356—370, ante).

(b) Or in Scotland by the single case of the Church of Scotland.

(c) Such bodies are commonly known as Nonconformist or Dissenting bodies—terms that have their origin in the Acts of Uniformity (especially that of 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4)), refusal to comply with which rendered the persons so refusing liable to penalties. Those who refused to go to church and worship after the manner of the Church of England were classified as recusants. A popish recusant was a papist who so refused, and a popish recusant convict was a papist who was legally convicted of such offence (Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III., p. 153). This terminology was rendered obsolete by the passing of the Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), and the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7); but the use of the words “Nonconformist” and “Dissenter” survives, owing to the convenience of having names that compendiously embrace all those who do not worship after the manner of the Established Church. They are, however, usually employed to signify Protestants who dissent from the government and ritual of the Church of England.

(d) Compare Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1791 (31 Geo. 3, c. 32), s. 1, and the form of declaration to be made by papists or persons professing the popish religion, or holding communion with the See of Rome: “I, A. B., do hereby declare that I do profess the Roman Catholic religion.” The Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), is entitled “An Act for the relief of His Majesty’s Roman Catholic subjects.” See also, generally, title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., p. 324.

SECT. 2.
Roman Catholics.

members of that body or even the whole body of its members in this country, but also of provisions which are directed to limiting or excluding the exercise of the powers of the See of Rome within the realm.

No Roman Catholic can occupy the throne, for any person who is either in communion with the Church of Rome or marries a person in such communion is expressly excluded from the succession (e). Certain high offices of the State are also withheld from Roman Catholics. These are the position of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and High Commissioner of the Church of Scotland (f).

Status of
Roman Catholic.

1561. A Roman Catholic in his capacity of a private citizen is now on an equal footing with all other subjects of the Crown (g). There is no longer any bar to his holding real or personal property (h), or exercising the parliamentary or other vote (i). If otherwise qualified, he is entitled to sit and vote in the House of Lords (k), or, if a peer of the kingdom of Scotland or Ireland, is eligible as a representative peer, and may vote at elections of such representative peers (l). He is, if a layman (m) and otherwise qualified,

(e) Bill of Rights (1 Will. & Mar., sess. 2, c. 2), s. 9; Act of Settlement, (12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2), s. 2.

(f) The Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 12, specifically excepted these offices, together with that of Lord Chancellor of Ireland, which was thrown open to Roman Catholics by the Office and Oath Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, from the benefit of the provisions by which a new oath was substituted for the former oaths and declarations. The phrase "Lord Lieutenant of Ireland" includes a Lord Deputy or other chief Governor or Governors of Ireland (Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 12). The oaths now required on the assumption of the office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland are in the case of non-Roman Catholic subjects the oaths prescribed by the Promissory Oaths Acts, 1868 and 1871 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), but from the fact that s. 12 of the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), has not been repealed it has been assumed that Roman Catholic subjects are not relieved from the necessity of taking the ancient oaths; a Bill to provide this relief was introduced into Parliament in the year 1891, but was not proceeded with.

(g) Before the passing of the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), Roman Catholics were required to take oaths of allegiance and abjuration and to make a declaration against transubstantiation before they became eligible to fill any important office. By that Act a new oath was substituted to be taken by any Roman Catholic who held any office, with the exceptions already mentioned, either under the Crown or any municipality, or who voted for or sat as a member of either House of Parliament. This oath, however, contained words denying to the Pope any temporal or civil jurisdiction, power, superiority, or pre-eminence in this country, which were obnoxious to Roman Catholics, and is now dispensed with, and on such occasions as oaths are required those prescribed by the Promissory Oaths Acts, 1868 and 1871 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), namely, the oath of allegiance, official and judicial oaths which can be taken without offence to the conscience of Roman Catholics are alone required.

(h) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 23.

(i) Ibid., s. 5; Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 1, Sched. I., Part II.

(k) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 2; Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 1, Sched. I., Part II.

(l) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 6; Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 1, Sched. I., Part II.

(m) As to persons in holy orders in the Roman Catholic Church, see Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 9, and p. 807, post.

eligible for a seat in the House of Commons, and if elected may sit and vote there (n).

SECT. 2.
Roman Catholics.

A Roman Catholic may hold civil and military posts under the Crown, and be a member of or hold office under any lay corporation (o).

1562. A Roman Catholic is disqualified from holding or enjoying or exercising any office, place, or dignity in the Church of England, or in any of its Ecclesiastical Courts or the Court of Appeal therefrom, or in any cathedral, collegiate, or ecclesiastical establishment or foundation (p).

Exclusion from ecclesiastical
office.

1563. A Roman Catholic may now hold any office in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham, or the colleges belonging to them (q), except that of Professor of Divinity (r), or any for which Holy Orders in the Church of England or membership of the Church of England and a degree in Divinity are required (s), but he may not hold an office in the colleges of Eton, Winchester, or Westminster, or any such college or school (t).

Offices in universities
and schools.

1564. Roman Catholics, whether lay or clerical, are not debarred from acting as teachers or schoolmasters (u), but they may not hold the mastership of a school of royal foundation or endowed school for the education of youth, or of an endowed college or college of royal foundation except in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham (v). Roman Catholics who enter the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge or Durham as undergraduates are not to be required to attend any lectures to which they, or, if they are under age, their parents or guardians on their behalf, object on religious grounds (x). Similar provision for securing liberty of conscience is made in the case of day schools and boarding schools under the

Freedom
from tests.

(n) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 2; Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 1, Sched. I., Part II. See title ELECTIONS.

(o) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), ss. 1, 14; Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 1, Sched. I., Part II.

(p) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 10.

(q) Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), ss. 1, 8. This Act repealed so much of s. 16 of the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), as it was necessary to repeal for its purpose, but as it deals only with the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, any other universities for which tests are employed are not affected by it. So far as offices in colleges are concerned, the Act deals with colleges then subsisting. There is nothing to prevent the creation of new colleges the offices in which shall be confined to the members of any denomination (R. v. Hertford College (1878), 3 Q. B. D. 693, C. A.); as to university offices at Oxford or Cambridge, see also Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 48), s. 58.

(r) Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), s. 2.

(s) Ibid., s. 3.

(t) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 16.

(u) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1791 (31 Geo. 3, c. 32), s. 13.

(v) Ibid., s. 14; so much of this section as relates to any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham is repealed by the Universities Tests Act, 1871, supra. As to repeal of the disabilities to hold posts at the Universities, see note (g), supra; and as to equality of treatment under the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 and 1873 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 87); and exceptions therein, see note (f), p. 812, post; and, generally, title EDUCATION.

(w) Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), s. 7.

SECT. 2.
Roman Catholics.
—
Church
patronage.

Endowed Schools Acts (y), and in the case of public elementary schools by the Elementary Education Acts (z).

1565. A Roman Catholic may own the advowson and be the legal patron of a benefice in the Church of England, and he may buy or sell such advowson; but he may not exercise the right of presentation himself (a), or by the agency of another (b). If he attempts to do so the presentation is void (c). Where a Roman Catholic as a private person is the legal patron of a benefice the right of presentation is vested in the University of Oxford or the University of Cambridge (d), according to the county in which the benefice is situated. If he is the holder of an office under the Crown to which there attaches a right of presentation to benefices, the right of presentation is exercised by the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being (e). For a Roman Catholic to advise the Crown as to an appointment to any office or preferment in the Church of England is a misdemeanor and disables the offender from ever holding any office, civil or military, under the Crown (f). If he is a member of any lay corporation he may not vote at or in any way join in the election, presentation, or appointment of any person to a benefice, or any office or place belonging to or in connection with the Church of England, which is in the gift, patronage, or disposal of the corporation. And a Roman Catholic, or a trustee or mortgagee for or under him, cannot make a valid grant of an advowson or right of patronage, except bonâ fide for a full and valuable consideration to some Protestant purchaser or purchasers for the benefit only of a Protestant or Protestants; nor can a Roman Catholic devise an

(y) Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), ss. 15, 16. There are certain exceptions in the case of modern endowments and cathedral schools, ibid., s. 14. See p. 812, post, and, generally, title EDUCATION.

(z) Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 7; and see p. 812, post, and, generally, title EDUCATION.

(a) Stat. (1605) 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, s. 13; stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 26, s. 2. If a Roman Catholic is joint patron with another person who is not a Roman Catholic, then the patronage is to be exercised wholly by that other (Edwards v. Exeter (Bishop) (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 652).

(b) Stat. (1605) 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, s. 13; stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 26, s. 2; Presentation of Benefices Act, 1713 (13 Ann. c. 13), s. 1. Where the presentation was made by a college on the nomination of a Roman Catholic patron, and it appeared on the face of it not to have been made in right of the college, but in trust for the patron, it was held void (Boyer v. Norwich (Bishop), [1892] A. C. 417, P. C.).

(c) Ibid. Every grant of a benefice made by a Roman Catholic, either by himself or by an agent, is void unless it be made for a full and valuable consideration and to and for the exclusive benefit of a Protestant purchaser (Church Patronage Act, 1787 (11 Geo. 2, c. 17), s. 5).

(d) Stat. (1605) 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, s. 13; stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 26, s. 2; and see Benefices Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 48), s. 7. The patronage is not, however, vested in the universities where there are several joint patrons, one of whom can legally exercise it (Edwards v. Exeter (Bishop), supra; see note (a), supra).

The counties assigned to the respective universities are set out in notes (e) and (f) on p. 574, ante.

(e) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 17.

(f) Ibid., s. 18. In 1865, when the office of Home Secretary was filled by a Roman Catholic, appointments in the gift of that office were made by the First Lord of the Treasury, there being no benefices in the patronage of the Home Office.

advowson or right of patronage with intent to secure the benefit thereof to his heirs or family (g).

NOTE 2.

Roman Catholics.

Church-warden.

1566. A Roman Catholic may be a churchwarden (h), but if he has conscientious scruples as to acting as such he may appoint a deputy (i). If in holy orders he is exempted from serving (k). Other offices to which, on his election, a Roman Catholic layman may appoint a deputy are that of high constable, or petty constable, overseer of the poor, or any other parochial or ward office (l).

1567. A Roman Catholic in holy orders is exempted from serving upon any jury or as overseer of the poor or in any other parochial or ward office, or in any office in any hundred of any shire, city, town, parish, division or wapentake (m). Roman Catholic clergy, though disabled from sitting in the House of Commons (n), may, if otherwise qualified, sit in the House of Lords. They are required to register themselves, with their description as priest or minister, with the clerk of the peace of any place where they intend to perform any ecclesiastical function (o), and it is an offence rendering them liable to a penalty of £50 for them to exercise any of the rites or ceremonies of their religion, or if a member of a religious order to wear the habit of their order, except within the usual places of worship of their religion or in private houses (p). They are protected from molestation while conducting a religious service in any place of public worship wherein they are authorised to preach or in a burial ground (q).

Exemption
of priest from juries and other duties.

1568. Members of the Society of Jesus or of any other religious orders are forbidden to enter the country (r), and upon entering and being convicted of so doing, are liable to be banished (s), unless their entry is authorised by a special licence to be granted by a Secretary of State who is a Protestant (t). This licence is available for a period not exceeding six months, but may be withdrawn by a Secretary of State at any time (a). A register of licences granted during the preceding year is ordered to be laid before both

Religious
orders.

(g) Church Patronage Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 17).

(h) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 15. Except in new parishes created under the Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), or the New Parishes Acts, 1843 and 1856 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104). See note (d), p. 404, ante.

(i) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1791 (31 Geo. 3, c. 32), s. 7.

(k) Ibid. s. 8.

(l) Ibid., s. 7.

(m) Ibid., s. 8.

(n) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 9; see p. 804, ante.

(o) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1791 (31 Geo. 3, c. 32), s. 5. The prescribed fee for registration is sixpence, and the person so registered is to receive a certificate for which he may be charged two shillings.

(p) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 26.

(q) Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2; Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 36; see p. 817, post.

(r) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 29. Members who were in the country on April 23rd, 1829 (the time of the commencement of the Act), or who having been born British subjects were then abroad, but intended to return, were required to register themselves with the clerk of the peace in manner prescribed in the schedule to the Act (ibid., ss. 29, 30).

(s) Ibid., s. 29.

(t) Ibid., s. 31.

(a) Ibid.

SECT. 2.
Roman Catholics.

Houses of Parliament (b). Persons in this country who are admitted to be members of any such order are liable on conviction to be banished for life (c), and any person admitting any person to become a member of such religious order, or assisting at the admission or the administration of vows to prospective members, is guilty of a misdemeanour (d). Proceedings to enforce penalties for such offences can only be begun in the High Court by information to be filed in the name of the Attorney-General (e), but this rule does not govern proceedings except as to penalties (f). The provisions do not apply to female religious orders (g).

Roman Catholic hierarchy.

1569. The recognition of the Roman Catholics as a religious body does not involve any recognition of the hierarchy (h) under which they are organised, except upon the basis of consent.

Ecclesiastical titles of honour or dignity can only be validly created, or any pre-eminence or coercive power conferred upon the holder, by the Sovereign (i), and it is an offence for any person not authorised by law to assume or use the name, style or title of archbishop of any province, bishop of any bishopric, or dean of any deanery (j), although where the title is not already legally appropriated (k) on behalf of the Church of England, the law (on the ground of expediency) does not impose penalties upon those ministers of religion who may, as among the members of their own religious

(b) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 32.

(c) Ibid., s. 34. If he does not depart within thirty days after the order for banishment is made, he may be expelled by force (ibid., s. 35). If he remains at large in the country three months after the order without some lawful cause, he is liable on conviction thereof to a sentence of penal servitude for life (ibid., s. 36); Penal Servitude Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 3), s. 2.

(d) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 33.

(e) Ibid., s. 38.

(f) R. v. Kennedy (1902), 86 L. T. 753. Although a private person may institute a prosecution for such an offence, a magistrate may exercise a wide discretion as to granting a summons (ibid.).

(g) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 37.

(h) The Roman Catholic hierarchy was re-established in England in the year 1850. In the following year a statute was passed declaring the assumption of titles connected with places in the realm illegal, and imposing heavy penalties on the persons assuming them (stat. (1851) 14 & 15 Vict. c. 60). This Act was, however, repealed by the Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 53); see note (k), infra.

(i) Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 53), preamble.

(j) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7), s. 24. The penalty which may be imposed is £100 (ibid.).

(k) While the enactment referred to in the last note could be made susceptible of an intention to include all titles whenever subsequently appropriated, the presence in the preamble of the section of the words "and whereas the right and title of the archbishops to their respective provinces, of bishops to their sees, and of deans to their deaneries, have been settled and established by law," the more natural interpretation is to confine its effect to those titles already appropriated in the year (1829) when the Act was passed. A case of some difficulty arose when, before the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the title of Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of all Ireland, was assumed by a Roman Catholic. It was suggested by Queen Victoria that this might be met by a prosecution of the obtruder by the Primate of the Church of Ireland (Letters of Queen Victoria, letter to Lord John Russell, December 14th, 1860). In the following year stat. (1851) 14 & 15 Vict. c. 60, was passed, providing for penalties to be imposed and sued for in an action which might be brought by any person. The Act was not, however, enforced, and was repealed by the Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 53).

body, be designated by titles of distinction connected with some place within the realm. A bishop or other dignitary of the Roman Catholic Church is not a corporation (l).

SECT. 2.
Roman Catholics.

1570. The places used by Roman Catholics for public worship or schools are now under the same laws as those used by Protestant Nonconformist bodies (m). Places of public worship may be registered as such (n), and if registered may be used for the solemnisation of marriages (a).

Places of worship.

Registration is not compulsory (b), but is attended by certain advantages (c), among which are exemption from local rates (d), and from the operation of the Charitable Trusts Act (e). Disorderly conduct in a Roman Catholic, as in any other, place of worship is an offence (f).

1571. In respect of the property held by Roman Catholics in connection with their places of religious worship or schools or for educational and charitable purposes, they are upon the same footing as Protestant Dissenters (g). All property to be acquired or held for any such purposes is subject to the provisions of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (h). Roman Catholic charities were at one time

Property.

(l) He differs in this from a dignitary of the Church of England; see title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., note (c), p. 306.

(m) Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86), s. 2, extending the Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 115), s. 1.

(n) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 2. The position of Roman Catholic places of worship in regard to registration, with the advantages accruing therefrom, is the same as that of Protestant Nonconformist places of worship (Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 115). As to the mode of registration, see p. 817, post.

(a) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 18. The presence of the registrar is necessary unless the building enjoys the benefits of the Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 58), in which case the presence of the registrar is at the option of the contracting parties (ss. 4, 7, 10); but a person authorised by the governing body of the building, or the bishop or vicar-general of the diocese (ss. 1, 6), must be present. The provisions are the same as in the case of Protestant Nonconformists; see p. 818, post.

(b) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), preamble and s. 1; see p. 818, post.

(c) Roman Catholic places of worship, being placed in the same position as those of Protestant Nonconformist congregations not duly registered and which do not meet in a private dwelling-house or a place not usually appropriated to religious worship, are exposed to the penalties imposed by the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 4, c. 155), s. 2; see p. 817, post.

(d) Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 30), s. 1; Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 27; Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211; see p. 819, post; but it is doubtful whether Roman Catholic places of worship would be liable to improvement rates; see p. 819, post.

(e) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 9; but the benefit of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 64, may be claimed if desired (ibid.; see p. 818, post).

(f) Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32).

(g) Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 115), s. 1; see pp. 821, 822, post.

(h) Ibid., s. 5, which makes such property subject to the provisions of the Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 36). This Act (except part of s. 5 as to college advowsons) was repealed by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), which, inter alia, provides in s. 13 (1) (a) that references in Acts not repealed to Acts which were then repealed were to be read as if the references to the repealed Act were references to that Act.

SECT. 3.
Roman Catholics.

excepted from the operation of the Charitable Trusts Acts, but the exception has been discontinued, and they are now subject to the general law of charitable trusts (i). All such charities which are endowed and are not statutorily exempt are within the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners in England and Wales (k).

Objects prohibited.

1572. There are, however, certain grounds which render particular trusts or bequests invalid. Thus, the law prohibiting religious orders of males renders void gifts made to any such order (l), and the rule against superstitious trusts renders void bequests for masses or prayers for the repose of souls, whether of the testator or of others (m), or for maintaining a lamp in a church for a superstitious object (n), or for inculcating the doctrine of the supremacy of the Pope; a gift for the latter object is also void on the ground of public policy (o). Moreover, where a bequest or trust is for an object that is not within the legal definition of a charity, care must be taken to avoid infringing the rule against perpetuities (p). But gifts for the establishment of Roman Catholic bishops (q), the maintenance and support of Roman Catholic priests (r), chapels (s), colleges, and schools (t), and the general promotion of the Roman Catholic religion (u), may be valid.

Trust partly valid.

A trust for the exclusive benefit of Roman Catholics is not invalidated by reason only of the inclusion in the trust of a gift of a superstitious or prohibited character (x). In every such case the property may be apportioned by a scheme to be framed by the Charity Commissioners, so as to satisfy the lawful charitable trust declared by the donor, the remainder being devoted to such lawful

Apportionment.

(i) The exception was created by the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 62, and was to last for a period of two years. It was extended by the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 124), s. 47, and by stat. (1858) 21 & 22 Vict. c. 51, and stat. (1859) 22 & 23 Vict. c. 50, until July 1st, 1860, when the exception lapsed.

(k) Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 9; Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 134). In the latter Act "charity" is interpreted as having the same meaning as in the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 66. The classes of charities exempted are set out in s. 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), as amended by the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, s. 49; Charitable Trusts Act, 1869, s. 15; and Charitable Trusts (Places of Religious Worship) Amendment Act, 1894, s. 4. As to Roman Catholic charities, see, generally, title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 114, 120 et seq., 164, 199, 295, 315.

(l) Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7) see pp. 807, 808, ante; Walsh v. Walsh (1869), 4 I. R. Eq. 396, and other cases cited under title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 122—123.

(m) Adams v. Lambert (1602), 4 Co. Rep. 104 b; West v. Shuttleworth (1835), 2 My. & K. 684, and other cases cited under title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 122.

(n) A.-G. v. Vivian (1826), 1 Russ. 226.

(o) De Themmines v. De Bonneval (1828), 5 Russ. 288.

(p) Cocks v. Manners (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 574.

(q) Robb and Reid v. Dorrian (1877), 11 I. R. O. L. 292, Ex. Ch.; A.-G. v. Power (1809), 1 Ball & B. 145.

(r) A.-G. v. Gladstone (1842), 13 Sim. 7.

(s) De Windt v. De Windt (1854), 2 Eq. Rep. 1107.

(t) Walsh v. Gladstone (1842), 13 Sim. 261.

(u) Bradshaw v. Tasker (1834), 2 My. & K. 221; West v. Shuttleworth (1835), 2 My. & K. 684.

(x) Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 134), s. 1.

charitable trusts as the framers of the scheme may consider most just (y).

SECT. 3.
Roman
Catholics.

SECT. 3.—Protestant Nonconformists.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Religious
toleration.

1573. Historic events which from their cause and circumstances could not afford relief to Roman Catholics, for the very same reason brought relief to the various bodies of Protestant Nonconformists. Their emancipation began, therefore, at a much earlier date than did that of Roman Catholics. The Toleration Act, 1688 (a), relieved all Protestant Nonconformists who took the oaths and made the declaration prescribed by that Act (b) from prosecution in any ecclesiastical court by reason of their refusing to worship according to the forms of the Church of England (c). So far as such oaths are concerned, the Toleration Act is repealed and replaced by the Promissory Oaths Acts (d), which apply to all classes of His Majesty's subjects. At the present day Protestant Nonconformist laymen are under no personal disabilities whatever.

They may occupy any post under the Crown (e), whether civil or military, and may, if otherwise qualified, sit in either House of Parliament. They may also be members of or hold office under any corporation or local authority. They may be patrons of and present to benefices in the Church of England, and may be chosen as churchwardens (f), overseers of the poor, or other parochial or ward officers, exercising the duties thereof by a deputy if they have any scruple as to doing so themselves (g).

(y) Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 134), s. 1.

(a) Stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18, ss. 1, 2. Since 1688 the body known as the General Body of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of the Three Denominations (Presbyterian, Independent, and Baptist) residing in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, have been accustomed to present addresses to the Throne on suitable occasions. In 1909 permission was given by His Majesty to the body known as the Committee of Deputies of Protestant Dissenters, representing the congregations of the same three denominations in and within twelve miles of London, to unite with the former body in presenting addresses. (This information is derived from the clerk of the former and the secretary of the latter body.) In 1901 invitations to attend the coronation of His present Majesty were sent to representatives of the provincial churches through the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales. (Information derived from secretary.)

(b) The oaths were those contained in stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 1, and the declaration that contained in stat. (1678) 30 Car. 2, stat. 2, c. 1.

(c) The statutes from the penalties imposed by which relief was given included the Act of Uniformity, 1558 (1 Eliz. c. 2), the Conventicles Act, 1670 (22 Car. 2, c. 1), and a number of Acts of the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., and Charles II. directed against Roman Catholics. Further relief from the duty imposed on them by the Act of Uniformity, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 4), was granted by the Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59), which also repealed the other Acts above mentioned.

(d) Promissory Oaths Acts, 1868 and 1871 (31 & 32 Vict. s. 72; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 48).

(e) But the Sovereign himself must be in communion with the Church of England (Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2), s. 3).

(f) But they are not eligible as churchwardens in new parishes created under the Church Building Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38), or the New Parishes Acts, 1843 and 1856 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104).

(g) Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), s. 5.

SECT. 2.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Offices in universities
and schools.

Freedom
from tests.

1574. All offices in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, or the colleges therein, are open to them, except that of Professor of Divinity, or such other offices as are open only to persons in holy orders of the Church of England, or to persons who, being members of the Church of England, have taken a degree in divinity (h). Whether laymen or ministers, they are not debarred from teaching and instructing tutors or schoolmasters (i), and since the Endowed Schools Acts (k) they have been eligible as members of the governing body or as masters of endowed schools, with certain exceptions (l).

1575. Nonconformists who are undergraduates of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham are not to be required to attend any lecture to which they, or if they are not of age, their parents or guardians, object upon religious grounds (m), and similar provision for securing liberty of conscience is made, with certain exceptions, in the case of day and boarding schools under the Endowed Schools Acts (n), and in all public elementary schools under the Elementary Education Acts (o).

(h) Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), ss. 2, 3. So far as college officers are concerned, the Act deals with colleges then subsisting. There is nothing to prevent the creation of new colleges, the officers in which shall be confined to the members of any denomination (R. v. Hertford College (1878), 3 Q. B. D. 693, C. A.). As to university offices at Oxford and Cambridge, see also Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 48), s. 58.

(i) Nonconformist Relief Act, 1779 (19 Geo. 3, c. 44), s. 2.

(k) Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 and 1873 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 87).

(l) The exceptions are set out in the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), s. 8, and include, inter alia, the public schools dealt with in the Public Schools Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 118), choir schools, and schools for the training of ministers of any denomination. As members of the governing body, Nonconformists are in every case eligible except where expressly excluded (ibid., s. 17; and see A.-G. v. St. John's Hospital, Bath (1876), 2 Ch. D. 554). But the constitution of the governing body of schools (1) wholly or partially endowed for charitable uses within fifty years before the passing of the Act, or (2) attached to a cathedral or collegiate church, or (3) belonging to the Quakers or Moravians, or (4) forming part of the foundation of any college at Oxford and Cambridge, could not be altered under the Act (ibid., s. 14); see A.-G. v. Christ's Hospital (Governors), [1896] 1 Ch. 879. As to masterships, the obligation of obtaining the licence from the ordinary was formerly a bar to their being held by Nonconformists. This obligation, which was enjoined by Elizabeth in 1558, was the subject of Canon 77 of the year 1603, and was recognised by statute—for instance, by the Grammar Schools Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 77). The Nonconformist Relief Act, 1779 (19 Geo. 3, c. 44), expressly abstained from opening such masterships to Nonconformists except in the case of schools founded since 1688 for the immediate use and benefit of Protestant Dissenters (ibid., s. 3).

The abolition by the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), of the obligation to obtain the licence of the ordinary (ibid., s. 21), and of any necessity for the master to be in holy orders (ibid., s. 18), has now opened all masterships to Nonconformists, except in the cases set out in ibid., ss. 8, 14, supra. See generally, title EDUCATION.

(m) Universities Tests Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 26), s. 7.

(n) Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), ss. 15, 16. For the exceptions, see ibid., ss. 8, 14, and note (l), supra. See also p. 805, ante; and, generally, title EDUCATION.

(o) Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 7.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Ministers.

SECT. 2.

Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Ministers.

Privileges

1576. Protestant Nonconformist ministers (p) enjoy the same civil rights as laymen, save that they are ineligible, while holding a pastoral charge, for the offices of borough councillor or auditor (q). They may be required by any justice of the peace to make a prescribed declaration of faith (r), and if upon being so required they refuse to do so, they are liable to a fine every time they are convicted of preaching or teaching in a certified place of worship until they make the required declaration (s).

They are entitled to require a justice of the peace to administer the declaration to them (t), and to receive from him a certificate that they have made it (a). Ministers who have made the declaration are exempted from serving upon any jury (b), and from being chosen or appointed to bear the office of churchwarden, overseer of the poor, or any other parochial or ward office, or other office in any hundred of any shire, city, town, parish, division, or wapentake (c), and from serving in the militia (d). They are protected from molestation or interference while conducting a religious service either in a place of public worship or burial ground (e). But it is an offence for anyone to teach or preach in a congregation or assembly

(p) The mode of address commonly adopted by a Nonconformist minister, namely, "the Reverend . . ." is legally unimpeachable. The word "reverend" is not a title of honour or dignity appropriate only to those in holy orders of the Church of England, but an epithet—an adjective word as a laudatory or complimentary epithet, a mark of respect and of reverence, as the name imports, but nothing more (Kent v. Smith (1876), 1 P. D. 73, 79, P. C.).

(q) Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 12 (1) (b), 25 (2). But an occasional preacher, even where there is an agreement to preach for a congregation for six months, is not disqualified (R. v. Oldham (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 290).

(r) Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 5. The declaration is that prescribed by the Nonconformist Relief Act, 1779 (19 Geo. 3, c. 44). They cannot, however, be required to go more than five miles from home for the purpose of taking it (Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 6). This does not apply to Quakers; see p. 822, post. The making of the declaration has long been obsolete.

(s) The amount of the fine may be from 10s. to £10 (ibid., s. 5).

(t) Ibid., s. 7.

(a) Ibid., s. 8. A fee of 2s. 6d. may be charged for the certificate, the form of which is set out in this section. The declaration is in the following terms:—"I, A. B. do solemnly declare in the presence of Almighty God that I am a Christian and a Protestant, and as such that I believe that the Scripture of the Old and New Testament as commonly received among Protestant Churches contain the revealed will of God, and that I do receive the same as the Rule of my Doctrine and Practice."

(b) Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), s. 8; Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), s. 9, sched., the words of the latter being "Ministers of any congregation of Protestant Dissenters whose place of meeting is duly registered, provided they follow no secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster." In practice all recognised ministers are exempt, without making the declaration.

(c) Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), s. 8.

(d) Nonconformist Relief Act, 1779 (19 Geo. 3, c. 44), s. 1.

(e) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 36. This Act makes such an offence an indictable misdemeanor. Under the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2, the same offence is punishable summarily; see p. 817, post.

SECT. 2.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

in any place without the consent of the occupier of the premises (f), or in any place with the doors locked, bolted, barred, or fastened (g), except a private dwelling-house or the premises belonging thereto, or a place not usually appropriated to purposes of public worship (h).

Appointment.

1577. The appointment of a Protestant Nonconformist minister to a particular pastorate and his tenure thereof are dependent upon the terms of the trust, if any, by which it is maintained (i). If there is no trust deed, or if the trust deed is silent upon these matters, they are to be decided by the usage of the religious body to which the congregation adheres (k). There must, where necessary, be an inquiry into what that usage is (l); and if upon inquiry there appears to be a divergence between the doctrines professed by the founders of the pastorate and those of the subsisting trustees, the court will decide in favour of the course which will give effect to the intentions of the founders (m); though where a usage of twenty-five years is proved, that usage may be continued (n).

Where the appointment is vested in trustees, a succession of trustees of the same persuasion as the original office holders is contemplated (o). Accordingly, upon the decease of all the original trustees the duties of the office do not devolve upon the personal representative of the last survivor, but if there is no provision for the creation of fresh trustees inquiry must be held as to the proper mode of appointing them (p).

Where the pastorate is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, the right of appointing a minister, where there is no provision to the contrary, is in the congregation (q). In such case the minister will be elected by the majority of the congregation (r), and if there is a doubt as to what persons are entitled to participate in the election as members of the congregation, reference must be made to the facts of the particular case, including the rules, if any, of the religious body with which the pastorate is associated (s).

(f) Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 3. The penalty for the offence is from £2 to £30, in the discretion of the convicting magistrates.

(g) Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 11. The penalty is from £2 to £20 (ibid.).

(h) Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86), s. 1 (2), (3).

(i) A.-G. v. Pearson (1817), 3 Mer. 363; Perry v. Shipway (1859), 4 De G. & J. 353, C. A.

(k) A.-G. v. Pearson, supra.

(l) Davis v. Jenkins (1814), 3 Ves. & B. 151; A.-G. v. Pearson, supra.

(m) A.-G. v. Pearson, supra; Foley v. Wontner (1820), 2 Jac. & W. 245; A.-G. v. Aust (1865), 13 L. T. 235; compare Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly) v. Overtoun (Lord), [1904] A. C. 515.

(n) Nonconformists Chapels Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 45), commonly called Lord Lyndhurst's Act. See pp. 369, 370, ante.

(o) Davis v. Jenkins, supra.

(p) Ibid.

(q) Ibid.; Porter v. Clarke (1829), 2 Sim. 520.

(r) Ibid.; compare Cooper v. Gordon (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 249.

(s) Leslie v. Burnie (1926), 2 Russ. 114, where persons who were hirers of pews and occupiers of seats in a building held in trust for the use of the congregation, but who did not take the sacrament there, were excluded from electing a minister, and upon applying for an injunction to restrain the person elected from acting as minister were refused.

The mode of election, where merely customary and not prescribed, may be altered, if the alteration is agreed to by all the candidates and approved by a resolution passed at a public meeting of those entitled to vote (f).

SECT. 2.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

1578. The eligibility of a particular candidate for any particular pastorate is determined upon general principles, by reference to the terms of the trust under which it was created, and by his acceptance of the formularies of the religious body to which it is attached (a).

Qualification.

Where membership of or communion with a specified religious body is a condition precedent to a person's holding the office of pastor, one who by his opinions or actions disavows such membership or communion is absolutely disqualified (b); and if already in office will be removed (c). An injunction to restrain trustees from electing such a person may be granted (d).

1579. The usual method for determining the validity of an election to an office of a public character is an application for a writ of mandamus (e), and where there are not sufficient grounds to justify the issue of that writ, the court may entertain a suit to establish the right to elect (f). Pending a decision as to the validity of his appointment, a minister will in general be permitted to officiate, and is entitled to be paid his salary while he continues to do so (g). If, however, he is not acting properly, he will be restrained from officiating at all (h).

Legal remedy.

1580. Unlike a beneficed minister of the Church of England, a Nonconformist minister, in the absence of a special usage or agreement between the parties, holds his pastorate at the will of the persons who appointed him (i), whether they are the trustees in whom the building in which he officiates is vested (k), or the congregation

Tenure of office and buildings.

(f) Davies v. Banks (1836), 5 L. J. (OH.) 274.

(a) Milligan v. Mitchell (1833), 1 My. & K. 446.

(b) A.-G. v. Murdoch (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 86, C. A.

(c) Ibid.; A.-G. v. Munro (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 122. Trustees who are parties to an attempt by a minister who is thus disqualified to retain his office may also be removed (A.-G. v. Murdoch, supra). See also Broom v. Summers (1840), 11 Sim. 353; contra, Westwood v. McKie (1869), 21 L. T. 165.

(d) Milligan v. Mitchell, supra. Such a person may, however, be allowed to officiate pending the election (ibid.).

(e) Davis v. Jenkins (1814), 3 Ves. & B. 151, compare R. v. Barker (1762), 1 Wm. Bl. 300, 352. As to the remedy by mandamus, see R. S. C., Ord. 53, rr. 1—4, and title CROWN PRACTICE, Vol. X., pp. 77 et seq.

(f) Davis v. Jenkins, supra.

(g) Foley v. Wotner (1820), 2 Jac. & W. 247; Daugars v. Rivaz (1860), 28 Beav. 233; see also Milligan v. Mitchell, supra; contra, Cooper v. Whitehouse (1834), 6 O. & P. 545, which was not, however, decided upon the merits, but upon the joinder as defendants in an action for debt of two trustees who had not been parties to the appointment.

(h) Perry v. Shipway (1859), 4 De G. & J. 353, C. A.; Broom v. Summers, supra; A.-G. v. Welsh (1844), 4 Hare, 572.

(i) A.-G. v. Pearson (1817), 3 Mer. 353; Porter v. Clarke (1829), 2 Sim. 520; Doe d. Jones v. Jones (1830), 10 B. & C. 718; Doe d. Nicholl v. McKaay (1830), 10 B. & C. 721; Perry v. Shipway, supra; Cooper v. Gordon (1869), 1 L. R. 8 Eq. 249.

(k) Doe d. Jones v. Jones, supra.

SECT. 3.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

who worship there (l), or both (m). His tenure of the buildings, whether chapel or minister's dwelling-house, may therefore be terminated upon demand (n), and he is not entitled to receive notice or time in which to remove his goods (o). A resolution duly passed by the persons entitled to pass it calling upon a minister to resign is equivalent to dismissal (p). But where there is an agreement between a minister and a body of trustees for the payment of a salary out of the trust funds, and the arrangement amounts to a trust for the benefit of the minister, the court will inquire into the administration of the trust, and if the minister has been dismissed upon insufficient grounds will declare the dismissal void (q). In the absence of any usage or agreement, it is not necessary upon dismissing a minister that any grounds of misconduct should be alleged (r). If, however, such allegations are made, notice should be given to the minister, and he should be allowed an opportunity of meeting them (s).

Procedure
as to dismissal.

Where the constitution of the religious body to which the pastorate is attached provides for a method of procedure in the dismissal of a minister, that procedure must be followed (t). Where a minister has been dismissed and desires to contest the validity of his dismissal, the proper remedy is an action to recover the profits of the office (a). A mandamus to restore him will not be granted except upon clear prima facie evidence of his right (b). Where a minister is in occupation of an unregistered building (c), and upon dismissal declines to relinquish it, possession may be given to the persons in whom the title to it is vested by a court of summary jurisdiction (d).

Right to vote in respect of
residence.

1581. A minister who is appointed for life, and is in occupation of a house the title to which is vested in trustees, has an estate of freehold, and is entitled to a parliamentary vote (e), and a minister appointed and occupying such a house under a deed wherein he was specifically named would be in a similar position (f). But where the minister is not appointed expressly for life, and merely occupies a house as the minister for the time being, the question whether he is entitled to a vote depends upon the usage with regard to the (l) Porter v. Clarke (1829), 2 Sim. 520.

(m) Cooper v. Gordon (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 249.

(n) Doe d. Jones v. Jones (1830), 10 B. & C. 718.

(o) Doe d. Nicholl v. McKaeg (1830), 10 B. & C. 721. Should he return merely to remove his goods and not attempt to exclude the owners of the premises he would probably not be regarded as a trespasser (ibid.).

(p) A.-G. v. Aked (1835), 7 Sim. 321.

(q) Daugars v. Rivaz (1860), 28 Beav. 233.

(r) Cooper v. Gordon, supra.

(s) Dean v. Bennett (1870), 6 Ch. App. 489.

(t) Warren's (Dr.) Case (1835), Grindrod's Compendium, 371; compare Long v. Cape Town (Bishop) (1863), 1 Moo. P. C. C. (N. S.) 411.

(a) R. v. Jotham (1790), 3 Term Rep. 575; Daugars v. Rivaz, supra.

(b) R. v. Jotham, supra.

(c) See p. 817, post. An unregistered building may come within the operation of the Charitable Trusts Act. See Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 9.

(d) Charitable Trusts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136), s. 13.

(e) Burton v. Brooks (1851), 11 C. R. 41.

(f) Rogers on Elections, 17th ed., Vol. I., p. 23; and see title ELECTIONS.

duration of the office, and upon the agreement, if any, with regard to such duration, entered into at the time of his appointment (g).

SECT. 2.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Meeting for religious worship.

1582. No meeting, assembly, or congregation of persons for religious worship may take place with the doors locked, bolted or barred, or fastened so as to prevent the entry of any person (h). Disturbance committed in any place of public worship, whether during a religious service or not, is an offence (i), as also is the molestation of a minister engaged in conducting a religious service, either in a place of public worship or in a burial ground (k).

1583. Places used by Protestant Nonconformists as meeting-places or places of public worship may be registered as such (l).

Places of worship.

Certificates of registration are to be delivered in duplicate to the superintendent registrar of births, deaths, and marriages in the district in which the meeting-place is situated, and must be forwarded by him to the Registrar-General (m), by whom a list of certified places of religious worship is to be from time to time made out (n), and who is to return one copy to the superintendent registrar, to be re-delivered by him to the certifying party (o). A fee of 2s. 6d. is payable to the superintendent registrar when the certificate is delivered to him (p). Upon payment of a like fee to the Registrar-General, a sealed or stamped certificate of registration may be obtained, which is available in evidence at any proceedings (q).

(g) Collier v. King (1861), 11 C. B. (N. S.) 14.

(h) Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 11. The penalty imposed upon the minister conducting service in such conditions is from £2 to £20, and is to be recovered summarily (ibid.). The provision does not, however, apply to Quakers (see p. 822, post).

(i) Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2. The offence is punishable summarily by imprisonment for two months. The Toleration Act, stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18, s. 15, and the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 12, provide for offenders upon proof of the charge before a justice being sent for trial at quarter sessions and on conviction thereat being fined £40. These provisions, however, apply only to places certified under those Acts or registered in accordance with the Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81) (ibid., s. 3).

(k) Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2; see also Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 36; and note (i), p. 664, ante. The remedies granted by the Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), s. 15, or the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 12, and mentioned in the last note, are applicable where the building is certified or registered.

(l) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 2. Meeting-places already certified under the Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), and the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), may be certified and registered under this Act. Meeting-places certified under the Places of Worship Registration Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 36), which is repealed by the Act of 1855, are not to be certified under it, as they are already registered by the Registrar-General. The form to be used is set out in Sched. A of the Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81). As to registration of places of worship belonging to the United Methodist Church, see also United Methodist Church Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. lxxv.).

(m) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 2.

(n) Ibid., s. 7.

(o) Ibid., s. 2.

(p) Ibid., s. 5.

(q) Ibid., s. 11.

SMOT. 3.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Effects of registration.

Advantages of registration.

Notice of the discontinuance of the use of any place for religious worship is to be given (r).

Registration is not compulsory (s), but is attended by certain advantages (t), and worship by more than twenty persons in a building without registration, except in the case of a congregation or assembly for religious worship either (1) meeting in a private dwelling-house or on the premises belonging thereto (a), or (2) meeting occasionally in a building or buildings not usually appropriated to purposes of religious worship (b), renders the occupier of the building, if it is used for such purposes with his consent, liable to penalties (c).

1584. A registered building is exempt from the operation of the Charitable Trusts Acts (d), but the benefit of certain provisions of them may be claimed (e). It may be registered for the purpose of marriages being solemnised there (f). The marriage must take place in the presence of some registrar of the district in which the registered building is situated and of two credible

(r) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 6. The notice is to be given by the person who certified or last certified for registration, or by one of the trustees of the building or the occupier thereof. It is to be sent, on a form set out in Sched. B of the Act, through the superintendent registrar to the Registrar-General.

(s) Ibid. The preamble states that "whereas it is expedient that all places of religious worship, not being churches or chapels of the Established Church, should, if the congregation so desire, but not otherwise, be certified to the Registrar-General, be it therefore enacted," etc.

(t) The benefits given to places certified under the Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), and the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), are enjoyed (Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 3).

a) Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86), s. 1 (2).

(b) Ibid., s. 1 (3).

(c) The penalties are those imposed by the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), s. 2. It was therein provided that no congregation or assembly for religious worship of Protestants at which there shall be present more than twenty persons besides the immediate family and servants of the person in whose house or upon whose premises it takes place should be lawful unless the place was duly certified. The occupier of an uncertified place who permits a congregation or assembly for religious worship to be held there is liable upon summary conviction to a fine of from £1 to £20 (ibid.).

(d) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 9. The exemption includes school-houses and other buildings held upon the same or the like trusts as the registered building itself (Charitable Trusts (Places of Religious Worship) Amendment Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 35), s. 4). Where a Wesleyan chapel settled on the trusts of the Wesleyan model trust deed ceased to be used as a chapel, JOYCE, J., held that if it were sold, the proceeds of sale would be applicable for income, and that, therefore, it remained exempt from the Charitable Trusts Acts, although it had ceased to be registered (Methodist Recorder, December 10th, 1908).

(e) Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 9; Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 64.

(f) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 18. Marriages solemnised before 1855 in a building registered for marriages under this Act, but not otherwise duly certified as required by law, are valid (Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 13). Since that date the building must be a duly registered one, if the marriage is to be valid, but the presumption will be made that it was so unless the contrary is proved (Sichel v. Lambert (1864), 15 C. B. (N. S.) 731. Compare R. v. Cresswell (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 440, Q. A.). As to Quaker marriages, see p. 823, post.

witnesses (g), unless steps have been taken to obtain the benefit of the Marriage Act, 1898 (h), in which case the presence of the registrar is at the option of the contracting parties (i); but the ceremony must take place in the presence of a duly authorised person (k).

SECT. 3.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

A registered building is not assessable to poor rate (l) or highway (m) or general district rate (n). Where the local authority compels the paving or sewerage of private streets, the minister of any building appropriated to religious worship and exempt from poor rate is not to be charged with any part of the expense (o); but such a charge may be made upon the trustees of a chapel (p), except where the Private Street Works Act (q) has been adopted.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Property.

1585. The general principles affecting, on the one hand, the evolution, division, and coalition of churches, and, on the other hand, the holding of property by a church, are dealt with in the introduction (r). Accordingly, it only remains here to apply those principles in conjunction to the property held by the various bodies of Protestant Nonconformists.

Property.

Chapels and meeting-houses established specifically for the benefit of one body of Protestant Nonconformists cannot without a breach of trust be devoted to the use of another body essentially different from the first (s).

(g) Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 20.

(h) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 58. An authorised person must have been appointed by the trustees or other governing body of the building or of some registered building in the same registration district (s. 6), register books must have been supplied and the Registrar-General satisfied that due arrangements for registration provided (s. 7), and any regulation made by the Registrar-General and for the time being in force must be observed (s. 16). Before the ceremony the superintendent registrar's certificate must be delivered to the authorised person (s. 7), and in the course of the ceremony certain declarations must be made by the contracting parties (s. 6), but the form of the ceremony may be in other regards any that the contracting parties see fit to adopt (s. 4).

(i) Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 58), s. 4. But he must attend if required to do so (ibid., s. 10).

(k) Ibid., s. 6 (3). See generally title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(l) Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 30), ss. 1, 2.

(m) Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 27.

(n) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211.

(o) Ibid., s. 151.

(p) Any building not rendered permanently extra commercium may be assessed on an apportionment of expenses for street improvements and the owner or occupier required to pay (Hornsey Local Board v. Brevin (1890), 60 L. J. (M. C.) 48). In the metropolis the wording of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), has led to similar decisions (Caiger v. St. Mary, Islington (Vestry) (1881), 50 L. J. (M. C.) 59; Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379). As to the ownership of a chapel which was a dangerous structure within the Metropolitan Building Acts, see Mourilyan v. Labalmondiers (1861), 1 E. & E. 533.

(q) Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57). This Act expressly includes the trustee as well as the minister of any place appropriated to religious worship and exempt from poor rate in exemption from such expenses (s. 16); see generally title RATES AND RATING.

(r) See pp. 361—370, ante.

(s) Endowments founded for the benefit of persons believing in the Trinity must not be converted to the use of Unitarians (Drummond v. A.-G. (1849), 2 H. L. Cas. 837; Shore v. Wilson, Hewley's (Lady) Charities (1842), 9 Cl. & Fin. 365, H. L.). Nor must endowments founded for the benefit of one body of

SECT. 3.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Effect of schism.

Rights as to meetinghouse.

1586. In the event of a schism among the members of one such body, the fact that the seceding party constitutes a majority either of the trustees or of the congregations does not of itself entitle the majority to claim possession of the premises (t).

The nature of the original constitution must alone be looked to as the guide in such a case (a), and the ratio decidendi must be the inclusion in or exclusion from such constitution of an inherent power of alteration (b). The claims of those who adhere to the original constitution will be enforced unless such an inherent power is proved to exist and to have been exercised by the body authorised in the original constitution to exercise it within such limits as may have been prescribed (c).

1587. In the case of a chapel or meeting-house not held under a trust attaching it to a specific religious body, the same principle will be followed (d). But where it subsists for the common benefit of those who in fact attend it either under no trust at all or under a trust of which the wording is indeterminate, the court will not intervene to enforce the alleged rights of a minority (e), and if it is believers in the Trinity be converted to the use of another body whose system of worship or government is different (Milligan v. Mitchell (1837), 3 My. & Cr. 72); A.-G. v. Welsh (1844), 4 Hare, 572; compare Dill v. Watson (1836), 2 Jo. Ex. 1r. 48, and see A.-G. v. Anderson (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 543). But it has been held that a building originally intended for the use of one section of a religious body (in this case Baptists) might be subsequently used indifferently by another section of the same body (A.-G. v. Gould (1860), 28 Beav. 485; A.-G. v. Etheridge (1862), 32 L. J. (CH.) 161). Such a transfer would now, however, be closely scrutinised; see the cases cited in the next note.

(t) Craigdallie v. Aikman (1813), 1 Dow, 1, H. L.; A.-G. v. Pearson (1817), 3 Mer. 353; Broom v. Summers (1840), 11 Sim. 353; A.-G. v. Aust (1865), 13 L. T. 235; and see Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly) v. Overtoun (Lord), [1904] A. C. 515.

(a) A.-G. v. Pearson, supra, per Lord ELDON, at p. 400.

(b) Craigdallie v. Aikman, supra; Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly) v. Overtoun (Lord), supra, per Lord DAVEY, at p. 645.

(c) Craigdallie v. Aikman, supra, per Lord ELDON, at p. 16: "With respect to the doctrine of English law on this subject, if property was given in trust for A. B. C. etc. forming a congregation for religious worship if the instrument provided for the case of a schism, then the court would act upon it; but if there were no such provision in the instrument and the congregation happened to divide, he did not find that the law of England would execute the trust for a religious society at the expense of a forfeiture of their property by the cestuis que trust for adhering to the opinions and principles in which the congregation had originally united." Cited with approval by the Earl of HALSBURY, L.C., in Free Church of Scotland (General Assembly) v. Overtoun (Lord), supra, at p. 613.

In the case of A.-G. v. Clapham (1853), 10 Hare, 540, a Wesleyan chapel had been founded with the paramount object of association with the general body of Wesleyan Methodists, but the regulations of the general body had been altered in a manner inconsistent with the terms of the trust upon which the particular chapel was held. The court, in deciding to rectify the trust deed of the chapel so as to enable it to be consistent with the regulations of the general body, held that the parties themselves could not have made the requisite alterations, and allowed the costs of a minority who appeared to oppose the rectification.

(d) A.-G. v. Aust, supra. A proposal to transfer a chapel originally founded for the use of Presbyterians or Independents to the exclusive use of one of those bodies is such an alteration of the trust as could not be effected except by a unanimous vote of the congregation (A.-G. v. Anderson, supra).

(e) A.-G. v. Busce (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 563. Where moneys had been from time to time left for the benefit of members of one religious body which in fact made use of a certain chapel, but that chapel was also used by members of required to investigate such a case, the prevailing usage during a period of twenty-five years prior to the inquiry will be accepted as conclusive evidence of the doctrines and system of worship and government for the promotion of which the chapel or meeting-house was founded (f). Where the religious body in whose interests a chapel or meeting-house was founded has ceased to exist, the court will apply the endowment cy-près in favour of another religious body (g).

SECT. 2.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Any freehold, leasehold, copyhold, or customary property acquired by, or by trustees in connection with (h), any congregation or society or body of persons (i) associated for religious purposes as a chapel, meeting-house or other place of religious worship, or as a dwelling-house for the minister of such congregation with offices, garden and glebe or as an endowment or provision for expenses (k), or as a burial ground (l), or as a hall or rooms for the meeting or transaction of business of the congregation, society, or body, or as a place for education of students (k), may be conveyed or assured subject to any trust for the congregation, society, or body of persons, or in favour of the individual members composing it; and the effect of such conveyance or assurance will be not only to vest the estate in the parties named therein as trustees, but also effectually to vest the freehold, leasehold, copyhold, or customary property in their successors in office for the time being with the continuing trustees, if any, successors being chosen and appointed in the manner set out in the conveyance or assurance, or in any separate deed declaring the trusts, or if no such mode is prescribed, then in such manner as shall be agreed upon by the congregation, society, or body (m); and after the expiration of six months from the date of

Vesting of estate in trustees.

Appointment
of successors.

another body, who increased so much in numbers that ultimately the ministers chosen were all of the latter denomination, an attempt made by some who desired strict adherence to the first religious body to obtain control of the endowment was not sanctioned. Compare Westwood v. McKie (1869), 21 L. T. 165, where in a small colony an endowment was created for the benefit of a minister who was to perform the services of the Scottish Church, and the appointment of a minister of the Free Church of Scotland was held not to cause a failure of the charity.

(f) Nonconformists Chapels Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 45), commonly called Lord Lyndhurst's Act; see A.-G. v. Bunce (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 563. In a case where usage for a shorter period than twenty-five years only could be proved, such usage, though not conclusive, might receive recognition by the court according to its length, and a minority that continued to use the chapel in which an altered usage was proved might be held to have acquiesced in the alteration (Cairncross v. Lorimer (1860), 3 Macq. 827, H. L.).

(g) A.-G. v. Daugars (1864), 33 Beav. 621; A.-G. v. Stewart (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 17; A.-G. v. Bunce, supra.

(h) Trustees Appointment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 19), s. 2. This Act is commonly called Fowler's Act.

(i) Such body of persons may comprise several congregations or other sections or divisions or component parts (ibid.).

(k) Ibid.

(l) Trustee Appointment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 26).

(m) The Trustee Appointment Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 28), commonly called Sir Morton Peto's Act, extended to land acquired for a burial ground, whether in use or closed by the Trustee Appointment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 26), as amended by the Trustee Appointment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 19). The Trustee Appointment Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 28), contains provisions for payments in lieu of fines at intervals of forty years in respect of lands of

SECT. 3.
Protestant
Noncon-
formists.

Evidence of
appointment.

the instrument purporting to appoint trustees for such purpose, the persons appearing to be appointed are for the purpose of any sale or mortgage to be deemed to have been validly appointed (n). Every such choice and appointment of a new trustee must be made to appear by some deed under the hand and seal of the chairman of the meeting at which such choice and appointment are made, which must be executed in the presence of the meeting and attested by at least two witnesses, and may be given and must be received in any court as evidence of the truth of the matters contained in it.

Provision of site for place of worship.

1588. The facilities provided by the Places of Worship Sites Acts for the granting by limited owners of lands to be used, as sites for places of worship and for the residence of the ministers thereof (o), are not confined to places of worship and burial grounds to be used in connection with the Church of England, but extend to grants for the benefit of any religious denomination.

Effect of constitution of society.

1589. Save for the due disposal and administration of property, there is no authority in the courts to take judicial cognisance of the rules of a voluntary society entered into merely for the regulation of its own affairs (p), unless such rules, as in the case of the United Methodist Church, have received legislative sanction (q). The other Protestant Nonconformist bodies have not, hitherto obtained such legislative sanction of their rules (r). Accordingly they and the United Methodist Church, in so far as its constitution remains unaffected by statute, are at liberty to exercise all such powers of self-government and discipline as are not inconsistent with their original constitution.

SECT. 4.—Quakers.

Special provisions as to Quakers.

1590. At the present day Quakers remain in a somewhat different position to other Nonconformists. The separate treatment accorded to them by the Toleration Act (s) led to their copyhold or customary tenure (s. 2), and contains in a schedule a form, which may be followed, of memorandum of appointment of new trustees.

(n) Trustees Appointment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 19), s. 6.

(o) See p. 725, ante.

(p) Forbes v. Eden (1867), L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 568, per Lord CRANWORTH, at p. 581.

(q) The United Methodist Church Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. lxxv.), provides inter alia for the union of various Methodist bodies and for future union with other bodies if approved by the Church Conference, for the vesting of all church property in the United Methodist Church, and for the community being able to sue and be sued through its officers.

(r) The rules of such churches are therefore not enforceable except as matters of contract between members who voluntarily subscribe to them. The rules governing the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Churches are to be found in their respective Model Deeds, which contain the trusts upon which their properties are held, and in the minutes of their Annual Conferences respectively. Those governing the Presbyterian Church of England are to be found in the Book of Order published by that Church, and those governing the Baptist Churches in the Baptist Handbook (appearing annually). The position of the Congregationalists or Independents differs from that of the above-mentioned bodies. The unit in their case is the congregation rather than the community. Such rules as they have in common must therefore be regarded as accidental rather than incidental to their constitution.

(s) Stat. (1688) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 12, s. 2. Under this Act Quakers were not required to take the oaths which were necessary in the case of other Dissenters, a special declaration being provided for them by s. 13. This has now been exclusion from the operation of other Acts relating to Protestant Nonconformists, with the result that they alone are not forbidden to hold a meeting, assembly or congregation with the doors locked or barred; and that they cannot be required to make the declaration which may be demanded from dissenting ministers (t). Quakers enjoy special privileges in regard to marriage (u). Their right to contract and solemnise marriages after their own usage has been continuously recognised as valid in law (v). This right is extended to cases where only one of the contracting parties is a Quaker, and even where neither is a Quaker, provided that due notice is given to the superintendent registrar of the district, and at the same time a certificate is produced to him signed by a registering officer of the Society of Quakers, and stating that the notice is authorised under the rules of the society (w). Where notice has been given and the certificate issued, the marriage may take place in a building or place not situated in the district in which either of the contracting parties resides (x). The marriages may also be solemnised by licence, provided that the requirements of the Marriage Registration Act are duly carried out (y).

SECT. 4.
Quakers.

1591. Orders in Council issued for the purpose of discontinuing the use of burial-places, or restraining the creation of new burial-places in certain places, are not to apply to the burial-places of Quakers unless such are expressly mentioned in the Order (a).

Burial-places.

1592. Special provision still exists for the recovery of tithes, payment of which is refused by Quakers (b), but the special repealed by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), and provision is made for the taking of affirmations in place of oaths by persons to whose religious beliefs the taking of oaths is obnoxious (Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), s. 11; Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), s. 1). Special provision was made for the taking of an affirmation instead of the usual parliamentary oaths by such persons on becoming members of Parliament (Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 19), s. 4). Quakers lawfully convicted of having wilfully, falsely, and corruptly affirmed were and are liable to the same penalties as persons found guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury (stat. (1695) 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 34, s. 2; Quakers and Moravians Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 77); Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), s. 1). The effect of the separate treatment was that the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 156), did not apply to Quakers; see s. 14 of that Act.

Tithes.

(t) See p. 813, ante.

(u) Haughton v. Haughton (1824), 1 Mol. 611. See generally title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(v) Their marriages were excluded from the operation of the Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), by s. 31 of that Act, and their validity is specifically recognised by the Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 2; Marriage Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 72), s. 5; stat. (1847) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 58).

(w) Marriage (Society of Friends) Acts, 1860 and 1872 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 18; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 10). As to the duties of the registering officer of the society, see Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), ss. 30, 31, 33, and Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), ss. 26; 28 and generally title REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

(x) Marriage Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 72), s. 5.

(y) Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119), s. 21; see generally title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(a) Burial Acts, 1862 and 1863 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 65, s. 3; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 154, s. 2); see generally title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 527.

(b) Stat. (1695) 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 34, s. 3; stat. (1714) 1 Geo. 1, c. 6, s. 2; see p. 742, ante.

SECT. 4.
Quakers.

provision for the recovery of tithe rentcharge from Quakers, which was included in the Tithe Act, 1836 (c), no longer exists (d), and the former special provisions would only apply to proceedings if such were taken for the recovery of tithe as distinguished from tithe rentcharge (e).

SECT. 5.—Unitarians etc.

Unitarians.

1593. Unitarians and others who deny the doctrine of the Holy Trinity were for many years subject to disabilities (f). These were relieved, so far as immunity from the penalties incurred by not taking oaths that might be required from other Protestant Non-conformists in 1813, and at the present day Unitarians are treated equally with the adherents of all other denominations. There is now no post under the Crown which is not open to them upon making the oath or affirmation required by the Promissory Oaths Act (g).

Persons having no religious belief.

Persons who state that they have no religious belief (h) are now in the same position of equality.

SECT. 6.—Jews.

Legal status.

1594. The legal status and position of the Jews in England is anomalous, owing to historical causes (i). In the year 1290

(c) 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 84.

(d) Tithe Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 8), s. 11.

(e) Ibid., s. 2 (1).

(f) They were unable to take the oaths prescribed by the Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), and, therefore, could not claim to benefit by it. By stat. (1697) 9 Will. 3, c. 35, they were disabled from holding any office, civil, military or ecclesiastical, upon conviction on the oaths of two credible witnesses, and upon a second conviction were disabled from instituting any legal proceedings, or to be the guardian of a child, or executor or administrator, or to receive any legacy or gift by deed, and were liable to three years' imprisonment. No relief was afforded them by the Nonconformist Relief Act, 1779 (19 Geo. 3, c. 44). They were, however, relieved from the disabilities and loss of privilege suffered under the Toleration Act, 1688 (1 Will. & Mar. c. 18), and stat. (1697) 9 Will. 3, c. 35, by stat. (1813) 53 Geo. 3, c. 160 (repealed by Statute Law Revision Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 91)), but it was not until the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), which altered the form of the oaths of allegiance etc., that many public offices were open to them. It would seem that even now their ministers might be called upon to make the declaration which other dissenting ministers may be required by the Places of Religious Worship Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 155), to make. See p. 813, ante.

(g) Oaths of allegiance, official and judicial oaths (Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), ss. 2, 3, 4); as to affirmations, see Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), and title EVIDENCE.

(h) Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), s. 1. Before the passing of this Act, the phrase every "person for the time being permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration instead of taking an oath" (see Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1861 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 19), s. 4; Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), s. 11) did not include an atheist (Clarke v. Bradlaugh (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 38, O. A.). The Oaths Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 39), provides that in the case of a person who is neither a Christian nor a Jew the oath is to be administered in any manner which was at the passing of that Act lawful.

(i) Jews had probably settled in the country from the earliest times, and under the Norman and Angevin kings they were found here in considerable number and had acquired a special status as villeins or bondsmen of the King, being under the King's special protection and, though under strict regulations, entitled to many exemptions from the ordinary law. As villeins of the King their persons and property were at his disposal, and a special court, known as the Edward I. banished them by a royal proclamation or decree, and they do not appear again as a distinct body until the restoration of Charles II., who promised them protection and ordered that they should quietly enjoy the free exercise of their religion (k). Accordingly the Jews who came to this country and their descendants have not as such any special status; if they were born abroad they are aliens, unless they have been naturalised or obtained letters of denization, and have the rights and capacities of other aliens; but if they were born here they have the full rights of natural-born subjects (l).

SMO. 6.
Jews.

1595. Since their return Jews have not been looked upon as a separate nationality or a distinct caste, but as members of a dissenting religious denomination, and they are accordingly described in Acts of Parliament and legal documents as "persons professing the Jewish religion" (a). Their personal capacity is therefore determined by the law of the country of their domicile, even although this may conflict with Jewish law (b), unless the law

Dissenters, not separate nationality.

Exchequer of the Jews, was established in the reign of Richard I. to deal with them. Their rights were further restricted by stat. 54 & 55 Hen. 3 (1270--1) (Rymer's Fœdera, Vol. I., p. 489), which prohibited them from holding lands in fee or having Christian servants, and by the statute "de la Jenerie" or "Statutum Judaismo," which forbade them to practise usury and compelled them to wear yellow badges on their outer garments and pay an annual poll tax to the King. Both these statutes were repealed by the Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59).

(k) They were still subject to the penal laws against recusants and the penalties imposed by the Acts of Uniformity (Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59), s. 2; see p. 811, ante); but from those penalties Jews were practically exempted by the exercise of the dispensing power of the Crown, which was evidenced by two Orders in Council made in their favour by Charles II. in 1673 and James II. in 1685 (see 1 Hag. Con., Appendix, pp. 1, 2; Henriques, The Return of the Jews to England, passim; Lindo v. Belisario (1795), 1 Hag. Con. 216, 217, n.; Re De Wilton, De Wilton v. Montefiore, [1900] 2 Ch. 481, per STIRLING, J., at pp. 489, 490).

(l) See title ALIENS, Vol. I., p. 306, and Henriques, The Jews and the English Law, pp. 63--65, 178; Anon. (1684), Lilly's Practical Register, Vol. I., p. 4; Hells v. Williams (1697), 1 Ld. Raym. 282.

(a) The principal Acts of Parliament referred to are the following:—Stat. (1723) 10 Geo. 1, c. 4 (to explain and amend the Act to oblige persons refusing to take the oaths to register their names and real estates); stat. (1739) 13 Geo. 2, c. 7; stat. (1753) 26 Geo. 2, c. 26; stat. (1753) 26 Geo. 2, c. 33; stat. (1754) 27 Geo. 2, c. 1; Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76); Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85); Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1856 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86); Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 59); Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81); Liberty of Religious Worship Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 86); Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119); Jews Relief Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49); stat. (1860) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 63; stat. (1871) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 19; Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16); Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 58); Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22); Marriage with Foreigners Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 40). On the other hand, the provisions of the Charitable Donations Registration Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 102), are declared not to extend to any funds applicable to charitable purposes for the benefit of any persons of the Jewish nation, but this is the only instance of such an expression in our statute law.

(b) On the other hand, the Marriage Acts expressly exempt Jewish marriages from their provisions and recognise the right of persons professing the Jewish religion to contract and solemnise marriages according to their own usages. Such usages must be proved in the same way as foreign laws are proved, and when proved will be enforced by our courts (Lindo v. Belisario (1795), 1 Hag.

SECT. 6.

Jews.

Toleration
Act.

of the domicile expressly confers some special privilege or exemption upon them (c).

The Toleration Act of 1688 (d), which relieved dissenters from the penalties of the penal laws and legalised their religion, did not legalise the Jewish religion, for it was provided that neither the Act nor anything therein contained should extend or be construed to extend to give any benefit to any papist or any person that should deny the doctrine of the Trinity as declared in the articles of the Church of England (e). The practice of the Jewish religion therefore remained extra legal and unprotected by the law, and in consequence an endowment established or a legacy bequeathed for Jewish religious purposes could not be sanctioned by the courts of law or equity and was liable to be directed to be applied to other purposes (f).

Toleration
extended to the Jews,
1846.

1596. The Toleration Act was in 1846 extended to the Jews by the Religious Disabilities Act of that year, which provided that British subjects professing the Jewish religion should be subject to the same laws in respect to their schools, places for religious worship, education, and charitable purposes as Protestant dissenters from the Church of England. Inasmuch as the Acts of Toleration are liberally interpreted by the courts and even held to be retrospective in their operation (g), Jewish religious endowments and trusts are now recognised and executed by the courts, provided that they can be brought within one of the four categories especially mentioned in this statute (h); and persons who disturb the Con. 218; Goldsmid v. Bromer (1798), 1 Hag. Con. 324; Nathan v. Woolf (1899), 15 T. L. R. 250; Levy v. Solomon (1877), 25 W. R. 842, where it was held that, although the Jewish law recognises legitimation per subsequens matrimonium, the children of a son born before the marriage of their parents cannot share in a bequest by a Jewish testator of his residuary estate to the children of his sons and daughters; Re De Wilton, De Wilton v. Montefiore, [1900] 2 Ch. 481, where it was held that persons professing the Jewish religion who are domiciled in England cannot contract a valid marriage which is permitted by Jewish but forbidden by English law).

(c) They were for a long time after their return excluded from many civil and political rights by reason of the method of administering the oaths or the forms of the oaths, declarations, or tests which were imposed as conditions precedent for the exercise of such rights. It was at one time thought that the Jews, because they were infidels, were perpetui inimici regis et religionis, and as such had no better status than that of alien enemies during time of war—that is to say, that they were without civil rights of any kind whatsoever; but this doctrine, though laid down by Sir EDWARD COKE, has long since been exploded; see Calvin's Case (1608), 7 Co. Rep. 1, 17 a, 1, 17 b; Lilly's Practical Register (1719), Vol. I., p. 4; Wells v. Williams (1697), 1 Salk. 46; Omicund v. Barker (1745), Willes, 538; Henriques, The Jews and the English Law, pp. 185–191.

(d) 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18; see p. 811, ante.

(e) Ibid., s. 17; since repealed by 53 Geo. 3, c. 160, and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48).

(f) Da Costa v. De Pas (1754), Amb. 228, where it was ordered by Lord HARDWICK that a sum of money left by will for the maintenance of a yeshib, or school for daily reading the Jewish law and teaching the tenets of that faith, should be applied to the support of a preacher at the Foundling Hospital, who was to instruct the children under his charge in the Christian religion; Isaac v. Gomperts (1783), Amb. 2nd ed. 228, n.; Re Bedford Charity (Masters etc.) (1819), 2 Swan. 470, 522.

(g) Re Michel's Trust (1860), 28 Beav. 39.

(h) Ibid.

SMO. c.
Jews.

service of the synagogue can be punished in the same way as those who brawl or interfere with the worship in a church or chapel (i). Accordingly, since the year 1846 the Jewish religion has so far become one of the recognised religions of the country that a condition in a will or trust deed providing for the forfeiture of a beneficiary's interest in a fund if he should forsake the Jewish religion or marry a person who does not profess that religion, is valid and will be enforced by the courts (k).

1597. By the Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (l), a Jewish synagogue may be certified in writing to the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, who will then register it in due course. There is, however, no obligation to certify a synagogue, and such a course is optional and not compulsory. The certification and subsequent registration of a building as a synagogue has, however, many advantages. A synagogue, if registered, but not otherwise, is exempt from uninvited interference by the Charity Commissioners (m), and, if exclusively appropriated to public religious worship, from parochial and municipal rates (n). Moreover, it is doubtful whether a synagogue that has not been certified would be entitled to the benefits conferred by s. 2 of the Religious Disabilities Act, 1846 (o), and if it is not so entitled a gift or legacy to it would be void; nor could contracts to hire seats in it be enforced, nor disturbers of its services punished. Furthermore, the minister of a synagogue which is not registered is not exempted from service upon a jury under the Juries Act, 1870 (p).

Registration
of synagogues

1598. With the exception of this exemption from service on a jury the minister of a Jewish synagogue has no special privilege or status by English law, and the tenure of his office is regulated solely by the agreement or contract under which he holds his appointment. The secretary of a synagogue has statutory powers and duties as to the keeping of marriage register books and the due registration of marriages between persons professing the Jewish religion under the provisions of the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (a), but he is not invested with such authority unless and until he has been certified in writing to be the secretary of a synagogue

Status of Jewish minister.

Secretary of synagogue.

(i) As to brawling, see p. 817, ante.

(k) Hodgson v. Hatford (1879), 11 Ch. D. 959; see also Re Joseph, Pain v. Joseph, [1908] 2 Ch. 507, C. A.

(l) 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, s. 2. It had previously been held that a synagogue was not an unlawful establishment (Israel v. Simmons (1818), 2 Stark. 366). As to registration of places of worship generally, see p. 817, ante.

(m) See Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 62; Places of Worship Registration Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 81), s. 9; and Charitable Trusts Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 110), s. 15.

(n) See Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 30); Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 27. As to the exemption of places appropriated to religious worship and the trustees or ministers of such places from improvement rates and charges, see notes (p) and (q), p. 819, ante.

(o) 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59.

(p) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, sched. The words of exemption being "ministers of any congregation of Protestant dissenters and of Jews whose place of meeting is duly registered, provided they follow no secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster."

(a) 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, ss. 30, 33, 36, 40, 42 et seq.

SECT. 6.
Jews.

in England of persons professing the Jewish religion by the president for the time being of the London Committee of Deputies of the British Jews (b). In the year 1842 a congregation of Jews, with a reformed ritual under the title of the West London Congregation of British Jews, was established, and, acting on the advice of the Chief Rabbi and other recognised Jewish ecclesiastical authorities, the president of the London Committee of Deputies of the British Jews refused to certify the secretary of the new congregation under the provisions of the Births and Deaths Registration Act of 1836. Accordingly, by the Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (c), it is enacted that the secretary of the West London Synagogue of British Jews, if certified in writing to the Registrar-General by twenty householders being members of that synagogue, shall be entitled to the same privileges as if he had been certified by the president of the London Committee of Deputies of the British Jews, and is also empowered himself to certify to the Registrar-General any person who is the secretary of a synagogue in connection with the West London Synagogue, if it has been established for not less than one year and comprises not less than twenty members who are householders. And a secretary thus certified is invested with the power and duty of registering marriages under the Act (d).

Concessions in courts of justice.

1599. Since the return of the Jews to England in the reign of Charles II. it has been the custom of the courts, quite apart from any statutory enactments, to comply so far as possible with Jewish religious scruples; for instance, a Jew is and always has been allowed to be sworn as a witness upon the Pentateuch instead of upon the New Testament (e), and arrangements have been made for cases in which Jews are parties or necessary witnesses not to be taken upon a Saturday or other Jewish holiday (f), and a Jew has been excused from giving notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange on a Jewish holiday provided it is his custom to keep his place of business closed on such a day (g).

Elections.

Again, the Ballot Act, 1872, enables voters "of the Jewish persuasion," who object on religious grounds to mark the ballot paper on the Jewish Sabbath, to have, "if the poll be taken on Saturday," their votes recorded by the presiding officer in the same

(b) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 30. The London Committee of Deputies of the British Jews, which has received statutory recognition under this Act, is more generally known by the shorter title of the Board of Deputies. It was founded about the time of the accession of George III., in the year 1760, and is the representative body of the Jews in this country, to which every recognised synagogue in the British Empire is entitled to elect one or more deputies, a general election being held every three years.

(c) 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119.

(d) Ibid., s. 22. See title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(e) Robley v. Langston (1668), 2 Keb. 314. An oath so taken is legal and binding at common law, and a witness so sworn, if he swear falsely, may be indicted and convicted of perjury (2 Hale, P. O. 279; Omicund v. Barker (1745), Willes, 538). Moreover, the Oaths Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 105), provides that any person is bound by an oath provided it has been administered in such form and with such ceremonies as he declares to be binding. See also the Oaths Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 39).

(f) Barker v. Warren (1677), 2 Mod. Rep. 271.

(g) Lindo v. Unsworth (1811), 2 Camp. 602.

way as votes given by persons incapacitated by blindness or other physical cause. It should be observed that this privilege can be exercised by Jews only when the election takes place on a Saturday, and not when it takes place on any other Jewish festival or holiday (h).

Stat. c.
Jews.

1600. An oath should be administered to a Jew in the same form as is used in swearing a Christian, save that where a testament is used the Old Testament is to be used instead of the New Testament (i).

Administration of oath.

1601. Except under the Factories and Workshops Acts, there is no expressed provision exempting Jews from the ordinances against Sunday labour (k). A Jew may hold an advowson and the right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice, but he must of course present a duly qualified person (l). If, however, he holds an office in the gift of the Crown to which a right of presentation to any ecclesiastical benefice is attached, such right devolves and is to be exercised by the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being (m). Nor may a Jew, under penalty of being guilty of a high misdemeanour and disabled from holding any office under the Crown, directly or indirectly advise the Crown concerning the appointment to or disposal of any office or preferment in the Church of England or in the Church of Scotland (n).

Other rights and disabilities.

With these exceptions, Jews are on precisely the same footing in regard to political rights as their Christian fellow-subjects (o).

1602. The English law expressly recognises marriages solemnised according to the usages of the Jews (p).

Marriages.

(h) Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), Sched. I., r. 26. See title ELECTIONS.

(i) See Oaths Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 39), s. 2, and title EVIDENCE.

(k) Goldstein v. Vaughan, [1897] 1 Q. B. 549; and titles TIME; FACTORIES AND SHOPS.

(l) Mirchouse v. Rennell (1833), 7 Bli. (N. S.) 241, 322, H. L.

(m) Jews Relief Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.

(n) Ibid., s. 4. See also title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., p. 394.

(o) Ibid., s. 3, is repealed by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48); see, generally, Henriques, The Jews and the English Law, pp. 194, 195, 261—263. It would be unconstitutional for a Jew to be appointed Lord Chancellor: see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., p. 66.

(p) See stat. (1753) 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, repealed by stat. (1754) 27 Geo. 2, c. 1; Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76); Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85); Marriage and Registration Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 119); Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 58); Marriage with Foreigners Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 40); Lindo v. Belisario (1795), 1 Hag. Con. 216; Goldsmid v. Bromer (1798), 1 Hag. Con. 324; Jones v. Robinson (1815), 2 Phillim. 285; Re De Wilton, De Wilton v. Montefiore, [1900] 2 Ch. 481. See also note (b), p. 825, ante.

Contents of Volume XI

	PAGE
Introductory Essay	I
D. The Story of Inkle and Yarico	7
DI. Sir Roger de Coverley's Wooing	11
DII. Story of Le Fevre	16
DIII. The History of the Man in Black	24
DIV. The Soldier's Story	29
DV. Alcander and Septimus	33
DVI. The Purple Jar	37
DVII. The City of the Demons	43
DVIII. Frank Kennedy	50
DIX. The Gridiron	66
DX. The Story of G��n��vi��ve	73
DXI. Daniel O'Rourke	81
DXII. The Lady of Gollerus	88
DXIII. Th' Stolen Sheep	93
DXIV. The Churchyard Watch	104
DXV. The Dilemma of Phadrig	114
DXVI. A Hero-Worshipper	123
DXVII. The Ghost and the Bone-Setter	137
DXVIII. A Thorough Gentleman	144
DXIX. The Comedy of the Old Love	151
DXX. The Birthday of the Infanta	169
DXXI. Maureen's Fairing	185
DXXII. At the Spotted Lamb	194
DXXIII. The Meeting in the Library	206
DXXIV. A Nursery Tea	211
DXXV. They that Mourn	227
DXXVI. Th' Ould Boy	233
DXXVII. The Reverend Peter Flannery	239
DXXVIII. A Connemara Miracle	244
DXXIX. The Twisting of the Rope	248
DXXX. Rosanna	254
DXXXI. The Bewitched Fiddle	265
DXXXII. The Resurrection of Dinny O'Dowd	273
0XXXIII. Priscilla	282

	PAGE
DXXXIV. The House of Fahy E. Æ. Somerville and
Martin Ross	288
DXXXV. The Breath of Life Daniel Corkery	302
DXXXVI. The Child Saint " "	306
DXXXVII. The City on Mallington Moor Lord Dunsany	311
DXXXVIII. Coronation of Mr. Thomas Shap " "	318
DXXXIX. The Sword and the Idol " "	322
DXL. The Hen " "	327
DXLI. The Assignation " "	328
STORY-TELLERS OF THE OVERSEAS Joseph Clayton	329
DXLII. Sister Sall's Courtship T. C. Haliburton	331
DXLIII. " Midnight " William S. Walker	336
DXLIV. Rodman the Boat-steerer Louis Becke	344
DXLV. The Wild Horse of Tartary Clara Morris	356
DXLVI. A Little Grey Glove George Egerton	362
DXLVII. Freedom of the Black-faced Ram Charles G. D. Roberts	373
DXLVIII. The Pilot at Swan Creek Ralph Connor	383
DXLIX. The Crimson Flag Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart.	391
DL. The Absurd Romance of P'tite
Louison " "	397
DLI. The Singing of the Bees " "	402
DLII. In a Far-off World Olive Schreiner	404
DLIII. The Artist's Secret " "	406
DLIV. Quarantine H. B. Marriott Watson	407
DLV. When the Sun went Down Henry Lawson	421
DLVI. That there Dog o' Mine " "	424
DLVII. The Doctor's Drive Mary Gaunt	426

LIST OF PLATES

Oliver Goldsmith	Frontispiece
Sir Richard Steele	Facing page 12
Laurence Sterne	" " 20
Maria Edgeworth	" " 40
Mrs. Anna Jameson	" " 76
Charles Lever	" " 128
F. Frankfort Moore	" " 160
Katherine Tynan	" " 196
W. B. Yeats	" " 248
Seumas MacManus	" " 268
Dora Sigerson (Mrs. Shorter)	" " 284
Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart.	" " 392
Henry Lawson	" " 421

The Irish Story-Tellers

THE territorial classification of the authors represented in this Library results in the present volume starting off with three of the most famous names in English literature, none of which might immediately occur to the mind in thinking of "The Irish Story-Tellers." And, of course, if we omit the Gaelic school, Irish literature is essentially a part of English literature: there is no Irish short story as distinct from the English short story. A considerable proportion of the tales in the following pages will be found to have no association whatever with scenes of Irish life, although they contain a very interesting collection of short fictions which are both the work of Irish authors and inspired by Irish life and character.

In association with Addison the name of Richard Steele (1672-1729) takes us back to one of the most memorable periods of English letters. In those early years of the eighteenth century the short story was still a somewhat elusive and undeveloped literary form: it was the great day of the essay. Such fictions as Steele wrote are therefore examples of the transition stage from the essay to the tale, and may be described as essay-stories. "Inkle and Yarico," one of the best examples of these, is the artistic expansion of an anecdote, told with a subtle charm of simplicity which lifts it out of the journalism of the day into the realm of enduring things. It has a further claim to inclusion here, as stated by its author, in that it is the counterpart to the classic story "The Widow of Ephesus" (see Volume 1). In "Sir Roger de Coverley's Wooing" we scent the fragrance of a vanished day and find the short story as a vehicle for the portrayal of character already adequate in form even though the method is still that of the essay.

AS an illustration of the triumph of style over matter, no more delightful piece could be quoted than "The Story of Le Fevre" by Laurence Sterne (1713-1768). This, of course, is one of those few exceptions in the Library where a short complete tale has been chosen from a long work of fiction, "The Story of Le Fevre" being culled from "Tristram Shandy." It contains a minimum of incident, but what a world of kindly nature stands revealed in the reading of these half-dozen pages! They recall curiously to the present writer something of the emotional satisfaction with which he first read Pierre Loti's wonderful description of Sylvestre's leave-taking, in "Pêcheur d'Islande," an incident of the most ordinary kind, which by the sheer genius of the author's literary treatment is transmuted into a triumph of art.

Oliver Goldsmith (1728-1774), who was born just a year before Sir Richard Steele died, is yet another of the great writers of the past whose works provide us with specimens of the essay-story.

Entirely typical of this is "The Story of the Man in Black," Goldsmith presenting in the form of a brief fiction a philosophic view of life that is tinged with cynicism but must be accepted as a true commentary on human hypocrisy. "The Soldier's Story," by the same author, is not a short story at all in the strict modern sense, but comes very near to being a picaresque "novel in a nutshell." It is a wonderfully compressed narrative of vagabond life, valuable as a picture of the times and pathetic in its simplicity: reasons which have been held sufficient to justify its inclusion in this collection. Another form of early short story is also taken from the works of Goldsmith, who in "Alcander and Septimius" provides an example of the apologue notable for a certain classic stiffness but also for charm of style and some ingenuity of plot.

ONE of the classic writers of Ireland is Maria Edgeworth (1767-1849), yet though her name is associated with numerous short stories it is found on critical analysis of these that few of them possess the qualities necessary for admission to such an assembly as the present, while those that do have suffered from the Maria Edgeworth prolixity of their time. From her children's stories, however, one is selected that must be familiar to many readers. Somewhat naive both in plot and telling, "The Purple Jar" has a charm of childish days which marks it out for memory. When we turn to "The City of Demons" we touch the work of a very remarkable Irishman whose name was at one time familiar to English readers by reason of its association with Blackwood's and Fraser's.

William Maginn, who was born in Cork, 1793, and died in London, August 20, 1842, was one of the most variously gifted of Irishmen and seemed to possess every quality except the ability to order his own affairs wisely, resembling in this his more famous countryman, Goldsmith. In "The City of Demons" Maginn is also bent upon the apologue, but this time it is of the Eastern type, always the more acceptable, and with great skill he has caught the quaintness of the oriental manner.

THERE is a complete change both of spirit and atmosphere in the next story of our series, "Frank Kennedy" by W. Hamilton Maxwell (1794-1850). Here we have an admirably constructed short story in the historical manner. Maxwell was probably the first of our writers to develop the military novel, which in the hands of James Grant became so widely popular. His "Stories of Waterloo," from which "Frank Kennedy" is taken, is a work that has been curiously neglected by the reprinters of our standard authors, who have found ready audiences for much matter of far less literary and historic value. With Samuel Lover (1797-1868) we arrive at an author who is Irish of the Irish. All his writings were aimed at expressing Irish character in an Irish way, and immensely popular though he was as recently as thirty or forty years ago, much that he wrote now seems to belong to a very remote day. Humour is a quality curiously apt to go out of fashion unless it be entirely of the mind. Lover's story of "The Gridiron" is just a good old Irish anecdote told in a rollicking manner reminiscent of "Handy Andy," and the humour of it happens to be quite fresh, in which it differs from most of his other short stories. Here one might have expected an example from William Carleton, whose tales of the Irish peasantry used to be so popular; but careful examination of his work has failed to discover an example suitable for inclusion, as they lack both invention and narrative art, and are told with unnecessary circumlocution. There is movement and literary grace, however, in "The Story of Genevieve" by Mrs. Anna Jameson (1797-1860), whose "Characters of Shakespeare's Women" is still a popular classic. This is an old-fashioned romantic fiction and not the less charming on that account, but the author was evidently distrustful of her power to illustrate movement by dialogue, in which the real art of the short story abides. There is the true Irish flavour in "Daniel O'Rourke," the first of two excellent stories by Crofton Croker (1798-1854), famous as a folklorist and author of "Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland." The Quarterly said aptly of "Daniel O'Rourke": "It is a fine Dutch picture of nightmare; rivalling in its way the sublimed vision of Burns." Croker's other story, "The Lady of Gollerus," is a fairy tale of sorts, racy of the Irish fisher folk, and might well have served as germ of the idea which Mr. H. G. Wells used with so much humour and ingenuity in "The Lady from the Sea."

Lover

Mrs.
Jameson

Croker

Banim and Griffin

AN author of considerable popularity in the days of the "Annuals" was John Banim (1798-1842), whose "Tales of the O'Hara Family" had quite a vogue. The two examples of his work here are chosen almost as much for their historical value as for their literary qualities. "The Stolen Sheep" is a good straightforward tale of the hungry times in Ireland, and has both atmosphere and movement; while "The Churchyard Watch," though it cannot be considered an artistic success, is historically important, and from the literary point of view interesting as realising a situation full of tragic possibilities which, in the hands of a more skilled or indeed any present day story-writer, could be developed with thrilling effect. Gerald Griffin (1803-1846) was a young Irishman of much literary promise, whose story "The Collegians" has still a certain popularity as the "Colleen Bawn." "The Dilemma of Phadrig," an excellent peasant tale, is the best example of Griffin's work in the short story. The fairy doctor plays the part of the Medicine Man of the savages, and the way out of the situation realised by the story-teller is of a piece with the superstition of the times in which it was written. "A Hero Worshipper" by Charles James Lever (1809-1872) introduces one of the most notable figures among modern Irish authors. Lever's famous stories, such as "Harry Lorrequer," "Charles O'Malley," and half a-dozen others which the reader will readily remember, did in many ways for Ireland what the Waverley Novels did for Scotland. Lever was one of the great novelists in his splendid virility, his breadth of view, his rich imagination, and the vigour of his style. He belonged to the grand school of novel writers that flourished in mid-Victorian days and the tradition of which is being maintained by none of our contemporary writers. "A Hero Worshipper" is selected from his volume "Cornelius O'Dowd," which consists chiefly of stories and sketches originally contributed to Blackwood's, and in this we have the real stuff: clever characterisation, brisk and confident narrative, rich humour.

IN the middle years of last century and particularly among Irish and Scottish writers ghost stories and tales of the supernatural were so frequently forthcoming that there must have been a wide demand for them. Among the Irish writers who penned many tales of the supernatural was the novelist Sheridan Le Fanu (1814-1873), and he fortunately combined with an ability to thrill his readers an admirable sense of humour, both qualities being well illustrated in "The Ghost and the Bone-Setter." Canon Sheehan (1852-1913) never had any considerable popularity among English readers, but his name and works are treasured among his countrymen and co-religionists, and "A Thorough Gentleman" will show that he could tell an interesting story and display at the same time a certain sardonic wit. In Mr. Frankfort Moore we seem to touch our own day for the first time. One of the most popular of modern authors, Mr. Moore is a good Irishman who has written tales of many lands and different times, but has always seemed to move with most confident step in the gallant days of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. "The Comedy of the Old Love" is typical of Mr. Moore's very distinguished gifts of story-telling. And what a piece of perfect beauty in the realm of the fairy story is "The Birthday of the Infanta" from Oscar Wilde's "House of Pomegranates." "Maureen's Fairing," by Jane Barlow, is a good example of that delightful writer's work, which was always essentially Irish in inspiration and in manner. Mrs. Hinkson (Katharine Tynan, b. 1861), on the other hand, is an Irish novelist of wide and established popularity, who most usually seeks her scenes and characters elsewhere than in her native land. Her two stories here reprinted, "At the Spotted Lamb" and "The Meeting in the Library," are happily contrasted, the one being touched with romance and gaiety and the other awakening deeper emotions. "Richard Dehan" (b. 1864) is another brilliant novelist of Irish origin who has drawn but little upon her native land for the scenes and characters of her books. "Richard Dehan" had written much and well in the way of the short story long before winning fame as a "full-length" novelist, and "A Nursery Tea," for invention, characterisation, and smoothness of form, is probably as good a short story of its length as one could find. Mr. Shan Bullock (b. 1865) is an admirable Irish writer who has gone back to the scenes of his youth for most of his tales, and is probably discovered at his best in such examples as the two from "Ring o' Rushes" included in this volume. Frank Mathew (b. 1865) also seeks to interpret Irish life and character in the same way, and it would be difficult to find other two such perfect idylls of Ireland as "The Reverend Peter Flannery" and "The Connemara Miracle," selected from his delightful book "At the Rising of the Moon."

Richard
Dehan

Shan
Bullock

Mathew

NO living writer, of course, has done more to revivify in Ireland a sense of the old national things than her most eminent living poet, Mr. W. B. Yeats (b. 1865). Chiefly in the theatre he has sought to effect that national literary revival which others have been quick to turn to political ends. "The Twisting of the Rope," which is selected from his "Tales of Red Hanrahan," is a poet's way of telling an old folk story, and very charming and characteristic it must be pronounced. It is rather in favour of our territorial classification that Mrs. Agnes Castle, whom we usually think of as part author with her husband, Egerton Castle, of the daintiest "costume" romances set in old English scenes, should appear, when bracketed with her fellow-countrymen in this volume, as the author of an essentially Irish and very beautiful and moving short story. Seumas MacManus, of course, is Irish to the core in all his writings, and has confined himself to the telling of tales of his native countryside. He could not have done better, as his gifts for this particular and desirable work are high, and if he has not won, or tried to win, a wide audience in the other British Isles for his tales of Irish peasantry, he has achieved both fame and popularity with the much wider reading public of the United States. "The Bewitched Fiddle," delightfully told as it is and full of humour, is probably based upon some old story which its author heard in his boyhood, and "The Resurrection of Dinny O'Dowd," so admirably narrated, has no doubt germinated from some popular local story of the people. A pure work of the imagination and a short story of true tenderness and real beauty is the late Mrs. Shorter's "Priscilla." Dora Sigerson Shorter was one of the sweetest singers of Ireland and a lady who burned with the intensest enthusiasm for all things Irish. In her all too short life she won a

W. B.
Yeats

Agnes Castle

MacManus

Dora
Sigerson Shorter

measure of fame with her poetry which will endure and grow, for she had vision and music, and perhaps the attraction of her poetry has a little obscured her remarkable work in prose, of which "The Father Confessor and Other Stories" is sufficient to mark the writer out from the ordinary ruck of story-tellers. It is from that volume that the beautiful story of "Priscilla" is reprinted.

PROBABLY no popular writers of our time are more representative of their native country in the mind of the reading public than the two gifted Irish ladies who have added so considerably to the gaiety of our literature under the style of "E. C. Somerville and

Somerville and Ross

Martin Ross." "The Experiences of an Irish R. M." is one of the modern classics of humour and the life joyous.

All the writings of these admirable literary partners are informed with the best of high spirits and a fresh and lively wit. "Martin Ross" was the pen-name of Miss Violet Florence Martin, who died in December 1915, and whose biography has been so sympathetically written by her surviving colleague. "The House of Fahy" illustrates their delightful art at its best, and to the few who are unacquainted with their work it is a certain appetiser for more, while to those who are familiar with it the story will stand a second or a third or even a fourth reading, which is the real "acid test" of merit. In a totally different way from these gay chroniclers of one of the most fascinating aspects of Irish country life, Mr. Daniel Corkery, an Irish writer of more recent reputation, is equally interpretative of his native land.

Daniel
Corkery

The greyer things of Ireland, the shadowed lives of its poorer classes, have found in him an exponent whose art is entirely admirable and whose sympathy is profound. Humour of the deeper sort, of course, is by no means absent even from the tragic side of Irish life, and there is a pleasant touch of it in "The Breath of Life," but "The Child Saint" is of sentiment all compact. Each is a perfect study in its way and representative of Mr. Corkery's very fine work, "A Munster Twilight." There is nothing at all that is Irish in the very remarkable work of Lord Dunsany unless it be the wonderful imaginative qualities of his tales. He holds a place in our later literature that is unique, and he is a master of the most beautiful and sensuous style. One reads his books as much for their manner as for their matter, and the least thing that he has written has distinction: he is essentially an artist in words. Lord Dunsany's effects are all achieved with an ideal economy of description, and yet there is no touch that seems lacking to the completeness of the picture he sets out to paint. The group of selections from his various writings here given will serve well to show the wide range of his imagination from the weird fancy of "Mallington Moor" and the sardonic humour of "Coronation of Mr. Thomas Shap" to the biting satire of "The Hen."

Dunsany

J. A. H.

SIR RICHARD STEELE

1672-1729

THE STORY OF INKLE AND YARICO

ARIETTA is visited by all persons of both sexes, who have any pretence to wit and gallantry. She is in that time of life which is neither affected with the follies of youth, nor infirmities of age ; and her conversation is so mixed with gaiety and prudence, that she is agreeable both to the young and the old. Her behaviour is very frank, without being in the least blamable : and as she is out of the track of any amorous or ambitious pursuits of her own, her visitants entertain her with accounts of themselves very freely, whether they concern their passions or their interests. I made her a visit this afternoon, having been formerly introduced to the honour of her acquaintance by my friend Will Honeycomb, who has prevailed upon her to admit me sometimes into her assembly, as a civil inoffensive man. I found her accompanied with one person only, a commonplace talker, who, upon my entrance, arose, and after a very slight civility sat down again ; then, turning to Arietta, pursued his discourse, which I found was upon the old topic of constancy in love. He went on with great facility in repeating what he talks every day of his life ; and with the ornaments of insignificant laughs and gestures, enforced his arguments by quotations out of plays and songs, which allude to the perjuries of the fair, and the general levity of women. Methought he strove to shine more than ordinarily in his talkative way, that he might insult my silence, and distinguish himself before a woman of Arietta's taste and understanding. She had often an inclination to interrupt him, but could find no opportunity, till the larum ceased of itself, which it did not till he had repeated and murdered the celebrated story of the Ephesian Matron.

Arietta seemed to regard this piece of raillery as an outrage done to her sex ; as indeed I have always observed that women, whether out of a nicer regard to their honour, or what other reason I cannot tell, are more sensibly touched with those general aspersions which are cast upon their sex, than men are by what is said of theirs.

When she had a little recovered herself from the serious anger she was in, she replied in the following manner :

“ Sir, when I consider how perfectly new all you have said on this subject is, and that the story you have given us is not quite two thousand years old, I cannot but think it a piece of presumption to dispute it with you ; but your quotations put me in mind of the fable of the lion and the man. The man walking with that noble animal, showed him, in the ostentation of human superiority, a sign of a man killing a lion. Upon which, the lion said very justly, ‘ We lions are none of us painters, else we could show a hundred men killed by lions for one lion killed by a man.’ You men are writers, and can represent us women as unbecoming as you please in your works, while we are unable to return the injury. You have twice or thrice observed in your discourse that hypocrisy is the very foundation of our education ; and that an ability to dissemble our affections is a professed part of our breeding. These and such other reflections are sprinkled up and down the writings of all ages by authors, who leave behind them memorials of their resentment against the scorn of particular women, in invectives against the whole sex. Such a writer, I doubt not, was the celebrated Petronius, who invented the pleasant aggravations of the frailty of the Ephesian lady ; but when we consider this question between the sexes, which has been either a point of dispute or raillery ever since there were men and women, let us take facts from plain people, and from such as have not either ambition or capacity to embellish their narrations with any beauties of imagination. I was the other day amusing myself with Ligon’s Account of Barbadoes ; and, in answer to your well-wrought tale, I will give you (as it dwells upon my memory) out of that honest traveller, in his fifty-fifth page, the history of Inkle and Yarico.

“ Mr. Thomas Inkle, of London, aged twenty years, embarked in the Downs, on the good ship called the Achilles, bound for the West Indies, on the 16th of June, 1647, in order to improve his fortune by trade and merchandise. Our adventurer was the third son of an eminent citizen, who had taken particular care to instil into his mind an early love of gain, by making him a perfect master of numbers, and consequently giving him a quick view of loss and advantage, and preventing the natural impulses of his passions by prepossession towards his interests. With a mind thus turned, young Inkle had a person every way agreeable, a ruddy vigour in his countenance, strength in his limbs, with ringlets of fair hair loosely flowing on his shoulders. It happened, in the course of the voyage, that the Achilles, in some distress, put into a creek on the main of America, in search of provisions. The youth, who is the hero of my story, among others went on shore on this occasion. From their first landing they were observed by a party of Indians, who hid themselves in the woods for that purpose. The English unadvisedly marched a great distance from the shore into the country, and were intercepted by the natives, who slew the greatest number of them. Our adventurer escaped among others, by flying into a forest. Upon his coming into a remote and pathless part of the wood, he threw himself, tired and breathless, on a little hillock, when an Indian maid rushed from a thicket behind him. After the first surprise they appeared mutually agreeable to each other. If the European was highly charmed with the limbs, features, and wild graces of the naked American ; the American was no less taken with the dress, complexion, and shape of an European, covered from head to foot. The Indian grew immediately enamoured of him, and consequently solicitous for his preservation. She therefore conveyed him to a cave, where she gave him a delicious repast of fruits, and led him to a stream to slake his thirst. In the midst of these good offices, she would sometimes play with his hair, and delight in the opposition of its colour to that of her fingers : then open his bosom, then laugh at him for covering it. She was, it seems, a person of distinction, for she every day came to him in a different dress, of the most beautiful shells, bugles,¹ and bredeas.² She likewise brought him a great many spoils, which her other lovers had presented to her, so that his cave was richly adorned with all the spotted skins of beasts, and most party-coloured feathers of fowls, which that world afforded. To make his confinement more tolerable, she would carry him in the dusk of the evening, or by the favour of moonlight, to unfrequented groves and solitudes, and show him where to lie down in safety, and sleep amidst the falls of waters and melody of nightingales. Her part was to watch and hold him awake in her arms, for fear of her countrymen, and wake him on occasions to consult his safety. In this manner did the lovers pass away their time, till they had learned a language of their own, in which the voyager communicated to his mistress how happy he should be to have her in his country, where she should be clothed in such silks as his waistcoat was made of, and be carried in houses drawn by horses, without being exposed to wind or weather. All this he promised her the enjoyment of, without such fears and alarms as they were there tormented with. In this tender correspondence these lovers lived for several months, when Yarico, instructed by her lover, discovered a vessel on the coast, to which she made signals ; and in the night, with the utmost joy and satisfaction, accompanied him to a ship's crew of his countrymen bound to Barbadoes. When a vessel from the main arrives in that island, it seems the planters come down to the shore, where there is an immediate market of the Indians and other slaves, as with us of horses and oxen.

¹ Beads.

² Braids.

“ ‘ To be short, Mr. Thomas Inkle, now coming into English territories, began seriously to reflect upon his loss of time, and to weigh with himself how many days' interest of his money he had lost during his stay with Yarico. This thought made the young man very pensive, and careful what account he should be able to give his friends of his voyage. Upon which consideration, the prudent and frugal young man sold Yarico to a Barbadian merchant ; notwithstanding that the poor girl, to incline him to commiserate her condition, told him that she was with child by him : but he only made use of that information to rise in his demands upon the purchaser.’ ”

I was so touched with this story (which I think should be always a counterpart to the Ephesian Matron) that I left the room with tears in my eyes, which a woman of Arietta's good sense did, I am sure, take for greater applause than any compliments I could make her.

SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY'S WOOING

SIR RICHARD STEELE

THE first of our society is a gentleman of Worcestershire, of ancient descent, a baronet, his name Sir Roger de Coverley. His great grandfather was inventor of that famous country-dance which is called after him. All who know that shire are very well acquainted with the parts and merits of Sir Roger. He is a gentleman that is very singular in his behaviour, but his singularities proceed from his good sense, and are contradictions to the manners of the world only as he thinks the world is in the wrong. However, this humour creates him no enemies, for he does nothing with sourness or obstinacy ; and his being unconfined to modes and forms makes him but the readier and more capable to please and oblige all who know him. When he is in town he lives in Soho Square.

It is said, he keeps himself a bachelor by reason he was crossed in love by a perverse beautiful widow of the next county to him. Before this disappointment, Sir Roger was what you call a fine gentleman, had often supped with my lord Rochester and Sir George Etherege, fought a duel upon his first coming to town, and kicked Bully Dawson in a public coffee-house for calling him youngster. But being ill-used by the above-mentioned widow, he was very serious for a year and a half ; and though, his temper being naturally jovial, he at last got over it, he grew careless of himself and never dressed afterwards ; he continues to wear a coat and doublet of the same cut that were in fashion at the time of his repulse, which, in his merry humours, he tells us, had been in and out twelve times since he first wore it. . . .

He is now in his fifty-sixth year, cheerful, gay, and hearty, keeps a good house in both town and country ; a great lover of mankind ; but there is such a mirthful cast in his behaviour, that he is rather beloved than esteemed. His tenants grow rich, his servants look satisfied, all the young women profess love to him, and the young men are glad of his company. When he comes into a house he calls the servants by their names, and talks all the way upstairs to a visit. I must not omit that Sir Roger is a justice of the Quorum ; that he fills the chair at a quarter-session with great abilities, and three months ago gained universal applause by explaining a passage in the game-act. . . .

I mentioned a great affliction which my friend Sir Roger had met with in his youth ; which was no less than a disappointment in love. It happened this evening that we fell into a very pleasing walk at a distance from his house. As soon as we came into it,

"It is," quoth the good old man, looking round him with a smile, "very hard that any part of my land should be settled upon one who has used me so ill as the perverse widow did ; and yet I am sure I could not see a sprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity. She has certainly the finest hand of any woman in the world. You are to know this was the place wherein I used to muse upon her ; and by that custom I can never come into it, but the same tender sentiments revive in my mind, as if I had actually walked with that beautiful creature under these shades. I have been fool enough to carve her name on the bark of several of these trees ; so unhappy is the condition of men in love, to attempt the removing of their passion by the methods which serve only to imprint it deeper. She has certainly the finest hand of any woman in the world."

Here followed a profound silence, and I was not displeased to observe my friend falling so naturally into a discourse, which I had ever before taken notice he industriously avoided. After a very long pause he entered upon an account of this great circumstance in his life, with an air which I thought raised my idea of him above what I had ever had before ; and gave me the picture of that cheerful mind of his before it received that stroke which has ever since affected his words and actions. But he went on as follows :

"I came to my estate in my twenty-second year, and resolved to follow the steps of the most worthy of my ancestors who have inhabited this spot of earth before me, in all the methods of hospitality and good neighbourhood, for the sake of my fame ; and in country sports and recreations, for the sake of my health. In my twenty-third year I was obliged to serve as sheriff of the county ; and in my servants, officers, and whole equipage, indulged the pleasure of a young man (who did not think ill of his own person) in taking that public occasion of showing my figure and behaviour to advantage.

"You may easily imagine to yourself what appearance I made, who am pretty tall, rid[e] well, and was very well dressed, at the head of a whole county, with music before me, a feather in my hat, and my horse well bitted. I can assure you I was not a little pleased with the kind looks and glances I had from all the balconies and windows as I rode to the hall where the assizes were held. But when I came there, a beautiful creature in a widow's habit sat in court to hear the event of a cause concerning her dower. This commanding creature (who was born for destruction of all who behold her) put on such a resignation in her countenance, and bore the whispers of all around the court with such a pretty uneasiness, I warrant you, and then recovered herself from one eye to another, till she was perfectly confused by meeting something so wistful in all she encountered, that at last, with a murrain to her, she cast her bewitching eye upon me. I no sooner met it, but I bowed like a great surprised booby; and knowing her cause to be the first which came on, I cried like a captivated calf as I was,

Sir Richard Steele

“ ‘ Make way for the defendant's witnesses.’ ”

“ This sudden partiality made all the county immediately see the sheriff also was become a slave to the fine widow. During the time her cause was upon trial she behaved herself, I warrant you, with such a deep attention to her business, took opportunities to have little billets handed to her counsel, then would be in such a pretty confusion, occasioned, you must know, by acting before so much company, that not only I but the whole court was prejudiced in her favour; and all that the next heir to her husband had to urge was thought so groundless and frivolous, that when it came to her counsel to reply, there was not half so much said as every one besides in the court thought he could have urged to her advantage.

“ You must understand, sir, this perverse woman is one of those unaccountable creatures that secretly rejoice in the admiration of men, but indulge themselves in no further consequences. Hence it is that she has ever had a train of admirers, and she removes from her slaves in town to those in the country, according to the seasons of the year. She is a reading lady, and far gone in the pleasures of friendship; she is always accompanied by a confidant, who is witness to her daily protestations against our sex, and consequently a bar to her first steps towards love, upon the strength of her own maxims and declarations.

“ How ever, I must needs say this accomplished mistress of mine has distinguished me above the rest, and has been known to declare Sir Roger de Coverley was the tamest and most human of all the brutes in the country. I was told she said so by one who thought he rallied me ; but upon the strength of this slender encouragement, of being thought least detestable, I made new liveries, new-paired my coach-horses, sent them all to town to be bitted, and taught to throw their legs well, and move all together, before I pretended to cross the country and wait upon her.

“ As soon as I thought my retinue suitable to the character of my fortune and youth, I set out from hence to make my addresses. The particular skill of this lady has ever been to inflame your wishes, and yet command respect. To make her mistress of this art, she has a greater share of knowledge, wit, and good sense, than is usual, even among men of merit. Then she is beautiful beyond the race of women. If you won't let her go on with a certain artifice with her eyes and the skill of beauty, she will arm herself with her real charms, and strike you with admiration instead of desire. It is certain that if you were to behold the whole woman, there is that dignity in her aspect, that composure in her motion, that complacency in her manner, that if her form makes you hope, her merit makes you fear. But then again, she is such a desperate scholar, that no country-gentleman can approach her without being a jest.

“ As I was going to tell you, when I came to her house I was admitted to her presence with great civility ; at the same time she placed herself to be first seen by me in such an attitude as I think you call the posture of a picture, that she discovered new charms, and I at last came towards her with such an awe as made me speechless. This she no sooner observed but she made her advantage of it, and began a discourse to me concerning love and honour, as they both are followed by pretenders, and the real votaries to them. When she had discussed these points in a discourse, which I verily believe was as learned as the best philosopher in Europe could possibly make, she asked me whether she was so happy as to fall in with my sentiments on these important particulars. Her confidant sat by her, and upon my being in the last confusion and silence, this malicious aid of hers, turning to her, says, ‘ I am very glad to observe Sir Roger pauses upon this subject, and seems resolved to deliver all his sentiments upon the matter when he pleases to speak.’ * They both kept their countenances, and after I had sat half an hour meditating how to behave before such profound casuists, I rose up and took my leave.

“ Chance has since that time thrown me very often in her way, and she as often has directed a discourse to me which I do not understand. This barbarity has kept me ever at a distance from the most beautiful object my eyes ever beheld. It is thus also she deals with all mankind, and you must make love to her, as you would conquer the Sphinx, by posing her. But were she like other women, and that there were any talking to her, how constant must the pleasure of that man be who could converse with a creature——

“ But after all, you may be sure her heart is fixed on some one or other ; and yet I have been credibly informed ; but who can believe half that is said ! After she had done speaking to me, she put her hand to her bosom, and adjusted her tucker. Then she cast her eyes a little down upon my beholding her too earnestly. They say she sings excellently : her voice in her ordinary speech has something in it inexpressibly sweet. You must know I dined with her at a public table the day after I first saw her, and she helped me to some tansy in the eye of all the gentlemen in the country : she has certainly the finest hand of any woman in the world. I can assure you, sir, were you to behold her, you would be in the same condition ; for as her speech is music her form is angelic. But I find I grow irregular while I am talking of her ; but indeed it would be stupidity to be unconcerned at such perfection. Oh the excellent creature, she is as inimitable to all women as she is inaccessible to all men.”

I found my friend begin to rave, and insensibly led him towards the house, that we might be joined by some other company ; and am convinced that the widow is the secret cause of all that inconsistency which appears in some parts of my friend's discourse ; though he has so much command of himself as not directly to mention her, yet according to that of Martial, which one knows not how to render in English, Dum tacet hanc loquitur. I shall end this paper with that whole epigram, which represents with much humour my honest friend's condition :

Let Rufus weep, rejoice, stand, sit, or walk,
Still he can nothing but of Nævia talk ;
Let him eat, drink, ask questions, or dispute,
Still he must speak of Nævia, or be mute.
He writ to his father, ending with this line,
I am, my lovely Nævia, ever thine. ♀

LAURENCE STERNE
1718-1768

THE STORY OF LE FEVRE

MY uncle Toby was one evening sitting at his supper, when the landlord of a little inn in the village came into the parlour, with an empty phial in his hand, to beg a glass or two of sack :

" 'Tis for a poor gentleman—I think of the army," said the landlord, " who has been taken ill at my house four days ago, and has never held up his head since, or had a desire to taste anything till just now, that he has a fancy for a glass of sack and a thin toast ;—I think, said he, taking his hand from his forehead, it would comfort me.—

" If I could neither beg, borrow, nor buy such a thing," added the landlord, " I would almost steal it for the poor gentleman, he is so ill.—I hope in God he will still mend," continued he,—“ we are all of us concerned for him.”

" Thou art a good-natured soul, I will answer for thee," cried my uncle Toby, " and thou shalt drink the poor gentleman's health in a glass of sack thyself,—and take a couple of bottles, with my service, and tell him he is heartily welcome to them, and to a dozen more if they will do him good.

" Though I am persuaded," said my uncle Toby, as the landlord shut the door, " he is a very compassionate fellow, Trim, yet I cannot help entertaining a high opinion of his guest too ; there must be something more than common in him, that in so short a time should win so much on the affections of his host " :—

" And of his whole family," added the corporal, " for they are all concerned for him."

" Step after him," said my uncle Toby, " do, Trim, and ask if he knows his name."

" I have quite forgot it, truly," said the landlord, coming back into the parlour with the corporal, " but I can ask his son again." ?

" Has he a son with him then ? " said my uncle Toby.

" A boy," replied the landlord, " of about eleven or twelve years of age ; but the poor creature has tasted almost as little as his father ; he does nothing but mourn and lament for him night and day : he has not stirred from the bedside these two days."

My uncle Toby laid down his knife and fork, and thrust his plate from before him as the landlord gave him the account ; and Trim, without being ordered, took it away without saying one word, and in a few minutes after brought him his pipe and tobacco.

" Stay in the room a little," said my uncle Toby. " Trim ! " said my uncle Toby, after he had lighted his pipe and smoked about a dozen whiffs—Trim came in front of his master and made his bow—my uncle Toby smoked on, and said no more. " Corporal ! " said my uncle Toby ; the corporal made his bow—my uncle Toby proceeded no farther, but finished his pipe.

" Trim ! " said my uncle Toby, " I have a project in my head, as it is a bad night, of wrapping myself up warm in my roquelaure, and paying a visit to this poor gentleman."

" Your honour's roquelaure," replied the corporal, " has not once been had on since the night before your honour received your wound, when we mounted guard in the trenches before the gate at St. Nicholas ; and besides it is so cold and rainy a night, that what with the roquelaure, and what with the weather 'twill be enough to give your honour your death, and bring on your honour's torment in your groin."

" I fear so," replied my uncle Toby ; " but I am not at rest in my mind, Trim, since the account the landlord has given me. I wish I had not known so much of this affair," added my uncle Toby, " or that I had known more of it : how shall we manage it ? "

" Leave it, an' please your honour, to me," quoth the corporal ; " I'll take my hat and stick, and go to the house and reconnoitre, and act accordingly ; and I will bring your honour a full account in an hour."

" Thou shalt go, Trim," said my uncle Toby, " and here's a shilling for thee to drink with his servant."

" I shall get it all out of him," said the corporal, shutting the door.

My uncle Toby filled his second pipe ; and had it not been that he now and then wandered from the point, with considering whether it was not full as well to have the curtain of the tenaille a straight line as a crooked one, he might be said to have thought of nothing else but poor Le Fevre and his boy the whole time he smoked it.

It was not till my uncle Toby had knocked the ashes out of his third pipe that Corporal Trim returned from the inn, and gave him the following account :—" I despaired at first," said the corporal, " of being able to bring back to your honour any kind of intelligence concerning the poor sick lieutenant."

"Is he in the army then?" said my uncle Toby.

"He is," said the corporal.

"And in what regiment?" said my uncle Toby.

"I'll tell your honour," replied the corporal, "everything straight forwards, as I learned it."

"Then, Trim, I'll fill another pipe," said my uncle Toby, "and not interrupt thee till thou hast done; so sit down at thy ease, Trim, in the window seat, and begin thy story again."

The corporal made his old bow, which generally spoke as plain as a bow could speak it—your honour is good:—and having done that, he sat down as he was ordered, and began the story to my uncle Toby over again in pretty nearly the same words.

"I despaired at first," said the corporal, "of being able to bring back any intelligence to your honour about the lieutenant and his son; for when I asked where his servant was, from whom I made myself sure of knowing everything which was proper to be asked,—"

"That's a right distinction, Trim," said my uncle Toby.

"I was answered, and please your honour, that he had no servant with him; that he had come to the inn with hired horses, which, on finding himself unable to proceed (to join, I suppose, the regiment), he had dismissed the morning after he came.—If I get better, my dear, said he, as he gave his purse to his son to pay the man, we can hire horses from hence.—But, alas! the poor gentleman will never get from hence, said the landlady to me, for I heard the death-watch all night long; and when he dies the youth his son will certainly die with him; for he is broken-hearted already.

"I was hearing this account," continued the corporal, "when the youth came into the kitchen, to order the thin toast the landlord spoke of;—but I will do it for my father myself, said the youth. Pray let me save you the trouble, young gentleman, said I, taking up a fork for that purpose, and offering him a chair to sit down by the fire, whilst I did it.—I believe, sir, said he, very modestly, I can please him best myself.—I am sure, said I, his honour will not like the toast the worse for being toasted by an old soldier. The youth took hold of my hand, and instantly burst into tears."

"Poor youth!" said my uncle Toby, "he has been bred up from an infant in the army, and the name of a soldier, Trim, sounded in his ears like the name of a friend ;—I wish I had him here."

"I never, in the longest march," said the corporal, "had so great a mind to my dinner as I had to cry with him for company; what could be the matter with me, an' please your honour?"

"Nothing in the world, Trim," said my uncle Toby, blowing his nose, "but that thou art a good-natured fellow."

"When I gave him the toast," continued the corporal, "I thought it was proper to tell him I was Captain Shandy's servant, and that your honour (though a stranger) was extremely concerned for his father: and that if there was anything in your house or cellar—" ("and thou mightest have added my purse too," said my uncle Toby)—"he was heartily welcome to it: he made a very low bow (which was meant to your honour), but no answer, for his heart was so full—so he went upstairs with the toast.—I warrant you, my dear, said I, as I opened the kitchen door, your father will be well again. Mr. Yorick's curate was smoking a pipe by the kitchen fire; but said not a word, good or bad, to comfort the youth. I thought it wrong," added the corporal.

"I think so too," said my uncle Toby.

"When the lieutenant had taken his glass of sack and toast he felt himself a little revived, and sent down into the kitchen to let me know that in about ten minutes he should be glad if I would step upstairs. I believe, said the landlord, he is going to say his prayers, for there was a book laid upon the chair by his bedside, and as I shut the door I saw his son take up a cushion. I thought, said the curate, that you gentlemen of the army, Mr. Trim, never said your prayers at all.—I heard the poor gentleman say his prayers last night, said the landlady, very devoutly, and with my own ears, or I could not have believed it.—Are you sure of it? replied the curate. A soldier, an' please your reverence, said I, prays as often (of his own accord) as a parson; and when he is fighting for his king, and for his own life, and for his honour too, he has the most reason to pray to God of any one in the whole world."

"'Twas well said of thee, Trim," said my uncle Toby.

"But when a soldier, said I, an' please your reverence, has been standing for twelve hours together in the trenches, up to his knees in cold water, or engaged, said I, for months together in long and dangerous marches—harassed, perhaps, in his rear to-day—harassing others to-morrow—detached here—countermanded there—resting this night out upon his arms—beat up in his shirt the next—benumbed in his joints—perhaps without straw in his tent to kneel upon—may say his prayers how and when he can. I believe, said I,—for I was piqued,” quoth the corporal, “for the reputation of the army,—I believe, an’ please your reverence, said I, that when a soldier gets time to pray, he prays as heartily as a parson, though not with all his ruse and hypocrisy.”

“Thou shouldest not have said that, Trim,” said my uncle Toby, “for God only knows who is a hypocrite, and who is not; at the great and general review of us all, corporal, ~~at the day of judgement~~ (and not till then), it will be seen who have done their duties in this world, and who have not; and we shall ~~be advanced~~, Trim, accordingly.” “I hope we shall,” said Trim,

“It is in the Scripture,” said my uncle Toby; “and I will show it thee to-morrow; in the meantime, we may depend upon it, Trim, for our comfort,” said my uncle Toby, “that God Almighty is so good and just a governor of the world, that if we have but done our duties in it, it will never be inquired into whether we have done them in a red coat or a black one.” “I hope not,” said the corporal.

“But go on, Trim,” said my uncle Toby, “with thy story.”

“When I went up,” continued the corporal, “into the lieutenant’s room, which I did not do till the expiration of the ten minutes, he was lying in his bed, with his head raised upon his hand, with his elbow upon the pillow, and a clean white cambric handkerchief beside it. The youth was just stooping down to take up the cushion upon which I suppose he had been kneeling. The book was laid upon the bed; and as he rose, in taking up the cushion with one hand, he reached out his other to take it away at the same time.—Let it remain there, my dear, said the lieutenant. He did not offer to speak to me till I had walked up close to his bedside.—If you be Captain Shandy’s servant, said he, you must present my thanks to your master, with my little boy’s thanks along with them, for his courtesy to me: if he was of Levens’, said the lieutenant—I told him your honour was.—Then, said he, I served three campaigns with him in Flanders, and remember him,—but ’tis most likely, as I had not the honour of any acquaintance with him, that he knows nothing of me. You will tell him, however, that the person his good-nature has laid under obligation to him is one Le Fevre, a lieutenant in Angus’—but he knows me not, said he a second time, musing:—possibly he may my story, added he—Pray tell the captain I was the ensign at Breda, whose wife was most unfortunately killed with a musket shot, as she lay in my arms in my tent.—I remember the story, an' please your honour, said I, very well. Do you so? said he, wiping his eyes with his handkerchief, then well may I. In saying this he drew a little ring out of his bosom, which seemed tied with a black ribbon about his neck, and kissed it twice. Here, Billy, said he.—The boy flew across the room to the bedside, and falling down upon his knee, took the ring in his hand, and kissed it too, then kissed his father, and sat down upon the bed and wept."

J. Sterne

(Laurence Sterne)

"I wish," said my uncle Toby, with a deep sigh, "I wish, Trim, I was asleep."

"Your honour," replied the corporal, "is too much concerned; shall I pour your honour out a glass of sack to your pipe?"

"Do, Trim," said my uncle Toby.

"I remember," said my uncle Toby, sighing again, "the story of the ensign and his wife, with a circumstance his modesty omitted; and particularly well that he, as well as she, on some account or other (I have forgot what) was universally pitied by the whole regiment;—but finish the story thou art on."

"'Tis finished already," said the corporal, "for I could stay no longer, so wished his honour a good-night: young Le Fevre rose from off the bed, and saw me to the bottom of the stairs: and as we went down together, told they had come from Ireland, and were on their route to join the regiment in Flanders. But, alas!" said the corporal, "the lieutenant's last day's march is over."

"Then what is to become of his poor boy?" cried my uncle Toby.

It was to my uncle Toby's eternal honour—though I tell it only for the sake of those who, when cooped in betwixt a natural and a positive law, know not for their souls which way in the world to turn themselves—that, notwithstanding my uncle Toby was warmly engaged at that time in carrying on the siege of Dendermond, parallel with the allies, who pressed theirs on so vigorously that they scarce allowed him time to get his dinner:—that nevertheless he gave up Dendermond, though he had already made a lodgment upon the counterscarp;—and bent his whole thoughts towards the private distresses at the inn: and, except that he ordered the garden gate to be bolted up, by which he might be said to have turned the siege of Dendermond into a blockade, he left Dendermond to itself,—to be relieved or not by the French king as the French king thought good; and only considered how he himself should relieve the poor lieutenant and his son. That kind Being, who is a friend to the friendless, shall recompense thee for this.

"Thou hast left this matter short," said my uncle Toby to the corporal, as he was putting him to bed, "and I will tell thee in what, Trim. In the first place, when thou madest an offer of my services to Le Fevre,—as sickness and travelling are both expensive, and thou knewest he was but a poor lieutenant, with a son to subsist as well as himself out of his pay, that thou didst not make an offer to him of my purse ; because, had he stood in need, thou knowest, Trim, he had been as welcome to it as myself."

"Your honour knows," said the corporal, "I had no orders."

"True," quoth my uncle Toby,—"thou didst very right, Trim, as a soldier, but certainly very wrong as a man."

"In the second place, for which, indeed, thou hast the same excuse," continued my uncle Toby,—"when thou offeredst him whatever was in my house, thou shouldst have offered him my house too. A sick brother officer should have the best quarters, Trim ; and if we had him with us, we could tend and look to him.—Thou art an excellent nurse thyself, Trim, and what with thy care of him, and the old woman's, and his boy's, and mine together, we might recruit him again at once, and set him upon his legs.—"

"In a fortnight or three weeks," added my uncle Toby, smiling, "he might march."

"He will never march, an' please your honour, in this world," said the corporal.

"He will march," said my uncle Toby, rising up from the side of the bed, with one shoe off.

"An' please your honour," said the corporal, "he will never march, but to his grave."

"He shall march," cried my uncle Toby, marching the foot which had a shoe on, though without advancing an inch, "he shall march to his regiment." "He cannot stand it," said the corporal.

"He shall be supported," said my uncle Toby.

"He'll drop at last," said the corporal, "and what will become of his boy ?"

"He shall not drop," said my uncle Toby, firmly.

"A-well-a-day ! do what we can for him," said Trim, maintaining his point,—"the poor soul will die."

"He shall not die, by God !" cried my uncle Toby.

The accusing spirit, which flew up to heaven's chancery with the oath, blushed as he gave it in ; and the recording angel, as he wrote it down, dropped a tear upon the word, and blotted it out for ever.

My uncle Toby went to his bureau, put his purse into his breeches pocket, and having ordered the corporal to go early in the morning for a physician, he went to bed, and fell asleep.

The sun looked bright the morning after to every eye in the village but Le Fevre's and his afflicted son's ; the hand of death pressed heavy upon his eyelids ; and hardly could the wheel at the cistern turn round its circle, when my uncle Toby, who had rose up an hour before his wonted time, entered the lieutenant's room, and without preface or apology sat himself down by the chair at the bedside, and independently of all modes and customs opened the curtain in the manner an old friend and brother officer would have done it, and asked him how he did,—how he had rested in the night,—what was his complaint,—where was his pain,—and what he could do to help him ; and, without giving him time to answer any one of the inquiries, went on and told him of the little plan which he had been concerting with the corporal the night before for him.

" You shall go home directly, Le Fevre," said my uncle Toby, " to my house, and we'll send for a doctor to see what's the matter,—and we'll have an apothecary,—and the corporal shall be your nurse ;—and I'll be your servant, Le Fevre."

There was a frankness in my uncle Toby—not the effect of familiarity, but the cause of it—which let you at once into his soul, and showed you the goodness of his nature. To this there was something in his looks, and voice, and manner, superadded, which eternally beckoned to the unfortunate to come and take shelter under him, so that before my uncle Toby had half finished the kind offers he was making to the father, had the son insensibly pressed up close to his knees, and had taken hold of the breast of his coat, and was pulling it towards him. The blood and spirits of Le Fevre, which were waxing cold and slow within him, and were retreating to their last citadel, the heart—rallied back,—the film forsook his eyes for a moment ;—he looked up wishfully in my uncle Toby's face ;—then cast a look upon his boy ; and that ligament, fine as it was, was never broken.

Nature instantly ebbed again ; the film returned to its place ; the pulse fluttered—stopped—went on, throbbed—stopped again—moved—stopped. Shall I go on ? No.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

1728-1774

THE HISTORY OF THE MAN IN BLACK

MY father, the younger son of a good family, was possessed of a small living in the church. His education was above his fortune, and his generosity greater than his education. Poor as he was, he had his flatterers still poorer than himself ; for every dinner he gave them, they returned an equivalent in praise ; and this was all he wanted. The same ambition that actuates a monarch at the head of an army, influenced my father at the head of his table ; he told the story of the ivy-tree, and that was laughed at ; he repeated the jest of the two scholars and one pair of breeches, and the company laughed at that ; but the story of Taffy in the sedan chair, was sure to set the table in a roar : thus his pleasure increased in proportion to the pleasure he gave ; he loved all the world, and he fancied all the world loved him.

As his fortune was but small, he lived up to the very extent of it ; he had no intentions of leaving his children money, for that was dross ; he was resolved they should have learning ; for learning, he used to observe, was better than silver or gold. For this purpose he undertook to instruct us himself ; and took as much pains to form our morals as to improve our understanding. We were told that universal benevolence was what first cemented society ; we were taught to consider all the wants of mankind as our own ; to regard the human face divine with affection and esteem ; he wound us up to be mere machines of pity, and rendered us incapable of withstanding the slightest impulse made either by real or fictitious distress ; in a word, we were perfectly instructed in the art of giving away thousands, before we were taught the more necessary qualifications of getting a farthing.

I cannot avoid imagining, that thus refined by his lessons out of all my suspicion, and divested of even all the little cunning which Nature had given me, I resembled, upon my first entrance into the busy and insidious world, one of those gladiators who were exposed with armour in the amphitheatre at Rome. My father, however, who had only seen the world on one side, seemed to triumph in my superior discernment ; though my whole stock of wisdom consisted in being able to talk like himself upon subjects that once were useful, because they were then topics of the busy world ; but that now were utterly useless, because connected with the busy world no longer.

The first opportunity he had of finding his expectations disappointed, was at the very middling figure I made in the university ; he had flattered himself that he should soon see me rising into the foremost rank in literary reputation, but was mortified to find me utterly unnoticed and unknown. His disappointment might have been partly ascribed to his having overrated my talents, and partly to my dislike of mathematical reasonings at a time when my imagination and memory, yet unsatisfied, were more eager after new objects, than desirous of reasoning upon those I knew. This did not, however, please my tutors, who observed indeed, that I was a little dull ; but at the same time allowed, that I seemed to be very good-natured, and had no harm in me.

After I had resided at college seven years my father died, and left me—his blessing. Thus shoved from shore without ill-nature to protect, or cunning to guide, or proper stores to subsist me in so dangerous a voyage, I was obliged to embark in the wide world at twenty-two. But, in order to settle in life, my friends advised (for they always advise when they begin to despise us), they advised me, I say, to go into orders.

To be obliged to wear a long wig, when I liked a short one, or a black coat, when I generally dressed in brown, I thought was such a restraint upon my liberty, that I absolutely rejected the proposal. A priest in England is not the same mortified creature with a bonze in China ; with us, not he that fasts best, but eats best, is reckoned the best liver ; yet I rejected a life of luxury, indolence, and ease, from no other consideration but that boyish one of dress. So that my friends were now perfectly satisfied I was undone ; and yet they thought it a pity for one who had not the least harm in him, and was so very good-natured.

Poverty naturally begets dependence, and I was admitted as flatterer to a great man. At first I was surprised that the situation of a flatterer at a great man's table could be thought disagreeable ; there was no great trouble in listening attentively when his lordship spoke, and laughing when he looked round for applause. This even good manners might have obliged me to perform. I found, however, too soon, that his lordship was a greater dunce than myself ; and from that very moment flattery was at an end. I now rather aimed at setting him right, than at receiving his absurdities with submission ; to flatter those we do not know is an easy task ; but to flatter our intimate acquaintances, all whose foibles are strongly in our eye, is drudgery insupportable. Every time I now opened my lips in praise, my falsehood went to my conscience ; his lordship soon perceived me to be very unfit for service : I was therefore discharged, my patron at the same time being graciously pleased to observe, that he believed I was tolerably good-natured, and had not the least harm in me.

Disappointed in ambition, I had recourse to love. A young lady, who lived with her aunt, and was possessed of a pretty fortune in her own disposal, had given me, as I fancied, some reason to expect success. The symptoms by which I was guided were striking. She had always laughed with me at her awkward acquaintance, and at her aunt among the number ; she always observed, that a man of sense would make a better husband than a fool, and I as constantly applied the observation in my own favour. She continually talked, in my company, of friendship and the beauties of the mind, and spoke of Mr. Shrimp my rival's high-heeled shoes with detestation. These were circumstances which I thought strongly in my favour ; so, after resolving and re-resolving, I had courage enough to tell her my mind. Miss heard my proposal with serenity, seeming at the same time to study the figures of her fan. Out at last it came. There was but one small objection to complete our happiness ; which was no more than—that she was married three months before to Mr. Shrimp, with high-heeled shoes ! By way of consolation, however, she observed that, though I was disappointed in her, my addresses to her aunt would probably kindle her into sensibility ; as the old lady always allowed me to be very good-natured, and not to have the least share of harm in me.

Yet, still I had friends, numerous friends, and to them I was resolved to apply. O Friendship ! thou fond soother of the human breast, to thee we fly in every calamity ; to thee the wretched seek for succour ; on thee the care-tired son of misery fondly relies ; from thy kind assistance the unfortunate always hopes relief, and may be ever sure of—disappointment. My first application was to a city scrivener, who had frequently offered to lend me money when he knew I did not want it. I informed him that now was the time to put his friendship to the test ; that I wanted to borrow a couple of hundreds for a certain occasion, and was resolved to take it up from him.

"And pray, Sir," cried my friend, "do you want all this money?"

"Indeed I never wanted it more," returned I.

"I am sorry for that," cries the scrivener, "with all my heart; for they who want money when they come to borrow, will always want money when they should come to pay."

From him I flew with indignation to one of the best friends I had in the world, and made the same request.

"Indeed, Mr. Drybone," cries my friend, "I always thought it would come to this. You know, Sir, I would not advise you but for your own good; but your conduct has hitherto been ridiculous in the highest degree, and some of your acquaintance always thought you a very silly fellow. Let me see—you want two hundred pounds. Do you only want two hundred, Sir, exactly?"

"To confess a truth," returned I, "I shall want three hundred; but then I have another friend from whom I can borrow the rest."

"Why, then," replied my friend, "if you would take my advice (and you know I should not presume to advise you but for your own good), I would recommend it to you to borrow the whole sum from that other friend; and then one note will serve for all, you know."

Poverty now began to come fast upon me; yet instead of growing more provident or cautious as I grew poor, I became every day more indolent and simple. A friend was arrested for fifty pounds; I was unable to extricate him except by becoming his bail. When at liberty he fled from his creditors, and left me to take his place: in prison I expected greater satisfactions than I had enjoyed at large. I hoped to converse with men in this new world, simple and believing like myself, but I found them as cunning and as cautious as those in the world I had left behind. They spunged up my money whilst it lasted, borrowed my coals and never paid for them, and cheated me when I played at cribbage. All this was done because they believed me to be very good-natured, and knew that I had no harm in me.

Upon my first entrance into this mansion, which is to some the abode of despair, I felt no sensations different from those I experienced abroad. I was now on one side of the door, and those who were unconfined were on the other: this was all the difference between us. At first, indeed, I felt some uneasiness, in considering how I should be able to provide this week for the wants of the week ensuing; but after some time, if I found myself sure of eating one day, I never troubled my head how I was to be supplied another. I seized every precarious meal with the utmost good humour ; indulged no rants of spleen at my situation ; never called down heaven and all the stars to behold me dining upon an halfpenny-worth of radishes ; my very companions were taught to believe that I liked salad better than mutton. I contented myself with thinking, that all my life I should either eat white bread or brown ; considered that all that happened was best ; laughed when I was not in pain ; took the world as it went, and read Tacitus often, for want of more books and company.

How long I might have continued in this torpid state of simplicity I cannot tell, had I not been roused by seeing an old acquaintance, whom I knew to be a prudent blockhead, preferred to a place in the Government. I now found that I had pursued a wrong track, and that the true way of being able to relieve others, was first to aim at independence myself ; my immediate care, therefore, was to leave my present habitation, and make an entire reformation in my conduct and behaviour. For a free, open, undesigning deportment, I put on that of closeness, prudence and economy. One of the most heroic actions I ever performed, and for which I shall praise myself as long as I live, was the refusing half-a-crown to an old acquaintance, at the time when he wanted it, and I had it to spare ; for this alone I deserve to be decreed an ovation.

I now, therefore, pursued a course of uninterrupted frugality, seldom wanted a dinner, and was consequently invited to twenty. I soon began to get the character of a saving hunk that had money, and insensibly grew into esteem. Neighbours have asked my advice in the disposal of their daughters, and I have always taken care not to give any. I have contracted a friendship with an alderman, only by observing, that if we take a farthing from a thousand pounds, it will be a thousand pounds no longer. I have been invited to a pawnbroker's table, by pretending to hate gravy ; and am now actually upon treaty of marriage with a rich widow, for only having observed that the bread was rising. If ever I am asked a question, whether I know it or not, instead of answering, I only smile and look wise. If a charity is proposed, I go about with the hat, but put nothing in myself. If a wretch solicits my pity, I observe that the world is filled with imposters, and take a certain method of not being deceived, by never relieving. In short, I now find the truest way of finding esteem, even from the indigent, is to give away nothing, and thus have much in our power to give.

THE SOLDIER'S STORY

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

ACCIDENTALLY meeting some days ago a poor fellow begging at one of the outlets of this town, with a wooden leg, I was curious to learn what had reduced him to his present situation; and after giving him what I thought proper, desired to know the history of his life and misfortunes, and the manner in which he was reduced to his present distress. The disabled soldier, for such he was, with an intrepidity truly British, leaning on his crutch, put himself into an attitude to comply with my request, and gave me his history as follows :—

“ As for misfortunes, Sir, I cannot pretend to have gone through more than others. Except the loss of my limb, and my being obliged to beg, I don't know any reason, thank Heaven, that I have to complain ; there are some who have lost both legs and an eye : but, thank Heaven, it is not quite so bad with me.

“ My father was a labourer in the country, and died when I was five years old ; so I was put upon the parish. As he had been a wandering sort of a man, the parishioners were not able to tell to what parish I belonged, or where I was born ; so they sent me to another parish, and that parish sent me to a third ; till at last it was thought I belonged to no parish at all. At length, however, they fixed me. I had some disposition to be a scholar, and had actually learned my letters ; but the master of the workhouse put me to business as soon as I was able to handle a mallet.

“ Here I lived an easy kind of a life for five years ; I only wrought ten hours in the day, and had my meat and drink provided for my labour. It is true, I was not suffered to stir far from the house, for fear I should run away : but what of that ? I had the liberty of the whole house, and the yard before the door, and that was enough for me.

“ I was next bound out to a farmer, where I was up both early and late, but I ate and drank well, and liked my business well enough, till he died. Being then obliged to provide for myself, I was resolved to go and seek my fortune. Thus I lived, and went from town to town, working when I could get employment, and starving when I could get none ; and might have lived so still ; but happening one day to go through a field belonging to a magistrate, I spied a hare crossing the path just before me. I believe the devil put it in my head to fling my stick at it : well, what will you have on it ? I killed the hare, and was bringing it away in triumph, when the Justice himself met me : he called me a villain, and collaring me, desired I would give an account of myself.

“ I began immediately to give a full account of all that I knew of my breed, seed, and generation ; but though I gave a very long account, the Justice said, I could give no account of myself ; so I was indicted, and found guilty of being poor, and sent to Newgate, in order to be transported to the Plantations.

“ People may say this and that of being in gaol ; but for my part I found Newgate as agreeable a place as ever I was in, in all my life. I had my belly-full to eat and drink, and did no work ; but alas, this kind of life was too good to last for ever ! I was taken out of prison after five months, put on board of a ship, and sent off with two hundred more. Our passage was but indifferent, for we were all confined in the hold, and died very fast, for want of sweet air and provisions ; but for my part, I did not want meat, because I had a fever all the way : Providence was kind ; when provisions grew short, it took away my desire of eating. When we came ashore, we were sold to the planters. I was bound for seven years, and as I was no scholar, for I had forgot my letters, I was obliged to work among the negroes ; and served out my time, as in duty bound to do.

“ When my time was expired, I worked my passage home, and glad I was to see Old England again, because I loved my country. O liberty, liberty, liberty, that is the property of every Englishman, and I will die in its defence. I was afraid, however, that I should be indicted for a vagabond once more, so did not much care to go into the country, but kept about town, and did little jobs when I could get them. I was very happy in this manner for some time ; till one evening, coming home from work, two men knocked me down, and then desired me to stand still. They belonged to a press-gang ; I was carried before the Justice, and as I could give no account of myself (that was the thing that always hobbled me) I had my choice left, whether to go on board a man-of-war, or list for a soldier. I chose to be a soldier ; and in this post of a gentleman I served two campaigns, was at the battle in Flanders, and received but one wound through the breast, which is troublesome till this day.

"When the peace came on, I was discharged ; and as I could not work, because my wound was sometimes painful, I listed for a landman in the East India Company's service. I here fought the French in six pitched battles ; and verily believe, that if I could read or write, our captain would have given me promotion, and have made me a corporal. But that was not my good fortune. I soon fell sick, and when I became good for nothing, got leave to return home again with forty pounds in my pocket, which I saved in the service. This was at the beginning of the present war, so I hoped to be set on shore, and to have the pleasure of spending my money ; but the Government wanted men, and I was pressed again, before ever I could set foot on shore.

"The boatswain found me, as he said, an obstinate fellow : he swore that I understood my business perfectly well, but that I pretended sickness merely to be idle ; God knows, I knew nothing of sea-business ; he beat me without considering what he was about. But still my forty pounds was some comfort to me under every beating : the money was my comfort, and the money I might have had to this day ; but that our ship was taken by the French, and so I lost it all.

"Our crew was carried into a French prison, and many of them died, because they were not used to live in a gaol ; but for my part, it was nothing to me, for I was seasoned. One night, however, as I was sleeping on the bed of boards, with a warm blanket about me (for I always loved to lie well), I was awaked by the boatswain, who had a dark lantern in his hand.

" ' Jack,' says he to me, ' will you knock out the French sentry's brains ? '

" ' I don't care,' says I, striving to keep myself awake, ' if I lend a hand.'

" ' Then follow me,' says he, ' and I hope we shall do business.'

"So up I got, and tied my blanket, which was all the clothes I had, about my middle, and went with him to fight the Frenchman ; we had no arms ; but one Englishman is able to beat five French at any time ; so we went down to the door, where both the sentries were posted, and rushing upon them, seized their arms in a moment and knocked them down. From thence, nine of us ran together to the quay, and seizing the first boat we met, got out of the harbour, and out to sea ;

we had not been here three days before we were taken up by an English privateer, who was glad of so many good hands ; and we consented to run our chance. However, we had not so much luck as we expected. In three days we fell in with a French man-of-war, of forty guns, while we had but twenty-three ; so to it we went. The fight lasted for three hours, and I verily believe we should have taken the Frenchman, but, unfortunately, we lost almost all our men, just as we were going to get the victory. I was once more in the power of the French, and I believe it would have gone hard with me, had I been brought back to my old gaol in Brest ; but by good fortune, we were retaken, and carried to England once more.

“ I had almost forgot to tell you, that in this last engagement I was wounded in two places ; I lost four fingers of the left hand, and my leg was shot off. Had I the good fortune to have lost my leg and use of my hand on board a king’s ship, and not a privateer, I should have been entitled to clothing and maintenance during the rest of my life, but that was not my chance ; one man is born with a silver spoon in his mouth, and another with a wooden ladle. However, blessed be God, I enjoy good health, and have no enemy in this world that I know of, but the French, and the Justice of Peace.”

Thus saying, he limped off, leaving us in admiration of his intrepidity and content.

ALCANDER AND SEPTIMIUS

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

ATHENS, even long after the decline of the Roman empire, still continued the seat of learning, politeness, and wisdom. The emperors and generals, who in these periods of approaching ignorance still felt a passion for science, from time to time added to its buildings, or increased its professorships. Theodoric, the Ostrogoth, was of the number: he repaired those schools which barbarity was suffering to fall into decay, and continued those pensions to men of learning which avaricious governors had monopolised to themselves.

In this city, and about this period, Alcander and Septimius were fellow-students together. The one the most subtle reasoner of all the Lyceum; the other the most eloquent speaker in the Academic Grove. Mutual admiration soon begot an acquaintance, and a similitude of disposition made them perfect friends. Their fortunes were nearly equal, their studies the same, and they were natives of the two most celebrated cities in the world; for Alcander was of Athens, Septimius came from Rome.

In this mutual harmony they lived for some time together, when Alcander, after passing the first part of his youth in the indolence of philosophy, thought at length of entering into the busy world, and as a step previous to this, placed his affections on Hypatia, a lady of exquisite beauty. Hypatia showed no dislike to his addresses. The day of their intended nuptials was fixed, the previous ceremonies were performed, and nothing now remained but her being conducted in triumph to the apartment of the intended bridegroom.

An exultation in his own happiness, or his being unable to enjoy any satisfaction without making his friend Septimius a partner, prevailed upon him to introduce his mistress to his fellow-student, which he did with all the gaiety of a man who found himself equally happy in friendship and love. But this was an interview fatal to the peace of both; for Septimius no sooner saw her but he was smitten with an involuntary passion. He used every effort, but in vain, to suppress desires at once so imprudent and unjust. He retired to his apartment in inexpressible agony ; and the emotions of his mind in a short time became so strong, that they brought on a fever, which the physicians judged incurable.

During this illness Alcander watched him with all the anxiety of fondness, and brought his mistress to join in those amiable offices of friendship. The sagacity of the physicians, by this means, soon discovered the cause of their patient's disorder ; and Alcander, being apprised of their discovery, at length extorted a confession from the reluctant dying lover.

It would but delay the narrative to describe the conflict between love and friendship in the breast of Alcander on this occasion ; it is enough to say that the Athenians were at this time arrived at such refinement in morals, that every virtue was carried to excess. In short, forgetful of his own felicity, he gave up his intended bride, in all her charms, to the young Roman. They were married privately by his connivance ; and this unlooked-for change of fortune wrought as unexpected a change in the constitution of the now happy Septimius. In a few days he was perfectly recovered, and set out with his fair partner for Rome. Here, by an exertion of those talents of which he was so eminently possessed, he in a few years arrived at the highest dignities of the state, and was constituted the city judge, or pretor.

Meanwhile Alcander not only felt the pain of being separated from his friend and mistress, but a prosecution was also commenced against him by the relations of Hypatia, for his having basely given her up, as was suggested, for money. Neither his innocence of the crime laid to his charge, nor his eloquence in his own defence, was able to withstand the influence of a powerful party. He was cast, and condemned to pay an enormous fine. Unable to raise so large a sum at the time appointed, his possessions were confiscated, himself stripped of the habit of freedom, exposed in the market-place, and sold as a slave to the highest bidder.

A merchant of Thrace becoming his purchaser, Alcander, with some other companions of distress, was carried into that region of desolation and sterility. His stated employment was to follow the herds of an imperious master ; and his skill in hunting was all that was allowed him to supply a precarious subsistence. Condemned to hopeless servitude, every morning waked him to a renewal of famine or toil, and every change of season served but to aggravate his unsheltered distress.

Nothing but death or flight was left him, and almost certain death was the consequence of his attempting to flee. After some years of bondage, however, an opportunity of escaping offered : he embraced it with ardour, and travelling by night, and lodging in caverns by day, to shorten a long story, he at last arrived in Rome. The day of Alcander's arrival Septimius sat in the forum administering justice ; and hither our wanderer came, expecting to be instantly known and publicly acknowledged. Here he stood the whole day among the crowd, watching the eyes of the judge, and expecting to be taken notice of ; but so much was he altered by a long succession of hardships, that he passed entirely without notice ; and in the evening, when he was going up to the pretor's chair, he was brutally repulsed by the attending lictors. The attention of the poor is generally driven from one ungrateful object to another ; night coming on, he now found himself under a necessity of seeking a place to lie in, and yet knew not where to apply. All emaciated and in rags as he was, none of the citizens would harbour so much wretchedness, and sleeping in the streets might be attended with interruption or danger : in short, he was obliged to take up his lodging in one of the tombs without the city, the usual retreat of guilt, poverty, or despair.

In this mansion of horror, laying his head upon an inverted urn, he forgot his miseries for a while in sleep ; and virtue found on this flinty couch more ease than down can supply to the guilty.

It was midnight when two robbers came to make this cave their retreat, but happening to disagree about the division of their plunder, one of them stabbed the other to the heart, and left him weltering in blood at the entrance. In these circumstances he was found next morning, and this naturally induced a further inquiry. The alarm was spread, the cave was examined, Alcander was found sleeping, and immediately apprehended and accused of robbery and murder. The circumstances against him were strong, and the wretchedness of his appearance confirmed suspicion. Misfortune and he were now so long acquainted, that he at last became regardless of life. He detested a world where he had found only ingratitude, falsehood, and cruelty, and was determined to make no defence. Thus, lowering with resolution, he was dragged, bound with cords, before the tribunal of Septimius. The proofs were positive against him, and he offered nothing in his own vindication ; the judge, therefore, was proceeding to doom him to a most cruel and ignominious death, when, as if illumined by a ray from heaven, he discovered, through all his misery, the features, though dim with sorrow, of his long-lost, loved Alcander. It is impossible to describe his joy and his pain on this strange occasion ; happy in once more seeing the person he most loved on earth, distressed at finding him in such circumstances. Thus agitated by contending passions, he flew from his tribunal, and, falling on the neck of his dear benefactor, burst into an agony of distress. The attention of the multitude was soon, however, divided by another object. The robber who had been really guilty was apprehended selling his plunder, and, struck with a panic, confessed his crime. He was brought bound to the same tribunal, and acquitted every other person of any partnership in his guilt. Need the sequel be related ? Alcander was acquitted, shared the friendship and the honours of his friend Septimius, lived afterwards in happiness and ease, and left it to be engraved on his tomb, that " no circumstances are so desperate which Providence may not relieve."

THE PURPLE JAR

ROSAMOND, a little girl about seven years old, was walking with her mother in the streets of London. As she passed along she looked in at the windows of several shops, and saw a great variety of different sorts of things, of which she did not know the use, or even the names. She wished to stop to look at them, but there was a great number of people in the streets, and a great many carts, carriages, and wheelbarrows, and she was afraid to let go her mother's hand.

"Oh, mother, how happy I should be," she said, as she passed a toy-shop, "if I had all these pretty things!"

"What, all! Do you wish for them all, Rosamond?"

"Yes, mamma, all."

As she spoke they came to a milliner's shop, the windows of which were decorated with ribands and lace, and festoons of artificial flowers.

"Oh, mamma, what beautiful roses! Won't you buy some of them?"

"No, my dear."

"Why?"

"Because I don't want them, my dear."

They went a little further, and came to another shop, which caught Rosamond's eye. It was a jeweller's shop, and in it were a great many pretty baubles, ranged in drawers behind glass.

"Mamma, will you buy some of these?"

"Which of them, Rosamond?"

"Which? I don't know which; any of them will do, for they are all pretty."

"Yes, they are all pretty, but of what use would they be to me?"

"Use! Oh, I am sure you could find some use or other for them if you would only buy them first."

"But I would rather find out the use first."

"Well, then, mamma, there are buckles; you know that buckles are useful things, very useful things."

"I have a pair of buckles ; I don't want another pair," said her mother, and walked on.

Rosamond was very sorry that her mother wanted nothing. Presently, however, they came to a shop which appeared to her far more beautiful than the rest. It was a chemist's shop, but she did not know that.

"Oh, mother, oh!" cried she, pulling her mother's hand ; "look, look! blue, green, red, yellow, and purple! Oh, mamma, what beautiful things! Won't you buy some of these?"

Still her mother answered as before, "Of what use would they be to me, Rosamond?"

"You might put flowers in them, mamma, and they would look so pretty on the chimney-piece. I wish I had one of them."

"You have a flower-pot," said her mother, "and that is not a flower-pot."

"But I would use it for a flower-pot, mamma, you know."

"Perhaps if you were to see it nearer, if you were to examine it, you might be disappointed."

"No, indeed, I'm sure I should not ; I should like it exceedingly."

Rosamond kept her head turned to look at the purple vase till she could see it no longer.

"Then, mother," said she, after a pause, "perhaps you have no money."

"Yes, I have."

"Dear me, if I had money I would buy roses and boxes and buckles and purple flower-pots and everything." Rosamond was obliged to pause in the midst of her speech.

"Oh, mamma, would you stop a minute for me? I have got a stone in my shoe ; it hurts me very much."

"How came there to be a stone in your shoe?"

"Because of this great hole, mamma—it comes in there ; my shoes are quite worn out. I wish you would be so very good as to give me another pair."

"Nay, Rosamond, but I have not money enough to buy shoes and flower-pots and buckles and boxes and everything."

Rosamond thought that was a great pity. But now her foot, which had been hurt by the stone, began to give her so much pain that she was obliged to hop every other step, and she could think of nothing else. They came to a shoemaker's shop soon afterwards.

"There, there! Mamma, there are shoes; there are little shoes that would just fit me, and you know shoes would be really of use to me."

"Yes, so they would, Rosamond. Come in."

She followed her mother into the shop.

Mr. Sole, the shoemaker, had a great many customers, and this shop was full, so they were obliged to wait.

"Well, Rosamond," said her mother, "you don't think this shop so pretty as the rest?"

"No, not nearly; it is black and dark, and there are nothing but shoes all round; and, besides, there's a very disagreeable smell."

"That smell is the smell of new leather."

"Is it? Oh!" said Rosamond, looking round, "there is a pair of little shoes; they'll just fit me, I'm sure."

"Perhaps they might; but you cannot be sure till you have tried them on, any more than you can be quite sure that you would like the purple vase exceedingly, till you have examined it more attentively."

"Why, I don't know about the shoes, certainly, till I have tried, but, mamma, I am quite sure that I should like the flower-pot."

"Well, which would you rather have, a jar or a pair of shoes? I will buy either for you."

"Dear mamma, thank you—but if you could buy both?"

"No, not both."

"Then the jar, if you please."

"But I should tell you, that in that case I shall not give you another pair of shoes this month."

"This month! that's a very long time indeed! You can't think how these hurt me; I believe I'd better have the new shoes. Yet, that purple flower-pot. Oh, indeed, mamma, these shoes are not so very, very bad! I think I might wear them a little longer, and the month will soon be over. I can make them last till the end of the month, can't I? Don't you think so, mamma?"

"Nay, my dear, I want you to think for yourself; you will have time enough to consider the matter whilst I speak to Mr. Sole about my clogs."

Mr. Sole was by this time at leisure, and whilst her mother was speaking to him, Rosamond stood in profound meditation, with one shoe on and the other in her hand.

"Well, my dear, have you decided?"

"Mamma!—yes—I believe I have. If you please, I should like to have the flower-pot; that is, if you won't think me very silly, mamma."

"Why, as to that I can't promise you, Rosamond; but, when you have to judge for yourself, you should choose what would make you happy, and then it would not signify who thought you silly."

"Then, mamma, if that's all, I'm sure the flower-pot would make me happy," said she, putting on her old shoe again; "so I choose the flower-pot."

"Very well, you shall have it; clasp your shoe and come home."

Rosamond clasped her shoe and ran after her mother. It was not long before the shoe came down at the heel, and many times she was obliged to stop to take the stones out of it, and she often limped with pain! But still the thoughts of the purple flower-pot prevailed, and she persisted in her choice.

When they came to the shop with the large window, Rosamond felt much pleasure upon hearing her mother desire the servant, who was with them, to buy the purple jar and bring it home. He had other commissions, so he did not return with them. Rosamond, as soon as she got in, ran to gather all her own flowers, which she kept in a corner of her mother's garden.

"I am afraid they'll be dead before the flower-pot comes, Rosamond," said her mother to her, as she came in with the flowers in her lap.

"No, indeed, mamma, it will come home very soon, I daresay. I shall be very happy putting them into the purple flower-pot."

"I hope so, my dear."

The servant was much longer returning home than Rosamond had expected; but at length he came, and brought with him the long-wished-for jar. The moment it was set down upon the table, Rosamond ran up to it with an exclamation of joy: "I may have it now, mamma?"

"Yes, my dear, it is yours."

Rosamond poured the flowers from her lap upon the carpet and seized the purple flower-pot.

"Oh, dear, mother!" cried she, as soon as she had taken off the top, "but there's something dark in it which smells disagreeably. What is it? I didn't want this black stuff."

"Nor I, my dear."

:
Turner

" But what shall I do with it, mamma ? "

" That I cannot tell."

" It will be of no use to me, mamma."

" That I cannot help."

" But I must pour it out and fill the flower-pot with water."

" As you please, my dear. That was more than I promised you my dear ; but I will lend you a bowl."

The bowl was produced, and Rosamond proceeded to empty the purple vase. But she experienced much surprise and disappointment on finding, when it was entirely empty, that it was no longer a purple vase. It was a plain white glass jar, which had appeared to have that beautiful colour merely from the liquor with which it had been filled.

Little Rosamond burst into tears.

" Why should you cry, my dear ? " said her mother ; " it will be of as much use to you now as ever for a flower-pot."

" But it won't look so pretty on the chimney-piece. I am sure, if I had known that it was not really purple, I should not have wished to have it so much."

" But didn't I tell you that you had not examined it ; and that perhaps you would be disappointed ? "

" And so I am disappointed indeed. I wish I had believed you at once. Now I had much rather have the shoes, for I shall not be able to walk all this month ; even walking home that little way hurt me exceedingly. Mamma, I will give you the flower-pot back again, and that purple stuff and all, if only you'll give me the shoes."

" No, Rosamond ; you must abide by your own choice ; and now the best thing you can possibly do is to bear your disappointment with good humour."

" I will bear it as well as I can," said Rosamond, wiping her eyes, and she began slowly and sorrowfully to fill the vase with flowers.

But Rosamond's disappointment did not end here. Many were the difficulties and distresses into which her imprudent choice brought her before the end of the month.

Every day her shoes grew worse and worse, till at last she could neither run, dance, jump, nor walk in them.

Whenever Rosamond was called to see anything, she was detained pulling her shoes up at the heels, and was sure to be late.

Whenever her mother was going out to walk, she could not take Rosamond with her, for Rosamond had no soles to her shoes ; and at length, on the very last day of the month, it happened that her father proposed to take her with her brother to a glass-house, which she had long wished to see. She was very happy ; but, when she was quite ready, had her hat and gloves on, and was making haste downstairs to her brother and father, who were waiting for her at the hall door, the shoe dropped off. She put it on again in a great hurry, but, as she was going across the hall, her father turned round.

" Why are you walking slip-shod ? No one must walk slip-shod with me. Why, Rosamond," said he, looking at her shoes with disgust, " I thought that you were always neat ; go, I cannot take you with me."

Rosamond coloured and retired.

" Oh, mamma," said she, as she took off her hat, " how I wish that I had chosen the shoes ! They would have been of so much more use to me than that jar ; however, I am sure, no, not quite sure, but I hope I shall be wiser another time."

THE CITY OF THE DEMONS

IN days of yore there lived in the flourishing city of Cairo a Hebrew rabbi, by name Jochonan, who was the most learned of his nation. His fame went over the East, and the most distant people sent their young men to imbibe wisdom from his lips. He was deeply skilled in the traditions of the fathers, and his word on a disputed point was decisive. He was pious, just, temperate, and strict ; but he had one vice—a love of gold had seized upon his heart, and he opened not his hand to the poor. Yet he was wealthy above most, his wisdom being to him the source of riches. The Hebrews of the city were grieved at this blemish on the wisest of their people ; but though the elders of the tribes continued to reverence him for his fame, the women and children of Cairo called him by no other name than that of Rabbi Jochonan the miser.

None knew so well as he the ceremonies necessary for initiation into the religion of Moses ; and consequently the exercise of those solemn offices was to him another source of gain. One day, as he walked in the fields about Cairo, conversing with a youth on the interpretation of the law, it so happened that the angel of death smote the young man suddenly, and he fell dead before the feet of the Rabbi, even while he was yet speaking. When the Rabbi found that the youth was dead, he rent his garments and glorified the Lord. But his heart was touched, and the thoughts of death troubled him in the visions of the night. He felt uneasy when he reflected on his hardness to the poor, and he said, " Blessed be the name of the Lord ! The first good thing that I am asked to do, in that holy name, will I perform " ; but he sighed, for he feared that some one might ask of him a portion of his gold. While yet he thought upon these things, there came a loud cry at his gate.

" Awake, thou sleeper ! " said the voice, " awake ! A child is in danger of death, and the mother hath sent me for thee, that thou mayst do thine office."

" The night is dark and gloomy," said the Rabbi, coming to his casement, " and mine age is great ; are there not younger men than I in Cairo ? "

"For thee only, Rabbi Jochonan, whom some call the wise, but whom others call Rabbi Jochonan the miser, was I sent. Here is gold," said he, taking out a purse of sequins, "I want not thy labour for nothing. I adjure thee to come, in the name of the living God."

So the Rabbi thought upon the vow he had just made, and he groaned in spirit, for the purse sounded heavy.

"As thou hast adjured me by that name, I go with thee," said he to the man, "but I hope the distance is not far. Put up thy gold."

"The place is at hand," said the stranger, who was a gallant youth in magnificent attire. "Be speedy, for time presses."

Jochonan arose, dressed himself, and accompanied the stranger, after having carefully locked up all the doors of his house, and deposited his keys in a secret place—at which the stranger smiled.

"I never remember," said the Rabbi, "so dark a night. Be thou to me as a guide, for I can hardly see the way."

"I know it well," replied the stranger with a sigh, "it is a way much frequented, and travelled hourly by many; lean upon mine arm, and fear not." They journeyed on; and though the darkness was great, yet the Rabbi could see when it occasionally brightened that he was in a place strange to him. "I thought," said he, "I knew all the country for leagues about Cairo, yet I know not where I am. I hope, young man," said he to his companion, "that thou hast not missed the way"; and his heart misgave him.

"Fear not," returned the stranger. "Your journey is even now done," and, as he spoke, the feet of the Rabbi slipped from under him, and he rolled down a great height. When he recovered, he found that his companion had fallen also, and stood by his side.

"Nay, young man," said the Rabbi, "if thus thou sportest with the grey hairs of age, thy days are numbered. Woe unto him who insults the hoary head!" The stranger made an excuse, and they journeyed on some little further in silence. The darkness grew less, and the astonished Rabbi, lifting up his eyes, found that they had come to the gates of a city which he had never before seen. Yet he knew all the cities of the land of Egypt, and he had walked but half an hour from his dwelling in Cairo. So he knew not what to think, but followed the man with trembling.

They soon entered the gates of the city, which was lighted up as if there were a festival in every house. The streets were full of revellers, and nothing but a sound of joy could be heard. But when Jochonan looked upon their faces, they were the faces of men pained within ; and he saw, by the marks they bore, that they were Mazikin.¹ He was terrified in his soul ; and, by the light of the torches, he looked also upon the face of his companion, and, behold ! he saw upon him too the mark that showed him to be a Demon. The Rabbi feared excessively—almost to fainting ; but he thought it better to be silent, and sadly he followed his guide, who brought him to a splendid house, in the most magnificent quarter of the city.

“ Enter here,” said the Demon to Jochonan, “ for this house is mine. The lady and the child are in the upper chamber ” ; and, accordingly, the sorrowful Rabbi ascended the stair to find them.

The lady, whose dazzling beauty was shrouded by melancholy beyond hope, lay in bed ; the child, in rich raiment, slumbered on the lap of the nurse, by her side.

“ I have brought to thee, light of my eyes ! ” said the Demon, “ Rebecca, beloved of my soul ! I have brought thee Rabbi Jochonan the wise, for whom thou didst desire. Let him, then, speedily begin his office ; I shall fetch all things necessary, for he is in haste to depart.”

He smiled bitterly as he said these words, looking at the Rabbi ; and left the room, followed by the nurse.

When Jochonan and the lady were alone, she turned in the bed towards him, and said : “ Unhappy man that thou art ! knowest thou where thou hast been brought ? ”

“ I do,” said he, with a heavy groan ; “ I know that I am in a city of the Mazikin.”

“ Know then, further,” said she, and the tears gushed from eyes brighter than the diamond, “ know then, further, that no one is ever brought here unless he hath sinned before the Lord. What my sin hath been imports not to thee, and I seek not to know thine. But here thou remainest for ever—lost, even as I am lost.” And she wept again. The Rabbi dashed his turban on the ground, and tearing his hair, exclaimed, “ Woe is me ! Who art thou, woman, that speakest to me thus ? ”

“ I am a Hebrew woman,” said she, “ the daughter of a doctor of the laws, in the city of Bagdad ; and being brought hither, it matters not how, I am married to a prince among the Mazikin, even him who was sent for thee. And that child, whom thou sawest, is our first-born, and I could not bear the thought that the soul of our innocent babe should perish. I therefore besought my husband to try to bring hither a priest, that the law of Moses (blessed be his memory !) should be done ; and thy fame, which has spread to Bagdad, and lands further towards the rising of the sun, made me think of thee. Now my husband, though great among the Mazikin, is more just than the other Demons ; and he loves me, whom he hath ruined, with a love of despair. So he said that the name of Jochonan the wise was familiar unto him, and that he knew thou wouldst not be able to refuse. What thou hast done, to give him power over thee, is known to thyself."

¹ Demons.

" I swear, before Heaven," said the Rabbi, " that I have ever diligently kept the law, and walked steadfastly according to the traditions of our fathers from the day of my youth upward. I have wronged no man in word or deed, and I have daily worshipped the Lord ; minutely performing all the ceremonies thereto needful."

" Nay," said the lady, " all this thou mightest have done, and more, and yet be in the power of the Demons. But time passes, for I hear the foot of my husband mounting the stair. There is one chance of thine escape."

" What is that ? O lady of beauty ! " said the agonized Rabbi.

" Eat not, drink not, nor take fee or reward while here ; and as long as thou canst do thus, the Mazikin have no power over thee, dead or alive. Have courage, and persevere."

As she ceased from speaking, her husband entered the room, followed by the nurse, who bore all things requisite for the ministration of the Rabbi. With a heavy heart he performed his duty, and the child was numbered among the faithful. But when, as usual, at the conclusion of the ceremony, the wine was handed round to be tasted by the child, the mother, and the Rabbi, he refused it, when it came to him, saying :

" Spare me, my lord, for I have made a vow that I fast this day ; and I will eat not, neither will I drink."

" Be it as thou pleasest," said the Demon ; " I will not that thou shouldst break thy vow " : and he laughed aloud.

So the poor Rabbi was taken into a chamber looking into a garden, where he passed the remainder of the night and the day, weeping and praying to the Lord that He would deliver him from the city of Demons. But when the twelfth hour came, and the sun was set, the Prince of the Mazikin came again unto him and said :

"Eat now, I pray thee, for the day of thy vow is past"; and he set meat before him.

"Pardon again thy servant, my lord," said Jochonan, "in this thing. I have another vow for this day also. I pray thee be not angry with thy servant."

"I am not angry," said the Demon; "be it as thou pleasest, I respect thy vow": and he laughed louder than before.

So the Rabbi sat another day in his chamber by the garden, weeping and praying. And when the sun had gone behind the hills the Prince of the Mazikin again stood before him, and said:

"Eat now, for thou must be an hungered. It was a sore vow of thine"; and he offered him daintier meats.

And Jochonan felt a strong desire to eat, but he prayed inwardly to the Lord, and the temptation passed, and he answered:

"Excuse thy servant yet a third time, my lord, that I eat not. I have renewed my vow."

"Be it so then," said the other; "arise, and follow me."

The Demon took a torch in his hand, and led the Rabbi through winding passages of his palace to the door of a lofty chamber, which he opened with a key that he took from a niche in the wall. On entering the room Jochonan saw that it was of solid silver, floor, ceiling, walls, even to the threshold and the doorposts. And the curiously-carved roof and borders of the ceiling shone in the torch-light as if they were the fanciful work of frost. In the midst were heaps of silver money, piled up in immense urns of the same metal, even over the brim.

"Thou hast done me a serviceable act, Rabbi," said the Demon; "take of these what thou pleasest; aye, were it the whole."

"I cannot, my lord," said Jochonan. "I was adjured by thee to come hither in the name of God; and in that name I came, not for fee or for reward."

"Follow me," said the Prince of the Mazikin; and Jochonan did so into an inner chamber. It was of gold, as the other was of silver. Its golden roof was supported by pillars and pilasters of gold, resting upon a golden floor. The treasures of the kings of the earth would not purchase one of the four-and-twenty vessels of golden coins which were disposed in six rows along the room. No wonder! for they were filled by the constant labours of the Demons of the mine. The heart of Jochonan was moved by avarice when he saw them shining in yellow light, like the autumnal sun, as they reflected the beams of the torch. But God enabled him to persevere.

"These are thine," said the Demon; "one of the vessels which thou beholdest would make thee richest of the sons of men—and I give thee them all."

But Jochonan refused again; and the Prince of the Mazikin opened the door of a third chamber, which was called the Hall of Diamonds. When the Rabbi entered he screamed aloud, and put his hands over his eyes, for the lustre of the jewels dazzled him, as if he had looked upon the noonday sun. In vases of agate were heaped diamonds beyond numeration, the smallest of which was larger than a pigeon's egg. On alabaster tables lay amethysts, topazes, rubies, beryls, and all other precious stones, wrought by the hands of skilful artists, beyond power of computation. The room was lighted by a carbuncle, which from the end of the hall poured its ever-living light, brighter than the rays of noontide, but cooler than the gentle radiance of the dewy moon. This was a sore trial on the Rabbi; but he was strengthened from above, and he refused again.

"Thou knowest me then, I perceive, O Jochonan, son of Ben-David," said the Prince of the Mazikin; "I am a Demon who would tempt thee to destruction. As thou hast withstood so far, I tempt thee no more. Thou hast done a service which, though I value it not, is acceptable in the sight of her whose love is dearer to me than the light of life. Sad has been that love to thee, my Rebecca! Why should I do that which would make thy cureless grief more grievous? You have yet another chamber to see," said he to Jochonan, who had closed his eyes, and was praying fervently to the Lord, beating his breast.

Far different from the other chambers, the one into which the Rabbi was next introduced was a mean and paltry apartment without furniture. On its filthy walls hung innumerable bunches of rusty keys of all sizes, disposed without order. Among them, to the astonishment of Jochonan, hung the keys of his own house, those which he had put to hide when he came on this miserable journey, and he gazed upon them intently.

"What dost thou see," said the Demon, "that makes thee look so eagerly? Can he who has refused silver, and gold, and diamonds, be moved by a paltry bunch of rusty iron?"

"They are mine own, my lord," said the Rabbi, "them will I take if they be offered me."

"Take them, then," said the Demon, putting them into his hand; "thou mayst depart. But, Rabbi, open not thy house only when thou returnest to Cairo, but thy heart also. That thou didst not open it before was that which gave me power over thee. It was well that thou didst one act of charity in coming with me without reward, for it has been thy salvation. Be no more Rabbi Jochonan the miser."

The Rabbi bowed to the ground, and blessed the Lord for his escape. "But how," said he, "am I to return, for I know not the way?"

"Close thine eyes," said the Demon. He did so, and, in the space of a moment, heard the voice of the Prince of the Mazikin ordering him to open them again. And behold, when he opened them, he stood in the centre of his own chamber, in his house at Cairo, with the keys in his hand.

When he recovered from his surprise, and had offered thanksgivings to God, he opened his house and his heart also. He gave alms to the poor, he cheered the heart of the widow, and lightened the destitution of the orphan. His hospitable board was open to the stranger, and his purse was at the service of all who needed to share it. His life was a perpetual act of benevolence, and the blessings showered upon him by all were returned bountifully upon him by the hand of God.

But people wondered, and said, "Is not this the man who was called Rabbi Jochonan the miser? What hath made the change?"

And it became a saying in Cairo. When it came to the ears of the Rabbi he called his friends together, and he avowed his former love of gold, and the danger to which it had exposed him, relating all which has been above told, in the hall of the new palace that he built by the side of the river, on the left hand, as thou goest down the course of the great stream. And wise men, who were scribes, wrote it down from his mouth, for the memory of mankind, that they might profit thereby. And a venerable man, with a beard of snow, who had read it in these books, and at whose feet I sat, that I might learn the wisdom of the old time, told it to me.

And I write it in the tongue of England, the merry and the free, on the tenth day of the month Nisan, in the year according to the lesser supputation, five hundred ninety and seven, that thou mayst learn good thereof. If not, the fault be upon thee.

WILLIAM HAMILTON MAXWELL

1792-1850

FRANK KENNEDY

MY father left the carabineers some years before the Irish rebellion of ninety-eight. Like greater warriors, the crop of laurels he collected in that celebrated corps was but a short one. It is true he had seen service : his sword, like Butler's knight's, of "passing worth," had been unsheathed in executing "warrants and exigents"; and more than once he had stormed a private distillery, under the leading of a desperate gauger.

He was, however, a stout slashing-looking fellow, and found favour in my mother's sight. She had reached the wrong side of thirty; consequently she made but a short resistance, and bestowed her hand and fortune on the bold dragoon. My mother was an heiress, but the estate of Killnacoppal owed "a trifle of money": now a trifle in Connaught is sometimes a sweeping sum; and you cannot safely calculate on rents in Connemara being paid exactly to the day.

I never exhibited precocity of intellect; but before I was sixteen I discovered that our establishment occasionally suffered from a scarcity of specie. At these times my father was sure to be afflicted with cold or rheumatism, and never left the house; and I suppose, for fear of disturbing him, the hall door was but seldom opened, and then only to a particular friend; while an ill-favoured tradesman or suspicious-looking stranger received their commands in the briefest manner from an upper window.

What was to be done with me had cruelly puzzled both my parents: and whether I should ornament the church, or benefit the revenue, was for a long time under consideration. The law, however, held out more promising prospects than either; and it was decided that I should be bound to an attorney.

Duncan Davidson, of Dorset Street, Dublin, was married to my father's sister. He was of Scotch descent, and like that "thinking people" from whom he sprung, he held "a hard grip of the main chance." Duncan was wealthy and childless, and if he could be induced to bring me up at his feet, God knows what might be the consequence. My father accordingly made the application, and the gracious Duncan consented to receive me for a time on trial.

What a bustle there was in Killnacoppal when my uncle's letter arrived ! Due preparations were made for my departure ; and as the term of my absence was computed at seven years, I had to take a formal and affectionate leave of my relatives to the fifteenth degree of consanguinity. My aunt Macan, whose cat's leg I had unfortunately dislocated, and who had not spoken to me since Candlemas, was induced to relent on the occasion, and favoured me with her blessing and a one-pound note, although she had often declared she never could banish the idea from her mind but that I should travel at the public expense, if my career were not finished in a more summary manner.

I arrived safely in Dublin—and awful were my feelings when first ushered into the presence of my uncle Duncan. He was a short fat man, in a brown coat and flax-coloured scratch-wig, perched upon a high office stool. Considering his dimensions, I used to marvel much how he managed to get there. Holding out his forefinger, which I dutifully grasped, he told me to be steady and attentive, and that my aunt would be happy to see me upstairs. On leaving the room, I heard him softly remark to the head clerk, that he did not much like my appearance, for that I had “ a wild eye in my head.”

I was duly put to the desk, and the course of trial was not flattering to me, or satisfactory to my intended master. It was allowed on all hands that my writing was abominable ; and my spelling, being untrammelled by rules, was found in many material points to differ from modern orthographers. Nor was I more successful in comparing deeds—my desk and stool were unluckily placed beside a window which looked into a narrow court, and a straw-bonnet maker occupied the opposite apartment. She was pretty, and I was naturally polite—and who with a rosy cheek before him would waste a look upon a tawny skin of parchment ? I mentally consigned the deed to the devil, and let the copy loose upon the world “ with all its imperfections on its head.”

The first trial was nearly conclusive—for never before had such a lame and lamentable document issued from the office of the punctilious Duncan. I had there omitted setting forth “ one hundred dove-cots,” and, for ought I know, left out “ one hundred castles,” to keep them company. My uncle almost dropped from his perch at the discovery ; and Counsellor Roundabout was heard to remark that a man's life was not safe in the hands of such a delinquent. I was on the point of getting my congé, and free permission to return to the place from whence I came ; but my aunt—good easy woman—interfered, and Duncan consented to give me a farther trial, and employ me to transport his bag to the courts and his briefs to the lawyer.

Any drudgery for me but the desk. With suitable instructions the bag was confided to me, and for three days it came back safely. On the fourth evening I was returning ; the bag was unusually full, and so had been my uncle's admonitions for its security. I had got half-way down Capel Street, when whom should I see on the other side of the way but Slasher Mac Tighe ?

The Slasher was five akin to my mother, and allowed to be the greatest buck at the last fair of Ballinasloe—and would he acknowledge me, loaded as I was like a Jew clothesman ? What was to be done ? I slipped the accursed bag to a ragged boy—promised him some halfpence for his trouble—prudently assured him that his cargo was invaluable—told him to wait for me at the corner, and next moment was across the street, with a fast hold of the Slasher's right hand.

The Slasher—peace to his ashes ! for he was shot stone dead in the Phoenix Park—we never well understood the quarrel in Connemara, and it was said there that the poor man himself was not thoroughly informed on the subject—appeared determined to support his justly-acquired reputation at the late fair of Ballinasloe. Not an eye in Capel Street but was turned on him as he swaggered past. His jockey boots—I must begin below—were in the newest style ; the top sprang from the ankle-bone, and was met midleg by short tights of tea-coloured leather ; three smoothing-iron seals and a chain that would manacle a deserter dangled from the fob ; his vest was of amber kerseymere, gracefully sprinkled with stars and shamrocks ; his coat sky-blue, with basket buttons, relieved judiciously with a purple neckcloth, and doeskin gloves ; while a conical hat with a leaf full seven inches broad topped all. A feeble imitation of the latter article may still be seen by the curious, in a hatter's window, No. 71 in the Strand, with a label affixed thereto, denominating it "Neck or Nothing."

Lord, how proud I felt when the Slasher tucked me under his arm ! We had already taken two turns—the admiration of a crowded thoroughfare—when I looked round for my bag-holder ; but he was not visible. I left my kinsman hastily, ran up and down the street, looked round the corners, peered into all the public-houses ; but neither bag nor boy was there. I recollected my uncle's name and address were written on it, and the urchin might have mistaken his instructions and carried the bag home. Off I ran, tumbled an apple basket in Bolton Street, and spite of threats and curses, held on my desperate course, until I found myself, breathless, in my uncle's presence.

He sternly reproached me for being dilatory.

"What had detained me? Here had been Counsellor Leatherhead's servant waiting this half-hour for his papers ;—bring in the bag." I gaped at him, and stuttered that I supposed it had been already here ; but it would certainly arrive shortly. Question and answer followed rapidly, and the fatal truth came out—the bag was lost !—for the cad, advertised of the value of his charge, had retreated the moment I turned my back ; and although on investigation he must have felt much disappointed at the result of his industry, yet, to do him justice, he lost no time in transferring the papers to the tobacconist and pocketing the produce of the same.

For some moments Duncan's rage prevented him from speaking. At last he found utterance ;—"Heaven and earth !" he exclaimed ; "was there ever such a villain? He was ruined :—all the Kilgobbin title-deeds—Lady Splashboard's draft of separation—papers of satisfaction for sixteen mortgages of Sir Phelim O'Boyl !—What was to be done? "

I muttered that I supposed I should be obliged to give Sir Phelim satisfaction myself.

"O! curse your satisfaction," said my uncle ; "these are your Connaught notions, you desperate do-no-good. What an infernal business to let any one from that barbarous country into my house ! Never had but two clients in my life on the other side of the Shannon. I divorced a wife for one ; and he died insolvent the very day the decree was pronounced, and costs and money advanced went along with him to the devil. The other quarrelled with me for not taking a bad bill for my demand, and giving a large balance over my claim, in ready cash. I threatened law, and he threatened flagellation. I took courage and sent down a writ ; and the sheriff returned a non est inventus, although he was hunting with him for a fortnight. I ran him to execution and got nulla bona on my return. As a last resource I sent a man specially from Dublin : they tossed him in a blanket, and forced him to eat the original ; and he came back, half dead, with a civil intimation that if I ever crossed the bridge of Athlone, the defendant would drive as many slugs through my body as there were hoops on a wine-pipe ! ”

I could not help smiling at the simile : the client was a wag ; for my uncle in his personal proportions bore a striking resemblance to a quarter-cask.

“ But run, every soul of you,” he continued, “ and try to get some clue by which we may trace the papers.”

Away clerk and apprentice started ; but their researches were unsuccessful ; many a delicate cut of cheese was already encased in my Lady Splashboard’s separation bill ; and the Kilgobbin title-deeds had issued in subdivisions from the snuff-shop, and were making a rapid circle of the metropolis.

My aunt’s influence was not sufficient to obtain my pardon, and mollify the attorney ; and I was despatched, per mail, to that refugium peccatorum, as Duncan styled Connemara.

The gentle auditor may anticipate that on my return no fatted calf was killed ; nor was there “ joy in Aztlan,” as the poet-laureate has it. I re-entered Killnacoppal without beat of drum—and indeed my demeanour on this occasion was so modest that I had been in undisturbed possession of the front attic for two whole days before my worthy parents were advertised that I had retired from the study of the law, with no future intention to “ stick to the woolsack.”

To communicate the abrupt termination of my forensic pursuits to my aunt Macan was an affair of nice and delicate management. When acquainted with the unhappy incident which had drawn down the wrath of my uncle Duncan, she particularly inquired “ if there had been any money in the lost bag,” and requested to see the last “ Hue and Cry.”

God knows whether I should have been enabled to weather the gale of family displeasure, as my aunt had again resumed the mantle of prophecy, when, luckily for me, the representation of the county of Galway became vacant by the sudden decease of Sir Barnabas Bodkin ; the honest gentleman being smothered in a hackney-coach returning comfortable from a corporation dinner at Morrison’s.

On this distressing event being known, Mr. Denis Darcey, of Carriga-howley Castle, declared himself. He was strongly supported by Mr. Richard Martin, the other member ; and his address, from the pen of the latter gentleman, was circulated without delay. In it he set forth his family and pretensions: pledged himself to support Catholic emancipation and the repeal of still fines;—humanely recommended his opponent to provide himself with a coffin previous to the opening of the poll;—professed strong attachment to the House of Brunswick, and the Church by law established; and promised to use his utmost exertions to purify the penal code, by making accidents in duelling amount to justifiable homicide: and abduction of heiresses and dogs, felony without benefit of clergy.

A person of Denis Darcey's constitutional principles was a man after my father's own heart: the Killnacoppal interest was accordingly given him, and I was despatched at the head of sixscore freeholders, "good men and true," untrammelled with tight shoes or tender consciences, to give our "most sweet voices," in the ancient town of Galway.

But I was not entrusted with this important command without receiving full instructions for my conduct on the occasion. My father, no doubt, would have led the Killnacoppal legion to the hustings in person, had it not happened that the sheriff was on the other side; and, therefore, his public appearance within the bailiwick of that redoubted personage would have been a dangerous experiment. "Frank," said my father, "don't overdo the thing: poll your men twice! and more cannot be expected; but mind the outwork, for it's there the tinints will shine."

I obeyed him to the letter; and without personal vanity, I ascribe the happy return of my esteemed friend Denis Darcey to the unwearied exertions of the freeholders of Killnacoppal. What between pelting the military, smashing the booths, and scattering the tallies, we managed to keep up such confusion that our adversaries could hardly bring forward a man. If dispersed by a charge of cavalry here, we were rallied in a few minutes in the next street, cracking heads and crashing windows: if routed by the Riot Act and a row of bayonets, before the sheriff was well round the corner we had a house pulled down to the tune of "Hurrah for Killnacoppal!"

At last, all human means being found unavailable by our opponents to bring in a freeholder, the booths were closed, and Mr. Denis Darcey declared duly elected.

After such feats, how could it be wondered at that I was courted and caressed,

High placed in halls a welcome guest;

seated within seven of the chairman at the election dinner, drank wine with the new member, toasted by the old one, I mean Dick Martin—and embraced by Blakes, Brownes, and Bodkins in endless variety?—Nor did the reward of “high desert” end here; for in the next gazette I was appointed to a lieutenancy in the South Mayo militia.

With very different feelings I now returned to my paternal mansion—I, who had left the little lawyer in Dorset Street in disgrace, and been happy to effect a sort of felonious re-entry of the premises at Killnacoppal—I now came home a conqueror; an hundred blackthorns rattled above my head; an hundred voices yelled “Kinnidy for ivir!”—a keg of poteen was broached before the door; a stack of turf was blazing in the village; and all was triumph and exultation. We had brought back, of course, the usual assortment of broken bones, left some half-score damaged skulls to be repaired at the expense of the county, and carried back one gentleman totally defunct, who had been suffocated by tumbling dead drunk into a bog-hole. My fame had travelled before me, and my aunt Macan had taken to her bed not from vanity, but “vexation of spirit.”

My leave of absence expired, and I set out to join my regiment. My mother consulted the Army List, and discovered she had divers relatives in my corps; for there was scarcely a family from Loughrea to Belmullet with whom she was not in some way connected. Some of her relations in the South Mayo she mentioned as being rather remote; but there was Captain Rattigan: his father, Luke Rattigan of Rawnacreeva, married Peter Fogarty's third daughter; and Peter Fogarty and my aunt Macan were cousins-german.

No doubt the gallant captain would know and acknowledge the relationship, and take that lively interest in my welfare which was natural; but, for fear of mistakes, she wrote a letter of introduction with me, having very fortunately danced fifteen years before with the said Mr. Rattigan, at a fair ball at Ballinasloe.

For the second time I left my father's house. The headquarters of the regiment were in Naas, and there I arrived in safety; was recognized by Captain Rattigan; presented by him in due form to the colonel; introduced to the corps; paid plate and band-fund fees; dined at the mess; got drunk there as became a soldier of promise, and was carried home to my inn by a file of the guard, after having overheard the fat major remark to my kinsman—

“Rat, that boy of yours will be a credit to the regiment; for as

I'm a true Catholic, he has taken off three bottles of Page's port, and no doubt he'll improve."

A year passed over—I conducted myself creditably in all regimental matters, touching drill duty and drinking, when an order suddenly came for a detachment to march to Ballybunnion ; in the neighbourhood of which town the pleasant part of the population were amusing themselves nightly in carding middlemen, and feathering tithe proctors. Captain Rattigan's company (in which I was an unworthy lieutenant) was selected for this important service.

The morning I left Naas for Ballybunnion will be a memorable day in the calendar of my life. My cousin Rattigan frequently boasted, after dinner, that " he was under fifty, and above five feet three " ; but there were persons in the corps who alleged that he was above the former and under the latter :—but let that pass—he is now, honest man, quietly resting in Craughane churchyard, with half a ton weight of Connemara marble over him, on which his virtues and his years are recorded.

Now, without stopping to ascertain minutely the age and height of the departed, I shall describe him as a thick square-shouldered undersized man, having a short neck and snub-nose—the latter organ fully attesting that Page's port was a sound and well-bodied liquor. The captain, on his pied pony, rode gallantly on at the head of " his charge " : I modestly followed on foot—and late in the evening we marched in full array down the main street of Ballybunnion, our fife and drum playing to the best of their ability the captain's favourite quick step, "I'm over young to marry yet."

My kinsman and I were peaceably settled over our wine, when the waiter announced that a gentleman had called upon us. He was shown up in proper form ; and having managed by depressing his person, which was fully six feet four inches, to enter the apartment he announced himself as Mr. Christopher Clinch ; and in a handsome speech declared himself to be an ambassador from the stewards of the Ballybunnion coterie ; which coterie being to be holden that evening, he was deputed to solicit the honour of our company on this occasion. Captain Rattigan returned our acknowledgments duly ; and he and the ambassador having discussed a cooper of port within a marvellous short period, separated with many squeezes of the hand, and ardent hopes of a future acquaintance.

There was a subject my kinsman invariably dwelt upon whenever he had transgressed the third bottle—it was a bitter lamentation over the numerous opportunities he had suffered to escape of making himself comfortable for life, by matrimony. As we dressed together, for we were cantoned in a double-bedded room, Rat was unusually eloquent on the grand mistake of his earlier days, and declared his determination of even yet endeavouring to amend his youthful error, and retrieve lost time.

The commander's advice was not lost upon me. I took unusual pains in arraying myself for conquest, and in good time found myself in the ballroom, with thirty couples on the floor all dancing "for the bare life" that admired tune of "Blue bonnets over the border."

The attention evinced in his visit to the inn by Mr. Christopher Clinch was not confined to a formal invitation; for he assured us on our arrival that two ladies had been expressly kept disengaged for us. Captain Rattigan declined dancing, alleging that exercise flurried him, and he could not abide a red face, it looked so very like dissipation. I, whose countenance was fortunately not so inflammable as my kinsman's, was marshalled by Mr. Clinch to the head of the room.

"He was going," he said, "to introduce me to Miss Jemima O'Brien—lady of first connections—large fortune when some persons at present in possession dropped off—fine woman—much followed—sprightly—off-handed—fond of military men. Miss O'Brien, Captain Kennedy." I bowed—she ducked—seized my offered hand, and in a few minutes we were going down the middle like two-year-olds for "the Kirwans." Nor had Captain Rattigan been neglected by the master of the ceremonies: he was snugly seated in a quiet corner at cribbage, a game the commander delighted in, with an elderly gentlewoman, whom my partner informed me was her aunt.

Miss O'Brien was what Rattigan called a spanker. She was dressed in a blue silk lute-string gown, with a plume of ostrich feathers, flesh-coloured stockings, and red satin shoes. She had the usual assortment of beads and curls, with an ivory fan and a well-scented handkerchief.

She was evidently a fine-tempered girl; for, observing my eye rest on an immense stain upon her blue lute-string, she remarked with a smile "that her aunt's footman had spilled some coffee on her dress, and to save him from a scolding, she had assured the dear old lady that the injury was trifling, and that it would be quite unnecessary to detain her while she should change her gown: it was quite clear she never could wear it again; but her maid and the milliner would be the gainers. Amiable creature!—the accident did not annoy her for a second.

The first dance had concluded, when the long gentleman whispered softly over my shoulder how I liked "the heiress"? The heiress!—I felt a faint hope rising in my breast which made my cheek colour like a peony. Rattigan's remorse for neglected opportunities rushed to my mind. Had my lucky hour come? And had I actually an heiress by the hand for nine-and-twenty couples? We were again at the head of the room, and away we went—she cutting and I capering, until we danced to the very bottom, "The wind that shakes the barley!"

I had placed Miss O'Brien with great formality on a bench, when Rattigan took me aside:—"Frank, you're a fortunate fellow, or it's your own fault—found out all from the old one—lovely creature—great catch—who knows?—strike while the iron is hot," etc., etc., etc.

Fortune indeed appeared to smile upon me. By some propitious accident all the men had been provided with partners, and I had the heiress to myself. "She was, she confessed, romantic—she had quite a literary turn; spoke of Lady Morgan's Wild Irish Girl; she loved it—doted upon it;—and why should she not? for Lieutenant-colonel Cassidy had repeatedly sworn that Glorvina was written for herself";—and she raised her fan

The conscious blush to hide.

Walter Scott succeeded—I had read in the Galway Advertiser a quotation from that poet, which the newspaper had put in the mouth of a travelling priest, and alleged to have been spoken by him in a charity sermon, which I now fortunately recollected and repeated. Miss O'Brien responded directly with that inflammatory passage,—

In peace love tunes the shepherd's reed.

"And could she love?"—I whispered with a look of tender inquietude. "She could; she had a heart, she feared, too warm for her happiness: she was a creature of imagination—all soul—all sympathy. She could wander with the man of her heart from Egypt's fires to Zembla's frost."

There was no standing this. I mustered all my resolution—poured out an unintelligible rhapsody—eternal love—life gratefully devoted—permission to fall at her feet—hand—heart—fortune!

She sighed deeply—kept her fan to her face for some moments—and, in a voice of peculiar softness, murmured something about “short acquaintance,” with a gentle supplication to be allowed time for ten minutes to consult her heart. Rat again rushed to my mind; procrastination had ruined him; I was obdurate—pressed—raved—ranted—till she sighed, in a timid whisper, that she was mine for ever!

Heavens!—was I awake?—did my ears deceive me? The room turned topsy-turvy—the candles danced a reel—my brain grew giddy—it was true—absolutely true; Jemima O'Brien had consented to become Mrs. Kennedy!

Up came Captain Rattigan, as my partner left me for an instant to speak to her aunt. Rat was thunderstruck—cursed his fate, and complimented mine.

“But, zounds! Frank, you must stick to her. Would she run away with you? These d—— lawyers will be tying up the property, so that you cannot touch a guinea but the half-year’s rent—may be inquiring about settlements, and ripping up the cursed mortgages of Killnacoppal. At her, man,—they are all on the move. I’ll manage the old one: mighty lucky, by-the-by, at cribbage. Try and get the heiress to be off—to-morrow, if possible—early hour. Oh! murder—how I lost my time!”

All was done as the commander directed. Rat kept the aunt in play while I pressed the heiress hard—and so desperately did I portray my misery, that, to save my life, she humanely consented to elope with me at twelve o’clock next day.

Rattigan was enraptured. What a chance for a poor lieutenant—as he shrewdly observed, from the very unpretending appearance of Mrs. Cogan’s mansion, that “my aunt’s” purse must be a long one. We settled ourselves joyfully at the inn fire—ordered two bottles of mulled port—arranged all for the elopement—clubbed purses—sum total not burdensome—and went to bed drunk and happy.

Next morning—the morning of that day which was to bless me with fortune and a wife, Captain Rattigan and I were sitting at an early breakfast, when, who should unexpectedly arrive but Cornet Bircham, who was in command of a small party of dragoons in Ballybunnion, and an old acquaintance of my kinsman. “How lucky!” whispered Rat; “he has been quartered here for three months, and we shall hear the particulars of the O’Briens from him.”

While he spoke the trooper entered. "Ah! Ratty, old boy, how wags the world?—Just heard you had been sent here to exterminate carders—cursed scoundrels!—obliged me to leave a delightful party at Lord Tara's; but, Rat, we'll make them smoke for it."

"Mr. Bircham, my cousin Kennedy. Come, Cornet, off with the scimitar and attack the congo. Any news stirring?"

"Nothing but a flying report that you had determined on sobriety and forsworn a drop beyond the third bottle;—but that shake in your claw gives a lie direct to the tale. And you were dancing, Rat, last night. How did the carnival or coterie go off? Any wigs lost or gowns tattered? Any catastrophe?"

"Why, no—pleasant thing enough—some fine women there."

"Were there, faith? Why, Rat, you're a discoverer; for such a crew as figured at the last one, mortal eye never looked upon."

"I only particularly noticed one—by Jove, a fine woman!—a Miss O'Brien."

"Miss Jemmy O'Brien, as the men call her. Why, Rat, what iniquity of yours has delivered you into the hands of the most detestable harpy that ever infested country quarters?"

"Detestable harpy!"—Rat and I looked cursedly foolish. "Bircham—hem!—are you sure you know the lady?"

"Know the lady! to be sure I do. Why, she did me out of an ivory fan one unlucky wet day that the devil tempted me to enter Mrs. Cogan's den. Phoo! I'll give you what the beadle calls 'marks and tokens.' Let me see.—Yes—I have it—blue dress, cursedly splashed with beer—she says coffee; soiled feathers, and tricked out like a travelling actress."

I groaned audibly—it was Jemima to a T:—Captain Rattigan looked queer.

"My dear Bircham—hem!—you know among military men—hem!—honourable confidence may be reposed—hem! My young friend here danced with her—represented as an heiress to him——"

"By a cursed hag who cheats at cribbage, and carries off negus by the quart."

"True bill, by ——!" ejaculated the Captain. "Complained eternally of thirst and the heat of the room, and did me regularly out of thirty shillings."

" Ha ! ha ! ha !—Rat, Rat, and wert thou so soft, my old one ? "

" But, Birchy," said the Captain, " the devil of it is, my young friend—little too much wine—thought himself in honourable hands, and promised her——"

" A new silk gown—ah, my young friend, little didst thou know the Jezebel. But it was a promise obtained under false pretences—she told you a cock-and-bull story about Lady Morgan—sporting Scott—dealt out Tom Moore by the yard—all false pretences. See her damned before I would buy her a yard of riband. What a pirate the woman is ! "

Rat jumped off his chair, drew his breath in, and gulped out—" A gown ! Zounds, man, he promised to marry her ! "

Up jumped Bircham.—" To marry her ! Are you mad, or are you hoaxing ? "

" Serious, by St. Patrick," said Rat.

" Why then it's no longer a joke. You are in a nice scrape. I beg to tell you that Jemmy O'Brien is as notorious as Captain Rock. She has laid several fools under contribution, and has just returned from Dublin, after taking an action against a little drunken one-eyed Welsh major, whom her aunt got, when intoxicated, to sign some paper or promise of marriage. The major, like a true gentleman, retrieved his error by suspending himself in his lodgings the day before the trial ; and it is likely that Jem and her aunt will be in gaol, for the law expenses."

Rat and I were overwhelmed, and looked for some minutes in silence at each other. At last I told Bircham the whole affair. The dragoon was convulsed with laughter—" So," said he, " at twelve o'clock the gentle Jemmy is to be spirited away. But come, there's no time to lose—sit down, Rat, get a pen in thy fist, and I'll dictate and thou inscribe."

" MADAM—Having unfortunately, at the request of his afflicted family, undertaken the case of Lieutenant Kennedy of the South Mayo regiment, I beg to apprise you that the unhappy gentleman is subject to occasional fits of insanity. Fearing from his mental malady that he may have misconducted himself to your amiable niece last night at the coterie, I beg on the part of my poor friend (who is tolerably collected this morning) to say that he is heartily sorry for what has occurred, and requests the lady will consider anything he might have said only as the wanderings of a confirmed lunatic !—I am, Madam, etc., your obedient servant, “TERENCE RATTIGAN, Capt. S— M— Militia.

“To Mrs. Cogan, etc.”

How very flattering this apology was to me I submit to the indulgent auditor. I was indubitably proven to have been an ass overnight, and I must pass as a lunatic in the morning. We had barely time to speculate on the success of Bircham's curious epistle, when my aunt Cogan's answer arrived with due promptitude. The Cornet separated the wet wafer with a “Faugh !” and holding the billet at arm's length, as if it exhibited a plague-spot, he favoured us with the contents, which were literally as follows :

“CAPTIN RATIGIN.

“SIR—I have red your paltrey appollogey for your nephew's breech of promis. I beg to tell you that a lady of the family of Clinch will not submit to be ensulted with impunnitey. My neece is packed and reddy ; and if your friend does not appear according to apointment, he will shortly here as will not plase him, from yours to command, “HONOR COGAN, otherwise CLINCH.

“Hawthorn Cotage, Friday morning.”

Twelve o'clock passed—and we waited the result of Mrs. Cogan's threats, when the waiter showed up a visitor, and Mr. Christopher Clinch, the prime cause of all our misfortunes, presented himself. He persisted in standing, or more properly stooping—for the ceiling was not quite six feet from the floor—coughed—hoped his interference might adjust the mistake, as he presumed it must be on the part of Lieutenant Kennedy, and begged to inform him that Miss Jemima O'Brien was ready to accompany the said Mr. Kennedy, as last night arranged. Captain Rattigan took the liberty to remark that he, the captain, had been very explicit with Mrs. Cogan, and requested to refer to his letter, in which Mr. Kennedy's sentiments were fully conveyed, and, on his part, to decline the very flattering proposal of Miss Jemima O'Brien.

Mr. Clinch stated that an immediate change of sentiment on the part of Mr. Kennedy was imperative, or that Mr. K. would be expected to favour him, Mr. C., with an interview in the Priest's Meadow. Captain Rattigan acknowledged the request of Mr. Clinch to be a very reasonable alternative, and covenanted that Mr. Kennedy should appear at the time and place mentioned ; and Mr. Clinch was then very ceremoniously conducted downstairs by the polite commander.

Through motives of delicacy, I had at the commencement of the interview retired to the next apartment ; and as the rooms were only separated by a boarded partition, I overheard through a convenient chink, with desperate alarm, Captain Rattigan giving every facility to my being shot at in half an hour in the Priest's Meadow. No wonder then Rat found me pale as a spectre, when bursting into the room he seized me by the hand, and told me he had brought this unlucky business to a happy termination. He, the captain, dreaded that Jemima would have been looking for legal redress ; but, thank God, it would only end in a duel.

I hinted at the chance of my being shot.

" Shot ! " exclaimed my comforter, " why, what the deuce does that signify ? If indeed you had been under the necessity of hanging yourself, like the one-eyed major, it would have been a hardship. No funeral honours—no decent wake—but smuggled into the earth like a half-bale of contraband tobacco ;—but, in your case, certain of respectable treatment—reversed arms—dead march—and Christian burial :—vow to God, quite a comfort to be shot under such flattering circumstances ! Frank, you have all the luck of the Rattigans about you ! "—and, opening the door, he hallooed—" Myke—Myke Boyle, bring down the pace-makers to the parlour."

In a few seconds I heard the captain and his man busily at work, and by a number of villainous clicks, which jarred through my system like electricity, I found these worthies were arranging the commander's pace-makers for my use in the Priest's Meadow.

At the appointed hour I reached the ground, which was but a short distance from the inn. Rattigan and Bircham accompanied me, and Myke Boyle followed with the tools. Mr. Christopher Clinch and his friends were waiting for us ; and a cadaverous-looking being was peeping through the hedge, whom I afterwards discovered to be the village apothecary, allured thither by the hope of an accident, as birds of prey are said to be collected by a chance of carrion.

The customary bows were formally interchanged between the respective belligerents—the ground correctly measured—pistols squibbed, loaded, and delivered to the principals. I felt very queer on finding myself opposite a truculent fellow of enormous height, with a pair of projecting whiskers upon which a man might hang his hat, and a pistol two feet long clutched in his bony grasp. Rattigan, as he adjusted my weapon, whispered, "Frank, jewel, remember the hip-bone; or, as the fellow's a —— of a length, you may level a trifle higher"; and, stepping aside, his coadjutor pronounced in an audible voice—"One !—two !!—three !!! "

Off went the pistols. I felt Mr. Clinch's bullet whistle past my ear, and saw Captain Rattigan next moment run up to my antagonist and inquire "if he was much hurt." Heavens !—how delightful ! I had brought the engagement to a glorious issue by neatly removing Mr. Clinch's trigger-finger, and thereby spoiling his shooting for life.

With a few parting bows we retired from the Priest's Meadow, leaving Christopher Clinch a job for the vampire apothecary, and a fit subject for the assiduities of Mrs. Cogan and the gentle Jemima.

If Captain Rattigan had registered a rash vow against port wine, it is to be lamented, for never were three gentlemen of the sword more completely done up at an early hour of the evening than we.

Next day we were informed that Clinch was tolerably well, and that their attorney had been closeted with the ladies of Hawthorn Cottage. We held a council of war, and while debating on the expediency of my retiring on leave to Connemara, where I might set Jemmy and her lawyer at defiance, the post brought us intelligence that "a turn-out for the line was wanted"; and if I could muster the necessary number, I should be exchanged into a regular regiment.

Off Rat and I started for Naas, and with little difficulty succeeded in making up the quota; and the first intimation the prototype of Glorvina received of our movements was being seduced to the window by the drums, as I marched past Hawthorn Cottage, with as choice a sample of "food for gunpowder" as ever left Ballybunnion. I saluted the once-intended Mrs. Kennedy with great respect; the fifers struck up "Fare you well, Killeavey"; and Captain Rattigan, who accompanied me the first day's march, ejaculated, as he looked askance at this second Ariadne, "May the devil smother you, Jemima O'Brien !"

I have a mighty affection for the army, and, therefore, I supplicate young soldiers never to propose for a lady in a public ballroom the first night they arrive in country quarters, and to shun, as they would the chorea viti, that seductive tune, called "The wind that shakes the barley !"—and, finally, to give no credence whatever to any apology offered for a soiled silk unless they have perpetrated the offence in person, or have seen it committed in their own actual presence.

SAMUEL LOVER

1797-1868

THE GRIDIRON

A CERTAIN old gentleman in the west of Ireland, whose love of the ridiculous quite equalled his taste for claret and fox-hunting, was wont, upon certain festive occasions when opportunity offered, to amuse his friends by drawing out one of his servants who was exceedingly fond of what he termed his "thravels," and in whom a good deal of whim, some queer stories, and, perhaps more than all, long and faithful services, had established a right of loquacity.

He was one of those few trusty and privileged domestics, who, if his master unheedingly uttered a rash thing in a fit of passion, would venture to set him right.

If the squire said, "I'll turn that rascal off," my friend Pat would say, "throth you won't, sir"; and Pat was always right, for if any altercation arose upon the subject-matter in hand, he was sure to throw in some good reason, either from former service—general good conduct—or the delinquent's "wife and childher," that always turned the scale.

But I am digressing. On such merry meetings as I have alluded to, the master, after making certain "approaches," as a military man would say, as the preparatory steps in laying siege to some extravaganza of his servant, might, perchance, assail Pat thus:

"By the by, Sir John" (addressing a distinguished guest), "Pat has a very curious story, which something you told me to-day reminds me of. You remember, Pat" (turning to the man, evidently pleased at the notice paid to himself)—"you remember that queer adventure you had in France?"

"Throth I do, sir," grins forth Pat.

"What!" exclaims Sir John, in feigned surprise. "Was Pat ever in France?"

"Indeed he was," cries mine host; and Pat adds, "Ay, and farther, plase your honour."

"I assure you, Sir John," continues mine host, "Pat told me a story once that surprised me very much, respecting the ignorance of the French."

"Indeed!" rejoins the baronet. "Really, I always supposed the French to be a most accomplished people."

"Throth, then, they're not, sir," interrupts Pat.

"Oh, by no means," adds mine host, shaking his head emphatically.

"I believe, Pat, 'twas when you were crossing the Atlantic?" says the master, turning to Pat with a seductive air, and leading into the "full and true account"—(for Pat had thought fit to visit North Amerikay, for "a raison he had," in the autumn of the year ninety-eight).

"Yes, sir," says Pat, "the broad Atlantic," a favourite phrase of his, which he gave with a brogue as broad almost as the Atlantic itself.

"It was the time I was lost in crassin' the broad Atlantic, comin' home," began Pat, decoyed into the recital; "whin the winds began to blow, and the sae to rowl, that you'd think the Colleen Dhas (that was her name) would not have a mast left.

"Well, sure enough, the masts went by the board at last, and the pumps was choaked (divil choak them for that same), and av coorse the wather gained an us, and throth, to be filled with water is neither good for man or baste; and she was sinkin' fast, settlin' down, as the sailors calls it, and faith I never was good at settlin' down in my life, and I liked it then less nor ever. Accordingly we prepared for the worst, and put out the boat, and got a sack o' bishkits, and a cashk o' pork, and a kag o' wather, and a thrifle o' rum aboard, and any other little mathers we could think iv in the mortial hurry we wor in—and, faith, there was no time to be lost, for my darlint, the Colleen Dhas, went down like a lump o' lead, afore we wor many sthrokes o' the oar away from her.

"Well, we dhrifted away all that night, and next mornin' we put up a blanket an the ind av a pole as well as we could, and thin we sailed illigant, for we dar'n't show a stitch o' canvas the night before, bekase it was blowin' like murther, savin' your presence, and sure it's the wondher of the world we worn't swallyed alive by the ragin' sae.

"Well, away we wint for more nor a week, and nothin' before our two good-looking eyes but the canopy iv heaven, and the wide ocean—the broad Atlantic—not a thing was to be seen but the sae and the sky: and though the sae and the sky is mighty purty things in themselves, throth they're no great things whin you've nothin' else to look at for a week together—and the barest rock in the world, so it was land, would be more welkim.

"And then, sure enough, throth, our provisions began to run low, the bishkits, and the wather, and the rum—throth that was gone first of all—God help uz!—and oh! it was thin that starvation began to stare us in the face. 'Oh, murther, murther, captain, darlint,' says I, 'I wish we could see land anywhere,' says I.

" 'More power to your elbow, Paddy, my boy,' says he, 'for sitch a good wish, and, throth, it's myself wishes the same.'

" 'Oh,' says I, 'that it may plaze you, sweet queen in heaven—supposing it was only a dissolute island,' says I, 'inhabited wid Turks, sure they wouldn't be such bad Chrissthans as to refuse uz a bit and a sup.'

" 'Whisht, whisht, Paddy,' says the captain; 'don't be talkin' bad of any one,' says he; 'you don't know how soon you may want a good word put in for yourself, if you should be called to quarthers in th' other world all of a suddent,' says he.

" 'Thrue for you, captain, darlint,' says I—I called him darlint, and made free wid him, you see, bekase disthress makes uz all equal—'thrue for you, captain, jewel—God betune uz and harm, I owe no man any spite'—and, throth, that was only thruth.

"Well, the last bishkit was sarved out, and, by gor, the wather itself was all gone at last, and we passed the night mighty cowl'd. Well, at the brake o' day the sun riz most beautiful out o' the waves, that was as bright as silver and as clear as cryshthal.

"But it was only the more crule upon uz, for we wor beginnin' to feel terrible hungry; when all at wanst I thought I spied the land—by gor, I thought I felt my heart up in my throat in a minnit, and 'Thundher and turf, captain,' says I, 'look to leeward,' says I.

" 'What for?' says he.

" 'I think I see the land,' says I. So he ups with his bring-'um-near (that's what the sailors call a spy-glass, sir), and looks out, and, sure enough, it was.

" 'Hurrah!' says he, 'we're all right now; pull away, my boys,' says he.

" 'Take care you're not mistaken,' says I; 'maybe it's only a fog-bank, captain, darlint,' says I.

" 'Oh, no,' says he, 'it's the land in airnest.'

“ ‘ Oh, then, whereabouts in the wide world are we, captain ? ’ says I ; ‘ maybe it id be in Roosia or Proosia, or the Garman Oceant,’ says I.

“ ‘ Tut, you fool,’ says he, for he had that consaited way wid him—thinkin’ himself cleverer nor any one else—’ tut, you fool,’ says he ; ‘ that’s France,’ says he.

“ ‘ Tare an ouns,’ says I, ‘ do you tell me so ? And how do you know it’s France it is, captain, dear,’ says I.

“ ‘ Bekase this is the Bay o’ Bishky we’re in now,’ says he.

“ ‘ Throth, I was thinkin’ so myself,’ says I, ‘ by the rowl it has ; for I often heerd av it in regard o’ that same ’ ; and, throth, the likes av it I never seen before nor since, and, with the help o’ God, never will.

“ ‘ Well, with that my heart begun to grow light, and when I seen my life was safe, I began to grow twice hungrier nor ever—so says I, ‘ Captain, jewel, I wish we had a gridiron.’

“ ‘ Why, then,’ says he, ‘ thundher and turf,’ says he, ‘ what put a gridiron into your head ? ’

“ ‘ Bekase I’m starvin’ with the hunger,’ says I.

“ ‘ And sure, bad luck to you,’ says he, ‘ you couldn’t ate a gridiron,’ says he, ‘ barrin you wor a pelican o’ the wildherness,’ says he.

“ ‘ Ate a gridiron ! ’ says I. ‘ Och, in throth, I’m not such a gommoch all out as that, anyhow. But sure if we had a gridiron we could dress a beefsteak,’ says I.

“ ‘ Arrah ! but where’s the beefsteak ? ’ says he.

“ ‘ Sure, couldn’t we cut a slice aff the pork ? ’ says I.

“ ‘ By gor, I never thought o’ that,’ says the captain. ‘ You’re a clever fellow, Paddy,’ says he, laughin’.

“ ‘ Oh, there’s many a thrue word said in joke,’ says I.

“ ‘ Thru for you, Paddy,’ says he.

“ ‘ Well, then,’ says I, ‘ if you put me ashore there beyant ’ (for we were nearin’ the land all the time), ‘ and sure I can ask thim for to lind me the loan of a gridiron,’ says I.

“ ‘ Oh, by gor, the butther’s comin’ out o’ the stirabout in airnest now,’ says he. ‘ You gommoch,’ says he, ‘ sure I towld you before that’s France—and sure they’re all furriners there,’ says the captain.

“ ‘ Well,’ says I, ‘ and how do you know but I’m as good a furriner myself as any o’ thim ? ’

“ ‘ What do you mane ? ’ says he.

“ ‘ I mane,’ says I, ‘ what I towld you, that I’m as good a furriner myself as any o’ thim.’

“ ‘ Make me sinsible,’ says he.

“ ‘ By dad, maybe that’s more nor me, or greater nor me, could do,’ says I ; and we all began to laugh at him, for I thought I’d pay him off for his bit o’ consait about the Garman Ocean.

“ ‘ Lave aff your humbuggin,’ says he, ‘ I bid you, and tell me what it is you mane at all, at all.’

“ ‘ Parly-voo frongsay ? ’ says I.

“ ‘ Oh, your humble sarvant,’ says he. ‘ Why, by gor, you’re a scholar, Paddy.’

“ ‘ Throth, you may say that,’ says I.

“ ‘ Why, you’re a clever fellow, Paddy,’ says the captain, jeerin’ like.

“ ‘ You’re not the first that said that,’ says I, ‘ whether you joke or no.’

“ ‘ Oh, but I’m in airnest,’ says the captain. ‘ And do you tell me, Paddy,’ says he, ‘ that you spake Frinch ? ’ “ ‘ Parly-voo frongsay ? ’ says I.

“ ‘ By gor, that bangs Banagher, and all the world knows Banagher bangs the devil. I never met the likes o’ you, Paddy,’ says he. ‘ Pull away, boys, and put Paddy ashore, and maybe we won’t get a good bellyfull before long.’

“ So, with that, it was no sooner said nor done—they pulled away and got close into shore in less than no time, and run the boat up in a little creek ; and a beautiful creek it was, with a lovely white sthrand, an illigant place for ladies to bathe in the summer ; and out I got, and it’s stiff enough in my limbs I was afther bein’ cramped up in the boat, and perished with the cowl’d and hunger ; but I contrived to scramble an, one way or the other, towards a little bit iv a wood that was close to the shore, and the smoke curlin’ out of it, quite timpting like.

“ ‘ By the powdhers o’ war, I’m all right,’ says I ; ‘ there’s a house there ’—and sure enough there was, and a parcel of men, women, and childher, ating their dinner round a table quite convainent. And so I wint up to the dure, and I thought I’d be very civil to thim, as I heerd the Frinch was always mighty p’lite intirely—and I thought I’d show them I knew what good manners was.

“ So I took off my hat, and making a low bow, says I, ‘ God save all here,’ says I.

“ Well, to be sure, they all stopt ating at wanst, and begun to stare at me, and faith they almost looked me out of countenance—and I thought to myself it was not good manners at all—more be token from furriners, which they call so mighty p'lite ; but I never minded that, in regard of wantin' the gridiron ; and so says I, ' I beg your pardon,' says I, ' for the liberty I take, but it's only bein' in disthress in regard of ating,' says I, ' that I make bowld to throuble yez, and if you could lind me the loan of a gridiron,' says I, ' I'd be intirely obleeged to ye.'

" By gor, they all stared at me twice worse nor before, and with that, says I (knowing what was in their minds), ' Indeed it's thrue for you,' says I ; ' I'm tathered to pieces, and God knows I look quare enough, but it's by raison of the storm,' says I, ' which dhruv us ashore here below, and we're all starvin',' says I.

" So then they began to look at each other agin, and myself, seeing at wanst dirty thoughts was in their heads, and that they tuk me for a poor beggar comin' to crave charity—with that, says I, ' Oh ! not at all,' says I, ' by no manes ; we have plenty o' mate ourselves, there below, and we'll dhress it,' says I, ' if you would be plased to lind us the loan of a gridiron,' says I, makin' a low bow.

" Well, sir, with that, throth, they stared at me twice worse nor ever, and faith I began to think that maybe the captain was wrong, and that it was not France at all, at all ; and so says I—' I beg pardon, sir,' says I, to a fine ould man, with a head of hair as white as silver—' maybe I'm undher a mistake,' says I, ' but I thought I was in France, sir ; aren't you furriners ? ' says I—' Parly-voo frongsay ? '

" ' We, munseer,' says he.

" ' Then would you lind me the loan of a gridiron,' says I, ' if you plase ? '

" Oh, it was thin that they stared at me as if I had siven heads ; and faith myself began to feel flustered like, and onaisy—and so, says I, making a bow and scrape agin, ' I know it's a liberty I take, sir,' says I, ' but it's only in the regard of bein' cast away, and if you plase, sir,' says I, ' Parly-voo frongsay ? '

" ' We, munseer,' says he, mighty sharp.

" ' Then would you lind me the loan of a gridiron ? ' says I, ' and you'll obleege me.'

" Well, sir, the old chap begun to munseer me, but the divil a bit of a gridiron he'd gie me ; and so I began to think they were all neygars, for all their fine manners ; and, throth, my blood began to rise, and says I, ' By my sowl, if it was you was in disthress,' says I, ' and if it was to ould Ireland you kem, it's not only the gridiron they'd give you if you ax'd it, but something to put an it too, and a dhrop of dhrink into the bargain, and cead mille failte.'

"Well, the word cead mille failte seemed to stchreck his heart, and the ould chap cocked his ear, and so I thought I'd give him another offer, and make him sinsible at last ; and so says I, wanst more, quite slow, that he might undherstand—' Parly—voo—frongsay, munseer ? '

" ' We, munseer,' says he.

" ' Then lind me the loan of a gridiron,' says I, ' and bad scan to you.'

"Well, bad win' to the bit of it he'd gi' me, and the ould chap begins bowin' and scrapin', and said something or other about a long tongs.

" ' Phoo !—the devil sweep yourself and tongs,' says I, ' I don't want a tongs at all, at all ; but can't you listen to raison,' says I—' Parly-voo frongsay ? '

" ' We, munseer.'

" ' Then lind me the loan of a gridiron,' says I, ' and howld your prate.'

"Well, what would you think but he shook his owld noddle, as much as to say he wouldn't ; and so says I, ' Bad cess to the likes o' that I ever seen—throth if you were in my country, it's not that-a-way they'd use you ; the curse o' the crows on you, you ould sinner,' says I ; ' the divil a longer I'll darken your dure.'

"So he seen I was vexed, and I thought, as I was turnin' away, I seen him begin to relint, and that his conscience throubled him ; and says I, turnin' back, ' Well, I'll give you one chance more—you owld thief—are you a Chrishtan at all, at all ?—are you a furriner,' says I, ' that all the world calls so p'lite ? Bad luck to you ; do you undherstand your own language ?—Parly-voo frongsay ? ' says I.

" ' We, munseer,' says he.

" ' Then, thundher and turf,' says I, ' will you lind me the loan of a gridiron ? '

"Well, sir, the divil resave the bit of it he'd gi' me—and so with that, ' The curse o' the hungry on you, you owld negardly villain,' says I ; ' the back o' my hand and the sowl o' my foot to you ; that you may want a gridiron yourself yet,' says I ; ' and wherever I go, high and low, rich and poor shall hear o' you,' says I ; and with that I lift them there, sir, and kem away—and in throth it's often since that I thought that it was remarkable."

THE STORY OF GÉNÉVIÈVE

L'ART de bien conter is still a Frenchman's most admired talent. Our handsome and interesting beau, Edmonde, piques himself on this accomplishment, and is a "conteur" by profession. He related to us in the Tuileries, yesterday, the following anecdote, with infinite grace of elocution, and considerable effect, spite of his odd falsetto voice. The circumstances occurred at the time Le Noir was minister of the police: I forget the year.

Généviève de Sorbigny was the last of a noble family: young, beautiful, and a rich heiress, she seemed born to command all this world could yield of happiness. When left an orphan, at an early age, instead of being sent to a convent, as was then the universal custom, she was brought up under the care of a maternal aunt, who devoted herself to her education, and doated on her with an almost exclusive affection.

Généviève resided in the country with her aunt till she was about sixteen; she was then brought to Paris to be united to the marquis of —; it was a mere marriage de convenance, a family arrangement entered into when she was quite a child, according to the ancien régime; and, unfortunately for Généviève, her affianced bridegroom was neither young nor amiable; yet more unfortunately it happened that the marquis's cousin, the Baron de Villay, who generally accompanied him in his visits of ceremony, possessed all the qualities in which he was deficient; being young and singularly handsome, "amiable," "spirituel." While the marquis, with the good breeding of that day, was bowing and paying his devoirs to the aunt of his intended (sa future), the young baron, with equal success, but in a very different style, was captivating the heart of the niece. Her extreme beauty had charmed him at the first glance, and her partiality, delicately and involuntarily betrayed, subdued every scruple, if he ever entertained any; and so, in the usual course of things, they were soon irretrievably and éperdument in love with each other.

Généviève, to much gentleness of character, united firmness.

The preparations for the marriage went on ; the trousseau was bought ; the jewels set ; but the moment she was aware of her own sentiments she had courage enough to declare to her aunt that, rather than give her hand to the marquis, whom she detested past all her terms of detestation, she would throw herself into a nunnery, and endow it with her fortune. The poor aunt was thrown, by this unexpected declaration, into the utmost amazement and perplexity ; she was au désespoir ; such a thing had never been heard of or contemplated : but the tears of G  n  vi  ve prevailed ; the marriage, after a long negotiation, was broken off, and the baron appeared publicly as the suitor of G  n  vi  ve. The marquis politely challenged his cousin, and owed his life to his forbearance ; and the duel, and the cause of it, and the gallantry and generosity of De Villay, rendered him irresistible in the eyes of all the women in Paris, while to the heart of G  n  vi  ve he became dearer than ever.

To gain the favour of the aunt was now the only difficulty ; she had ever regarded him with ill-concealed aversion and suspicion. Some mystery hung over his character ; there were certain reports whispered relative to his former life and conduct which it was equally difficult to discredit and to disprove. Besides, though of a distinguished family, he was poor, most of his ancestral possessions being confiscated or dissipated ; and his father was notoriously a mauvais sujet. All these reports and representations appeared to the impassioned G  n  vi  ve mere barbarous calumnies, invented to injure her love ; and regarding herself as the primal cause of these slanders, they rather added to the strength of her attachment. A reluctant consent was at last wrung from her aunt, and G  n  vi  ve was united to her lover.

The ch  teau of the baron was situated in one of the wildest districts of the wild and desolate coast of Bretagne. The people who inhabited the country round were a ferocious, half-civilised race, and, in general, desperate smugglers and pirates. They had been driven to this mode of life by a dreadful famine and the oppressions of the provincial tax-gatherers, and had pursued it partly from choice, partly from necessity. They had carried on for near half a century a constant and systematic warfare against the legal authorities of the province, in which they were generally victorious. No revenue officer or exempt dare set his foot within a certain district ; and when the tempestuous season, or any other accident, prevented them from following their lawless trade on the sea, they dispersed themselves through the country in regularly organised bands, and committed the most formidable depredations, extending their outrages even as far as St. Pol. Such was their desperate courage, the incredible celerity of their movements, and the skill of their leaders, that though a few stragglers had been occasionally shot, all attempts to take any of them alive, or to penetrate into their secret fastnesses, proved unavailing.

The baron had come to Paris for the purpose of representing the disturbed state of his district to the government and procuring an order from the minister of the interior to embody his own tenantry and dependants into a sort of militia for the defence of his property, and for the purpose of bringing these marauders to justice, if possible. He was at first refused, but after a few months' delay, money and the interest of Génévieve's family prevailed ; the order was granted, and he prepared to return to his château. The aunt and all her friends remonstrated against the idea of exposing his young wife to such revolting scenes, and insisted that she should be left behind at Paris ; to which he agreed with seeming readiness, only referring the decision to Génévieve's own election. She did not hesitate one moment ; she adored her husband, and the thought of being separated from him in this early stage of their union was worse than any apprehended danger : she declared her resolution to accompany him. At length the matter was thus compromised : they consented that Génévieve should spend four months of every year in Bretagne, and the other eight at Paris, or at her uncle's château in Auvergne ; in fact, so little was known then in the capital of what was passing in the distant provinces that Génévieve only, being prepared by her husband, could form some idea of what she was about to encounter.

On their arrival the peasantry were immediately armed, and the château converted into a kind of garrison, regularly fortified. A continual panic seemed to prevail through the whole household, and she heard of nothing from morning till night but the desperate deeds of the marauders and the exploits of their captain, to whom they attributed more marvellous atrocities than were ever related of Barbone, or Blue Beard himself. Génévieve was at first in constant terror ; finding, however, that week after week passed and the danger, though continually talked of, never appeared, she was rather excited and désennuyée by the continual recurrence of these alarms. She would have been perfectly happy in her husband's increasing and devoted tenderness, but for his frequent absences in pursuit of the smugglers either on sea or on shore, and the dangers to which she fancied him exposed : but even those absences and these dangers endeared him to her, and kept alive all the romantic fervour of her attachment. He was not only the lord of her affections, but the hero of her imagination. The time allotted for her stay insensibly passed away ; the four months were under different pretences prolonged to six, and then, her confinement drawing near, it was judged safest to defer her journey to Paris till after her recovery.

Généviève in due time became the mother of a son ; an event which filled her heart with a thousand delicious emotions of gratitude, pride, and delight. It seemed to have a very different and most inexplicable effect on her husband the baron's behaviour. He became gloomy, anxious, abstracted, and his absences, on various pretexts, more frequent than ever ; but what appeared most painful and incomprehensible to Généviève's maternal feelings was his indifference to his child. He would hardly be persuaded even to look at it, and if he met it smiling in its nurse's arms, would perhaps gaze for a moment, then turn away as from an object which struck him with a secret horror.

One day as Généviève was sitting alone in her dressing-room, fondling her infant, and thinking mournfully on this change in her husband's conduct, her femme-de-chambre, a faithful creature who had been brought up with her, and accompanied her from Paris, came into the room, pale as ashes ; and throwing herself at her feet, told her that, though regard for her health had hitherto kept her silent, she could no longer conceal the dreadful secret which weighed upon her spirits. She then proceeded to inform the shuddering and horror-struck Généviève that the robbers who had excited so much terror, and were now supposed to be at a distance, were then actually in the château : that they consisted of the very servants and immediate dependants, with the baron himself at their head. She supposed they had been less on their guard during Généviève's confinement ; and many minute circumstances had at first awaked, and then confirmed her suspicions. Then embracing her mistress's knees, she besought her, for the love of Heaven, to return to Paris instantly, with those of her own attendants on whom she could securely depend, before they were all murdered in their beds.

Généviève, as soon as she had recovered from her first dizzy horror and astonishment, would have rejected the whole as a dream, an impossible fiction. She thought upon her husband, on all that her fond heart had admired in him, and all that till lately she had found him—his noble form, his manly beauty, his high and honourable bearing, and all his love, his truth, his tenderness for her—and could he be a robber, a ruffian, an assassin? No; though her woman's attachment and truth were beyond suspicion, her tale too horribly consistent for disbelief, G  n  v  ve would trust to her own senses alone to confirm or disprove the hideous imputation. She commanded her maid to maintain an absolute silence on the subject and leave the rest to her.

Anna farnes

The same evening the baron informed his wife that he was obliged to set off before light next morning in pursuit of a party of smugglers who had landed at St. Paul; and that she must not be surprised if she missed him at an early hour. His absence, he assured her, would not be long: he should certainly return before the evening. They retired to rest earlier than usual. G  n  v  ve, as it may be imagined, did not sleep, but she lay perfectly still as if in a profound slumber. About the middle of the night she heard her husband softly rise from his bed and dress himself; and taking his pistols he left the room. G  n  v  ve rushed to the window which overlooked the courtyard, but there neither horses nor attendants were waiting; she flew to another window which commanded the back of the ch  teau—there, too, all was still; nothing was to be seen but the moonlight shadows on the pavement. She hastily threw round her a dark cloak or wrapper, and followed her husband, whose footsteps were still within hearing. It was not difficult, for he walked slowly, stopping every now and then, listening, and apparently irresolute; he crossed the court and several outbuildings, and part of the ruins of a former ch  teau, till he came to an old well which, being dry, had long been disused and shut up, and moving aside the trap-door which covered the mouth of it, he disappeared in an instant. G  n  v  ve with difficulty suppressed a shriek of terror. She followed, however, with a desperate courage, groped her way down the well by means of some broken stairs, and pursued her husband's steps, guided only by the sound on the hollow damp earth. Suddenly a distant light and voices broke upon her eye and ear; and stealing along the wall, she hid herself behind one of the huge buttresses which supported the vault above; she beheld what she was half prepared to see—a party of ruffians, who were assembled round a board drinking. They received the baron with respect as their chief, but with sullen suspicious looks, and an ominous silence. G  n  vi  ve could distinguish among the faces many familiar to her, which she was accustomed to see daily around her, working in the gardens or attending in the ch  teau ; among them the concierge, or house-steward, who appeared to have some authority over the rest. The wife of this man was the nurse of G  n  vi  ve's child. The baron took his seat without speaking. After some boisterous conversation among the rest, carried on in an unintelligible dialect, a quarrel arose between the concierge and another villain, both apparently intoxicated ; the baron attempted to part them, and the uproar became general. The whole was probably a preconcerted plan, for from reproaching each other they proceeded to attack the baron himself with the most injurious epithets ; they accused him of a design to betray them ; they compared him to his father, the old baron, who had never flinched from their cause, and had at last died in it ; they said they knew well that a large party of regular troops had lately arrived at Saint-Brieu, and they insisted it was with his knowledge, that he was about to give them up to justice, to make his own peace with government, etc.

The concierge, who was by far the most insolent and violent of these mutineers, at length silenced the others, and affecting a tone of moderation he proposed, and his proposal was received with an approving shout, that the baron should give up his infant son into the hands of the band ; that they should take him to the island of Guernsey, and keep him there as a pledge of his father's fidelity till the regular troops were withdrawn from the province. How must the mother's heart have trembled and died away within her ! She listened breathless for her husband's reply. The baron had hitherto with difficulty restrained himself, and attempted to prove how absurd and unfounded was their accusation, since his safety was involved in theirs, and he would, as their leader, be considered as the greatest criminal of all. His eyes now flashed with fury ; he sprung upon the concierge like a roused tiger, and dragged him by the collar from amid the mutinous group. A struggle ensued, and the wretch fell, stabbed to the heart by his master's hand ; a crowd of ferocious faces then closed around the baron—G  n  vi  ve heard—saw no more—her senses left her.

When she recovered she was in perfect silence and darkness, and felt like one awakening from a terrible dream ; the first image which clearly presented itself to her mind was that of her child in the power of these ruffians, and their daggers at her husband's throat. The maddening thought swallowed up every other feeling, and lent her for the moment strength and wings ; she rushed back through the darkness, fearless for herself ; crossed the court, the galleries ;—all was still : it seemed to her affrighted imagination that the château was forsaken by its inhabitants. She reached her child's room, she flew to his cradle and drew aside the curtain with a desperate hand, expecting to find it empty ; he was quietly sleeping in his beauty and innocence : Génévieve uttered a cry of joy and thankfulness, and fell on the bed in strong convulsions.

Many hours elapsed before she was restored to herself. The first object she beheld was her husband watching tenderly over her, her first emotion was joy for his safety—she dared not ask him to account for it. She then called for her son ; he was brought to her, and from that moment she would never suffer him to leave her. With the quick wit of a woman, or rather with the prompt resolution of a mother trembling for her child, Génévieve was no sooner sufficiently recovered to think than she had formed her decision and acted upon it ; she accounted for her sudden illness and terrors under pretence that she had been disturbed by a frightful dream : she believed, she said, that the dulness and solitude of the château affected her spirits, that the air disagreed with her child, and that it was necessary that she should instantly return to Paris. The baron attempted first to rally and then to reason with her : he consented—then retracted his consent ; seemed irresolute—but his affections finally prevailed over his suspicions, and preparations were instantly made for their departure, as if he intended to accompany her.

Putting her with her maid and child into a travelling carriage, he armed a few of his most confidential servants, and rode by her side till they came to Saint-Brieu : he then turned back in spite of all her entreaties, promising to rejoin her at Paris within a few days. He had never during the journey uttered a word which could betray his knowledge that she had any motive for her journey but that which she avowed ; only at parting he laid his finger expressively on his lip, and gave her one look full of meaning : it could not be mistaken ; it said, " Génévieve ! your husband's life depends on your discretion, and he trusts you." She would have thrown herself into his arms, but he gently replaced her in the carriage, and remounting his horse, rode back alone to the château.

Génévieve arrived safely at Paris, and commanded her maid, as she valued both their lives, and on pain of her eternal displeasure, not to breathe a syllable of what had passed, firmly resolved that nothing should tear the terrible secret from her own breast : but the profound melancholy which had settled on her heart, and her pining and altered looks, could not escape the eyes of her affectionate aunt ; and her maid, either through indiscretion, timidity, or a sense of duty, on being questioned, revealed all she knew, and more than she knew. The aunt, in a transport of terror and indignation, sent information to the governor of the police, and Le Noir instantly summoned the unfortunate wife of the baron to a private interview.

Généviève, though taken by surprise, did not lose her presence of mind, and at first she steadily denied every word of her maid's deposition ; but her courage and her affection were no match for the minister's art : when he assured her he had already sufficient proof of her husband's guilt, and promised, with jesuitical equivocation, that if she would confess all she knew his life should not be touched, that due regard should be had for the honour of his family and hers, and that he (Le Noir) would exert the power which he alone possessed to detach him from his present courses and his present associates without the least publicity or scandal—she yielded, and on this promise being most solemnly reiterated and confirmed by an oath, revealed all she knew.

In a short time afterwards the baron disappeared, and was never heard of more. In vain did his wretched wife appeal to Le Noir and recall the promise he had given : he swore to her that her husband still lived, but more than this he would not discover. In vain she supplicated, wept, offered all her fortune for permission to share his exile if he were banished, his dungeon if he were a prisoner—Le Noir was inexorable.

Généviève, left in absolute ignorance of her husband's fate, tortured by a suspense more dreadful than the most dreadful certainty, by remorse and grief which refused all comfort, died broken-hearted : what became of the baron was never known.

I could not exactly learn the fate of his son : it is said that he lived to man's estate, that he took the name of his mother's family, and died a violent death during the Revolution.

DANIEL O'ROURKE

PEOPLE may have heard of the renowned adventures of Daniel O'Rourke, but how few are there who know that the cause of all his perils, above and below, was neither more nor less than his having slept under the walls of the Phooka's tower ! I knew the man well ; he lived at the bottom of Hungry Hill, just at the right-hand side of the road as you go towards Bantry.

An old man was he at the time that he told me the story, with grey hair and a red nose : and it was on June 25, 1813, that I heard it from his own lips, as he sat smoking his pipe under the old poplar tree, on as fine an evening as ever shone from the sky. I was going to visit the caves in Dursey Island, having spent the morning at Glengariff.

" I am often axed to tell it, sir," said he, " so that this is not the first time. The master's son, you see, had come from beyond foreign parts in France and Spain, as young gentlemen used to go, before Buonaparte or any such was heard of ; and sure enough there was a dinner given to all the people on the ground, gentle and simple, high and low, rich and poor. The ould gentlemen were the gentlemen, after all, saving your honour's presence. They'd swear at a body a little, to be sure, and maybe give one a cut of a whip now and then, but we were no losers by it in the end ; and they were so easy and civil, and kept such rattling houses, and thousands of welcomes ; and there was no grinding for rent, and few agents ; and there was hardly a tenant on the estate that did not taste of his landlord's bounty often and often in the year ;—but now it's another thing : no matter for that, sir, for I'd better be telling you my story.

" Well, we had everything of the best, and plenty of it ; and we ate, and we drank, and we danced, and the young master by the same token danced with Peggy Barry, from the Bohereen—a lovely young couple they were, though they are both low enough now. To make a long story short, I got, as a body may say, the same thing as tipsy almost, for I can't remember ever at all, no ways, how it was I left the place : only I did leave it, that's certain. Well, I thought, for all that, in myself, I'd just step to Molly Cronohan's, the fairy-woman, to speak a word about the bracket heifer that was bewitched ; and so as I was crossing the stepping-stones of the ford of Ballyasheenough, and was looking up at the stars and blessing myself—for why ? it was Lady-day—I missed my foot, and souse I fell into the water. ' Death alive ! ' thought I, ' I'll be drowned now ! '

" However, I began swimming, swimming, swimming away for the dear life, till at last I got ashore, somehow or other, but never the one of me can tell how, upon a dissolute island.

" I wandered and wandered about there, without knowing where I wandered, until at last I got into a big bog. The moon was shining as bright as day, or your fair lady's eyes, sir (with your pardon for mentioning her), and I looked east and west, and north and south, and every way, and nothing did I see but bog, bog, bog ;—I could never find out how I got into it ; and my heart grew cold with fear, for sure and certain I was that it would be my berrin place. So I sat down upon a stone, which, as good luck would have it, was close by me, and I began to scratch my head and sing the Ullagone—when all of a sudden the moon grew black, and I looked up, and saw something for all the world as if it was moving down between me and it, and I could not tell what it was. Down it came with a pounce, and looked at me full in the face ; and what was it but an eagle ? as fine a one as ever flew from the kingdom of Kerry.

" So he looked at me in the face, and says he to me, ' Daniel O'Rourke,' says he, ' how do you do ? '

" ' Very well, I thank you, sir,' says I ; ' I hope you're well ' ; wondering out of my senses all the time how an eagle came to speak like a Christian.

" ' What brings you here, Dan ? ' says he.

" ' Nothing at all, sir,' says I ; ' only I wish I was safe home again.'

" ' Is it out of the island you want to go, Dan ? ' says he.

" ' 'Tis, sir,' says I ; so I up and told him how I had taken a drop too much ; and fell into the water ; how I swam to the island ; and how I got into the bog and did not know my way out of it.

" ' Dan,' says he after a minute's thought, ' though it is very improper for you to get drunk on Lady-day, yet as you are a decent sober man, who 'tends mass well, and never flings stones at me nor mine, nor cries out after us in the fields—my life for yours,' says he ; 'so get up on my back, and grip me well for fear you'd fall off, and I'll fly you out of the bog.'

" 'I am afraid,' says I, 'your honour's making game of me ; for who ever heard of riding a-horseback on an eagle before ?'

" ' 'Pon the honour of a gentleman,' says he, putting his right foot on his breast, 'I am quite in earnest ; and so now either take my offer or starve in the bog ; besides, I see that your weight is sinking the stone.'

" 'It was true enough as he said, for I found the stone every minute going from under me. I had no choice ; so thinks I to myself, faint heart never won fair lady, and this is fair persuadance :—'I thank your honour,' says I, 'for the loan of your civility, and I'll take your kind offer.'

" 'I therefore mounted upon the back of the eagle, and held him tight enough by the throat, and up he flew in the air like a lark. Little I knew the trick he was going to serve me. Up, up, up—God knows how far up he flew.

" 'Why, then,' said I to him—thinking he did not know the right road home—very civilly, because why ?—I was in his power entirely ;—'sir,' says I, 'please your honour's glory, and with humble submission to your better judgment, if you'd fly down a bit, you're now just over my cabin, and I could be put down there, and many thanks to your worship.'

" 'Arrah, Dan,' said he, 'do you think me a fool ? Look down in the next field, and don't you see two men and a gun ? By my word it would be no joke to be shot this way, to oblige a drunken blackguard that I picked up off of a could stone in a bog.'

" 'Bother you,' said I to myself, but I did not speak out, for where was the use ? Well, sir, up he kept flying, flying, and I asking him every minute to fly down, and all to no use.

" 'Where in the world are you going, sir ?' says I to him.

" 'Hold your tongue, Dan,' says he ; 'mind your own business, and don't be interfering with the business of other people.'

" 'Faith, this is my business, I think,' says I.

" 'Be quiet, Dan,' says he ; so I said no more.

" 'At last where should we come to but to the moon itself. Now you can't see it from this, but there is, or there was in my time, a reaping-hook sticking out of the side of the moon, this way (drawing the figure thus  on the ground with the end of his stick).

“ ‘Dan,’ said the eagle, ‘I’m tired with this long fly; I had no notion ’twas so far.’

“ ‘And my lord, sir,’ said I, ‘who in the world axed you to fly so far—was it I? Did not I beg, and pray, and beseech you to stop half an hour ago?’

“ ‘There’s no use talking, Dan,’ said he; ‘I’m tired bad enough, so you must get off and sit down on the moon until I rest myself.’

“ ‘Is it sit down on the moon?’ said I; ‘is it upon that little round thing, then? why then, sure, I’d fall off in a minute, and be kill and split, and smashed all to bits: you are a vile deceiver—so you are.’

“ ‘Not at all, Dan,’ said he; ‘you can catch fast hold of the reaping-hook that’s sticking out of the side of the moon, and ’twill keep you up.’

“ ‘I won’t then,’ said I.

“ ‘Maybe not,’ said he quite quiet. ‘If you don’t, my man, I shall just give you a shake, and one slap of my wing, and send you down to the ground, where every bone in your body will be smashed as small as a drop of dew on a cabbage-leaf in the morning.’

“ ‘Why, then, I’m in a fine way,’ said I to myself, ‘ever to have come along with the likes of you’; and so giving him a hearty curse in Irish, for fear he’d know what I said, I got off his back with a heavy heart, took a hold of the reaping-hook, and sat down upon the moon; and a mighty cold seat it was, I can tell you that.

“ ‘When he had me there fairly landed, he turned about on me, and said, ‘Good-morning to you, Daniel O’Rourke,’ said he, ‘I think I’ve nicked you fairly now. You robbed my nest last year’ (’twas true enough for him, but how he found it out is hard to say), ‘and in return you are freely welcome to cool your heels dangling upon the moon like a cockthrow.’

“ ‘Is that all, and is this the way you leave me, you brute you!’ says I. ‘You ugly unnatural baste, and is this the way you serve me at last? Bad luck to yourself, with your hook’d nose, and to all your breed, you blackguard.’

“ ‘’Twas all to no manner of use; he spread out his great big wings, burst out a-laughing, and flew away like lightning. I bawled after him to stop; but I might have called and bawled for ever without his minding me. Away he went, and I never saw him from that day to this—sorrow fly away with him! You may be sure I was in a discon-solate condition, and kept roaring out for the bare grief, when all at once a door opened right in the middle of the moon, creaking on its hinges as if it had not been opened for a month before—I suppose they never thought of greasing 'em—and out there walks—who do you think but the man in the moon himself? I knew him by his bush.

“ ‘ Good-morrow to you, Daniel O'Rourke,’ said he : ‘ how do you do ? ’

“ ‘ Very well, thank your honour,’ said I. ‘ I hope your honour's well.’

“ ‘ What brought you here, Dan ? ’ said he. So I told him how I was a little overtaken in liquor at the master's, and how I was cast on a dissolute island, and how I lost my way in the bog, and how the thief of an eagle promised to fly me out of it, and how instead of that he had fled me up to the moon.

“ ‘ Dan,’ said the man in the moon, taking a pinch of snuff, when I was done, ‘ you must not stay here.’

“ ‘ Indeed, sir,’ says I, ‘ 'tis much against my will I'm here at all ; but how am I to go back ? ’

“ ‘ That's your business,’ said he, ‘ Dan : mine is to tell you that here you must not stay, so be off in less than no time.’

“ ‘ I'm doing no harm,’ says I, ‘ only holding on hard by the reaping-hook lest I fall off.’

“ ‘ That's what you must not do, Dan,’ says he.

“ ‘ Pray, sir,’ says I, ‘ may I ask how many you are in family that you would not give a poor traveller lodging : I'm sure 'tis not so often you're troubled with strangers coming to see you, for 'tis a long way.’

“ ‘ I'm by myself, Dan,’ says he ; ‘ but you'd better let go the reaping-hook.’

“ ‘ Faith, and with your leave,’ says I, ‘ I'll not let go the grip, and the more you bids me, the more I won't let go—so I will.’

“ ‘ You had better, Dan,’ says he again.

“ ‘ Why, then, my little fellow,’ says I, taking the whole weight of him with my eye from head to foot, ‘ there are two words to that bargain ; and I'll not budge, but you may if you like.’

“ ‘ We'll see how that is to be,’ says he ; and back he went, giving the door such a great bang after him (for it was plain he was huffed) that I thought the moon and all would fall down with it.

“ Well, I was preparing myself to try strength with him, when back again he comes with the kitchen cleaver in his hand, and without saying a word, he gives two bangs to the handle of the reaping-hook that was keeping me up, and whap! it came in two.

“ ‘ Good-morning to you, Dan,’ says the spiteful little old black-guard when he saw me cleanly falling down with a bit of the handle in my hand : ‘ I thank you for your visit, and fair weather after you, Daniel.’

“ I had not time to make any answer to him, for I was tumbling over and over, and rolling and rolling at the rate of a fox-hunt. ‘ God help me,’ says I, ‘ but this is a pretty pickle for a decent man to be seen in at this time of night ; I am now sold fairly.’

“ The word was not out of my mouth, when whiz ! what should fly by close to my ear but a flock of wild geese, all the way from my own bog of Ballyasheenough, else how should they know me ? The ould gander, who was their general, turning about his head, cried out to me, ‘ Is that you, Dan ? ’

“ ‘ The same,’ said I, not a bit daunted now at what he said, for I was by this time used to all kinds of bedevilment, and, besides, I knew him of ould.

“ ‘ Good-morrow to you,’ says he, ‘ Daniel O’Rourke ; how are you in health this morning ? ’

“ ‘ Very well, sir,’ says I, ‘ I thank you kindly,’ drawing my breath, for I was mightily in want of some. ‘ I hope your honour’s the same.’

“ ‘ I think ‘tis falling you are, Daniel,’ says he.

“ ‘ You may say that, sir,’ says I.

“ ‘ And where are you going all the way so fast ? ’ said the gander.

“ So I told him how I had taken the drop, and how I came on the island, and how I lost my way in the bog, and how the thief of an eagle flew me up to the moon, and how the man in the moon turned me out.

“ ‘ Dan,’ said he, ‘ I’ll save you ; put out your hand and catch me by the leg, and I’ll fly you home.’

“ ‘ Sweet is your hand in a pitcher of honey, my jewel,’ says I, though all the time I thought in myself that I don’t much trust you ; but there was no help, so I caught the gander by the leg, and away I and the other geese flew after him as fast as hops.

“ We flew, and we flew, and we flew, until we came right over the wide ocean. I knew it well, for I saw Cape Clear to my right hand sticking up out of the water.

“ ‘ Ah ! my lord,’ said I to the goose, for I thought it best to keep a civil tongue in my head anyway, ‘ fly to land, if you please.’

" 'It is impossible, you see, Dan,' said he, 'for a while, because you see we are going to Arabia.'

" 'To Arabia?' said I; 'that's surely some place in foreign parts, far away. Oh, Mr. Goose! why then, to be sure, I'm a man to be pitied among you.'

" 'Whist, whist, you fool,' said he, 'hold your tongue; I tell you Arabia is a very decent sort of place, as like West Carbery as one egg is like another, only there is a little more sand there.'

" Just as we were talking a ship hove in sight, scudding so beautiful before the wind: 'Ah! then, sir,' said I, 'will you drop me on the ship, if you please?'

" 'We are not fair over it,' said he.

" 'We are,' said I.

" 'We are not,' said he. 'If I dropped you now, you would go splash into the sea.'

" 'I would not,' says I: 'I know better than that, for it's just clean under us, so let me drop now at once.'

" 'If you must, you must,' said he. 'There, take your own way'; and he opened his claw, and faith he was right—sure enough I came down plump into the very bottom of the salt sea! Down to the very bottom I went, and I gave myself up then for ever, when a whale walked up to me, scratching himself after his night's sleep, and looked me full in the face, and never the word did he say, but lifting up his tail he splashed me all over again with the cold salt water, till there wasn't a dry stitch upon my whole carcass; and I heard somebody saying—'twas a voice I knew too—'Get up, you drunken brute, off of that'; and with that I woke up, and there was Judy with a tub full of water, which she was splashing all over me,—for, rest her soul! though she was a good wife, she never could bear to see me in drink, and had a bitter hand of her own!

" 'Get up,' said she again; 'and of all places in the parish would no place sarve your turn to lie down upon but under the ould walls of Carrigaphooka? an uneasy resting I am sure you had of it.'

" And sure enough I had; for I was fairly bothered out of my senses with eagles, and men of the moon, and flying ganders, and whales, driving me through bogs, and up to the moon, and down to the bottom of the green ocean. If I was in drink ten times over, long would it be before I'd lie down in the same spot again, I know that."

THE LADY OF GOLLERUS

THOMAS CROFTON CROKER

ON the shore of Smerwick harbour, one fine summer's morning, just at daybreak, stood Dick Fitzgerald "shogging the dudeen," which may be translated, smoking his pipe. The sun was gradually rising behind the lofty Brandon, the dark sea was getting green in the light, and the mists, clearing away out of the valleys, went rolling and curling like the smoke from the corner of Dick's mouth.

" 'Tis just the pattern of a pretty morning," said Dick, taking the pipe from between his lips, and looking towards the distant ocean, which lay as still and tranquil as a tomb of polished marble. " Well, to be sure," continued he, after a pause, " 'tis mighty lonesome to be talking to one's self by way of company, and not to have another soul to answer one—nothing but the child of one's own voice, the echo ! I know this, that if I had the luck, or maybe the misfortune," said he with a melancholy smile, " to have the woman, it would not be this way with me !—and what in the wide world is a man without a wife ? He's no more surely than a bottle without a drop of drink in it, or dancing without music, or the left leg of a scissors, or a fishing-line without a hook, or any other matter that is no ways complete.—Is it not so ? " said Dick Fitzgerald, casting his eyes towards a rock upon the strand, which, though it could not speak, stood up as firm and looked as bold as ever Kerry witness did.

But what was his astonishment at beholding, just at the foot of that rock, a beautiful young creature combing her hair, which was of a sea-green colour ; and now the salt water shining on it appeared, in the morning light, like melted butter upon cabbage.

Dick guessed at once that she was a Merrow, although he had never seen one before, for he spied the cohuleen driuth, or little enchanted cap, which the sea-people use for diving down into the ocean, lying upon the strand near her ; and he had heard that if once he could possess himself of the cap she would lose the power of going away into the water : so he seized it with all speed, and she, hearing the noise, turned her head about as natural as any Christian.

When the Merrow saw that her little diving-cap was gone, the salt tears—doubly salt, no doubt, from her—came trickling down her cheeks, and she began a low mournful cry with just the tender voice of a new-born infant. Dick, although he knew well enough what she was crying for, determined to keep the cohuleen driuth, let her cry never so much, to see what luck would come out of it. Yet he could not help pitying her ; and when the dumb thing looked up in his face, and her cheeks all moist with tears, 'twas enough to make any one feel, let alone Dick, who had ever and always, like most of his countrymen, a mighty tender heart of his own.

"Don't cry, my darling," said Dick Fitzgerald ; but the Merrow, like any bold child, only cried the more for that.

Dick sat himself down by her side, and took hold of her hand by way of comforting her. 'Twas in no particular an ugly hand, only there was a small web between the fingers, as there is in a duck's foot ; but 'twas as thin and as white as the skin between egg and shell.

"What's your name, my darling ? " says Dick, thinking to make her conversant with him ; but he got no answer ; and he was certain sure now, either that she could not speak, or did not understand him : he therefore squeezed her hand in his, as the only way he had of talking to her. It's the universal language, and there's not a woman in the world, be she fish or lady, that does not understand it.

The Merrow did not seem much displeased at this mode of conversation ; and, making an end of her whining all at once—"Man," says she, looking up in Dick Fitzgerald's face, "man, will you eat me ? "

"By all the red petticoats and check aprons between Dingle and Tralee," cried Dick, jumping up in amazement, "I'd as soon eat myself, my jewel ! Is it I eat you, my pet ? Now, 'twas some ugly ill-looking thief of a fish put that notion into your own pretty head, with the nice green hair down upon it, that is so cleanly combed out this morning ! "

"Man," said the Merrow, "what will you do with me if you won't eat me ? " Dick's thoughts were running on a wife : he saw, at the first glimpse, that she was handsome ; but since she spoke, and spoke, too, like any real woman, he was fairly in love with her. 'Twas the neat way she called him man that settled the matter entirely.

"Fish," says Dick, trying to speak to her after her own short fashion ; "fish," says he, "here's my word, fresh and fasting, for you this blessed morning, that I'll make you Mistress Fitzgerald before all the world, and that's what I'll do."

"Never say the word twice," says she, "I'm ready and willing to be yours, Mister Fitzgerald ; but stop, if you please, till I twist up my hair." It was some time before she had settled it entirely to her liking ; for she guessed, I suppose, that she was going among strangers, where she would be looked at. When that was done, the Merrow put the comb in her pocket, and then bent down her head and whispered some words to the water that was close to the foot of the rock.

Dick saw the murmur of the words upon the top of the sea, going out towards the wide ocean, just like a breath of wind rippling along, and, says he, in the greatest wonder, " Is it speaking you are, my darling, to the salt water ? "

" It's nothing else," says she, quite carelessly, " I'm just sending word home to my father not to be waiting breakfast for me ; just to keep him from being uneasy in his mind."

" And who's your father, my duck ? " says Dick.

" What ! " said the Merrow, " did you never hear of my father ? he's the king of the waves, to be sure ! "

" And yourself, then, is a real king's daughter ? " said Dick, opening his two eyes to take a full and true survey of his wife that was to be. " Oh, I'm nothing else but a made man with you, and a king your father—to be sure he has all the money that's down in the bottom of the sea ! "

" Money," repeated the Merrow, " what's money ? "

" 'Tis no bad thing to have when one wants it," replied Dick ; " and maybe now the fishes have the understanding to bring up whatever you bid them ? "

" Oh, yes," said the Merrow, " they bring me what I want."

" To speak the truth then," said Dick, " 'tis a straw bed I have at home before you, and that, I'm thinking, is no ways fitting for a king's daughter ; so if 'twould not be displeasing to you, just to mention, a nice feather bed, with a pair of new blankets—but what am I talking about ? maybe you have no such things as beds down under the water ? "

" By all means," said she, " Mr. Fitzgerald—plenty of beds at your service. I've fourteen oyster beds of my own, not to mention one just planting for the rearing of young ones."

" You have," says Dick, scratching his head and looking a little puzzled. " 'Tis a feather bed I was speaking of—but clearly, yours is the very cut of a decent plan, to have bed and supper so handy to each other, that a person when they'd have the one need never ask for the other." However, bed or no bed, money or no money, Dick Fitzgerald determined to marry the Merrow, and the Merrow had given her consent. Away they went, therefore, across the strand, from Gollerus to Ballinrinnig, where Father Fitzgibbon happened to be that morning.

"There are two words to this bargain, Dick Fitzgerald," said his reverence, looking mighty glum. "And is it a fishy woman you'd marry?—the Lord preserve us!—Send the scaly creature home to her own people, that's my advice to you, wherever she came from."

Dick had the cohuleen driuth in his hand, and was about to give it back to the Merrow, who looked covetously at it, but he thought for a moment, and then says he :

"Please, your reverence, she's a king's daughter."

"If she was the daughter of fifty kings," said Father Fitzgibbon, "I tell you, you can't marry her, she being a fish."

"Please, your reverence," said Dick again, in an undertone, "she's as mild and beautiful as the moon."

"If she was as mild and as beautiful as the sun, moon, and the stars, all put together, I tell you, Dick Fitzgerald," said the priest, stamping his right foot, "you can't marry her, she being a fish ! "

"But she has all the gold that's down in the sea only for the asking, and I'm a made man if I marry her : and," said Dick, looking up slyly, "I can make it worth any one's while to do the job."

"Oh ! that alters the case entirely," replied the priest ; "why, there's some reason now in what you say : why didn't you tell me this before?—marry her by all means, if she was ten times a fish. Money, you know, is not to be refused in these bad times, and I may as well have the hansom of it as another that maybe would not take half the pains in counselling you that I have done."

So Father Fitzgibbon married Dick Fitzgerald to the Merrow, and, like any loving couple, they returned to Gollerus well pleased with each other. Everything prospered with Dick—he was at the sunny side of the world ; the Merrow made the best of wives, and they lived together in the greatest contentment.

It was wonderful to see, considering where she had been brought up, how she would busy herself about the house, and how well she nursed the children, for at the end of three years there were as many young Fitzgeralds—two boys and a girl. In short, Dick was a happy man, and so he might have continued to the end of his days if he had only the sense to take proper care of what he had got ; many another man, however, beside Dick, has not had wit enough to do that.

One day when Dick was obliged to go to Tralee, he left the wife minding the children at home after him, and thinking she had plenty to do without disturbing his fishing-tackle.

Dick was no sooner gone than Mrs. Fitzgerald set about cleaning up the house, and chancing to pull down a fishing-net, what should she find behind it, in a hole in the wall, but her own cohuleen driuth.

She took it out and looked at it, and then she thought of her father the king, and her mother the queen, and her brothers and sisters, and she felt a longing to go back to them.

She sat down on a little stool and thought over the happy days she had spent under the sea ; then she looked at her children, and thought on the love and affection of poor Dick, and how it would break his heart to lose her. " But," says she, " he won't lose me entirely, for I'll come back to him again, and who can blame me for going to see my father and my mother after being so long away from them ? "

She got up and went towards the door, but came back again to look once more at the child that was sleeping in the cradle. She kissed it gently, and, as she kissed it, a tear trembled for an instant in her eye, and then fell on its rosy cheek. She wiped away the tear, and turning to the eldest, the little girl, told her to take good care of her brothers, and to be a good child herself, until she came back. The Merrow then went down to the strand. The sea was lying calm and smooth, just heaving and glittering in the sun, and she thought she heard a faint sweet singing, inviting her to come down. All her old ideas and feelings came flooding over her mind, Dick and her children were at the instant forgotten, and, placing the cohuleen driuth on her head, she plunged in.

Dick came home in the evening, and, missing his wife, he asked Kathleen, his little girl, what had become of her mother, but she could not tell him. He then inquired of the neighbours, and he learned that she was seen going towards the strand with a strange-looking thing like a cocked hat in her hand. He returned to his cabin to search for the cohuleen driuth. It was gone, and the truth now flashed upon him.

Year after year did Dick Fitzgerald wait expecting the return of his wife, but he never saw her more. Dick never married again, always thinking that the Merrow would sooner or later return to him, and nothing could ever persuade him but that her father the king kept her below by main force ; " for," said Dick, " she surely would not of herself give up her husband and her children."

While she was with him, she was so good a wife in every respect, that to this day she is spoken of in the tradition of the country, as the pattern for one, under the name of THE LADY OF GOLLERUS.

JOHN BANIM

1798-1842

THE STOLEN SHEEP

THE Irish plague, called typhus fever, raged in its terrors. In almost every third cabin there was a corpse daily. In every one, without an exception, there was what had made the corpse—hunger. It need not be added that there was poverty, too. The poor could not bury their dead. From mixed motives of self-protection, terror, and benevolence, those in easier circumstances exerted themselves to administer relief in different ways. Money was subscribed (then came England's munificent donation—God prosper her for it !), wholesome food, or food as wholesome as a bad season permitted, was provided ; and men of respectability, bracing their minds to avert the danger that threatened themselves, by boldly facing it, entered the infected house, where death reigned almost alone, and took measures to cleanse and purify the close-cribbed air and the rough, bare walls.

In the early progress of the fever, before the more affluent roused themselves to avert its career, let us cross the threshold of an individual peasant. His young wife lies dead ; his second child is dying at her side ; he has just sunk into a corner himself, under the first stun of disease, long resisted. The only persons of his family who have escaped contagion, and are likely to escape it, are his old father, who sits weeping feebly upon the hob, and his first-born, a boy of three or four years who, standing between the old man's knees, cries also for food.

We visit the young peasant's abode some time after. He has not sunk under " the sickness." He is fast regaining his strength, even without proper nourishment ; he can creep out of doors and sit in the sun. But in the expression of his sallow and emaciated face there is no joy for his escape from the grave, as he sits there alone, silent and brooding. His father and his surviving child are still hungry—more hungry, indeed, and more helpless than ever ; for the neighbours who had relieved the family with a potato and a mug of sour milk are now stricken down themselves, and want assistance to a much greater extent than they can give it.

"I wish Mr. Evans was in the place," cogitated Michaul Carroll; "a body could spake forn'ent him, and not spake for nothin', for all that he's an Englishman; and I don't like the thoughts o' goin' up to the house to the steward's face—it wouldn't turn kind to a body. May be he'd soon come home to us, the masther himself."

Another fortnight elapsed. Michaul's hope proved vain. Mr. Evans was still in London; though a regular resident on his small Irish estate since it had come into his possession, business unfortunately—and he would have said so himself—now kept him an unusually long time absent. Thus disappointed, Michaul overcame his repugnance to appear before the "hard" steward. He only asked for work, however. There was none to be had. He turned his slow and still feeble feet into the adjacent town. It was market-day, and he took up his place among a crowd of other claimants for agricultural employment, shouldering a spade, as did each of his companions.

Many farmers came to the well-known "stannin," and hired men at his right and at his left, but no one addressed Michaul. Once or twice, indeed, touched perhaps by his sidelong looks of beseeching misery, a farmer stopped a moment before him, and glanced over his figure; but his worn and almost shaking limbs giving little promise of present vigour in the working field, worldly prudence soon conquered the humane feeling which started up towards him in the man's heart, and, with a choking in his throat, poor Michaul saw the arbiter of his fate pass on.

He walked homeward, without having broken his fast that day. "Bud, musha, what's the harm o' that," he said to himself; "only here's the ould father, an' her pet boy, the weenock, without a pyatee either. Well, asthore, if they can't have the pyatees, they must have betther food—that's all; ay—" he muttered, clenching his hands at his sides, and imprecating fearfully in Irish—"an' so they must."

He left his house again, and walked a good way to beg a few potatoes. He did not come back quite empty-handed. His father and his child had a meal. He ate but a few himself; and when he was about to lie down in his corner for the night, he said to the old man across the room:

"Don't be a-crying to-night, father, you and the child there; bud sleep well, and ye'll have the good break'ast afore ye in the mornin'."

"The good break'ast, ma-bauchal?¹ A-then, an' where 'ill id come from?"

"A body promised it to me, father."

"Avich! Michaul, an' sure it's fun you're making of us, now, at any rate. Bud, the good night, a chorra,² an' my blessin' on your head, Michaul; an' if we keep trust in the good God, an' ax His blessin', too, mornin' an' evenin', gettin' up an' lyin' down, He'll be a friend to us at last: that was always an' ever my word to you, poor boy, since you was at the years o' your own weenock, now fast asleep at my side; an' it's my word to you now, ma-bauchal; an' you won't forget id; and there's one sayin' the same to you, out o' heaven, this night—herself, an' her little angel-in-glory by the hand, Michaul a-vourneen."

Having thus spoken in the fervent and rather exaggerated, though everyday, words of pious allusion of the Irish poor man, old Carroll soon dropped asleep, with his arms round his little grandson, both overcome by an unusually abundant meal. In the middle of the night he was awakened by a stealthy noise. Without moving, he cast his eyes round the cabin. A small window, through which the moon broke brilliantly, was open. He called to his son, but received no answer. He called again and again: all remained silent. He arose, and crept to the corner where Michaul had lain down. It was empty. He looked out through the window into the moonlight. The figure of a man appeared at a distance, just about to enter a pasture-field belonging to Mr. Evans.

The old man leaned his back against the wall of the cabin, trembling with sudden and terrible misgivings. With him the language of virtue, which we have heard him utter, was not cant. In early prosperity, in subsequent misfortunes, and in his late and present excess of wretchedness he had never swerved in practice from the spirit of his own exhortations to honesty before men, and love for, and dependence upon God, which, as he had truly said, he had constantly addressed to his son since his earliest childhood. And hitherto that son had, indeed, walked by his precepts, further assisted by a regular observance of the duties of his religion. Was he now about to turn into another path? to bring shame on his father in his old age? to put a stain on their family and their name, "the name that a rogue or a bould woman never bore"? continued old Carroll, indulging in some of the pride and egotism for which an Irish peasant is, under his circumstances, remarkable. And then came the thought of the personal peril incurred by Michaul ; and his agitation, incurred by the feebleness of age, nearly overpowered him.

¹ My boy.

² Term of endearment.

He was sitting on the floor, shivering like one in an ague fit, when he heard steps outside the house. He listened, and they ceased : but the familiar noise of an old barn door creaking on its crazy hinges came on his ear. It was now day-dawn. He dressed himself, stole out cautiously, peeped into the barn through a chink of the door, and all he had feared met full confirmation. There, indeed, sat Michaul, busily and earnestly engaged, with a frowning brow and a haggard face, in quartering the animal he had stolen from Mr. Evans's field.

The sight sickened the father—the blood on his son's hands, and all. He was barely able to keep himself from falling. A fear, if not a dislike, of the unhappy culprit also came upon him. His unconscious impulse was to re-enter their cabin unperceived, without speaking a word ; he succeeded in doing so ; and then he fastened the door again and undressed, and resumed his place beside his innocent grandson.

About an hour afterwards, Michaul came in cautiously through the still open window, and also undressed and reclined on his straw, after glancing towards his father's bed, who pretended to be asleep. At the usual time for arising, old Carroll saw him suddenly jump up, and prepare to go abroad. He spoke to him, leaning on his elbow.

" And what *hollg*¹ is on you now, ma-bauchal ? "

" Going for the good break'ast I promised you, father dear. "

" An' who's the good Christhthan 'ill give id to us, Michaul ? "

" Oh, you'll know that soon, father : now, a good-bye "—he hurried to the door.

" A good-bye, then, Michaul ; bud, tell me, what's that on your hand ? "

" No—nothin' , " stammered Michaul, changing colour, as he hastily examined the hand himself ; " nothin' is on id : what could there be ? " (Nor was there, for he had very carefully removed all evidence of guilt from his person ; and the father's question was asked upon grounds distinct from anything he then saw.)

" Well, avich, an' sure I didn't say anything was on it wrong ; or anything to make you look so quare, an' spake so sthrange to your father, this mornin' ;—only I'll ax you, Michaul, over agin, who has took such a sudd'n likin' to us, to send us the good break'ast ?—an' answer me sthraight, Michaul—what is id to be, that you call it so good ? ”

¹ What are you about.

“ The good mate, father ”—he was again passing the threshold.

“ Stop ! ” cried his father ; “ stop, an’ turn fornent me. Mate ?—the good mate ?—What ’ud bring mate into our poor house, Michaul ? Tell me, I bid you again an’ again, who is to give id to you ? ”

“ Why, as I said afore, father, a body that——”

“ A body that thieved id, Michaul Carroll ! ” added the old man, as his son hesitated, walking close up to the culprit ; “ a body that thieved id, an’ no other body. Don’t think to blind me, Michaul. I am ould, to be sure ; but sense enough is left in me to look round among the neighbours, in my own mind, an’ know that none of ’em that has the will has the power to send us the mate for our break’ast, in an honest way. An’ I don’t say, outright, that you had the same thought wid me when you consented to take it from a thief—I don’t mean to say that you’d go to turn a thief’s recaiver, at this hour o’ your life, an’ afther growin’ up from a boy to a man widout bringin’ a spot o’ shame on yourself, or on your weenock, or on one of us. No ; I won’t say that. Your heart was scalded, Michaul, an’ your mind was darkened, for a start ; an’ the thought o’ getting comfort for the ould father an’ for the little son made you consent in a hurry, widout lookin’ well afore you, or widout lookin’ up to your good God.”

“ Father, father, let me alone ! don’t spake them words to me,” interrupted Michaul, sitting on a stool, and spreading his large and hard hands over his face.

“ Well, thin, an’ I won’t, avich ; I won’t ;—nothin’ to throuble you, sure : I didn’t mean id ;—only this, a-vourneen, don’t bring a mouthful o’ the bad, unlucky victuals into this cabin ; the pyatees, the wild berries o’ the bush, the wild roots o’ the arth, will be sweeter to us, Michaul ; the hunger itself will be sweeter ; an’ when we give God thanks afther our poor meal, or afther no meal at all, our hearts will be lighter, and our hopes for to-morrow sthronger, avich-ma-chree, than if we faisted on the fat o’ the land, but couldn’t ax a blessin’ on our faist.”

“ Well, thin, I won’t, either, father ; I won’t : an’ sure you have your way now. I’ll only go out a little while from you—to beg ; or else, as you say, to root down in the ground, with my nails, like a baste-brute, for our break’ast.”

“ My vourneen you are, Michaul, an’ my blessin’ on your head ; yes, to be sure, avich, beg, an I’ll beg wid you—sorrow a shame is in that—no, but a good deed, Michaul, when it's done to keep us honest. So come ; we'll go among the Christthans together. Only, before we go, Michaul, my own dear son, tell me—tell one thing."

"What, father?" Michaul began to suspect.

"Never be afraid to tell me, Michaul Carroll, ma-bauchal? I won't—I can't be angry wid you now. You are sorry; an' your Father in heaven forgives you, and so do I. But you know, avich, there would be danger in quitting the place widout hiding every scrap of anything that could tell on us."

"Tell on us! What can tell on us?" demanded Michaul; "what's in the place to tell on us?"

"Nothin' in the cabin, I know, Michaul; but——"

"But what, father?"

"Have you left nothing in the way, out there?" whispered the old man, pointing towards the barn.

"Out there? Where? What? What do you mean at all, now, father? Sure you know it's your ownself has kep me from as much as laying a hand on it."

"Ay, to-day-mornin'; bud you laid a hand on it last night, avich, an' so——"

"Curp-an-duoul!" imprecated Michaul—"this is too bad, at any rate; no, I didn't—last night—let me alone, I bid you, father."

"Come back again, Michaul," commanded old Carroll, as the son once more hurried to the door: and his words were instantly obeyed. Michaul, after a glance abroad, and a start, which the old man did not notice, paced to the middle of the floor, hanging his head and saying in a low voice, "Hushth now, father—it's time."

"No, Michaul, I will not hushth; an' it's not time; come out with me to the barn."

"Hushth!" repeated Michaul, whispering sharply: he had glanced sideways to the square patch of strong morning sunlight on the ground of the cabin, defined there by the shape of the open door, and saw it intruded upon by the shadow of a man's bust leaning forward in an earnest posture.

"Is it in your mind to go back into your sin, Michaul, an' tell me you were not in the barn, at daybreak, the mornin'?" asked his father, still unconscious of a reason for silence.

"Arrah, hushth, ould man!" Michaul made a hasty sign towards the door, but was disregarded.

"I saw you in id," pursued old Carroll sternly : "ay, and at your work in id, too."

"What's that you're sayin', ould Peery Carroll!" demanded a well-known voice.

"Enough to hang his son," whispered Michaul to his father, as Mr. Evans's land-steward, followed by his herdsman and two policemen, entered the cabin. In a few minutes afterwards the policemen had in charge the dismembered carcase of the sheep, dug up out of the floor of the barn, and were escorting Michaul, handcuffed, to the county gaol, in the vicinity of the next town. They could find no trace of the animal's skin, though they sought attentively for it; and this seemed to disappoint them and the steward a good deal.

From the moment that they entered the cabin, till their departure, old Carroll did not speak a word. Without knowing it, as it seemed, he sat down on his straw bed, and remained staring stupidly around him, or at one or another of his visitors. When Michaul was about to leave the wretched abode, he paced quickly towards his father, and holding out his ironed hands, and turning his cheek for a kiss, said, smiling miserably, "God be wid you, father dear."

Still the old man was silent, and the prisoner and all his attendants passed out on the road. But it was then the agony of old Carroll assumed a distinctness. Uttering a fearful cry, he snatched up his still sleeping grandson, ran with the boy in his arms till he overtook Michaul; and, kneeling down before him in the dust, said:

"I ax pardon o' you, avich—won't you tell me I have id afore you go? An' here, I've brought little Peery for you to kiss; you forgot him, a-vourneen."

"No, father, I didn't," answered Michaul, as he stooped to kiss the child; an' get up, father, get up; my hands are not my own, or I wouldn't let you do that afore your son. Get up, there's nothin' for you to throuble yourself about; that is, I mean, I have nothin' to forgive you: no, but everything to be thankful for, an' to love you for; you were always an' ever the good father to me; an'——"

The many strong and bitter feelings which till now he had almost perfectly kept in, found full vent, and poor Michaul could not go on. The parting from his father, however, so different from what it had promised to be, comforted him. The old man held him in his arms and wept on his neck. They were separated with difficulty.

Peery Carroll, sitting on the roadside after he lost sight of the prisoner, and holding his screaming grandson on his knees, thought the cup of his trials was full. By his imprudence he had fixed the proof of guilt on his own child ; that reflection was enough for him, and he could indulge it only generally. But he was yet to conceive distinctly in what dilemma he had involved himself as well as Michaul.

The policemen came back to compel his appearance before the magistrate ; and when the little child had been disposed of in a neighbouring cabin, he understood, to his consternation and horror, that he was to be the chief witness against the sheep-stealer. Mr. Evans's steward knew well the meaning of the words he had overheard him say in the cabin, and that if compelled to swear all he was aware of, no doubt would exist of the criminality of Michaul in the eyes of a jury.

" 'Tis a strange thing to ax a father to do," muttered Peery, more than once, as he proceeded to the magistrate's ; " it's a very strange thing."

The magistrate proved to be a humane man. Notwithstanding the zeal of the steward and the policemen, he committed Michaul for trial, without continuing to press the hesitating and bewildered old Peery into any detailed evidence ; his nature seemed to rise against the task, and he said to the steward :

" I have enough of facts for making out a committal ; if you think the father will be necessary on the trial, subpoena him."

The steward objected that Peery would abscond, and demanded to have him bound over to prosecute, on two sureties, solvent and respectable. The magistrate assented ; Peery could name no bail ; and consequently he also was marched to prison, though prohibited from holding the least intercourse with Michaul.

The assizes soon came on. Michaul was arraigned ; and, during his plea of " not guilty," his father appeared, unseen by him, in the gaoler's custody, at the back of the dock, or rather in an inner dock. The trial excited a keen and painful interest in the court, the bar, the jury-box, and the crowds of spectators. It was universally known that a son had stolen a sheep, partly to feed a starving father ; and that out of the mouth of that father it was now sought to condemn him.

" What will the old man do ? " was the general question which ran through the assembly : and while few of the lower orders could contemplate the possibility of his swearing to the truth, many of their betters scarcely hesitated to make out for him a case of natural necessity to swear falsely.

The trial began. The first witness, the herdsman, proved the loss of the sheep and the finding the dismembered carcass in the old barn. The policemen and the steward followed to the same effect, and the latter added the allusions which he had heard the father make to the son upon the morning of the arrest of the latter. The steward went down from the table. There was a pause, and complete silence, which the attorney for the prosecution broke by saying to the crier deliberately, "Call Peery Carroll."

"Here, sir," immediately answered Peery, as the gaoler led him by a side door out of the back dock to the table. The prisoner started round; but the new witness against him had passed for an instant into the crowd.

The next instant old Peery was seen ascending the table, assisted by the gaoler and by many other commiserating hands, near him. Every glance fixed on his face. The barristers looked wistfully up from their seats round the table; the judge put a glass to his eye and seemed to study his features attentively. Among the audience there ran a low but expressive murmur of pity and interest.

Though much emaciated by confinement, anguish, and suspense, Peery's cheeks had a flush, and his weak blue eyes glittered. The half-gaping expression of his parched and haggard lips was miserable to see. And yet he did not tremble much, nor appear so confounded as upon the day of his visit to the magistrate.

The moment he stood upright on the table he turned himself fully to the judge, without a glance towards the dock.

"Sit down, sit down, poor man," said the judge.

"Thanks to you, my lord, I will," answered Peery, "only, first I'd ax you to let me kneel, for a little start"; and he accordingly did kneel, and after bowing his head, and forming the sign of the cross on his forehead, he looked up, and said, "My Judge in heaven above, 'tis you I pray to keep me to my duty, afore my earthly judge, this day—amen"—and then, repeating the sign of the cross, he seated himself.

The examination of the witness commenced, and humanely proceeded as follows—the counsel for the prosecution taking no notice of the superfluity of Peery's answers.

"Do you know Michaul, or Michael, Carroll, the prisoner at the bar?"

"Afore that night, sir, I believed I knew him well; every thought of his mind, every bit of the heart in his body: afore that night, no living creatur could throw a word at Michaul Carrol, or say he ever forgot his father's renown, or his love of his good God ; an' sure the people are afther telling you by this time how it came about that night—an' you, my lord—an' ye, gintlemen—an' all good Christhtans that hear me ;—here I am to help to hang him—my own boy, and my only one—but, for all that, gintlemen, ye ought to think of it ; 'twas for the weenock and the ould father that he done it ;—indeed, an'deed, we hadn't a pyatee in the place ; an' the sickness was among us, a start afore ; it took the wife from him, and another babby ; an' id had himself down, a week or so beforehand ; an' all that day he was looking for work, but couldn't get a hand's turn to do ; an' that's the way it was ; not a mouthful for me an' little Peery ; an', more betoken, he grew sorry for id, in the mornin,' an' promised me not to touch a scrap of what was in the barn,—ay, long afore the steward and the peelers came on us,—but was willin' to go among the neighbours an' beg our breakfast, along wid myself, from door to door, sooner than touch it."

" It is my painful duty," resumed the barrister, when Peery would at length cease, " to ask you for closer information. You saw Michael Carrol in the barn that night ? "

" Musha—The Lord pity him and me—I did, sir."

" Doing what ? "

" The sheep between his hands," answered Peery, dropping his head, and speaking almost inaudibly.

" I must still give you pain, I fear ; stand up, take the crier's rod, and if you see Michael Carrol in court lay it on his head."

" Och, musha, musha, sir, don't ax me to do that ! " pleaded Peery, rising, wringing his hands, and for the first time weeping—" och, don't, my lord, don't, and may your own judgment be favourable, the last day."

" I am sorry to command you to do it, witness, but you must take the rod," answered the judge, bending his head close to his notes, to hide his own tears ; and, at the same time, many a veteran barrister rested his forehead on the edge of the table. In the body of the court were heard sobs.

" Michaul, avich ! Michaul, a corra-ma-chree ! " exclaimed Peery, when at length he took the rod, and faced round to his son, " is id your fater they make to do it, ma-bauchal ? "

" My father does what is right," answered Michael, in Irish.

The judge immediately asked to have his words translated ; and when he learned their import, regarded the prisoner with satisfaction.

"We rest here, my lord," said the counsel, with the air of a man freed from a painful task. The judge instantly turned to the jury-box :

"Gentlemen of the jury, that the prisoner at the bar stole the sheep in question, there can be no shade of moral doubt. But you have a very peculiar case to consider. A son steals a sheep that his own famishing father and his own famishing son may have food. His aged parent is compelled to give evidence against him here for the act. The old man virtuously tells the truth, and the whole truth, before you and me. He sacrifices his natural feelings—and we have seen that they are lively—to his honesty, and to his religious sense of the sacred obligations of an oath. Gentlemen, I will pause to observe that the old man's conduct is strikingly exemplary, and even noble. It teaches all of us a lesson. Gentlemen, it is not within the province of a judge to censure the rigour of the proceedings which have sent him before us. But I venture to anticipate your pleasure that, notwithstanding all the evidence given, you will be enabled to acquit that old man's son, the prisoner at the bar. I have said there cannot be the shade of a moral doubt that he has stolen the sheep, and I repeat the words. But, gentlemen, there is a legal doubt, to the full benefit of which he is entitled. The sheep has not been identified. The herdsman could not venture to identify it (and it would have been strange if he could) from the dismembered limbs found in the barn. To his mark on its skin, indeed, he might have positively spoken ; but no skin has been discovered. Therefore, according to the evidence, and you have sworn to decide by that alone, the prisoner is entitled to your acquittal. Possibly, now that the prosecutor sees the case in its full bearing, he may be pleased with this result."

While the jury, in evident satisfaction, prepared to return their verdict, Mr. Evans, who had but a moment before returned home, entered the court, and becoming aware of the concluding words of the judge, expressed his sorrow aloud that the prosecution had ever been undertaken, that circumstances had kept him uninformed of it, though it had gone on in his name ; and he begged leave to assure his lordship that it would be his future effort to keep Michael Carroll in his former path of honesty, by finding him honest and ample employment, and, as far as in him lay, to reward the virtue of the old father.

While Peery Carroll was laughing and crying in a breath, in the arms of his delivered son, a subscription, commenced by the bar, was mounting into a considerable sum for his advantage.

THE CHURCHYARD WATCH

JOHN BANIM

THE dead are watched lest the living should prey on them !— 'Tis a strange alliance—of the living with DEATH—that his kingdom and sovereignty may remain untrenched upon. In different parts of England we have seen watch-houses, almost entirely composed of glass, built in lonesome churchyards, of which generally the parish sexton, and perhaps his dog (ill-fated among men and dogs !), are the appointed nightly tenants, with liberty, ceded or taken, to leave their dull lamp in the watch-box, and roam, here and there, at their pleasure, among the graves, until daylight.

What stern necessities man forces upon man ! There can scarce be a more comfortless lot, or, making allowance for the almost inborn shudderings of the human heart, a more appalling one, than that of the poor grave-scooper or bell-puller who is thus doomed to spend his nights summer and winter. Habit, indeed, may eventually blunt the first keenness of his aversion, if not terror : he may serve a due apprenticeship to horrors, and learn his trade. After a thousand secret and unowned struggles to seem brave and indifferent, he may at last grow callously courageous. His flesh may cease to creep as he strides on, in his accustomed round, over the abodes of the silent and mouldering, and hears his own dull footstep echoed through the frequent dreary hollowness beneath.

But what has he gained, now, beyond the facility of earning his wretched crust for himself and his crying infants !—We have seen and spoken with such an unhappy being, who seemed to have lost, in the struggle which conquered nature's especial antipathy (nature in a breast and mind, like his, at least), most of the other sympathies of his kind. He had a heavy, ox-like expression of face ; he would scarce speak to his neighbours (although we contrived to make him eloquent) when they passed him at his door, or in the village street ; his own children feared or disliked him, and did not smile nor whisper in his presence.

We have watched him go into the churchyard, at his usual hour, after nightfall ; and as he began to stalk about there, the ghastly sentinel of the dead, he appeared to be in closer fellowship with them than with the fair existence which he scarce more than nominally shared. It was said, indeed, that, upon his initiation, at a tender age and under peculiar circumstances, into his profession of churchyard watchman, temporary delirium prepared him for its regular and steady pursuit ever since ; and that, although he showed no symptoms of distinct insanity, when we knew him, the early visitation had left a gloom on his mind, and a thick, nerveless insensibility in his heart, which then, at forty-five, formed his character.

In fact we learned a good deal about him, for every one talked of him—and, as has been hinted, much of that good deal from himself, to say nothing of his wife, in his absence ; and if he did not deliberately invent fables of his past trials, for the purpose of gratifying a little spirit of mockery of our undisguised interest, as mad as the maddest bedlamite he must have been upon the occasion alluded to : nay, to recount, with a grave face (as he did), the particulars of the delusions of his time of delirium, did not argue him a very sound-minded man at the moment he gave us his confidence.

We are about to tell his story, at length, in our own way, however ; that is, we shall try to model into our own language (particularly the raving parts) what his neighbours, his spouse, and his own slow-moving and heavy lips have, from time to time, supplied us with.

He was the only child of an affectionate and gentle-mannered father who died when he was little more than a boy, leaving him sickly and pining. His mother wept a month, mourned three months more—and was no longer a widow. Her second husband proved a surly fellow, who married her little fortune rather than herself, as the means of keeping his quart pot filled, almost from morning to night, at the village Tap, where he played good fellow and politician to the expressed admiration of all his companions.

He had long been the parish sexton, and took up his post, night after night, in the churchyard. Little fear had he of what he might see there ; or he had outgrown his fears ; or, if he thought or felt of the matter, the lonely debauch which he was known to make in that strange banquet-place served to drug him into obliviousness. He deemed his duty—or he said and swore he did—only a tiresome and slavish one, and hated it just as he hated daily labour. And—as he declared and harangued at the Tap—he had long ago forsworn it, only that it paid him well ; but now that his marriage made his circumstances easier, he was determined to drink alone in the churchyard no longer : and he fed an idle, useless lad at home, who with his dog—as idle as he—roamed and loitered about, here and there, and had never yet done a single thing to earn their bread.

But it was full time that both were taught the blessings of industry ; and he would teach them ;—and—now that he thought of it—why should not Will take his place in the watch-box, and so keep the shillings in the family ? His friends praised his views, one and all, and he grew thrice resolved.

Returned the next morning from his nocturnal charge, he reeled to bed in solemn, drunken determination. He arose, towards evening, only half-reclaimed by sleep to ordinary sense, and set about his work of reformation. He ate his meal in silence, turned from the table to the fire without a word, looked at the blaze, grimly contemplative, then grumbling suddenly at his wife :

“ And where is that truant now ? ” he asked : “ down by the marshes with his cur, I suppose ; or gone a-nutting, or lying stretched in the sun, the two idlers together ; what !—and must I work and work, and strive and strive—I, I, for ever—and will he never lend me a hand ? go where he likes, do what he likes, and laugh and fatten on my labour ? ”

“ Master Hunks,” said the wife, “ Will is sickly, and won’t fatten on either your labour or mine—not to talk of his own ;—you know ’tis a puny lad, and wants some favour yet awhile ; with God’s help and ours he may be stronger soon.”

Will and dog here came in. From what followed, this evening, it will be seen that the ill-fated lad promised, in early youth, to be of an open, kindly, intelligent character, very different indeed from that in which we found him husked up at five-and-forty.

He saluted his stepfather, and sat down quietly near the fire. His poor dumb companion—friend of his boyhood, and his father’s gift—coiled himself up before the blaze, and prepared to surrender his senses to happy sleep, interspersed with dreams of all the sports he had enjoyed with his master that day.

Hunks, his eye glancing from one object of dislike to the other, kicked the harmless brute, who jumped up, yelping in pain and bitter lamentation, and ran for shelter under Will’s chair. Will’s pale cheek broke out into colour, his weak eye sparkled, his feeble voice arose shrilly, and he asked—“ Why is my poor dog beaten ? ”

"The lazy cur!" said Hunks—"he was in my way, and only got paid for idleness."

"'Twas ill done," resumed Will—"he was my father's dog, and my father gave him to me; and if my father were alive and well, he would not hurt him, nor see him hurt!" Tears interrupted this sudden fit of spirit.

"Cur, as much as he is!" retorted Hunks—"do you put upon me, here at my own fireside? You are the idler—you—and he only learns of you—and I hadn't ought to have served him out, and you so near me."

"It has been God's will," said the boy, "to keep my strength from me."

"Be silent and hear me!" roared Hunks—"this is your life, I say—playing truant for ever—and what is mine and your own good mother's here?"

"Master Hunks," pleaded the wife—"God knows I don't grudge nothing I can do for my poor Will's sake."

"And you—not a word from you either, Missis!" grunted Hunks—"I am put upon by one and t'other of you—ye sleep in comfort every night, and leave me to go a-watching, out o' doors, there, in all weathers; but stop a bit, my man, it sha'n't be this way much longer; I'll have my natural rest in my bed, some time or other, and soon; and you must earn it for me."

"How, father? how can I earn it?" asked Will—"I would if I could—but how? I haven't learnt no trade, and you know as well as any one knows it, I am not able to work in the fields or on the roads or get my living any one way."

"Then you can sit still and watch—that's light work," muttered Hunks.

"Watch!" cried mother and son together—"watch what? and where? or whom?"

"The dead folk in the churchyard."

"Heaven defend me from it!" cried poor Will, clasping his hands and falling back in his chair.

"Ay, and this very night," continued the despot—"this very night you shall mount guard in my place, and I shall have my lawful sleep, what the whole parish cries shame on me for not having months ago."

"Master Hunks, 'twill kill the boy!" cried the mother.

"Missis—don't you go for to cross me so often!"—remonstrated her husband with a fixed look, which, short as they had been one flesh, she had reason to understand and shrink at.—“Come, my man, stir yourself; ’tis time you were at the gate; the church clock has struck; they will expect us”—he interrupted himself in a great rage, and with a great oath—“but here I keep talking, and the cur never minds a word I say!—Come along!”

“Don’t lay hands on him!” screamed the mother as he strode towards the boy—“what I have often told you has come to pass, Master Hunks—you have killed him!”

Hunks scoffed at the notion, although, indeed, Will’s hands had fallen helplessly at his side, and his chin rested on his breast, while his eyes were closed, and his lips apart. But he had only become insensible from sheer terror acting on a weak frame. Sighs and groans soon gave notice of returning animation. His mother then earnestly besought their tyrant to go on his night’s duty, and, at least till the following night, leave her son to her care. Half in fear of having to answer for a murder, incredulously as he pretended to speak, Hunks turned out of the house, growling and threatening.

“Is he gone?” asked Will, when he regained his senses—“gone not to come back?”—and having heard his mother’s gentle assurances, he let his head fall on her shoulder, weeping while he continued:

“Mother, mother, it would destroy the little life I have! I could not bear it for an hour! The dread I am in of it was born with me! When I was a child of four years I had dreams of it, and I remember them to this day; they used to come in such crowds round my cradle! As I grew up you saw and you know my weakness. I could never sit still in the dark, nor even in the daylight out of doors in lonesome places. Now in my youth—a lad—almost a man—I am ashamed to speak of my inward troubles. Mother, you do not know me—I do not know myself! I walk out sometimes down by the river, and, listening to the noise of the water over the rocks, where it is shallow, and to the rustling of the trees as they nod in the twilight, voices and shrieks come round me—sometimes they break in my ears—and I have turned to see what thing it was that spoke, and thought some grey tree at my side had only just changed and become motionless, and seemed as if a moment before, it had been something else, and had a tongue, and said the words that frightened me!—Oh, it was but yester evening I ran home from the river-side, and felt no heart within me till I had come in here to the fireside, and seen you moving near me!

" You know the lone house all in ruins upon the hill—I fear it, mother, more than my tongue can tell you ! I have been taken through it, in my dreams, in terrible company, and here I could describe to you its bleak apartments, one by one—its vaults, pitch dark, and half-filled with stones and rubbish, and choked up with weeds—its winding, creeping staircases, and its flapping windows—I know them all, though my feet never yet crossed its threshold !—Never, mother—though I have gone near it, to enter it, and see if what I had dreamt of it was true—and I went in the first light of the morning ; but when close by the old doorway, the rustle of the shrubs and weeds startled me, and I thought—but sure that was fancy—that some one called me in by name—and then I turned and raced down the hill, never looking back till I came to the meadow-ground where cows and sheep are always grazing, and heard the dogs barking in the town, and voices of the children at play ! "

" Will, my king," said his mother soothingly, " this is all mere childishness at your years. God is above us and around us ; and even if evil and strange things are allowed to be on earth, He will shield us from all harm. Arouse up like a man ; for, indeed, your time of boyhood is passing—nay, it has passed with other lads not much older ; only you have been poorly and weakly from your cradle, Will. Come, go to sleep ; and before you lie down, pray for better health and strength to-morrow."

" To-morrow ! " he repeated—" and did my stepfather say anything of to-morrow ? "

His mother answered him evasively, and he resumed,—“ Oh, how I fear to-morrow !—oh, mother, you have loved me, and you do love me—for my weakness, my ill-health, and my dutifulness—and you loved my father—oh, for his sake as well as mine, mother, keep me from what I am threatened with !—keep me from it, if you would keep me alive another day ! ”

He went into his little sleeping apartment, stricken to the very soul with supernatural fears.

After spending a miserable night, he stole out of the house next morning and wandered about the private walks adjacent to the town until he thought his stepfather might have arisen and taken his usual walk to the Tap. But as the lad was about to re-enter the house, Hunks met him at the threshold. Will shrunk back ; to his surprise and comfort, however, his fears now seemed ill-founded. The man bade him good-morrow in as cheerful and kind a tone as he could command, shook his hand, tapped him on the head, and left the house. Delighted, though still agitated, Will sought his mother within doors, told her his good omens, and spent a happy day. At dinner, too, notwithstanding Hunks' presence, the mother and son enjoyed themselves, so amiable had the despot become, at least in appearance.

When their meal was over, Hunks, as if to attain the height of civility, invited Will to go out with him for a walk by the river—"and let's have Barker (Will's dog) for company," continued Hunks; "he may show us sport with a rat, or such like, Will."

Accordingly, the three strolled out together, Will leading the way by many a well-known sedge or tuft of bushes, or undermined bank, the resorts of the water-rat, and sometimes of the outlaw otter; and Barker upheld his character, by starting, hunting down, and killing one of the first-mentioned animals. As twilight came on, they turned their faces towards the little town. They entered it. Its little hum of life was now hushed; its streets were silent, and almost deserted; its doors and windows barred and bolted, and the sounds of the rushing river and the thumping mill were the only ones which filled the air. The clock pealed ten as they continued their way. Hunks had grown suddenly silent and reserved. They passed the old Gothic church, and now were passing the gate which led into its burial-ground. Hunks stopped short. His grey, bad eye fell on the lad—"Will," he said, "I be thinking we've walked enough for this time."

"Enough, indeed,—and thank you for your company—and good-night, father," answered Will, trying to smile, though he began to tremble.

"Good-night then, my man—and here be your watch-light,"—and Hunks drew a dark lantern from his huge pocket.

"Nay, I want no light home," said Will; "I know the way so well; and 'tis not very dark; and you know you can't do without it on your post."

"My post?" Hunks laughed villainously—"your post, you mean, Will; take it; I be thinking I shall sleep sound to-night without a dead-light—as if I were a corpse to need it. Come along."

"You cannot have the heart to ask me!" cried Will, stepping back.

"Pho, my man"—Hunks clutched him by the shoulder with one hand, with the other unlocked the gate and flung it open—"In with you ; you'll like it so in a few nights, you'll wish no better post ; the dead chaps be civil enough ; only treat them well, and let them walk awhile, and they make very good company." He dragged Will closer to the gate.

" Have mercy ! " shrieked the wretched lad, trying to kneel, " or kill me first, father, to make me company for them, if that will please you."

" Get in ! " roared the savage—" get in !—ay, hollo out, and twist about, so, and I'll pitch your shivering carcass half-way across the churchyard ! "—he forced him in from the gate—" stop a bit, now—there be your lantern "—he set it down on a tombstone—" so, good-night—yonder's your box—just another word—don't you be caught strolling too near the murderer's corner over there, or you may trip and fall among the things that turn and twine on the ground, like roots of trees, to guard him."

With a new and piercing shriek, Will clung close to his fell tormentor. Hunks, partially carrying into effect a threat he had uttered, tore the lad's hands away, tossed him to some distance, strode out at the gate, locked it, and Will was alone with horror.

At first an anguish of fear kept him stupefied and stationary. He had fallen on a freshly-piled grave, to which mechanically his fingers clung and his face joined, in avoidance of the scene around. But he soon recollected what clay it was he clung to, and at the thought he started up, and, hushed as the sleepers around him, made some observations. High walls quite surrounded the churchyard, as if to part him from the habitable world. His lamp was burning upon the tombstone where Hunks had placed it—one dim red spot amid the thick darkness. The church clock now tolled eleven. It ceased ; his ears ached in the resumed silence, and he listened and stared about him for what he feared. Whispers seemed to arise near him. He ran for his lamp, snatched it up, and instinctively hurried to the watch-box. Oh, he wished it made of solid rock !—it was chiefly framed of glass, useless as the common air to his terrors ! He shut his eyes and pressed his palms upon them—vain subterfuge ! The fevered spirit within him brought before his mind's vision worse things than the churchyard could yawn up, were all that superstition has fancied of it true. He looked out from his watch-box in refuge from himself.

That evening a half-moon had risen early, and, at this moment, was sinking in gathering clouds behind distant hills. As he vaguely noticed the circumstance, he felt more and more desolate. Simultaneously with the disappearance of the planet, the near clock began again to strike—he knew what hour! Each stroke smote his ear as if it would crack the nerve; at the last he shrieked out delirious! He had a pause from agony, then a struggle for departing reason, and then he was at rest.

At daybreak his stepfather found him asleep. He led him home. Will sat down to breakfast, smiling, but did not speak a word. Often during the day his now brilliant eye turned to the west; but why, his mother could not tell; until, as the evening made up her couch of clouds there, drawing around her the twilight for drapery, he left the house with an unusually vigorous step, and stood at the gate of the churchyard. Again he took up his post. Again the hour of twelve pealed from the old church, but now he did not fear it. When it had fully sounded he clapped his hands, laughed, and shouted.

The imaginary whispers he had heard the previous night—small, cautious whispers—came round him again, first from a distance, then nearer and nearer. At last he shaped them into words:

“Let us walk,” they said—“though he watches us, he fears us.” He!—’twas strange to hear the dim dead speak to a living man of himself! the maniac laughed again at the fancy, and replied to them:

“Ay, come! appear! I give leave for it. Ye are about in crowds, I know, not yet daring to take up your old bodies till I please; but, up with them!—Graves, split on, and yield me my subjects! for am I not king of the churchyard? Obey me!—ay, now your mouths gape—and what a yawning!—are ye musical, too?—a jubilee of groans!—out with it, in the name of Death!—blast it about like giants carousing!”

“Well blown!—and now a thousand heads popped up at once—their eyes fixed on mine, as if to ask my further leave for a resurrection; and they know I am good-humoured now, and grow upward, accordingly, like a grove of bare trees that have no sap in them. And now they move; passing along in rows, like trees, too, that glide by one on a bank, while one sails merrily down the river—and all stark staring still: and others stand bolt upright against their own headstones to contemplate. I wonder what they think of! Move! move! young, old, boys, men, pale girls, and palsied grandmothers—my churchyard can never hold ’em! And yet how they pass each other from corner to corner! I think they make way through one another’s bodies, as they do in the grave. They’ll dance anon. Minuets, at least. Why, the begin already !—and what partners !—a tall, genteel young officer takes out our village witch of the wield—she that died at Christmas—and our last rector smirks to a girl of fifteen—ha, ha ! yon tattered little fellow is a radical, making a leg to the old duchess !—music ! music !—Go, some of you that look on there, and toll the dead bell ! Well done ! they tie the murderer to the bell-rope by the neck (though he was hanged before), and the bell swings out merrily ! but what face is here ? ”

It was the vision of a child's face, which he believed he caught staring at him through the glass of his watch-box—the face of an only brother who had died young. The wretch's laughter changed into tears and low wailings. By the time that his mother came to seek him, just at daybreak, he was, however, again laughing ; but in such a state as to frighten mirth from her heart and lips till the day she died. As has been said, symptoms of positive insanity did not long continue to appear in his words or actions ; yet when he recovered, there was still a change in him—a dark and disagreeable change, under the inveterate confirmation of which, the curious student of human nature may, at this moment, observe him in his native village.

GERALD GRIFFIN
1803-1840

THE DILEMMA OF PHADRIG

"THERE'S no use in talken about it, Phadrig. I know an I feel that all's over wit me. My pains are all gone, to be sure—but in place o' that, there's a weight like a quern stone down upon my heart, an I feel it blackenen within me. All I have to say is—think o' your own Mauria when she's gone, an be kind to poor Patcy."

"Ah, darlen, don't talk that way—there's hopes yet—what'll I do, what'll the child do witout you?"——

"Phadrig, there's noan. I'm goen fast, an if you have any regard for me, you won't say anythin that'll bring the thoughts o' you an him between me an the thoughts o' heaven, for that's what I must think of now. An if you marry again——"

"Oh, Mauria, honey, will you kill me entirely? Is it I'll marry again?"

——"If it be a thing you should marry again," Mauria resumed, without taking any notice of her husband's interruption, "you'll bear in mind that the best mother that ever walked the ground will love her own above another's. It stands with raisin an natur. The gander abroad will pull a strange goslen out of his own flock; and you know yourself, we could never get the bracket hen to sit upon Nelly O'Leary's chickens, do what we could. Everything loves its own. Then, Phadrig, if you see the floury potaties—an the top o' the milk—an the warm seat be the hob—an the biggest bit o' meat on a Sunday goen away from Patcy—you'll think o' your poor Mauria, an do her part by him; just quietly, and softly, an without blamen the woman—for it is only what's nait'rel, an what many a stepmother does without thinking o' themselves. An above all things, Phadrig, take care to make him mind his books and his religion, to keep out o' bad company, an study his readin-made-aisy, and that's the way he'll be a blessing an a comfort to you in your old days, as I once thought he would be to me in mine."

Here her husband renewed his promises in a tone of deep affliction.

"An now for yourself, Phadrig. Remember the charge that's upon you, and don't be goen out venturen your life in a little canvas canoe, on the bad autumn days, at Ballybunion; nor wit foolish boys at the Glin and Tarbert fairs;—an don't be so wake-minded as to be trusten to card-drawers, an fairy doctors, an the like; for it's the last word the priest said to me was, that you were too superstitious, and that's a great shame an a heavy sin. But tee you! ¹ Phadrig, dear, there's that rogue of a pig at the potaties over——"

Phadrig turned out the grunting intruder, bolted the hurdle-door, and returned to the bedside of his expiring helpmate. That tidy housekeeper, however, exhausted by the exertion which she had made to preserve, from the mastication of the swinish tusk, the fair produce of her husband's conacre of white-eyes, had fallen back on the pillow and breathed her last.

Great was the grief of the widowed Phadrig for her loss—great were the lamentations of her female friends at the evening wake—and great was the jug of whisky-punch which the mourners imbibed at the mouth, in order to supply the loss of fluid which was expended from the eyes. According to the usual cottage etiquette, the mother of the deceased, who acted as mistress of the ceremonies, occupied a capacious hay-bottomed chair near the fireplace—from which she only rose when courtesy called on her to join each of her female acquaintances as they arrived, in the death-wail which (as in politeness bound) they poured forth over the pale piece of earth that lay confined in the centre of the room. This mark of attention, however, the old lady was observed to omit with regard to one of the fair guests—a round-faced, middle-aged woman, called Milly Rue—or Red Milly, probably because her head might have furnished a solution of the popular conundrum, "Why is a red-haired lady like a sentinel on his post?"

The fair Milly, however, did not appear to resent this slight, which was occasioned (so the whisper went among the guests) by the fact that she had been an old and neglected love of the new widower. All the fiery ingredients in Milly's constitution appeared to be comprehended in her glowing ringlets—and those, report says, were as ardent in hue as their owner was calm and regulated in her temper. It would be a cold morning, indeed, that a sight of Milly's head would not warm you—and a hot fit of anger which a few tones of her kind and wrath-disarming voice would not cool. She dropped, after she had concluded her "cry," a conciliating curtsey to the sullen old lady, took an unobtrusive seat at the foot of the bed, talked of the "notable" qualities of the deceased, and was particularly attentive to the flaxen-headed little Patcy, whom she held in her lap during the whole night, cross-examining him in his reading and multiplication, and presenting him, at parting, in token of her satisfaction at his proficiency, with a copy of The Seven Champions of Christendom, with a fine marble cover and pictures. Milly acted in this instance under the advice of a prudent mother, who exhorted her, "whenever she thought o' maken presents, that way, not to be layen her money out in cakes or gingerbread, or things that would be ett off at wanst, an no more about them or the giver—but to give a strong toy, or a book, or somethen that would last, and bring her to mind now and then, so as that when a person 'ud ask where they got that, or who gev it, they'd say, 'from Milly Rue,' or 'Milly gev it, we're obleest to her,' an be talken an thinken of her when she'd be away."

¹ To you! Beware!

To curb in my tale, which may otherwise become restive and unmanageable—Milly's deep affliction and generous sympathy made a serious impression on the mind of the widower, who more than all was touched by that singularly accidental attachment which she seemed to have conceived for little Patcy. Nothing could be farther from his own wishes than any design of a second time changing his condition; but he felt that it would be doing a grievous wrong to the memory of his first wife if he neglected this opportunity of providing her favourite Patcy with a protector, so well calculated to supply her place. He demurred a little on the score of true love, and the violence which he was about to do his own constant heart—but like the bluff King Henry, his conscience—"aye—his conscience,"—touched him, and the issue was that a roaring wedding shook the walls which had echoed to the wail of death within the few preceding months.

Milly Rue not only supplied the place of a mother to young Patcy, but presented him in the course of a few years with two merry play-fellows, a brother and a sister. To do her handsome justice, too, poor Mauria's anticipations were completely disproved by her conduct, and it would have been impossible for a stranger to have detected the stepson of the house from any shade of undue partiality in the mother. The harmony in which they dwelt was unbroken by any accident for many years.

The first shock which burst in with a sudden violence upon their happiness was one of a direful nature. Disease, that pale and hungry fiend who haunts alike the abodes of wealth and of penury ; who brushes away with his baleful wing the bloom from beauty's cheek, and the balm of slumber from the pillow of age ; who troubles the hope of the young mother with dreams of ghastliness and gloom, and fears that come suddenly, she knows not why nor whence ; who sheds his poisonous dewdrops alike on the heart that is buoyant and the heart that is broken ; this stern and conquering demon scorned not to knock, one summer morning, at the door of Phadrig's cow-house, and to lay his iron fingers upon a fine milch-cow, a sheeted-stripper which constituted (to use his own emphatic phrase) the poor farmer's "substance," and to which he might have applied the well-known lines which run nearly as follows :

She's straight in her back, and thin in her tail ;
She's fine in her horn, and good at the pail ;
She's calm in her eyes, and soft in her skin ;
She's a grazier's without, and a butcher's within.

All the "cures" in the pharmacopoeia of the village apothecary were expended on the poor animal, without any beneficial effect ; and Phadrig, after many conscientious qualms about the dying words of his first wife, resolved to have recourse to that infallible refuge in such cases—a fairy doctor.

He said nothing to the afflicted Milly about his intention, but slipped out of the cottage in the afternoon, hurried to the Shannon side near Money Point, unmoored his light canvas-built canoe, seated himself in the frail vessel, and fixing his paddles on the towl-pin, sped away over the calm face of the waters towards the isle of Scattery, where the renowned Crohoore-na-Oona, or Connor-of-the-Sheep, the Mohammed of the cottages, at this time took up his residence. This mysterious personage, whose prophecies are still commented on among the cottage circles with looks of deep awe and wonder, was much revered by his contemporaries as a man "who had seen a dale" ; of what nature those sights or visions were was intimated by a mysterious look, and a solemn nod of the head.

In a little time Phadrig ran his little canoe aground on the sandy beach of Scattery, and, drawing her above high-water mark, proceeded to the humble dwelling of the gifted Sheep-shearer with feelings of profound fear and anxiety. He passed the lofty round tower—the ruined grave of St. Senanus, in the centre of the little isle—the mouldering church, on which the eye of the poring antiquary may still discern the sculptured image of the two-headed monster, with which cottage tradition says the saint sustained so fierce a conflict on landing in the islet—and which the translator of Odranus has vividly described as “a dragon, with his fore-part covered with huge bristles, standing on end like those of a boar; his mouth gaping wide open with a double row of crooked, sharp tusks, and with such openings that his entrails might be seen; his back like a round island, full of scales and shells; his legs short and hairy, with such steely talons, that the pebble-stones, as he ran along them, sparkled—parching the way wherever he went, and making the sea boil about him where he dived—such was his excessive fiery heat.” Phadrig’s knees shook beneath him when he remembered this awful description—and thought of the legends of Lough Dhoola, on the summit of Mount Callon, to which the hideous animal was banished by the saint, to fast on a trout and a half per diem to the end of time; and where, to this day, the neighbouring fishermen declare that, in dragging the lake with their nets, they find the half trout as regularly divided in the centre as if it were done with a knife and scale.

While Phadrig remained with mouth and eyes almost as wide open as those of the sculptured image of the monster which had fascinated him to the spot, a sudden crash among the stones and dock-weed in an opposite corner of the ruin made him start and yell as if the original were about to quit Lough Dhoola on parole of honour, and use him as a relish after the trout and a half. The noise was occasioned by a little rotund personage, who had sprung from the mouldering wall, and now stood gazing fixedly on the terrified Phadrig, who continued returning that steady glance with a half-frightened, half-crying face—one hand fast clenched upon his breast, and the other extended, with an action of avoidance and deprecation. The person of the stranger was stout and short, rendered still more so by a stoop, which might almost have been taken for a hump—his arms hung forward from his shoulders, like those of a long-armed ape—his hair was grey and bushy, like that of a wanderer—and his sullen grey eye seemed to be inflamed with ill-humour—his feet were bare and as broad as a camel’s—and a leathern girdle buckling round his waist secured a tattered grey frieze riding-coat, and held an enormous pair of shears, which might have clipped off a man’s head as readily, perhaps, as a lock of wool. This last article of costume afforded a sufficient indication to Phadrig that he stood in the presence of the awful object of his search.

" Well ! an who are you ? " growled the Sheep-shearer, after surveying Phadrig attentively for some moments.

The first gruff sound of his voice made the latter renew his start and roar for fright ; after which, composing his terrors as well as he might, he replied, in the words of Autolycus, " I am only a poor fellow, sir."

" Well ! an what's your business with me ? "

" A cure, sir, I wanted for her. A cow o' mine that's very bad inwardly, an we can do nothen for her ; an I thought may be you'd know what is it ail'ded her—an prevail on THEM " (this word was pronounced with an emphasis of deep meaning) " to leave her to uz."

" Huth ! " the Sheep-shearer thundered out, in a tone that made poor Phadrig jump six feet backwards with a fresh yell, " do you daare to spake of them before me. Go along ! you villyan o' the airth, an wait for me outside the church, an I'll tell you all about it there ; but, first—do you think I can get the gentlemen to do anything for me gratis—without offeren 'em a trate or a haip'orth ? "

" If their honours wouldn't think two tin-pennies and a fi'penny bit too little.—It's all I'm worth in the wide world."

" Well ! we'll see what they'll say to it. Give it here to me. Go now—be off with yourself—if you don't want to have 'em all a-top o' you in a minnit."

This last hint made our hero scamper over the stones like a startled fawn ; nor did he think himself safe until he reached the spot where he had left his canoe, and where he expected the coming of the Sheep-shearer ; conscience-struck by the breach of his promise to his dying Mauria, and in a state of agonising anxiety with respect to the lowing patient in the cow-house.

He was soon after rejoined by Connor-of-the-Sheep.

" There is one way," said he, " of saving your cow—but you must lose one of your childer if you wish'to save it."

" O Heaven presarve uz, sir, how is that, if you plase ? "

" You must go home," said the Sheep-shearer, " and say nothen to anybody, but fix in your mind which o' your three childer you'll give for the cow ; an when you do that, look in his eyes, an he'll sneeze, an don't you bless him, for the world. Then look in his eyes again, an he'll sneeze again, an still don't think o' blessen him, be any mains. The third time you'll look in his eyes he'll sneeze a third time—an if you don't bless him the third time, he'll die—but your cow will live."

" An this is the only cure you have to gi' me ? " exclaimed

Phadrig, his indignation at the moment overcoming his natural timidity.

"The only cure.—It was by a dale to do I could prevail on them to let you make the choice itself."

Phadrig declared stoutly against this decree, and even threw out some hints that he would try whether or no Shaun Lauther, or Strong John, a young rival of the sheep-shearing fairy doctor, might be able to make a better bargain for him with the "gentlemen."

"Shaun Lauther!" exclaimed Connor-of-the-Sheep, in high anger—"Do you compare me to a man that never seen any more than yourself?—that never saw so much as the skirt of a dead man's shroud in the moonlight—or heard as much as the moanen of a sowlth¹ in an old graveyard? Do you know me?—Ask them that do—an they'll tell you how often I'm called up in the night, and kep posten over bog an mountain, till I'm ready to drop down with the sleep,—while few voices are heard, I'll be bail, at Shaun Lauther's windey—an little knollidge given him in his drames. It is then that I get mine. Didn't I say before the King o' France was beheaded that a blow would be struck wit an axe in that place, that the sound of it would be heard all over Europe?—An wasn't it true? Didn't I hear the shots that were fired at Gibaralthur, an tell it over in Dooly's forge, that the place was relieved that day?—an didn't the news come afterwards in a month's time that I toul't nothen but the truth?"

Phadrig had nothing to say in answer to this overwhelming list of interrogatories—but to apologise for his want of credulity, and to express himself perfectly satisfied.

With a heavy heart he put forth in his canoe upon the water and prepared to return. It was already twilight, and as he glided along the peaceful shores he ruminated mournfully within his mind on the course which he should pursue. The loss of the cow would be, he considered, almost equivalent to total ruin—and the loss of any one of his lovely children was a probability which he could hardly bear to dwell on for a moment. Still it behoved him to weigh the matter well. Which of them, now—supposing it possible that he could think of sacrificing any—which of them would he select for the purpose? The choice was a hard one. There was little Mauria, a fair-haired, blue-eyed little girl—but he could not, for an instant, think of losing her, as she happened to be named after his first wife; her brother, little

¹ Bodiless spirit.

Shamus, was the least useful of the three, but he was the youngest—"the child of his old age—a little one!" his heart bled at the idea; he would lose the cow, and the pig along with it, before he would harm a hair of the darling infant's head. He thought of Patcy—and he shuddered and leaned heavier on his oars, as if to flee away from the horrible doubt which stole into his heart with that name. It must be one of the three, or the cow was lost for ever. The two first-mentioned he certainly would not lose—and Patcy! Again he bade the fiend begone, and trembling in every limb, made the canoe speed rapidly over the tide in the direction of his home.

He drew the little vessel ashore and proceeded towards his cabin. They had been waiting supper for him, and he learned with renewed anxiety that the object of his solicitude, the milch-cow, had rather fallen away than improved in her condition during his absence. He sat down in sorrowful silence with his wife and children to their humble supper of potatoes and thick milk.

He gazed intently on the features of each of the young innocents as they took their places on the saggan chairs that flanked the board. Little Mauria and her brother Shamus looked fresh, mirthful, and blooming from their noisy play in the adjoining paddock, while their elder brother, who had spent the day at school, wore—or seemed, to the distempered mind of his father, to wear a look of sullenness and chagrin. He was thinner, too, than most boys of his age—a circumstance which Phadrig had never remarked before. It might be the first indications of his poor mother's disease, consumption, that were beginning to declare themselves in his constitution; and if so, his doom was already sealed—and whether the cow died or not, Patcy was certain to be lost. Still the father could not bring his mind to resolve on any settled course, and their meal proceeded in silence.

Suddenly the latch of the door was lifted by some person outside, and a neighbour entered to inform Phadrig that the agent to his landlord had arrived in the adjacent village for the purpose of driving matters to extremity against all those tenants who remained in arrear. At the same moment, too, a low moan of anguish from the cow outside announced the access of a fresh paroxysm of her distemper, which it was very evident the poor animal could never come through in safety.

In an agony of distress and horror the distracted father laid his clenched fingers on the table, and looked fixedly in the eyes of the unsuspecting Patcy. The child sneezed, and Phadrig closed his lips hard, for fear a blessing might escape them. The child at the same time, he observed, looked paler than before.

Fearful lest the remorse which began to awake within his heart might overstay his resolution, and prevent the accomplishment of his unnatural design, he looked hurriedly a second time into the eyes of the little victim. Again the latter sneezed, and again the father, using a violent effort, restrained the blessing which was struggling at his heart. The poor child drooped his head upon his bosom, and letting the untasted food fall from his hand, looked so pale and mournful as to remind his murderer of the look which his mother wore in dying.

It was long—very long—before the heart-struck parent could prevail on himself to complete the sacrifice. The visitor departed ; and the first beams of a full moon began to supplant the faint and lingering twilight which was fast fading in the west. The dead of the night drew on before the family rose from their silent and comfortless meal. The agonies of the devoted animal now drew rapidly to a close, and Phadrig still remained tortured by remorse on the one hand, and by selfish anxiety on the other.

A sudden sound of anguish from the cow-house made him start from his seat. A third time he fixed his eyes on those of his child—a third time the boy sneezed—but here the charm was broken.

Milly Rue, looking with surprise and tenderness on the fainting boy, said, “Why, then, Heaven bless you, child !—it must be a cold you caught, you’re sneezed so often.”

Immediately the cow sent forth a bellow of deep agony, and expired ; and at the same moment a low and plaintive voice outside the door was heard, exclaiming, “And Heaven bless you, Milly ! and the Almighty bless you, and spare you a long time over your children !”

Phadrig staggered back against the wall—his blood froze in his veins—his face grew white as death—his teeth chattered—his eyes stared—his hair moved upon his brow, and the chilling damp of terror exuded over all his frame. He recognised the voice of his first wife ; and her pale, cold eye met his at that moment, as her shade flitted by the window in the thin moonlight, and darted on him a glance of mournful reproach. He covered his eyes with his hands, and sunk, senseless, into a chair ; while the affrighted Milly, and Patcy, who at once assumed his glowing health and vigour, hastened to his assistance. They had all heard the voice, but no one saw the shade nor recognised the tone excepting the conscience-smitten Phadrig.

CHARLES JAMES LEVER

1806-1872

A HERO-WORSHIPPER

JEAN PAUL tells us that there never was a nature yet formed without its vein of romance — that the most realistic and commonplace people we have ever met have their moods of romance, and that the cord, however little we may suspect it, runs through the woof of all humanity.

I am not able to affirm that he is right ; but certainly a little incident which has just occurred to me leads me to believe that there are cases of the affection in natures and temperaments in which nothing would have led me to suspect them. I need not be told that it is the men who have a most worldly character who are often seen marrying portionless wives ; that traits of self-sacrifice and devotion are being continually displayed by cold, ungenial, and, to all seeming, unimpressible people. What I was not prepared for was to find that hero-worship could find a place in the heart of a hard, money-getting, money-lending fellow, whose ordinary estimate of humanity was based less on what they were than what they had. I own that I had no other clue to the man's nature than that furnished by a few lines of a newspaper advertisement, which set forth his readiness to advance sums from one hundred to five hundred pounds on mere personal security, and at a most moderate rate of interest. And though the former amounted to obligations, the breach of which would have reduced one to bondage, and the latter varied from eighty to a hundred and thirty per cent, he was so pleasant-looking, so chatty, so genially alive to the difficulties that beset youth, so forgivingly merciful to wasteful habits and ways, that I took to him from the moment I saw him, and signed my four bills for fifty each, and took up my hundred and eighteen pounds off the table with the feeling that at last I had found in an utter stranger that generous trustfulness and liberality I had in vain looked for amongst kindred and relatives.

We had a pint of madeira to seal the bargain. He told me in a whisper it was a priceless vintage. I believe him. On a rough calculation, I think every glass I took of it cost me forty-seven pounds some odd shillings. It is not, however, to speak of this event that I desire here. Mr. Nathan Joel and I ceased after a while to be the dear friends we swore to be over that madeira. The history of those four bills, too complicated to relate, became disagreeable. There were difficulties—there were renewals—there were protests—and there was a writ. Nathan Joel was—no matter what. I got out of his hands after three years by ceding a reversion worth five times my debt, with several white hairs in my whiskers, and a clearer view of gentlemen of the Jewish persuasion than I had ever picked up out of Ecclesiasticus.

A good many years rolled over—years in which I now and then saw mention of Mr. Joel as a plaintiff or an opposing creditor—once or twice as assignee, too. He was evidently thriving. Men were living very fast, smashes were frequent, and one can imagine the coast of Cornwall rather a lucrative spot after a stormy equinox. I came abroad, however, and lost sight of him; a chance mention, perhaps, in a friend's letter, how he had fallen into Joel's hands—that Joel advanced or refused to advance the money—something about cash, was all that I knew of him, till t'other evening the landlord of the little inn near my villa called up to ask if I knew anything of a certain Mr. Nathan Joel, who was then at his inn, without baggage, money, papers, or effects of any kind, but who, on hearing my name, cried out with ecstasy, "Ah! he knows me. You've only to ask Mr. O'Dowd who I am, and he'll satisfy you at once."

"So," thought I, "Joel! the Lord hath delivered thee into my hands, and now, what sort of vengeance shall I take? Shall I ignore you utterly, and declare that your claim to my acquaintance is a gross and impudent fraud? Shall I tell the innkeeper I disown you?" If this was my first thought, it soon gave way—it was so long since the rascal had injured me, and I had cursed him very often for it since then. It was his nature too; that also ought to be borne in mind. When leeches cease sucking they die, and very probably money-lenders wither and dry up when they are not abstracting our precious metals.

"I'll go over and see if it be the man I know," said I, and set off at once towards the inn. As I went along, the innkeeper told me how the stranger had arrived three nights back, faint, weary, and exhausted, saying that the guide refused to accompany him after he entered the valley, and merely pointed out the road and left him. "This much I got out of him," said the landlord, "but he is not inclined to say more, but sits there wringing his hands, and moaning most piteously."

Joel was at the window as I came up, but seeing me he came to the door. "Oh, Mr. O'Dowd," cried he, "befriend me this once, sir. Don't bear malice, nor put your foot on the fallen, sir. Do pity me, sir, I beseech you."

The wretched look of the poor devil pleaded for him far better than his words. He was literally in rags, and such rags, too, as seemed to have once been worn by another, for he had a brown peasant jacket and a pair of goatskin breeches, and a pair of shoes fastened round his ankles with leather thongs.

"So," said I, "you have got tired of small robberies and taken to the wholesale line. When did you become a highwayman?"

"Ah, sir," cried he, "don't be jocose, don't be droll. This is too pitiful a case for laughter."

I composed my features into a semblance of decent gravity, and after a little while induced him to relate his story, which ran thus :

Mr. Joel, it appeared, who for some thirty years of life had taken a very practical view of humanity, estimating individuals pretty much like scrip, and ascribing to them what value they might bring in the market, had suddenly been seized with a most uncommon fervour for Victor Emmanuel, the first impulse being given by a "good thing he had done in Piedmontese fives," and a rather profitable investment he had once made in the Cavour Canal. In humble gratitude for these successes, he had bought a print of the burly monarch, whose bullet head and bristling moustaches stared fiercely at him from over the fireplace, till by mere force of daily recurrence he grew to feel for the stern soldier a sentiment of terror dashed with an intense admiration.

"Talk of Napoleon, sir," he would say, "he's a humbug—an imposition—a wily, tricky, intriguing dodger. If you want a great man, a man that never knew fear, a man that is above all flimsy affectations, a man of the heroic stamp—there he is for you !

"As for Garibaldi, he's not to be compared to him. Garibaldi was an adventurer, and made adventure a career ; but here's a king ; here's a man who has a throne, who was born in a palace, descended from a long line of royal ancestors, and instead of giving himself up to a life of inglorious ease and self-indulgence, he mounts his horse and heads a regiment, sir. ~~He takes to the field~~ like the humblest soldier in his rank, goes out, thrashes the Austrians, drives them out of Milan, hunts them over the plains of Lombardy, and in seven days raises the five per cents from fifty-one and a half to eighty-two and a quarter 'for the account.' Show me the equal of that in history, sir. There's not another man in Europe could have done as much for the market."

His enthusiasm knew no bounds ; he carried a gold piece of twenty francs, with the King's image, to his watch-chain, and wore small coins with the cross of Savoy in his breast, as shirt-studs. An ardour intense as this is certain to bear its effects. Mr. Joel had often promised himself a trip to the Continent, of which he knew nothing beyond Paris. He took, then, the season of autumn, when the House was up, and money-lending comparatively dull, and came abroad. He told his friends he was going to Vichy ; he affected a little gout. It was a disease gentlemen occasionally permitted themselves, and Mr. Joel was a rising man, and liked to follow the lead of persons of condition. Very different, however, was his object ; his real aim was to see the great man whose whole life and actions had taken such an intense hold on his imagination. To see him, to gaze on him, to possess himself fully of the actual living traits of the heroic sovereign ; and if by any accident, by any happy chance, by any of those turns of capricious fortune which now and then elevate men into a passing greatness, to get speech of him !—this Mr. Joel felt would be an operation more overwhelmingly entrancing than if Spanish bonds were to be paid off in full, or Poyais fives to be quoted at par in the market.

It is not impossible that Mr. Joel believed his admiration for the Re Galantuomo gave him a bona fide and positive claim on that monarch's regard. This is a delusion by no means rare : it possesses a large number of people, and influences them in their conduct to much humbler objects of worship than a king on his throne. Sculptors, authors, and painters know something of what I mean, and not uncommonly come to hear how ungraciously they are supposed to have responded to an admiration of which it is possible they never knew, and which it would be very excusable in them if they never valued. The worshipper, in fact, fancies that the incense he sends up as smoke should come back to him in some shape substantial. However this may be, and I am not going to persist further on my reader's attention, Mr. Joel got to imagine that Victor Emmanuel would have felt as racy an enjoyment at meeting with him, as he himself anticipated he might experience in meeting the King. It goes a very long way in our admiration of any one to believe that the individual so admired has a due and just appreciation of ourselves. We start at least with one great predisposing cause of love—an intense belief in the good sense and good taste of the object of our affections.

Fully persuaded, then, that the meeting would be an event of great enjoyment to each, the chief difficulty was to find a "mutual friend," as the slang has it, to bring them into the desired relations.

This was really difficult. Had King Victor Emmanuel been an industrial monarch, given to cereals, or pottery, gutta-percha, cotton, or corrugated iron, something might have been struck out to present him with as pretext for an audience. Was he given to art, or devoted to some especial science?—a bust, a bronze, or a medal might have paved the way to an interview. The King, however, had no such leanings, and whatever his weaknesses, there were none within the sphere of the money-changer's attributions; and as Mr. Joel could not pretend that he knew of a short cut to Venice, or a secret path that led to the Vatican, he had to abandon all hopes of approaching the monarch by the legitimate roads.

"See him I must, speak to him I will," were, however, the vows he had registered in his own heart, and he crossed the Alps with this firm resolve, leaving, as other great men before him have done, time and the event to show the way where the goal had been so firmly fixed on.

At Turin he learned the King had just gone to Ancona to open a new line of railroad. He hastened after him, and arrived the day after the celebration to discover that His Majesty had left for Brindisi. He followed to Brindisi, and found the King had only stopped there an hour, and then pursued his journey to Naples. Down to Naples went Mr. Joel at once, but to his intense astonishment, nobody there had heard a word of the King's arrival. They did not, indeed, allege the thing was impossible; but they slyly insinuated that, if His Majesty had really come, and had not thought proper to make his arrival matter of notoriety, they, as Italians, Neapolitans surtout, knew good manners better than to interfere with a retirement it was their duty to respect. This they said with a sort of half-droll significance that puzzled Mr. Joel much, for he had lived little in Italy, and knew far more about Cremorne than the Casino!

Little dubious sentences, shallow insinuations, half-laughing obscurities, were not weapons to repel such a man as Joel. His mind was too steadfastly intent on its object to be deterred by such petty opposition. He had come to see the King, and see him he would. This same speech he made so frequently, so publicly, and so energetically, that at the various cafés which he frequented, no sooner was he seen to enter than some stranger to him—all were strangers—would usually come up in the most polite manner, and express a courteous hope that he had been successful, and had either dined with His Majesty or passed the evening with him. It is needless to say that the general impression was that poor Mr. Joel was a lunatic, but as his form of the malady seemed mild and inoffensive, his case was one entirely for compassion and pity.

A few, however, took a different view. They were of the police, and consequently they regarded the incident professionally. To their eyes, Joel was a Mazzinian, and came out specially to assassinate the King. It is such an obvious thing to the official mind that a man on such an errand would attract every notice to his intentions beforehand, that they not alone decided Joel to be an intended murderer, but they kept a strict record of all the people he accidentally addressed, all the waiters who served, and all the hackney cabmen who drove him, while the telegraphic wires of the whole kingdom vibrated with one name, asking, Who is Joel ? trace Joel ; send some one to identify Joel. Little poor Joel knew all this time that he had been photographed as he sat eating his oysters, and that scraps of his letters were pasted on a large piece of pasteboard in the Ministry of Police, that his hand-writing might be shown under his varied attempts to disguise it.

One evening he sat much later than was his wont at a little open-air café of the St. Lucia quarter. The sky was gloriously starlit, and the air had all the balmy softness of the delicious south. Joel would have enjoyed it and the cool drink before him intensely, if it were not that his disappointed hopes threw a dark shadow over everything, and led him to think of all that his journey had cost him in cash, and all in the foregone opportunities of discounts and usuries.

A frequenter of the café, with whom he had occasionally exchanged greetings, sat at the same table ; but they said little to each other, the stranger being evidently one not given to much converse, and rather disposed to the indulgence of his own thoughts in silence.

Charles Deves

"Is it not strange," said Joel, after a long pause, "that I must go back without seeing him?"

A half-impatient grunt was all the reply, for the stranger was well weary of Joel and his sorrows.

"One would suppose that he really wanted to keep out of my way, for up to this moment no one can tell me if he be here or not."

Another grunt.

"It is not that I have left anything undone, Heaven knows. There isn't a quarter of the town I have not walked, day and night, and his is not a face to be mistaken; I'd know him at a glance."

"And what in the devil's name do you want with him when you have seen him?" exclaimed the other, angrily. "Do you imagine that a king of Italy has nothing better to do with his time than grant audiences to every idle John Bull whose debts or doctors have sent him over the Alps?" This rude speech was so fiercely delivered, and with a look and tone so palpably provocative, that Joel at once perceived his friend intended to draw him into a quarrel, so he finished off his liquor, took up his hat and cane, and with a polite felice sera, Signor, was about to withdraw.

"Excuse me," said the stranger, rising, with a manner at once obsequious and apologetic. "I entreat you to forgive my rude and impatient speech. I was thinking of something else, and forgot myself. Sit down for one moment, and I will try and make you a proper reparation—a reparation you will be satisfied with. You want to see the King, and you desire to speak with him: both can be done with a little courage; and when I say this, I mean rather presence of mind—aplomb, as the French say—than anything like intrepidity or daring. Do you possess the quality I speak of?"

"It is my precise gift—the essential feature of my character," cried Joel in ecstasy.

"This, then, is the way—and mind I tell you this secret on the faith that as an English gentleman you preserve it inviolate—'parole Inglese,' is a proverb with us, and we have reason to believe that it deserves its signification."

Joel swore to observe the bond, and the other continued:

"The King, it is needless to tell you, detests state and ceremonial; he abhors courtly etiquette, and the life of a palace is to him the slavery of the galleys. His real pleasure is the society of a few intimates, whom he treats as equals, and with whom he discourses in the rough dialect of Piedmont, as it is talked in the camp by his soldiers. Even this amount of liberty is, however, sometimes not sufficient for this bold native spirit ; he longs for more freedom—for, in fact, that utter absence of all deference, all recognition of his high estate, which followers never can forget ; and to arrive at this, he now and then steals out at night and gains the mountains, where, with a couple of dogs and a rifle, he will pass two, three, perhaps four days, sharing the peasant's fare and his couch, eating the coarsest food, and sleeping on straw, with a zest that shows what a veritable type of the medieval baron this Count of Savoy really is, and by what a mistake it is that he belongs to an age where the romance of such a character is an anachronism !

“ You may feel well astonished that nobody could tell you where he is—whether here or at Turin, at Bologna, at Florence, or Palermo. The fact is, they don't know ; that's the real truth—not one of them knows ; all they are aware of is that he is off—away on one of those escapades on which it would be as much as life is worth to follow him ; and there is La Marmora, and there sits Minghetti, and yonder Della Rovere, not daring to hint a syllable as to the King's absence, nor even to hazard a guess above a whisper as to when he will come back again. Now I can tell you where he is—a mere accident put me in possession of the secret. A fattore of my brother's came up yesterday from the Terri di Lavoro, and told how a strange man, large, strong-boned, and none over bland-looking, had been quail-shooting over the Podere for the last two days ; he said he was a wonderful shot, but cared nothing about his game, which he gave freely away to any one he met. I made him describe him accurately, and he told me how he wore a tall high-crowned hat—a ‘calabrese’ as they call it—with a short peacock's feather, a brown jacket all covered with little buttons, leather small-clothes ending above the knees, which were naked, light gaiters half-way up the leg, his gun slung at his back, pistols in his belt, and a couteau-de-chasse without a scabbard hung by a string to his waist-belt ; he added that he spoke little, and that little in a strange dialect, probably Roman or from the Marches.

“ By a few other traits he established the identity of one whose real rank and condition he never had the slightest suspicion of. Now, as the King is still there, and as he told the Paroco of the little village at Catanzaro that he'd send him some game for his Sunday dinner, which he meant to partake of with him, you have only to set out to-night, reach Nola, where, with the aid of a pony and a carratella, you will make your way to Raniglia, after which, three miles of a brisk mountain walk—nothing to an Englishman—you'll arrive at Catanzaro, where there is a little inn. He calls there every evening, coming down the valley from St. Agata, and if you would like to meet him casually, as it were, you have only to set out a little before sunset and stroll up the gorge; there you'll find him." The stranger went on to instruct Mr. Joel how he should behave to the distinguished unknown—how, while carefully avoiding all signs of recognition, he should never forget that he was in the presence of one accustomed to the most deferential respect.

"Your manner," said he, "must be an artful blending of easy politeness with a watchful caution against over-familiarity; in fact, try to make him believe that you never suspect his great rank, and at the same time take care that in your own heart you never forget it. Not a very easy thing to do, but the strong will that has sent you so far will doubtless supply the way to help you further"; and with a few more such friendly counsels he wished Joel success and a good-night, and departed.

Mr. Joel took his place in the "rotondo" of the diligence—no other was vacant—and set off that night in company with two priests, a gendarme, and a captured galley-slave, who was about to show the officers of justice where a companion of his flight had sought concealment. The company ate and drank, smoked villainous tobacco, and sang songs all night, so that when Joel reached Nola he was so overcome with fatigue, headache, and sickness, that he had to take to bed, where the doctor who was sent for bled him twice, and would have done so four or five times more, if the patient, resisting with the little strength left him, had not put him out of the room and locked the door, only opening it to creep downstairs and escape from Nola for ever. He managed with some difficulty to get a place in a baroccino to Raniglia, and made the journey surrounded with empty wine-flasks, which required extreme care and a very leisurely pace, so that the distance, which was but eighteen miles, occupied nearly as many hours. It took him a full day to recruit at Raniglia, all the more since the rest of the journey must be made on foot.

"I own, sir," said Mr. Joel, whom I now leave to speak for himself, "it was with a heavy heart I arose that morning and thought of what was before me. I had already gone through much fatigue and considerable illness, and I felt that if any mishap should befall me in that wild region, with its wild-looking semi-savage inhabitants, the world would never hear more of me. It was a sad way to finish a life which had not been altogether unsuccessful, and I believe I shed tears as I fastened on my knapsack and prepared for the road. A pedlar kept me company for two miles, and I tried to induce him to go on the whole way with me to Catanzaro, but he pointed to his pack, and said, ' There are folk up there who help themselves too readily to such wares as I carry. I'd rather visit Catanzaro with an empty pack than a full one.' He was curious to learn what led me to visit the place, and I told him it was to see the fine mountain scenery and the great chestnut and cork woods of which I had heard so much. He only shook his head in reply. I don't know whether he disbelieved me, or whether he meant that the journey would scarce repay the fatigue. I arrived at Catanzaro about three in the afternoon. It was a blazing hot day—the very air seemed to sparkle with the fiery sun's rays, and the village, in regular Italian fashion, was on the very summit of a mountain, around which other mountains of far greater height were grouped in a circle. Every house was shut up, the whole population was in bed, and I had as much difficulty in getting admission to the inn as if I had come at midnight."

I will not trouble my reader to follow Mr. Joel in his description of or comment upon Italian village life, nor ask him to listen to the somewhat lengthy dialogue that took place between him and the priest, a certain Don Lertoro, a most miserable, half-famished fellow, with the worst countenance imaginable, and a vein of ribaldry in his talk that, Mr. Joel declared, the most degraded creature might have been ashamed of.

By an artful turn of the conversation, Joel led the priest to talk of the strangers who occasionally came up to visit the mountain, and at last made bold to ask, as though he had actually seen him, who was the large, strong-boned man, with a rifle slung behind him : he did not look like a native of these parts.

" Where did you meet him ? " asked the priest with a furtive look.

" About a mile from this," said Joel ; " he was standing on the rock over the bridge as I crossed the torrent."

" Che Bestia ! " muttered Don Lertoro, angrily ; but whether the compliment was meant for Joel or the unknown did not appear. Unwilling to resume the theme, however, he affected to busy himself about getting some salad for supper, and left Joel to himself.

While Joel sat ruminating, in part pleasantly, over the craft of his own address, and in part dubiously, thinking over Don Lertoro's exclamation, and wondering if the holy man really knew who the stranger was, the priest returned to announce the supper.

By Joel's account, a great game of fence followed the meal, each pushing the other home with very searching inquiries, but Joel candidly declaring that the Don, shrewd as he was, had no chance with him, insomuch as that, while he completely baffled the other as to what led him there, how long he should remain, and where go to afterwards, he himself ascertained that the large heavy-boned man with the rifle might usually be met every evening about sunset in the gorge coming down from St. Agata ; in fact, there was a little fountain about three miles up the valley which was a favourite spot of his to eat his supper at—" a spot easily found," said the priest, " for there are four cypress trees at it, and on the rock overhead you'll see a wooden cross, where a man was murdered once."

This scarcely seemed to Joel's mind as a very appetising element ; but he said nothing, and went his way. As the day was drawing to a close, Mr. Joel set out for the fountain. The road, very beautiful and picturesque as it was, was eminently lonely. After leaving the village he never saw a human being ; and though the evening was deliciously fine, and the wild flowers at either side scented the air, and a clear rivulet ran along the roadside with a pleasant murmur, there was that in the solitude and silence, and the tall peaked mountains, lone and grim, that terrified and appalled him. Twice was he so overcome that he almost determined to turn back and abandon the expedition.

Onward, however, he went, encouraging himself by many little flatteries and compliments to his own nature. How bold he was ! how original ! how unlike other money-lenders ! what manifest greatness there must be somewhere in the temperament of one like him, who could thus leave home and country, security, and the watchful supervision of Scotland Yard, to come into the wild mountains of Calabria, just to gratify an intellectual craving ! These thoughts carried him over miles of the way, and at last he came in sight of the four cypress trees ; and as he drew nigh, sure enough there was the little wooden cross standing out against the sky ; and while he stopped to look at it, a loud voice, so loud as to make him start, shouted out, "Alto là—who are you ? "

Mr. Joel looked about him on every side, but no one was to be seen.

He crossed the road, and came back again, and for a moment he seemed to doubt whether it was not some trick of his own imagination suggested the cry, when it was repeated still louder ; and now his eyes caught sight of a tall, high-crowned hat, rising above the rank grass on a cliff over the road, the wearer being evidently lying down on the sward. Joel had but time to remove his hat courteously, when the figure sprang to his feet, and revealed the person of an immense man. He looked gigantic on the spot he stood on, and with his stern, flushed features, and enormous moustaches, turned fiercely upwards at the points, recalled to Mr. Joel the well-known print over his chimney-piece at home. "Where are you going ?" cried he, sternly.

"Nowhere in particular, sir. Strolling to enjoy my cigar," replied Joel, trembling.

"Wait a moment," said the other, and came clattering down the cliff ; his rifle, his pistols, and his ammunition pouches making a terrific uproar as he came.

"You came from Catanzaro—were there any gendarmes there when you left ?"

"None, sire : not one," said Joel, who was so overcome by the dignity of the gentleman that he forgot all his intended reserve.

"No lies, no treachery, or, by the precious tears of the Madonna, I'll blow your brains out."

"Your Majesty may believe every word I utter in the length and breadth of the Peninsula ; you have not a more devoted worshipper."

"Did you see the priest, Don Lertoro ?"

"Yes, sire ; it was he told me where I should find Your Majesty, at the well, here, under the cypress trees."

"Scioccone !" cried the stranger ; but whether the epithet was meant for Joel or the cure did not appear. A very long and close cross-examination ensued, in which Joel was obliged not merely to explain who he was, whence he came, and what he came for, but to narrate a variety of personal circumstances which at the time it seemed strange His Majesty would care to listen to—such as the amount of money he had with him, how much more he had left behind at Naples, how he had no friends in that capital, nor any one like to interest themselves about him if he should get into trouble, or require to be assisted in any way. Apparently the King was satisfied with all his replies, for he finished by inviting him to partake of some supper with him ; and, producing a small basket from under the brushwood, he drew forth a couple of fowls, some cheese, and a flask of wine. It was not until he had drunk up three large goblets of the wine that Joel found himself sufficiently courageous to be happy. At last, however, he grew easy, and even familiar, questioning His Majesty about the sort of life he led, and asking how it was that he never fell into the hands of brigands.

Nothing could be more genial or good-humoured than the King ; he was frankness itself ; he owned that his life might possibly be better ; that, on the whole, his father confessor was obliged to bear a good deal from him ; and that all his actions were not in strictest conformity with church discipline.

" You ought to marry again ; I am persuaded, sir," said Joel, " it would be the best thing you could do."

" I don't know," said the other, thoughtfully. " I have a matter of seven wives as it is, and I don't want any more."

" Ah ! Your Majesty, I guess what you mean," said Joel, winking ; " but that's not what I would suggest. I mean some strong political connection—some alliance with a royal house, Russian or Bavarian, if, indeed, Austrian were not possible."

" On the whole," said Joel, " I found that he didn't much trust any one ; he thought ill of Louis Napoleon, and called him some hard names ; he was not over-complimentary to the Pope ; and as for Garibaldi, he said they had once been thick as thieves, but of late they had seen little of each other, and, for his part, he was not sorry for it. All this time, sir," continued Joel, " His Majesty was always fancying something or other that I wore or carried about me ; first it was my watch, which I felt much honoured by his deigning to accept ; then it was my shirt-studs, then my wrist-buttons, then my tobacco-pouch, then my pipe, a very fine meerschaum, and at last, to my intense astonishment, my purse, whose contents he actually emptied on the table, and counted out before me, asking me if I had not any more about me, either in notes or bills, for it seemed a small sum for a ' Milordo,' so he called me, to travel with.

" Whatever I had, however, he took it—took every carlino of it—saying, ' There's no getting any change up here—there are no bankers, my dear Signor Joel ; but we'll meet at Naples one of these days, and set all these things to rights.'

" I suppose the wine must have been far stronger than I thought ; perhaps, too, drinking it in the open air made it more heady ; then the novelty of the situation had its effect—it's not every day that a man sits hobnobbing with a king. Whatever the reason, I became confused and addled, and my mind wandered. I forgot where I was. I believe I sang something—I am not sure what—and the King sang, and then we both sang together ; and at last he whistled with a silver call-whistle that he wore, and he gave me in charge to a fellow—a ragged rascally-looking dog he was—to take me back to Catanzaro ; and the scoundrel, instead of doing so, led me off through the mountains for a day and a half, and dropped me at last at Reccone, a miserable village, without tasting food for twelve hours. He made me change clothes with him, too, and take his dirty rags, this goat-skin vest and the rest of it, instead of my new tweed suit ; and then, sir, as we parted, he clapped me familiarly on the shoulder, and said, ‘ Mind me, amico mio, you’re not to tell the padrone, when you see him, that I took your clothes from you, or he’ll put a bullet through me. Mind that, or you’ll have to settle your scores with one of my brothers.’

“ ‘ By the padrone you perhaps mean the King,’ said I, haughtily.

“ ‘ King, if you like,’ said he, grinning ; ‘ we call him “ Ninco Nanco ” : and now that they’ve shot Pilone, and taken Stoppa, there’s not another brigand in the whole of Italy to compare with him.’ Yes, sir, out came the horrid truth. It was Ninco Nanco, the greatest monster in the Abruzzi, I had mistaken for Victor Emmanuel. It was to him I had presented my watch, my photograph, my seal-ring, and my purse with forty-two napoleons. Dirty, ragged, wretched, in tatters, and famished, I crept on from village to village till I reached this place yesterday evening, only beseeching leave to be let lie down and die, for I don’t think I’ll ever survive the shame of my misfortune, if my memory should be cruel enough to preserve the details.”

“ Cheer up, Joel ; the King is to review the National Guard to-day. I’ll take care that you shall have a good place to see him, and a good dinner afterwards.”

“ No, sir ; I’ll not go and look at him. Ninco Nanco has cured me of hero-worship. I’ll go back to town and see after the exchanges. The sovereigns that come from the mint are the only ones I mean to deal with from this day forward.”

JOSEPH SHERIDAN LE FANU
1814–1878

THE GHOST AND THE BONE-SETTER

Extract from the MS. papers of the late Rev. Francis Purcell of Drumcoolagh

I TELL the following particulars, as nearly as I can recollect them, in the words of the narrator. It may be necessary to observe that he was what is termed a well-spoken man, having for a considerable time instructed the ingenious youth of his native parish in such of the liberal arts and sciences as he found it convenient to profess—a circumstance which may account for the occurrence of several big words in the course of this narrative, more distinguished for euphonious effect than for correctness of application. I proceed, then, without further preface, to lay before you the wonderful adventures of Terry Neil.

“ Why, thin, ’tis a quare story, an’ as thrue as you’re sittin’ there ; and I’d make bould to say there isn’t a boy in the seven parishes could tell it better nor crickther than myself, for ’twas my father himself it happened to, an’ many’s the time I heerd it out iv his own mouth ; an’ I can say, an’ I’m proud av that same, my father’s word was as incredible as any squire’s oath in the counthry ; and so signs an’ if a poor man got into any unlucky throuble, he was the boy’id go into the court an’ prove ; but that doesn’t signify—he was as honest and as sober a man, barrin’ he was a little bit too partial to the glass, as you’d find in a day’s walk ; an’ there wasn’t the likes of him in the counthry round for nate labourin’ an’ baan diggin’ ; and he was mighty handy entirely for carpenter’s work, and mendin’ ould spudethrees, an’ the likes i’ that. An’ so he tuk up with bone-settin’, as was most nathural, for none of them could come up to him in mendin’ the leg iv a stool or a table ; an’ sure, there never was a bone-setter got so much custom—man an’ child, young an’ ould—there never was such breakin’ and mendin’ of bones known in the memory of man. Well, Terry Neil—for that was my father’s name—began to feel his heart growin’ light, and his purse heavy ; an’ he took a bit iv a farm in Squire Phelim’s ground, júst undher the ould castle, an' a pleasant little spot it was ; an' day an' mornin' poor crathurs not able to put a foot to the ground, with broken arms and broken legs, id be comin' ramblin' in from all quarters to have their bones spliced up. Well, yer honour, all this was as well as well could be ; but it was customary when Sir Phelim id go anywhere out iv the country, for some iv the tinants to sit up to watch in the ould castle, júst for a kind of compliment to the ould family—an' a mighty unplisant compliment it was for the tinants, for there wasn't a man of them but knew there was something quare about the ould castle. The neighbours had it that the squire's ould grandfather, as good a gentleman—God be with him—as I heer'd, as ever stood in shoe-leather, used to keep walkin' about in the middle iv the night, ever sinst he bursted a blood-vessel pullin' out a cork out iv a bottle, as you or I might be doin', and will too, please God—but that doesn't signify. So, as I was sayin', the ould squire used to come down out of the frame, where his picthur was hung up, and to break the bottles and glasses—God be merciful to us all—an' dthrink all he could come at—an' small blame to him for that same ; and then if any of the family id be comin' in, he id be up again in his place, looking as quite an' as innocent as if he didn't know anything about it—the mischievous ould chap.

“ Well, yer honour, as I was sayin', one time the family up at the castle was stayin' in Dublin for a week or two ; and so, as usual, some of the tinants had to sit up in the castle, and the third night it kem to my father's turn. ‘ Oh, tare an' ouns ! ’ says he unto himself, ‘ an' must I sit up all night, and that ould vagabone of a sperit, glory be to God,’ says he, ‘ serenadin' through the house, an' doin' all sorts iv mischief ? ’ However, there was no gettin' aff, and so he put a bould face on it, an' he went up at nightfall with a bottle of pottieen, and another of holy wather.

“ It was rainin' smart enough, an' the evenin' was darksome an' gloomy, when my father got in ; an' what with the rain he got, an' the holy wather he sprinkled on himself, it wasn't long till he had to swally a cup iv the pottieen, to keep the cowl'd out iv his heart. It was the ould steward, Lawrence Connor, that opened the door—and he an' my father wor always very great. So when he seen who it was, an' my father tould him how it was his turn to watch in the castle, he offered to sit up along with him ; an' you may be sure my father wasn't sorry for that same. So says Larry :

“ ‘ We’ll have a bit iv fire in the parlour,’ says he.

“ ‘ An’ why not in the hall ? ’ says my father, for he knew that the squire’s picthur was hung in the parlour.

“ ‘ No fire can be lit in the hall,’ says Lawrence, ‘ for there’s an ould jackdaw’s nest in the chimney.’

“ ‘ Oh, thin,’ says my father, ‘ let us stop in the kitchen, for it’s very unproper for the likes iv me to be sittin’ in the parlour,’ says he.

“ ‘ Oh, Terry, that can’t be,’ says Lawrence ; ‘ if we keep up the ould custom at all, we may as well keep it up properly,’ says he.

“ ‘ Divil sweep the ould custom ! ’ says my father—to himself, do ye mind, for he didn’t like to let Lawrence see that he was more afeard himself.

“ ‘ Oh, very well,’ says he. ‘ I’m agreeable, Lawrence,’ says he ; and so down they both wint to the kitchen, until the fire id be lit in the parlour—an’ that same wasn’t long doin’.

“ Well, yer honour, they soon wint up again, an’ sat down mighty comfortable by the parlour fire, and they begannd to talk, an’ to smoke, an’ to dhrink a small taste iv the pottieen ; and, moreover, they had a good rousin’ fire o’ bogwood and turf, to warm their shins over.

“ Well, sir, as I was sayin’, they kep’ convarsin’ an’ smokin’ together most agreeable, until Lawrence beginnd to get sleepy, as was but natthural for him, for he was an ould sarvint man, an’ was used to a great dale iv sleep.

“ ‘ Sure it’s impossible,’ says my father, ‘ it’s gettin’ sleepy you are ? ’

“ ‘ Oh, divil a taste,’ says Larry ; ‘ I’m only shuttin’ my eyes,’ says he, ‘ to keep out the parfume o’ the tibacky smoke, that’s makin’ them wather,’ says he. ‘ So don’t you mind other people’s business,’ says he, stiff enough, for he had a mighty high stomach av his own (rest his sowl), ‘ and go on,’ says he, ‘ with your story, for I’m listenin’,’ says he, shuttin’ down his eyes.

“ Well, when my father seen spakin’ was no use, he went on with his story. By the same token, it was the story of Jim Soolivan and his ould goat he was tellin’—an’ a plisant story it is—an’ there was so much divarsion in it, that it was enough to waken a dormouse, let alone to pervint a Christian goin’ asleep. But, faix, the way my father tould it, I believe there never was the likes heerd sinst nor before, for he bawled out every word av it, as if the life was fairly lavin’ him, thryin’ to keep ould Larry awake ; but, faix, it was no use, for the hoorsness came an him, an' before he kem to the end of his story Larry O'Connor began to snore like a bagpipes.

" ' Oh, blur an' agres,' says my father, ' isn't this a hard case,' says he, ' that ould villain, lettin' on to be my friend, and to go asleep this way, an' us both in the very room with a sperit,' says he. ' The crass o' Christ about us ! ' says he ; and with that he was goin' to shake Lawrence to waken him, but he just remimbered if he roused him, that he'd surely go off to his bed, an' lave him complately alone, an' that id be by far worse.

" ' Oh thin,' says my father, ' I'll not disturb the poor boy. It id be neither friendly nor good-nathured,' says he, ' to tormint him while he is asleep,' says he ; ' only I wish I was the same way myself,' says he.

" An' with that he began to walk up an' down, an' sayin' his prayers, until he worked himself into a sweat, savin' your presence. But it was all no good ; so he dthruunk about a pint of sperits, to compose his mind.

" ' Oh,' says he, ' I wish to the Lord I was as asy in my mind as Larry there. Maybe,' says he, ' if I thried I could go asleep ' ; an' with that he pulled a big armchair close beside Lawrence, an' settled himself in it as well as he could.

" But there was one quare thing I forgot to tell you. He couldn't help, in spite av himself, lookin' now an' thin at the picthur, an' he immediately obsarved that the eyes av it was follyin' him about, an' starin' at him, an' winkin' at him, wheriver he wint. ' Oh,' says he, when he seen that, ' it's a poor chance I have,' says he ; ' an' bad luck was with me the day I kem into this unforthunate place,' says he. ' But any way there's no use in bein' freckened now,' says he ; ' for if I am to die, I may as well parspire undaunted,' says he.

" Well, your honour, he thried to keep himself quite an' asy, an' he thought two or three times he might have wint asleep, but for the way the storm was groanin' an' creakin' through the great heavy branches outside, an' whistlin' through the ould chimleys iv the castle. Well, afther one great roarin' blast iv the wind, you'd think the walls iv the castle was just goin' to fall, quite an' clane, with the shakin' iv it. All av a suddint the storm stopt, as silent an' as quite as if it was a July evenin'. Well, your honour, it wasn't stopped blowin' for three minnites, before he thought he hard a sort iv a noise over the chimley-piece ; an' with that my father just opened his eyes the smallest taste in life an' sure enough he seen the ould squire gettin' out iv the picthur, for all the world as if he was throwin' aff his ridin' coat, until he stept out clane an' complate, out av the chimley-piece, an' thrun himself down an the floor. Well, the slieven ould chap—an' my father thought it was the dirtiest turn iv all—before he begannd to do anything out iv the way, he stopped for a while to listen wor they both asleep; an' as soon as he thought all was quite, he put out his hand an' tuk hould iv the whisky bottle, an' dhrank at laste a pint iv it. Well, your honour, when he tuk his turn out iv it, he settled it back mighty cute entirely, in the very same spot it was in before. An' he begannd to walk up an' down the room, lookin' as sober an' as solid as if he never done the likes at all. An' whinever he went apast my father, he thought he felt a great scent of brimstone, an' it was that that freckened him entirely; for he knew it was brimstone that was burned in hell, savin' your presence. At any rate, he often heerd it from Father Murphy, an' he had a right to know what belonged to it—he's dead since, God rest him. Well, your honour, my father was asy enough until the sperit kem past him; so close, God be marciful to us all, that the smell in the sulphur tuk the breath clane out iv him; an' with that he tuk such a fit iv coughin', that it al-a-most shuk him out iv the chair he was sittin' in.

" 'Ho, ho!' says the squire, stoppin' short about two steps aff, an' turnin' round facin' my father, 'is it you that's in it?—an' how's all with you, Terry Neil?'

" 'At your honour's sarvice,' says my father (as well as the fright id let him, for he was more dead than alive), 'an' it's proud I am to see your honour to-night,' says he.

" 'Terence,' says the squire, 'you're a respectable man' (an' it was throe for him), 'an' industrious, sober man, an' an example of inebriety to the whole parish,' says he.

" 'Thank your honour,' says my father, gettin' courage, 'you were always a civil-spoken gentleman, God rest your honour.'

" 'Rest my honour?' says the sperit (fairly gettin' red in the face with the madness), 'Rest my honour?' says he. 'Why, you ignorant spalpeen,' says he, 'you mane, niggardy ignoramus,' says he, 'where did you lave your manners?' says he. 'If I am dead, it's no fault iv mine,' says he; 'an' it's not to be thrun in my teeth at every hand's turn, by the likes iv you,' says he, stampin' his foot an the flure, that you'd think the boords id smash undther him.

“ ‘Oh,’ says my father, ‘I’m only a foolish, ignorant poor man,’ says he.

“ ‘You’re nothing else,’ says the squire ; ‘but any way,’ says he, ‘it’s not to be listenin’ to your goster, nor convarsin’ with the likes iv you, that I came up—down I mane,’ says he—(an’ as little as the mistake was, my father tuk notice iv it). ‘Listen to me now, Terence Neil,’ says he ; ‘I was always a good masther to Pathrick Neil, your grandfather,’ says he.

“ ‘ ‘Tis thrue for your honour,’ says my father. ‘And, moreover, I think I was always a sober, riglar gintleman,’ says the squire.

“ ‘That’s your name, sure enough,’ says my father (though it was a big lie for him, but he could not help it).

“ ‘Well,’ says the sperit, ‘although I was as sober as most men—at laste as most gintlemin,’ says he ; ‘an’ though I was at different periods a most extempory Christian, and most charitable and inhuman to the poor,’ says he ; ‘for all that I’m not as asy where I am now,’ says he, ‘as I had a right to expect,’ says he.

“ ‘An’ more’s the pity,’ says my father. ‘Maybe your honour id wish to have a word with Father Murphy ?’

“ ‘Hould your tongue, you misherable bliggard,’ says the squire ; ‘it’s not iv my sowl I’m thinkin’—an’ I wondther you’d have the impitence to talk to a gintleman consarnin’ his sowl ; and when I want that fixed,’ says he, slappin’ his thigh, ‘I’ll go to them that knows what belongs to the likes,’ says he. ‘It’s not my sowl,’ says he, sittin’ down opposite my father ; ‘it’s not my sowl that’s annoyin’ me most—I’m unasy on my right leg,’ says he, ‘that I bruk at Glenvarloch cover the day I killed black Barney.’ My father found out afther, it was a favourite horse that fell undher him, afther leapin’ the big fence that runs along by the glin. ‘I hope,’ says my father, ‘your honour’s not unasy about the killin’ iv him ?’

“ ‘Hould your tongue, ye fool,’ said the squire, ‘an’ I’ll tell you why I’m unasy on my leg,’ says he. ‘In the place where I spend most iv my time,’ says he, ‘except the little leisure I have for lookin’ about me here,’ says he, ‘I have to walk a great dale more than I was ever used to,’ says he, ‘and by far more than is good for me either,’ says he ; ‘for I must tell you,’ says he, ‘the people where I am is uncommonly fond iv cowld wather, for there is nothin’ betther to be had ; an’, moreover, the weather is hotter than is altogether plisant,’ says he ; ‘and I’m appinted,’ says he, ‘to assist in carryin’ the wather, an' gets a mighty poor share iv it myself,' says he, 'an' a mighty troublesome, wearin' job it is, I can tell you,' says he; 'for they're all iv them surprisin'ly dthry, an' dthinks it as fast as my legs can carry it,' says he; 'but what kills me intirely,' says he, 'is the wakeness in my leg,' says he, 'an' I want you to give it a pull or two to bring it to shape,' says he; 'and that's the long an' the short iv it,' says he.

" 'Oh, plase your honour,' says my father (for he didn't like to handle the sperit at all), 'I wouldn't have the impidence to do the likes to your honour,' says he; 'it's only to poor crathurs like myself I'd do it to,' says he.

" 'None iv your blarney,' says the squire. 'Here's my leg,' says he, cockin' it up to him—'pull it for the bare life,' says he; 'an' if you don't, by the immortal powers I'll not lave a bone in your carcish I'll not powdher,' says he.

" 'When my father heerd that, he seen there was no use in purtendin', so he tuk hould iv the leg, an' he kep' pullin' an' pullin', till the sweat, God bless us, beganned to pour down his face.

" 'Pull, you divil!' says the squire.

" 'At your sarvice, your honour,' says my father.

" 'Pull harder,' says the squire. My father pulled like the divil.

" 'I'll take a little sup,' says the squire, rachin' over his hand to the bottle, 'to keep up my courage,' says he, lettin' an to be very wake in himself intirely. But, as cute as he was, he was out here, for he tuk the wrong one. 'Here's to your good health, Terence,' says he; 'an' now pull like the very divil.' An' with that he lifted the bottle of holy wather, but it was hardly to his mouth, whin he let a screech out, you'd think the room id fairly split with it, an' made one chuck that sent the leg clane aff his body in my father's hands. Down wint the squire over the table, an' bang wint my father half-way across the room on his back, upon the flure. Whin he kem to himself the cheerful mornin' sun was shinin' through the windy shutthers, an' he was lyin' flat an his back, with the leg iv one of the great ould chairs pulled clane out iv the socket an' tight in his hand, pintin' up to the ceilin', an' ould Larry fast asleep, an' snorin' as loud as ever. My father wint that mornin' to Father Murphy, an' from that to the day of his death he never neglected confission nor mass, an' what he tould was better believed that he spake av it but seldom. An', as for the squire, that is the sperit, whether it was that he did not like his liquor, or by rason iv the loss iv his leg, he was never known to walk agin."

CANON P. A. SHEEHAN
1852-1913

A THOROUGH GENTLEMAN

SOME time towards the end of the Parliamentary session, 188-, I found myself in London, on the way to Switzerland. I was not long in the great Babylon when I knocked up against an old schoolmate, now developed into an august Member of the British Parliament. It was in the evening, the place was the Strand ; and I remember well what an impression it made upon me when, as we strolled up and down the crowded thoroughfare, he pointed out to me group after group of Irish Members moving quietly along in twos and threes, clearly strangers in a strange land. It was a day off (Wednesday, I think), and I expressed my surprise that they should not seize the opportunity to scatter themselves, and enjoy the hospitality of many houses which would be glad to open their doors to them. My friend smiled.

" There is not one house in London to-night," he said, " that would entertain them ; and what is more, not one of them would accept such entertainment if proffered. It is war time ; and in war you don't sit down to dinner with your enemies."

It impressed me deeply. My heart went out to these Irish guerilleros, isolated and banned on the London streets.

" That reminds me," said my friend, " you and I are not at war, though we had many a tough battle in days gone by. Come along here ; I know a cosy corner where we can dine."

We left the Strand, and he took me along until we came to a modest, but evidently quite new, little French café off Oxford Street. It was pretty full when we entered. There was but one table vacant, far over in a dim, dusky corner, and we at once made our way towards it.

" We get an excellent dinner here," he said, " and at a singularly moderate price."

He lifted his hand, and the waiter came over.

Just then a tall, straight, gentlemanly figure entered the room, and placing his hat upon a rack, he looked around inquiringly. My friend, the Member, caught his eye, and whispering to me :

"That's P——, one of our men, Member for the E—— Division, C—— County," he whistled, and put up his hand.

The gentleman, without divesting himself of his overcoat, came slowly towards us, and when he had come quite close, my friend discovered his mistake.

"I beg a thousand pardons," he said. "In the dusk I quite mistook you for a friend and Parliamentary colleague."

"A most happy mistake," said the gentleman, removing his gloves. "May I be allowed to take advantage of it? I perceive there is no other table unoccupied."

It was awkward; but what can an Irishman do but be civil? My friend said we would both be most happy to have his company, and he at once in a most peremptory, gentlemanly manner ordered soup.

He was quite tall, bald on the crown of his head; he wore a short thick beard, slightly silvered with grey, and he looked excessively delicate. His cheeks were sunken, the cheek-bones quite apparent, and his eyes glowed as the eyes of a consumptive patient enlarge and shine with the progress of the disease. There was a curious blending of hauteur and deference in his manner; and a strange odour exhaled from his clothes, which I could not for a considerable time define.

He took his soup rather too hastily, I thought; and then he rubbed his bread around and around the plate, and ate it almost ravenously.

"He has lived abroad," I thought. "That is not an English custom."

When the waiter brought fish, he sent back the tiny morsel, and looking at the carte, he said: "I see salmon here. Bring me a large slice of salmon, and sauce—mind, sauce!"

Then turning to my friend he said in an altered tone: "So I have the honour of dining with a Member of Parliament?" My friend bowed.

"I have been in pretty high society," he said, picking up some crumbs and eating them, "nay, I have even enjoyed Her Majesty's hospitality, but I have never aspired to be a Member of the Legislature. It is a great honour, sir, to be allowed to dine with you; and I perceive, or rather I presume, you are both Irish?"

"Yes, we are Irish," said my friend laconically.

"Now," said the stranger, taking up his fork and breaking the salmon cutlet before him, "I do not share the insular and narrow prejudices of my countrymen against the Irish. I have been lately the guest of one of your excellent countrymen. He maintained the national reputation for hospitality. In fact if I could complain of anything, it would be that he was almost too pressing in his attentions. But to resume. I am a travelled man ; I have seen all races and peoples and tongues ; and I have learned to distinguish—what, do you think ? Races ? No !—all races are alike. I have learned to distinguish a gentleman from a cad ! ”

Somehow, we felt flattered ; and we launched at once into a most amiable discussion on the peculiarities of nations and races ; and there was a singular unanimity in our opinions. We thoroughly agreed that there were gentlemen in every country, even amongst the Turks, and when these were mentioned, the stranger became quite heated.

“ The Turks ? ” he said. “ Why, they are the cream of civilisation. Every Turk is a gentleman. They are the only race which, as a race—I am not speaking of individuals merely—maintain dignity, reserve, courtesy. A Turk never presumes, is never disturbed, is always calm, serene, dignified. And if you want to see the perfection of family life, get, if you can, at Cairo or Alexandria, an invitation from some Sheik to his house, and there—well,” he continued, “ I must not tell. It would be ungentlemanly—a breach of hospitality.”

He ate ravenously, voraciously ; but I set it down to his Oriental experiences. He drank nothing, and refused the bottle of Margaux which my friend pushed towards him. “ He is a Mussulman,” I said to myself. “ See, he avoids wine, and he is so enthusiastic.”

In the intervals of the courses, he spoke as rapidly as he had eaten, giving us details of all his travels in Mexico, Guatemala, on the banks of the Ganges, and the Nile. He had marvellous powers of description, and when he talked about the charms of the Desert, the great dark night hanging down with its rich clusters of stars over the Bedouin tents, evening on the Ganges, the sun setting behind the Pyramids, etc., I began to feel that, after all, a man must travel to know. But, then, his pale, emaciated features, stooped shoulders, and short cough told another tale. “ You have gained by your travels,” I said, “ but you have lost somewhat. Your health appears to have suffered.”

“ Quite so,” he replied, “ I have suffered.”

“ I perceive,” said my friend, “ that you are using iodine.” The stranger’s fingers were stained a deep brownish red, and his finger-nails were rough and jagged.

“ Sir,” said he, “ you are a Sherlock Holmes. Every night, for many weeks, I have had to use tincture of iodine for my lungs.”

This gave me the clue to the singular odour I had noticed hanging around his clothes as he entered.

"And you are using creosote?" I remarked.

"Sir," he said, "you are a brother detective. Yes, I have been using creosote, or coal-tar in some form."

Just here the waiter came round, switching on the electric lamps. The stranger looked slightly disconcerted, and bending across the table he whispered: "You are in possession of the table, sir, and have the right to interfere. Would you kindly tell this waiter to leave us in the dusk? My eyes have suffered from the glare of the desert sands, and that abominable light is particularly hurtful."

The request seemed strange, but my friend complied.

"You don't wish for the light, sir?" the waiter said.

"No, we have light enough," said the Member.

"I beg your par'n, sir," said the waiter, "but this gentleman belongs to your party?"

"Well, ye—es," said the Member. "We have dined together."

"Oh, all right, sir," said the waiter. "We only wanted to know."

The stranger was not disconcerted in the least. He slewed his chair around, sipped his coffee carefully, lit a proffered cigar, and said: "Now, there's another instance of the vast gulf that separates Oriental from Occidental civilisation. You noticed that impertinent question? That would be impossible in the East; just as impossible as that a mere servant should be allowed, nay, compelled to wear the garments of civilisation, and these—the full dress of a gentleman. You perceive the incongruity? Now, in the East, a slave—and that cochon is but a slave—would have approached with deference, salaaming to the ground, lifted your right foot, and placed it on his head, salaamed again, and then protested that you were a son of the Prophet, that sunshine was your shadow, that your eyes lighted the stars at night, and that he, your most humble and adoring subject, would think himself privileged to die a thousand deaths at your bidding."

"But that's all bunkum," said my friend the Member.

"Bunkum? Yes," echoed the stranger. "I am not sure," he continued very slowly, as if he had been deeply pained at the expression, but was too gentlemanly to resent it, "that I would have used the expression. But it is expressive; and your remark is quite correct. But is not bunkum the oil of life? This old, decrepit, worn-out civilisation would have been shaken to pieces long ago, and after creaking and moaning enough to make angels or lost angels weep, would have collapsed and lain still for ever were it not for bunkum. What is 'Your Majesty?' Bunkum. 'Your Royal Highness?' Bunkum. 'Your Grace?' Bunkum. 'My Lord?' Bunkum. When the nurse takes the pink and puling baby, who has wandered hither from eternity, to the admiring father and calls it 'a cherub,' 'an angel' it is bunkum. And when the headstone declares that a paragon of all the virtues lies here, it is bunkum. Did it ever occur to you, my dear friend, as you sat on the green benches in the House of Commons and heard a Cabinet Minister address one of your party, which, as you know, he cordially detests, and would sweep into Gehenna without compunction as 'my honourable and learned friend,' that this was bunkum? The only person in your august assembly that is not a lay-figure is the Speaker. No one dare address bunkum to him. He is 'Sir'—no more; but that is the title of a gentleman."

My friend the Member was calmly chuckling to himself at this delightful attack on Society in general, and the Mother of Parliaments in particular.

"Where, then, comes in the difference between Oriental and Occidental bunkum?" continued the stranger, between every furious puff of his cigar.

"Mark! the expression is not mine. I hold you responsible for it. Well, the difference is, that the Orientals are consistent; you are not. The Oriental never forgets himself, never breaks into anger, is never insolent. He does not call you 'Son of the Prophet' to your face and grimace behind your back. He does not welcome you effusively to his house; and, when you are leaving, say: 'Praised be Allah, what a riddance!' He may sometimes, under great provocation, cheat you in a bargain, but it is always done in a gentlemanly manner; and if he does put laudanum in your coffee, at least he calls upon Allah to protect you. But here, whilst you retain all the bunkum—pardon me, the expression is your own—of the East, everything else is vulgar, plebeian, monkeyish; and it reveals itself in such awful bêtises as that wretched creature was just now guilty of. But here he comes again, the slave of the lamp and the napkin!"

The waiter approached and proffered to my friend the Member the bill on a salver. As he did so, I saw him give a searching look on the stranger. The latter threw aside the stump of his cigar, and reaching over he said eagerly: "Is my account here?"

"Yes," said the waiter irreverently; "the entire account is on that bill."

"Then I shall pay for all," said the stranger, fumbling in a side-pocket.

The Member had placed a sovereign on the salver and beckoned the waiter away.

"I cannot allow this, sir," said the stranger, deeply offended. "It would be most ungentlemanly to permit a perfect stranger to discharge my debts."

"I wouldn't have taken the liberty," said the Member, "but you didn't resent it when I said we belonged to the same party. Besides it is a way we Irish have."

"Yes, I perceive," said the gentlemanly stranger, and sank into a brown study.

The receipted bill was brought, the waiter tipped, and we stood up to depart, when, in a pitiful way, the stranger stopped us. "Gentlemen," he said, "please be seated one moment, if I may detain you."

He had turned away his head, and it sank low on his breast. The café was empty. The waiters had gone into the kitchen as there was nothing further to be done.

"Your generosity has overpowered me," he said at length. "I don't know where to begin my confession."

Then, as if he were doing a desperate thing and should do it quickly, he said: "You have entertained a gentleman, and—a gaol-bird. I had just come out of prison, starved, emaciated, dying, and—to die! For God is my witness, I was about to seek my bed to-night in the Thames. But, as I passed this place I said, 'I shall dine like a gentleman once more, and then——'"

He paused for a moment, as if trying to remember his feelings.

"You may ask why I was in gaol or a gaol-bird, which implies so much more. It were a tedious story; but I may say at once that I have never been guilty of an ungentlemanly act. I have never done anything beyond what is done every day and night by the élite of this city. But you will say I have lied to you, and that is not gentlemanly. No! I have not lied. I have equivocated. I said I had enjoyed Her Majesty's hospitality. So I have. I said that I had been entertained by one of your countrymen, and that he was too pressing in his attentions. It is true. Rourke, or Crooke, or something else, was my warder. I have said that I used iodine. It is true. But that stain," he pointed to his thumb and fingers, "is not iodine. It is oakum. And the prison odour that clings around me still is not creosote, as your learned friend conjectured, but the odour of tarred rope. You will object that it was not gentlemanly to come in here and order dinner, knowing that I had not the means of paying for it. Bismillah! Is it not done every day hundreds of times in this city by your greatest swells? No gentleman pays for such trifles as dinner or habiliments. He pays for a box at the opera, or a diamond; but for a dinner? Oh no! Of course I know that if I had not had the good fortune to meet you, I should have been flung out upon the pavement and copped instantly. But, then, why quarrel with good fortune? I never do. If I had been copped I should sleep to-night on a dry board instead of the slime of the river. That would have been one gain. But I would have lost an excellent dinner. Well! there's the equilibrium of things."

He stood up. "I now go to my doom; but with the sublime consciousness that I have dined as a gentleman, with gentlemen. And now, one favour more. May I take this cigar?"

The Member nodded. The gentlemanly stranger lighted the cigar leisurely, and smoked for a second or two.

"The favour is this," he said. "To perfect the compliment by allowing me to accompany you to the door. I see these wretched slaves have come in again and are watching us."

"Come along," said the Member. At the door, under the pitiless glare of the pale electric light, all was visible. The soiled collar, the blue melton overcoat white at the elbows and seams, the yellow tips of the fingers showing through the shabby and broken gloves, the silk hat brown and broken—all told their tale.

The stranger turned and said: "Gentlemen, I must not intrude on you any longer. I beg once more to thank you. May Allah protect you!" Then, lifting his shabby hat, he said to my friend, "Ave Caesar Imperator! moriturus te saluto!"¹ He strolled leisurely down the crowded thoroughfare, and the odour of the cigar filled the air.

I couldn't help laughing. "That was a bad sell," I said.

"Never mind," said the Member, "you have dined with a gentleman." I did not know how true were his words, until in after years, long after his death, I learned that my friend the Member had that evening parted with his last sovereign to entertain a stranger and a felon.

¹ "Hail, Emperor and Caesar! I, about to die, salute you!" The salutation of the gladiators in the arena.

F. FRANKFORT MOORE

B. 1855

THE COMEDY OF THE OLD LOVE

A STORY OF NELL GWYN

I

"MADAM ELLEN'S levée is at this hour, is't not?" said the Duke of Buckingham to one of the many lackeys who formed a bowing line, suggesting a row of scarlet poppies yielding to a persistent wind, as he entered the splendid ante-room to the great salon, decorated—rather too profusely—in the latest French style, in Madam Eleanor Gwyn's house in Pall Mall.

"Madam Ellen is at the point of descending, your Grace," replied the major-domo.

"I am the earliest of her visitors," said the Duke. "Will there be a large attendance to-day?"

"Madam does not limit the attendance at her levées, your Grace. 'Tis at the card-tables in the evening that only a few are admitted," said the major-domo.

"H'm, I shall wait," remarked his Grace.

The major-domo bowed; not without a due sense of his own importance, as well as of the importance of the visitor.

The Duke strolled about the rooms with smiles that varied as his eye caught the various objects of decoration scattered with ludicrous profusion about the salon. Side by side with a masterpiece of French workmanship was a wretched thing of pasteboard and paint, presented to Nell Gwyn by one of the playhouse carpenters. A pair of bronze gilt candelabra worth a fortune stood on pedestals of wood emblazoned with coloured paper. Nell Gwyn's taste was eccentric—to be more exact it might be said to be extremely inclusive.

The Duke was hugely amused, nor was his impression changed when he glanced round, hearing the swish of the portières, and saw at the point of entering the lower salon two beautiful ladies—their charms were so amply displayed as to place no tax upon the imagination of his Grace. No two ladies of the Court were more generous in this way than the Duchess of Cleveland—lately the Countess of Castlemaine—and the Duchess of Portsmouth—lately the exquisite Madame de Querouaille, the gift of the French king to the English Court.

"We have not come soon enough," whispered the Duchess of Portsmouth to her Grace of Cleveland.

"Oil and vinegar," murmured the Duke; "a piquant salad for Nelly."

"Ah, Duke, you are early in offering your duty to Madam Ellen, are you not?" said the Duchess of Cleveland quite pleasantly—for her—as the Duke bowed lower than any lackey.

"If I am arraigned on such a charge, I shall claim the privilege of having your Grace beside me in the dock," said he.

"I' faith, we are early," said the Duchess of Portsmouth; "but the Park in the morning is very sweet."

"So that your Grace was compelled to seek an antidote in Nell Gwyn's house?" suggested the Duke.

"And we have found one," cried the Duchess.

"Nay, madam, I said not that you needed an antidote to sweetness; were you not in the companionship of the Duchess of Cleveland?" said the Duke, smiling.

"The Duke of Buckingham hath been round the coffee-houses already. That accounts for his wit," said the Duchess of Cleveland.

"His Grace's wit is of such a quality as proves beyond doubt that none of the coffee-house wits are early risers," remarked the other lady.

"If they are not, madam, they cannot certainly excuse themselves on the ground that they sat up late at a party of the Duchess of Portsmouth's," said the Duke.

"Nay, my parties are not always dull: your Grace is sometimes absent," said the Duchess of Portsmouth.

"That is how I come to be alive to-day. And I fly from your Grace's presence now so that I may be alive to-morrow," cried he, bowing as he passed out through the curtains.

"I'm afraid we must have him as an ally," said the Duchess of Cleveland.

"I think," said the other, "you will find some difficulty in securing as an ally one whose enmity you have cultivated for several years."

"Bah! I can do what I please with men."

The other smiled. Her smile was very irritating—it had the elements of a shrug about it. She only remarked, however, "What can be keeping our friend, Madam Ellen?"

"This orange-woman's brat gives herself the airs of an Empress," said the Duchess of Portsmouth. Then, turning suddenly at the sound of the curtain rings, she cried, "Ah, dear Madam Ellen. What a picture of grace!"

"A picture of grace!" echoed the other.

"Ah, then we are the Three Graces that Mr. Dryden told me of—her Grace the Duchess of Portsmouth, her Grace the Duchess of Cleveland, and me—grace personified by the grace of—of your Graces," cried Nell. Then glancing critically from one to the other of her visitors, she remarked, "I wonder how much of the grace of God there is among the three of us? Dr. Ken, the Canon of Winchester, would have no difficulty appraising it, I fancy."

"The wretch that would not let you lodge in his house," said the Duchess of Cleveland, with well-simulated indignation.

"Ay, that was Dr. Ken. But your Graces have not honoured me with this visit to talk about clergymen."

"Nay, 'tis but a visit of friendship, madam; and converse on theology is no promoter of friendships," said the Duchess of Cleveland.

"Though Madam Ellen's heart is generous enough to make impossible even a quarrel with her on theology," said the other.

"Oh, your Grace overwhelms me," cried Nell, sinking in a curtsy.

"Ah, 'tis true indeed, but alas! generosity may sometimes lead one astray," said the Duchess of Cleveland.

"Is it worth while discussing a point which cannot possibly affect your Grace?" asked Nell.

"Nay, 'tis but in connection with this freak of yours—this hospital for old soldiers, dear child. Are you not urging the King to an act of foolish generosity?" said her Grace.

"'Tis not generosity, madam; 'tis but simple justice," cried Nell.

"Think of the money that it will cost—thousands—tens of thousands," said the French lady.

"Less than His Majesty would throw away in a year upon one of us," replied Nell.

"One of us—one of—oh, yes; of course, but—well, we need it," said her Grace of Cleveland.

"We are not so needy as the poor men who fought for the King and his house."

"Ah, true—true; but I fear that the people will not submit to the enormous cost of maintaining your hospital," said the Duchess of Cleveland.

"When they submitted to the King's granting you the revenues of the post-office, they will submit to anything," said Nell.

Her Grace of Cleveland took an angry step in the direction of Nell, but Nell stood her ground, and the Duchess refrained from saying the words which had sprung to her lips. She gave a laugh that rang very hollow, and some moments had passed before she said :

"Look you, Madam Ellen ; if you agree to cease urging on the King to waste upon this hospital the money which he would certainly spend upon us, we promise you that within a year you shall be made a Duchess."

"I will promise you this, madam : I will not cease to urge the King to build this hospital even though his courtiers should be left beggars," cried Nell. "And as for your bribe—we have enough Duchesses in this realm to last us for a while. I am Nell Gwyn, daughter of the people, and I seek not to be known by any other name. Every one knows that I am on the side of the English people against all the world. But you, Duchess of Cleveland—you, Madame de Querouaille, are you on the side of the King of England or the King of France ? "

"Bah ! the King of France is stronger than the King of England," cried the Frenchwoman.

"Yes ; but the people of England are stronger than both. Beware of the people of England, Madame de Querouaille," said Nell.

"They are canaille, and you—you are one of them, Nell Gwyn," cried the Duchess of Portsmouth.

"Insolent baggage !" shrieked the other Duchess. "You shall die in the gutter from which you sprang, and your boy—ah, you think that the King will be fool enough to ennoble the brat. I know better. He will die a——"

Nell sprang toward her, and she wisely retreated.

"If you say that word which is trembling on your lips, I will tear out the tongue that framed it," said Nell in a whisper. "Take yourself out of my house, foul-mouthed creature ! "

"We are properly repaid for putting ourselves on a level with an orange-girl," cried the Frenchwoman.

"The King shall learn of this," cried the Duchess of Cleveland.

"Tell it to your King, the King of France," cried Nell, as the two ladies dashed through the portière.

Left alone in the salon, Madam Ellen paced the room excitedly for some time. Then she struck her hands together, crying, "As God is my witness, I will never cease to urge the King to build the hospital. Honours—what care I for honours?—for duchess-ships? The honours of dishonour. Nay, I ask only the honour of having it said of me that I helped on this work for England's soldiers."

The ante-room had by this time become crowded with courtiers anxious to profit by doing her the honour of attending her levée.

Through the curtain came a still young officer. He bowed low, and she greeted him cordially.

"Ah, Colonel Churchill, you have not forgotten me in your foreign wars."

"How would that be possible, madam?"

"I cannot conceive it for myself. No man who remembers himself so well as Colonel Churchill does could forget Nell Gwyn. How can I be of help to you, Colonel?"

He went close to her.

"Dear madam, General Crosby is very ill——"

"Ah, I thought that my old friend remembered himself. Well, better that than that he should forget himself. Sir, the King shall hear of your merits before the breath is out of poor Crosby's body."

"With what words——"

"Good morning to you, Colonel—General Churchill."

He retired, bowing low, having kissed her hand, and made way for an elderly gentleman who had come forward.

"Ah, my Lord, I have not been honoured by a visit from your Lordship since—was it since you begged of me to ask the King to make you Warden of the Meres?" said she. "And what help can I be to your Lordship at this time?"

"Madam, 'tis not for myself; I would die, madam, rather than ask favours for myself," he replied with firmness.

"But you have a son."

"The finest young fellow that lives, though I am his father, madam."

"That is not his fault, my Lord. Is it in the Royal Scots or the Life Guards you wish him placed?"

"The Life Guards, dear madam. We are a poor but proud family, madam. Merit only hath advanced us. My boy would scorn to ask for favours if he once got a start. The Life Guards, dear madam—and, if possible, a captaincy. I may depend on your good word? A thousand thanks. We come of a proud stock, madam. We are poor but proud, madam—my son——”

“His name shall be put before His Majesty, my Lord.”

The fine old fellow bent low over her hand. Going to the door, he glared back scornfully at the crowd, and muttered, “Pack of sycophants—pack of sycophants!”

She had not heard the petitions of more than half of them when a strange and incongruous figure appeared at the entrance—a middle-aged lady dressed in incomparable finery, but suggesting, among her silks and feathers, the jackdaw masquerading as a peacock. She was remonstrating with the major-domo with great fluency—the fluency of Lewknor Lane.

“Why shouldn’t I see my daughter at any hour I please, fellow?” she was asking.

Madam Ellen laughed, and dismissed her Court.

“’Tis my lady mother,” she cried. “What post can she come to ask for? Ladies and gentlemen, you may all depend on my good word on your behalf. Come now, mother, and tell me all that you have to tell. Heavens, madam, do not tell me that you wish to be made Mistress of the Robes—or Master of the Horse.”

“Not me—not me,” said Mrs. Gwyn, eyeing the disappearing Court until she was alone with her daughter.

“I breathe again,” said Nell. “But I scarce knew that you were journeying hither to-day. ’Tis an honour and a surprise as well; and i’ faith, now that I come to think on’t, the surprise is a deal greater than the honour. If you say you haven’t come hither for more money, my surprise will be unbounded.”

“I’m not come for money, though a trifle would be welcome,” said the mother when Nelly had shown her the way into one of the rooms opening off a corridor at one side of the hall.

“I have met with an old friend of yours this day, Nell,” said the mother, “and he is coming hither.”

“An old friend! I’ faith, good mother, ’tis the young friends are more to my taste. The savour of Lewknor Lane doth not smell sweet.”

“Oh, ay, but you once wasn’t so dainty a madam.”

“’Twere vain to deny it, mother, since it can be urged against me that I became your daughter. Whom say you that you met to-day?”

"What should you say if I told you that his name was Dick Harraden?"

"What, Dick! Dick! Dick Harraden!"

Nell had sprung to her feet, and had grasped her mother by the shoulder, eagerly peering into her face.

After a moment of silence following her exclamation, she gave her mother a little push in the act of taking her hand off her shoulder, and threw herself back in her own chair again with a laugh.

"What should I say, do you ask me?" she cried. "Well, I should say that you were a liar, good mother."

"I'm no liar," said the mother. "'Twas Dick himself I met face to face."

"It puzzles me to see wherein lies your hope of getting money from me by telling me such a tale," said Nell.

"I want not your money—at least, not till the end of the month or thereabouts. I tell you I saw Dick within the hour."

"'Twas his ghost. You know that when he threw away his link he took to the sea and was drowned in a storm off the Grand Canary. What did the seafaring man tell us when I asked him if he had seen Dick?"

"A maudlin knave he was—a very maudlin knave to come with such a tale."

"But he said he had sailed in the same ship as Dick, and that it had gone down with all aboard save only himself."

"Oh, ay; and he wept plentifully when he saw how you wept—ay, the knave! For I saw Dick with these eyes within the hour."

"Oh, mother—and you told him—no, you durstn't tell him——"

"He had just this morning come to London from the Indies, and it was good luck—or ill-luck may be—that made him run against me. He plied me with question after question—all about Nell—his Nell, he called you, if you please."

"His Nell—ah, mother! his Nell! Well, you told him——"

"I told him that you would never more need his aid to buy foot-gear. Lord! Nell, do you mind how he bought you the worsted stockings when you were nigh mad with the chilblains?"

"And you told him. . . . For God's sake say what you told him."

"I didn't mention the King's name—no, I'm loyal to His Majesty, God save him! I only told him that you had given up selling oranges in the pit of Drury Lane, and had taken to the less reputable part of the house, to wit, the stage."

"Poor Dick! he didn't like to hear that. Oh, if he had stayed at home and carried his link as before, all would have been well."

"What is the wench talking about? Well—all would have been well? And is not all well, you jade? 'Twere rank treason to say else. Isn't this room, with its gilded looking-glasses and painted vases, pretty well for one who has been an orange-girl? The King is a gentleman—and a merry gentleman too. Well, indeed!"

"But Dick—what more did you say to him, mother?"

"I asked him after himself, to be sure. I' faith, the lad hath prospered, Nell. He will tell you all himself."

"What! you told him where I dwelt?"

"I meant it not, Nelly; but he had it from me before I was aware. But he knows nothing. He will have no time to hear of the King and the King's fancies before he sees you."

"He is coming hither, then? No, he must not come; oh, he shall not come. Mother, you have played me false."

"I? Oh, the wench is mad! False? What could I say, girl, when he pressed me?"

"You could have said that I was dead—that would have been the truth. The girl he knew is dead. He must not come to this house."

"Then give your lackeys orders not to admit him and all will be well."

"I'll not see him. Did he say he'd come soon?"

"Within the hour, he said."

Instinctively Nell looked at her reflection in a mirror.

"I'll not see him," she repeated.

"That gown will do well enough for one just returned from the Indies," said the mother.

"Oh, go away; go away," cried her daughter. "You have done enough mischief for one morning. Why could not you have let things be? Oh, go away; go away!"

"Oh, yes; I'll go. And you'll see him, too; no fear about that. And so good-day to you, good Mistress Eve."

She made a mock curtsy and marched out of the room.

Her daughter watched her departure, and only when she had disappeared burst into a laugh. In a moment she was grave once again. She remained seated without changing her attitude or expression for a long time. At last she sprang to her feet, saying out loud:

"What a fool thou art, friend Nell, to become glum over a boy sweetheart—and a link-boy, of all boys. But I'll not see him. 'Twere best not. He'll hear all soon enough, and loathe me as at times I loathe myself. No, no; not so much as that—not so much as that: Dick had always a kind heart. No, I'll not see him."

She went resolutely to the bell-pull, but, when there, stood irresolute with the ornamental ring of brass in her hand for some moments before pulling it. She gave it a sudden jerk, and when it was responded to by a lackey, she said:

"Should a man call, asking to see me, within the next hour, he is to be told—with civility, mind you; he is a gentleman—that—that I am in this room, and that I will see him for five minutes—only five minutes, mind you, sirrah."

"And the man—the gentleman—is to be admitted, madam?"

"Certainly—for five minutes."

"Your ladyship will regulate the time?"

"Go away, you numskull! How could I regulate the time? I'm no astronomer."

"Madam, I meant but to inquire if you are to be interrupted at the end of five minutes."

"I gave you no such instruction, sirrah. It is enough for you to carry out the instruction I gave you. Carry it out and yourself into the bargain."

The man bowed and withdrew.

When he had gone Nelly laughed again, but suddenly became graver even than she had yet been.

"What have I done?" she cried. "Oh, there never was so great a fool as me. No, no; I'll not see him. I have as kind a heart as Dick, and I'll prove it by not seeing him."

And yet, when she had her hand on the lock of the door, she stood irresolute once again for some moments. Then she went out with a firm step, her intention being to countermand in the hall the instructions she had given to the servant in the parlour; but in the hall she found herself face to face with her old friend Sir Charles Sedley. He had brought her a bunch of violets.

"The satyr offers flowers to Aurora," said the courtier, bowing as gracefully as a touch of rheumatism permitted him.

"And Aurora was so fond of flowers that she accepted them even from the most satiric of satyrs," said Nell, sinking into a curtsy.

They were standing apart from the group of servants in the hall. Nell Gwyn had pretended that she was about to ascend the stairs, but loitered on the second step with her right elbow resting on the oak banister while she smelt at the violets with her head poised daintily as she looked with eyes full of mischief and mirth at the courtier standing on the mat.

Suddenly Nell straightened herself as she looked down the hall towards the door—she started and dropped her violets. All the mischief and mirth fled from her eyes as a man was admitted, with some measure of protestation, by the porter. He was a young man with a very brown face, and he carried no sword, only the hanger of a sailor ; his dress was of the plainest.

Before Sir Charles had time to turn to satisfy himself as to the identity of the man at whom Nell was gazing so eagerly, she had run down the hall and seized the new-comer by both hands, crying :

"Dick—Dick—it is you yourself, Dick, and no ghost ! "

"No ghost, I dare swear, Nell," cried the man in a tone that made the candles in the chandelier quiver. "No ghost, but—oh, Lord, how you've grown, Nell ! Why, when I burnt my last link seeing you home you was only so high." He put his hand within a foot of the floor.

"And you, too, Dick ! Why ! you're a man now—you'll grow no more, Dick," cried Nell, still standing in front of him with his hands fast clasped in her own. Suddenly, recollecting the servants who were around, she dropped his hands saying : "Come along within, Dick, and tell me all your adventures since last we were together."

"Lord ! Adventures ! You don't know what you've set yourself down for, Nell. If I was to tell you all I should be in your company for at least a week."

She led him past Sir Charles Sedley without so much as glancing at the courtier, and the new-comer had no eyes for any one save Nell. A servant threw open the door of the room where she had been with her mother, and the two entered.

Sir Charles took snuff elaborately, after he had replaced his hat on his head.

"If His Majesty should arrive, let him know that I am in the long parlour," he said to a servant as he walked toward a door on the left.

He paused for a space with his hand on the handle of the door, for

Russell

F. Frankfurt more.

there came from the room into which Nell Gwyn and Dick Harraden had gone a loud peal of laughter—not a solo, but a duet.

He turned the handle.

So soon as he had disappeared there came a second ripple of laughter from the other room, and the lackeys lounging in the hall laughed too.

II

Within the room Nell was seated on the settee and Dick Harraden by her side. She had just reminded him of the gift of the worsted stockings which he had made to her when he was a link-boy and she an orange-girl in Drury Lane. They had both laughed when she had pushed out a little dainty shoe from beneath her gown, as she said :

" Ah, Dick, 'tis not in worsted my toes are clad now. I have outgrown your stockings."

" Not you, Nell ! " he cried. " By the Lord Harry ! your feet have got smaller instead of larger during these years—I swear to you that is so."

" Ah, the chilblains do make a difference, Dick," said she ; " and you never saw my feet unless they were covered with chilblains. Lord ! how you cried when you saw my feet well covered for the first time."

" Not I—I didn't cry. What was there to cry about, Nell ? " he said.

She felt very much inclined to ask him the same question at that moment, for his face was averted from her, and he had uttered his words spasmodically.

" Poor Dick ! you wept because you had eaten nothing for three days in order to save enough to buy my stockings," she said.

" How know you that ? " he cried, turning to her suddenly.

" I knew it not at the time," she replied, " but I have thought over it since."

" Think no more of it, Nell. Oh, Lord, to think that I should live to see Nell again ! No—no. I'll not believe it. That fine lady that I see in the big glass yonder cannot be Nell Gwyn."

" Oh, Dick, would any one but Nell Gwyn remember about Nell Gwyn's chilblains ? "

" Hearsay—mere hearsay, my fine madam ! "

" By what means shall I convince you that I'm the Nell you knew ?

Let me see—ah, I know. Dick, I'll swear for you ; you know well that there was no one could match me in swearing. Let me but begin."

" Oh, Lord ! not for the world. You always knew when to begin, Nell, but you ne'er knew when to stop. And how doth it come that you haven't forgot the brimstone of the Lane, Nelly, though you have become so mighty fine a lady ? "

" 'Snails, Dick, the best way to remember a language is to keep constantly talking it."

" But in silks and satins ? "

" Oh, I soon found that I only needed to double the intensity of my language in the Lane in order to talk the mother-tongue of fashion."

" If swearing make the fine lady you'll be the leader of the town, Nell, I'll warrant. But don't say that you doubled your language—that would be impossible."

" Oh, would it indeed ? "

" Not so ? Then, for God's sake, don't give me a sample of what you reached in that way, for I've only lived among the pirates and buccaneers of the Indies since."

" Then I'll e'en spare thee, Dick ; but take warning : don't provoke me. You wouldn't provoke a pirate whose guns you knew to be double-shotted. Don't say that I'm not Nell Gwyn for all my silks and lace. Why, man, doth oatmeal porridge cease to be porridge because it's served in a silver platter ? Did your salt pork turn to venison when you ate it off the gold plate that you stole from the chapels ? "

" Lord, Nell, I wasn't a pirate."

" What ! Didn't you say just now that you had been among pirates and buccaneers in the Indies ? "

" I was among them, but not of them."

" You mean to say that you were neither a pirate nor a buccaneer ? "

" Neither."

" Then all I can say is that I'm mightily ashamed of you, Dick. I counted on your being at least a pirate. Don't say that you became a merchant ; I never could abide dishonesty, Dick."

" Well, no ; I never became just a merchant, Nell—at least, not the sort of merchant that merchants would call a merchant."

" Oh, then there's some hope for you yet, Dick. We may be friends still."

" Friends ? Well, I should say so. What did I work for, do you think, through all these years? What did I lay up a store of guineas for—guineas and Spanish doubloons and pieces of eight for——?”

“And you have made a fortune, Dick? Think of that! Ah, I fear that you must have been a regular merchant after all; only regular merchants make fortunes in these days.”

“Ay, but some irregular ones do pretty fairly for themselves.”

“And you were somewhat irregular, I dare swear?”

“Well, I wasn’t regularly irregular, dear; only by fits and starts. Ah, what I said to myself was: I’ve put the stockings on Nell, but I’ve to get new shoes for her yet. That’s what gave me the strength of ten men—working for those new shoes, Nell.”

“Poor Dick! and now when you come home you find that I am already provided for.”

Again she showed him the dainty tips of her shoes.

“Those are fair-weather shoes, Nell,” he cried.

“Ay, that they are, Dick,” she assented with a note of sadness in her voice.

“But what I would offer you would stand the stress of all weather—fair or foul, Nell.”

“I believe you, Dick, with all my heart. I know what you had to offer me; but it’s too late now—too late, Dick.”

“Too late? What do you mean, girl?”

The look that came into his face frightened her. She threw herself back on the settee and laughed loudly for a minute or two.

“That’s what I mean,” she cried, tilting up her toes until they were on a level with his knees. “What else could I mean than that I’m already sufficiently shod? Even Nell Gwyn can’t wear more than one pair of shoes at one time, Dick. It’s rather a pity, but it’s an ill that must be borne! Now tell us about yourself, Dick. Tell us how you fought with pirates and buccaneers—above all, tell us what the Spanish Main is.”

“The Spanish Main—why it’s the Spanish Main to be sure—south of the Indies—a good place for trade, and a good place for pirates. But you, Nell; I wonder if you meant anything by saying that I had come back too late? I thought, you know, when I met your mother——”

“Oh, I want to hear about the fighting—the buccaneers. I don’t want to hear about my mother. I hear enough about her. You fought the pirates? Well, next to being a pirate yourself that's the best thing."

"Well, if you must know, I got about me a few score of lads—most of them were stout Irish lads—who were sold to the plantations by Cromwell."

"The monster!"

"Ay, we made up a fine crew, I can tell you. Our plan was to do no pirating on our own behalf, but only to attack the pirates when they had a deckload of spoil. Taking from thieves isn't stealing, is it, Nell?"

"No, that's business."

"A bit irregular it may be, as I said just now; but bless you, Nelly, it was like sermon-preaching compared to some sorts of business that thrive mightily at the Indies. Anyhow, here I am to-day, sound and hearty, Nell, with a pretty nice fortune made already, and more to come—here I am, ready and willing to buy you the best pair of shoes in London town, and every other article of attire you may need for the next dozen—ay, the next fifty years."

"Dick—Dick!"

"Isn't it true that you were always my sweetheart, Nell? Didn't you say that you would never marry another? Well, you've kept your word so far—your mother told me that."

"Ah, that's the worst of it."

"The worst of it! That's the best of it, Nelly; for though a fine lady living in a mansion like this—why it might be a palace—the King himself might come here."

"The King—you've heard that—that the King——" She grasped him fiercely by the sleeve, and was eagerly peering into his face.

He burst out laughing, but suddenly checked himself.

"The King—the King—what was there for me to hear?" he asked in a low voice. "I only arrived from Bristol port in the morning. How could I hear anything? I don't want to hear anything except to hear you say that you haven't broken your promise—that you haven't married any one else."

"Oh, go away, Dick—go away!" she cried, burying her face on the arm of the settee.

He got upon his feet slowly and painfully, and stood over her.

"Why should I go away?" he asked in the same grave voice. "If I love you—and you know I do—and if you love me—and I believe that you do—it is not for me to go away. Ah, is it possible that you have given your promise to marry some one else! Don't weep, Nell; that's it, I see, and it can be made all right. Is that it, dear?"

"No, no. Oh, go away—go away, and never return to make me feel how miserable I am!"

"I'll not go away. There's some mystery about you and this house, and I'll not go before I fathom it."

She looked up and saw him standing there with his arms folded.

She leapt up so quickly that she almost seemed to spring into his arms. He thought so at any rate, and was about to clasp her when she caught both of his hands in her own, gazing tearfully—eagerly—wistfully into his face.

"Dick—dear Dick," she said, "if you love me still—and I know you do—you will leave me now. Oh, you should never have come here—I did not mean you to come; but, if you love me, Dick, you will leave me now—leave me and go into the nearest coffee-house and ask of the first man you see there who is Nell Gwyn—what is Nell Gwyn. If you return to me after that, then—then, Dick, I swear to you that I'll marry you—there will be none to stay us then—none to come between—the King himself shall not come between us."

He gripped her hands fiercely, his face close down to hers.

"By God, I'll do it!" he said through his set teeth. "I'll do it. You have put it upon me. I know that I shall hear nothing but what is good of you, and I'll return to claim you as sure as there's a sun in heaven."

He dropped her hands, snatched up his hat, and walked firmly to the door. When there he turned slowly and looked back at her. She was standing pale and lovely where he had left her. Her eyes were upon his face.

He flung himself through the door, and she fell on her knees beside the settee, burying her face in one of its cushions.

For some minutes nothing was heard in the room but the sound of her sobs; but then the silence was broken by a shout outside—a shout and the noise of a scuffle. Cries of "Hold him back! Hold him back!" came from the servants, mixed with some full-bodied imprecations in other voices. Nell started to her feet as the door of the room was all but crashed in, and she was standing with a startled look on her face as the door was flung wide, and Dick Harraden hurled a limp antagonist into the room.

"He shall eat his words—every foul word he uttered he shall swallow in the presence of Nell herself," cried Dick, and then Nell recognised Sir Charles Sedley as the man who was standing panting, with a broken sword in his hand, by her side, facing Dick.

"For God's sake, Dick!—Sir Charles—what has happened?"

The courtier was too breathless to speak—he signified so much very pleasingly to Nell.

"The cowardly knave!" panted Dick. "But I swore that I'd make him eat his words, and by the Lord Harry I'll keep my oath."

"Sir Charles, pray—oh, Dick!"

"Dick me no Dicks, Nell, until this popinjay has gone down on his knees before you and asked your pardon for his foul words," cried Dick. "Down you go, my gentleman, were you fifty times Sir Charles!"

"For Heaven's sake, Nell, keep that fire-eater at a distance," gasped Sir Charles. "He's fit for Bedlam."

"Stand where you be, Dick," said Nell. "What said Sir Charles Sedley to give you offence?"

"He said that you—no, I'll hang in chains in Execution Dock before I repeat the lie—but he'll take it back—every word, if I have to wring his neck."

Dick was with difficulty kept at a distance.

"Did he say aught about the King and me?" asked Nell in a low voice.

"It was, I swear, a most unhappy contretemps, Nell," said Sir Charles, smiling in a somewhat constrained way. "How could I know that there was one man in England who didn't know how splendid, yet how natural, a conquest the charms of Mistress Eleanor Gwyn have achieved?"

"Then you only spoke the truth, Sir Charles," said Nell.

"God above us!"

Dick staggered back and grasped the frame of a chair to support himself.

There was a long silence.

He took a faltering step or two towards where she stood in the middle of the room.

"I see it all now," he said in a low voice. "I see it all. This house—the lackeys in scarlet—the King's servants—they are the King's servants, and you—you, Nell, are the King's—oh, God—let me die—let me die ! This is what I came home for—you told me to go to the first coffee-house—I didn't need to go so far. Oh, Nelly, if I had come home to stand beside the green hillock of your grave I could have borne it—but this—this ! ”

He dropped into a chair and covered his face with his hands. His sobbing was the only sound in the room.

After a long pause he got slowly upon his feet.

“ I'm going away,” he said. “ My heart is broken, Nell—my heart is broken. Good-bye, Nell.”

“ Good-bye, Dick.”

She had not moved from the middle of the room. She did not hold out a hand to him. He walked slowly to the door. Then he turned round.

“ I humbly ask your pardon, sir,” he said to Sir Charles.

“ Sir,” said the courtier, “ I honour you more than any living man.”

“ Nell—Nell—come to me—come away with me—come to my arms, Nell,” cried the man, holding out his hands to her from where he stood.

Sir Charles watched her face. He saw it light up for a moment. Her hands moved ; she was going to him.

No, she only looked at the man who loved her and was ready to offer her everything, and said :

“ Dick, I have a boy in a cradle upstairs.”

There was another long pause before Dick whispered the words : “ God bless thee, Nell ! ”

Then the door was flung wide in his face by a lackey who bowed to the ground as he ushered in a rather plain-faced man wearing a diamond star and a broad blue sash as well as a diamond garter.

Nell sank in a curtsy and Sir Charles Sedley made an obeisance. Dick remained unmoved.

“ Ha—what have we here ? ” said the stranger. “ I' faith, a pretty family picture ! Who may you be, good sir ? ” he asked of Dick.

“ Who may you be ? ” asked Dick.

“ Well, who I may be in a year or two the Lord and Nelly only know—she says a merry pauper. But who I am is easier said ; I happen just now to be the King.”

Dick stood unmoved.

“ Then I could tell you what you are, sir,” said Dick.

“ Not half as well as I could tell you, my friend,” said the King.

“ I wonder if your Majesty ever hears the truth,” said Dick.

"Seldom ; any time I do it comes from the lips of Nelly yonder," replied the King. "And by my soul, sir, I would rather hear the truth from Nelly than a lie from the most honourable of my subjects."

"Profligate !" cried Dick.

"I answer to that name, sir ; what then ?" said the King.

"What then ? God only can reply to your 'What then ?' The answer rests with Him. He will not forget to answer you when His time comes."

"Even so," said the King in a low tone, bending his head.

Sir Charles had moved round the settee and had opened the door. He touched Dick on the elbow. Dick started for a moment, and then stalked through the door. Sir Charles went out with his face turned toward the King.

"A straightforward fellow, but as conceited as a Puritan, Nell," cried the King, with a laugh.

But Nell had sunk once more on her knees beside the settee, and her face was, as before, buried in the cushion.

"Ha, what's this, Nelly ? What's amiss ?" said the King, bending over her.

"Oh, go away—go away ; I never want to see you again. You heard the word—Profligate ! Profligate !"

"I'll go away, Nell, so soon as I pass to you the two papers which I hold in my hand."

"I want no papers. I want to be alone."

"Come, dear child. See if you will like your new plaything."

He pushed before her one of the two papers which he held.

She glanced at it without rising, and without taking it from him. Suddenly she put out a hand to it.

"What ?" she cried. She was now on her feet. "You have done it for me—all for me ! The hospital to be built at Chelsea. Oh, my liege !"

"Now the other paper," said the King.

She took it from him.

"Ah, Royal Letters Patent—our boy—our Charlie—Duke of St. Albans ! Oh, my liege—my King—my love for ever !"

She sank on her knees, and, catching his hand, covered it with kisses—with kisses and tears.

OSCAR WILDE

1856-1900

THE BIRTHDAY OF THE INFANTA

IT was the birthday of the Infanta. She was just twelve years of age, and the sun was shining brightly in the gardens of the palace.

Although she was a real Princess and the Infanta of Spain, she had only one birthday every year, just like the children of quite poor people, so it was naturally a matter of great importance to the whole country that she should have a really fine day for the occasion. And a really fine day it certainly was. The tall striped tulips stood straight up upon their stalks, like long rows of soldiers, and looked defiantly across the grass at the roses, and said: "We are quite as splendid as you are now." The purple butterflies fluttered about with gold dust on their wings, visiting each flower in turn; the little lizards crept out of the crevices of the wall, and lay basking in the white glare; and the pomegranates split and cracked with the heat, and showed their bleeding red hearts. Even the pale yellow lemons, that hung in such profusion from the mouldering trellis and along the dim arcades, seemed to have caught a richer colour from the wonderful sunlight, and the magnolia trees opened their great globe-like blossoms of folded ivory, and filled the air with a sweet heavy perfume.

The little Princess herself walked up and down the terrace with her companions, and played at hide-and-seek round the stone vases and the old moss-grown statues. On ordinary days she was only allowed to play with children of her own rank, so she had always to play alone, but her birthday was an exception, and the King had given orders that she was to invite any of her young friends whom she liked to come and amuse themselves with her. There was a stately grace about these slim Spanish children as they glided about, the boys with their large-plumed hats and short fluttering cloaks, the girls holding up the trains of their long brocaded gowns, and shielding the sun from their eyes with huge fans of black and silver. But the Infanta was the most graceful of all, and the most tastefully attired, after the somewhat cumbrous fashion of the day. Her robe was of grey satin, the skirt and the wide puffed sleeves heavily embroidered with silver, and the stiff corset studded with rows of fine pearls. Two tiny slippers with big pink rosettes peeped out beneath her dress as she walked. Pink and pearl was her great gauze fan, and in her hair, which like an aureole of faded gold stood out stiffly round her pale little face, she had a beautiful white rose.

From a window in the palace the sad melancholy King watched them. Behind him stood his brother, Don Pedro of Aragon, whom he hated, and his confessor, the Grand Inquisitor of Granada, sat by his side. Sadder even than usual was the King, for as he looked at the Infanta bowing with childish gravity to the assembling courtiers, or laughing behind her fan at the grim Duchess of Albuquerque who always accompanied her, he thought of the young Queen, her mother, who but a short time before—so it seemed to him—had come from the gay country of France, and had withered away in the sombre splendour of the Spanish court, dying just six months after the birth of her child, and before she had seen the almonds blossom twice in the orchard, or plucked the second year's fruit from the old gnarled fig-tree that stood in the centre of the now grass-grown courtyard. So great had been his love for her that he had not suffered even the grave to hide her from him. She had been embalmed by a Moorish physician, who in return for this service had been granted his life, which for heresy and suspicion of magical practices had been already forfeited, men said, to the Holy Office, and her body was still lying on its tapestried bier in the black marble chapel of the Palace, just as the monks had borne her in on that windy March day nearly twelve years before. Once every month the King, wrapped in a dark cloak and with a muffled lantern in his hand, went in and knelt by her side calling out, "Mi reina! Mi reina!" and sometimes breaking through the formal etiquette that in Spain governs every separate action of life, and sets limits even to the sorrow of a King, he would clutch at the pale jewelled hands in a wild agony of grief, and try to wake by his mad kisses the cold painted face.

To-day he seemed to see her again, as he had seen her first at the Castle of Fontainebleau, when he was but fifteen years of age, and she still younger. They had been formally betrothed on that occasion by the Papal Nuncio in the presence of the French King and all the Court, and he had returned to the Escorial bearing with him a little ringlet of yellow hair, and the memory of two childish lips bending down to kiss his hand as he stepped into his carriage. Later on had followed the marriage, hastily performed at Burgos, a small town on the frontier between the two countries, and the grand public entry into Madrid with the customary celebration of high mass at the Church of La Atocha, and a more than usually solemn auto-da-fé, in which nearly three hundred heretics, amongst whom were many Englishmen, had been delivered over to the secular arm to be burned.

Certainly he had loved her madly, and to the ruin, many thought, of his country, then at war with England for the possession of the empire of the New World. He had hardly ever permitted her to be out of his sight ; for her he had forgotten, or seemed to have forgotten, all grave affairs of State ; and, with that terrible blindness that passion brings upon its servants, he had failed to notice that the elaborate ceremonies by which he sought to please her did but aggravate the strange malady from which she suffered. When she died he was, for a time, like one bereft of reason. Indeed, there is no doubt but that he would have formally abdicated and retired to the great Trappist monastery at Granada, of which he was already titular Prior, had he not been afraid to leave the little Infanta at the mercy of his brother, whose cruelty, even in Spain, was notorious, and who was suspected by many of having caused the Queen's death by means of a pair of poisoned gloves that he had presented to her on the occasion of her visiting his castle in Aragon. Even after the expiration of the three years of public mourning that he had ordained throughout his whole dominions by royal edict, he would never suffer his ministers to speak about any new alliance, and when the Emperor himself sent to him, and offered him the hand of the lovely Archduchess of Bohemia, his niece, in marriage, he bade the ambassadors tell their master that the King of Spain was already wedded to Sorrow, and that though she was but a barren bride he loved her better than Beauty ; an answer that cost his crown the rich provinces of the Netherlands, which soon after, at the Emperor's instigation, revolted against him under the leadership of some fanatics of the Reformed Church.

His whole married life, with its fierce, fiery-coloured joys and the terrible agony of its sudden ending, seemed to come back to him to-day as he watched the Infanta playing on the terrace. She had all the Queen's pretty petulance of manner, the same wilful way of tossing her head, the same proud curved beautiful mouth, the same wonderful smile—vrai sourire de France indeed—as she glanced up now and then at the window, or stretched out her little hand for the stately Spanish gentlemen to kiss. But the shrill laughter of the children grated on his ears, and the bright pitiless sunlight mocked his sorrow, and a dull odour of strange spices, spices such as embalmers use, seemed to taint—or was it fancy?—the clear morning air. He buried his face in his hands, and when the Infanta looked up again the curtains had been drawn, and the King had retired.

She made a little moue of disappointment, and shrugged her shoulders. Surely he might have stayed with her on her birthday. What did the stupid State affairs matter? Or had he gone to that gloomy chapel, where the candles were always burning, and where she was never allowed to enter? How silly of him, when the sun was shining so brightly, and everybody was so happy! Besides, he would miss the sham bull-fight for which the trumpet was already sounding, to say nothing of the puppet-show and the other wonderful things. Her uncle and the Grand Inquisitor were much more sensible. They had come out on the terrace, and paid her nice compliments. So she tossed her pretty head, and taking Don Pedro by the hand, she walked slowly down the steps towards a long pavilion of purple silk that had been erected at the end of the garden, the other children following in strict order of precedence, those who had the longest names going first.

A procession of noble boys, fantastically dressed as toreadors, came out to meet her, and the young Count of Tierra-Nueva, a wonderfully handsome lad of about fourteen years of age, uncovering his head with all the grace of a born hidalgo and grandee of Spain, led her solemnly in to a little gilt and ivory chair that was placed on a raised dais above the arena. The children grouped themselves all round, fluttering their big fans and whispering to each other, and Don Pedro and the Grand Inquisitor stood laughing at the entrance. Even the Duchess—the Camerera-Mayor as she was called—a thin, hard-featured woman with a yellow ruff, did not look quite so bad-tempered as usual, and something like a chill smile flitted across her wrinkled face and twitched her thin bloodless lips.

It certainly was a marvellous bull-fight, and much nicer, the Infanta thought, than the real bull-fight that she had been brought to see at Seville, on the occasion of the visit of the Duke of Parma to her father. Some of the boys pranced about on richly-caparisoned hobby-horses brandishing long javelins with gay streamers of bright ribands attached to them ; others went on foot waving their scarlet cloaks before the bull, and vaulting lightly over the barrier when he charged them ; and as for the bull himself, he was just like a live bull, though he was only made of wicker-work and stretched hide, and sometimes insisted on running round the arena on his hind legs, which no live bull ever dreams of doing. He made a splendid fight of it too, and the children got so excited that they stood up upon the benches, and waved their lace handkerchiefs and cried out : Bravo toro ! Bravo toro ! just as sensibly as if they had been grown-up people. At last, however, after a prolonged combat, during which several of the hobby-horses were gored through and through, and their riders dismounted, the young Count of Tierra-Nueva brought the bull to his knees, and having obtained permission from the Infanta to give the coup de grâce, he plunged his wooden sword into the neck of the animal with such violence that the head came right off, and disclosed the laughing face of little Monsieur de Lorraine, the son of the French Ambassador at Madrid.

The arena was then cleared amidst much applause, and the dead hobby-horses dragged solemnly away by two Moorish pages in yellow and black liveries, and after a short interlude, during which a French posture-master performed upon the tight-rope, some Italian puppets appeared in the semi-classical tragedy of Sophonisba on the stage of a small theatre that had been built up for the purpose. They acted so well, and their gestures were so extremely natural, that at the close of the play the eyes of the Infanta were quite dim with tears. Indeed some of the children really cried, and had to be comforted with sweet-meats, and the Grand Inquisitor himself was so affected that he could not help saying to Don Pedro that it seemed to him intolerable that things made simply out of wood and coloured wax, and worked mechanically by wires, should be, so unhappy and meet with such terrible misfortunes.

An African juggler followed, who brought in a large flat basket covered with a red cloth, and having placed it in the centre of the arena, he took from his turban a curious reed pipe, and blew through it. In a few moments the cloth began to move, and as the pipe grew shriller and shriller two green and gold snakes put out their strange wedge-shaped heads and rose slowly up, swaying to and fro with the music as a plant sways in the water. The children, however, were rather frightened at their spotted hoods and quick darting tongues, and were much more pleased when the juggler made a tiny orange-tree grow out of the sand and bear pretty white blossoms and clusters of real fruit ; and when he took the fan of the little daughter of the Marquess de Las-Torres, and changed it into a blue bird that flew all round the pavilion and sang, their delight and amazement knew no bounds. The solemn minuet, too, performed by the dancing boys from the church of Nuestra Señora Del Pilar, was charming. The Infanta had never before seen this wonderful ceremony which takes place every year at Maytime in front of the high altar of the Virgin, and in her honour and indeed none of the royal family of Spain had entered the great cathedral of Saragossa since a mad priest, supposed by many to have been in the pay of Elizabeth of England, had tried to administer a poisoned wafer to the Prince of the Asturias. So she had known only by hearsay of " Our Lady's Dance," as it was called, and it certainly was a beautiful sight. The boys wore old-fashioned court dresses of white velvet, and their curious three-cornered hats were fringed with silver and surmounted with huge plumes of ostrich feathers, the dazzling whiteness of their costumes, as they moved about in the sunlight, being still more accentuated by their swarthy faces and long black hair. Everybody was fascinated by the grave dignity with which they moved through the intricate figures of the dance, and by the elaborate grace of their slow gestures, and stately bows, and when they had finished their performance and doffed their great plumed hats to the Infanta, she acknowledged their reverence with much courtesy, and made a vow that she would send a large wax candle to the shrine of Our Lady of Pilar in return for the pleasure that she had given her.

A troop of handsome Egyptians—as the gipsies were termed in those days—then advanced into the arena, and sitting down cross-legs, in a circle, began to play softly upon their zithers, moving their bodies to the tune, and humming, almost below their breath, a low dreamy air. When they caught sight of Don Pedro they scowled at him, and some of them looked terrified, for only a few weeks before he had had two of their tribe hanged for sorcery in the market-place at Seville, but the pretty Infanta charmed them as she leaned back peeping over her fan with her great blue eyes, and they felt sure that one so lovely as she was could never be cruel to anybody. So they played on very gently and just touching the cords of the zithers with their long pointed nails, and their heads began to nod as though they were falling asleep. Suddenly, with a cry so shrill that all the children were startled and Don Pedro's hand clutched at the agate pommel of his dagger, they leapt to their feet and whirled madly round the enclosure beating their tambourines, and chaunting some wild love-song in their strange guttural language. Then at another signal they all flung themselves again to the ground and lay there quite still, the dull strumming of the zithers being the only sound that broke the silence. After they had done this several times, they disappeared for a moment and came back leading a brown shaggy bear by a chain, and carrying on their shoulders some little Barbary apes. The bear stood upon his head with the utmost gravity, and the wizened apes played all kinds of amusing tricks with two gipsy boys who seemed to be their masters, and fought with tiny swords, and fired off guns, and went through a regular soldier's drill just like the King's own bodyguard. In fact the gipsies were a great success.

But the funniest part of the whole morning's entertainment was undoubtedly the dancing of the little Dwarf. When he stumbled into the arena, waddling on his crooked legs and wagging his huge misshapen head from side to side, the children went off into a loud shout of delight, and the Infanta herself laughed so much that the Camerera was obliged to remind her that although there were many precedents in Spain for a King's daughter weeping before her equals, there were none for a Princess of the blood royal making so merry before those who were her inferiors in birth. The Dwarf, however, was really quite irresistible, and even at the Spanish Court, always noted for its cultivated passion for the horrible, so fantastic a little monster had never been seen. It was his first appearance, too. He had been discovered only the day before, running wild through the forest, by two of the nobles who happened to have been hunting in a remote part of the great cork-wood that surrounded the town, and had been carried off by them to the Palace as a surprise for the Infanta ; his father, who was a poor charcoal-burner, being but too well pleased to get rid of so ugly and useless a child. Perhaps the most amusing thing about him was his complete unconsciousness of his own grotesque appearance. Indeed he seemed quite happy and full of the highest spirits. When the children laughed, he laughed as freely and as joyously as any of them, and at the close of each dance he made them each the funniest of bows, smiling and nodding at them just as if he was really one of themselves, and not a little misshapen thing that Nature, in some humorous mood, had fashioned for others to mock at. As for the Infanta, she absolutely fascinated him. He could not keep his eyes off her, and seemed to dance for her alone, and when at the close of the performance, remembering how she had seen the great ladies of the Court throw bouquets to Caffarelli, the famous Italian treble, whom the Pope had sent from his own chapel to Madrid that he might cure the King's melancholy by the sweetness of his voice, she took out of her hair the beautiful white rose, and partly for a jest and partly to tease the Camerera, threw it to him across the arena with her sweetest smile, he took the whole matter quite seriously, and pressing the flower to his rough coarse lips he put his hand upon his heart, and sank on one knee before her, grinning from ear to ear, and with his little bright eyes sparkling with pleasure.

This so upset the gravity of the Infanta that she kept on laughing long after the little Dwarf had run out of the arena, and expressed a desire to her uncle that the dance should be immediately repeated. The Camerera, however, on the plea that the sun was too hot, decided that it would be better that her Highness should return without delay to the Palace, where a wonderful feast had been already prepared for her, including a real birthday cake with her own initials worked all over it in painted sugar and a lovely silver flag waving from the top. The Infanta accordingly rose up with much dignity, and having given orders that the little Dwarf was to dance again for her after the hour of siesta, and conveyed her thanks to the young Count of Tierra-Nueva for his charming reception, she went back to her apartments, the children following in the same order in which they had entered.

Now when the little Dwarf heard that he was to dance a second time before the Infanta, and by her own express command, he was so proud that he ran out into the garden, kissing the white rose in an absurd ecstasy of pleasure, and making the most uncouth and clumsy gestures of delight.

The Flowers were quite indignant at his daring to intrude into their beautiful home, and when they saw him capering up and down the walks, and waving his arms above his head in such a ridiculous manner, they could not restrain their feelings any longer.

"He is really far too ugly to be allowed to play in any place where we are," cried the Tulips.

"He should drink poppy-juice, and go to sleep for a thousand years," said the great scarlet Lilies, and they grew quite hot and angry.

"He is a perfect horror!" screamed the Cactus. "Why, he is twisted and stumpy, and his head is completely out of proportion with his legs. Really he makes me feel prickly all over, and if he comes near me I will sting him with my thorns."

"And he has actually got one of my best blooms," exclaimed the White Rose-Tree. "I gave it to the Infanta this morning myself, as a birthday present, and he has stolen it from her." And she called out: "Thief, thief, thief!" at the top of her voice.

Even the red Geraniums, who did not usually give themselves airs, and were known to have a great many poor relations themselves, curled up in disgust when they saw him, and when the Violets meekly remarked that though he was certainly extremely plain, still he could not help it, they retorted with a good deal of justice that that was his chief defect, and that there was no reason why one should admire a person because he was incurable; and, indeed, some of the Violets themselves felt that the ugliness of the little Dwarf was almost ostentatious, and that he would have shown much better taste if he had looked sad, or at least pensive, instead of jumping about merrily, and throwing himself into such grotesque and silly attitudes.

As for the old Sundial, who was an extremely remarkable individual, and had once told the time of day to no less a person than the Emperor Charles V. himself, he was so taken aback by the little Dwarf's appearance, that he almost forgot to mark two whole minutes with his long shadowy finger, and could not help saying to the great milk-white Peacock, who was sunning herself on the balustrade, that every one knew that the children of Kings were Kings, and that the children of charcoal-burners were charcoal-burners, and that it was absurd to pretend that it wasn't so; a statement with which the Peacock entirely agreed, and indeed screamed out, "Certainly, certainly," in such a loud, harsh voice, that the gold-fish who lived in the basin of the cool splashing fountain put their heads out of the water, and asked the huge stone Tritons what on earth was the matter.

But somehow the Birds liked him. They had seen him often in the forest, dancing about like an elf after the eddying leaves, or crouched up in the hollow of some old oak-tree, sharing his nuts with the squirrels. They did not mind his being ugly a bit. Why, even the nightingale herself, who sang so sweetly in the orange groves at night that sometimes the Moon leaned down to listen, was not much to look at after all; and, besides, he had been kind to them, and during that terribly bitter winter, when there were no berries on the trees, and the ground was as hard as iron, and the wolves had come down to the very gates of the city to look for food, he had never once forgotten them, but had always given them crumbs out of his little hunch of black bread, and divided with them whatever poor breakfast he had.

So they flew round and round him, just touching his cheek with their wings as they passed, and chattered to each other, and the little Dwarf was so pleased that he could not help showing them the beautiful white rose, and telling them that the Infanta herself had given it to him because she loved him.

They did not understand a single word of what he was saying, but that made no matter, for they put their heads on one side, and looked wise, which is quite as good as understanding a thing, and very much easier.

The Lizards also took an immense fancy to him, and when he grew tired of running about and flung himself down on the grass to rest, they played and romped all over him, and tried to amuse him in the best way they could. "Every one cannot be as beautiful as a lizard," they cried; "that would be too much to expect. And, though it sounds absurd to say so, he is really not so ugly after all, provided, of course, that one shuts one's eyes, and does not look at him." The Lizards were extremely philosophical by nature, and often sat thinking for hours and hours together, when there was nothing else to do, or when the weather was too rainy for them to go out.

The Flowers, however, were excessively annoyed at their behaviour, and at the behaviour of the birds. "It only shows," they said, "what a vulgarising effect this incessant rushing and flying about has. Well-bred people always stay exactly in the same place, as we do. No one ever saw us hopping up and down the walks, or galloping madly through the grass after dragon-flies. When we do want change of air, we send for the gardener, and he carries us to another bed. This is dignified, and as it should be. But birds and lizards have no sense of repose, and indeed birds have not even a permanent address. They are mere vagrants like the gipsies, and should be treated in exactly the same manner." So they put their noses in the air, and looked very haughty, and were quite delighted when after some time they saw the little Dwarf scramble up from the grass, and make his way across the terrace to the palace.

"He should certainly be kept indoors for the rest of his natural life," they said. "Look at his hunched back, and his crooked legs," and they began to titter.

But the little Dwarf knew nothing of all this. He liked the birds and the lizards immensely, and thought that the flowers were the most marvellous things in the whole world, except of course the Infanta, but, then, she had given him the beautiful white rose, and she loved him, and that made a great difference. How he wished that he had gone back with her ! She would have put him on her right hand, and smiled at him, and he would have never left her side, but would have made her his playmate, and taught her all kinds of delightful tricks. For though he had never been in a palace before, he knew a great many wonderful things. He could make little cages out of rushes for the grasshoppers to sing in, and fashion the long jointed bamboo into the pipe that Pan loves to hear. He knew the cry of every bird, and could call the starlings from the tree-top, or the heron from the mere. He knew the trail of every animal, and could track the hare by its delicate footprints, and the boar by the trampled leaves. All the wild-dances he knew, the mad dance in red raiment with the autumn, the light dance in blue sandals over the corn, the dance with white snow-wreaths in winter, and the blossom-dance through the orchards in spring. He knew where the wood-pigeons built their nests, and once when a fowler had snared the parent birds, he had brought up the young ones himself, and had built a little dovecot for them in the cleft of a pollard elm. They were quite tame, and used to feed out of his hands every morning. She would like them, and the rabbits that scurried about in the long fern, and the jays with their steely feathers and black bills, and the hedgehogs that could curl themselves up into prickly balls, and the great wise tortoises that crawled slowly about, shaking their heads and nibbling at the young leaves. Yes, she must certainly come to the forest and play with him. He would give her his own little bed, and would watch outside the window till dawn, to see that the wild horned cattle did not harm her, nor the gaunt wolves creep too near the hut. And at dawn he would tap at the shutters and wake her, and they would go out and dance together all the day long. It was really not a bit lonely in the forest. Sometimes a Bishop rode through on his white mule, reading out of a painted book. Sometimes in their green velvet caps, and their jerkins of tanned deerskin, the falconers passed by, with hooded hawks on their wrists. At vintage-time came the grape-treaders, with purple hands and feet, wreathed with glossy ivy and carrying dripping skins of wine ; and the charcoal-burners sat round their huge braziers at night, watching the dry logs charring slowly in the fire, and roasting chestnuts in the ashes, and the robbers came out of their caves and made merry with them. Once, too, he had seen a beautiful procession winding up the long dusty road to Toledo. The monks went in front singing sweetly, and carrying bright banners and crosses of gold, and then, in silver armour, with matchlocks and pikes, came the soldiers, and in their midst walked three barefooted men, in strange yellow dresses painted all over with wonderful figures, and carrying lighted candles in their hands. Certainly there was a great deal to look at in the forest, and when she was tired he would find a soft bank of moss for her, or carry her in his arms, for he was very strong, though he knew that he was not tall. He would make her a necklace of red bryony berries, that would be quite as pretty as the white berries that she wore on her dress, and when she was tired of them, she could throw them away, and he would find her others. He would bring her acorn-cups and dew-drenched anemones, and tiny glow-worms to be stars in the pale gold of her hair.

But where was she? He asked the white rose, and it made him no answer. The whole Palace seemed asleep, and even where the shutters had not been closed, heavy curtains had been drawn across the windows to keep out the glare. He wandered all round looking for some place through which he might gain an entrance, and at last he caught sight of a little private door that was lying open. He slipped through, and found himself in a splendid hall, far more splendid, he feared, than the forest, there was so much more gilding everywhere, and even the floor was made of great coloured stones, fitted together into a sort of geometrical pattern. But the little Infanta was not there, only some wonderful white statues that looked down on him from their jasper pedestals, with sad blank eyes and strangely smiling lips.

At the end of the hall hung a richly embroidered curtain of black velvet, powdered with suns and stars, the King's favourite devices, and brodered on the colour he loved best. Perhaps she was hiding behind that? He would try at any rate.

So he stole quietly across and drew it aside. No; there was only another room, though a prettier room, he thought, than the one he had just left. The walls were hung with a many-figured green arras of needle-wrought tapestry representing a hunt, the work of some Flemish artists who had spent more than seven years in its composition. It had once been the chamber of Jean le Fou, as he was called, that mad King who was so enamoured of the chase, that he had often tried in his delirium to mount the huge rearing horses, and to drag down the stag on which the great hounds were leaping, sounding his hunting-horn, and stabbing with his dagger at the pale flying deer. It was now used as the council-room, and on the centre table were lying the red portfolios of the ministers, stamped with the gold tulips of Spain, and with the arms and emblems of the house of Hapsburg.

The little Dwarf looked in wonder all round him, and was half afraid to go on. The strange silent horsemen that galloped so swiftly through the long glades without making any noise, seemed to him like those terrible phantoms of whom he had heard the charcoal-burners speaking—the Comprachos, who hunt only at night, and if they meet a man, turn him into a hind, and chase him. But he thought of the pretty Infanta, and took courage. He wanted to find her alone, and to tell her that he too loved her. Perhaps she was in the room beyond.

He ran across the soft Moorish carpets, and opened the door. No ! She was not here either. The room was quite empty.

It was a throne-room, used for the reception of foreign ambassadors, when the King, which of late had not been often, consented to give them a personal audience ; the same room in which, many years before, envoys had appeared from England to make arrangements for the marriage of their Queen, then one of the Catholic sovereigns of Europe, with the Emperor's eldest son. The hangings were of gilt Cordovan leather, and a heavy gilt chandelier with branches for three hundred wax lights hung down from the black and white ceiling. Underneath a great canopy of gold cloth, on which the lions and towers of Castile were brodered in seed pearls, stood the throne itself, covered with a rich pall of black velvet studded with silver tulips and elaborately fringed with silver and pearls. On the second step of the throne was placed the kneeling-stool of the Infanta, with its cushion of cloth of silver tissue, and below that again, and beyond the limit of the canopy, stood the chair for the Papal Nuncio, who alone had the right to be seated in the King's presence on the occasion of any public ceremonial, and whose Cardinal's hat, with its tangled scarlet tassels, lay on a purple tabouret in front. On the wall, facing the throne, hung a life-sized portrait of Charles V. in hunting-dress, with a great mastiff by his side, and a picture of Philip II. receiving the homage of the Netherlands occupied the centre of the other wall. Between the windows stood a black ebony cabinet, inlaid with plates of ivory, on which the figures from Holbein's Dance of Death had been graved—by the hand, some said, of that famous master himself.

But the little Dwarf cared nothing for all this magnificence. He would not have given his rose for all the pearls on the canopy, nor one white petal of his rose for the throne itself. What he wanted was to see the Infanta before she went down to the pavilion, and to ask her to come away with him when he had finished his dance. Here, in the Palace, the air was close and heavy, but in the forest the wind blew free, and the sunlight with wandering hands of gold moved the tremulous leaves aside. There were flowers, too, in the forest, not so splendid, perhaps, as the flowers in the garden, but more sweetly scented for all that ; hyacinths in early spring that flooded with waving purple the cool glens, and grassy knolls ; yellow primroses that nestled in little clumps round the gnarled roots of the oak-trees ; bright celandine, and blue speedwell, and irises lilac and gold. There were grey catkins on the hazels, and the foxgloves drooped with the weight of their dappled bee-haunted cells. The chestnut had its spires of white stars, and the hawthorn its pallid moons of beauty. Yes : surely she would come if he could only find her ! She would come with him to the fair forest, and all day long he would dance for her delight. A smile lit up his eyes at the thought, and he passed into the next room.

Of all the rooms this was the brightest and the most beautiful. The walls were covered with a pink-flowered Lucca damask, patterned with birds and dotted with dainty blossoms of silver ; the furniture was of massive silver, festooned with florid wreaths, and swinging Cupids ; in front of the two large fire-places stood great screens broïdered with parrots and peacocks, and the floor, which was of sea-green onyx, seemed to stretch far away into the distance. Nor was he alone. Standing under the shadow of the doorway, at the extreme end of the room, he saw a little figure watching him. His heart trembled, a cry of joy broke from his lips, and he moved out into the sunlight. As he did so, the figure moved out also, and he saw it plainly.

The Infanta ! It was a monster, the most grotesque monster he had ever beheld. Not properly shaped, as all other people were, but hunchbacked, and crooked-limbed, with huge lolling head and mane of black hair. The little Dwarf frowned, and the monster frowned also. He laughed, and it laughed with him, and held its hands to its sides, just as he himself was doing. He made it a mocking bow, and it returned him a low reverence. He went towards it, and it came to meet him, copying each step that he made, and stopping when he stopped himself. He shouted with amusement, and ran forward, and reached out his hand, and the hand of the monster touched his, and it was as cold as ice. He grew afraid, and moved his hand across, and the monster's hand followed it quickly. He tried to press on, but something smooth and hard stopped him. The face of the monster was now close to his own, and seemed full of terror. He brushed his hair off his eyes. It imitated him. He struck at it, and it returned blow for blow. He loathed it, and it made hideous faces at him. He drew back, and it retreated.

What is it? He thought for a moment, and looked round at the rest of the room. It was strange, but everything seemed to have its double in this invisible wall of clear water. Yes, picture for picture was repeated, and couch for couch. The sleeping Faun that lay in the alcove by the doorway had its twin brother that slumbered, and the silver Venus that stood in the sunlight held out her arms to a Venus as lovely as herself.

Was it Echo? He had called to her once in the valley, and she had answered him word for word. Could she mock the eye as she mocked the voice? Could she make a mimic world just like the real world? Could the shadows of things have colour and life and movement? Could it be that——? He started, and taking from his breast the beautiful white rose, he turned round and kissed it. The monster had a rose of its own, petal for petal the same! It kissed it with like kisses, and pressed it to its heart with horrible gestures.

When the truth dawned upon him, he gave a wild cry of despair, and fell sobbing to the ground. So it was he who was misshapen and hunchbacked, foul to look at and grotesque. He himself was the monster, and it was at him that all the children had been laughing, and the little Princess who he had thought loved him—she too had been merely mocking at his ugliness, and making merry over his twisted limbs. Why had they not left him in the forest, where there was no mirror to tell him how loathsome he was? Why had his father not killed him, rather than sell him to his shame? The hot tears poured down his cheeks, and he tore the white rose to pieces. The sprawling monster did the same, and scattered the faint petals in the air. It grovelled on the ground, and, when he looked at it, it watched him with a face drawn with pain. He crept away, lest he should see it, and covered his eyes with his hands. He crawled, like some wounded thing, into the shadow, and lay there moaning.

And at that moment the Infanta herself came in with her companions through the open window, and when they saw the ugly little Dwarf lying on the ground and beating the floor with his clenched hands, in the most fantastic and exaggerated manner, they went off into shouts of happy laughter, and stood all round him and watched him.

"His dancing was funny," said the Infanta; "but his acting is funnier still. Indeed he is almost as good as the puppets, only of course not quite so natural." And she fluttered her big fan, and applauded.

But the little Dwarf never looked up, and his sobs grew fainter and fainter, and suddenly he gave a curious gasp, and clutched his side. And then he fell back again, and lay quite still.

"That is capital," said the Infanta, after a pause; "but now you must dance for me."

"Yes," cried all the children, "you must get up and dance, for you are as clever as the Barbary apes, and much more ridiculous."

But the little Dwarf made no answer.

And the Infanta stamped her foot, and called out to her uncle, who was walking on the terrace with the Chamberlain, reading some despatches that had just arrived from Mexico, where the Holy Office had recently been established. "My funny little dwarf is sulking," she cried; "you must wake him up, and tell him to dance for me."

They smiled at each other, and sauntered in, and Don Pedro stooped down, and slapped the Dwarf on the cheek with his embroidered glove. "You must dance," he said, "petit monstre. You must dance. The Infanta of Spain and the Indies wishes to be amused."

But the little Dwarf never moved.

"A whipping master should be sent for," said Don Pedro wearily, and he went back to the terrace. But the Chamberlain looked grave, and he knelt beside the little Dwarf, and put his hand upon his heart. And after a few moments he shrugged his shoulders, and rose up, and having made a low bow to the Infanta, he said:

"Mi bella Princesa, your funny little dwarf will never dance again. It is a pity, for he is so ugly that he might have made the King smile."

"But why will he not dance again?" asked the Infanta, laughing.

"Because his heart is broken," answered the Chamberlain.

And the Infanta frowned, and her dainty rose-leaf lips curled in pretty disdain. "For the future let those who come to play with me have no hearts," she cried, and she ran out into the garden.

MAUREEN'S FAIRING

“WELL, good-night to you kindly, ma'am,” said Mrs. Halpin to Mrs. O'Dell, who had escorted her guest to the gap in the low furzy bank, which formed her entrance gate. As the two old women stood at it, they were looked down upon by almost the whole height of a dark mountain, whose purple summit was crested and jagged like the battlements of a thunder-cloud ; for the white and russet cabin had been set only a little way up the first climbing slope. Across the narrow valley they confronted a range of hills softer and greener, whose ridge still rose into the light of the summer sun-setting ; but the valley itself was full of long shadows, and its windings ended to right and left in a faint haze, paler and dimmer than the melting gyres of blue smoke.

“ I dunno what to say to it at all,” said Mrs. O'Dell, who having discussed the situation thoroughly with her gossip indoors was naturally inclined to reopen the subject at the last moment. “ Not a soul, so to spake, to be doin' a hand's turn about the place, except meself, that hasn't as much strength left in me as you'd put on the point of a knife. Sure it's to wrack and ruin we're goin' as aisy as a horse runnin' away down hill. And as for the rint—after gettin' no price for our fine heifer——”

“ 'Deed then, ma'am,” said Mrs. Halpin, “ I always said you were a cruel unlucky woman, wid your poor son and the wife took on you that way, and the grand-daughter not able for anythin', bein' dark, the crathur, the Lord may pity her. But there's that brother of hers now—sure Rody's a big grown lad, and if he was worth a thraneen at all, he might be keepin' things together for the two of you.”

“ Is it Rody ? Ah, now, I wouldn't say he was too bad-manin' a poor lad whatever,” said Rody's grandmother ; “ but sorra the ha'porth of use. Moonin' about the place he'll be from mornin' till night, and what he'll ha' got done at the end of it the dear knows, only it isn't a stroke of work. Bedad it's surprisin' the sinse he hasn't got, and he no stookawn, mind you, all the time. Ready enough he is at the book-learnin'. Some talk he has of the school-master findin' him a place off away at Kilmacrum, but I wouldn't think he'll ever go for to be lavin' Maureen; and it's lost she'd be widout him. Rael good he is to her, I'll say that for him. He'd be hard set to make more of her if she could see from this to the land of Agypt and back agin."

"Sure, woman dear, it's quare world entirely," said Mrs. Halpin, resorting to general propositions for lack of any more particularly appropriate, "and the longer you live in it, the quarer it seems to be gettin'. You'd ha' thought you'd be apt to grow used to it, och wirra, it's the other way round. . . . But, musha, there's himself creepin' home," she continued, pointing to a figure on the road a little way below. "I must be steppin' along after him, for if he come to our place afore me, like enough he might have it in blazes over our heads, and he fiddlin' with the fire; he's that foostherin' and feeble these times, poor man."

"Somewhiles," said Mrs. O'Dell, "it seems to me the whole of us together's no betther than the black ould flies, when it's near winther on them, and they do be crawlin' about on their legs just for the name of keepin' alive. Och, but I'll be glad meself to creep into me bed now as soon as the childher come in. These fine evenin's they're mostly sittin' up above there at the ould Rath; and they've such contintment together, the crathurs, that I haven't the heart to be bawlin' them in, as long as there's a shadow of light in the air at all."

To the old Rath a short length of steep path led up through a screen of stunted oaks and beeches. It was a circular space of smooth green turf, marked out by curved banks of the same material, now worn down to a very unobtrusively artificial aspect. Here and there they were fortified by bushes of thorn and briar, but in one place they had crumbled into a wide gap, giving on the mountain slope, rougher ground with tussocks and clumps of coarse grass and furze and bracken. About this time Rody O'Dell and his twin sister, Maureen, who was blind, were sitting under a sloe bush nearly opposite to the gap. Rody looked as if he had on a burnished copper skullcap, his red hair was so short and sleek, and his grey eyes were light and bright; but Maureen was black-haired, and her eyes were much the colour of the wild violets which she had sometimes gathered, though never seen. She had now pulled a spike of foxglove blooms, and was poking her finger down their speckled throats with an air of enjoyment. Her touch was so fine that it only pilfered a little gold dust from each without hurt to the frailest filament. Rody was whittling away at a snaggy piece of a stick.

"Themselves had a right to be in it soon," Maureen said presently; and Rody replied: "Sure they'll be comin' this now, no fear." However, the girl listened, and the boy looked for some minutes more, and nothing seemed to arrive. Then both of them exclaimed at once with suppressed eagerness: "Here they are." There was not apparently much cause for excitement. Ordinarily sharp ears might never have noticed the faint rustling among the drier fern-fronds; ordinarily keen eyes might have overlooked in the thickening light the whisked glimpses of white and brown, scuttling from clump to clump; and, in fact, it was after all merely the rabbits coming out to play in the dusk. Yet the event had plainly deep interest for the two O'Dells. Rody left off whittling his stick, and kept a close watch on the scampering rushes, while Maureen sat still with the expression of one who expects news. At last she said: "Is there plinty of them comin' to-night, Rody?" "Ay is there," he said; "sure the place is thick wid them along under the big bohalawns."

"Ah, now that's great," said Maureen, with a sigh of satisfaction, for she, of course, knew as well as possible that these golden-tufted rag-weeds are especially sacred to the little people, and may be orthodoxly associated with their proceedings. "And what 'ud you think they're goin' to be at to-night, Rody?" she asked again after a short silence.

"Just let me see," said Rody, staring hard in among the curved bracken-stalks and flat furze-boughs. "I'll tell you what—I declare to goodness, it looks like as if it was a fair they were having—ay, bedad, and it is so; a cattle fair, no less, wid every manner of little baste a-dhrivin' out to it. Och, but that bates all."

"Good-luck to them then," said Maureen, "that's grand entirely. Sure you never seen the likes of it before. And what sort of crathurs is the fairy bastes?"

"Sure just the one thing wid what cattle we have ourselves," said Rody, "only the quarest little bigness on them that ever you beheld. Be jabers now, there's a drove of bullocks after goin' by, and scarce a one of them the size of a keerhogue (clock). The whole of them 'ud trot aisy on the palm of me hand."

"Och, glory be to goodness to think of that. And is there any horses and sheep in it, and pigs?"

"Plinty, bedad. Is it pigs? Faix, here's little feller comin' along wid a couple, and he is as drunk as a fiddler, or I might say ould Dan Cosby that I seen dhroppin' in a hape off the car yisterday below Letterdrum."

"I never heard tell the good people 'ud be drinkin'," said Maureen, looking rather scandalised.

"Ah, well, sure maybe he's only lettin' on. But what 'ud you suppose they've got be way of cattle-pens? The peelin's of the apple you had aitin' here last night. They've set it up on an end in a ring like, and where it doesn't raich quite far enough, they've joined it wid dandelion stalks as iligant as you plase."

"'Deed, now, that's a fine invintion whatever. It's themselves do be rael cute."

"And here's a fairy man and a boy, and they ladin' a big sturk of a shaggy ould bull. Be the same token, they'll have their own work wid him, for a crosser lookin' ould divil I niver set eyes on. Bedad, if he was as big as he's little, he'd be apt to be doin' destruction on all before him; but sure you could lift him between your finger and thumb, same as if it was a dowlduff; and suppose he tried hornin' you, 'twould be no more than a sort of prickle." To illustrate this, Rody broke off a sloe-thorn, and gently prodded the back of his sister's hand. "There, you might think that was him," he said, "and he lettin' a weeny roar—moo-oo-ah—like a hummin' bee goin' by in the air."

"And the hair on him 'ud be somethin' as soft and furry feelin'," said Maureen reflectively. "Them fairy bastes must be gay little crathurs. Rody, I wish to goodness 'twould stay summer wid us all the year round, the way we'd get the chance to be watchin' for them ivery evenin'. But go on tellin' me what all else they have."

"Musha, all manner of iverythin'. Here's a one of them jiggin' along on a terrible fine sorrel horse, a thrifle higher-standin' than a big grasshopper. Thunder and turf! More power to your honour's elbow—sure there was a troop of pigs and such thrapesin' in front of him that put him past his patience, so he up and lep clane over the back of a bonyeen (young pig), and it's after frightenin' a little ould woman till she's let a pair of chickens flutther out of her basket on her—troth you might think they were a couple of specklety moths flickerin' over the grass—and now the whole lot's high-skyin' after them as hard as they can pelt be way of catchin' them. . . . Och, and to see the rate a flock of wee black-faced sheep's racin' round and round a stalk of hemlock, wid their bit of a colley doin' his endeavours to turn them ; but they're past his conthrol."

" It's quare that I don't hear e'er a bark out of him," said Maureen, " for when they're drivin' the sheep on the hills over beyond there, I hear them yap-yappin' the length of the day, and themselves as far off as you'd run in an hour or more."

" But sure there aren't many could bate you at hearin', Maureen," said Rody, " and you don't considher what a scrapeen of a crathur it is. A good-sized ladybird might as well be settin' up for a dog. He couldn't rise a noise 'ud raich that far, not if he barked wid ivery bone in his body."

" Sure not at all," Maureen said acquiescently, being wont to regard Rody's utterances as conclusively oracular. Still her face kept its listening expression, and in a minute she said : " There—I heard somethin' that time."

She was not mistaken. But when the approaching sounds strengthened into distinctness, they proved to be caused by very merely a mortal. Across the tussocky slope came a tall young man in a sailor's blue jersey, with a black woollen cap on his head, and in his hand a redly wrapped-up bundle. As he passed along, rabbits dived out of sight all around, but bobbed up again almost before the parted bracken-fronds had swung together.

" Why, it's Christy M'Kenna," said Rody. " I seen him yisterday down below. What the mischief's bringin' him here ? " Rody's tone implied dissatisfaction with the event, whatever the cause might have been, and Maureen looked half inclined to run away like the rabbits ; but she compromised the matter by drawing her little heather-green shawl further over her black hair, and shrinking into the shadow of the sloe-bush.

" Good evenin' to yous," said Christy, coming up to the bank. " Well, Rody, did you get anythin' of a dacint price for the little heifer ? " 'Twas but a slack fair." There was nothing repellent or formidable in the good-humoured bronze of Christy's visage, and his voice struck Maureen as being rather reassuringly pleasant, though she feared that it would scare away the fairy folk.

" Och, she wint chape enough ; cattle was down to nothin' at all," Rody replied, with some grumpy indifference of tone. He had resumed his whittling, and just now slashed at a rough knot with so little dexterity that the knife slipped out of his hand, and went flying into the tangle at his feet, an accident which added to his discomposure.

"Is it watchin' the rabbits you were?" said Christy. "There's a great gatherin' of them out on the hill-side to-night. You could have knocked them over handy wid a stick comin' through the furzes."

As Rody was groping on his hands and knees for his knife, he could not answer promptly, and before he had spoken, Maureen said, as if startled into speech: "Rabbits? I niver heard tell there were any in it. Sure it's the fairies there are in among the bushes, and that's what we're lookin' at."

Christy laughed a little. "Begorrah, thin, I think the rabbits has put them out of it this night, body and bones," he said, "for ne'er a sign of a sheogue did I notice at all at all."

"Rody sez the place is full of them," said Maureen. "Isn't it, Rody?"

Her appeal placed Rody in a painful dilemma. He did not wish to undeceive her, yet he was loth to profess a belief which might seem ridiculous to the much-travelled Christy, while again pride on his sister's behalf made him shrink from obviously humouring her in the presence of a stranger. Under other circumstances the difficulty might have been got over by his mother wit, but at the moment he was out of temper, which sorely blunts the edge of shrewdness; and he adopted, perhaps, the most ill-judged course he could have chosen when he said to Christy in what he supposed to be an aside: "Arrah now, man alive, can't you whisht gabbin' about rabbits?" For Maureen's quick ears caught the words, and they filled her with dismayed suspicion. She leaned forward, saying anxiously and eagerly: "But the good people come to the Rath here 'most ivery fine evenin'—sure, Rody, you haven't been only humbuggin' me all these times?"

But Rody remained guiltily silent, while Christy, perplexed at the girl's evident distress, answered as discreetly as he could in his ignorance of its cause: "Well, at all evints, them crathurs was all I seen about just now: but sure there might aisy ha' been an odd fairy or so through them, and I niver notice it. They'll do no harm anyway, here or there."

This philosophic view of the matter was not consolatory to Maureen. She rose to her feet, and stood for a moment with drooping head. "I wish," she said without looking up, "I wish I had the sight of me eyes, the way that people couldn't be makin' a fool of me." Then she turned slowly away, and sat down again on the bank at a little distance. I think she had lost something more than her evening's entertainment, and faith in Rody—certain vague dreams based upon traditions of wonderful cures wrought by the good people when found in a kindly mood, a chance that might happen to anybody one of those days. The two young men eyed each other ruefully through the gathering dusk. Said Christy in an undertone: "What ails her at all?"

"Botheration to it," said Rody, "sure you see, she not havin' her sight, we do be at a loss now and agin for a bit of divarsion; so I used to get tellin' her quare ould invintions, whin the rabbits come out here of an evenin', lettin' on to her 'twas the fairies were in it, and this way and that way. And, bedad, now themselves is the comical little divils, wid their thricks and their capers, and that's no lie," he added, as if in self-defence. Strange as the freak of conscience may appear, it is a fact that on nights when no rabbits were to be seen, he had never reported any fairy doings. "She'd take a won'erful pleasure in hearin' about anythin' off the common like; but she won't now that she knows 'twas only romancin'. And I doubt she's a thrifle vexed, the crathur," Rody said, glancing compunctiously towards his sister.

"Ah, now, that's a rael bad job," said Christy, with unfeigned concern. "Faith, if I'd known, I'd ha' liefer lost a month's pay than to be spoilin' her stories on her. But, sure, if it's a fancy she has for hearin' curious things, I meself could be tellin' her plenty that 'ud surprise her finely, and as thrue, more be token, as the sky over our heads. Why, what 'ud you say to an affair I seen, maybe a little better than a couple of months ago," Christy went on, raising his voice, not unintentionally, "and we sailin' home from the United States? A big hill, the full size of one of them forninst us, swimmin' along on the say, and ivery bit of it nothin' but clane ice, as clear and as green as the deep wather; the same as if you could be buildin' up a great hape o' rowlin' waves, and the top of it all white, powdered wid snow, like as if it was settlin' to foam over the edges. That's quare now? And a grand watherfall leppin' right down from the heighth of it, wid the sun turnin' it all the colours in the rainbow, till the sparklin' of it 'ud 'most——"

An indignant murmur from Rody cut him short: "Musha, man, where'd be the sinse of blatherin' about rainbows sparklin', to her that's had niver a chance to see a shine out of the sun in all her life's days? Sure, when I'm tellin' her aught, I keep describin' the things accordin' to the littleness and bigness of them, and the feelin' and shapes they have ; and so she gets some sort of notion what I'm talkin' about. But you may let the sun alone."

Upon this a crestfallen silence succeeded Christy's traveller's tale. Presently, however, his face brightened with a sudden thought, and he began to unknot a corner of his bundle. "Whethen now, only I was stookawn enough to nearly disremimber it," he said. "I've somethin' here she might belike take a fancy to." He extricated a beautiful tropical shell, whose lily-white whorls were lined with a flush of wild-rose pink. "Wouldn't you think she might be pleased handlin' that ?" he said. "And the say hummin' it has in it she could hear as well, in course, as another."

"She might, may be," Rody said doubtfully ; and Christy considered himself encouraged to try the experiment. Going over to Maureen, he touched her hand softly with the shell, saying in his most persuasive manner : "Just thry the feel of that in your hand, mavourneen. I'm afther showin' it to your brother there, and he's in great admiration of it."

Maureen took the shell, and ran her fingers swiftly along the delicate outlines, fine in texture as a blossom, and firm as marble. A happier look stole into her face. "What at all is it ?" she said.

"Sure it's just a sort of shell. I picked it up meself one day off the strand near the town of Kingston in Jamaica. Lyin' it was in the sand, that's as soft there as fine male, and as hot as if it was gettin' a bake in the oven. But hold it to your ear a minute—so, that a-way—and you'll hear somethin' 'ill surprise you."

"Saints above !" said Maureen, listening, not without awe. "It's like the win' blustherin' by when you're under the tree branches, wid a sound of the chapel-bell through it, as if 'twas near blown away, and somethin' else besides—I dunno what."

"That's the taste of the say-waves roarin' ; it's kep' inside it. Och, now, you wouldn't be askin' me to take it back ? Keep it yourself, jewel, and then you can be hearin' it hummin' whenever you like. I've plinty more the same, only diff'rint pattrons. Some of them's as round and as shiny as a chiny bowl, and some's the shape of grand big saucers. And I've a string of bades, the iligantest blue colour—och, no matter about that—but they're that smooth you could scarce hold them from slippin' out of your hand. And I've the quarest sort of a big ball, that looks to be wound round and round and round wid threads of silk as thin as cobwebs ; and what's inside of it I can't say, but if you shake it, you'll hear it rattlin' like a glugger (bad egg). It's somethin' rael uncommon, I'm thinkin'. So, if you'd e'er a fancy to see them, I'd step over and bring them to-morra, wid all the pleasure in life. I lost me ship be raison of me father bein' took bad last week, and I'm stoppin' a while wid me sister down at Letterdrum. May be them things 'ud divert you a bit."

"Ay would they," Maureen said softly.

At this moment a shrill and querulous call came quavering up the hill : " Childher, musha, good gracious, childher, is it sittin' out there you'd be till the sun's risin', and keepin' me waitin' up for you, wid the head noddin' off of me shoulders ? "

" There's granny lettin' a screech to us," said Rody, standing up from his search for his knife, and glad to end what seemed to him an unlucky evening. " We had a right to be goin' in."

" Well, I'll step over here to-morra wid the whole of them," Christy said to Maureen, " about this time, or perhaps in the mornin' if I can ; but I'll bring them, at any rate."

" They'll be grand," said Maureen. " And—and I'd like to hear tell, mind you, about the big ice hill, wid the watherfall on it, and all. Sure I know well enough about the sun shinin'. It's only the way Rody will be talkin'," she said, with rather ungrateful disparagement. Indeed, from henceforth, I believe, Rody, regarded as her oracle, may be said to have fallen dumb.

One fine rose-latticed evening, a few weeks later, old Mrs. O'Dell had another gossip with her neighbour, Mrs. Halpin, standing at her door. " Ay, indeed, it's a great thing for us entirely," said she in reply to a congratulatory remark. " The M'Kennas is a rael dacint family, and Christy has a bit of money saved that he's willing to put in the farm. And Rody's got a fine place down below at Athbeg, that he's goin' to after the weddin'. Och, now, who'd ha' iver thought of such a thing happenin' Maureen, the crathur ? Sure I sez to Christy himself, when he was talkin' to me about it : ' Goodness help you, lad,' sez I, ' and what at all will you be doin' wid only a dark wife to keep house for you ? ' And sez he to me : ' Bedad, ma'am, I'll tell you that aisy, if you'll tell me what I'm to do widout her ; for me soul to the saints, if I know, be any manner of manes.' That's what he said. Christy's always plisant. There, that's the three of them comin' along the lane. Ay, sure it's great good luck altogether."

KATHERINE TYNAN

(Mrs. HINKSON)

B. 1861

AT THE SPOTTED LAMB

MRS. LUMLEY at The Spotted Lamb had a gentleman in her best rooms, the like of whom did not often come to Rosegarland. He had arrived by the coach from London on a Tuesday, and had now for three weeks been Mrs. Lumley's lodger.

He dressed modestly in garments of Quaker grey or snuff-brown, but the suits were cut with distinction. His hair had been powdered the day he came and tied in a queue with ribbons : but powder will not last for ever, and there were no perruquiers in Rosegarland village, so the gentleman's brown hair, dusty from the powder or perhaps from the passage of time, had come in view.

He wore flowered waistcoats, magnificent although sober, and his linen was of the finest. His coat and breeches, although of woollen stuff, were of a fineness that exceeded silk. It was a pity, said Mrs. Lumley, who was a kind soul, to see how the garments had been stuffed headlong into his travelling-bag. Under her kind hands they had somewhat recovered from their evil treatment, being laid away with lavender bags between the folds in the bow-shaped chest of drawers and the mahogany wardrobe, great enough to have held all Bluebeard's wives.

Rosegarland village lies pleasantly upon a hill. The strange gentleman's bedroom—he called himself Mr. Jones—stood endways to the valley. The window of one of its closets looked over the valley, and at night the songs of the nightingales came in by it. Across the fireplace, which was laid with tiles representing the parable of the Prodigal Son, was another closet, a powdering-closet, which did not admit a chink of light, and was hung with clothes-pegs and shelved to the roof.

The powdering-closet interested Mr. Jones. Mrs. Lumley was very ready to talk about it. Many a lady had had her head dressed there in Squire Alvanley's time, when there were hunt-balls and the like at The Spotted Lamb. That was thirty years ago, and the Place had been shut up these many years. It was another world without the Alvanleys.

It was the first suggestion he had made that he was a man of fashion, though Mrs. Lumley, with her memories of the Alvanleys and their fine friends, had never doubted it.

"Ah but, sir," she said, "the winter will come and 'twill not be so pretty. Your honour will go back to town then."

"Not I. I am sick of the town. I want the simplicities of life. There will be beauties in winter—a sky of rose and lilac over there beyond the Alvanleys' chimney-stacks and a flight of crows upon it. And the brooks cutting channels in the roads when the wet weather comes, and shouting and singing as they run. And all the world charmed to stillness in a frost. And the old church over there huddled under its mantle of snow. There is nothing like the tossing of trees in a gale to rock a child, or a man for the matter of that, asleep."

Mrs. Lumley looked at him wonderingly.

"I'd have taken your honour for a countryman to hear you speak."

He laughed and flushed a little.

"'Tis the townsman loves the country best," he said. "Your countryman only knows that the mire is on his boots, however fine the sky."

That night he walked into the inn kitchen and sat down on the settle by the fire, within the shelter of the great screen of oak, so delicately poised that a child's little finger might move it.

The Spotted Lamb was a pleasant place, full of bowery rooms and little intricate passages. But no room in it was as pleasant as the kitchen, that great apartment lined with oak, which contained many cupboards, its table and benches of oak blackened and polished with age, its deep windows full of flowering plants, and its magnificent hearth with the seats either side the logs. A maze of little cupboards was in the walls of it, and about it many hooks to receive riding-whips and spurs and bridles, and such matters.

Mr. Jones made friends with the merry party, and paid for many drinks. Mrs. Lumley could make you a tankard of spiced ale with an apple bobbing in it with any woman, and the spiced ale went round many times. He joined in the chorus of "The Jolly Farmer's Boy" as though he had been a countryman born, and never went wrong in the words or the tune, and he gave Tom Spendlove who sang it a gold guinea.

He was voted the best of good company, and shook hands with every man as they departed in good time.

But there was one, a sullen fellow, Dick Stone of Redstreak Farm, whose face did much to spoil the gaiety; and although he drank of

Russell

Katharine Tegen Hinton

the spiced ale Mr. Jones paid for, he did it as though he was drinking poison.

Mr. Jones commented on it next day to Mrs. Lumley.

"He has been ever so," the good woman said, "since his wife Margery died. She was Margery Dinsdale, a sweet, pretty creature. But her heart wasn't in the marriage; 'twas given to another; and they say Dick Stone knew as how he'd been cheated of her love. I remember Dick Stone merry. But Margery died when Dolly was born and he's been a glum man ever since."

"How was it that she didn't love him?" asked Mr. Jones, who was ever interested in the country tales and could not have enough of them.

"Well, sir, 'twas that good-for-naught Jack Trelawney that won the maid's heart. You'll have heard of him perhaps in the town. They say he's greatly talked of and that the Prince can't live without him and is the finest of gentlemen—that was poor Susan Trelawney's child. Poor Susan, she was a harmless woman, and knew a deal about herbs and such-like; and was downright set on the child, as though she had to make up to him for giving him no father. A handsome, proud boy, and none of us wondered when Squire Alvanley, after he had buried Master Hugh, took Susan's child to rear him as a gentleman."

"If he had had his rights," said Mr. Jones gloomily, "he could have lived at the Place as the Alvanleys did, an honest country-gentleman's life. 'Twas a late atonement of the squire's."

"Your honour has heard the story?"

"A man can't be long at Rosegarland without hearing of the Alvanleys and the last of them, who is bottle-holder to the Prince, and has no name, although the town cuts its coat by his and fears his frown more than God Almighty's. A poor thing to have come to—the arbiter of fashion, the oracle of assembly-rooms, the autocratic ruler of petticoats and periwigs. A thing that carries a clouded cane and smells of essences, whose campaigns are on carpets, who knows more of wax lights than of stars. A poor, pinchbeck image of a man. The Alvanleys were soldiers and sailors and statesmen."

"They say he is brave and good-hearted," Mrs. Lumley said, wondering at Mr. Jones's heat. "And the Prince loves him."

"He has a few foolish feats to his name. He rode his horse, poor beast, up the steps of his father's town-house, and leaped him from a window over a coachful of ladies. He walked to Jerusalem for a wager and played ball against the walls. Fine doings surely. As for the Prince, why, if it comes to that, Jack is no worse than his master, but rather better. His love is a poor thing, that no man, or woman either, is much the better of."

"Why, that is true," said Mrs. Lumley, thinking on the Princess, who, if she was light, had been ill-treated.

"The grass grows up to the windows of the Place," Mr. Jones went on with the same gloomy air. "The peacocks are dead that used to scream on its terraces; the basin where the goldfish swam is broken and the water dried up. The gardens are a wilderness; the rooms moulder to decay. A goddess lies on her face by the steps of the hall door."

"You have seen the Place?"

"I went there yesterday; the old chimneys between the fresh green of the trees made me curious. And so this ill-fated brat of the Alvanleys broke a sweet countrymaid's heart?"

"He forgot that ever he'd broken a sixpence with her when Squire Alvanley, being childless, remembered Susan Trelawney's son. 'Twas no worse than that, your honour!"

"And Margery's child lived?"

"As good and bonny a maid as any in the country. Many lads go courting at Redstreak Farm for all that Dick Stone's not such good company."

A few days later Mr. Jones came back from one of his long solitary walks, and entered the kitchen of The Spotted Lamb with so blithe a step that Mrs. Lumley, who was making cowslip wine, looked up at him in wonder.

"Your honour has liked the walk?" she said.

"It is a land of apples and roses," he answered; "and I have drunk milk from the hands of Hebe herself. I should be a sour fellow to complain."

"Your honour looks well on it. Ten years have rolled off your age since the day the Flying Mercury left your honour at my door."

"Why, I have been bathing my face in May dew. How old would you take me to be, Mrs. Lumley? Fifty? Forty-five? Forty?—I am no more than forty, and I feel young enough for bridegroom to a girl of eighteen. Your air does wonders. The Wells would be deserted if the fine folks only knew."

After that he would break into snatches of song as he moved about the house that brought a smile to Mrs. Lumley's lips, for she had grown fond of her lodger.

Dolly's neck is white as curds,
With a golden freckle or two ;
Dolly's voice is like the birds
In the pastures, in the dew ;
Dolly laughs with Prue and Phyllis,
And her laugh's a shower of lilies.

" Lord, what a pretty song, sir," she said once, " and your honour's self has a voice like a bird's. You sing as if your heart was in it."

" The song was made," said Mr. Jones, " on a milkmaid that was the sweetest thing the songmaker had ever seen. She was taking butter from a churn, and her arms were stripped high above her elbows, and they were white as the milk. She had a head of black curls with a thought of a pansy in their jet ; her eyes, too, were black, but her face was milk and roses ; she had two dimples—what would not a woman of fashion have given for them ?—and a round white chin ; and she wore a pink wrapper ; and because the day was hot she had left her neck bare—the sweetest neck. She made the man think on his old love, but she was his old love's daughter ; and he loved her, as he had loved her mother, at first sight.

Pink is Dolly's only wear ;
Dolly's eyes are black as sloes :
Dolly's always fresh and fair
From her top-knot to her toes."

He broke again into the cheerful singing.

" The song might have been made on Dolly Stone of Redstreak Farm," said Mrs. Lumley. " But, lord, 'tis fitter for a lad to make than a man who had wooed the girl's mother. 'Twould be foolishness in a man of his age."

" Lads don't know how to love," said Mr. Jones, frowning. " They are in love with their own image, like the golden Hyacinthus. It takes an older man to love."

He went away then and sang no more for the day. But the next day he was singing again ; and presently, coming in on Mrs. Lumley as she was making a candy of May-blossom, he nearly made the good woman drop her pan with its fragrant contents, so surprised was she at the fineness of his appearance.

He was dressed in pearl-grey silk, with lace ruffles and jewelled buttons ; he had silk stockings and shoes with red heels to them ; and his three-cornered hat was worn rakishly. Nor did his clothes look too gay for his years, for some magic of the sweet country had wrought a subtle alteration in the man.

The crow's-feet had passed away from his eyes and they were bright, as though he had washed them in euphrasy. His cheeks, which had had the stain of wine in them, had grown clear since he had lived plainly. His face and figure and gait had become tonic, braced-up, as though he had found a fountain of youth in these wilds and had drunk deep of it.

" Well ! "

He smiled at the good woman's open-mouthed admiration.

" You are like a bridegroom, sir."

" Well, who knows but that I may be one before the summer is out ? "

He went off twirling his cane and singing ; and the same song was on his lips perpetually in the weeks that followed, while the sweet spring turned round to summer.

Dolly dabbles fingers brown
In the whitest milk that flows ;
Dolly wears a rosy gown,
Smells of roses as she goes.

It was always Dolly : always and for ever Dolly.

It was not long before the gossip of the village came to Mrs. Lumley, and she knew that the Dolly of the song was the Dolly of Redstreak Farm. It seemed that Mr. Jones had made friends with glum Dick Stone, who was well pleased that his daughter should marry a gentleman. And about the girl herself no one seemed to know. Young Oliver Buckenham of Meadowsweet Farm had been courting her before Mr. Jones came ; but now they had quarrelled, and no one thought it strange that she should have thrown over Oliver for her splendid new lover, although he was middle-aged.

And for the matter of that he grew younger every day, although he could not hope to have the smooth cheek and thick yellow hair of a lad like Oliver. Yet Oliver grew old while his fortunate rival grew young, and sang no more to his team of horses nor as he mowed the hay ; and people hardly knew him for the same merry fellow who had been as blithe as the lark.

One day when Mr. Jones was absent, as he usually was the greater part of the day, two gentlemen rode up to The Spotted Lamb and asked if such a one, describing him, had lodgings in the village.

"It will be Mr. Jones," said Mrs. Lumley. "If your honours would be pleased to wait. He generally returns about this hour."

The gentlemen gave their horses to be fed and watered, and while they waited for Mr. Jones they ordered and consumed a meal of Mrs. Lumley's cold roast beef and fresh garden salad, with home-brewed ale; and were so free with their money and so finely dressed and had such a way with the serving-maids of the house that the good woman set them down in her mind as highwaymen. Of course that would explain the mystery about Mr. Jones and why a retired place like Rosegarland was best suited to him. But she was grieved to think that it was so; for however gallant highwaymen might be and adored by the girls, they were meat for the gallows if they were caught.

When Mr. Jones came in suddenly upon them, his eyes flashed, and the old gloom fell upon his face, and when they cried out, laughing, that at last they had run him to earth he fell to swearing at them, so that Mrs. Lumley shut the door hastily, for Mr. Jones had been so gentle in speech that she had sometimes doubted that he was a man of fashion; and his new violence troubled her.

For more than two hours there was the sound of much argument from the parlour, and Mrs. Lumley learned, because there was a cupboard in her store-closet adjoining where the wall was thin, that they were trying to prevail upon Mr. Jones to go with them, urging upon him that some one, whose name she could not catch, was inconsolable without him. But to that Mr. Jones answered bitterly that that person had no loyalty to any one except in so far as he or she ministered to his pleasures. Moreover, that he was tired of that person's insolence, being a better man than he; that he had loved him once but loved him no longer; and finally that he would never return. And the same he asserted with a round oath and a blow of his clenched fist on the table that made Mrs. Lumley jump at the other side of the partition.

The two gentlemen rode away at sundown, calling back to Mr. Jones, who stood bareheaded in the road to see them go, that he would soon tire of his stay in Arcady and come back to town. He was gloomy for that evening, but the next day he was as merry as ever, and for many days following.

His clothes had come down from town, many chests of them, by the coach ; and he hardly ever seemed to wear the same suit two days running. His attire was the delight and admiration of the village, and Mrs. Lumley never saw him but with uplifted eyes and hands of admiration.

One day as he passed out he paused and asked her if she remembered what she had said about the song of Dolly and him that made it, and how it was fitter for a lad than a mature man.

"Do you think still," he asked, "that she would prefer a rustic lad in homespuns, with hay in his hair and smelling of his occupation, before a town gallant."

"Why, it would depend, sir, on whether she had a true heart," said Mrs. Lumley simply.

"Might not her heart be true to the gallant as well?" he asked, and then went out without waiting for an answer.

Being a lover, he was a creature of whims and moods ; and the evening following he came in with a dejected air, and put his hand on Mrs. Lumley's shoulder.

"You were right," said he, "when you said that the clock of Time could never be turned backward. If I could make a bargain to sell my soul to get my youth back, I would do it."

"Don't say such things, sir," pleaded Mrs. Lumley, almost tearfully. "As for talking about the clock of Time, that I never did ; I leave such things to my betters."

It was now the time when the wild roses hung all the hedgerows, and the faint sweet scent of them was like wine in the air. The honeysuckle, too, was out, golden as honey and as sweet ; and the rank sweetness of the elder-blossom was everywhere. The hay lay new in the meadows and the corncrake was silent at last in the moonlit nights. The time of the nightingale was over ; and soon the year would be sober and would carry the air of a matron, although she was now in the flush of youth.

And Mr. Jones had the air of a triumphing lover. He and Dolly were to be made man and wife in July ; and every one seemed to have forgotten Oliver Buckenham except Mrs. Lumley, who had a compassionate heart, and had come on the lad, face downwards in the honeyed swathes of the hay, one day as she took the short-cut by Wood-End to the village of Farley.

"Shall we have a hauling home of the bride to The Spotted Lamb, your honour?" she asked of Mr. Jones.

He went with his head so much in the air those days that it might well be he had thought of nothing so practical as the roof that was to cover himself and his bride. But he had thought of it, and a fine sensation there was when it was known that Alvanley Place had come into his hands, and was to be made ready for Dick Stone's daughter. Many people, though they had liked pretty Dolly, thought it little short of a scandal that she was to sit in old Madam Alvanley's seat.

There were others who said that Dick Stone had got more joy of the marriage than his daughter, and that pretty Dolly's roses were withering. But if it was so her infatuated lover saw nothing of it.

Dolly's mouth is filled with pearls,
Damask roses on her cheek ;
'Mid her dimples and her curls
Love himself plays hide-and-seek.

The song of Dolly was for ever on his lips ; but Mrs. Lumley smiled no longer. She had never known good to come of such unequal marriages, and the memory of Oliver Buckenham's attitude, as though he lay on the rack, troubled her.

One morning in the dews and scents of the hour before dawn she heard a horse clatter furiously through the village.

" It will be Mrs. Stiles at the Leas," she said to herself, " and John Stiles is riding for the midwife. I pray the poor soul may not be mortal bad ; he rode at such a rate."

But it was not Mrs. Stiles, for John Stiles was in for his beer next morning and reported his wife still up and doing.

Mr. Jones went off as usual about half an hour before noon, " walking on air " said the gossips, who leant through the door of The Spotted Lamb to look after him.

About twelve o'clock there was another sensation, for a magnificent coach with postilions and footmen drove up to The Spotted Lamb ; and the postilions and footmen and coachman all had powdered heads, and were dressed in liveries of gold and scarlet, fine enough for a duke or the Lord Mayor of London.

One gentleman rode in the coach. He wore no powder, but his head of curls fell about his handsome fleshy face ; and his clothes were even finer than Mr. Jones had made them used to at The Spotted Lamb.

Mrs. Lumley went out all curtsies to the side of the coach. The gentleman asked for Mr. Jones and was told he was out ; he then asked if he might have a private sitting-room to await his return.

The Spotted Lamb, and indeed the village for the matter of that, was all in a flutter. The servants who came with the coach soon told the name of their master. Mrs. Lumley was quite overcome, and vowed that nothing would induce her to enter the parlour where he waited, because she would surely faint on approaching him.

So she had hartshorn to her nose, and in the safe hiding-place of her store-closet lay back in a chair, listening to the impatient pacing to and fro of those august feet.

At last word was brought to her that Mr. Jones was returning.

She hastened out as fast as her trembling feet would carry her to warn him of who awaited him. But he passed her by without a word. What had come to him? The good woman could have screamed outright at his face that put even her news out of her head.

It was fallen in a mass of haggard lines and shadows. If ever despair sat on a face it sat there. Although he would not wait for her to speak he walked slowly and heavily. His white silk coat was stained as though he had lain with it in the grass before the dews were dried. The lace at his wrists was torn, and dangled in a few shreds. Blood trickled down his chin where he had bitten his lip through.

"Lord love your honour, what has happened to you?" she cried, mother-tenderness awake in her heart.

He went on as though he had not heard her and passed within the parlour whence so often she had heard the song of Dolly.

The door closed slowly. She heard the shout inside:

"Why, Jack, I have come for you!"

Then the door closed.

She flew to the store-closet and laid her ear to the wall, where a day or two before she had discovered a tiny hole from which a knot of wood had fallen out.

"I spoke in anger, but now I withdraw it. Dear Jack, the wine is sour without you. There is no one to set the table in a room. Almack's is deserted. The pretty women are inconsolable. Come back with me to the town. You look as though you were tired of your country whim."

"I will go where you like." Mr. Jones's voice had the strangest sound of suffering. "Only let me make a hasty toilet; I am not fit to be seen with your Highness."

"You won't escape me again?—then I shall let you go. Upon my honour, Jack, I was deucedly sorry I said it. I can't make excuses even to you, though I love you, man. It shall not occur again, I promise you on the word of a prince."

"I had forgotten it, I assure your Highness."

The voice of utmost dejection brought the tears to Mrs. Lumley's kind eyes.

An hour later the splendid coach was again at the door of The Spotted Lamb. Mr. Jones had clad himself in the sober fineness of his early days. The blood was washed from his lip. He looked no worse now than care-worn and old.

Mrs. Lumley was in tears. Mr. Jones was coming back no more. A man would be sent to fetch away his belongings. He had left more gold on the table than would pay for a year's lodging, and Mrs. Lumley did not care to take it up.

Just at the last he paused in the narrow inn passage where the Great Person preceded him, and turned aside into the little brown parlour. There had been stocks and gillyflowers when he came: there were now Mary-lilies and the last of the roses. A sheaf of lilies in the brown room was sharp as the flash of an angel's sword.

"After all," he said, "you were wise, you kind soul. She chose the lad and rode with him at daybreak. Good-bye!"

He kissed her cheek and was gone. Coach and horses, coachman, footmen, postilions were gone, like a fairy-tale, into a cloud of dust. The crowd of villagers, who had stood about in an awe-struck gaping, might well believe that those tremendous events had happened to Rosegarland only in a dream.

THE MEETING IN THE LIBRARY

KATHERINE TYNAN

THE Library was little frequented except by the curious. It was rather inaccessible for those who would consult its learning, out-of-the-way, with slums grown up about it. For the mere idler it had no interest at all: the newest book its shelves held was two hundred years old.

The Librarian had something of a sinecure. This hot summer afternoon the garden invited him. The Library overlooked the Deanery garden, and the Librarian used to walk there sometimes in his slackest hours with the Dean's daughter. It might be said that his hours were always slack. They were short too, for the Library closed at dusk. No provision for reading by artificial light had ever been made there.

This day of June the Librarian came in hastily. The walk had taken more time than he knew and he was to dine at the Deanery at eight o'clock. He had to go home and dress first. The golden pollen of the lilies between which he had been walking with the Dean's daughter was on his coat. He dismissed the porter, went into the Library, locked up his desk, whistling in a glad, quick way, something after the manner of the blackbird in the cedar outside, took the great bunch of keys, locked the Library door behind him, and went home.

He had not noticed in one of the recesses a young man asleep with his head upon his arms, his arms upon a table in the window overlooking the garden.

The green twilight came after the rose and violet. The evening star shone out in the green and the young moon came after. Lights sprang up in the Deanery house across the garden. The birds went to sleep and the scent of the lilies grew stronger in the dew; for the country was close at hand and the dews yet drenched the Deanery garden as though it were a meadow.

The scent of lilies was strong as a narcotic. Humphrey Brandon's head fell sideways in his sleep, revealing his face. It was a fair, handsome face and a good one, although the mouth, sweet as it was, lacked firmness. The forehead, white above its line of sunburn, wore a frown.

A name broke from his lips, "Amaryllis"; another name, "Margaret." The frown grew deeper, a look of pain scored the young handsome face in its sleep.

Master Humphrey Brandon had been sleeping ill of late, or his slumbers had not now been so profound in spite of his hard pillow and the evident uneasiness of his thoughts.

He had come into the Library on his way back from a garden-party where he had had an exquisite hour with Amaryllis. Only six weeks before her disturbing presence had troubled his life—a gay, enchanting, bewildering presence. He and Amaryllis had strayed away from the rest of the company by a pond, had fed the ducks, and afterwards rowed in a crazy boat among the water-lilies. How Amaryllis had laughed! She had taken off her hat—an airy pink thing wreathed with roses—and had pinned a white and golden water-lily here and there among the roses. Her golden-brown curls clustering about her small head were as alluring as a baby's. Her violet eyes under dark lashes; her pert little white nose and firm white chin; the red lips innocently smiling over little perfect teeth; the milk-white throat above the falling lace collar: all these beauties had so bewitched him that he had forgotten Margaret.

Once away from Amaryllis he had remembered. And it was not the first time he had forgotten; not the first time by many that he had remembered.

Margaret was the fair saint of his boyish dreams. She was six years his senior, and she had meant to him all of calm and rest and soothing the world possessed. She had been something of a religion to him.

They were not declared lovers, but Humphrey Brandon had always been sure that one day he would ask his saint to become mere woman for him and that she would stoop into his arms. Then had come—Amaryllis. He knew that if he should go to Margaret and tell her about Amaryllis she would bless him as she had always blessed him, and would bid him bring the girl to her that she might love her as well.

But though he had no fear on that score, yet he was not sure that he wanted to go to Margaret with his tale. Just now he was bewitched, bedevilled, when Amaryllis came in view. The hem of her muslin skirt, the point of her little high-heeled shoe, were things to fall down before. He had hardly ever looked lower than Margaret's eyes, those true eyes, with immortal lights steady in them.

He wanted Amaryllis, and yet he was quite sure that his eternal need would be for Margaret.

Perhaps if he gave his passion for Amaryllis the rein it would fall as dead as scattered rose-petals in a little while and his heart would return to Margaret, if indeed it had ever strayed from her.

Such thoughts and trouble at his own frailty had kept him awake of nights. He was not of the stuff of which sinners are made. He could not palter with his conscience light-heartedly.

If he waited—the hurt to Amaryllis would be nothing. He had heard her laugh with a new lover before he was out of hearing. It was perhaps her gay indifference, her light, sweet, untouched coldness of nature which made her charm for him. She was as virginal as a rose-bud and as lovely. Certainly Amaryllis would not suffer.

A hundred times he made up his mind to drift with the tide, a hundred times unmade it. That last laugh of Amaryllis had flung him into torments of jealousy this afternoon. But he would not turn back. He was on his way to Margaret. Only first he must rest and grow calm, for her tender, faithful eyes would discover the traces of recent conflict on his face. And where could a better place be found to rest than the Library? So he had turned in there and fallen asleep, worn out by sleeplessness and emotion, lulled by the fragrance of the lilies and the warmth of the drowsy air, full of the humming of innumerable bees.

He awoke cold, with the dews from the garden upon his hair, and in a sleepy bewilderment. The moon was gone now; and there was only a dusky fragrance, sown with a million stars, outside the open window. The place had been in darkness but for a faint light, a light that wavered hither and thither.

He rose stiffly and looked beyond the recess. There was a figure holding a candle in its hand going from shelf to shelf, taking out a book and replacing it.

While he looked, the figure turned its head and lifted the candle high to see him the better.

What an odd figure it was! It was that of a man about sixty, dressed in clerical garb of an ancient cut with white bands, and wearing on its head a bagwig. Humphrey Brandon stared. The strange person looked at him with a piercing gaze from cavernous eyes. The face was ivory pale and was furrowed with the track of storms. Bitterness and desolation were in its expression.

"So you have awakened, sir," the visitor said grimly.

"I don't know how I came to fall asleep," answered Humphrey Brandon apologetically. "I suppose you are—the Dean?"

"I am the Dean," the other replied.

"I must have slept some time." Humphrey Brandon looked at his watch. "By Jove! half-past twelve! It was only half-past six when I came in. How did I come to do it? I was on my way to keep—an appointment."

"With Amaryllis or with Margaret?"

Humphrey Brandon stared at the sardonic face.

"How do you know?" he began, stammering.

"I am no wizard," the other replied. "You talked in your sleep. Amaryllis—Margaret: no scale could have balanced them more evenly." The hue of guilt crept into Humphrey Brandon's face. His lashes, dark and curling like a girl's, fell on his cheeks.

"You are a coxcomb," said the old man severely, putting down the candle in its old-fashioned candlestick on the Librarian's desk.

Some wild impulse to make confession and ask counsel came over the young man. He flung himself with a reckless air into one of the worn leather-covered chairs. "Perhaps I am," he said humbly. "Anyhow, Mr. Dean, you are ghostly—and I need ghostly counsel." The Dean snuffed the candle with a whimsical smile on his full lips. "It is your duty to help erring mortals. Will you not take the chair opposite to mine and listen to me?"

The Dean took the chair and dropped his cheek upon his hand. The bag-wig fell either side his face. Humphrey Brandon stared at him. Who was it he was like as he sat so? Some baffling memory played about the young man's mind and eluded him. He forgot it then, fascinated by the eyes in their cavernous hollows. They were burning as though they needed the slaking of tears. The face was the face of one deeply unhappy.

It was easier to pour out the tale of his vacillation to such a face. When he had finished there was a pause. Then the man opposite him sighed so hollowly that the young man started.

"I said you were a coxcomb," said the Dean, "but you are only a fool. You must go back to Margaret. Not for all the Amaryllises in the world would you break Margaret's heart. And you would break it, though she might live for twenty years after it was broken and show you always a smiling face. There are such women."

Humphrey Brandon, a creature of impulses, sprang to his feet, would have taken the Dean's hand if it had not been hidden somewhere in the folds of the gown, and cried out that the Dean was right : he would return to Margaret, and see Amaryllis no more till Margaret was his wife.

" It was fortunate I met you, sir," he said. " While I slept my soul was tossed about on a rack of pain. Dreams are heavy things."

" Do I not know them ? " replied the Dean. " Dreams, aye, and wakings. Over in yonder Deanery I have had such pangs as you could not dream of. There was a night when the torchlights burned in the church." He seemed as though he would have said more, but he broke off abruptly.

" Let me at least thank you," said the lad.

" If I have saved another soul from a crime like my own. . . ." Again the voice died off in a hollow sighing.

" Well, I shall be saying good-night, or rather good-morning," said the younger man, abashed, as though he looked on some suffering he had no right to see.

" Why, we are locked in," he said in surprise after trying the door. " But you have the key, Mr. Dean ? "

" I have no key. You must wait till the Librarian comes in the morning."

" But you ? You were locked in with me. How careless the Librarian must be."

" I am often here through the hours of the night."

" Ah, well, I shall go the garden way. I can drop from the window and scale the gates. See, it is morning. How the sky trembles ! "

All of a sudden he thought that the Library with its ancient books smelt mouldily ; it was the air of graves and charnel-houses. The east indeed was trembling like a multitude of wings. A bird called from the cedar and was answered by a drowsy twittering. He touched an ivy leaf and his hand was wet with dew. He could see the lilies glimmering in the dark of the garden. Their smell came sharp and fresh. He was going to Margaret, and he felt as though this were his wedding morning.

With his hand on the sill, in act to drop, he turned his face to say good-bye. But what had happened to the Dean ? He was standing as he had seen him first with the candle in his hand. But surely he was fading, fading into mists and dreams. A mere grey outline of a figure was there now, with only the eyes of it alive. As he stood staring they too went out and the Library was in darkness.

RICHARD DEHAN

B. 1864

A NURSERY TEA

THE driver of the rakish yellow dog-cart, hired from The Bluntell Arms, a white-faced tavern opposite the railway terminus four miles away, pulled up the lean-barrelled chestnut mare at a sign from the passenger, and touched the brim of his dusty bowler hat as the gentleman got down at the park gates of Fawncourt. The lodge-keeper's wife came out, wiping the soap-suds from her wrinkled hands, and opened the great wrought-iron gates for the visitor, and he passed in under the shield of the three wyverns rampant, and the cross crosslets, and the proud motto, Sic fidem teneo. He saw the gilding was tarnished and the metal rusted, and that one of the weather-stained limestone wyverns on the gate pillars had lost a leg, and he had a disgusted eye for the newly-washed garments of both sexes hung unblushingly to dry upon the rhododendrons as he threw the lodge-woman a shilling and walked rapidly into the avenue.

The park was rough and wild, and full of ancient, rugged oaks and beeches, the gardens were a sweet wilderness of autumn roses and tall white lilies within rankly-flourishing box borders. And then came the house—a Tudor building of ancient red brick, faced with creamy stone, standing on fair uncut lawns, drowsing in the rich black shadows flung by ancient cedars and giant yews.

The gentleman—a personable figure of a man—tall, lean, square-shouldered, and fashionably dressed—mounted the two wide steps shadowed by the double-columned portico, and would have rung the bell or plied the heavy copper knocker, but that he perceived in time the door was ajar. He pushed it with his stick and went into a vestibule paved with black and white Italian marble. A long oaken bench, dark with time, ran along the wall, dust obscured its polish at either end, in the middle was a clean patch. Here rested a man's hat, a sunburnt straw with a soiled London University ribbon. A hunting-crop, badly used, lay on the floor. And clumping boot-soles came clattering downstairs. The cold blue eyes lifted as the door in the screen swung open and calmly inspected the face of the newcomer, a short, weather-beaten man of forty-five in a well-worn Norfolk suit of grey tweed.

"This is not yours, I think?" The voice was cultivated and rather musical, the tone languid and chill.

The short man picked up his old hunting-crop and put on the scorched hat. Then he looked at his watch, a handsome gold chronometer attached to a shabby strap, and clacked his tongue against his palate, and slipped the watch back into his pocket, and was going out into the fragrant sunshine when a question from the other stopped him.

"Are you Mr. Fladwheat's agent?"

"I am—not," said the short man in tweeds shortly.

"You don't happen to belong to the Estate Office at W——?"

"No."

"Pardon me. Not by any chance a representative of the County Chronicle—are you?"

"Not by any chance."

"Then," persisted the tall, well-dressed gentleman with the thin lips and cold blue eyes, "if I may venture upon another question, What were you doing upstairs?"

The short man in tweeds was plainly annoyed. His weather-beaten face grew red as he turned upon the persistent stranger.

"You want to know what I was doing upstairs? Visiting an old patient."

"Indeed. Then—you are—I presume you are—the medical practitioner who succeeded to old Dr. Carberry's practice——"

"Fifteen years ago, Sir Wilfrid."

The tall, thin gentleman frowned.

"A man who wants to preserve an incognito ought not to be the image of his father," said the Doctor coolly. "I met the late Baronet—in my business capacity—twelve years ago. He had run down with some friends for the shooting—an attack of rheumatic gout——"

"My father was a chronic sufferer from rheumatic gout in his later years," said the late Baronet's successor. "It touched his heart towards the end. He let the old place get into a devil of a state," he commented in a low, absent voice. "And the people who have rented it for shooting have made bad worse. And, now——"

"And now it is on the market," said the Doctor raspingly.

"Continuing the realisation of my—my—of my late father's estate," said the other, sweeping his cold eyes back from the sunny world outdoors to the wall immediately above the Doctor's head. "Messrs. Bewis and Moseley will sell the property for me at Tokenhouse-yard on Saturday next at twelve. The reserve price of the mansion-house, gardens, and park-land is seventeen thousand. So, Doctor, if you contemplate an investment——" He shrugged in infinite contempt.

"I'm a poor man," the Doctor flashed back, "but if I had the money I would buy Fawncourt to-morrow. Not to save it from the creditors." Sir Wilfrid Bluntell, drawing diagrams on the dusty pavement with the end of his slim umbrella, raised his eyebrows interrogatively, still perusing the wall above the Doctor's head. "Not for my own sake—what are historic bricks and ancient acres and three-hundred-year-old oaks to me? Not for my wife's sake—I'm a confirmed bachelor—but for hers." He jerked his worn hunting-crop towards the heavy beams and ancient mouldings of the ceiling.

"Might one be permitted to ask who she is?" said the Baronet's smooth voice.

"She is my patient," said the Doctor shortly. "You know her—or you have good reason to! And her name is Hannah Brown."

Sir Wilfrid's cold blue eyes dropped from the wall above his head and questioned him. "Hannah Brown. . . . Do you mean Nurse Brown? . . . Nurse Brown! . . . Why . . . I thought she . . . I supposed she was dead, like Hurst, the butler, and all the other old people. Alive! . . . By Jove! she must be a hundred if she's a day."

"As a fact, she is ninety," said the Doctor.

Sir Wilfrid went on without hearing. "She was laundry-maid in my grandfather's time, she nursed my father, he was always 'Master Reginald' to her, the pattern-boy held up to us"—he grinned a little. "She was head nurse when we—when we were kids. Nurse Hannah Brown—Nurse Brown." His face was creased into quite a boyish smile. His cold eyes had a twinkle. "How I used to worry her—up to all kinds of mischief, and dragging Gerry——" He broke off. "What you tell me is very interesting," he added nonchalantly. "I must go up and see the old lady before I leave. Frankly, I ran down to look over the old house before the sale; there are several bits of rare old china and carved oak presses which would fetch rattling prices at Christie's. As for books—the library was a desert in my time, with Spectators for palm-trees and Malory's King Arthur—the one well not brackish. Do you happen to know——"

"I happen to know one thing," said the Doctor stiffly, "and that concerns my patient."

"Nothing much the matter there, I hope?" said Sir Wilfrid.

"Old age," blurted out the Doctor with resentful eyes, gleaming through his spectacles, "and poverty and semi-starvation. Will you understand what I mean to convey, Sir Wilfrid Bluntell, or do you mean to play a comedy of ignorance with me? Since Sir Reginald left Fawncourt fifteen years ago, with glib promises and kind words, and hearty handshakes, and all the pinchbeck trash that she has always taken for pure gold, not a penny of her poor pension of £30, once her yearly wage, has ever been paid. But for charity, sir—charity—she would have died of want, and so I tell you to your face!"

"Your method of communicating the intelligence is offensive," said Sir Wilfrid, "but I give you credit for meaning well. As to Nurse Brown, I should have thought that in her seventy-four years of service she would have managed to save, to put by, to accumulate a considerable provision——"

The Doctor was foaming now. He gesticulated wildly with the hand that held his hunting-crop, and his small angry eyes snapped sparks. "So she had. Aye, aye! 'Saved,' 'put by,' 'accumulated' some £700. Hurst—old Hurst, the butler—made her buy Consols—she'd be getting some £21 the year—enough to keep body and soul together—just—her pension being forgotten by the family."

"Well?"

"Well!" The Doctor was now at white heat. "What else could one expect? Mind, she never uttered one complaint—I wormed the story out of her, inch by inch. The year before Sir Reginald died, down comes Mr. Gerald Bluntell——"

"My brother Gerald?"

"Yes. By the Lord! and proud would I be if he was mine. She cried for joy when he came to pay her a visit in the old nursery in the east wing there, and asked her to make him tea—in the same little old brown teapot he remembered. Boyhood's recollections—old ties—present troubles—pressing creditors to satisfy, no use going to Sir Reginald—ruin impending, in fact, which might be averted by a sum of ready money—nothing less than £700——"

"Spare me the réchauffage of Mr. Bluntell's misdeeds," said Sir Wilfrid, with a slight protesting gesture of his gloved hand. "As to his usage of this old servant of our family, it is strictly in accordance with his character. I say no more and no less. My own affairs are—somewhat in confusion. All property that is not strictly entailed upon my son is to be sold. I cannot restore the old woman's money—even if I would. And I live in Paris ; I have no home to offer her here. But when she is removed from Fawncourt—and it is necessary and advisable that she should go at once—a home shall be found for her in the village. She is already indebted to you for certain kind offices, I understand ; perhaps you would not object to take charge of this ? ”

But the Doctor waved away the crackling £5 note.

“ Give it her yourself, my good sir, since I understand your intention is to look in upon the poor old forgotten creature. But unless you desire to be guilty of her death say nothing about removing her to another home. This house has been her home for seventy-four years. She blossomed in its prime, and has fallen into decay with it. Ninety years old, and incredibly frail and feeble, she has not stirred out of the old nursery in the east wing for ten years or more. Pulse a mere thread—the heart's action liable to stop at any moment. . . . That she should have lived so long, and under such conditions, is a marvel, but there's lasting stuff in good old yeoman stock unvitiated by centuries of aristocratic vice and high-bred intemperance. Now remember—I have warned you ! ”

The Doctor's overworked straw hat was dabbed upon his head, the Doctor's heavy boots clumped away in the direction of the stable.

Sir Wilfrid shrugged his shoulders and pushed open the heavy wrought door in the carved screen, which would have to go with the other fixtures, otherwise . . . “ Worth £1000,” he said, with a little vexed whistle, as he passed through the semi-gloom of the hall, with its trophies of the chase and stands of rusted armour, and began the ascent of the great oaken staircase in a shaft of silvery-golden sunlight falling from the high mullioned windows on the landing. He mounted another staircase, the carpet under his feet ageing as he climbed, and turned down a well-remembered passage lighted by leaded casements. This was the oldest portion of the house. There were double doors at the passage-end, covered with faded green baize. They parted as Sir Wilfrid looked, and a rosy-cheeked country girl in a print dress and sun-bonnet came out, carrying a cup and plate. Her brown eyes widened at sight of the strange gentleman ; she dipped a curtsy, village style, as she slid by. Sir Wilfrid guessed her to be a niece or daughter of the caretaker. He went into the room.

It was low-pitched, panelled shoulder-high with blackened oak, and the plaster of walls and ceiling was cracked and browned with age, and mouldy in patches with damp. There was a lofty oaken chimney-piece, its pillars and centre-board scored with generations of initials burned in by childish hands, probably with the same little worn, bent poker that had always hung on a corner of the rusty, wrought-iron guard. Three casemented windows, whose cracked or broken panes had been pasted over with paper and rag, gave outlook to the south upon quiet, sloping lawns, browned with the fallen needles from giant cedars, whose sun-gilded trunks made the pillars of a Druid temple, roofed with their spreading boughs and sombre, spice-smelling foliage. And the door of an inner room, once the night-nursery, stood open, revealing three little rusty cot-beds in a row, and a heavy wooden cradle, with a broken rocker. A small fire burned between the wide hobs of the Queen Anne grate, and a small kettle sang upon it just as it used to sing, and Nurse Brown sat in a red-covered winged chair, her frail, old hands, with their idle knitting-pins, lying placid in her lap, her peaked chin sunk in the hollow of her bosom. There was no doubt of the "poverty," the "privations" of which the Doctor had spoken.

The man who looked on her had been her nursling and her darling, her tyrant and her god, as had his father before him. Some long atrophied fibre stirred in his cold, narrow heart, his hard eyes softened and grew kind. He felt almost tender towards this old, worn-out link with the old worn-out days. At the same time he shrank almost with dread from the idea of touching her. To be hugged, to be wept over! —the thought was almost unbearable; and yet he had sat upon those knees and kissed those withered lips, forty-five years ago. Nurse Brown had been a personable, buxom woman then, with brown hair only getting grey under her smart lace cap, and singularly bright, black eyes. A little smack of the country-side had flavoured her speech, plenty of good, shrewd common sense was wont to be upon her tongue, a homely humour modified her outlook upon the world, a homely loyalty was in her single-hearted belief in the goodness, virtue, nobility, beauty of every individual member of the Bluntell family, the "flower of the flock," as she repeatedly assured his descendants, having been her own first nursling, Master Reginald. Now, here she sat, that faithful-serving soul—forgotten, bereft, unpitied. . . . It was a damned shame—a——

But Nurse Brown's bright, black eyes were open and looking at him.

"Master Wilfrid. . . . My own dear boy!"

Nurse Brown had got out of her chair somehow, and ran towards him, feebly and with outstretched hands. He caught them in his as she stumbled and seemed about to fall. They seemed to dissolve in his grasp for very frailness as he led her back to her chair. She shed a few tears there. The sight of him was good for sore eyes, she said, as she wiped her own.

"And you're the first to come, as I knew you would, Master Wilfrid." Her voice was a little tremulous, and thinner, but very like the voice that Sir Wilfrid remembered. He pulled up a chair and sat down, smiling, for the languid cynicism and flippant indifference of his former mood had fallen from him. He felt, sitting in the old Fawn-court nursery with the humble, homely creature at whose knee he had faltered his first petition to a Father in heaven, that it would have been well if his children had had a better earthly one.

"And you're the first. The eldest always sets an example. . . . When I look up and see you—There! I says, as was promised, my dear boy. And then Miss Gertrude and Master Gerald—and I forget what came next; but Him as the Rector comes regular to read about and talk of—and may He bless him for being that good to an old useless woman—He never breaks His word."

"She wanders a little," thought the man, as the brief, ecstatic smile faded from the keen-featured old face and a look of distress took its place. "Poor old soul!" Aloud he asked, "What is the matter?"

"The bit o' fire . . . going black out under the kettle . . . this day of all days, when my three children will be a-wanting o' their tea." There was a quaver in the old voice that heralded tears, and Sir Wilfrid made haste to say:

"Don't worry. Leave it to me—I'll make it burn up ali right."

"Maybe there's a bit o' wood in the cupboard side of chimney," said Nurse Brown, cheering. "Mrs. Pretty, the caretaker, she brings me a bundle every now an' then, or send it by her little gell. A good gell, Rhoda is, but too fond o' ribbons to please me. Do ye be careful, Master Wilfrid—you was always so venturesome wi' matches."

Sir Wilfrid, with an appearance of great absorption in the task, had found and stuck some little bits of dry apple-wood under the kettle, and was now drawing up the leaping spirelets of wavering green flame by dexterous use of a silk handkerchief.

"A fire's a treat to me," said Nurse Brown, "in these pinched days; though I've nothing to complain of—don't ye ever dream that, Master Wilfrid. There has been family i'barrassments—law troubles and such—or my Master Reginald—the first of them I nursed—would niver have forgot me. My Miss Gertrude!"

She had risen and stood upright, holding by the arm of her chair, her bright eyes fixed upon the door.

"There is nothing," said Sir Wilfrid. "You fancied you heard a footstep, that was all."

But Nurse Brown was obstinate, if the term can be applied to anything so feeble and soft and frail.

"Bless the boy!" she said with a gentle laugh, "does he suppose I don't know my own sweet girl's footstep from out among them all?—and there are hundreds of footsteps in this house, dear, of folks I know, and used to know, and others, dear, that were before me. Now it draws nearer. And now it's in the corridor—not so light as when she was a young thing and danced because she was too full o' life to walk—but a firm, free step. . . . Now the swing-doors, and now—her knock. Oh, my dear love, come in!"

Some one had actually knocked, and Sir Wilfrid leapt up, over-setting his chair, and breaking its worm-eaten back. The door opened, and a handsome woman crossed the threshold, and, with a little cry, stepped forward and embraced Nurse Brown, whose shrunken figure almost vanished amongst her chiffons and laces.

"You dear old, oid thing!" the newcomer gushed, and kissed the wrinkled cheek in a delicate, pecking, Society way. "Now, don't cry," she said, "I haven't much time to spend here." Then she recognised the tall, lean figure of the elder brother, whose cold blue eyes and thin, straight features bore much resemblance to her own. "Wilfrid! You here? How odd!" she uttered, with a little agitated catch of her breath.

"How are you, Gertrude?" he said, awkwardly for him, and came to her, offering his hand. She smiled wryly as she took it, for he had commanded his wife to "drop Gertrude" when Mrs. Consterdine had elected to burn her boats and leave her husband for Lord Vibart, and the sum total of Wilfrid's own conjugal errors had but recently been added up by a British jury.

"Poor Millicent!" Lady Vibart had commented, "spending all that time and all that money in getting twelve men to agree that Wilfrid is to keep his distance—when he has never done anything else." Now she said, in response to her brother's stiff greeting, "Oh, clinking! and so is Vibart, thanks," and she smiled again, more naturally, as she unwound the latest thing in automobile veils and tossed it upon the table.

"You came down by road, I see?" her brother said.

"In Savarny's 'Napier,'" returned Lady Vibart, looking straight into her brother's eyes. "I had seen in yesterday's Times that Fawn-court was to be sold. I had had an idea that I should like to see the old place again—and—here I am."

"You have not brought Savarny?" said Sir Wilfrid.

"I have left him at The Stag and Arrow in the village," Lady Vibart said, "trying to order luncheon in what he believes to be English learned from me."

"I hope you will draw the line at learning from him any more of what you believe to be French," said Sir Wilfrid.

Lady Vibart showed her excellent white teeth in response and dropped a little mocking curtsy.

"Merci, mon cher! The caution comes admirably well from you!"

"Hush!" he said.

But thrust, parry, and riposte had glanced beside the true heart that had loved these worldly ones from birth. "Come, sit you down, my dear love," said Nurse Brown, fondling the jewelled hand that had grown cold between hers. "And, Master Wilfrid, you should never speak unkind to your sister. I mind, and so should you, how she cried outside the door when you was down wi' the measles, and broke open her money-box to buy you a new fishing-rod when you got well."

A less unfriendly look was interchanged between both pairs of cold blue eyes. The woman's glance asked, "Is she quite childish?"

The man replied:

"Far from it. She only occasionally confuses the Present with the Past."

The quavering old voice rose again:

"You'll kiss each other, dears, like a good boy and girl. Otherwise the tea won't draw and there'll be no sugar on the bread-and-butter."

"You always used to say that, you dear old thing, when we were naughty," Lady Vibart cried. She straightened the poor shabby cap and patted the old, worn, veinous hands. "And where is the tea? I'm parched—simply."

"Drat my head—I've never wetted it!" The Nurse Brown of the past was revived from the ashes of the present. She sprang erect, renewed, to minister to her nurslings' needs. Age fell from her like a discarded shawl. Spellbound they sat and watched her as she bustled to the cupboard where the caddy lived; it was the little black japanned one they remembered of old. She drew a crusty loaf from a biscuit-tin, she produced butter from a jam-pot, she conjured from various hiding-places plates, cups, knives, teaspoons, a teapot, sugar. To and fro, to and fro between the table and the cupboard and the fireplace the bent figure journeyed, intent on service, unconscious of toil. The kettle boiled, the teapot was warmed, the infusion made. Triumphantly she bade them draw to the table, spread with all her scanty store.

"And manners, my dearies, remember. If I'm humble myself, I know how my betters should behave. Yes, Master Wilfrid, you may cut the bread. Miss Gertrude likes to butter it—there'll only be brown sugar on the second slice. When you're grand grown man and woman you'll remember how happy you made yourselves in the old Fawncourt nursery, with Nurse Brown, and a bit o' bread-and-butter, and a cup o' tea."

"Dear old thing! I have often—often remembered it," said Lady Vibart with a sigh.

"And so has Master Wilfrid . . . and so has my boy Gerald. There! to think of me forgetting my boy. Whatever can have come to him?"

Nurse rose as though to run in search.

"Sit down . . ." said Sir Wilfrid, falling unconsciously into school-boy idiom in humouring her. "Gerry's all right. You'll see him presently, as safe as houses."

"Oh, Will!" his sister protested below her breath.

"He's watching the fallow deer, or the big pike in the pond, with them big bright eyes of his," said Nurse Brown, putting the teapot to stand on the hob for "her boy," and reserving a Benjamin's portion of bread-and-butter. "The Lord beheads the prayers I put up that no harm may come to him. When you grows up, Master Wilfrid, love, you'll have your seat in the House of Commons like your grandfather, and make the longest and grandest speeches, you will, on every subject that can be brought up, without committing your party, as I've heard it called, to anything whatsoever. But Master Gerry will be a—what do they call the gentleman with the laurel wreath as Queen Victoria pays thousands a year to for writing poetry?"

"Laureate," suggested Lady Vibart.

"And that's what my sweet boy will be, Heaven ever bless him!" said Nurse proudly. "You'll be married, Miss Gerty, dear, before Master Gerry is crowned; but mark my words, the day will come. And you'll be only less proud of your brother then than you will be of your husband. He'll be dark-complexioned as you are fair, and you'll bring the dear babe down to Fawncourt to get the country air and sleep in the old nursery; and a good mother you'll make, love, that are that fond of your dolls to-day."

"My God, my God!" broke from Lady Vibart in a suffocated voice, "why was I so mad as to come here? Why——?"

"Pull yourself together," said Sir Wilfrid, leaning to her ear. "Brave it out—lie, act as women can. It is the one thing we can do for her—never to let her guess the truth. Do you know what she has suffered at our hands? Gerald stole her savings, our father ceased to pay her poor pension long before he died——"

"Impossible! Oh, Will, say it is not true!"

"I—damn me for it!—forgot her. So did you."

"I—I am afraid I did!" admitted Lady Vibart.

Sir Wilfrid went on: "But for the Doctor's charity—but for the Doctor's help she would have died. What's that?"

"That" was another step upon the landing, a new touch upon the rattling handle of the door. Lady Vibart rose with a little cry of recognition. Sir Wilfrid sat still as stone.

"Shut the door behind you, Master Gerald, there's my own boy," said Nurse in a tone of calm authority, "and put down your hat, and come to the table. Your tea's a-waiting and your bread-and-butter's cut."

"And I'm confoundedly hungry and infernally thirsty," said the prodigal, accepting the invitation.

"Don't let me hear you make use of grown gentlemen's bad language again, Master Gerald," warned Nurse Brown, returning from the hob, teapot in hand, "or I shall be compelled to put you to bed without your tea. Make room for your brother, do, Miss Gerty, and hand him the bread-and-butter."

"She's awfully old!" said Gerald Bluntell under his breath. "It frightens me to look at her—by Jove, it does!"

"I am glad to hear you have so much conscience left," said Lady Vibart icily.

"What do you mean? What the—what do you mean?" snarled the prodigal.

"Now, that's not pretty, Master Gerald, my lamb, to talk to your sister so," said Nurse Brown, and the lamb subsided with a scowl. "And you know he was a weakly babe, Miss Gerty, and your dear, sweet mother, my blessed lady now with Them above—made you promise to be a kind elder sister to your little brother. I can see my lady now, leaning back amongst her great embroidered pillows, with her big, bright eyes shining like stars, and her colour as pink as roses, and the little lace shawl—French lace, hundreds of years old—tied over her lovely head. And every night she prayed on her two knees that her three children might grow up good."

The shadows without had grown longer, the sunlight mellowed and less intense. An owl, waking from the daylight sleep, swooped noiselessly from one tree into another, and the shrill, alarmed protest of an angry mother-bird followed on the predatory visit.

"She'll be afeard for her nestlings, poor thing!" said Nurse Brown, who had returned to the red arm-chair, after offering that throne successively to each of her visitors, "and well she may. They be silly-looking, hook-nosed things by day, they owls, though bodeful and dreadful enough on moonlight nights, the screechers specially. I had a nursery-maid in your dear father's time, my children, that was mortal afeard o' owls. Rhoda Pretty, the gell as does my bit o' marketing, be her granddaughter, and nigh as skeery. Eh, dears, what days they was to be sure! The head nurse, whose place I got after, and me as second, the nursery-maid, and a scrubbing-maid, that was the nursery staff. And Sir Reginald, the loveliest boy with the flaxenest curls that ever was a nurse's pride. None of his children had his pretty ways or his tender heart—though I say it to your faces, dears!"

"Fancy the old governor!" said the prodigal under his breath,

"with pretty ways and a tender heart. Good Lord!" he chuckled drearily.

"Bless him! I thought he never would a-done mourning over the leg o' mutton for the nursery dinner that had once belonged to a live sheep." Nurse Brown's flow of reminiscence was interrupted by a yawn.

"We have tired you," said Lady Vibart gently, drawing a stool to the side of the red arm-chair. She remembered Savarny, waiting at the inn in the village, she wished intensely to escape from the stinging memories and gnawing regrets that hived under the roof of Fawncourt—she bitterly upbraided herself for having had the idiocy to come; and yet—she looked at the prodigal, and refrained from taking leave. Some latent instinct of protection towards the feeble, childish, trusting creature who had already suffered plunder at his greedy hands—might suffer it again—awakened in her. Tardy gratitude for all the wealth of love, all the treasures of loyalty and fidelity hung like despised garlands about such worthless necks, outpoured at such shapeless feet of vulgar clay, moistened her cold eyes and melted her frozen heart. She gulped a little sob and fumbled for her handkerchief—an absurd square inch of gossamer cambric, bordered with a frill. She did not waste time in regretting the past, but she wished that things had been different! Dim-eyed, she reached forth to touch the withered hand, and found it covered by another—Wilfrid's! and the prodigal Gerald was sitting on a ragged hassock at Nurse Brown's feet.

"This is like blessed old times," said Nurse Brown, "wi' all my children round me. 'Twas promised—and I knew the promise would be kept—as I should have this good hour—and now it has come to me. All my children—that is, saving one. And him——"

"What was that?"

"What was what, Miss Gerty, dear?" asked Nurse.

Lady Vibart had uttered the exclamation. "It is quite absurd," she said with a little empty laugh, "and I know my nerves must have played me a trick, but a child in a little old-fashioned white pelisse and tartan sash actually peeped in at us just now from the old night-nursery."

"A neighbour's child—possibly the caretaker's," said Sir Wilfrid, clearing his throat.

"Perhaps. . . . Ah! there it is again. No, it has gone!"

"A white embroidered frock and a Rob-Roy sash and yellow curls, pale, like ripe barley, not gold, like corn, had he ? " said Nurse Brown, smiling wisely inside her cap-border.

" That's the kiddy," assented the prodigal. " I saw him as well as Gerty. Looked round the door and laughed . . . and then dodged back again. I hear him chuckling now, I'm almost certain."

" Take no notice, and maybe he'll come out," said Nurse. " 'Twould be hard if my own boy were kep' back, when the promise was for all. By-and-by, when the sun has wested and the shadows get longer, he'll grow more venturesome. I've heerd him behind my chair—ah ! a many, many times ; but when I turns, sweet love, he's always hiding. Tell me if you sees him again, dear ! "

" She means our father," Sir Wilfrid whispered to Lady Vibart.

Nurse Brown—strangely keen of hearing and alert of perception in this her hour of joy—gave a little triumphant laugh.

" To be sure ! My own boy—the first of all I nursed—who should I mean else ? It's wonderful the love a woman can feel for them she never bore. Even if ye had grown up warped and blighted, cold-hearted, bad-natured, wicked, instead of noble, good, grand, 'twould be all the same to me. What I lulled to sleep in my old arms and saw thrive under my fostering, could I ever come to hate it ? And that's how the Lord above looks upon His children. Eh, loves, 'tis getting dark."

A flash of lightning pierced the gathering gloom with a shaft of fierce blue radiance, and a rushing pattering sound of heavy rain followed the dull boom of distant cloud-artillery.

" When this is over I must positively escape," reflected Lady Vibart, and the panes streamed and the roof-gutters vomited. The half-admitted dread of the lonely journey through the deserted corridors, down the wide desolate staircases, the semi-conscious fear of meeting—something ! made her draw her laces and chifions closer about her, and hope that Wilfrid would in decency propose to see her to the door. As for Gerald, how could she hope to prevent him from carrying out whatever purpose he had in view ? If he chose to remain—remain he must. The results of the raid would be discouraging enough to prevent his making another, and to-morrow—welcome to-morrow !—she would send Nurse enough money to keep the dear old thing in comfort for a decent time. But how dark it was ! and how the rain poured and beat against the casements and clanked upon the flagstones of the terrace far below ! Cool earth-odours, spicy cedar-smells stole in from the wet outer world mingling with the suggestions of dry-rot, the palpable hints of mice, the dampness that the little dying fire in the Queen Anne grate had no power to conquer. She shivered. A vision rose before her of drear, wet autumns, long, freezing winters, nipping, piercing springs spent in this place, alone, by this old, old feeble woman. Scarce fed, clothed in garments as ancient as her remembrances, less lasting than her faithful love. A rigor of cold and horror seized her, she shivered again, setting her teeth, and shutting her eyes and hands. In the increasing gloom so acute was her sense of desolation that she moved nearer to her brother Wilfrid, and was sensible that he drew closer to her. At last she touched his shoulder, and he put his arm about her. And the Prodigal, presuming but unrebuked, leaned his fast grizzling head against his sister's knee. So like, but so different to, the group that had gathered here in the old days when they were "Will" and "Gerty" and "Gerry" to each other, and Fawncourt was their Paradise, into which no serpent had entered yet. So changed and yet so much the same, they sat together now. A common love had stirred in their cold breasts, however faintly, a common sympathy had moved them, a regret had been shared, a remorse had stung them equally; an unacknowledged awe, a secret terror of unknown powers that might be gathering round them in the shadows united them in a common bond. Children again, they huddled together in the semi-obscurity—these three who were to go upon their way so shortly, uttering cold farewells, never to meet again on earth. They stilled their breathing and listened, and could have sworn to footsteps on the stairs, to voices in the corridors, to strains of music—once to a burst of laughter—that came pealing upwards from the locked-up, shuttered dining-room. Time passed, the rain had ceased, the sun had set, and the sky was a lake of pale rosy yellow behind the black umbrage of the dripping cedars.

"What a strange shadow—there upon the floor . . ."

One of the three Bluntells had spoken, or none. The uttered words might have been the crystallised thought of all three brains. But Nurse made answer:

"It be, my love. It have frightened me by times when it took shape like that. Whether 'tis the shadow of the gable over window or what else I never guess. Black, and long and heavy, with an edge of clear light. And the shape of a bier. And a figure on it with a face; there now—it's edge to me! And I seems sometimes to know whose it is, and sometimes not. Last time it came it were my boy, your dear father, Sir Reginald, lie there so still. And now——! See, dear loves, it be a woman . . . a-lying like a carved stone queen upon a monument, a-waiting for the Last Trump to stir the dust an' bid the dry bones live. And but that I never was so grand, my children, I'd say it were myself."

Silence again fell and the rose-yellow sky grew grey, a north wind swayed the cedar branches, and the last drops trickled from the gargoye-mouthed roof gutters. The last spark of the fire died out, the cold shadows gathered closer. Then Lady Vibart called out suddenly in sharp alarm :

"How strangely she is breathing! Strike a light, if either of you have matches. Nurse! Nurse Brown!"

"I will send for the Doctor," said Sir Wilfrid hurriedly, as the vesta scraped and flared and burned out, and the hand that he had lifted fell inertly from his own. But the bright black eyes opened a moment later, and——

"My boy a-crying," said Nurse. "Why frightened of the dark, my love, and me so near? I'm a-coming, Master Reginald! I'm a-coming, my love. . . . That were the promise, after long waiting—as I should go—wi' all my—children by. The Lord bless my dear loves, my kind loves—that came before—the end!"

The worn old body quivered, and the last breath went out in a happy sigh, as Nurse laid down the burden of her many years, and went upon her way.

THEY THAT MOURN

BUNN market was over, its hurry and haggle. In corners and quiet spots of the big market-yard, you saw men and women carefully counting their little stores of silver, testing the coins with their teeth, knotting them firmly in red pocket-handkerchiefs, finally stowing them away in their long wide pockets as cautiously as though every sixpence were a diamond. In the streets, people were leisurely moving towards the shops, where tills were rattling, and counters teeming, and trade, for a few hours, mightily flourishing after its whole six days of blissful stagnation.

A cart laden with butter, chiefly in firkins, issued from the market-yard gate, a man between the shafts, one at either wheel, two pulling behind, all noisily endeavouring to keep the cart from running amuck downhill into the river. Close behind, like chief mourners after a hearse, one might fancy, came Tim Kerin and Nan his wife ; a battered, slow-footed couple, heavily burdened with the big load of their years, white haired both of them, and lean as greyhounds. Heavily they shuffled along in their clumsy boots ; the man with one arm across his back, the other swinging limply ; the woman holding up her skirt with one hand, and gripping with the other the handle of an empty basket ; both looking fixedly over the tail-board of the cart at the few pounds of butter for which they had slaved hard for weeks, and for which, after hours of haggling, they had just received a few most precious shillings. Fixedly they watched it, and mournfully almost, as though they were bidding it a last farewell.

They passed through the gate, straggled across the footpath, and silently watched the cart zigzag down the street, run presently against the kerb, and, amid great shouting, discharge its contents into the packing-house.

"Faith," said Tim, across his shoulder, "'twas cliverly done. I wonder, some day, they don't break their necks." He wagged his head dubiously ; Nan tucked up her skirt ; the two turned their faces uphill, and set out to share their profits with the shops. The butter was gone, and sorrow go with it : 'twas a heartbreak.

Tim Kerin's share of the profits was a shining sixpence, reluctantly tendered to him by Nan his wife, who now walked a couple of steps behind him, with eighteenpence shut tight in her hand, and the remainder of the butter-money (only a shilling or two) tied fast in a cotton bag and safely stowed away in the neck of her linsey-woolsey dress. Threepence of Tim's sixpence was to buy tobacco, a penny might go in the purchase of a weekly newspaper, a penny would buy a pair of whangs (leather laces) for his boots ; the penny remaining, when all those luxuries had been honestly paid for, would buy a whole tumblerful of frothing porter. A whole tumblerful ! At sight of it, with his mind's eye, Tim's lips dried and his feet went quicker over the cobble stones.

Nan's lips were tight, her brow wrinkled. She was figuring. It would take her to be powerful 'cute to fill her basket with the value of eighteenpence. Och, the lot o' things she wanted : tea, sugar, bacon, a herring for the Sunday's dinner, a bit o' white bread—and—and supposing there were a penny or two over (with knowing bargaining there might be), was it likely, now, that Mr. Murphy, the draper, would let her have cheap a yard of narrow soiled lace to go round the border of her nightcaps ? Twopence might do, threepence would be sure to—— Aw, glory be to goodness, did anybody ever hear of such romancin', such extravagance ? Sure it was runnin' wild her wits were ! Threepence for lace indeed !

A friend stepped from behind a cart and caught Nan by the arm. What ! was it pass a neighbour like that Mrs. Kerin would do ? Pass her ouldest friend, Mrs. Brady, as if she were a milestone, and never pass the time of day, or tell how she sold her butter, or how the world was using herself ? " Och, och, Mrs. Kerin," moaned Mrs. Brady, " what have I done to ye at all, at all ? "

Nan stopped and put out her hand ; then volubly began explaining : sure, sorrow the sight of Mrs. Brady she had seen ; sure, she never passed a neighbour without speaking ; sure, 'twas walking along romancin' she was, figuring in her head, seeing how far she could make the few shillings go. " An' how are you, ma'am ? " asked Nan, when full pardon for her oversight had been generously given and gratefully received. " How are you an' all your care ? "

Swiftly the two old heads bobbed together ; ceaselessly the tongues began to wag ; freely the full tide of their softly drawling speech flowed gurgling round the little nothings of their little world.

Meanwhile, Tim, his sixpence hot in his palm, had taken a turn through the throng of the streets ; had questioned his neighbours about sales and prices (just as though his pockets bulged with bank-notes) ; had spelt out the time on the big market-house clock as he stood by the town pump listening to the hoarse drone of a ballad singer ; and now, on the sidewalk of Main Street, stood dreamily looking through a shop window at a pile of newspapers which stood precariously among an array of tobacco pipes and sweet bottles. If he bought a paper, Tim was thinking, he would have a whole week's diversion o' nights ; if he didn't buy it, he would save the price of another tumblerful o'—— A heavy hand fell on his shoulder.

" Hello, Tim," said his neighbour, Shan Grogan ; " havin' a wee squint at the sugar-sticks is it, ye are ? "

" Aw ay," answered Tim, turning ; " aw ay ! I was just lookin' at the papers there, an' wonderin' what an ojus lot o' news they give us nowadays for a penny. Enough to keep one goin' for a week. Powerful it is."

" Yis," said Shan ; " it's a wonderful world. But aisy, Tim ; ha' ye been to the Post lately ? "

" Naw," said Tim.

" Well, look in there if you're passin', me son. The lassie that sells the stamps asked me to tell ye. Away quick ; mebbe she'll give ye news for nothin'."

" Now, now," answered Tim. " I'm obliged to ye, Shan ; I'm obliged to ye. Now, now," he repeated to himself, as he shuffled off along the pavement ; " now, now. Is Shan havin' a wee joke, I wonder ? " he said ; and coming to the post-office doubtfully sidled in.

" Me name is Kerin, Miss," he said to the clerk, very humbly as to one of the representatives of mighty Government itself, " Tim for Christian ; an' they tell me ye 'd mebbe be havin' somethin' for me ? "

The girl handed him a letter bearing the Chicago postmark, stamped in one of the bottom corners, and carrying its address thence right up to the top of the envelope. Tim bore it tenderly to the door and carefully inspected it ; then took it back to the counter.

" Whose countersign might that be, Miss, if ye please ? " he asked, and placed his thumb over the postmark. Humbly he asked ; curtly he was answered.

" Chicago ? " said Tim. " Ay, ay ! I'm obliged to ye, Miss ; I'm obliged to ye. May the Lord be good to ye, an' send ye a duke for a husband. Good-day to ye, Miss," said he ; then, with his hand deep in his pocket and the letter in his hand, stepped out into the street and went off in search of Nan.

It's from Padeen, he kept thinking to himself, as he walked joyfully along, his feet clattering loosely on the pavement, his old face turning here and there, watching for his wife ; it's from Padeen, sure as ever was. Aw ! but he was glad. Aw ! but Nan would be glad. So long it was, ages and ages ago, since they heard from him. 'Twasn't Padeen's hand-write—naw ! but sure it might have altered ; everything altered in the Big Country. Ay ! 'twas only poor ould Ireland that kept the same—never any worse, never any better. But where was Nan ? Sure she ought to be in the shops. He was dying to find her. Up and down he went ; at last found her still bobbing heads at the top of Bridge Street with her friend Mrs. Brady.

"Aw, it's here ye are, Nan ?" said he, coming up. "An' me huntin' the town for ye. It's yourself is well, Mrs. Brady, I'm hopin'? That's right, that's right."

His voice came strangely broken and shrill ; his eyes danced like a child's ; still his hand gripped the letter in his pocket.

"What's the matter, Tim ?" whispered Nan. "Is it news ye have ?"

"Ay, ay," he answered. "Come away till I tell ye ; come away."

He turned and, with Nan at his heels, set off almost at a run downhill towards the river. Aw ! but his heart was thumpin'.

"Aisy, Tim," cried Nan behind him ; "aisy, man, or me breath—me breath——"

Without answering, or slackening his pace, Tim went on, turned through the butter-market gate, crossed the empty yard, came to the furthest corner of one of the long low sheds, and there halted, with his face to the wall. Aw ! but his heart was thumpin'. Presently, Nan came to him, panting and flurried.

"What is it, Tim ?" she asked ; "what is it ?"

Slowly Tim brought out his letter, and, holding it by both hands, let his wife look at it.

"It's—it's from Padeen !" cried she ; "it's from Padeen !"

"Yis," said Tim ; "yis. It's not his hand-write ; but—but it must be from him."

"Aw, glory be to God !" cried Nan. "Glory be to God ! Sure it's ages since we heard from the boy, ages !"

She put down her basket, and, with her head between Tim's shoulder and the wall, looked fixedly at the envelope. Aw! but she was glad to see it. Such a time it was since they had heard from Padeen! A whole two years it was, come Christmas, since the last letter came, with that money order in it, an' the beautiful picture of Padeen himself, dressed out in his grand clothes, with a gold chain across his waistcoat, and a big gold ring on his finger. A whole two years almost. And now maybe——

"Aw, Tim, open it quick," she panted; "open it quick!"

"Mebbe," said Tim, "we'd better wait till we get home. The light's bad, an'——"

"No—no, Tim! No—no; it'd kill me to wait."

"Ay?" said Tim; then slowly drew his knife from his pocket and tenderly cut open the top of the envelope. His fingers trembled greatly as he fumbled with the enclosure. Nan's hand went quick to her heart.

"Aw, quick, Tim!" she cried. "Quick, quick!"

"Don't—don't flooster me, woman," said Tim; "I can't—can't——" The next moment his shaking old fingers held a sheet of notepaper, and a black-edged card on which, in large letters, beneath a long silvern cross, were the words: PATRICK KERIN.

Nan fell back a step; her fingers clutched at her dress over her heart. Tim's knife clattered upon the stones, and the envelope fluttered down. For a while they stood there silent, dread-stricken. At last Nan spoke. "Read, Tim," she said. "Read!"

"I—I can't."

"Ye must, Tim; it's better. Let us know the worst, for God's sake! Read, Tim."

"I—I——," Tim began; then quickly opened the sheet. "It's—it's too dark here," he mumbled; "I—I want me specs."

"Read what ye can, Tim—an' quick, for God's sake!"

So Tim, still with his face to the wall, raised the letter to catch the light, and began to read:

CHICAGO CITY, U.S.A.

DEAR—DEAR MISTER KERIN,—It is my—my sad duty to in-form you that your son Patrick died ("Aw, Padeen, Padeen!") of ty—typhus here on the 2nd of this month at twelve o'clock a.m. ("God's mercy!" cried Nan). As his oldest friend, I was with him at the end. He died in peace. He was buried at his request in—— Cemetery. I—I send you something to—to keep . . .

"Aw, I can read no more," said Tim, with a groan; "it's too dark. I can read no more. Me poor ould Padeen!"

Nan turned and looked vacantly across at the busy street, dry-eyed and grey-faced. Ah! her poor Padeen, dead and buried away among the strangers, dead and buried, and never, never would she see him again, never hear his voice, never grip his hand! Dead, dead! her big, handsome, noble son . . .

She turned to Tim and caught him by the sleeve.

"Come away home, Tim," she said. "Come away wi' me." Tim looked at her.

"Ah! Nan, Nan," he said, as the big tears sprang to his eyes. "Nan, me girl, but it's hard!"

"Ah yis," said she, and lifted her basket; "but come away, Tim, come away. Home's the best place for us."

"Yis," said Tim, wiping his eyes with his hand. "Yis, Nan." Then, Nan leading the way and Tim shuffling after, the two old people (mourners now in real earnest) crossed the yard; and at the gate Nan halted.

"I think," said she, as Tim came up, "I think we can manage this week wi'out the bits o' groceries. Sure they're only luxuries anyway. I'll go an' see if Mr. Murphy can find me a bit o' crape for me bonnet. Yis."

"Do," said Tim. "Do, Nan; an' when you're about it," he said, taking his sixpence from his pocket and handing it to her, "ye may as well get me a bit for me hat. Ay! sure I can do wi'out me tabaccy for one week. Aw yis! Away quick, Nan; an' hurry back, me girl, hurry back."

So Nan turned up towards the market-house; but Tim went downhill towards the bridge; and when, presently, Nan came to him, carrying her little packet of crape in her big basket, Tim's head was bowed over the parapet and he was mumbling tearfully: "Aw, me poor Padeen, me poor Padeen!"

Nan plucked at his sleeve.

"Come away home, Tim," she said; "come away." And at the word Tim raised his head, dried his eyes, and set off slowly after Nan up the long, dusty road that wearily led towards home.

TH' OULD BOY

SHAN F. BULLOCK

BELOW in the kitchen, the plebeians were making merry with quip and crank, pipe and glass, as they sat round the walls and here and there over the floor in the warmth of the great peat fire ; their laughter and chatter (subdued though it was, or tried to be) was heard distinctly above in the little parlour, where, round a well-spread table, sat a select company—the élite of the wake, you might say—gravely stirring their tea, eating their ham, discoursing on the merits and virtues (now, many of them, first brought to light) of the man who oftentimes had made merry at that very table, and now lay stark and lonely in a room beyond the kitchen.

" Ay, ay," sobbed the widow from her place behind the teacups ; " it's God's truth ; he was the generous heart an' the tender. Och, the heart av a child ! "

The spoons clinked dolefully round the cups ; the men solemnly wagged their heads ; the women sniffed and, to conquer emotion, tried buttered toast.

" How often, here in this very room," the widow went on, " did I hear him spake the word. Ay, ay ! An' 'twas the great gift o' prayer he had. Ah, ye all know it."

" Ay, ay," went the voices ; " we do, we do ; 'twas powerful, powerful ! "

" An' now he's tuk from us—tuk, tuk," cried the widow ; " gone an' left us to struggle alone wi' Satan. Ah, dear, dear ! "

The men were bent over their plates, the women biting their lips ; it was blessed relief when the hard, level voice of Red John went out through the doleful assembly.

" It's truth ye say, ma'am," said John ; " an' may your man be safe in glory (Amen—Amen, went the voices). But for yourself, have no fear o' Satan an' all his works : next time he makes bold to struggle wi' ye, just ax him if he remembers Red John : that'll settle him."

With one accord, all eyes were raised and turned wonderingly towards the bottom of the table, where, one hand thrust carelessly into his waistcoat pocket, the other idly playing with his knife, sat Red John : a big man he was, red-headed, and with a strong, impassive face. " You're all wonderin' ? " he went on, raising his eyes. " Well, ye needn't. I say to ye all once more : next time Satan tries strugglin', just mention me : that'll finish him."

Swiftly vanished sorrow and dole ; the men found their big, coarse voices ; the women pocketed their handkerchiefs : all, even the widow herself, called on John to explain.

" Ye mean to say ye never heard ? " asked John. " No ? Well, well. Such is life ; an' meself has told the story a score o' times. No odds. Here ye are. An' mind,' he added, shaking his finger, " no interruptions, an' no sayin' I'm a liar when I'm done. . . . Of course, ma'am ; of course I'll wait a minute in welcome ; an' just ax them down there to keep their bulls' voices quiet. Ye know," he went on, as the widow went out for a moment (carrying tobacco, or a bottle, or something, for the plebeians in the kitchen), " it'll niver do to let the poor thing fret. Och, no ; an' there's nothin' like a story to keep the heart from care. . . . Back again, ma'am ? Well, then, 'twas like this : " One day—ay, years ago—word came to me that Long Bob was runnin' a brewin' o' poteen. Now, when Long Bob brews, I'm off ; for let him use treacle, or malt, or whatever he chooses, there's no man these parts (an' I've interviewed a few) can make stuff to grip your tongue like he can. No matter. Soon as I heard word, off I went, for I wanted no dregs ; an' after a three-mile pull in the cot at last came to a wee island out in the lake, and there, in the middle o' the scrub an' the stones, was me darlint Still firin' away ; an' round it a party o'—Well, never mind, there was more than one there I knew, an' all made me welcome. Ah, 'twas great stuff that ; with a whiff off it like the middle o' a haystack, an' not a bite in a gallon of it. . . . Och, och, ma'am, is there anything behind ye there in the press ? Sure a toothful'd send the words flowin' out o' me. . . . That's right, that's right. Hurroo ! Now now, only a toothful I said, ma'am ; well, so be it. I'll do me endeavours.

" Well," Red John went on, when the company had drunk the widow's health and wished her long life, " I pass by all that happened there, just sayin' that we had great times, an' that when about dusk I set out for home I held a tidy sup besides the two lemonade bottles full in me tail pocket. It was a cowld night, an' ye know it's lonesome work draggin' a cot about a lake : so I'll not deny but mebbe I did wet me lips once or twice on the way ; an' I'll acknowledge straight that when I landed it took more than a drop to take the stiffness out o' me joints. But mark me, ma'am, an' all o' ye, ye mus'n't run away wi' the notion that I was fuddled ; I held me share, but I was as steady on me pins when I stepped out home as I am the night, an' as clear in the head as yourself, ma'am ; long life to ye an' your very good health. . . . Me smilin' little Cruiskeen lawn, lawn, lawn," sang John in chorus with the plebeians in the kitchen, beating time with his tumbler on the table—Me smilin' lit-tle Crui-skeen lawn !

" 'Twas about eleven o'clock—more or less, I'll not say as I'm strivin' for the truth, when I got home. Mary an' the childer were all in bed, an' there was a glimmer in the lamp, an' a pot o' porridge waitin' for me over a snug fire ; so down I sits an' makes me supper ; then lights the pipe and was goin' over (meanin' to make meself comfortable) to hang me coat on the back o' the door when, badness to me, if I didn't catch sight o' the neck o' a bottle stickin' out o' the tail pocket. ' Och, och,' says I, scratchin' me head, ' but it's the sore temptation, och, och ! I wonder now would a wee sup hurt one ? ' An' afore I could make up me mind, the cork was out o' the bottle an' with some o' the poteen in a mug I was over by the dresser liftin' a sup o' water out of a can that stood on the floor.

" Now you'll attend to this, ma'am, an' the rest o' ye ; for it's here the fun begins an' it's here I'll be truthfuller than ever. Just as I was stoopin' to get the water, there was a shakin' in the house, an' a blue flash that kind o' dazzled me ; an' with that I turns round sharp—when, lo and behold ye, there, sittin' by the fire, wi' his legs crossed an' him lookin' straight at me, was as fine a lookin' gentleman as ever I clapped eyes on. All dressed in black he was, wi' a big cloak fallin' to the ground, an' a top hat, if ye please ; an' his hair black, an' his face shaved, an' sorrow a smell o' jewelry on his person. Arrah, Lord save us, thinks I to meself, who are ye at all, an' where did ye come from ? An', somehow, the way he sat there that cool, an' the divilish way he looked at me set me shakin' ; if it hadn't been for the sup in the mug I'd ha' dropped on the floor. But the poteen gave me courage ; an' wi' that I minded me manners an' spakes out.

" ' Good evenin', sir,' says I ; ' it's pretty late ye'll be ? ' He looked straight at me, keepin' his legs crossed, an' not one word he answered. Then, thinkin', maybe, he was hard o' hearin' I spakes again. " ' Good evenin', sir,' says I ; ' is it missed your way ye have the night ? ' " But sorrow a word ; there he sat in the chair—just as ye are yourself, ma'am, beggin' pardon an' meanin' no comparisons ; an' never moved hand or foot or budged a lip. So I scratched me head an' cast about what I was to do ; for I couldn't keep standin' there like a fool, an' I was afraid to move. What in glory, thinks I, am I to do ? Then all of a sudden the thought struck me ; an' round I turns to the coat hangin' on the back o' the door, an' takes th' other lemonade bottle out o' the pocket. "' Axin' your pardon, sir,' says I, ' but if it's not makin' bold, could I offer ye the least taste just to keep the raw from your bones ? '

" Not a word he answered ; but, thinks I, there's a twinkle in your eye, me boy, that looks as if you'd be partial to a drop ; an' ye all know a nod's as good as a wink to a blind horse. So, keepin' an eye on him over me shoulder, I turned an' got another mug off the dresser, an' mixin' a tidy dose I went across the floor an' offered it t' him. Like a lamb, sirs, he took it ; gulped it down an' smacked his lips on the last drop. But see here, ma'am ; may I never see light ! if the draught didn't turn into blue blazes in his throat. Ye laugh ? Well, don't then, if it isn't at your own ignorance. Laugh ! troth most o' ye'll see worse than that after ye die." And John winked over his glass at the company.

" Well, thunder an' turf, thinks I to meself, what kind of a customer is this ? Sure if he'd be sociable even it 'd not be so bad. How-somede'er, thinks I, I'll make meself at home by me own fire ; an' down I plops on a stool fornenst him, pulls out the cutty, fills it, an' lights up. After a couple o' whiffs I wipes the shank on me coat an' offers it to him.

" ' Mebbe you'd like a draw ? ' says I, holdin' the cutty to him across the hearth ; ' people these parts say it goes well wi' poteen.'

" He reached out an' tuk it, knocked the ashes off it, an' put it in his mouth. May death have me, ma'am, if the sight didn't parch me tongue ! Every whiff o' him was a blue strame o' fire ; an' ye could see blue blazes dancin' over the pipe ; an' the eyes o' him glared like a cat's in the dark. An' he never moved a limb ; just sat there as unconcerned as ever in his black suit, movin' his lips an' whiffin' out them infernal blue strames.

" ' Ah, great powers ! ' says I ; ' what are ye at all, at all ? Why are ye here ? Why are ye here ? '

" An' with that, for I was frightened powerful, I tumbled off the stool, an' with an odious clatter went crash among the pots an' pot-hooks. An' the next thing I hears is Mary gettin' out o' bed in the room above an' liftin' the latch to come an' see what was up.

"She drew back immediately she seen some one wi' me—by good luck the gentleman had his back to her; an' in a minute or two down she comes in her petticoats—savin' your presence, ladies all—an' wid a shawl round her shoulders. "'What's the matter, John?' says she, kind o' frightened like, an' standin' behind the boy-o, sittin' there like a graven image smokin' away.

"'Nothin',' says I.

"'But I was woke out o' me sleep wi' a shockin' clatter?' says she.

"'Ye were,' says I, 'right enough. I stumbled over the pot there.'

"'You're late?' says she.

"'I am,' says I.

"'What kep' ye,' says she.

"'Aw, nothin' particular,' says I. 'Just made a kaley or two. The gentleman there lost his way in the bog, an' he's warmin' himself before he starts out again.'

"All the time we were discoorsin', I was winkin' at Mary to spake to the boy-o; for I thought it powerful ungenteel to stand there wi'out addressin' him. At last, she comes round, an' drops a curtsy, an' says she, in a haltin' kind o' way, not a bit like Mary's usual style o' talkin', for, as ye all know, she's blessed wi' the gift o' the gab:

"'Savin' your presence, sir,' says she, 'for appearin' in these duds afore ye; but—I—was loth—to wait—long—for I was a—fraid somethin' bad had ha—happened when I heard—heard——'

"Not another word could she get out; I could see her eyes openin' wide, an' her jaw droppin', an' she fell a-tremblin'. For the boy-o just riz his eyes 'n looked at her; kept them hard on her, an' never moved a muscle, nor spoke a word, nor stopped puffin' blue blazes out o' me ould cutty.

"All of a sudden Mary turns, to me, white as a corpse, an' says she: "'God in Heaven! John Graham, who's this? An' what's goin' to happen to us at all?'

"I couldn't answer; an' I thought Mary was goin' into a fit.

"'Look at the mouth o' him,' shouts she, 'blue flames comin' out o' it! An' his nose! An' look at his eyes! Aw, God help us!—an' she lets a screech; 'look at his feet! Cloots—cloots! It's the devil himself!' An' with that she tears from the kitchen up into her room an' bolts the door. "I was fair flabbergasted. What could I do? Thinks I, what brings th' ould boy to my fireside? I rubs me head an' looks hard at him; then gets up, an' creepin' to the table empties the lemonade bottle down me throat. "Boys, but poteen's the darlin' stuff; it put a new heart in me; an' cleared me head; an' made me feel fit to fight twenty divils. "Off I peels me waistcoat; tucks up me shirt sleeves, an' spits on me hands: then up I steps to Mister Divil.

"'Ye ould ragamuffin,' says I, an' whacks me fists in his face, 'what brings ye roamin' like a roarin' lion to decent Prodestan' houses? Did ye ever hear tell o' Red John Graham,' says I, 'that hits man or divil like the kick o' a horse? Look at the face o' him, then,' an' I glares straight at him; 'look at him,' says I, 'ye tarnation ould scarecrow; look an' tremble, Mister Beelzebub! Ye're in the wrong house the night, ye flamin' ould tinker ye!' says I. 'Your kind isn't here, Apollyon. I'm Red John, me boy, that fears neither man nor divil. Let me at your face,' says I—an' from the bedroom comes Mary's voice shoutin': 'Hurroo, John! Pelt the ould vagabond. Pepper him, John.' 'I will, Mary,' I shouts; 'I will. Come out. Stand up. Give me three minutes at your wizened countenance till I leave ye a laughin' stock for your own angels.'

"Then I made a grab," shouted John, knocking his chair over as he jumped up, and upsetting his tumbler as he made a false clutch at his neighbour's hair. "I made a grab at the head o' him just like that.

"'Come out!' roars I. 'Come out an' be kilt!' An' with the word I fell on me head in the corner over an empty chair."

"Gone?" cried the widow. "He was gone?"

"Ay," answered John; "when I came to there was no one there but Mary, flingin' water over me an' roarin' meila murther."

"Prime," went up the voices. "It's prime. Bully for you, John. Tight boy, John." Then, from halfway down the table, came the voice of a sceptic.

"Well," it said, "in me own experience I've known poteen do quare things; but never before this night did I hold it responsible for makin' a man the biggest liar at a wake. Is there no one else? Och, is there no one else? Can no one tell a sober lie for a change?"

John leant over the table towards the sceptic. "Young man," he said, "ye call me a liar, an' ye say I was drunk. Your years, an' the house we're in, 'll excuse ye this time; but never again, mind. An' if you, or any other person here, repeats such things, I'll take ye home an' prove me words by sittin' ye in the very chair th' ould boy sat in: an' I'll give ye the wiggin' I meant for him into the bargain."

FRANK MATHEW

B. 1865

THE REVEREND PETER FLANNERY

MY friend the Reverend Peter Flannery is the sternest-looking and the gentlest of men. To look at him you would fancy he had spent a fierce life; but the truth is that he has lived in a wilderness and that in his broad parish of Moher there is not a mouse afraid of him.

I first met him in an hotel at Lisdoonvarna. One night there was singing, and a big, truculent old priest sang in his turn :

When we went a-gipsying,
A long time ago.

He was very serious and hoarse. With his grim face and white hair he looked the last man in the world to "go a-gipsying." Afterwards I came to know Peter, and spent many evenings with him in the little house where he lives with an old housekeeper of singular ugliness and a turbulent small boy known as Patrick Flannery. I found him absurdly simple, a man knowing nothing of the world and troubling himself little about anything beyond the borders of Moher ; but though he is so unpretending he has deep respect for his dignity as a parish-priest. On one of those evenings in his naked little parlour he told me the story of the only adventure of his life.

A small island with a ruined house on it lies near the shore of the most desolate part of the parish ; at high tide it is ringed with white jumping waves, but at ebb it is set in a black rim of rocks. A miser was strangled there for his money by his daughter, seventy years ago, so the house is known for miles around as the " House of the Murder." Then it was a headland, but afterwards the encroaching sea cut it off from the coast. The Moher folk say the island is haunted by the ghost of an old man with a choked face and with purple foam on his lips, and is given up to the Evil Spirits.

One stormy winter's night, nearly twelve years ago now, Peter Flannery was riding back from visiting a dying woman near Liscannor. It was raining, the wind was dead against him ; he had seldom been out on such a night though his life-work took him on many a wild lonely ride. As he reached the Liscannor Cross-roads his horse stopped, and a heart-broken voice came from under the trees.

"Remember the Dark Man! For God's sake remember the Dark Man!" He knew that it was Andy Lonergan, the "Dark Man"—that is, the blind man—who haunted that place day and night.

"Is that yourself, Andy?" said he.

"'Tis so, your reverence, but 'tis the black night to be abroad, sure the Banshee is keenin' on th' island."

"The Banshee, is it? I know, I know, and manny's the time I've heard that same, Andy. There's never a rough night without her."

"Is it the wind ye mane, father? I know the wind's cry if anny-one, but 'twasn't only that on th' island to-night; 'twas a woman's voice, sometimes 'twas like a child's. There'll be sore hearts in Moher the morn."

"Ah well, Andy! manny's the queer thing ye've heard in your time," said Peter, and he rode homewards, but Andy's words kept in his head. Now, the blind man was half crazed, yet dared not lie about the Banshee; perhaps there was some poor soul in trouble out on the island. At last he turned his horse; as he rode back past the Cross-roads he called out, "Are ye there, Andy?" but no answer came. The horse seemed to have strong objections to going seaward, and Peter himself had misgivings; he is a Clare man, the son of a Ballyvaughan fisherman, and though of course he does not believe in the Banshee, yet would rather not have gone where there was any chance of meeting her. Then he thought—suppose Andy was fooling him! He could fancy the blind man sitting hidden and grinning at him as he rode back past the Cross-roads. It would be a fine joke in Moher; he flushed at such irreverence.

Then he reached the shore, and dismounting fastened his horse to a wall, and walked down across the slipping shingle, crunching it under foot; he was tripped by tangles of seaweed, and stumbled over a fishing coracle, could see scarcely a yard in front of him. "'Tis a blind man's holiday," he thought. "Faith, Dark Andy could see as much as I can, and why couldn't McCaura leave his coracle in a sensible place?" He went to the water's edge, the foam splashed over him, he could see nothing but the white flashes of breakers and was deafened by the noise. A few minutes of this was enough; he turned back with a smile at the absurdity of his going out there at that time of night. "There's no fool like an old one," he said; then stopped to listen again, and in a pause (when the wind seemed to be taking breath for a howl) heard a child's cry from the island. How could a baby be on the island in a hurricane, when there was not a soul for miles around would go there for love or money at any time? His misgivings rushed back with uncanny legends of lost souls bound on the winds or imprisoned in the waves that always keep racing towards the land yet always break before reaching it. This might be some Devil's trap. True, he could exorcise the Devil, but would rather not.

He waited during the new howl of the wind—it seemed endless—then in the next pause heard the child's voice again; it was an unmistakably human squall. "'Tis a child, sure enough," he said, "an' a strong one at that." The question for him was not how did the baby get on the island, but how was he to get it off? McCaura's cabin was a mile away across the bog, and on such a night no one would be out except Dark Andy, who would be worse than useless. The only thing was to go out to the island himself, so he groped his way to the coracle.

Now a coracle is a sort of punt, a shallow frame covered with tarpaulin, a ticklish craft, but it can live in the wildest sea, though as Peter said—" 'Tis always on the look-out for a chance to drown ye." He shouldered it as one to the manner born. Many a day and night had he spent afloat in the time when he was a fisher-boy; he thought how often since then he had longed to put out to sea, only his mighty dignity as a parish priest forbade it. His old bones were stiff, but he was as strong as ever.

Well, to cut a long story short, he launched that coracle and reached the island, not without risky and hard work. Dragging the coracle ashore, he made his way to the ruined house; the roof had fallen in, the windows were gone, only the walls were left. He could see nothing, but the child's cry guided him, and then in a corner he found a woman lying huddled on a heap of fallen plaster and laths; her face was to the wall, her left arm clutched a tiny baby. He knelt down by her and touched her forehead—she was dead. By her dress he knew she came from the Arran Islands. Perhaps she had been brought to the "House of the Murder" to keep the birth secret; or perhaps the fishers bringing her to the mainland had been caught by the gale, and could place her in no better shelter in the time of her trouble. Now the Arran folk were familiar to him, many were of his kindred; he must have known this woman from her babyhood, and as a slip of a girl running barefoot on the hills. He turned her face to him, but could only see it dimly; it was much changed too, and half hidden by wet hair. Then the thought came that he had no right to pry into her secret ; he laid her head back reverently. She lay there with her face to the wall as if she had died in shame.

He took the baby and chafed it, wrapping his woollen comforter round it ; he thought it was dying—his knowledge of babies was small—so he decided to baptize it at once. There was no lack of water, for the rain was still falling in torrents, so he filled a cup that was lying with some untasted food by the mother, and baptized that whining infant as reverently and solemnly as if he had been in a great cathedral.

It must have been a strange scene in the " House of the Murder "—the gaunt old man dripping from the rain and the sea, holding the baby tenderly and awkwardly, with the body of the mother lying beside them. He gave the baby the name Patrick, the first that came to him, "Pathricius, ego te baptizo," and so forth in his queer Latin brogue, and the small new Christian howled dismally, and the gale answering howled outside. Then he unbuttoned the breast of his greatcoat and fastened the baby inside—so that only its ridiculous red face could be seen—and started for home. Crossing more easily this time, he found his old horse huddled in dumb resignation under the lee of the wall, and rode home through the storm at a good pace with a light heart. Every now and then the child cried to show that the life was in it, and then he tried to quiet it tenderly with " Be hushed now, vick machree, son of my heart ! Ah ! be sthille, Pathrick. Be aisy, ye cantankerous little cur ! "

There was great work that night in the little house, when the old priest and his housekeeper welcomed their guest. And when the baby was cosily asleep, Peter got into his big arm-chair and mixed himself a steaming tumbler of punch—for no man values punch more, though of course in strict moderation—and he felt he deserved it to-night. " An' would ye believe it ? " and at this point of his story his voice shook with pathos—" would ye believe it, at th' instant when I was putting it to me lips the clock sthruck twelve, and so I couldn't taste a dhrop, not a single dhrop ! " For if he had tasted it after midnight he could not have said Mass. This was a lame ending to his one adventurous night. The baby was kept in the priest's house, and, when the gale went down, the mother's body was brought from the island and buried ; I think Father Peter found afterwards who she was, though her name never passed his lips.

For nearly twelve years " Pathrick " has ruled the priest's house, thriving under the rough tenderness of Peter Flannery. Meanwhile Peter has led always the same life, rising in the early morning to say Mass in the cold chapel before a scanty congregation of women ; many of them pray aloud with shut eyes and entire disregard of their neighbours, and Patrick now serves him as clerk, looking very serious in his little white surplice, like a Cupid in a monk's cowl.

Then he rides on his sick-calls, miles and miles away through the bogs and over the hills, for he goes at any hour of the day or night to any one who chooses to summon him ; or he walks down to the school—where he usually finds Patrick standing in the corner with his face to the wall, in disgrace—or he goes his rounds through the Village of Moher. Many a time have I seen him striding down the Village “like an executioner,” and the dirty little ragged children running to meet him and snuggling their smeared faces against his long coat. The first time babies see him they yell as if he was the Devil ; but the next time they would yell louder still if he forgot to fondle them. Many a time have I seen him standing in the street, beleaguered by a cluster of women, scowling nervously over them and looking to see if there is any chance of rescue ; while they all talk at once, quarrelling among themselves :

“ Ah ! Peggy Lonergan, dacint woman, be whisht, can't ye ? ”

“ Mary Ronan, I take shame o' ye to be throublin' the holy priest so. Won't ye be lettin' me have a single word wid him ? ”

And now in the evenings he has something to dream about, and when he sits alone by the fire in his naked parlour, smoking his old pipe—with his tumbler of punch smoking too, to keep him company—he dreams of the great future of Patrick Flannery. He sees that urchin grow up a model, go to Maynooth and win prizes there, rise rapidly in the Church, and even become a Bishop. It is true Pat will have to change greatly before then, for it is a queer Bishop he would make now ; but time works wonders and, Pat has a good heart.

Peter hears him preaching the great sermons himself has never preached to the great congregations he has never seen. And he thinks that “ His Lordship Docthor Flannery ” has a pleasing sound, that Bishop Flannery will be loved by all, that blessings will go with him ; it is he that will have an eye for true worth and never let a plain man spend his life in a wilderness while smoother-tongued men have all they want. But at this point the dream breaks, for he knows in his heart that he would be sorry to leave his wilderness ; so when the clock strikes nine he slowly finishes his punch, knocks out the ashes from his pipe and goes up the steep stairs to his bedroom, quavering in his hoarse voice,

When we went a-gipsying,
A long time ago.

A CONNEMARA MIRACLE

FRANK MATHEW

SOME said big John Murnane was the laziest man in Connemara, others called him a surly dog ; but I always liked him. He had some excuse for his laziness and surliness. When I knew him first he was active enough. He used then to begin the day in the brightest of tempers, and if he had been let sit in peace and sunshine would have remained merry, but work undermined his cheerfulness. His farm lay high above Leenane at the head of the Killeries, a creek walled in by mountains, in the heart of the Irish Highlands.

Two roads wind down to the creek, one lower by Finigan's shebeen and one by Murnane's farm. In those days I half envied him ; he had a pretty little wife, a neat home, and three pigs, while I owned neither a pig nor a wife ; he had no vain ambition and asked nothing better than to live and die at home in that wilderness.

But when I visited Connemara again, years later, things had changed with him ; he had met with ill-luck, and had lost heart. A bank holding his little money had failed, his crops had failed too, his last pig had died ; everything had gone badly with him. He spent half his time at the shebeen, and had a dangerous look. To make matters worse, he was to be turned out of his farm—had quarrelled with his landlord ; for a true Galway-man always quarrels with the man best able to thrash him. Murnane was full of fight, his mother used to say of him that he was never at rest except when he was fighting, and of course he knew that some one else must be responsible for his misfortunes, so he laid the blame at his landlord's door.

His landlord was my friend Shane Desmond, who in those days was always at war with his tenants. Here I thought were the makings of a tragedy—a lawless district, an unruly peasantry, and a hated landlord.

Well, that summer my stay in Connemara was brief, and soon after I left, Murnane came to the turning-point of his life. I have the story from his own lips.

In November, when the days grew short and the nights dark, there was a rumour in the shebeens near Leenane that some of "the boys" were coming from Desmond's estate in Clare, a fishing-boat would bring them from Liscannor to the Killeries and take them back without any one being the wiser, and their trip might mend matters.

One boisterous evening, Murnane was standing at his window watching his wife trudging heavily up the mountain road. All day the wind had been hissing drearily through the mountains; now it was snarling and yelping like fighting dogs. There was a veil of rain wavering on the grey crescent of sea.

He had spent hours that day at the shebeen. As he watched his wife he thought in a muddled way how pretty she was when she was young though now she was a plain little woman; he thought of the time when he first caught her in his arms, down yonder where the Owen-Erriff runs by the Devil's Mother Mountain—"I love ye, Molly Joyce! tell me now, are ye listenin' to me, mavourneen dheelish! I love ye!"—then of their life, of the careless years, of his losses and troubles, of the heavy evenings he spent smoking by the dull light of the turf fire alone with her in this cabin, then of the loud nights in the shebeen, and of the dreary times at home after. She seemed to get so silent and dull, he was tired of her worried face, sick of her frightened way of watching him.

Though he knew that she was a kind little woman, and that she loved him like a dog, he had grown hard and cold with her. Only that evening he had told her roughly to stop making a hare of herself, moping and poking about doing nothing, and to get out of that and to spend the night at her father's; and she, knowing the little use of speaking to him, had gone silently. He felt half sorry for his roughness as he watched her; after all she was a good soul and they had been happy together once. But now that he was to lose his last belongings why should he keep her? how could he when he couldn't? She must go back to her own folk who were well-to-do—for those parts—while he went out to try his luck in the world.

Then he walked up and down his cabin. It looked wretched; the turf fire on the hearth had smouldered, the whitewashed walls were blackened by smoke, they had little on them but a big crucifix, there was little furniture left. He remembered it bright and homelike; now it would be unroofed, he would be penniless and homeless unless Desmond was shot that night.

For the boat had come from Liscannor, and when Desmond drove back from Carrala, "the boys" were to wait for him on the lower road. If he came by the upper road, Murnane would see him, and was to put a light in his window; then they would change their ambush.

At the best, Murnane's thoughts were not clear. Now he kept thinking, over and over again, sure 'twas no harm lighting a candle, 'twas no business of his whatever the boys below might do; then, 'twas his chance of revenge, sure the man deserved to be killed; then, if only he was going to hit Desmond himself 'twould be different, but 'twas cowardly just lighting a candle; then, 'twas a black job after all.

Outside the twilight was fading; the wind was working itself into a rage with uncanny cries. Was that the wind or the shriek of the Banshee? It was said that lost souls were chained on the wind, surely there were human cries in it now: why were the dead abroad to-night?

The landscape was blotted out. Then the moon began to rise and the backs of the mountains rose out of the darkness. Then he saw their steep walls and the winding lane of slaty water between them.

There was a glimmer of silver over Muilrea; the moon floated into sight with milky-edged clouds round her; a path of light crossed the water, and three streams glittered on the Blue Gable Mountain. The moon seemed to shine out with strange suddenness; the jagged top of Muilrea stood black against her, making her look as if a ragged piece had been torn from her. He stared till the light dazzled him; then turned away.

The black crucifix on the wall opposite was shown plainly by the moonlight; the face of its figure was bent forward as if watching him. He had prayed before it so often all his life. It had seen him a baby in the cradle, a child dandled by his mother, a man bringing home his bride. Here in this cabin, this one room where his life had been centred, the crucifix hung as a silent witness. He thought of his misery; sure he had cause to hate the man. Still that sad face was watching him, he could not bear it, must take the crucifix down. Placing a bench under, he reached to the nail fastening the top and wrenched it out.

The moon was covered. The cross leant forward in the darkness. He turned his head away to shun the bent face; and groping, tugged out the nail at the foot. The cross seemed as heavy as lead, he dared not look at it ; placing it in the corner—face downward—he covered it with a cloth.

Then he stood again at the window. The moon shone out, and the wind lurched drunkenly against the door, with an echo of singing from the shebeen, the chorus of “ Crúiscin Lan ” (The Little Full Jug) :

Is gradh mo croidhe a cuilin ban ban ban,
Is gradh mo croidhe a cuilin ban.

He could fancy the crowded smoky room, the glowing turf fire, and old Pat Finigan singing with a jolly flushed face ; and those other men listening too, crouching behind the low wall.

There was a stain of rust on his right hand and he thought it was blood, rubbed it but it was dry, felt as if a curse had fallen on him. Then came a pause between the gusts, and he heard the ring of hoofs on the stony road. At once he turned back to light the candle, took it with a shaky hand : then on the wall where the cross had been, saw a dazzling white cross.

He staggered back with his eyes fixed on it : it was a miracle, a last warning. He dashed the candle on the ground, and crunched it under foot into the earthen floor.

The moon was drowned by the clouds and left the cabin pitch dark. The wind crashed against the door again. He unlatched the door, it was dashed open—he could not breathe—tried to pull it to after him but could not, some unseen hand seemed dragging it. The wind swirled through the cabin and flung the cloth from the prostrate crucifix.

The next morning was calm, with a stainless sky. Molly came trudging down the mountain road from her father's farm, her heart heavy with foreboding. All that night she had been crying and praying. The glory of the morning, the rare colouring of the mountains, the green crescent of sea, were nothing to her.

As she reached the door of the cabin she saw her man sitting by the hearth with his head bent forward on his hands. The crucifix was gone from its place. It had been fixed there when the walls had been shining with fresh whitewash, now they were blackened, but where it had hung the wall remained white in the shape of a cross.

“ Is it you, asthore ? ” he said, came to meet her, put his hands on her shoulders, and drew her close to him.

“ It's a hard world 'tis, mavourneen, but we'll bear God's will together, Molly dear.”

W. B. YEATS

B. 1865

THE TWISTING OF THE ROPE

HANRAHAN was walking the roads one time near Kinvara at the fall of day, and he heard the sound of a fiddle from a house a little way off the roadside. He turned up the path to it, for he never had the habit of passing by any place where there was music or dancing or good company, without going in. The man of the house was standing at the door, and when Hanrahan came near he knew him and he said: "A welcome before you, Hanrahan, you have been lost to us this long time." But the woman of the house came to the door and she said to her husband: "I would be as well pleased for Hanrahan not to come in to-night, for he has no good name now among the priests, or with women that mind themselves, and I wouldn't wonder from his walk if he has a drop of drink taken." But the man said, "I will never turn away Hanrahan of the poets from my door," and with that he bade him enter.

There were a good many neighbours gathered in the house, and some of them remembered Hanrahan; but some of the little lads that were in the corners had only heard of him, and they stood up to have a view of him, and one of them said: "Is not that Hanrahan that had the school, and that was brought away by Them?" But his mother put her hand over his mouth and bade him be quiet, and not be saying things like that. "For Hanrahan is apt to grow wicked," she said, "if he hears talk of that story, or if any one goes questioning him." One or another called out then, asking him for a song, but the man of the house said it was no time to ask him for a song, before he had rested himself; and he gave him whiskey in a glass, and Hanrahan thanked him and wished him good health and drank it off.

The fiddler was tuning his fiddle for another dance, and the man of the house said to the young men, they would all know what dancing was like when they saw Hanrahan dance, for the like of it had never been seen since he was there before. Hanrahan said he would not dance, he had better use for his feet now, travelling as he was through the five provinces of Ireland. Just as he said that, there came in at the half-door Oona, the daughter of the house, having a few bits of bog deal from Connemara in her arms for the fire. She threw them on the hearth and the flame rose up, and showed her to be very comely and smiling, and two or three of the young men rose up and asked for a dance. But Hanrahan crossed the floor and brushed the others away, and said it was with him she must dance, after the long road he had travelled before he came to her. And it is likely he said some soft word in her ear, for she said nothing against it, and stood out with him, and there were little blushes in her cheeks. Then other couples stood up, but when the dance was going to begin, Hanrahan chanced to look down, and he took notice of his boots that were worn and broken, and the ragged grey socks showing through them ; and he said angrily it was a bad floor, and the music no great things, and he sat down in the dark place beside the hearth. But if he did, the girl sat down there with him.

L. Hoff & Frey

W. B. Yeats

(W. B. Yeats)

The dancing went on, and when that dance was over another was called for, and no one took much notice of Oona and Red Hanrahan for a while, in the corner where they were. But the mother grew to be uneasy, and she called to Oona to come and help her to set the table in the inner room. But Oona, that had never refused her before, said she would come soon, but not yet, for she was listening to whatever he was saying in her ear. The mother grew yet more uneasy then, and she would come nearer them, and let on to be stirring the fire or sweeping the hearth, and she would listen for a minute to hear what the poet was saying to her child. And one time she heard him telling about white-handed Deirdre, and how she brought the sons of Usnach to their death ; and how the blush in her cheeks was not so red as the blood of kings' sons that was shed for her, and her sorrows had never gone out of mind ; and he said it was maybe the memory of her that made the cry of the plover on the bog as sorrowful in the ear of the poets as the keening of young men for a comrade. And there would never have been that memory of her, he said, if it was not for the poets that had put her beauty in their songs. And the next time she did not well understand what he was saying, but as far as she could hear it had the sound of poetry though it was not rhymed, and this is what she heard him say : " The sun and the moon are the man and the girl, they are my life and your life, they are travelling and ever travelling through the skies as if under the one hood. It was God made them for one another. He made your life and my life before the beginning of the world, he made them that they might go through the world, up and down, like the two best dancers that go on with the dance up and down the long floor of the barn, fresh and laughing, when all the rest are tired out and leaning against the wall."

The old woman went then to where her husband was playing cards, but he would take no notice of her, and then she went to a woman of the neighbours and said : " Is there no way we can get them from one another ? " and without waiting for an answer she said to some young men that were talking together : " What good are you when you cannot make the best girl in the house come out and dance with you ? And go now the whole of you," she said, " and see can you bring her away from the poet's talk." But Oona would not listen to any of them, but only moved her hand as if to send them away. Then they called to Hanrahan and said he had best dance with the girl himself, or let her dance with one of them. When Hanrahan heard what they were saying he said : " That is so, I will dance with her ; there is no man in the house must dance with her but myself."

He stood up with her then, and led her out by the hand, and some of the young men were vexed, and some began mocking at his ragged coat and his broken boots. But he took no notice, and Oona took no notice, but they looked at one another as if all the world belonged to themselves alone. But another couple that had been sitting together like lovers stood out on the floor at the same time, holding one another's hands and moving their feet to keep time with the music. But Hanrahan turned his back on them as if angry, and in place of dancing he began to sing, and as he sang he held her hand, and his voice grew louder, and the mocking of the young men stopped, and the fiddle stopped, and there was nothing heard but his voice that had in it the sound of the wind. And what he sang was a song he had heard or had made one time in his wanderings on Slieve Echtge, and the words of it as they can be put into English were like this :

O Death's old bony finger
Will never find us there
In the high hollow townland
Where love's to give and to spare ;
Where boughs have fruit and blossom
At all times of the year ;
Where rivers are running over
With red beer and brown beer.
An old man plays the bagpipes
In a gold and silver wood ;
Queens, their eyes blue like the ice,
Are dancing in a crowd.

And while he was singing it Oona moved nearer to him, and the colour had gone from her cheek, and her eyes were not blue now, but grey with the tears that were in them, and any one that saw her would have thought she was ready to follow him there and then from the west to the east of the world.

But one of the young men called out : " Where is that country he is singing about ? Mind yourself, Oona, it is a long way off, you might be a long time on the road before you would reach to it." And another said : " It is not to the Country of the Young you will be going if you go with him, but to Mayo of the bogs." Oona looked at him then as if she would question him, but he raised her head in his hand, and called out between singing and shouting : " It is very near us that country is, it is on every side ; it may be on the bare hill behind it is, or it may be in the heart of the wood." And he said out very loud and clear : " In the heart of the wood ; oh, death will never find us in the heart of the wood. And will you come with me there, Oona ? " he said.

But while he was saying this the two old women had gone outside the door, and Oona's mother was crying, and she said : " He has put an enchantment on Oona. Can we not get the men to put him out of the house ? "

" That is a thing you cannot do," said the other woman, " for he is a poet of the Gael, and you know well if you would put a poet of the Gael out of the house, he would put a curse on you that would wither the corn in the fields and dry up the milk of the cows, if it had to hang in the air seven years."

" God help us," said the mother, " and why did I ever let him into the house at all, and the wild name he has ! "

" It would have been no harm at all to have kept him outside, but there would great harm come upon you if you put him out by force. But listen to the plan I have to get him out of the house by his own doing, without any one putting him from it at all."

It was not long after that the two women came in again, each of them having a bundle of hay in her apron. Hanrahan was not singing now, but he was talking to Oona very fast and soft, and he was saying : " The house is narrow but the world is wide, and there is no true lover that need be afraid of night or morning or sun or stars or shadows of evening, or any earthly thing." " Hanrahan," said the mother then, striking him on the shoulder, " will you give me a hand here for a minute? " "Do that, Hanrahan," said the woman of the neighbours, "and help us to make this hay into a rope, for you are ready with your hands, and a blast of wind has loosened the thatch on the haystack."

"I will do that for you," said he, and he took the little stick in his hands, and the mother began giving out the hay, and he twisting it, but he was hurrying to have done with it, and to be free again. The women went on talking and giving out the hay, and encouraging him, and saying what a good twister of a rope he was, better than their own neighbours or than any one they had ever seen. And Hanrahan saw that Oona was watching him, and he began to twist very quick and with his head high, and to boast of the readiness of his hands, and the learning he had in his head, and the strength in his arms. And as he was boasting, he went backward, twisting the rope always till he came to the door that was open behind him, and without thinking he passed the threshold and was out on the road. And no sooner was he there than the mother made a sudden rush, and threw out the rope after him, and she shut the door and the half-door and put a bolt upon them.

She was well pleased when she had done that, and laughed out loud, and the neighbours laughed and praised her. But they heard him beating at the door, and saying words of cursing outside it, and the mother had but time to stop Oona that had her hand upon the bolt to open it. She made a sign to the fiddler then, and he began a reel, and one of the young men asked no leave but caught hold of Oona and brought her into the thick of the dance. And when it was over and the fiddle had stopped, there was no sound at all of anything outside, but the road was as quiet as before.

As to Hanrahan, when he knew he was shut out and that there was neither shelter nor drink nor a girl's ear for him that night, the anger and the courage went out of him, and he went on to where the waves were beating on the strand.

He sat down on a big stone, and he began swinging his right arm and singing slowly to himself, the way he did always to hearten himself when every other thing failed him. And whether it was that time or another time he made the song that is called to this day "The Twisting of the Rope," and that begins, "What was the dead cat that put me in this place," is not known.

But after he had been singing a while, mist and shadows seemed to gather about him, sometimes coming out of the sea, and sometimes moving upon it. It seemed to him that one of the shadows was the queen-woman he had seen in her sleep at Slieve Echtge ; not in her sleep now, but mocking, and calling out to them that were behind her : " He was weak, he was weak, he had no courage." And he felt the strands of the rope in his hand yet, and went on twisting it, but it seemed to him as he twisted that it had all the sorrows of the world in it. And then it seemed to him as if the rope had changed in his dream into a great water-worm that came out of the sea, and that twisted itself about him, and held him closer and closer, and grew from big to bigger till the whole of the earth and skies were wound up in it, and the stars themselves were but the shining of the ridges of its skin. And then he got free of it, and went on, shaking and unsteady, along the edge of the strand, and the grey shapes were flying here and there around him. And this is what they were saying, " It is a pity for him that refuses the call of the daughters of the Sidhe, for he will find no comfort in the love of the women of the earth to the end of life and time, and the cold of the grave is in his heart for ever. It is death he has chosen ; let him die, let him die, let him die."

ROSANNA

SITTING by the fire we were, smoking our bits of pipes, just him and me together, when, of a sudden, he turns on me an' he says: "Da," he says, "it's about time I was thinking of taking a wife," says he.

"An' is that the way wid ye?" I says. "Troth, an' I'm thinking as much meself this long time. Sure it's scandalising discomfiture we're living in," I says, "ever since poor auld Maria went and died on us,—the Lord be merciful to her soul! Your poor mother,—the Lord be merciful to her!—she'd be like to tear the eyes out of them sluts of girls this minute,—the blessed saint in Heaven, that she is! Thru for ye, me boy, it's a wife we want, and who'd be the wan to look out but yourself, since it's the auld fellow I'm getting, entirely. And who'll it be?" says I, that innocent, niver suspecting he'd be so undutiful as to be making his choice unbeknownst to me—let alone that same grand choice! "Who'll be it?" I axes him. "What would ye say to Miss Condren at the Cross Roads? It's thru she's a long nose of her own; but what's that? She's the rale auld family."

"What 'ud I say to Miss Condren?" cries he. "It's making game o' me ye are, I think. What 'ud I say to Judy Condren?" says he, grinning at me wid all his white teeth an' thim clinched over his pipe. "Sure, if I saw that long nose of hers poking about here—'Take your snipe's beak out of this house,' that's what I'd say to her."

"Then it's one of them thriftless Roches ye've got in your mind," says I; "not but what auld Roche is a dacent feller, an' the girls has fine figures of their own, I'm not denying. But it's not much fortune they'd be bringing a boy."

"Is it I," he cried, "'d take up wid one of them? Bedad, I'm surprised at ye for mintioning them at all! What would I be doing with such flithereens, streeling about wid their ribbins an' their feathers an' the impident airs of them?"

"Then it'll be Mary Cassidy, I'll be bound," says I.

"No such thing," says he; "she's been walking wid Jim Nolan this month past."

"Will it be Miss O'Donnell?" says I.

"It will not," says he; "I'd rather go single all me days."

"Well, in the name of God," says I, "who is it to be, thin? May be it's a town-girl ye're set on after all. There's Miss Hinnegan at the hotel,—it's not the family connection I'd choose for ye, Johnny, the O'Moores have never wedded wid trade yet—but they do be sayin' it's rolling in gold she'll be when auld Hinnegan dies. She'll not say no to ye, Johnny. Troth, and I was noticing them were quare looks she was giving ye last Saturday after the pig-fair."

"An' what sort of looks would ye have her give anny wan wid them crass eyes of hers," says me young man, an' he takes his pipe out of his mouth an' bursts out laughing. "Sure, God help her, she can't look one way widout lookin' the other. She'd be the right sort to put things straight for us."

At that I bid him lave off his moidering thricks, for I knew it was humbugging me, he was, an' not a bit of marrying on him. An' he never answered me back a word, but was spacheless, playing a chune on the stem of his pipe wid his fingers, an' puffing at it, an' it black out. An' thin he says: "It's not money we want wid a wife; ye're a warm man, father—an' it's not beholden to a slip of a girl we'd be—you an' me."

"It's aisy talking that-a-way," says I, "but it 'ud be no use at all, at all, for a fine young feller like yourself to go taking up wid a body that hadn't enough to keep herself. It 'ud not be respectable," says I, "not what your father's son was rared up to."

"An' as for family," says he, kind of dreamy, as if he had not heard me, "isn't it the rale auld stock we are ourselves? O'Moores of Moorestown, discindints of Rory O'Moore,—king's blood," says he, "an' what's Roches, an' Condrens, an' O'Donnells to that? It's no sort of use to try and ally ourselves wid thim as 'll match us," says he; "an' why? Because they're not to be found—that's why. We'll mate to plaze ourselves," he says, as bould as brass; "an' what we want is a little young crathur wid a heart full of love; a little weeshy, dawshy, coaxing bit of a thing wid eyes the colour of violets, that would swally ye'r heart alive and niver let it out again; an' a head full of curls that would drive a boy wild just to look at!"

"What sort of blasphemious talk is that out of ye?" cries I, interrupting him. "It's meself ye'll have wild in a minute or two," for I didn't fancy the looks of him, wid his head on one side an' a kind of silly smile on him. "What in the whole wide worrld's upon ye?"

says I. "Spake out, man, or I'll drag the tongue out of yer jaws an' make you tell the thrut that-a-way."

He turns upon me wid his hands on his knees, an' his face the colour of the peonies in the garden beyant. "Da," he says, an' rasps his throat; "Father," he says an' thin out he bursts. "You've no right," he says, "to be casting up at her thim rogues and vagabonds of parints of hers! Shure her mother isn't her mother at all, on'y her stepmother; 'an as for her father—bad scran to him—he's the greatest bla'guard between this and Dublin. However, it's not fair," says he, "to be goin' on this way, for sure it's niver themselves they are, at all, but blind drunk every day of the week, an' Sundays into the bargain. But as for herself, it's the purty little crathur she is, like an angel from heaven, her that's niver seen nothing but hell's wickedness since the day she was born. She doesn't rightly know how to set about anything yit, an' if she is a Protestant it's on'y because she know no betther. She learnt no wickedness off anny of thim, an' troth it's a Catholic she'll be the minute she's told how."

"Tare an' ages," says I, "ye murthering villain, hold yer tongue! Hold yer tongue, you spawn of hell, an' tell me the name of her widout another word!"

He was white now from red he was before, but his impidence was beyond everything. "It's Rosanna Moriarty," he says.

Well, I let a screech—I have a quick kind of temper, not a bad one, mind ye, but hasty-like. My poor mother—God be merciful to her!—manny's the time she'd tell us of the day I nearly murdered her wid the pitaty knife, an' I but seven years of age; an' the day I had me little sisther—God be merciful to her, that's poor auid Maria, I mean—strangled wid her apron-strings for letting me little pet rabbits run away. Blue in the face she was, an' I pulling at the strings as hard as I could! We used to be kilt wid the laughing, talking of it. But I was always the rale good Catholic, an' sure me blood was up entirely. I was like to kill him dead that minute, break his head open on him, an' small blame to me. But I controlled meself. Wid a moighty effort I kep' calm. "Johnny O'Moore," I says, "ye black, onfilial, heathen scrawn of a bla'guard scamp, mintion that name in my hearing again an' I'll have yer life, as sure as you stand there."

Wid that he says no more, an' I says no more, nor was the subject as much as remarked upon between us till the next time he had impidence enough to dare, an' that was the very week after.

What did that owdacious rogue of a Moriarty go for to do, but die on us all of a suddent in the Delirious Trimmings, as the Docthur called it—a real roaring fit of drunkenness—an' his limb of a wife, she takes to her heels an' off wid her out of the place, sorra a one knew where, an' the little schemer of a Rosanna left behind on our hands together wid the corpse an' a power of debts.

It was auld Jim Roche first gave us the news; an' says he: "It's rale bad Rosanna is, the crathur! Sure they can't get her away from the poor fella' at all, an' neither bite nor sup has crossed her lips this blessed day. It 'ud break your heart to see her, with them purty red curls of hers hanging every way, and them big black eyes of hers swollen up wid the crying. An' him the bitther bad father!"

An' then I see me fine young man start up from his corner an' off wid him widout a word.

Sure I knew the way it 'ud be. Some one would be offering to take in the girl out of charity, an' me fella' would have to be keeping up them sperrits of hers an' consoling of her an' wiping away all them tears—him as cute as a pet fox from the day he was weaned! But there's two on us can be cute, thinks I, an' out of the place she goes, or my name's not Larry O'Moore. There's the workhouse for her, an' the likes of her, beyant in the town. She'll be fed, an' warmed, an' clothed dacenter there than ever she's been in her life, an' my money helping to do it into the bargain. But I'll not have her left here to be bringing disgrace into my family. So I just says a word to Jim Roche, an' then I took a bit of a stroll, an' wint here and there, an' dropt into this wan an' that, an' be jabers I gave them all the hint. There isn't wan but 'ud be afeard to fall out wid me for they, most of them, owes me a bit an' I've been a good friend to them in the bad times. An', to tell the thrut, I'm plisanter as a friend than as an enemy.

Av course not a boy of them let on he understood what I was dhriving at: they wouldn't be that onpolite, an' I wouldn't have misdemeaned meself by speaking too plain. But, lonnies, it's aisy to say a good deal when you're saying nothin' at all, and when I came home, sure, I knew I had settled the young gentleman's nonsense for him, for as grand as he thought himself.

The auld cuckoo-clock had gone twelve (an' it's twenty minutes late regular) before Johnny came back that night. A rale warm spring night it was, black and moist, an' all his curls were plastered down his cheeks wid the way he'd been stravaguing round.

I was sitting waiting for him, smoking me pipe wid a peaceful soul, for it was a good stroke of work I had done the day, an' so I kep' telling meself, when in he bursts like a wild fella.

"Father," says he, "I've tauld ye I wanted to marry Rosanna Moriarty; an' I mean to marry her," he says.

"Och, listen to him," says I, scornful; "sure it's wandering in his speech, he is!"

"Father," he says, rale earnest and eager, "I've always been a good son to you. I've never been drunk nor contradictory, an' when other young men would have gone off an' seen the world, I've kep' at home an' worked an' helped you. In the name of God," says he, pitiful-like, "do not drive me to be undutiful now! Oh, father, it is a poor little innocent thing she is, an' it's alone and desolate she is, an' by Heaven," he cries, "this is a hard cruel worl'd! There's not one of them 'll give her a shelter or a crust this blessed night; an' on'y for auld Kitty who's sittin' and wakin' the corpse, the poor crathur 'ud be alone wid the dead this minute—enough to drive her distracted entirely! But give your consent to our wedding," he cries, "an' then it's who'll have her, I'll be bound. The cauld-hearted scoundrels as could shut their doors on her that way—why, it's fighting for her they'll be then! But I'll be even wid them yet, the whole lot of them, whatever black curse of cruelty has come over them, at all, at all."

I was puffing away at my pipe, an' for the life of me I could not but give an agreeable smile to meself, thinking it was the rale proper kind of respect I was held in all over the place; not but that I knew there was not one of them as 'ud dare to go agin me.

When he sees me smile, he stops suddent and gives me a quare look. "Father," says he, "I see what you have been after. God forgive you," he says, "but it's a wicked man you are."

"Whisht, now, don't be goin' on," says I; "you will live to thank me yet."

"An' what is to become of that poor young crathur?" says he, quite quiet; "have ye thought of that? She cannot live alone in that auld tumble-down place, an' her that purty an' little, an' black Mac (divel take him!) wid his eye on her this many a day. What is to become of her, father?"

"Let her go to the workhouse," says I; "she need not fear black Mac there, for they keep them away from each other fast enough, the young boys an' the young girls too. They will be coming, no doubt, to bury the father from the Union to-morrow; let them take the daughter too; it's the right place for her."

Wid that, he lets the awfulest oath ever ye heard. "She'll not go there," he says, "so long as I'm alive."

"May I ax what you intend to do, then?" says I, very polite.

"I have tauld you already," says he; "I intend to marry her."

"An' may I inquire what yez are going to live on then? For I warn ye fair," says I, in a white rage—for I seen by the obstinate look of him that he was set on his wickedness—"I warn ye," says I, "that across this thrashle ye will niver step once ye take up wid that Protestant slut of Moriarty's; nor a penny of me money ye will never see, neither now nor when I am gone."

"Is that your last word?" says he, an' stands up.

"It's me last word," says I, "as I'm a living man."

"Then, good-bye, father," says he.

"Good-bye," says I, "an' me curse upon you," says I. "My father's curse on the two of yez!"

Well, out he stamps widout as much as another word, an' I sits by the fire thinking it's home again he'll be before I can turn round. Sure an' I never thought he'd have thrown me over that-a-way, an' him an' me always together from the time he was a babby. But the turf itself burnt white under my eyes, an' the dawn broke that cauld an' desolate imto the room, but sorra a bit of him come back to me. An' for three days I heard no news of him, an' sure I was that dark an' down in meself not wan dared to speak to me. The fellers was afraid to tell me the thrut, an' to be plain wid ye, I was not, so to say, encouraging to conversation. Bedad, I would not let them think I cared a halfpenny what that scoundrel of a boy was up to, when he chose to go against his father that rate.

He niver came home to me, an' I axed no questions of nobody. But on the Thursday it was, Mrs. Malony (his Rivirence's housekeeper, a contrary fidget of an auld woman she is) stops me just as I was passing the door. "Oh, Mr. O'Moore," she cries, in that mincing way of hers, "what is this I hear about Johnny?" she says. "Father O'Hara will be fit to be tied," she says, "when he comes back from visiting His Holiness at Rome."

"What may ye have heard, ma'am?" says I. "For it's little I know or want to know about him."

" Oh," she says, throwing up her eyes like an auld hen in a fit, " oh, Mr. O'Moore, sir, do not ax me ; I couldn't defile my tongue by speaking of it."

" Well, an' that happens to come right," says I, " for I don't want to hear. Though if you can reconcile it to your conscience to be keeping the thrut from his own father, it is surprised at ye I am, Mrs. Malony, an' that's all I have got to say."

Sure, it was just itching the auld girl was to tell me the bad news. " Is it possible you don't know, Mr. O'Moore ? " she says. " Oh dear, how can I bring meself to discourse of such a scandal ! It is the real saint we all thought Mr. Johnny, an' him so good in the choir, an' so regular at the Stations. Och, the shame of it ! " she says. " Father O'Hara will be leppin' mad, he will ! But there's little shame about either of them," she says, " going about that brazen, an' buying things together—set up house they have as bold as man an' wife—the like was niver seen hereabouts before. Set up house in that ruinacious auld cabin of Moriarty's, an' him not a week dead yet. And she, the dirthy Protestant. Now if she'd been a Catholic itself—Och, it's a terrible visitation to the place, an' the remarks of the folks, an' the illusions, an' the jokes,—it's shocking altogether ! Could not ye speak to your son, now ? "

" Mrs. Malony," says I, an' I niver turned a hair, " he is no longer anny son of mine, an' I will thank ye to remember it. I have cast him off," I says ; " he is no O'Moore, at all, at all, to be bringing disgrace upon the name of them that has been kings in the land. An' as for that other," says I, " I'm wondering how ye have the face to mintion her to me ! " Wid that I made her an iligant bow an' left her.

Well, that was the cruel, hard time for me. And, as if they'd given each other the word, sure every one in the place had something to say to me about them, wonst it was out that I knew their goings on. This boy told me wan thing, an' that boy would tell another, till it is distracted I was. An' sure did not one up to me an' says he : " Ye'd better let them be married off at wonst," says he, " an' save the shame of it." I struck him prostrate for that same, for as auld as I am. " I will let them go to hell together," says I.

If only Father O'Hara had been back home, but it's visiting His Holiness in Rome he was, an' not expexcted for another week.

Sunday was the rale disgraceful day. On my entry into the chapel, before I could as much as kneel down, I hears a kind of stir in the place behind me, an' I sees all them rows of Roche girls nudging each other and tossing their heads. An' there was a kind of titter among the boys, an' auld Biddy Flannagan, the crathur, who always kneels in the middle just before the rails, where she can have a good view of his Rivirence an' plenty of room to be rocking herself about, looks over her shoulder, an' snorts like an auld say-pig, an' rolls her eyes that wild-like I thought she was struck wid an apple-complex. An' then what should I see but my young gentleman marching up the chapel, an' Miss Moriarty, if ye plaze, alongside of him in a bran new black gown, an' a white sun-bonnet—he looking neither to right nor left, an' she watching him with them saucer eyes, that had done all the mischief. An' when he salutes the altar, she gives a little dip beside him, the heathen! He kneels down at the end of the bench an' she inside. An' in a minute or two out comes little Father Jo, the curate from town beyant, who says Mass of a Sunday when Father O'Hara is away; an' glad I was to see him, for the cheeks was burning off of me. When he done the Gospel, an' he had off wid his vestment, an' come to the altar-steps to read out the notices an' every one was quiet listening to what he was going to say, if the first things he lets out is not the banns of marriage between John O'Connell O'Moore of Moorestown in this parish an' Rosanna Moriarty of Mount Pleasant in the same! Begorrah, the whole place was swimming round wid me. Spacheless I was, an' all I could do was just to look at them, thinking it 'ud be a wonder if the auld flags would not open and swalley them up.

Himself was sitting like a lamb, niver stirring hand nor foot, his eyes fixed rale pious on the alther, as if butther would not melt in his mouth. An' she, wid her sun-bonnet tumbled off them red curls of hers, as rosy over the impident face of her as ye plaze, wid a kind of dimple coming an' going on one side of her cheek that was just bursting wid smiles as anny one could see. At the sight of them I don't know what came over me, bit I gives a kind of bawl, and ups on me feet. "Your Rivirence," says I, "I forbid them banns."

An' Father Jo, who was rambling on quite aisy, stops as if he had been shot. "What's that?" says he, very sharp—you could have heard a pin drop. But my blood was up, an' the whole place looking at me. "I forbid them banns," I says; "an' if your Rivirence wants to know about the impidiment, sure there she is, an' sorra a bit of spiritual relation either, but a real Orange heretic, an' not a bit of shame on her, the dirthy steele, shamming prayer beside the poor boy she has deluded entirely—an' her breaking all the Commandments this minute. She'll not wed him, I'll have her know it."

"This is very onseemly," says Father Jo, as pink as a babby to the roots of his hair; "I cannot have this disturbance in the chapel," he says.

"But your Rivirence," says I, "didn't ye give it out this minute? 'If any one is aware,' says you, and sure——"

"Whisht!" says he; "this is scandalising behaviour."

"An' it is that same, yer Rivirence," says I, "but that's no fault of mine."

"Sit down," says he; "I'll see ye after Mass in the vestry."

An' Johnny niver a word out of him, but sitting there like a statue. I sees her cruddle up to him like a child, an' now an' agin she shoots a look at me out of her eyes that was swalleying up her face—too big was they entirely. And what wid one thing an' another, I felt that mad, that it's not a prayer I said that day.

Well, I gives Father Jo a bit o' me mind in the vestry; but not a ha'-porth of good could I get out of him. "Ye must speak to Father O'Hara," says he, "for I cannot interfere."

An' when I got out of the chapel, och, to hear them all talking! "What's the meaning of her coming to chapel wid him, and her a Protestant?" says one. "Why it's converting her he is," says another, and wid that they were all fit to die wid laughing. An' didn't that scrawn of hell, black Mac, catch up the pair of them on the road, an' out with some of his impidence, an' did not Johnny an' he have the grandest set-to that ever was seen in these parts, an' did not Johnny give him such a pair of black eyes that the folks do be talking about it still? The finest shindy ever they saw, they tell me: but sure, I could not be taking pleasure out of anything wid the shame of the world upon me.

Well, on Tuesday evening, as I was sitting down to me bit of a supper, on the stroke of ten o'clock, who should come tearing in upon me but Father O'Hara himself. It is the holy show he was with the grime an' the smuts of the railway on the pale face of him, an' his long white hair hanging wild-like over his eyes. "What is this I hear," he says, widout as much as reaching me his hand, "what is this I hear about Johnny?" I was right glad to tell him the story, but when I had finished I thought he was going to murder me entirely. Rale wicked, he was, an' I as innercent as the babe unborn.

"You onnatural man," says he, "an' can ye sit there and tell me in cold blood that you have drove these unfort'nit children into sin? Och, God help us all," he cries, "that I should have come home to this! I have been among yez forty years come Christmas an' I have had the grief of the world over yez all, God knows," he says. "An' manny an' manny a time I have seen yez break our Divine Master's holy commandments; manny a time, my poor flock, I have had to weep over yez and for yez. I have seen yez fighting, an' injuring, an' cheating each other, an' seen yez in jail an' in throuble, an' known in me sorrowful soul that the sentence of the law was just. When we had that terrible murther here," he went on, "'tis fifteen year ago now, on'y for the grace of God an' His powerful consolation an' the sight of the poor sinner's beautiful pinitence, sure I must have died of the agony in me heart, for it is the heart of a father I have to yez all. But niver," he says, "niver before in all the days I have been among yez have anny of my children fell into such sin as this. An' to think it should be the child of me predelection, little Johnny," he cries, his voice breaking wid the sorrow, "him that was my pride an' my joy, him that your sainted wife, Laurence O'Moore, laid in me arms wid her last dying effort! Oh, man," he goes on, turning on me again, "I hold you responsible before the throne of God for all the guilt that lies on the souls of that poor boy an' girl to-night."

An' not bit of reason wud he hear from me. Priests an' women is that-a-way where the young folks is concerned: they do be forgetting the Fourth Commandment altogether. I could not pacify him at all, at all. "Come wid me," he says, "come this minute, an' let us seek these childer. Not another night will I consent to let them stray without the Fold. Come, Laurence," he says, "in the name of your God, I command you; come and repair in so far as His mercy will permit the cruel wrong you have done!"

Nothing would serve him but I must set out wid him into the night beyant that very instant. An' on'y that I was afeared for his sake, on account of the state he was in, an' him such an auld man an' so frail, sure I had niver have demeaned meself by going a step.

But out he runs me, an' down the lane, an' across the village—thanks to goodness there was none about—an' up the bit of bog to the shanty, where Johnny had set up wid his light-of-love. The moon burst out of the clouds ; there was a soft wind blowing round us, an' his Rivirence's face shone as pale as death wid all the white locks round it, an' him skimming along like a hare, so that I was hard set to keep up wid him. Well, we soon come in sight of Mount Pleasant. There it stood in the moonlight, wid the thatch falling off the roof, an' the mud of the walls crumbling away, the miserablest, most God-forsaken hole of a place I ever see. An' as I thought of my on'y son disgracing himself by coming down to such a residence, I could not help it, but I let a curse on the pair of them.

His Rivirence whisks round an' lifts his hand, an' then he clutches me with one hand by the arm, an' points wid the other. " See yonder ! " he says, wid a kind of strangled whisper. " See yonder, you sinful man ! " An' he pointed to a black heap lying in the shade of the hovel across the door ; an' then he motioned me back, so stern I durst not disobey him, an' himself went forward up to it.

" Johnny, my poor child," he says—his voice was like a cooing dove's—" Johnny, my poor child, what are ye lying out there for ? "

An' Johnny, for Johnny it was, sleeping like a tramp on the bare turf, he up like a shot, an' rubbed his eyes, an' stared at Father O'Hara like wan daft. " Oh, your Rivirence," says he, reproachful like, " sure you would not have me lying widin wid the poor little girl, an' the holy words not spoken over us yet ! " An' his Rivirence he beat his hands together, and fell upon the fella's neck and sobbed aloud. " I thank God," he cries, " I thank God ! "

" Father O'Hara, is it you ? " cries Johnny, that surprised and as if he had just waked out of a dream. " Oh, father, we have wanted ye sore, an' it's the cruel time we have had ! An' it's the cruel things that people have said of us, an' she as innicent as the flowers of the field. Sure she does not know what they do be meaning. My heart's been fit to break," he says.

An' then his Rivirence let a shout for me. " Come here," he says, " Laurence O'Moore, an' bless your good son, an' give praise to the Father above that kep' him and his bride from sin, when his earthly father would have driven them into it. Come here an' tell him that ye have seen the hardness of your heart, an' repented. Tell him that he an' the good little girl he has chosen for his wife will be welcome to your hearth. An' in the meantime," he says, " Rosanna shall come to my house ; an' Johnny, me boy, it's meself will give the wedding-feast." An' after that what could I do ?

THE BEWITCHED FIDDLE

FAIX, it's a good long wheen of years since it happened now. It was ould Jimmy Higgerty, that was uncle to Mickey across there, reharsed the passage to me. An' it was ould Jimmy himself, more betoken, that was the cause of the whole affair—for Jimmy, ye know, was what we call a canny man, very knowin' intirely, an' up to all sorts of saicrets that you nor me nor one belongin' to us, thanks be to Providence, knows nothin' at all, at all about. Jimmy was right-han' man with the fairies; an' if ye'd believe all the stories ye hear goin' he come through some quare things, too, in his day—used to be out, they say, as reg'lar as the sun set, an' away ridin' aist an' waist with the good people, an' gettin' insight into their ways of workin'; an' sure it's meself that rec'le'ts if there was only a bit of a year-oul' calve sick from one end of the barony to the other, it was nothin' but post haste for Jimmy Higgerty to cure it—an', sure enough, when Jimmy put the charm on it, it either lived or died afther; there was no middle coorse.

Well, howsomiver, in Jimmy's day there was in Doorin a one Solomon Casshidy; an' the same Solomon in his young days was a thrifle wild—the fact is (to kill the hare at a blow), Solomon was the completest rascal ivir run on two feet, an' was a parable for the counthry. Christenin', weddin', wake, funeral, patthorn, fair, or market nivir wint off complete without Solomon Casshidy; dance, raffle, or spree of any sort, shape, or patthorn nivir missed Solomon Casshidy, who, by the way, was the very life an' sowl of the gatherin's; an' people would as soon think of doin' without the fiddler at one of these merry-makin's as without Solomon Casshidy. An' that just put me in mind that Solomon was the dandy hand at the fiddle; the bate of him wasn't to be got between cock-crow an' candlelight the longest day in June. He would charm the heart of a whin-bush; arrah, good luck to your wit, man, he'd actially make the fiddle spake! They say it was as good as a sarcus to hear how he'd handle it.

But poor Solomon, good luck to him, soon came to the end of his tether, an', afther takin' all the fun he could out of the worl', he, as himself said, turned over a new laif an' begun to look at the other side of the picther. An' I'm thinkin' whatsomiver he seen on the other side of it must have been deuced onpleasant, for the rollickin', singin', laughin', fiddlin', reckless, ne'er-do-well Solomon pulled a face on him the length of a tailyer's lapboard, an' if any of his ould comrades attempted to make him convarsible on the fun that was goin' in any quarther of the counthry, Solomon would dhrop his jaws, an' fetch a groan would frighten a corp' ; an' " My fren'," he would say, " this is all vanity, vanity ! Life is hollow, an' these frivolities are only snares spread in our paths by the devil."

Anyhow, Solomon was an althered man, an' where he would go formerly to honour the Sabbath by a rousin' game of caman with the good boys, he was now seen makin' his way to the meetin'-house with a Bible anondher his arm the size of a salt-box, an' as many hime-books as would set up a hawker in a daicent way of thradin', an' he obsarvin' naither to the right nor to the left, but away a thousand miles ahead of him, as if he was always thryin' to make out the way to heaven somewhere in the skies foreninst him ; an' where he would of another time be makin' his way across the counthry, maybe to the shouldher of Srual mountain for a spree, with the fiddle anondher his coat, ye might now meet him in the dusk of the evenin', still with the fiddle ondher the coat, but on a far betther errand—goin' to some prayer-meetin' at Inver, or Killymard, or Ballywell, or the devil only knows where ; he wouldn't go within an ass's roar of a raffle-house ; an' if you tould him there was to be a dance or any other wee divarshin in sich and sich a place he'd strive to put the breadth of a townlan' betwixt him an' it, for he said the devil was chained to the back-stone of any house that there was a hornpipe played in.

Well, one evenin', it was in October, an' jist about night-fallin', Solomon was makin' his way for Billy Knox's of the head of the Glìbe, where a great and very pious man, one Bartholomew Binjamin Rankin, was to hold a prayer-meetin' for the benefit of all the well-disposed sinners in that sthretch of counthry ; an' throth, it seems to me that, onless the Glìbe's changed mortially within the last jinnyration, there must have been a daicent quantity of sinners in them same parts. But, as I was sayin', Solomon was this evenin' on the good arrand, with his fiddle peepin' out from ondher his coat—for ye see, Solomon's ould practice whin he was a sinner come in handy now that he was a saint, an' no prayer-meetin' could be held without Solomon's fiddle to steady the voices, when they joined to sing the himes. She was a splendid piece of a fiddle, an' Solomon, when he turned over the new laif, was goin' out to brak her neck across the nixt ditch, when he remimbered how she might come in handy this way, so he said to himself (as he tould afther), that " he'd make the occasion of his sins a steppin'-stone to new vartues, an' cause her that was hairtofore jiggin' him down to the place below, now fiddle him into heaven."

He thought to himself this evenin' that he'd jist light the pipe to keep him company as he jogged on, so where do ye think he'd dhrop into, on purpose to light it, but ould Jimmy Higgerty's, the fairyman's, that I reharsed to ye about before. On layin' " Pagganinny," as he called the fiddle, down on a stool, whilst he was puttin' a screed of coal to the pipe, Jimmy Higgerty lifted her, an' dhrawin' the bow acrass her, he took a bar of a lively tune out of her, when Solomon jumped up as if he was sthruck.

" Higgerty, me good man," he says, " you have shocked me. Thim vain airs," siz he, " has been long unknown to that fiddle, an' I trusted that she would nivir more be an instrumment that the divil would gamble for sows on. Paice, paice, and dhraw not the bow in idle vanity again ! "

" Arrah, good morra to ye," siz Jimmy, that way back to him, " but it's delicate yer narves must have got intirely, lately. Throth, Misther Casshidy, I seen the time this wouldn't frighted ye one bit " ; an' all at oncet he sthruck up, " Go to the divil an' shake yerself," while poor Solomon stood thrimblin' in the middle of the flure like a man with the aguey. Whin Jimmy finished up with a flourish that would have delighted Solomon the days he was at himself (for, be the same token, Solomon was no miss at handlin' the bow naither), he cut some quare figures with his left han' three times over the fiddle, an' handin' it to Solomon, he says, " May ye nivir have more raison to be frightened than by a jig from the same fiddle—that's all I say ! "

Poor Solomon didn't know the hidden mainin' of them words, or it would have made him look crooked ; nor he didn't know naither that Jimmy had put pisheroques on the fiddle ; but all the same he took it from him with a glum look enough, and afther praichin' an edifyin' sarmon on frivolities, an' death an' jedgment, to Jimmy Higgerty, he betook h'im on the road again.

There was a wondherful congregation of the sinners an' saints of the Glibe—but the sinners had the best of it anyhow, in regards to numbers—in Bill Knox's that night. An' Bartholomew Benjamin Rankin was there, an' it was as good as a sarmin in itself just to get one glance at his face. There was as much holiness an' piety in it, ye'd a'most think, as would save the sowsls of a whole barony. Solomon, who now got all sorts an' sizes of respect, as bein' a reformed sinner, an' was looked up to with ten times as much honour and rивirence as was paid to them that was saints all their life, got a sait, as was usual, beside the praicher. An' it's himself that was proud, an' he'd look down on the common crowd below with a most pityin' look on his face. An' the well-disposed ones in the congregation would look up at Solomon an' then give a groan that ye might hear at Srual ; an' Solomon would look down on the sinners an' give another groan that ye might hear him at Barnesmore ; an' then both Solomon an' the sinners would look up at the rafter, an' give a groan that ye might hear at Muckish. After some time, when they had got faistin' their sowsls fairly well on Solomon, a hime was called out, a very solemn one. " An'," says the praicher, lookin' at Solomon, " our saintly brother here, of whom aich and ivery heart in this gatherin' feels proud, an' whose pious ways are the glorification, admiration, an' edification of every true Christian since he gave up his ungodly life, an' turned onto the path of righteousness—brother Solomon will give us the keynote, an' lend us the aid of his unmusical box, throughout."

Brother Solomon, be me socks, dhrew a face on him the length of his own fiddle, as if he was thinkin' of his own unworthiness, poor man, an' says :

" It affords me a pious pleasure to dhraw my bow on dher the circumstances—that bow which so often snared me into the divil's sarvice ; but I thank God with my heart that I have long since departed from my wicked, wicked, unspeakably vile an' sinful ways ; an' this han' has long since forgotten them vain and ungodly airs that at one time occupied every spare moment of my then onchristian life—long since, I say, have I buried deep in oblveen every remimbrance of thim wicked tunes, an' the cunnin' of my han' is now only used for a far loftier an' betther purpose. Bretherin, I shall begin."

And Solomon dhraws the bow across the fiddle, an' of all the himes tunes which was prented, what do ye think does he sthrike up ? " Go to the divil an' shake yerself ! " Och, it's as thrue as I'm tellin' it to ye. But, ochón, if there wasn't consternation in that house, I'm a gentleman! Solomon himself stopped sudden, for all the world lookin' like a stuck pig; an' he looked at the praicher, an' the praicher looked at him, and the congregation looked at both of them, and then Solomon prayed from his heart as he niver prayed afore, that the Lord in His marcy might make the flure open and swallow him. The flure, though, as I suppose ye have guessed, did not open, but Bartholomew Benjamin's mouth did, an' he sayed, siz he:

Thomas Mac Manus

"Bretherin! bretherin! this is a sad fallin' away! Alas! alas! Who should have thought that Brother Solomon, the deformed sinner, would have returned to his ould godless coorses! The rulin' passion, my dear bretherin, is so sthrong in him—waxin' sthrong with new sthrength—that he has onvoluntarily bethrayed the divil that has again got hould on him. Bretherin, let us pray for him!"

An' in a jiffey the thunderstruck congregation were on their knees prayin' like Trojans for the delivery of poor Solomon from the divil. Solomon, of course, for appairance' sake, had to take to his knees, too, but between you an' me, it's meself's afraid that all the prayers he said would not fetch him very far on the way to the first milestone that leads to heaven. I'll wager whoivir heerd him, that his prayers were sweet ones, that the divil might saize ould Jimmy Higgerty an' carry him off body an' bones, an' give him a toastin' on a special griddle down below. When they thought they had prayed long enough, an' that the divil was gone out of Solomon, they got up to their feet again, and they turned up the whites of their eyes till Bartholomew Benjamin announced that they would oncest more put Brother Solomon's faith to the test, to see if he had profited by the few minutes' sperritual recreation that they had indulged in. Solomon lifted the bow, an' afore he started he turned up the whites of his eyes in the usual fashion, as if he was lookin' for guidance, but in his heart he was only callin' down another black curse on Jimmy Higgerty.

"Bretherin!" siz he, as solemn as a judge—"Bretherin! The temper" (by which he meant the divil of coorse) "possessed the fiddle, and not my humble self; in witness whereof just attind to the solemn an' addyfyin' air I will now produce for ye." An' down comes the bow on the fiddle, an' up starts that beautiful jig tune, "The Siege of Carrick!"

Och, tarnation to me waistcoat, but there was sich a scene in two minnits as would charm a dancin' masther! When Solomon played the first bar of it, he could as soon comb his head with his toes as he could stop it. But that wasn't the best of it. Bartholomew Binjamin, instead of goin' into a cowl'd dead faint, as one would expect, begun to shuffle his feet in a suspicious way, an' afore ye'd say "thrapsticks" he was weltin' the flure like the broth of a boy, tearin' away at the jig like the ould Nick! An' in the squintin' of yer eye there wasn't a sowl anondher the roof, man, woman, or child, saint or sinner, that wasn't whackin' away at it like the forties, ivry man of them leatherin' the flure like a thrasher, jumpin' up till their heads would a'most sthrike the rafters, an' yellin' like red Injins, whilst me brave Solomon played like a black, put new life into the fiddle at ivery squeak, an' gave the jiggers whatever wee encouragement that he could spare time from the fiddle for:

"Come, boys, yez haven't fair play to foot it properly here. Yez is the finest set at a jig that I have faisted me eyes on since I give up me ungodly ways, an' it would be a pity for not to give yez ivery privilege—it's a fine clear moonlight, an' we'll go outside where we'll have room an' fair play at it. Come along, me mirry, mirry lads!" An' Solomon fiddled away out of the dure, an' the whole congregation leapt an' flung an' jigged it out in all possible an' onpossible shapes afther him. Och, they say it was a sight for sore eyes to see the capers that the party cut; ivry man jack of them tryin' to see who could be crazier than his naybour; an' out they got that way on the road, like a lunatic asylum turned loose for a holiday; an' Solomon headed down the road in the direction of Donegal, while the whole countryside turned out when they heard the yellin' an' fiddlin' an' prancin', an' seein' Solomon headin' them with the fiddle, an' Bartholomew Binjamin fillin' the front rank in company with his two feet, an' he jiggin' it away at the rate of a christenin'! The people were first inclined to laugh, but be the powdhers the nixt thing they done was join in themselves, an' foot it away afther the fiddle ninety-nine times crazier than the congregation. An' hot foot they kept it goin', up hill an' down dale, over height an' hollow, with fresh batches joinin' in at ivery lane an' turn, an' Solomon, the boy, layin' into the fiddle at a rate as if he was gettin' a salary for it; an', be the boots, by the time they raiched the foot of the road, you niver seen in all your born days a harvest fair or a Repale meetin' as big as it was!

Here Solomon turned to the left, with the purcession still jiggin' it afther him, an' he nixt got onto the lane that leads up to the Killymard ould graveyard, an' over the stile, in among the graves with the mirry company brakin' their necks over, afther him ; an' when they got in here, Solomon made thracks for a nate dandy bit of a tombstone in the centre of the yard, an' upon it he h'isted himself, with Bartholomew Benjamin up beside him, whilst the remainder of the party reshumed their attitudes all roun' about, an' they fightin' like wild cats to see who would get pursession of the tombstones, for they saw they were as good as barn-doors for dancin' on. An' throgs, there might be purty good dancers there, but divil resave the one of them that Solomon and Bartholomew Benjamin couldn't take the shine out of. They had a bran' new tombstone, the pick an' choice of all in the yard, an' if they didn't do it in royal style, an' cut a copy to the crowd, call me a cuckoo !

But what would ye have of it, but the nixt man lands on the scene was Sandy Montgomery, the Recthor. He was passin' the road, an' seein' the fun in the graveyard, he come up in a t'undherin' passion to horsewhip iviry mother's sowl of them. But, sweet good luck to ye, if he didn't jump up on the fiddler's tombstone, an' catchin' Bartholomew Benjamin by the han', foot it away, likewise.

An' it would have gone on to daylight in the mornin', if ould Jimmy Higgerty, the rascal, who followed the fun the whole way from the Glibe, for the purpose of tastifyin' to it—if he hadn't come behin' Solomon an' tould him to kick up his right heel, dhraw his left thumb three times over the sstrings of the fiddle, an' look over his left shouldher at the moon, an' then see what music he'd take out of it. No sooner sayed nor done ; an' all at once the tune changed to a hime tune, all mournful, an' iviry heel in the graveyard was paralysed. Ivery sowl of them looked at one another like they wor wakenin' out of a dhraim.

Solomon himself dhrew up, an' he gaye a bewildhered look all roun' him, an' then looked at Sandy Montgomery, who was standin' forenenst him on the stone, an' he as pale as a sheet. Ivery man of the three on the tombstone gave themselves up as lost men, ruined intirely, out an' out, afther makin' such spectacles of themselves for the counthry. The Recthor lost contrhol of himself completely, an' puttin' his fist anondher Solomon's nose, he says :

" Ye common scoundhril, ye ; ye've made me disgrace my cloth, ye cut-throat villain——"

But afore he could get out another word, Solomon, who had some of the spunk of his early days in him still, and was a thrifle hasty, besides that his dandher was riz in regards to the purty pickle he was in—Solomon ups with the fiddle, an' dhravin' it roun' his head with a swing, he takes the Recthor across the noddle an' knocked him a'most into kingdom come, away off the tombstone. But, my hearty, in swingin' the fiddle, doesn't he catch Bartholomew Benjamin, who was standin' behind him, a nate little bit of a knock on the skull. So, now turnin' round to apologise to him, Bartholomew Benjamin ups with his fist an' plants it undher Solomon's nose, too, for he was just commencin' a narration.

“ Ye mane, onprincipled, ungodly bla'guard ! ”

But Solomon couldn't stand this neither. He says to himself he might as well be hung for a sheep as a lamb, and that when he knocked down a Recthor, he might with an aisier conscience knock down a praicher. So he took the praicher a wallop with the fiddle that left him sprawlin' in the Recthor's lap with his heels uppermost, and Solomon leapt from the tombstone, an' off through the crowd for the bare life, wallopin' them right an' left. They all slunk home afther a while with their tails between their legs, but poor Solomon was the worst of all. He made “ Pagganinny ” into smithereens—what remained of her. An' he didn't lift his head for twelve months afther.

THE RESURRECTION OF DINNY O'DOWD

SEUMAS MACMANUS

IN the parish of Pulbochog where me father's people come from there's many a man strugglin' for sthraws, bekase the rents are that big, and the farms that small—but there's wan man, and only wan, who is as ondependent as a prince—and as well-to-do after his own fashion—and that's Manis O'Dowd. And Manis is as he is, bekase he houlds his bit of land free of all rent while grass grows, and water runs, and crows put out their tongue.

How he comes to be this way is a great story, in throth, and a dhroll wan.

Manis's father that is now, was Cormac, and his father again was Dinny O'Dowd, or Dinny the Ghost, as he was known till the day of his death. And him it was that got for the wee farm the privilege of goin' rent free for ever and a day.

I dar' say it's a good four score of years ago now since Dinny the Ghost (as he wasn't named just then), mainin' for to be both good till himself and good till his farm, marri'd a wan Molshie M'Connell from the next parish, in the hopes that she'd fetch him both favour and fortune. But God help poor Dinny, the fortune she fetched him was the clothes on her back and a bad temper; and Molshie wasn't the third night in the house till Dinny seen the coat-tails of Paice pass out of his doore.

But me brave Dinny struggled with Molshie and the wurrl' as best he could for three years. But the rent was high and hard to pay, and for farm produce there was next to no price at all; so that debts and difficulties begun to hail on the poor divil. And to make bad worse, there riz bad blood atween him and the man marched him, Big Denis M'Cue, about a right-o'-way, which got so bitter that to save his skin he had to go afore the magistrates and swear his life again Big Dinis, who threatened to murder him afore br'akfast some mornin'. But instead of mendin' matthers this only made things worse; the M'Cues now s'ore be all the Saints in the Almanac that they'd never get a paiceful night's sleep till they'd see Dinny O'Dowd's blood flowin'.

"By this and by that," says Dinny till himself at last, "this must end. This climate isn't 'hol'some for me, so I'll thry a change." Without lettin' sowl or sinner know, he made up he'd slip off unknownst, and away till Amirikay. "Me wife and me neighbours 'ill maybe both be better of their tempers be the time I come back, and I'll arn as much money as 'ill lift me out o' me difficulties."

No sooner did night fall that selfsame day than he went out to fother the cows (be pretence) ; but me brave Dinny took the road in rale 'arnest, to push for a sayport and sail for the Lan' of Liberty. But he wasn't three fields from the house when he met a beggarman that he gave a shillin' to swap clothes with him—so it would be the harder to detect him when the wife would rise the hewin'-cry afther him. That done, then wanst away and aye away, me brave Dinny wasn't seen or heard of more.

But for the misfortunate poor beggarman 'twas the black hour that he took Dinny's shillin' and swapped clothes with him ! For where did the divil temp' his steps only across M'Cue's lan', over the very right-o'-way that riz all the bad blood. And who (as the divil would still have it) should be convaynient but Big Dinis M'Cue himself, with a tarrific bludgeon of a stick in his han'. And, "Well, bad luck to you, O'Dowd ! " says he, knowin' Dinny in the dark (as he thought) be the hat and sleeved waistcoat and whole rig-out—"Bad luck seize you, O'Dowd," says he, "for a provokin' ruffian ! Take that ! " and he tumbled the beggar with wan blow of his bludgeon ; and he never spoke more, he was as dead as an iron dog. Big Dinis he went lookin' for help, and himself and his brother atween them hoisted the corp on their shoulders, and marched with him across hedge and hill till they come to Mondarrig, where they tied stones to it, and sunk it in the deepest boghole they could find. Then says they, "The Lord be thankit ! Dinny O'Dowd's over and done with ; and we'll have paice and a right-o'-way all to ourselves for the time to come."

Next mornin' the gar went roun' that Dinny O'Dowd was a-missin', went out to fother the cows and didn't come home las' night, and Molshie was distracted. And some sayed this, and some more sayed that ; but it wasn't long till most of them agreed that Dinny had bid good-bye to hardships and hard-livin', and gone to the river and dhrowned himself ; and the M'Cues sayed they had seen a man of his height and appearance goin' in the direction of the river las' night. But when the river was dragged and the country screenged and sarched from end to wynd, thrace or thrack wasn't got of him. And poor Molshie was left to mourn and to manage as best she might.

And poorly enough she did manage for wan year and for longer. As Big Dinis M'Cue's land lay into her own, and as she was sorely in need of a man to care her farm and Big Dinis just as sorely in need of a woman to care his house, people thought it 'ud be a go atween them. Dinis, in throth, begun to show Molshie attention enough—but she, of course, hadn't sartain enough proof that Dinny was dead. When, as luck would have it, just near on the score of the second twelvemonth after Dinny's departure, doesn't a man who was barrowin' turf in the bog discover a corp lyin' in wan of the holes. The word was passed, and when the people crowded to see it, though the faytures was gone, all his neighbours at wanst recognised Dinny O'Dowd be the oul' grey hat and the sleeved waistcoat with brassy buttons, and every article of apparel. Even Lanty Meehan, the shoemaker, could swear to his high-lows and the patches he put on the uppers. Poor Molshie come, wailin', and recognised him too, and cried over him her hearty fill, as if there had never afore been a wife so grieved afther a man.

Well, a hasty wake and a hurried funeral it got, and they hid it away as fast as they could.

Poor Dinny, poor man, he reached Amerikay all safe and in good time, and went to work in the lead works, where he wrought hard and very hard for twelve months, and then lost his health complete be lead poisonin', and had to take to his bed, where he lay atween life and daith for near twelve months more. And as soon as he found fit to put a foot in under him he got up; and as his only hope of life was to get to Irelan' again, a few of his friends put as much together as bought him a ticket, and sent him off.

When Dinny landed he was noways unlike a very far-gone ghost: as white as bleached lint, only the eyes of him was sunk in his head and black round about, and the skin only hangin' from his bones. "But what I feel worst," says he till himself, lookin' down at his rags, "is the ondaicent clothes I have—they'd disgrace a scarecrow." Hot-foot, then, he started for home; and when he came near where he'd be known, he waited till night fell on him sooner nor be seen comin' back from America in such duds. And when night did fall, on he went, and for his own house as smooth as he could, takin' the fields for it, instead of the roads, so no wan would see him. And behold ye, when he climbed in of his own garden what does he find, where Molshie had put them to get the air, only his own daicent oul' rig that he'd swapped with the beggar two years ago. "Thank God!" says Dinny, "for it's Him put them my way." And without any more ado off him he peels his own string o' rags and gets into the sleeved waistcoat with the brassy buttons, and claps his own brave oul' grey hat on his head. "Molshie, the knave, must a made the poor beggarman give them up," says he; "but it stands me good sarvice she did."

Now, as fortune would have it, this was only the third night after the berral, and Big Dinis had strolled into Molshie's to comfort her, and settle up wee mathers about the weddin'—which was now fixed upon for sartain, and to take place as soon as they could daicently think of houldin' it. And the both of them were sittin' purty close together, love-makin', when me brave Dinny advanced and looked in of the winda! The first thing upset them then was an onearthly yell without; and the next thing the doore burstin' in, and Dinny O'Dowd that they had turned the sods on, three days afore, Dinny, in his oul' sleeved waistcoat, and lookin' more daithly than any dead man, jumped into the middle of the floore!

Molshie she gave a scream out of her, and fainted dead away. Big Dinis M'Cue, with his mouth open, lost the power to aither move or spaik, till Dinny, shakin' a bony fist undher his nose, says, "Ye murtherin' villian!"—which was a common word of abuse of his—"Ye murtherin' villian, M'Cue! I'll niver rest until I see ye in the hangman's hands!" Big Dinis with that got the power of his lungs and his legs all of a suddent, and lettin' a bawl out of him like a calf a-sthranglin', he dives atween Dinny's legs, and flew like a weaver's shuttle through the doore.

Poor Molshie was in a rale bad way, and every time she opened her eyes and saw Dinny's white face and the sleeved waistcoat with the brassy buttons bendin' over her, she went off in another faint again. Says Dinny, "The woman'll die dead of the fear o' me onless I send in some of the neighbours to bring her to." So out he went and down the road to Neilis Lainaghan's, and he heerd big noise and fiddlin' as he come till it—for there was a dance in Neilis's, and all the countryside was gathered. Dinny lifted the latch and walked into the middle of them, and that ins'ant there was a scraim in this corner of the house, and a yell in that, and a groan in the other, and a racket and a rush all over, and a crush and a dive for the doore; and in less time than I say it Dinny was standin' alone by himself, barrin' for half-a-dozen fainted women and girls that was lyin' among broken chairs ; and every minute there was wan of these women comin' to, and, seein' Dinny, givin' another scraim and goin' off.

" Well, bad cess to yous, wan and all ! " says Dinny, afther he'd stood in speechless wonderment for five minutes—" The worst of bad snuff to yous, wan and all ! Is the wurl' gone mad, or what's come over Pulbochog anyhow, that the sight of a man come back afther two years sends every wan helther-skelther like frightened hares in a harvest-fiel' ? "

But it was goin' from bad to worse with the faintin' women ; so, off he had to take himself, and fare further. But behold ye, there wasn't a hut or house he come till that wasn't as emp'y as if the plague had cleaned them out ; and he could only hear the shouts of the people as they were hurryin' and scurryin' far over the face of the country. " Musha, and may the divil dhrove yous to the factory where they brew bad luck ! " says he, turnin', and makin' for home again.

Intil his own byre he went—for he'd got enough of Molshie for wan evenin'—and threw himself down to sleep under the cow's head ; and slep' purty hearty.

Now, when Dinny left home first, the lan' had been in arrears ov rent, and it had been gettin' deeper intil it since he left ; and the land-lord had at last just got a decree again' Molshie, and had ordered the bailiff to go to Molshie's, and seize something on the decree. So, it was on this very mornin' I'm talkin' of that the bailiff had made up to come on his decree. " I'll be there," says he, " afore Molshie is out and about, and I'll have me seizure lifted and carried off with small trouble." So, close afther the screek of day he come, and walked intil the byre. " Here's a cow," says he, " 'ill be good for ten poun' off the decree," and walked forrid to the baste's head to liberate her. And that minute up jumped Dinny, and naturally flew for the fellow's throat. But, my sorra, the bailiff, when he got the first gleek of him and seen who it was, didn't wait, but let out of him a yell and a howl, and sprung for the door, and away, and never waited or stopped till he had put hills behind him.

Dinny prayed bad prayers on the bailiff that had come to seize his only cow, and on the lan'lord that sent him, and then he started out hot-foot and never stopped or stayed till he was at the lan'lord's house. The bailiff had reached there long ahead of him, and when he toul' the lan'lord that he didn't lift the decree bekase Dinny O'Dowd's ghost had riz at the cow's head, and spouted fire at him from both mouth and nostrils, the lan'lord gave him no end of abuse for an amadan and an ediot, and swore he'd dismiss him and have a man in his place afore the sun set.

But behold ye ! the lan'lord was only warmin' up to it, and the poor bailiff, with his teeth still chatterin', takin' all insults as compliments, when the doore opens and Dinny steps in.

The tongue stood still in the lan'lord's mouth, and the hair riz on his head at the sight, and the poor bailiff give a howl and dived in under the lan'lord's chair.

" Small wonder yous is mortially ashamed of yerselves," Dinny thunders at them, " for to go for to take away a lone woman's cow ! "

" It was—it was all a mistake," says the lan'lord, when he got his tongue—" It was all a great mistake, entirely," says he, " and I'm very, very sorry for it, and it'll never occur again, Misther O'Dowd," says he, him thremblin' like a sally leaf, and the colour of the limewall in the face.

" Ay, Misther O'Dowd—no less," says Dinny till himself. " Troth the lan'lords has been improvin' in their manners since I left the country." And then says he, spaikin' out, " I'm glad to hear ye say it. For in faith I thought it was a cold welcome to a man comin' back afther bein' two years gone from yous."

" Oh, then, Misther O'Dowd, we're—we're—we're glad to see ye back. I suppose ye're goin' round to see all the neighbours afore ye go again ; so, I'll not be delayin' ye. Good mornin'," says the lan'lord.

" Not so quick, be yer laive, sir," says Dinny. " I seem about as welcome to the neighbours as to yerself and yer bailiff ; they all screech, and show me their heels, whatever the divil's the matther with them."

The lan'lord was thryin' to be as plaisin' as possible. " Oh," says he, " Misther O'Dowd, that's all only bekase we arn't used to you yet."

" Plaise God, then, it'll not be my fault for the time to come," says Dinny, " or yous 'ill get used to me."

" Oh, Misther O'Dowd, don't say that," says the lan'lord, beseechin' him.

" What the divil do you mane, now ? " says Dinny.

" I mane," says the other, " I mane that—that—Oh, ye know what I mane. I mane that, of course, we're very glad entirely to see ye ; but—but we think ye'd maybe be better and happier where ye were," says he.

"Happier!" says Dinny. "Look at me! Look at me! Ye're now lookin' at a man that suffered hell since he went away."

The poor bailiff give a screech from in under the chair, and the lan'lord give another screech.

"Plaise, Misther O'Dowd, if ye go away from here, I'll do anything at all to sarve ye."

"I only ax sparin's, and I'll bring ye here inside wan twelvemonth, and count ye down, every sovereign I owe ye, even if I have to rob the devil to get it."

"Oh, no, no, no! Plaise, no! Don't bring me any money. I forgive ye every penny ye owe me, and I'll make ye out a clear resait up till this day, if ye promise to put it in your pocket, and depart in paice."

"Oh, ye ginerous man!" says Dinny, overcome with such unexpected goodness. "I'll niver forget that act to ye. And for the time to come, as sure as ever galeday comes round, ye'll find me the first man here in the mornin', with me rent to ye."

"Oh, no! Oh, no, plaise!" says the lan'lord. "Don't come with any rent to me, ever. I'll here and now fill ye out a resait up till the year of ten thousand and nothin'—just to save ye the throuble and worry of comin' back."

And there and then, without more ado, he fills out a resait to say that "the undhersigned, Dinny O'Dowd, has paid me every penny of rent ever due again' his farm in Pulbochog, or that ever will be due against it, up till and includin' the year ten thousand and nothin'."

And the dumbfoundhered Dinny takes this from the lan'lord's thrimblin' hand, and pockets it, and walks off.

But he didn't see man or mortal, sowl or sinner, nor couldn't know what happened to them, till he come as far as the chapel; and this he found panged with people to the door. For, the way of it was, Molshie, by the advice of the neighbours, had axed for a Mass to be sayed that Dinny's soul might get rest, and all the parish had gathered, to join their prayers.

Into the chapel poor Dinny walks; and the minute they saw him, the congregation let wan howl out o' them that near carried the roof off the buildin', and they made such a rush for the three doors that it was a marcy they didn't take the sidewalls with them ; and Dinny found himself alone in the chapel with the priest.

The same priest was a purty courageous man, and he actually walked forrid to Dinny and addhressed him—commandin' him in the Name to say what was a-throuble to him to fetch him back here.

" A-throuble to me ! " says Dinny. " I knew nothin' but throuble since I left here."

" To yer shame be it said, Dinny O'Dowd," says the priest. " It wasn't for want of warnin's enough from me, ye went asthray."

" Thru for ye—thru for ye, father," says Dinny. " And it's often when I was sufferin' that I sayed the same to meself."

" Well, well, it's me is the sorry man for ye, Dinny O'Dowd. But it's too late to lament now. Is there anything I can do for ye ? " says the priest.

" Yes, yer reverence, can ye tell me why these people loses their wits and runs like the Roe wather when they see me ? " says Dinny.

" Oh, that's only natural," says the priest. " They'll not be content till ye're gone again. So hurry yerself."

" Till I'm gone ! But I'm come to remain," says Dinny.

" Come ! come ! " says the other, " ye can't do that, ye know."

" And why not, may I ax ? " says Dinny.

" There's no whys in it," says the other. " If ye have anything on yer mind, or any requist to ax, ax it and go."

" Well, upon my veracity, that is a cool way to thrait wan who expected a wee bit of welcome and pleasure afther two years of torture," says Dinny.

" Ye're afther confessin' ye 'arned it," says the priest.

" But I've made up my mind to turn a new laif," Dinny said.

" It's too late now if ye had made up yer mind to turn a whole grove," says the priest. " There's no second chance in your wurrl," says he. " So, right about face now," says he, " and march ; or if ye don't do it of yer own free will, I'll soon find a means of makin' ye."

Poor Dinny, poor man, was sore put about at this traitment. But, says he, " It 'ud puzzle ye to take stockin's off a barefooted man. How am I to go without either money or mains ? "

" Come ! none of yer nadiums," says the priest, " go the way ye come."

" I come in The Irish Maiden," says he, " to Darry, and had to pay smartly for it."

" What do ye mane ? " says the priest, says he ; and he puts his hand on Dinny, and feels him. " Aren't ye a dead man, sir ? " says he.

But, faix, the grip of Dinny didn't at all feel like what a ghost should be, to the priest's mighty wondherment ; and he never let go of him till he marched him out of the chapel, and along the road, hearin' Dinny's story as they went. The people they were crouchin' on the hills watchin' them both, and waitin' to see Dinny go off like a puff o' smoke. But that they didn't see.

The priest marched Dinny straight home to Molshie, and toul' her it wasn't Dinny's ghost at all, but Dinny himself. But Molshie tuk her heels with her away from the house, and wild horses wouldn't dhrag her back again. She'd never come, she sayed, to live with a ghost.

An' she was as good as her word ; and in troth Dinny didn't br'ak his heart with the grief, either.

Big Dinis M'Cue, when he got the fright, never stopped runnin' till he reached the polis barracks, and give himself up for the murder.

Dinny O'Dowd himself tuk a holiday to attend the hangin'. And, happy as he was that day, he was never a day less so till the day he died, and left his freehould to his son Cormac, a child Molshie left with him ; and Cormac left it to his son again, Manis ; and as I sayed, Manis and his freehould are flourshin' in Pulbochog at this day. And may they long continue so.

DORA SIGERSON SHORTER

1872-1918

PRISCILLA

PRICILLA was dead, and all the women of the village had come to her waking. They moved about the big house where she had lived so long and so quietly as though they had never seen it before ; and they never had, without Priscilla.

They moved silently, or came together in little groups to talk about her. They seemed as much amazed as sorry. Who could imagine Priscilla dead ? Surely she was the oldest woman in the village ; and yet she seemed not so very old ; but no one remembered the village without her, and no one remembered her young. Perhaps she had entered into their lives unnoticed, and only when she came to her womanhood had taken her place in their sight, as a little unknown seedling will one day become a tree and a landmark.

Perhaps in the great house she had passed her shadowy girlhood, and only became a personage when her uncle died, leaving her his sole and only heir. Then she crept forth, and her fading hands drew the hearts of the people towards her.

Was she rich ? Who can say ? The black, barrack-like house, with its neglected garden, had no air of wealth about it ; but never a child or woman came to Priscilla for help and went away empty-handed. Some said that for this latter reason the house grew more desolate as it grew old—that pictures and silver and ornaments vanished one by one.

But others would have it that Priscilla had a box of money in her room, corded, sealed, and locked. For true it was that such a box, to all appearance, was there, as Ann O'Ruark, who nursed her once in an illness, could tell.

Now she lay dead, and it seemed to the women of the little village as though something marvellous had happened—as though the old round tower they looked upon every morning when they opened their doors had crumbled in the night, or as though the church bell they depended upon to awaken them at six had forgotten to ring, leaving them late and bewildered. True, she might have been ill, or gone away on a visit, or vanished for a time. But to die! No one ever thought that of Priscilla after all those years. Why, even now the children from the cottages were running down the street on the stroke of five to meet her coming from her Saturday's marketing with something hidden for them in her pocket. Yet they had been told she would come up the narrow street no more. Yes, even now poor cripple Janie Doyle was turning her face to the window to be ready for the smile and cheery word that always met her. Yet she too knew Priscilla would never pass again.

All the women there sitting at her wake felt that to-morrow they would put on their shawls and run to tell Priscilla their joys and sorrows, or to ask her advice, as they had done all the time since they became aware she was. And Priscilla would be lying with that strange smile upon her face, so far removed from them.

Was she so very old—Priscilla? Hers was a face you could not imagine had ever been young. Wrinkled and fallen away, you could not fix and fill it with youth.

Once she had said to a child, "I was light as a bird when I was young as you"; and the little one had gone away troubled at the lie. She knew, as all the children did, that Priscilla had never, never been young.

Though Priscilla knew everything of everybody, nobody knew anything of Priscilla, except, of course, that she was an old maid—as any one of the name of Priscilla must be. Why, the very sound of it was enough to tell how prim, how neat, how old-maidish she was. No one could have imagined her with a lover. Many a time the village women had sat and talked of Priscilla, what she must have been like as a girl—if she ever had been a girl: the primmest of little girls, who always had her hair smooth and lessons learnt: a girl with large feet and high, buttoned boots, with every button fastened in its place; thin legs, of course; a waist that had never known tight-lacing; straight hair, first in a plait and later a tight coil at the back of her smooth head; a high white forehead, intelligent grey eyes, a rather large and rather pink nose, a pleasant mouth, thin neck and breast, long arms, large nervous hands. Yes, that must have been Priscilla, if ever she had been a girl. But there was no lover in the setting of Priscilla's girlhood. No, she hated men, and rough boys the natty Priscilla must have always shunned, nor could she, with her cleverness, ever have admired the developing youth.

Yes, she hated men and all their sex ; she was hardly kind to little boys—they were cruel to her cats, she would say. But the girl babies, how she loved them ! There was never a birth in the village where she was not first visitor to the new arrival. And if it was a boy, she would look close into the little red face till he raised his voice and howled. Then she would laugh. “ Shout for it and you will get it, my lad ; only shout long enough and you will get it.” Then she would press a golden pound into his little fist and leave him. But if it was a girl, she would take it in her arms, and if it was crying it would stop that minute. She would drop a tear upon it, perhaps, and whisper things into its little unconscious ears. When she was leaving she would put a guinea into its hands, with the words, “ For your sad heart, my girl, for your sad heart.” So the baby would be added to her list of loves.

But she liked best the lovelorn maidens who would come to her with their stories. They were indeed for her heart of hearts. Many a sorrowful soul that had forgotten how to be proud would after consulting with her become strong again, and win the lover back by flaunting who had grown weary of too patient a love.

The house was built like one that had never been intended to hold the young ; dark, gloomy, rambling. Priscilla was the only one to whom it seemed a fitted background.

The little children who braved its awfulness would hasten, afraid of its silence, from passage to passage till they reached Priscilla, every minute expecting a horrible something belonging to the mould and age to spring upon them from each dark place. Only the mysterious cupboards with hidden sweets and jams, found nowhere else, could tempt them to come. And it took three of them to do it, clinging together, and stopping often with shrieks that were not all laughter but served to fill the dusty silence.

When Priscilla died there turned up from somewhere a far-removed cousin—a stern, middle-aged woman, who looked at the world through smoked glasses ; and no doubt the world looked grey to her. She had no tears, no smiles, no sentiments, only the hardness of middle life, which has left the softness of youth behind and not yet reached the softness of age. She was a business-like person, and ordered everything and everybody as if she had lived all her life in Priscilla’s house. The people wondered if she would get Priscilla’s box of treasure ; but, of course, there was no one else. The cousin was making herself busy, pretending to be concerned for Priscilla. Why had she not come before to take care of her ? She wanted to blame somebody for not calling in a doctor. But she ought to know Priscilla would not have the doctor. She had a perfect horror of the doctor, and would never see him, or speak of him. There was only one doctor in the village—an old man, as old as Priscilla, it might be—a married man with grown-up sons and daughters, now married themselves and doing well. Once a neighbour had spoken of the doctor to Priscilla. It was to repeat a story of his past, a story of a lonely girl he had jilted almost on their wedding-day, and how the girl had vanished and been heard of no more ; but that had not happened in the village, and so the village was not interested in the particulars. When Priscilla heard the story she rose from her seat and went to the window without a word. So the neighbour thought she was weary, and changed the subject from men and their misdeeds, but she did make a parting remark to the effect that the doctor and his wife never got on together. She was surprised when Priscilla said, in a voice so sweet and far away she hardly heard it, “ Poor lad ! poor lad ! ”

Dora Sigerson

(Mrs. Shorter)

Priscilla would not have the doctor come near her when she lived, but when she died he had to be called in. People who watched him coming were surprised to see him falter, he ought to have been so used to death. And yet he came like one most cruelly afraid. He stood at the door of the room where she lay for a few moments, as though unable to enter. Then he pushed the door open and went as if with an effort. When he reached her bedside he stood silent, looking upon her face. And there were those there who thought they had heard him whisper, “ Priscilla ! ” and then louder, as though she must hear, “ Priscilla ! ”

But Priscilla was dead, and all the village had come to her wake ; two nights they had sat up, and this was the third. The will had been read—such as it was ; for there was little to leave to anybody. Yet every one had had a trifle, the house had gone to the cousin, but there was no money to speak of—nothing more except the little wooden box, corded, locked, and sealed—the box that must contain the body of the fortune. The cousin’s fingers had been on the cords, the eyes of the village women had been turned to it, waiting for it to open, when they were told it was to be buried with her. What an idea ! Whoever heard of a box being buried in a tomb ? Who would ever have thought she would have carried away what she could no longer want ? Who would have imagined Priscilla a miser ?

The crowd had all gone to the dining-room at the end of the long passage in the west wing, and the cousin was sitting alone in the room with the box ; upstairs Priscilla was lying, and she would never know—never know the seals were broken and the knots undone. Surely, it was no harm to open and look in—no, not to touch a single penny, since she was such a screw—only to open. No box was ever yet buried by a woman unopened. The lid lay loose.

The cousin sat back a moment, then went upon her knees and raised the cover. She saw the contents were wrapped in white paper. She pulled it off and drew forth what came to her hand. Astonishment was upon her face, for first there came a dress—a white satin dress—then a long veil, then a wreath of orange blossoms. Shoes, gloves, and underwear, all lace and ribbons, all sewn by hand in tiny stitches, surely Priscilla's own. What was this the cousin had stumbled on unawares ? A wedding outfit, Priscilla's wedding outfit, breathing the breath of years, lavender and age. How time had ruined all, as it had destroyed Priscilla's love-story ! How was it the cousin never knew of this prepared wedding ? Where or who was the man ? She had known little of Priscilla when she was young, only that she was fatherless and motherless, and that an uncle had taken charge of her ; that she had grown up between the grey walls of her uncle's quiet, lonely house and a convent school, where she had spent half her time. Always unnoticed, silent, and companionless, was it because there was no one who cared enough about her to draw her from her solitude ? There was something, the cousin fancied she half-remembered, something of a scandal of Priscilla and a young doctor, something about love-letters and stolen meetings discovered at the convent. Was it possible Priscilla had returned home to work her wedding outfit, while the young doctor had forgotten his promise and married money while she still was awaiting him ? But it was a vague memory, and might not have been her.

The cousin bent above the box. Nothing else ; no money—not a penny. Ah ! here was a key to the story, a bundle of old letters—love-letters, for were they not tied by a silken bow ? Poor Priscilla !

As she took them into her hands she fancied she heard the sound of a woman sobbing far away ; it might be upstairs with the dead. Some friend of Priscilla's, no doubt. She turned the letters over in her hands. She wished that wild crying would stop. It disturbed her. She laid her fingers upon the beknotted strings, then hesitated.

Should she dare spy into the secrets of the helpless dead? But curiosity was strong; she loosed the ribbons. At the same time a wild cry resounded through the room. She sprang to her feet, the letters in her hands, and looked fearfully around. There was no one there. It must have been outside. Yes; it came from the floor above—from Priscilla's room—long, sad, and awful; the sound of a woman's wild grief.

The cousin thrust the letters into her pocket, and ran down the hall, calling to the people to hurry to the room above. She called to them to bring hot blankets and restoratives, that Priscilla was not dead, that she had waked in terror, finding herself decked out for death. And all the time she was shouting to them she was running up the long staircase and down the corridors to the room where the crying came from. Then she called, "Priscilla, I am coming; don't be afraid; Priscilla, I am coming." She imagined Priscilla sitting up in her grave-clothes, half mad with terror at her position. When she touched the handle of the door the crying ceased. She opened it, and stood half-fainting upon the threshold. In her coffin lay Priscilla stiff and dead, her hands clasped as they had been when she was laid there, her face unchanged, the great room empty—death everywhere.

The cousin stood dumb at the door, the women crowding about her with hot blankets and restoratives. "It was a mistake," she said; and pushing them back, closed the door.

She went downstairs to the room where the trunk lay, and drawing the letters from her pocket placed them back unopened where she had found them. With reverent hands she laid the wedding things one by one in their place, and when she had finished she sealed and corded the box.

When Priscilla went to her sleeping-place the next day, there was borne by her side a little trunk, and it was laid at her feet in the cold vault that held so many dead.

E. Æ. SOMERVILLE AND MARTIN ROSS

THE HOUSE OF FAHY

NOTHING could shake the conviction of Maria that she was by nature and by practice a house dog. Every one of Shreelane's many doors had, at one time or another, slammed upon her expulsion, and each one of them had seen her stealthy, irrepressible return to the sphere that she felt herself so eminently qualified to grace. For her the bone, thriftily interred by Tim Connor's terrier, was a mere diversion ; even the fruitage of the ashpit had little charm for an accomplished habitué of the kitchen. She knew to a nicety which of the doors could be burst open by assault, at which it was necessary to whine sycophantically ; and the clinical thermometer alone could furnish a parallel for her perception of mood in those in authority. In the case of Mrs. Cadogan she knew that there were seasons when instant and complete self-effacement was the only course to pursue ; therefore when, on a certain morning in July, on my way through the downstairs regions to my office, I saw her approach the kitchen door with her usual circumspection, and, on hearing her name enunciated indignantly by my cook, withdraw swiftly to a city of refuge at the back of the hay-rick, I drew my own conclusions.

Had she remained, as I did, she would have heard the disclosure of a crime that lay more heavily on her digestion than her conscience.

" I can't put a thing out o' me hand but he's watching me to whip it away ! " declaimed Mrs. Cadogan, with all the disregard of her kind for the accident of sex in the brute creation. " 'Twas only last night I was back in the scullery when I heard Bridget let a screech, and there was me brave dog up on the table eating the roast beef that was after coming out from the dinner ! "

" Brute ! " interjected Philippa, with what I well knew to be a simulated wrath.

" And I had planned that bit of beef for the luncheon," continued Mrs. Cadogan in impassioned lamentation, " the way we wouldn't have to intrude on the cold turkey ! Sure he has it that dhragged, that all we can do with it now is run it through the mincing machine for the Major's sandwiches."

At this appetising suggestion I thought fit to intervene in the deliberations.

"One thing," I said to Philippa afterwards, as I wrapped up a bottle of Yanatas in a Cardigan jacket and rammed it into an already apoplectic Gladstone bag, "that I do draw the line at, is taking that dog with us. The whole business is black enough as it is."

"Dear," said my wife, looking at me with almost clairvoyant abstraction, "I could manage a second evening-dress if you didn't mind putting my tea-jacket in your portmanteau."

Little, thank Heaven! as I know about yachting, I knew enough to make pertinent remarks on the incongruity of an ancient 60-ton hireling and a fleet of smart evening-dresses; but none the less I left a pair of indispensable boots behind, and the tea-jacket went into my portmanteau.

It is doing no more than the barest justice to the officers of the Royal Navy to say that, so far as I know them, they cherish no mistaken enthusiasm for a home on the rolling deep when a home anywhere else presents itself. Bernard Shute had unfortunately proved an exception to this rule. During the winter, the invitation to go for a cruise in the yacht that was in process of building for him hung over me like a cloud; a timely strike in the builder's yard brought a respite, and, in fact, placed the completion of the yacht at so safe a distance that I was betrayed into specious regrets, echoed with an atrocious sincerity by Philippa. Into a life pastorally compounded of Petty Sessions and lawn-tennis parties, retribution fell when it was least expected. Bernard Shute hired a yacht in Queenstown, and one short week afterwards the worst had happened, and we were packing our things for a cruise in her, the only alleviation being the knowledge that, whether by sea or land, I was bound to return to my work in four days.

We left Shreelane at twelve o'clock, a specially depressing hour for a start, when breakfast has died in you, and lunch is still remote. My last act before mounting the dogcart was to put her collar and chain on Maria and immure her in the potato-house, whence, as we drove down the avenue, her wails rent the heart of Philippa and rejoiced mine. It was a very hot day, with a cloudless sky; the dust lay thick on the white road, and on us also, as, during two baking hours, we drove up and down the long hills and remembered things that had been left behind, and grew hungry enough to eat sandwiches that tasted suspiciously of roast beef.

The yacht was moored in Clountiss Harbour ; we drove through the village street, a narrow and unlovely thoroughfare, studded with public-houses, swarming with children and poultry, down through an ever-growing smell of fish, to the quay.

Thence we first viewed our fate, a dingy-looking schooner, and the hope I had secretly been nourishing that there was not wind enough for her to start, was dispelled by the sight of her topsail going up. More than ever at that radiant moment—as the reflection of the white sail quivered on the tranquil blue, and the still water flattered all it reproduced, like a fashionable photographer—did I agree with George Herbert's advice, " Praise the sea, but stay on shore."

" We must hail her, I suppose," I said drearily. I assailed the Eileen Oge, such being her inappropriate name, with desolate cries, but achieved no immediate result beyond the assembling of some village children round us and our luggage.

" Mr. Shute and the two ladies was after screeching here for the boat awhile ago," volunteered a horrid little girl, whom I had already twice frustrated in the attempt to seat an infant relative on our bundle of rugs. " Timsy Hallahane says 'twould be as good for them to stay ashore, for there isn't as much wind outside as'd out a candle."

With this encouraging statement the little girl devoted herself to the alternate consumption of gooseberries and cockles.

All things come to those who wait, and to us arrived at length the gig of the Eileen Oge, and such, by this time, were the temperature and the smells of the quay that I actually welcomed the moment that found us leaving it for the yacht.

" Now, Sinclair, aren't you glad we came ? " remarked Philippa, as the clear green water deepened under us, and a light briny air came coolly round us with the motion of the boat.

As she spoke, there was an outburst of screams from the children on the quay, followed by a heavy splash.

" Oh, stop ! " cried Philippa in an agony ; " one of them has fallen in ! I can see its poor little brown head ! "

" 'Tis a dog, ma'am," said briefly the man who was rowing stroke.

" One might have wished it had been that little girl," said I, as I steered to the best of my ability for the yacht.

We had traversed another twenty yards or so, when Philippa, in a voice in which horror and triumph were strangely blended, exclaimed, " She's following us ! "

"Who? The little girl?" I asked callously.

"No," returned Philippa; "worse."

I looked round, not without a prevision of what I was to see, and beheld the faithful Maria swimming steadily after us, with her brown muzzle thrust out in front of her, ripping through the reflections like a plough.

"Go home!" I roared, standing up and gesticulating in fury that I well knew to be impotent. "Go home, you brute!"

Maria redoubled her efforts, and Philippa murmured uncontrollably:

"Well, she is a dear!"

Had I had a sword in my hand I should undoubtedly have slain Philippa; but before I could express my sentiments in any way, a violent shock flung me endways on top of the man who was pulling stroke. Thanks to Maria, we had reached our destination all unawares; the two men, respectfully awaiting my instructions, had rowed on with disciplined steadiness, and, as a result, we had rammed the Eileen Oge amidships, with a vigour that brought Mr. Shute tumbling up the companion to see what had happened.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" he said, with his mouth full. "Come in; don't knock! Delighted to see you, Mrs. Yeates; don't apologise. There's nothing like a hired ship after all—it's quite jolly to see the splinters fly—shows you're getting your money's worth. Hullo! who's this?"

This was Maria, feigning exhaustion, and noisily treading water at the boat's side.

"What, poor old Maria? Wanted to send her ashore, did he? Heartless ruffian!"

Thus was Maria installed on board the Eileen Oge, and the element of fatality had already begun to work.

There was just enough wind to take us out of Clountiss Harbour, and with the last of the out-running tide we crept away to the west. The party on board consisted of our host's sister, Miss Cecilia Shute, Miss Sally Knox, and ourselves; we sat about in conventional attitudes in deck chairs and on adamant deck bosses, and I talked to Miss Shute with feverish brilliancy, and wished the patience-cards were not in the cabin; I knew the supreme importance of keeping one's mind occupied, but I dared not face the cabin. There was a long, almost imperceptible swell, with little queer sea-birds that I have never seen before—and trust I never shall again—dotted about on its glassy slopes. The coast-line looked low and grey and dull, as, I think, coast-lines always do when viewed from the deep. The breeze that Bernard had promised us we should find outside was barely enough to keep us moving. The burning sun of four o'clock focussed its heat on the deck; Bernard stood up among us, engaged in what he was pleased to call "handling the stick," and beamed almost as offensively as the sun.

"Oh, we're slipping along," he said, his odiously healthy face glowing like copper against the blazing blue sky. "You're going a great deal faster than you think, and the men say we'll pick up a breeze once we're round the Mizen."

I made no reply; I was not feeling ill, merely thoroughly disinclined for conversation. Miss Sally smiled wanly, and closing her eyes, laid her head on Philippa's knee. Instructed by a dread freemasonry, I knew that for her the moment had come when she could no longer bear to see the rail rise slowly above the horizon, and with an equal rhythmic slowness sink below it. Maria moved restlessly to and fro, panting and yawning, and occasionally rearing herself on her hind-legs against the side, and staring forth with wild eyes at the headachy sliding of the swell. Perhaps she was meditating suicide; if so I sympathised with her, and since she was obviously going to be sick I trusted that she would bring off the suicide with as little delay as possible. Philippa and Miss Shute sat in unaffected serenity in deck chairs, and stitched at white things—tea-cloths for the Eileen Oge, I believe, things in themselves a mockery—and talked untiringly, with that singular indifference to their marine surroundings that I have often observed in ladies who are not sea-sick. It always stirs me afresh to wonder why they have not remained ashore; nevertheless, I prefer their tranquil and total lack of interest in seafaring matters to the blatant Vikingism of the average male who is similarly placed.

Somehow, I know not how, we crawled onwards, and by about five o'clock we had rounded the Mizen, a gaunt spike of a headland that starts up like a boar's tusk above the ragged lip of the Irish coast, and the Eileen Oge was beginning to swing and wallop in the long sluggish rollers that the American liners know and despise. I was very far from despising them. Down in the west, resting on the sea's rim, a purple bank of clouds lay awaiting the descent of the sun, as seductively and as malevolently as a damp bed at a hotel awaits a traveller.

The end, so far as I was concerned, came at tea-time. The meal had been prepared in the saloon, and thither it became incumbent on me to accompany my hostess and my wife. Miss Sally, long past speech, opened, at the suggestion of tea, one eye, and disclosed a look of horror. As I tottered down the companion I respected her good sense. The Eileen Oge had been built early in the sixties, and head-room was not her strong point; neither, apparently, was ventilation. I began by dashing my forehead against the frame of the cabin door, and then, shattered morally and physically, entered into the atmosphere of the pit. After which things, and the sight of a plate of rich cake, I retired in good order to my cabin, and began upon the Yanatas.

I pass over some painful intermediate details and resume at the moment when Bernard Shute woke me from a drugged slumber to announce that dinner was over.

"It's been raining pretty hard," he said, swaying easily with the swing of the yacht; "but we've got a clinking breeze, and we ought to make Lurriga Harbour to-night. There's good anchorage there, the men say. They're rather a lot of swabs, but they know this coast, and I don't. I took 'em over with the ship all standing."

"Where are we now?" I asked, something heartened by the blessed word "anchorage."

"You're running up Sheepskin Bay—it's a thundering big bay; Lurriga's up at the far end of it, and the night's as black as the inside of a cow. Dig out and get something to eat, and come on deck—What! no dinner?"—I had spoken morosely, with closed eyes—"Oh, rot! you're on an even keel now. I promised Mrs. Yeates I'd make you dig out. You're as bad as a soldier officer that we were ferrying to Malta one time in the old Tamar. He got one leg out of his berth when we were going down the Channel, and he was too sick to pull it in again till we got to Gib!"

I compromised on a drink and some Biscuits. The ship was certainly steadier, and I felt sufficiently restored to climb weakly on deck. It was by this time past ten o'clock, and heavy clouds blotted out the last of the afterglow, and smothered the stars at their birth. A wet warm wind was lashing the Eileen Oge up a wide estuary; the waves were hunting her, hissing under her stern, racing up to her, crested with the white glow of phosphorus, as she fled before them. I dimly discerned in the greyness the more solid greyness of the shore. The mainsail loomed out into the darkness, nearly at right angles to the yacht, with the boom creaking as the following wind gave us an additional shove.

I know nothing of yacht sailing, but I can appreciate the grand fact that in running before a wind the boom is removed from its usual sphere of devastation.

I sat down beside a bundle of rugs that I had discovered to be my wife, and thought of my whitewashed office at Shreelane and its bare but stationary floor, with a yearning that was little short of passion. Miss Sally had long since succumbed ; Miss Shute was tired, and had turned in soon after dinner.

" I suppose she's overdone by the delirious gaiety of the afternoon," said I acridly, in reply to this information.

Philippa cautiously poked forth her head from the rugs, like a tortoise from under its shell, to see that Bernard, who was standing near the steersman, was out of hearing.

" In all your life, Sinclair," she said impressively, " you never knew such a time as Cecilia and I have had down there ! We've had to wash everything in the cabins, and remake the beds, and hurl the sheets away—they were covered with black finger-marks—and while we were doing that, in came the creature that calls himself the steward, to ask if he might get something of his that he had left in Miss Shute's ' birth-place ' ! and he rooted out from under Cecilia's mattress a pair of socks and half a loaf of bread ! "

" Consolation to Miss Shute to know her berth has been well aired," I said, with the nearest approach to enjoyment I had known since I came on board ; " and has Sally made any equally interesting discoveries ? "

" She said she didn't care what her bed was like ; she just dropped into it. I must say I am sorry for her," went on Philippa ; " she hated coming. Her mother made her accept."

" I wonder if Lady Knox will make her accept him ! " I said. " How often has Sally refused him, does any one know ? "

" Oh, about once a week," replied Philippa ; " just the way I kept on refusing you, you know ! "

Something cold and wet was thrust into my hand, and the aroma of damp dog arose upon the night air ; Maria had issued from some lair at the sound of our voices, and was now, with palsied tremblings, slowly trying to drag herself on to my lap.

" Poor thing, she's been so dreadfully ill," said Philippa. " Don't send her away, Sinclair. Mr. Shute found her lying on his berth not able to move ; didn't you, Mr. Shute ? "

"She found out that she was able to move," said Bernard, who had crossed to our side of the deck; "it was somehow borne in upon her when I got at her with a boot-tree. I wouldn't advise you to keep her in your lap, Yeates. She stole half a ham after dinner, and she might take a notion to make the only reparation in her power."

I stood up and stretched myself stiffly. The wind was freshening, and though the growing smoothness of the water told that we were making shelter of some kind, for all that I could see of land we might as well have been in mid-ocean. The heaving lift of the deck under my feet, and the lurching swing when a stronger gust filled the ghostly sails, were more disquieting to me in suggestion than in reality, and, to my surprise, I found something almost enjoyable in rushing through darkness at the pace at which we were going.

"We're a small bit short of the mouth of Lurriga Harbour yet, sir," said the man who was steering, in reply to a question from Bernard. "I can see the shore well enough; sure I know every yard of wather in the bay——"

As he spoke he sat down abruptly and violently; so did Bernard, so did I. The bundle that contained Philippa collapsed upon Maria.

"Main sheet!" bellowed Bernard, on his feet in an instant, as the boom swung in and out again with a terrific jerk. "We're ashore!"

In response to this order three men in succession fell over me while I was still struggling on the deck, and something that was either Philippa's elbow, or the acutest angle of Maria's skull, hit me in the face. As I found my feet the cabin skylight was suddenly illuminated by a wavering glare. I got across the slanting deck somehow, through the confusion of shouting men and the flapping thunder of the sails, and saw through the skylight a gush of flame rising from a pool of fire around an overturned lamp on the swing-table. I avalanched down the companion and was squandered like an avalanche on the floor at the foot of it. Even as I fell, McCarthy the steward dragged the strip of carpet from the cabin floor and threw it on the blaze; I found myself, in some unexplained way, snatching a railway rug from Miss Shute and applying it to the same purpose, and in half-a-dozen seconds we had smothered the flame and were left in total darkness. The most striking feature of the situation was the immovability of the yacht.

"Great Ned!" said McCarthy, invoking I know not what heathen deity, "is it on the bottom of the say we are? Well, whether or no, thank God, we have the fire quinched!"

We were not, so far, at the bottom of the sea, but during the next ten minutes the chances seemed in favour of our getting there. The yacht had run her bows upon a sunken ridge of rock, and after a period of feminine indecision as to whether she were going to slide off again, or roll over into deep water, she elected to stay where she was, and the gig was lowered with all speed, in order to tow her off before the tide left her.

My recollection of this interval is but hazy, but I can certify that in ten minutes I had swept together an assortment of necessaries and knotted them into my counterpane, had broken the string of my eyeglass, and lost my silver matchbox ; had found Philippa's curling-tongs and put them in my pocket ; had carted all the luggage on deck ; had then applied myself to the manly duty of reassuring the ladies, and had found Miss Shute merely bored, Philippa enthusiastically anxious to be allowed to help to pull the gig, and Miss Sally radiantly restored to health and spirits by the cessation of movement and the probability of an early escape from the yacht.

The rain had, with its usual opportuneness, begun again ; we stood in it under umbrellas, and watched the gig jumping on its tow-rope like a dog on a string, as its crew plied the labouring oar in futile endeavour to move the Eileen Oge. We had run on the rock at half-tide, and the increasing slant of the deck as the tide fell brought home to us the pleasing probability that at low water—viz. about 2 A.M.—we should roll off the rock and go to the bottom. Had Bernard Shute wished to show himself in the most advantageous light to Miss Sally he could scarcely have bettered the situation. I looked on in helpless respect while he whom I had known as the scourge of the hunting-field, the terror of the shooting-party, rose to the top of a difficult position and kept there, and my respect was, if possible, increased by the presence of mind with which he availed himself of all critical moments to place a protecting arm round Miss Knox.

By about 1 A.M. the two gaffs with which Bernard had contrived to shore up the slowly heeling yacht began to show signs of yielding, and, in approved shipwreck fashion, we took to the boats, the yacht's crew in the gig remaining in attendance on what seemed likely to be the last moments of the Eileen Oge, while we, in the dinghy, sought for the harbour. Owing to the tilt of the yacht's deck, and the roughness of the broken water round her, getting into the boat was no mean feat of gymnastics. Miss Sally did it like a bird, alighting in the inevitable arms of Bernard ; Miss Shute followed very badly, but, by innate force of character, successfully ; Philippa, who was enjoying every moment of her shipwreck, came last, launching herself into the dinghy with my silver shoe-horn clutched in one hand, and in the other the tea-basket. I heard the hollow clank of its tin cups as she sprang, and appreciated the heroism with which Bernard received one of its corners in his waist. How or when Maria left the yacht I know not, but when I applied myself to the bow oar I led off with three crabs, owing to the devotion with which she thrust her head into my lap.

I am no judge of these matters, but in my opinion we ought to have been swamped several times during that row. There was nothing but the phosphorus of breaking waves to tell us where the rocks were, and nothing to show where the harbour was except a solitary light, a mast-head light, as we supposed. The skipper had assured us that we could not go wrong if we kept " a westerly course with a little northing in it " ; but it seemed simpler to steer for the light, and we did so. The dinghy climbed along over the waves with an agility that was safer than it felt ; the rain fell without haste and without rest, the oars were as inflexible as crowbars, and somewhat resembled them in shape and weight ; nevertheless, it was Elysium when compared with the afternoon leisure of the deck of the Eileen Oge.

At last we came, unexplainably, into smooth water, and it was at about this time that we were first aware that the darkness was less dense than it had been, and that the rain had ceased. By imperceptible degrees a greyness touched the back of the waves, more a dreariness than a dawn, but more welcome than thousands of gold and silver. I looked over my shoulder and discerned vague bulky things ahead ; as I did so, my oar was suddenly wrapped in seaweed. We crept on ; Maria stood up with her paws on the gunwale, and whined in high agitation. The dark objects ahead resolved themselves into rocks, and without more ado Maria pitched herself into the water. In half a minute we heard her shaking herself on shore. We slid on ; the water swelled under the dinghy, and lifted her keel on to grating gravel.

" We couldn't have done it better if we'd been the Hydrographer Royal," said Bernard, wading knee-deep in a light wash of foam, with the painter in his hand ; " but all the same, that masthead light is some one's bedroom candle ! "

We landed, hauled up the boat, and then feebly sat down on our belongings to review the situation, and Maria came and shook herself over each of us in turn. We had run into a little cove, guided by the philanthropic beam of a candle in the upper window of a house about a hundred yards away. The candle still burned on, and the anæmic daylight exhibited to us our surroundings, and we debated as to whether we could at 2.45 A.M. present ourselves as objects of compassion to the owner of the candle. I need hardly say that it was the ladies who decided on making the attempt, having, like most of their sex, a courage incomparably superior to ours in such matters ; Bernard and I had not a grain of genuine compunction in our souls, but we failed in nerve.

We trailed up from the cove, laden with emigrants' bundles, stumbling on wet rocks in the half-light, and succeeded in making our way to the house. It was a small two-storeyed building, of that hideous breed of architecture usually dedicated to the rectories of the Irish Church ; we felt that there was something friendly in the presence of a pair of carpet slippers in the porch, but there was a hint of exclusiveness in the fact that there was no knocker and that the bell was broken. The light still burned in the upper window, and with a faltering hand I flung gravel at the glass. This summons was appallingly responded to by a shriek ; there was a flutter of white at the panes, and the candle was extinguished.

"Come away !" exclaimed Miss Shute, "it's a lunatic asylum !"

We stood our ground, however, and presently heard a footstep within, a blind was poked aside in another window, and we were inspected by an unseen inmate ; then some one came downstairs, and the hall door was opened by a small man with a bald head and a long sandy beard. He was attired in a brief dressing-gown, and on his shoulder sat, like an angry ghost, a large white cockatoo. Its crest was up on end, its beak was a good two inches long and curved like a Malay kris ; its claws gripped the little man's shoulder. Maria uttered in the background a low and thunderous growl.

"Don't take any notice of the bird, please," said the little man nervously, seeing our united gaze fixed upon this apparition ; "he's extremely fierce if annoyed."

The majority of our party here melted away to either side of the hall door, and I was left to do the explaining. The tale of our misfortunes had its due effect, and we were ushered into a small drawing-room, our host holding open the door for us, like a nightmare footman with bare shins, a gnome-like bald head, and an unclean spirit swaying on his shoulder. He opened the shutters, and we sat decorously round the room, as at an afternoon party, while the situation was further expounded on both sides. Our entertainer, indeed, favoured us with the leading items of his family history, amongst them the facts that he was a Dr. Fahy from Cork, who had taken somebody's rectory for the summer, and had been prevailed on by some of his patients to permit them to join him as paying-guests.

"I said it was a lunatic asylum," murmured Miss Shute to me.

"In point of fact," went on our host, "there isn't an empty room in the house, which is why I can only offer your party the use of this room and the kitchen fire, which I make a point of keeping burning all night."

He leaned back complacently in his chair, and crossed his legs; then, obviously remembering his costume, sat bolt upright again. We owed the guiding beams of the candle to the owner of the cockatoo, an old Mrs. Buck, who was, we gathered, the most paying of all the patients, and also, obviously, the one most feared and cherished by Dr. Fahy. "She has a candle burning all night for the bird, and her door open to let him walk about the house when he likes," said Dr. Fahy; "indeed, I may say her passion for him amounts to dementia. He's very fond of me, and Mrs. Fahy's always telling me I should be thankful, as whatever he did we'd be bound to put up with it!"

Dr. Fahy had evidently a turn for conversation that was unaffected by circumstance; the first beams of the early sun were lighting up the rep chair covers before the door closed upon his brown dressing-gown, and upon the stately white back of the cockatoo, and the demoniac possession of laughter that had wrought in us during the interview burst forth unchecked. It was most painful and exhausting, as such laughter always is; but by far the most serious part of it was that Miss Sally, who was sitting in the window, somehow drove her elbow through a pane of glass, and Bernard, in pulling down the blind to conceal the damage, tore it off the roller.

There followed on this catastrophe a period during which reason tottered and Maria barked furiously. Philippa was the first to pull herself together, and to suggest an adjournment to the kitchen fire that, in honour of the paying-guests, was never quenched, and, respecting the repose of the household, we proceeded thither with a stealth that convinced Maria we were engaged in a rat hunt. The boots of paying-guests littered the floor, the débris of their last repast covered the table; a cat in some unseen fastness crooned a war song to Maria, who feigned unconsciousness and fell to scientific research in the scullery.

We roasted our boots at the range, and Bernard, with all a sailor's gift for exploration and theft, prowled in noisome purlieus and emerged with a jug of milk and a lump of salt butter. No one who has not been a burglar can at all realise what it was to roam through Dr. Fahy's basement storey, with the rookery of paying-guests asleep above, and to feel that, so far, we had repaid his confidence by breaking a pane of glass and a blind, and putting the scullery tap out of order. I have always maintained that there was something wrong with it before I touched it, but the fact remains that when I had filled Philippa's kettle no human power could prevail upon it to stop flowing. For all I know to the contrary it is running still.

It was in the course of our furtive return to the drawing-room that we were again confronted by Mrs. Buck's cockatoo. It was standing in malign meditation on the stairs, and on seeing us it rose, without a word of warning, upon the wing, and with a long screech flung itself at Miss Sally's golden-red head, which a ray of sunlight had chanced to illumine. There was a moment of stampede, as the selected victim, pursued by the cockatoo, fled into the drawing-room; two chairs were upset (one, I think, broken), Miss Sally enveloped herself in a window curtain, Philippa and Miss Shute effaced themselves beneath a table; the cockatoo, foiled of its prey, skimmed, still screeching, round the ceiling. It was Bernard who, with a well-directed sofa-cushion, drove the enemy from the room. There was only a chink of the door open, but the cockatoo turned on his side as he flew, and swung through it like a woodcock.

We slammed the door behind him, and at the same instant there came a thumping on the floor overhead, muffled, yet preemtory.

"That's Mrs. Buck!" said Miss Shute, crawling from under the table; "the room over this is the one that had the candle in it."

We sat for a time in awful stillness, but nothing further happened, save a distant shriek overhead, that told the cockatoo had sought and found sanctuary in his owner's room. We had tea sotto voce, and then, one by one, despite the amazing discomfort of the drawing-room chairs, we dozed off to sleep.

It was at about five o'clock that I woke with a stiff neck and an uneasy remembrance that I had last seen Maria in the kitchen. The others, looking, each of them, about twenty years older than their age, slept in various attitudes of exhaustion. Bernard opened his eyes as I stole forth to look for Maria, but none of the ladies awoke. I went down the evil-smelling passage that led to the kitchen stairs, and, there on a mat, regarding me with intelligent affection, was Maria ; but what—oh what was the white thing that lay between her forepaws ?

The situation was too serious to be coped with alone. I fled noiselessly back to the drawing-room and put my head in ; Bernard's eyes—blessed be the light sleep of sailors !—opened again, and there was that in mine that summoned him forth. (Blessed also be the light step of sailors !) We took the corpse from Maria, withholding perforce the language and the slaughtering that our hearts ached to bestow. For a minute or two our eyes communed. "I'll get the kitchen shovel," breathed Bernard ; "you open the hall door !"

A moment later we passed like spirits into the open air, and on into a little garden at the end of the house. Maria followed us, licking her lips. There were beds of nasturtiums, and of purple stocks, and of marigolds. We chose a bed of stocks, a plump bed, that looked like easy digging. The windows were all tightly shut and shuttered, and I took the cockatoo from under my coat and hid it, temporarily, behind a box border. Bernard had brought a shovel and a coal scoop. We dug like badgers. At eighteen inches we got down into shale and stones, and the coal scoop struck work. "Never mind," said Bernard ; "we'll plant the stocks on top of him."

It was a lovely morning, with a new-born blue sky and a light northerly breeze. As we returned to the house, we looked across the wavelets of the little cove and saw, above the rocky point round which we had groped last night, a triangular white patch moving slowly along. "The tide's lifted her !" said Bernard, standing stock still. He looked at Mrs. Buck's window and at me. "Yeates !" he whispered, "let's quit !"

It was now barely six o'clock, and not a soul was stirring. We woke the ladies and convinced them of the high importance of catching the tide. Bernard left a note on the hall table for Dr. Fahy, a beautiful note of leave-taking and gratitude, and apology for the broken window (for which he begged to enclose half-a-crown). No allusion was made to the other casualties. As we neared the strand he found an occasion to say to me : "I put in a postscript that I thought it best to mention that I had seen the cockatoo in the garden, and hoped it would get back all right. That's quite true, you know ! But look here, whatever you do, you must keep it all dark from the ladies——"

At this juncture Maria overtook us with the cockatoo in her mouth.

DANIEL CORKERY

THE BREATH OF LIFE

THE opera company which I had accompanied as first violinist on so many tours suddenly collapsing, I found myself rather unexpectedly out of an engagement. I communicated with my society, and after a day's delay I was ordered to go at once to Clonmoyle.

I was in the worst of humours. Clonmoyle I found was one of those places in Ireland which, instead of increasing in size and importance as places ought, seem to have become accustomed to doing the very opposite. Once a city, it was now but a straggling town. What had brought an opera company to try its fortunes there I could make no guess at, yet there it was, and with difficulties accumulating about it. Here was I myself, for instance, in Clonmoyle because the manager had found it impossible to supplement his scanty travelling orchestra with local players ; and several others as well as I had had to travel day and night to be in time for the opening performance. Only one local musician had been dug up ; and of him this story.

In everything he stood apart from us. He was old, well over sixty, however young in appearance. He was large and heavy in build, easy-going, ruminative. We, the others in the band, were rather meagre, high-strung, irritable, worried—as is the way of our tribe ; on this trip particularly so (consider my own case : a first-class violinist in such surroundings !). He, on the other hand, smiled the whole day long, and his voice whispered rather than spoke. It did not seem to trouble him that the old ramshackle theatre was mouldy, damp, foul-smelling. He did not seem to notice the cruel draughts that swept us while we played, and benumbed our fingers. It made no difference to him if the manager was in a vile temper over the receipts, and our conductor still worse, his rheumatism playing old Harry with him.

At our first rehearsal I discovered he could not play in tune. “ I'm in for it ! ” I said, for a week of such fellowship I knew only too well would leave me a wreck. And even as I said this I saw the conductor staring hard at where the two of us were sitting side by side ; was it possible he thought it was I who was playing like that ! He might well have thought so, for my companion's face was not a guilty face ; how any one could play so consistently flat and still smile was a problem beyond me. Yes, Ignatius O'Byrne, such was his name, still smiled and still flattened. The fact is, he was the happiest man alive ; it was as if he had come into an inheritance. Here he was fiddling away in his beloved operas, and it was thirty years since he had last done so. These long thirty years, he explained to me in an interval, he had been rehearsing them in his untidy lodgings in a back street, and more than that, he had been thinking them out, phrase by phrase, " walking in the mists upon these rain-soaked hills "—I give his very words. As he spoke he swept his hand in a half-circle as if even there in the theatre he could still behold them, the dreary hills that surround Clonmoyle on every side and overlay it, as it were, with a sort of perpetual gloom. And then he added : " Behind music is the breath of life." A curious man, surely ; I watched his face. It was glowing, glowing, as long as the music held. And once when in some happy passage the whole band was singing like one, " Bravo, Bravo ! " I heard him whisper, and later on " Bravissimo ! " and he ceased playing, ceased, until I thought of nudging him with my elbow. And so, little by little, I came to forgive him his flat playing and his awkward bowing.

Our conductor, a brute of a man, his body twisted into a knot by rheumatism, was now constantly looking in our direction ; but whenever I saw him doing so I would make my violin sing for all it was worth ; were we not brothers in the same craft, this old man and I ? At rehearsal the second day my efforts to cover his wretched playing failed ; the conductor left his place, tied up and all as he was in that knot of pain, shuffled over to where we sat, and stood between us ! That settled for him which of us two was playing flat. He scowled at the old resurrected musician, hissed out a fierce, wicked word under his breath, and hobbled back to his place. That night, just to make matters worse, I suppose, old Byrne played altogether vilely ! He had scarce a phrase in tune. When the curtain fell he had to face a little tragic opera of his own—the tragedy of old age and failing powers. He took it all without a word. " The breath of life is behind music," he whispered to me as he came from the interview ; then he bent down, carefully wrapped his fiddle in a piece of baize cloth, put it in his case and made off.

The final explosion came at the rehearsal next day. He and I were the first to arrive. The score of last night's opera, it was the "Marriage of Figaro," still lay on the conductor's stand. He turned the pages. They were pencilled all over with directions as to the tempos of the various movements. Along these pencillings old Byrne ran his finger. I could see he was having his revenge. I could see him lift his brows—just a little—as if he were amused, partly astonished. But no word escaped him. Soon the conductor came in and we began. We had not got far when we heard "Get out!" roared in a terrible voice, the voice of one who had not slept for several nights. The old man rose up, wrapped his baize cloth around his instrument, and moved between the chairs. As he went how still the house was, only a chair moving, and his own almost silent feet! And how we watched him! But when he got as far as the conductor's chair he paused, glanced once more at the open score, once again ran his finger along the pencillings, and laughed a tiny little laugh!

I felt his going more than I should care to tell. Will you believe me? I had told that old musician, that stranger, the whole story of the sorrows of my life. Yes, I told him things I had hardly ever made clear even to myself! And he replied: "Is it not behind music, the breath of life?" as if sorrow was there for the one purpose of being transmuted into sweet sound! I recalled his words as I went to my task that night.

And that night the extraordinary thing happened; our conductor failed to make an appearance: his rheumatism had conquered. There was then a call for our leader. He was found. Alas, he was not in a condition to conduct anything. He could scarcely stand. And he became quite cross about it; we had to leave him there in his corner, resining his bow like anything and scowling like mad. What between principals, chorus, and band, all thinking they stood a chance of losing a night's pay, and the manager flustering about like a whirlwind, our little den beneath the stage was deafening; I slipped quietly out into the house. There outside the rail was old Byrne! "What's the matter?" he whispered. As I told him, up came the manager.

"Mr. Melton," he said to me, "will you please take the baton to-night?"

A very flattering compliment, indeed, and I should have taken that baton if our band did not happen to be the scraggiest ever scraped together from the ends of the earth; our leader was in the condition I have mentioned. As we spoke I saw the players getting into their places, a tempting sight, yet still I hesitated, foreseeing collapse and ignominy.

"It is not possible," I began, but over the rail old Byrne was climbing like a boy. He had clutched the baton from the manager's hand. He had leaped into the conductor's chair. He gave but one glance to the right, to the left. "Now, boys," he said, and at the words we swam, sank, buried ourselves in the rich, broad, gentle strains of the overture to "Faust." Some wide gesture he had used, some thrill in his tone had bidden us to do so—to lose ourselves in the soul of the music. At the first chord we had got within the skin of it, as the saying is. And never was the mood broken; every progression told, and not a colour tone was faulty or blurred. That memorable waltz, which use has almost spoiled, he made a new thing of it—we were all spirits in thin air, so lightly it went. But our triumph was the tremendous trio at the close. The old man stood up to it, hiding the stage from a large sector of the house. What did he care! We felt his huge shabby figure above us as a darkness, a vastness of great potency. It commanded stage, orchestra, house, with a strong yet benign power. The voices, tenor, soprano, bass—all the instruments, strings, brass, wood, drums, the very shell of the old house itself, became as one instrument and sang the great strain with such strength and perfection that some of us trembled lest we should fall down with excitement and spoil everything.

"Oh!" we all sighed when it was over. For such moments does the artist live. I was so glad I had told him the story of my sorrows!

Now, sir, around Clonmoyle, as I have said, is a rampart of dark hills, bleak and rain-sodden, treeless and desolate. Why do I again mention them? "Wherever did you learn to conduct?" I asked him, as we made for our lodgings.

"There!" he answered, and his outstretched hand gestured around the deserted hills, "behind music we must get at the breath of life." Bare, wind-swept hills!—curious place to find out the secrets of life! Or what did he mean by "Life"? It cannot be that the breath of life that is behind all great music is the sigh of loneliness?

"And you took him with the company?"

"No, sir; an opera company, like any other company, must pay its way."

THE CHILD SAINT

DANIEL CORKEBY

THE people in the same lodging-house sometimes spoke of him as The Child: at other times they called him The Saint. One name was as apt as the other; in spite of the squalid environment in which he lived, he was a saint; in spite of his age, a child. His hair was scanty, wispy, tow-like, and the scalp, not too clean, showed through it. His knees were bent. He walked with his back almost parallel with the ground, his spine long since having suffered injury. From that awkward posture his eyes stared up at you, full of light, smiling, brave with innocence. In spite of his hand's heavy clutch on its knob his stick was always trembling; the fact reminded you of his age when his brave eyes would have deceived you.

His room was filled with objects of devotion; of other furniture there was little or none. He had several pictures of the Blessed Virgin, a few of the Holy Family, many of the better-known saints—St. Patrick, St. Joseph, St. Anthony. He had several statues, besides a bottle of Lourdes water, and of Holy Water he kept a small supply in a little chinaware font which a chinaware angel, kneeling, upheld. Among these, his treasures, he lived alone in quiet ecstasy, speaking much to himself—perhaps to them, too, on occasions.

He knew that the Phelan family, they lived on a lower landing, were in trouble. His hand catching his door, he listened to the rent-collector's voice growing louder, angrier; then he heard him begin to pound his stick on the stairs; so sure as he did that a notice-to-quit would follow. The Child began to scramble down the stairs to the rescue. "My," "My," "My," he repeated as he made from step to step.

"Give her till to-morrow, give her till to-morrow," he cried; when he had come into view of the little group; and as he flopped down he continued to call out, "Give her till to-morrow."

"'Tis too long I'm after giving her, I'm pestered with her."

"Give her wan last chance, 'twill be paid to-morrow."

"At this time to-morrow?"

" Yes, at this time to-morrow ; or say in the evening, at seven ; give us the whole day ? "

The agent put his book in his breast-pocket, stooped his head, and piloted himself down the crazy, box-like stairs. He trusted The Child to come at the rent for Mrs. Phelan, it didn't matter to him how, so long as he got it.

Meanwhile The Child refused to tell Mrs. Phelan how he meant to relieve her ; no, he wouldn't tell her, but she need have no fear, he'd be there to-morrow to meet the Man, as they called the rent-collector. With this she had to be satisfied. She tightened her shawl about the white-faced babe on her arm, and was soon in the midst of the traffic spiritlessly singing, " The Rocks of Bawn." A hardened beggar-woman, who would believe her story of the notice-to-quit ? She didn't bother telling it.

When she had started on her rounds, The Child took up his china-ware angel, and having emptied the Holy Water into a bottle, dusted the figure and put it into his beggarman's bag ; the shining head of golden curls looked out over the edge. Then he mounted up on his rickety bed and took down one of his loveliest pictures. In it the Blessed Virgin was seated on a Renaissance throne, behind her an Italian-blue sky and hosts of golden stars. He cleaned off the dust and laid the picture flat on the bed. Into the great tail-pocket of his coat he put a small painted plaster statue of St. Anthony. Then he came back to his picture on the bed, looked at it, gave it a last rub, caught it up, and with great difficulty made down the narrow stairs. His beggar's bag he had also with him, the shining angel peeping from it.

Earnestly he shuffled his way to where Mrs. McCarthy was selling bedsteads, stools, and " altars " on the Coal Quay—the open-air market-place in that city. She undertook to sell his wares, he sitting by on one of her stools, his two hands on the knob of his stick. He knew she would make more on them than he would get in any pawn-office.

The chinaware angel was the first to go. In the bartering the old man took no part, but just as the purchaser—a hale, soft-featured woman—was moving off, he said :

" Pardon me for making so bold, ma'am ; but might you be living in Blarney Lane ? "

He thought she looked like a woman from Blarney Lane.

"No, then," she answered, "I'm from the South Side."

"Ah," he murmured, "Evergreen, maybe?"

"No, Gunpowder Lane, if you know where that is?"

"I do then—Gunpowder Lane—well, well."

The purchaser went off, her bargain under her shawl. The picture being large, and judging by its look, expensive, took a lot of selling. A half-crown is big money on the Coal Quay, yet this Mrs. McCarthy fixed as the price. Several people examined it, and at each chance Mrs. McCarthy would take it up on her lap, stand it on an angle, wipe it with her apron, and call it a handsome piece. She succeeded in selling it to a young mother.

"I can't afford it," she said, "and I can't leave it after me—that's how it is."

"'Tis a blessing you're taking into your house," said Mrs. McCarthy. Then the old man raised his eyes:

"If I'm not making too bold, are you the young woman that keeps the shop in Windmill Road?"

"I never had a shop, sir," she answered.

"Do you live in Windmill Road?"

"No."

"Nor in Gunpowder Lane?"

"No." She was looking at him with large, shining eyes.

"Do you live in the South Side at all?"

"No—'tis on the Rock Steps I live."

"The Rock Steps—well, well—that's not too far—well, well, look at that, and I thinking you were from the South Side."

Going from them she looked questioningly at Mrs. McCarthy; perhaps she had doubts of the old man's sanity.

It was just six o'clock when a very old woman bought the St. Anthony. As she was bargaining for it, the Angelus rang, and this, perhaps, made her give the full penny asked. She lived in Pouladuff.

"My, my," said The Child, "what a long way off, what a long way off."

He rose from his stool.

"What do you want to know where the people live for?" Mrs. McCarthy questioned him.

"Wouldn't I like to be thinking of where they are? Hadn't I that picture before my eyes for the last forty years? Will it be easy for me to live without thinking of it?"

Hobbling homewards, he repeated his lesson over and over again : The Angel in Gunpowder Lane, Holy Mother in a house on the Rock Steps, St. Anthony in Pouladuff.

The next day, he paid the rent for Mrs. Phelan. Straightway then he began to save up his odd pence and halfpence to buy back his treasures. There was a vacant space on his mantelpiece, another on his window-sill (how lovely the painted statue used to look there among the green-leaved geraniums when the sun shone in !) ; the worst gap of all, however, was the huge space of clean wall-paper where the picture had hung. Because of these blank spaces, the room looked upset, unfurnished. But he was a saint as well as a child ; somehow his savings, pinch as he would, refused to mount up. The fact is, money would burn a hole in his pocket. How could he keep a grip on it if he saw a blind man's hand stretched out to the callous passers-by, or a hungry-looking boy staring in at a shop window ?

Again and again he had to begin anew. One night in bed he reckoned up with some excitement that twelve months would soon have gone by. And, as luck had it, a few days afterwards he chanced to hear a powerful sermon on the precious ointment that Magdalen had poured upon our Lord's feet, "wasting money that might be devoted to charity," as the preacher said, throwing great scorn on the wisdom of the world into his enunciation of these words. Yes, the old man felt all that sermon come home to him, every phrase. Cost what it would, the end of the twelve months would see him with all his treasures gathered and housed once more within his attic under the slates.

On the anniversary of the sale he rose quite early, heard Mass, and set off in much uncertainty to gather his treasures. He almost fell down when it suddenly struck him that they might have frequently changed owners since his parting with them, and that he might after all never gather them together again.

He came in and went up the stairs at one o'clock in the day.

"Mrs. Mehigan ! " he called, as he passed her door (she was an old bed-ridden woman).

"Yes, what is it ? "

"I have wan of them—the angel."

At five o'clock he passed up again.

"Mrs. Mehigan ! Mrs. Mehigan ! "

"Yes."

"I've another—St. Anthony."

He passed up a third time ; it was now about eight o'clock. He didn't speak. Mrs. Mehigan listened to his steps, how tired he seemed, going up to his room ! She called out :

"Have you the last wan ?"

"No." She thought 'twas a gasp ; by way of sympathy she said :
"Oh, dear."

"But I'm on the track of it," he answered quite brightly. He went out again.

The whole house was dark, its many inhabitants snoring when he was heard struggling up the stairs once more, almost as a drunken man would, falling from side to side, and missing his steps, it seemed.

The next morning Mrs. Phelan came into Mrs. Mehigan's room. She believed, she said, the Saint hadn't got the last one after all. Mrs. Mehigan answered that God was good. "Go up and see," she said. Mrs. Phelan went up, knocked, and got no reply. She came back to Mrs. Mehigan.

"He's fast asleep ; I didn't knock very loud, I only tapped at the door ; 'tis how he's exhausted entirely."

"I'm sure he had something in his arms, he nearly fell against that door as he went up."

After some time Mrs. Phelan was sent up again. Mrs. Mehigan heard her knocking once, twice, thrice. Then she came down, as white as a sheet.

"Go out for Father Maher, child," said Mrs. Mehigan.

They found the Saint sitting on the floor, an unfinished bowl of bread and milk between his legs ; opposite his now-cold eyes was his Renaissance Madonna, it stood propped against the edge of the bed ; guarding it on the right was St. Anthony, on the left the chinaware angel, its font full of holy water. The candle that had lighted his treasures for him had burnt out. Mrs. Phelan says when first she entered the room there was the smell of lovely flowers. Mrs. Mehigan says she heard far-away singing in the dead of night. In any case it is pleasant to think how sweet the old man's thoughts must have been as his eyes began to close for ever. Not far-away music nor newly-gathered flowers would be so sweet.

LORD DUNSANY

B. 1878

THE CITY ON MALLINGTON MOOR

BESIDES the old shepherd at Langside, whose habits render him unreliable, I am probably the only person that has ever seen the city on Mallington Moor.

I had decided one year to do no London season, partly because of the ugliness of the things in the shops, partly because of the unresisted invasion of German bands, partly perhaps because some pet parrots in the oblong where I lived had learned to imitate cab-whistles, but chiefly because of late there had seized me in London a quite unreasonable longing for large woods and waste spaces, while the very thought of little valleys underneath copses full of bracken and fox-gloves was a torment to me, and every summer in London the longing grew worse till the thing was becoming intolerable. So I took a stick and a knapsack and began walking northwards, starting at Tetherington and sleeping at inns, where one could get real salt and the waiter spoke English, and where one had a name instead of a number ; and though the tablecloth might be dirty, the windows opened so that the air was clean ; where one had the excellent company of farmers and men of the wold, who could not be thoroughly vulgar because they had not the money to be so even if they had wished it. At first the novelty was delightful, and then one day in a queer old inn up Uthering way beyond Langside I heard for the first time the rumour of the city said to be on Mallington Moor. They spoke of it quite casually over their glasses of beer, two farmers at the inn. " They say the queer folk be at Mallington with their city," one farmer said. " Travelling they seem to be," said the other. And more came in then and the rumour spread. And then, such are the contradictions of our little likes and dislikes and all the whims that drive us, that I who had come so far to avoid cities had a great longing all of a sudden for throngs again and the great hives of Man, and then and there determined on that bright Sunday morning to come to Mallington and there search for the city that rumour spoke of so strangely.

Mallington Moor from all that they said of it was hardly a likely place to find a thing by searching. It was a huge high moor, very bleak and desolate, and altogether trackless. It seemed a lonely place from what they said. The Normans when they came had called it Mal Lieu, and afterwards Mallieutown, and so it changed to Mallington. Though what a town can ever have had to do with a place so utterly desolate I do not know. And before that some say that the Saxons called it Baplas, which I believe to be a corruption of Bad Place.

And beyond the mere rumour of a beautiful city all of white marble and with a foreign look up on Mallington Moor, beyond this I could not get. None of them had seen it themselves, "only heard of it like," and my questions, rather than stimulating conversation, would always stop it abruptly. I was no more fortunate on the road to Mallington, until the Tuesday when I was quite near it; I had been walking two days from the inn where I had heard the rumour and could see the great hill, steep as a headland, on which Mallington lay, standing up on the skyline; the hill was covered with grass, where anything grew at all, but Mallington Moor is all heather; it is just marked Moor on the map; nobody goes there and they do not trouble to name it. It was there where the gaunt hill first came into sight, by the roadside as I inquired for the marble city of some labourers by the way, that I was directed, partly, I think, in derision, to the old shepherd of Langside. It appeared that he following sometimes sheep that had strayed, and wandering far from Langside, came sometimes up to the edge of Mallington Moor, and that he would come back from these excursions and shout through the villages, raving of a city of white marble and gold-tipped minarets. And hearing me asking questions of this city they had laughed and directed me to the shepherd of Langside. One well-meant warning they gave me as I went—the old man was not reliable.

And late that evening I saw the thatches of Langside sheltering under the edge of that huge hill that Atlas-like held up those miles of moor to the great winds and heaven.

They knew less of the city in Langside than elsewhere, but they knew the whereabouts of the man I wanted, though they seemed a little ashamed of him. There was an inn in Langside that gave me shelter, whence in the morning, equipped with purchases, I set out to find their shepherd. And there he was on the edge of Mallington Moor standing motionless, gazing stupidly at his sheep; his hands trembled continually and his eyes had a bleary look, but he was quite sober, wherein all Langside had wronged him.

And then and there I asked him of the city, and he said he had never heard tell of any such place. And I said, "Come, come, you must pull yourself together." And he looked angrily at me; but when he saw me draw from amongst my purchases a full bottle of whisky and a big glass he became more friendly. As I poured out the whisky I asked him again about the marble city on Mallington Moor, but he seemed quite honestly to know nothing about it. The amount of whisky he drank was quite incredible, but I seldom express surprise, and once more I asked him the way to the wonderful city. His hand was steadier now and his eyes more intelligent, and he said that he had heard something of some such city, but his memory was evidently blurred and he was still unable to give me useful directions. I consequently gave him another tumbler, which he drank off like the first without any water, and almost at once he was a different man. The trembling in his hands stopped altogether, his eye became as quick as a younger man's, he answered my questions readily and frankly, and, what was more important to me still, his old memory became alert and clear for even minutest details. His gratitude to myself I need not mention, for I make no pretence that I bought the bottle of whisky that the old shepherd enjoyed so much, without at least some thought of my own advantage. Yet it was pleasant to reflect that it was due to me that he pulled himself together and steadied his shaking hand and cleared his mind, recovered his memory and his self-respect. He spoke to me quite clearly, no longer slurring his words; he had seen the city first one moonlight night when he was lost in the mist on the big moor; he had wandered far in the mist, and when it lifted he saw the city by moonlight. He had no food, but luckily had his flask. There never was such a city, not even in books. Travellers talked sometimes of Venice seen from the sea; there might be such a place or there might not, but, whether or no, it was nothing to the city on Mallington Moor. Men who read books and talked to him in his time, hundreds of books, but they never could tell of any city like this. Why the place was all of marble, roads, walls, and palaces, all pure white marble, and the tops of the tall thin spires were entirely of gold. And they were queer folk in the city, even for foreigners. And there were camels—but I cut him short, for I thought I could judge for myself, if there was such a place, and, if not, I was wasting my time as well as a pint of good whisky. So I got him to speak of the way, and after more circumlocution than I needed and more talk of the city he pointed to a tiny track on the black earth just beside us, a little twisty way you could hardly see.

I said the moor was trackless ; untrodden of man or dog it certainly was and seemed to have less to do with the ways of man than any waste I have seen, but the track the old shepherd showed me, if track it was, was no more than the track of a hare—an elf-path the old man called it, Heaven knows what he meant.

And then before I left him he insisted on giving me his flask with the queer strong rum it contained. Whisky brings out in some men melancholy, in some rejoicing, with him it was clearly generosity, and he insisted until I took his rum though I did not mean to drink it. It was lonely up there, he said, and bitter cold, and the city hard to find, being set in a hollow, and I should need the rum, and he had never seen the marble city except on days when he had had his flask. He seemed to regard that rusted iron flask as a sort of mascot, and in the end I took it.

I followed that odd, faint track on the black earth under the heather till I came to the big grey stone beyond the horizon where the track divides into two, and I took the one to the left as the old man told me. I knew by another stone that I saw far off that I had not lost my way nor the old man lied.

And just as I hoped to see the city's ramparts before the gloaming fell on that desolate place I suddenly saw a long high wall of whiteness with pinnacles here and there thrown up above it, floating towards me silent and grim as a secret, and knew it for that evil thing the mist. The sun, though low, was shining on every sprig of heather, the green and scarlet mosses were shining with it too ; it seemed incredible that in three minutes' time all those colours would be gone and nothing left all round but a grey darkness. I gave up hope of finding the city that day, a broader path than mine could have been easily lost. I hastily chose for my bed a thick patch of heather, wrapped myself in a waterproof cloak, and lay down and made myself comfortable. And then the mist came. It came like the careful pulling of lace curtains, then like the drawing of grey blinds ; it shut out the horizon to the north, then to the east and west ; it turned the whole sky white and hid the moor ; it came down on it like a metropolis, only utterly silent, silent and white as tombstones.

And then I was glad of that strange strong rum, or whatever it was in the flask that the shepherd gave me : for I did not think that the mist would clear till night, and I feared the night would be cold. So I nearly emptied the flask ; and sooner than I expected I fell asleep, for the first night out as a rule one does not sleep at once but is kept awake some while by the little winds and the unfamiliar sound of the things that wander at night and that cry to one another far off with their queer faint voices ; one misses them afterwards when one gets to houses again. But I heard none of these sounds in the mist that evening.

And then I woke and found that the mist was gone and the sun was just disappearing under the moor, and I knew that I had not slept for as long as I thought. And I decided to go on while I could, for I thought that I was not very far from the city.

I went on and on along the twisty track, bits of the mist came down and filled the hollows but lifted again at once so that I saw my way. The twilight faded as I went, a star appeared, and I was able to see the track no longer. I could go no farther that night, yet before I lay down to sleep I decided to go and look over the edge of a wide depression in the moor that I saw a little way off. So I left the track and walked a few hundred yards, and when I got to the edge the hollow was full of mist all white underneath me. Another star appeared and a cold wind arose, and with the wind the mist flapped away like a curtain. And there was the city.

Nothing the shepherd had said was the least untrue or even exaggerated. The poor old man had told the simple truth, there is not a city like it in the world. What he had called thin spires were minarets, but the little domes on the top were clearly pure gold, as he said. There were the marble terraces he described, and the pure white palaces covered with carving, and hundreds of minarets. The city was obviously of the East, and yet where there should have been crescents on the domes of the minarets there were golden suns with rays, and wherever one looked one saw things that obscured its origin. I walked down to it and, passing through a wicket gate of gold in a low wall of white marble, I entered the city. The heather went right up to the city's edge and beat against the marble wall whenever the wind blew it. Lights began to twinkle from high windows of blue glass ; as I walked up the white street, beautiful copper lanterns were lit up and let down from balconies by silver chains ; from doors ajar came the sound of voices singing, and then I saw the men. Their faces were rather grey than black, and they wore beautiful robes of coloured silk with hems embroidered with gold and some with copper. And sometimes pacing down the marble ways with golden baskets hung on each side of them I saw the camels of which the old shepherd spoke.

The people had kindly faces, but though they were evidently friendly to strangers I could not speak with them, being ignorant of their language, nor were the sounds of the syllables they used like any language I had ever heard, they sounded more like grouse.

When I tried to ask them by signs whence they had come with their city they would only point to the moon, which was bright and full and was shining fiercely on those marble ways till the city danced in light. And now there began appearing one by one, stepping softly out through the windows, men with stringed instruments in the balconies. They were strange instruments with huge bulbs of wood and they played softly on them and very beautifully, and their queer voices softly sang to the music weird dirges of the griefs of their native land wherever that may be. And far off in the heart of the city others were singing too ; the sound of it came to me wherever I roamed, not loud enough to disturb my thoughts, but gently turning the mind to pleasant things. Slender carved arches of marble as delicate almost as lace crossed and re-crossed the ways wherever I went. There was none of that hurry of which foolish cities boast, nothing ugly or sordid so far as I could see. I saw that it was a city of beauty and song. I wondered how they had travelled with all that marble, how they had laid it down on Mallington Moor, whence they had come and what their resources were, and determined to investigate closely next morning, for the old shepherd had not troubled his head to think how the city came, he had only noted that the city was there (and of course no one believed him, though that is partly his fault for his dissolute ways). But at night one can see little and I had walked all day, so I determined to find a place to rest in. And just as I was wondering whether to ask for shelter of those silk-robed men by signs, or whether to sleep outside the walls and enter again in the morning, I came to a great archway in one of the marble houses with two black curtains, embroidered below with gold, hanging across it. Over the archway were carved apparently in many tongues the words : " Here strangers rest." In Greek, Latin, and Spanish the sentence was repeated, and there was writing also in the language that you see on the walls of the great temples of Egypt, and Arabic, and what I took to be early Assyrian, and one or two languages I had never seen. I entered through the curtains, and found a tessellated marble court with golden braziers burning sleepy incense swinging by chains from the roof ; all round the walls were comfortable mattresses lying upon the floor, covered with cloths and silks. It must have been ten o'clock and I was tired. Outside the music still softly filled the streets, a man had set a lantern down on the marble way, five or six sat down round him and he was sonorously telling them a story. Inside there were some already asleep on the beds ; in the middle of the wide court under the braziers a woman dressed in blue was singing very gently ; she did not move, but sung on and on, I never heard a song that was so soothing. I lay down on one of the mattresses by the wall, which was all inlaid with mosaics, and pulled over me some of the clothes with their beautiful alien work, and almost immediately my thoughts seemed part of the song that the woman was singing in the midst of the court under the golden braziers that hung from the high roof, and the song turned them to dreams and so I fell asleep.

A small wind having arisen I was awakened by a sprig of heather that beat continually against my face. It was morning on Mallington Moor and the city was quite gone.

CORONATION OF MR. THOMAS SHAP

LORD DUNSANY

IT was the occupation of Mr. Thomas Shap to persuade customers that the goods were genuine and of an excellent quality, and that as regards the price their unspoken will was consulted. And in order to carry on this occupation he went by train very early every morning to the city from the suburb in which he slept. This was the use to which he put his life.

From the moment when he first perceived (not as one reads a thing in a book, but as truths are revealed to one's instinct) the very beastliness of his occupation, and of the house that he slept in, its shape, make and pretensions, and of even the clothes that he wore; from that moment he withdrew his dreams from it, his fancies, his ambitions, everything in fact except that ponderable Mr. Shap that dressed in a frock-coat, bought tickets and handled money and could in turn be handled by the statistician. The priest's share in Mr. Shap, the share of the poet, never caught the early train to the city at all.

He used to take little flights with his fancy at first, dwelt all day in his dreamy way on fields and rivers lying in the sunlight where it strikes the world more brilliantly farther south. And then he began to imagine butterflies there; after that, silken people and the temples they built to their gods.

They noticed that he was silent, and even absent at times, but they found no fault with his behaviour with customers, to whom he remained as plausible as of old. So he dreamed for a year, and his fancy gained strength as he dreamed.

He still read halfpenny papers, in the train, still discussed the passing day's ephemeral topic, still voted at elections, though he no longer did these things with the whole Shap—his soul was no longer in them.

He had had a pleasant year; his imagination was all new to him still, and it had often discovered beautiful things away where it went, south-east at the edge of the twilight. And he had a matter-of-fact and logical mind, so that he often said, "Why should I pay my two-pence at the electric theatre when I can see all sorts of things quite easily without ? ” Whatever he did was logical before anything else, and those that knew him always spoke of Shap as “ a sound, sane, level-headed man.”

On far the most important day of his life he went as usual to town by the early train to sell plausible articles to customers, while the spiritual Shap roamed off to fanciful lands. As he walked from the station, dreamy but wide awake, it suddenly struck him that the real Shap was not the one walking to Business in black and ugly clothes, but he who roamed along a jungle’s edge near the ramparts of an old and Eastern city that rose up sheer from the sand, and against which the desert lapped with one eternal wave. He used to fancy the name of that city was Larkar.

“ After all, the fancy is as real as the body,” he said, with perfect logic. It was a dangerous theory.

For that other life that he led he realised, as in Business, the importance and value of method. He did not let his fancy roam too far, until it perfectly knew its first surroundings. Particularly he avoided the jungle—he was not afraid to meet a tiger there (after all it was not real), but stranger things might crouch there.

Slowly he built up Larkar : rampart by rampart, towers for archers, gateway of brass, and all. And then one day he argued, and quite rightly, that all the silk-clad people in its streets, their camels, their wares that came from Inkustahn, the city itself, were all the things of his will—and then he made himself King.

He smiled after that when people did not raise their hats to him in the street, as he walked from the station to Business ; but he was sufficiently practical to recognise that it was better not to talk of this to those that only knew him as Mr. Shap.

Now that he was King in the city of Larkar and in all the desert that lay to the east and north, he sent his fancy to wander farther afield. He took the regiments of his camel-guard and went jingling out of Larkar, with little silver bells under the camels’ chins, and came to other cities far-off on the yellow sand, with clear white walls and towers, uplifting themselves in the sun. Through their gates he passed with his three silken regiments, the light-blue regiment of the camel-guard being upon his right and the green regiment riding at his left, the lilac regiment going on before. When he had gone through the streets of any city and observed the ways of its people, and had seen the way that the sunlight struck its towers, he would proclaim himself

King there, and then ride on in fancy. So he passed from city to city and from land to land.

Clear-sighted though Mr. Shap was, I think he overlooked the lust of aggrandisement to which kings have so often been victims : and so it was that when the first few cities had opened their gleaming gates and he saw peoples prostrate before his camel, and spearmen cheering along countless balconies, and priests come out to do him reverence, he that had never had even the lowliest authority in the familiar world became unwisely insatiate. He let his fancy ride at inordinate speed ; he forsook method ; scarce was he king of a land but he yearned to extend his borders ; so he journeyed deeper and deeper into the wholly unknown.

The concentration that he gave to this inordinate progress through countries of which history is ignorant and cities so fantastic in their bulwarks that, though their inhabitants were human, yet the foe that they feared seemed something less or more ; the amazement with which he beheld gates and towers unknown even to art, and furtive people thronging intricate ways to acclaim him as their sovereign : all these things began to affect his capacity for Business. He knew as well as any that his fancy could not rule these beautiful lands unless that other Shap, however unimportant, were sheltered and fed : and shelter and food meant money, and money, Business. His was more like the mistake of some gambler with cunning schemes who overlooks human greed.

One day his fancy, riding in the morning, came to a city gorgeous as the sunrise, in whose opalescent wall were gates of gold, so huge that a river poured between the bars, floating in, when the gates were opened, large galleons under sail. Thence there came dancing out a company with instruments, and made a melody all round the wall ; that morning Mr. Shap, the bodily Shap in London, forgot the train to town. Until a year ago he had never imagined at all ; it is not to be wondered at that all these things now newly seen by his fancy should play tricks at first with the memory of even so sane a man. He gave up reading the papers altogether, he lost all interest in politics, he cared less and less for things that were going on around him.

This unfortunate missing of the morning train even occurred again, and the firm spoke to him severely about it. But he had his consolation. Were not Aráthrion and Argun Zeerith and all the level coasts of Oora his ? And even as the firm found fault with him, his fancy watched the yaks on weary journeys, slow specks against the snow-fields, bringing tribute ; and saw the green eyes of the mountain men who had looked at him strangely in the city of Nith when he had entered it by the desert door.

Yet his logic did not forsake him ; he knew well that his strange subjects did not exist, but he was prouder of having created them with his brain, than merely of ruling them only ; thus in his pride he felt himself something more great than a king, he did not dare to think what ! He went into the temple of the city of Zorra and stood some time there, alone : all the priests kneeled to him when he came away.

He cared less and less for the things we care about, for the affairs of Shap, a business-man in London. He began to despise the man with a royal contempt. One day when he sat in Sowla, the city of the Thuls, throned on one amethyst, he decided, and it was proclaimed on the moment by silver trumpets all along the land, that he would be crowned as king over all the lands of Wonder.

By that old temple where the Thuls were worshipped, year in, year out, for over a thousand years, they pitched pavilions in the open air. The trees that blew there threw out radiant scents unknown in any countries that know the map ; the stars blazed fiercely for that famous occasion. A fountain hurled up, clattering, ceaselessly into the air armfuls on armfuls of diamonds ; a deep hush waited for the golden trumpets ; the holy coronation night was come.

At the top of those old, worn steps, going down we know not whither, stood the king in the emerald-and-amethyst cloak, the ancient garb of the Thuls ; beside him lay that Sphinx that for the last few weeks had advised him in his affairs. Slowly, with music when the trumpets sounded, came up towards him from we know not where, one-hundred-and-twenty archbishops, twenty angels and two arch-angels, with that terrific crown, the diadem of the Thuls. They knew as they came up to him that promotion awaited them all because of this night's work. Silent, majestic, the king awaited them.

The doctors downstairs were sitting over their supper, the warders softly slipped from room to room, and when in that cosy dormitory of Hanwell they saw the king still standing erect and royal, his face resolute, they came up to him and addressed him : " Go to bed," they said—" pretty bed."

So he lay down and soon was fast asleep : the great day was over.

THE SWORD AND THE IDOL

LORD DUNSANY

IT was a cold winter's evening late in the Stone Age ; the sun had gone down blazing over the plains of Thold ; there were no clouds, only the chill blue sky and the imminence of stars ; and the surface of the sleeping Earth began to harden against the cold of the night. Presently from their lairs arose, and shook themselves and went stealthily forth, those of Earth's children to whom it is the law to prowl abroad as soon as the dusk has fallen. And they went pattering softly over the plain, and their eyes shone in the dark, and crossed and re-crossed one another on their courses. Suddenly there became manifest in the midst of the plain that fearful portent of the presence of Man—a little flickering fire. And the children of Earth who prowl abroad by night looked sideways at it and snarled and edged away ; all but the wolves, who came a little nearer, for it was winter and the wolves were hungry, and they had come in thousands from the mountains, and they said in their hearts, " We are strong." Around the fire a little tribe was encamped. They, too, had come from the mountains, and from lands beyond them, but it was in the mountains that the wolves first winded them ; they picked up bones at first that the tribe had dropped, but they were closer now and on all sides. It was Loz who had lit the fire. He had killed a small furry beast, hurling his stone axe at it, and had gathered a quantity of reddish brown stones, and had laid them in a long row, and placed bits of the small beast all along it ; then he lit a fire on each side, and the stones heated, and the bits began to cook. It was at this time that the tribe noticed that the wolves who had followed them so far were no longer content with the scraps of deserted encampments. A line of yellow eyes surrounded them, and when it moved it was to come nearer. So the men of the tribe hastily tore up brushwood, and felled a small tree with their flint axes, and heaped it all over the fire that Loz had made, and for a while the great heap hid the flame, and the wolves came trotting in and sat down again on their haunches much closer than before ; and the fierce and valiant dogs that belonged to the tribe believed that their end was about to come while fighting, as they had long since prophesied it would. Then the flame caught the lofty stack of brushwood, and rushed out of it, and ran up the side of it, and stood up haughtily far over the top, and the wolves seeing this terrible ally of Man revelling there in his strength, and knowing nothing of his frequent treachery to his masters, went slowly away as though they had other purposes. And for the rest of that night the dogs of the encampment cried out to them and besought them to come back. But the tribe lay down all round the fire under thick furs and slept. And a great wind arose and blew into the roaring heart of the fire till it was red no longer, but all pallid with heat. With the dawn the tribe awoke.

Loz might have known that after such a mighty conflagration nothing could remain of his small furry beast, but there was hunger in him and little reason as he searched among the ashes. What he found there amazed him beyond measure ; there was no meat, there was not even his row of reddish brown stones, but something longer than a man's leg and narrower than his hand was lying there like a great flattened snake. When Loz looked at its thin edges and saw that it ran to a point, he picked up stones to chip it and make it sharp. It was the instinct of Loz to sharpen things. When he found that it could not be chipped his wonderment increased. It was many hours before he discovered that he could sharpen the edges by rubbing them with a stone ; but at last the point was sharp, and all one side of it except near the end, where Loz held it in his hand. And Loz lifted it and brandished it, and the Stone Age was over. That afternoon in the little encampment, just as the tribe moved on, the Stone Age passed away, which, for perhaps thirty or forty thousand years, had slowly lifted Man from among the beasts and left him with his supremacy beyond all hope of reconquest.

It was not for many days that any other man tried to make for himself an iron sword by cooking the same kind of small furry beast that Loz had tried to cook. It was not for many years that any thought to lay the meat along stones as Loz had done ; and when they did, being no longer on the plains of Thold, they used flints or chalk. It was not for many generations that another piece of iron ore was melted and the secret slowly guessed. Nevertheless one of Earth's many veils was torn aside by Loz to give us ultimately the steel sword and the plough, machinery and factories ; let us not blame Loz if we think that he did wrong, for he did all in ignorance. The tribe moved on until it came to water, and there it settled down under a hill, and they built their huts there. Very soon they had to fight with another tribe, a tribe that was stronger than them ; but the sword of Loz was terrible and his tribe slew their foes. You might make one blow at Loz, but then would come one thrust from that iron sword, and there was no way of surviving it. No one could fight with Loz. And he became the ruler of the tribe in the place of Iz, who hitherto had ruled it with his sharp axe, as his father had before him.

Now Loz begat Lo, and in his old age gave his sword to him, and Lo ruled the tribe with it. And Lo called the name of the sword Death, because it was so swift and terrible.

And Iz begat Ird, who was of no account. And Ird hated Lo because he was of no account by reason of the iron sword of Lo.

One night Ird stole down to the hut of Lo, carrying his sharp axe, and he went very softly, but Lo's dog, Warner, heard him coming, and he growled softly by his master's door. When Ird came to the hut he heard Lo talking gently to his sword. And Lo was saying, " Lie still, Death. Rest, rest, old sword," and then, " What, again, Death ? Be still. Be still."

And then again : " What, art thou hungry, Death ? Or thirsty, poor old sword ? Soon, Death, soon. Be still only a little."

But Ird fled, for he did not like the gentle tone of Lo as he spoke to his sword.

And Lo begat Lod. And when Lo died, Lod took the iron sword and ruled the tribe.

And Ird begat Ith, who was of no account, like his father.

Now when Lod had smitten a man or killed a terrible beast, Ith would go away for a while into the forest rather than hear the praises that would be given to Lod.

And once, as Ith sat in the forest waiting for the day to pass, he suddenly thought he saw a tree trunk looking at him as with a face. And Ith was afraid, for trees should not look at men. But soon Ith saw that it was only a tree and not a man, though it was like a man. Ith used to speak to this tree, and tell it about Lod, for he dared not speak to any one else about him. And Ith found comfort in talking about Lod.

One day Ith went with his stone axe into the forest, and stayed there many days.

He came back by night, and the next morning when the tribe awoke they saw something that was like a man and yet was not a man. And it sat on the hill with its elbows pointing outwards and was quite still. And Ith was crouching before it, and hurriedly placing before it fruits and flesh, and then leaping away from it and looking frightened. Presently all the tribe came out to see, but dared not come quite close because of the fear that they saw on the face of Ith. And Ith went to his hut, and came back again with a hunting spear-head and valuable small stone knives, and reached out and laid them before the thing that was like a man, and then sprang away from it.

And some of the tribe questioned Ith about the still thing that was like a man, and Ith said, "This is Ged." Then they asked, "Who is Ged?" and Ith said, "Ged sends the crops and the rain; and the sun and the moon are Ged's."

Then the tribe went back to their huts, but later in the day some came again, and they said to Ith, "Ged is only as we are, having hands and feet." And Ith pointed to the right hand of Ged, which was not as his left, but was shaped like the paw of a beast, and Ith said, "By this ye may know that he is not as any man."

Then they said, "He is indeed Ged." But Lod said, "He speaketh not, nor doth he eat," and Ith answered, "The thunder is his voice and the famine is his eating."

After this the tribe copied Ith, and brought little gifts of meat to Ged; and Ith cooked them before him that Ged might smell the cooking.

One day a great thunderstorm came trampling up from the distance and raged among the hills, and the tribe all hid away from it in their huts. And Ith appeared among the huts looking unafraid. And Ith said little, but the tribe thought that he had expected the terrible storm because the meat that they had laid before Ged had been tough meat, and not the best parts of the beasts they slew.

And Ged grew to have more honour among the tribe than Lod. And Lod was vexed.

One night Lod arose when all were asleep, and quieted his dog, and took his iron sword and went away to the hill. And he came on Ged in the starlight, sitting still, with his elbows pointing outwards, and his beast's paw, and the mark of the fire on the ground where his food had been cooked.

And Lod stood there for a while in great fear, trying to keep to his purpose. Suddenly he stepped up close to Ged and lifted his iron sword, and Ged neither hit nor shrank. Then the thought came into Lod's mind, "Ged does not hit. What will Ged do instead?"

And Lod lowered his sword and struck not, and his imagination began to work on that, "What will Ged do instead?"

And the more Lod thought, the worse was his fear of Ged.

And Lod ran away and left him.

Lod still ruled the tribe in battle or in the hunt, but the chiefest spoils of battle were given to Ged, and the beasts that they slew were Ged's; and all questions that concerned war or peace, and questions of law and disputes, were always brought to him, and Ith gave the answers after speaking to Ged by night.

At last Ith said, the day after an eclipse, that the gifts which they brought to Ged were not enough, that some far greater sacrifice was needed, that Ged was very angry even now, and not to be appeased by any ordinary sacrifice.

And Ith said that to save the tribe from the anger of Ged he would speak to Ged that night, and ask him what new sacrifice he needed.

Deep in his heart Lod shuddered, for his instinct told him that Ged wanted Lod's only son, who should hold the iron sword when Lod was gone.

No one would dare touch Lod because of the iron sword, but his instinct said in his slow mind again and again, "Ged loves Ith. Ith has said so. Ith hates the sword-holders."

"Ith hates the sword-holders. Ged loves Ith."

Evening fell and the night came when Ith should speak with Ged, and Lod became ever surer of the doom of his race.

He lay down but could not sleep.

Midnight had barely come when Lod arose and went with his iron sword again to the hill.

And there sat Ged. Had Ith been to him yet? Ith whom Ged loved, who hated the sword-holders.

And Lod looked long at the old sword of iron that had come to his grandfather on the plains of Thold.

Good-bye, old sword! And Lod laid it on the knees of Ged, then went away.

And when Ith came, a little before dawn, the sacrifice was found acceptable unto Ged.

THE HEN

LORD DUNSANY

ALL along the farmyard gables the swallows sat a-row, twittering uneasily to one another, telling of many things, but thinking only of Summer and the South, for Autumn was afoot and the North wind waiting.

And suddenly one day they were all quite gone. And every one spoke of the swallows and the South.

"I think I shall go South myself next year," said a hen.

And the year wore on and the swallows came again, and the year wore on and they sat again in the gables, and all the poultry discussed the departure of the hen.

And very early one morning, the wind being from the North, the swallows all soared suddenly and felt the wind on their wings ; and a strength came upon them and a strange old knowledge and a more than human faith, and flying high they left the smoke of our cities and small remembered eaves, and saw at last the huge and homeless sea, and steering by grey sea-currents went southward with the wind. And going South they went by glittering fog-banks and saw old islands lifting their heads above them ; they saw the slow quests of the wandering ships, and divers seeking pearls, and lands at war, till there came in view the mountains that they sought and the sight of the peaks they knew ; and they descended into an austral valley, and saw Summer sometimes sleeping and sometimes singing song.

"I think the wind is about right," said the hen ; and she spread her wings and ran out of the poultry-yard. And she ran fluttering out on to the road and some way down it until she came to a garden.

At evening she came back panting.

And in the poultry-yard she told the poultry how she had gone South as far as the high road, and saw the great world's traffic going by, and came to lands where the potato grew, and saw the stubble upon which men live, and at the end of the road had found a garden, and there were roses in it—beautiful roses !—and the gardener himself was there with his braces on.

"How extremely interesting," the poultry said, "and what a really beautiful description!"

And the Winter wore away, and the bitter months went by, and the Spring of the year appeared, and the swallows came again.

"We have been to the South," they said, "and the valleys beyond the sea."

But the poultry would not agree that there was a sea in the South :
"You should hear our hen," they said.

THE ASSIGNATION

LORD DUNSANY

FAME singing in the highways, and trifling as she sang, with sordid adventurers, passed the poet by.

And still the poet made for her little chaplets of song to deck her forehead in the courts of Time ; and still she wore instead the worthless garlands, that boisterous citizens flung to her in the ways, made out of perishable things.

And after a while whenever these garlands died the poet came to her with his chaplets of song ; and still she laughed at him and wore the worthless wreaths, though they always died at evening.

And one day in his bitterness the poet rebuked her, and said to her : "Lovely Fame, even in the highways and the byways you have not forborne to laugh and shout and jest with worthless men, and I have toiled for you and dreamed of you and you mock me and pass me by."

And Fame turned her back on him and walked away, but in departing she looked over her shoulder and smiled at him as she had not smiled before, and, almost speaking in a whisper, said :

"I will meet you in the graveyard at the back of the Workhouse in a hundred years."

Story-Tellers of the Overseas

Canada—South Africa—Australia

IN these stories by Britons of the overseas the humour of the earlier writers, with its own simplicity and directness, makes less appeal in our day than the finer note struck by the later. Courageous daring, tender pity, the tragedy and pathos in the high romance of human life are conspicuous to the observer in the far-off places of the earth and so figure largely in his stories. Judge Haliburton, Nova Scotian lawyer (and in after years an English M.P.), with a fund of rollicking good spirits and shrewd common-sense, was endeared to a past generation as "Sam Slick." Little more than a practical joke is the point of "Sister Sall's Courtship," yet it is thoroughly characteristic of the author's style and humour.

Australia of the bushranging period is the scene of William S. Walker's "Midnight," and the element of comedy plays round the yarn of the police-inspector until the crack of pistol brings death to end the tale. With "Rodman the Boatsteerer" we have the best of all the short stories of the southern seas, written by Louis Becke, the Australian. The motive is fraternal love, and though for Rodman no happiness is born of the care lavished on the younger brother and sister, strength and steadiness remain, and sympathy and understanding. Clara Morris, the Canadian, once a famous actress in America, has a very different tale to tell. "The Wild Horse of Tartary" is just a reminiscence of circus life set down in admirable form. The fun of the amiable old horse turned on at a moment's notice to play the fiery untamed steed is irresistible, and the quick change from grave to gay makes the mirth more brilliant. "George Egerton," Australian born, widely travelled and an artist, belongs rather to England and the London of the 'nineties, when the vogue was to end an episode on a note of interrogation. So does "A Little Grey Glove" end. The delicate touch, the atmosphere of doubt and uncertainty, the mingling of hope and sorrow, the introspection revealing the heart of youth, all these are characteristic of their time. The treatment rather than the subject treated is the thing to be noted in the work of "George Egerton." C. G. D. Roberts, the New Brunswick professor, is more than a writer of novels. He is a poet and a naturalist. And both the poet and naturalist are manifest in the story of "The Freedom of the Black-Faced Ram." It is a finely-wrought study in animal life, it is a poem, and it is in its way a parable. Withal there is a story in it, a story that the reader must needs follow in expectation of the end. Ralph Connor is well known for his tales of the vast wild regions of the north-west of Canada, and his "Pilot at Swan Creek" displays completely in a small compass those redeeming qualities of pity and courage that turn a preacher into a saint. Sir Gilbert Parker, one of the foremost of British novelists, is Canadian by origin, hence his appearance in this group with three brilliant illustrations of his art. "The Crimson Flag" is a masterpiece of passionate tragedy, showing the doom that comes swiftly and unexpectedly when life is mishandled. "The Absurd Romance of P'tite Louison" contains no absurdity, but its pathos has a singular charm. Pathos is the note, too, of "The Singing of the Bees"—a fragment of life beautiful in its simplicity. Olive Schreiner on the South African veld set down her dreams. But her allegories, product of high imaginative powers, are not directly concerned with South Africa, and these two short studies, allegories both, "In a Far-Off World" and "The Artist's Secret," belong to the universal order, and tell faithfully of the meaning of certain human experiences.

Louis
Becke

Charles
G. D.
Roberts

Gilbert
Parker

It is long since Marriott Watson left the Australia of his birth and the New Zealand of his boyhood and settled in England. His work is not coloured by the atmosphere of new conditions and civilization in the making. Yet a man must have travelled far overseas for the perfect tone of "Quarantine."

H. B.
Marriott
Watson

It is a great story, a model of the short story, related with no waste of words and without a word misplaced. Admirable in its characterization it presents a problem of conduct and leaves the answer to the reader. Henry Lawson is the real Australian. "When the Sun Went Down" and "That There Dog o' Mine" are incidents described with a simple directness that makes them vital. Their sentiment touches the heroic and demands our sympathy—the miner dying for his brother at the pit, and the disreputable old shearer who won't be operated on at the hospital unless his dog is tended as well.

Mary Gaunt is also from Australia, but she has explored the remoteness of West Africa, and the mysteries of the unknown, and has lived long in London. "The Doctor's Drive" is not a story of man's dealing with man, but of man threatened by nature and well-nigh overcome. Yet by sheer force of will in man and beast nature is beaten, for "the mails have got to go through," and the doctor on duty was no less bound to get through: a fine finish to these tales of the overseas where man is up against pitiless nature all the time and must prevail or perish.

J. C.

THOMAS CHANDLER HALIBURTON

1796-1865

SISTER SALL'S COURTSHIP

"THERE goes one of them everlastin rottin poles in that bridge; they are no better than a trap for a critter's legs," said the Clockmaker. "They remind me of a trap Jim Munroe put his foot in one night, that near about made one leg half a yard longer than t'other. I believe I told you of him, what a desperate idle feller he was—he came from Onion County in Connecticut. Well, he was courtin Sister Sall—she was a rael handsum-looking gall; you scarce ever seed a more out and out complete critter than she was—a fine figur-head, and a beautiful model of a craft as any in the state; a real clipper, and as full of fun and frolic as a kitten. Well, he fairly turned Sall's head; the more we wanted her to give him up, the more she wouldn't, and we got plaguy oneasy about it, for his character was none of the best. He was a universal favourite with the galls, and tho' he didn't behave very pretty neither, forgetting to marry where he promised, and where he hadn't ought to have forgot too; yet so it was, he had such an uncommon winnin way with him, he could talk them over in no time—Sall was fairly bewitched.

"At last, father said to him one evenin when he came a courtin, 'Jim,' says he, 'you'll never come to no good, if you act like old Scratch as you do; you aint fit to come into no decent man's house, at all, and your absence would be ten times more agreeable than your company, I tell you. I won't consent to Sall's goin to them are huskin parties and quiltin frolics along with you no more, on no account, for you know how Polly Brown and Nancy White——'

"'Now don't,' says he, 'now don't, Uncle Sam; say no more about that; if you know'd all, you wouldn't say it was my fault; and, besides, I have turned right about, I am on t'other tack now, and the long leg, too; I am as steady as a pump bolt, now. I intend to settle myself and take a farm.'

"'Yes, yes, and you could stock it too by all accounts, pretty well, unless you are much misreported,' says father, 'but it won't do. I knowd your father, he was our sargeant, a proper clever and brave man he was, too ; he was one of the heroes of our glorious revolution. I had a great respect for him, and I am sorry, for his sake, you will act as you do ; but I tell you once for all, you must give up all thoughts of Sall, now and for everlastin.'

" When Sall heerd this, she began to nit away like mad in a desperate hurry—she looked foolish enough, that's a fact. First she tried to bite in her breath, and look if there was nothin partikilar in the wind, then she blushed all over like scarlet fever, but she recovered that pretty soon, and then her colour went and came, and came and went, till at last she grew as white as chalk, and down she fell slap off her seat on the floor, in a faintin fit.

" ' I see,' says father, ' I see it now, you eternal villain,' and he made a pull at the old-fashioned sword, that always hung over the fireplace (we used to call it old Bunker, for his stories always begun, ' When I was at Bunker's Hill,') and drawin it out he made a clip at him as wicked as if he was stabbin a rat with a hay-fork ; but, Jim, he outs of the door like a shot, and draws it to arter him, and father sends old Bunker right through the panel.

" ' I'll chop you up as fine as mince-meat, you villain,' said he, ' if ever I catch you inside my door again ; mind what I tell you, you'll swing for it yet.'

" Well, he made himself considerable scarce arter that, he never sot foot inside the door agin, and I thought he had ginn up all hopes of Sall, and she of him ; when one night, a most particular uncommon dark night, as I was a comin home from neighbour Dearborne's, I heerd some one a talkin under Sall's window. Well, I stops and listens, and who should be near the ash saplin, but Jim Munroe, a tryin to persuade Sall to run off with him to Rhode Island to be married. It was all settled, he should come with a horse and shay to the gate, and then help her out of the window, jist at nine o'clock, about the time she commonly went to bed. Then he axes her to reach down her hand for him to kiss (for he was proper clever at soft sawder), and she stretches it down and he kisses it ; and says he, ' I believe I must have the whole of you arter all,' and gives her a firk that kinder startled her ; it came so sudden like, it made her scream ; so off he sot hot-foot, and over the gate in no time.

" Well, I cyphered over this all night, a calculatin how I should reciprocate that trick with him, and at last I hit on a scheme. I recollected father's words at partin, 'mind what I tell you, you'll swing for it yet,' and thinks I, Friend Jim, I'll make the prophecy come true yet, I guess. So the next night, jist at dark, I gives January Snow, the old nigger, a nidge woth my elbow, and as soon as he looks up, I winks and walks out and he arter me—says I, 'January, can you keep your tongue within your teeth, you old nigger you?'

" 'Why, massa, why you ax that are question? my Gor Ormity, you tink old Snow he don't know that are yet; my tongue he got plenty room now, debil a tooth left, he can stretch out ever so far, like a little leg in a big bed, he lay quiet enough, massa, neber fear.'

" 'Well, then,' says I, 'bend down that are ash saplin softly, you old Snowball, and make no noise.'

"The saplin was no sooner bent than secured to the ground by a notched peg and a noose, and a slip knot was suspended from the tree, jist over the track that led from the pathway to the house.

" 'Why, my Gor, massa, that's a——'

" 'Hold your mug, you old nigger,' says I, 'or I'll send your tongue a sarchin arter your teeth; keep quiet, and follow me in presently.'

"Well, jist as it struck nine o'clock, says I, 'Sally, hold this here hank of twine for a minute, till I wind a trifle on it off; that's a dear critter.'

"She sot down her candle, and I put the twine on her hands, and then I begins to wind and wind away ever so slow, and drops the ball every now and then, so as to keep her down-stairs.

" 'Sam,' says she, 'I do believe you won't wind that are twine off all night, do give it to January, I won't stay no longer, I'm een amost dead asleep.'

" 'The old feller's arm is so plaguy onsteady,' says I, 'it won't do; but hark, what's that? I'm sure I heerd something in the ash saplin, didn't you, Sall?'

" 'I heerd the geese there, that's all,' says she; 'they always come onder the windows at night'; but she looked scared enough, and says she, 'I vow I'm tired a holdin out of arms this way, and I won't do it no longer'; and down she throw'd the hank on the floor.

" 'Well,' says I, 'stop one minit, dear, till I send old January out to see if anybody is there; perhaps some o' neighbour Dearborne's cattle have broke into the scarce garden.'

"January went out, tho' Sall say'd it was no use, for she knew the noise of the geese, they always kept close to the house at night, for fear of the varmin. Presently in runs old Snow, with his hair standin up an eend, and the whites of his eyes lookin as big as the rims of a soup plate ; ' Oh ! Gor Ormity,' said he, ' oh massa, oh Miss Sally, oh ! ! '

" ' What on airth is the matter with you ? ' said Sally, ' how you do frighten me, I vow I believe you're mad.'

" ' Oh, my Gor,' said he, ' oh ! massa, Jim Munroe he hang himself, on the ash saplin under Miss Sally's window—oh my Gor ! ! ! '

" That shot was a settler, it struck poor Sall right atwixt wind and water : she gave a lurch ahead, then heeled over and sunk right down in another faintin fit ; and Juno, old Snow's wife, carried her off and laid down on the bed—poor thing, she felt ugly enough, I do suppose.

" Well, father, I thought he'd a fainted too, he was so struck up all of a heap, he was completely bung fungered.

" ' Dear, dear,' said he, ' I didn't think it would come to pass so soon, but I knew it would come ; I foretold it ; says I, the last time I seed him, Jim, says I, mind what you say, you'll swing for it yet. Give me the sword I wore when I was at Bunker's Hill, may be there is life yet, I'll cut him down.'

" The lantern was soon made ready, and out we went to the ash saplin.

" ' Cut me down, Sam, that's a good feller,' said Jim, ' all the blood in my body was swashed into my head, and's a runnin out o' my nose, I'm een amost smothered—be quick, for heaven's sake.'

" ' The Lord be praised,' said father, ' the poor sinner is not quite dead yet. Why, as I'm alive—well if that don't beat all natur, why he has hanged himself by one leg, and's a swingin like a rabbit upside down, that's a fact. Why, if he aint snared, Sam, he is properly wired I declare—I vow this is some of your doings, Sam—well, it was a clever scheme, too, but a little grain too dangerous, I guess.'

" ' Don't stand starin and jawin there all night,' said Jim, ' cut me down, I tell you—or cut my throat and be damned to you, for I am choaking with blood.'

" ' Roll over that are hogshead, old Snow,' said I, ' till I get a top on it and cut him down ' ; so I soon released him, but he couldn't walk a bit. His ankle was swelled and sprained like vengeance, and he swore one leg was near about six inches longer than t'other.

" ' Jim Munroe,' says father, ' little did I think I should ever see you inside my door agin, but I bid you enter now, we owe you that kindness anyhow.'

" Well, to make a long story short, Jim was so chapfallen, and so down in the mouth, he begged for heaven's sake it might be kept a secret ; he said he would run the state, if ever it got wind, he was sure he couldn't stand it.

" ' It will be one while, I guess,' said father, ' afore you are able to run or stand either ; but if you will give me your hand, Jim, and promise to give over your evil ways, I will not only keep it a secret, but you shall be a welcome guest at old Sam Slick's once more, for the sake of your father—he was a brave man, one of the heroes of Bunker's Hill, he was our sergeant and——'

" ' He promises,' says I, ' father (for the old man had stuck his right foot out, the way he always stood when he told about the old war ; and as Jim couldn't stir a peg, it was a grand chance, and he was a goin to give him the whole revolution from General Gage up to Independence)—' he promises,' says I, ' father.'

" ' Well it was all settled, and things soon grew as calm as a pan of milk two days old ; and afore a year was over, Jim was as steady agoin a man as Minister Joshua Hopewell, and was married to our Sall. Nothin was ever said about the snare till arter the weddin. When the minister had finished axin a blessin, father goes up to Jim, and says he :

" ' Jin, Munroe, my boy,' givin him a rousin slap on the shoulder that sot him a coughin for the matter of five minutes (for he was a mortal powerful man was father) ; ' Jim Munroe, my boy,' says he, ' you've got the snare round your neck I guess now, instead of your leg ; the saplin has been a father to you, may you be a father of many saplins.'

WILLIAM S. WALKER

"COO-EE"

B. 1846

"MIDNIGHT"

"WHAT? Did you never hear the yarn about 'Midnight'?" queried the Inspector, as he drew his chair nearer to the fire. "Well, I'll tell you."

"Twenty years or more have gone by, and that's a lifetime for some of us, but about that time, Lord, it was pretty well all 'Midnight' and his doings."

"Ben Hall and his gang had been broken up. Some had been shot red-handed, and the others had paid the penalty of their crimes in various ways."

"There had been a cessation of 'sticking-up' mail-coaches, robbing banks, and scaring station owners and bank managers out of their wits; when, all of a sudden this desperado took up the running."

"You never could tell for certain where he would turn up—one day the mail-coach would be stuck up in New South Wales. At the end perhaps of a week, an equally audacious case would be reported from Queensland, and the telegraph wires would be cut."

"Anon, the Victorian papers would be teeming with sensational paragraphs. He was a proper cunning scoundrel, and nobody seemed to be able to swear to him. Sometimes he would be described as mounted, sometimes not. But he was generally described as a tall, dark man, some people said black, always completely masked, and well armed."

"At that time I was serving in the New South Wales mounted police. I was fond of active service, possessed a little influence at headquarters, and was always ready for a little more than mere duty, with a view to ultimate promotion."

"I was quartered at 'Morabinda,' a somewhat dreary little township on the border."

"The place was only kept alive by the traffic of wool-waggons and bullock drays to and from Collinsville and the neighbouring stations."

"Of course the shearers and station-hands at the latter used to come in and knock down their cheques, but there wasn't much 'running-in' in those days, so they got 'boozed' as much as they liked. In fact, it was a point of honour with most of them to get as well 'boozed' as possible, and they did little damage except to themselves. Also there would be an outbreak of festivity during the local races, but nine days out of ten during the year were monotonous and dull.

"I had got my sergeant's stripes, and worked under orders from Inspector Lysaght at Collinsville, and our biggest town on that far-away border of New South Wales.

"The Queensland black troopers kept their inside district on the 'Warrigal' and 'Narrabine' clear from any trouble arising from the blacks, and occasionally arrested a white man for horse-stealing, or petty larceny, and Captain Garforth, the Inspector, was a great favourite with the squatters.

"Now, if 'Midnight' had an enemy, a relentless uncompromising enemy, Captain Garforth was the man.

"Morn, noon, and night had he sworn to take him, alive or dead, the more especially as 'Midnight' had outwitted him on two or three occasions, and the Captain was of opinion that these unsuccessful quests told seriously against him with the Queensland Government.

"Never was there a more painstaking man than he had proved himself to be, and never a greater victim to bad luck.

"He generally was quickly enough on the spot if one of 'Midnight's' depredations occurred in his district, but he had never as yet even managed to catch a sight of him.

"It was not long after his accession to the post of Sub-Inspector at the Browar Barracks that 'Midnight' commenced his little games, and the Inspector felt intensely annoyed at not being able to put a sudden stop to them. 'Midnight's' last exploit in Garforth's district had been the robbery of a public-house and store, in a little bit of a township on the Warrigal, and since then nothing had been heard of the vagabond. People began to say that he had cleared out with his ill-gotten gains.

"Now Captain Garforth was especially tender about the last escapade. He and his troopers had come best pace down the river, only missing him by a couple of hours, but though they levied taxes on all the squatters for fresh horses, and followed him right on to New South Wales, they lost all trace of him!

"It was rumoured too that it would be well-nigh impossible to catch 'Midnight,' because he had so many friends. 'Sly-shanty' keepers, shepherds, 'old-hands'—even blacks, all seemed to act as 'bush-telegraphs' for him. Leastways once he had started, and the policemen after him, he didn't seem like a common bushranger. Some people said he was the devil. One thing struck me at the time as being rather curious. 'Midnight' never seemed to steal a horse, but was generally reported as being mounted on a very powerful coal-black animal. All three Governments, New South Wales, Queensland, and Victoria, now outlawed him, and set a price upon his head, and the sum total represented a prize worth winning.

"I had given a great deal of thought to the case. Many and many a night had it kept me from sleeping, and I was not the only anxious man in the force either.

"There were two things which no doubt added greatly to 'Midnight's' popularity with the rough bush element.

"He never robbed a poor man, and had never attempted to kill any one, but it was generally understood that it would be terribly dangerous to meddle with or provoke him. Those few who had been let off lightly, especially some who had actually been presented with money by the bushranger, poor swagmen, were never tired of saying that he was a very powerful, athletic man.

"I believe it was partly the knowledge of this which piqued Garforth so much, as he himself had the reputation of being the best shot, rider, and boxer in Queensland, and was also very powerful and muscular.

"One of 'Midnight's' idiosyncrasies, if remonstrated with or resisted in the slightest degree, was the tying of his victim to a tree, leaving him there to be found by the first passer-by. Well, eight months had passed in positive tranquillity, when, like a thunderbolt, came the news that the bank in Collinsville had been robbed after dark, the manager picked up senseless in the strong room, and about £8000 in notes and gold coin missing. The manager in this instance had been stunned by a heavy blow behind the ear, and on coming to his senses was completely ignorant as to how it was done or who did it.

"Of course gossip alleged that it must have been 'Midnight' again; none but he had either the talent or daring to accomplish such a deed.

"Fate seemed, indeed, to have dealt hardly with Captain Garforth. Not only did he happen to be in the town at that identical time, but he had actually called at the Bank that very day and deposited a sum of fifty pounds with the manager, who was a personal friend of his.

"You would have thought the Captain was mad. 'I shall lose my commission through this,' said he.

"'To think that out of the few times I come here, once or twice a year perhaps, that devil should have chosen one of them to rob the bank under my very nose. I believe he is the devil and no mortal man.'

"Well, it was boot and saddle for the police, white as well as black, you bet. Of course we were only too glad to get the valuable assistance and advice of Captain Garforth's famous 'tracker' and orderly 'Joe.'

"Beyond the town he at once picked the hoof-marks of a horse, sometimes on and sometimes off the road. We followed them twenty miles, and arrested a quiet-looking fellow who looked as if he couldn't say 'bo' to a goose, and who was riding a sorry-looking horse.

"There wasn't the smallest particle of evidence against him at the trial, and though we scoured the district far and near we did no good.

"Captain Garforth left for Queensland in a perfect fury, stating that he should send in his resignation.

"Luck was dead against him, and it was more than a fellow could stand.

"With all his 'swagger' he was downcast and sullen, and there was a restless fire in his eyes, which seemed to show that he had been aggravated beyond endurance.

"I was at Morabinda when Garforth returned, and he blustered greatly as to what he would do with 'Midnight' when he captured him. 'For,' said he, 'if they accept my resignation, I will hunt him down myself!'

"Well, I had been piecing my puzzle together bit by bit, week by week, month by month, and as Garforth, with all his advantages, did not seem to be able to act as thief-taker, or to solve the mystery, I made application to headquarters to be allowed to carry out a scheme of my own, and that was to put myself in such a position as to be 'stuck-up' by 'Midnight,' either venturing upon his seizure then, if I got a show, or to mark his face and figure for further identification; so that I might have something tangible to go upon, better than this fleeting, uncertain individuality which had hitherto so successfully evaded the clutches of the law.

" Garforth went over to the barracks, and it was some time before he came back.

" ' Midnight ' had ceased to give further trouble ; but a horse-stealing case at Fulliver's attracted the Captain's attention, and he was down on this new offender like lightning, bringing his prisoner into Morabinda, as it was proved he came from there. As luck would have it, I was away at the time on urgent business, but Captain Garforth and his faithful orderly ' Joe ' rode into the township, and having consigned the prisoner to the lock-up, went to the principal hotel, the ' Criterion.' (I daresay you have noticed that the smaller the town the more imposing is the name of the principal hotel.)

" Well, they walked into the bar, the Captain treating the orderly and calling for something stiff himself.

" There was an old shepherd there from the ' back-blocks,' spending his cheque liberally, a grizzled old fellow, with that half-shrewd, half-childish look generally stamped upon those accustomed to solitude. The old man was pretty ' well on,' and said he :

" ' Captain Garforth, you're a good hand at keeping down the blacks and catching horse-thieves, but I can't see why " Midnight " should be too much for you. You're a big, strong man, as big as " Midnight " himself, they say.'

" ' Who says so ? ' asked the Captain.

" ' Well, nigh every one, I think,' said the old fellow, ' leastways, every one I've spoken to about it.'

" ' Confound you ! ' roared the Captain. ' You mind your own business, and let ' Midnight ' be. I've had enough of him. If I could only get at him, I'd stop this talk.'

" ' What would you do, Captain ? What would you do ? ' asked the shepherd pertinaciously.

" ' Do ? ' said the Captain, ' I'll tell you what I'd do. I'd strip him and tie him to a tree, single-handed, in the way he is said to treat those who resist him, leaving him to boast of his deeds to the next passer-by, but I'd take care to be handy, and when he was released it would but be to be tied and handcuffed alongside of my saddle on his way to gaol.'

" ' No ! would you though ? ' said the shepherd with a face as long as his arm.

" Then he asked the Captain to take drink with him, and the Captain knowing that nothing really offended an ' old-hand ' so much as a refusal to a special invitation in this form, acquiesced, 'shouting' another for him afterwards.

"The old fellow was getting very well 'on' when who should come in but young Hammersley from 'Yunta,' a cattle-station near by, and nothing would do but that the Captain must come to tea with him.

"'I will come later on,' said the Captain. 'Can't come just yet,' and soon after that young Hammersley jumped upon his horse and rode away.

"Captain Garforth talked to the landlord a bit, and then went up to the store. When he came back it was near sundown, so telling 'Joe' to 'saddle-up' he remarked that 'Joe' was to stay in the township that night to help to keep guard on the prisoner, 'but I shall take him ('Joe') as far as the crossing-place, as I have instructions to give him. I must return the first thing in the morning myself, as I have to give evidence.'

"Just after dark, 'Joe' came back saying that the Captain had gone on to Yunta, and that he had left him about two miles this side of the station.

"That night at about ten o'clock, as the down-river mailman got into the big timber near the crossing-place, his horse shied so suddenly as nearly to unseat him, and that was not easily done as a rule, for Jem Donelly was a smart lad in the saddle.

"There was Captain Garforth tied up to a tree, and his horse hitched up to another a little farther on.

"He was pretty stiff when Jem helped him to mount.

"He had been 'stuck-up' and robbed by a tall man on a black horse; had tried to fight him, but found his pistol-holster empty; would have sworn it was there before he left the hotel.

"Well, when he got back to the township, 'Joe' and he left at once to get the 'tracks,' but here again fortune was against them.

"They got the tracks at the river where the tussle had been, for the road crossed it twice on the way to Yunta, but a downpour of rain occurred, which obliterated everything, especially on the hard ground near the river. Once clear of the road there was no sign.

"The prisoner was to be tried, and they could not accomplish impossibilities, so they returned after daylight.

"I had got back, and by a curious coincidence, Colonel Lysaght, and Sergeant Major Tuke, with two constables, had arrived in time to take part in the proceedings. You should have seen poor old Magistrate Browning's face, when I walked across the Court just as Captain Garforth was going to question his prisoner, and laying my hand on his shoulder, said: 'Captain Garforth, alias "Midnight," I arrest you in the Queen's name for highway robbery generally, and assault and robbery at the bank in Collinsville in particular.'

"He fought like a wild cat.

"It was as much as four of us could do to hold him.

"But we got the bracelets on him, though I got that," said the Inspector, touching a deep scar of old standing under the right eye. "For some time, I believe, the bench and spectators thought we had gone mad, but Lysaght, Tuke, and I knew what we were about.

" 'Dick the Devil,' the man arrested for horse-stealing, was in our employ and had got arrested on purpose. He had been prowling about the barracks for some time before this, found that the Captain and Joe worked together, and gathered quite enough evidence to piece my puzzle together, though the two were very 'fly.'

"I had many proofs, quite unnecessary to go into now, but one of the best I had I consider I possessed when I personated the old 'back-block' shepherd 'on the spree.'

"When I launched that shaft about the Captain's strength and size being identical with that of 'Midnight's' he had turned deadly pale, but I played my part too well for him to suspect that I was in the secret.

"That ruse of getting 'Joe' to tie him up to a tree near the Yunta crossing-place was a clever move and his trump card to allay suspicion, but the finding of the revolver in the river, alleged to be stolen by 'Midnight,' was only dead weight against him.

"Well, he confessed.

"It was as Captain Garforth he had assaulted the manager and robbed the bank. It will be remembered that earlier in the day he paid a visit there to pay in a sum of money. Returning after office hours to take further stock of the premises, he came suddenly upon the manager locking the safe in the strong room, and the opportunity was too much for a man of his propensities. That was to have been the end of it all, and the robbery was to have been accomplished at night, under the personality of 'Midnight,' after he himself, as Captain Garforth, had left.

"He never divulged where the money was hidden, probably in some remote corner, known only to him and ' Joe.' The latter vanished the instant he saw trouble brewing, taking his carbine, but leaving his horse and trappings.

" It was no use our trying to find an agile, bare-footed black fellow skilled in bush art then. Besides, our hands were completely filled with our prisoner, who was both game and desperate.

" A peculiar smile lit up his features when he heard that ' Joe ' had eluded us.

" As we wound along the up-river track en route for the Queensland capital with our prisoner strongly guarded in our midst, on the evening of our third day's journey from Morabinda, just where a beautiful pine ridge juts in on the river, I heard a sharp, ringing crack, saw Garforth fall lifeless from his saddle, and was conscious of seeing two of our men charge up the bank into the timber.

" There was another report. They found ' Joe ' in that ridge, but Death had got hold of him as well as Garforth, and Law was out of it. That's the story, gentlemen."

LOUIS BECKE

1848-1918

RODMAN THE BOATSTEERER

I

WITH her white cotton canvas swelling gently out and then softly drooping flat against her cordage, the Shawnee, sperm whaler of New Bedford, with the dying breath of the south-east trade, was sailing lazily over a sea whose waters were as calm as those of a mountain lake. Twenty miles astern the lofty peaks of Tutuila, one of the islands of the Samoan group, stood out clearly in the dazzling sunshine, and, almost ahead, what at dawn had been the purple loom of Upolu was changing to a cloud-capped dome of vivid green as the ship closed with the land.

The Shawnee was "a five-boat ship," and, judging from the appearance of her decks, which were very clean, an unlucky one. She had been out for over a year, and three months had passed since the last fish had been killed. That was off the coast of Chile, and she was now cruising westward and northward towards the eastern coast of New Guinea, where Captain Harvey Lucy, the master, expected to make up for the persistent ill-luck that had attended him so far. Naturally a man of most violent and ungovernable temper, his behaviour to his men on the present voyage had led to disastrous consequences, and the crew, much as they admired their captain as one of the most skilful whalers who had ever trod a deck, were now worked up into a state of exasperation bordering on mutiny. Shortly before the Samoan Islands were sighted, the ship's cooper, a man who took the cue for his conduct to the hands from the example set by the captain, had had a fierce quarrel with a young boatsteerer, named Gerald Rodman, who, in a moment of passion, struck the cooper such a terrific blow that the man lay between life and death for some hours. An attempt to put Rodman in irons was fiercely resisted by a number of his shipmates, who were led by his younger brother. But the after-guard were too strong for the men, and after a savage conflict the two Rodmans and three other seamen were overpowered by Captain Lucy, his four mates and the carpenter and stewards. As was common enough in those days on American whaleships, nearly all the officers were relatives or connections by marriage, and were always ready to stand by the captain; in this instance the cooper was a brother of the second mate. Six days had passed since this affair had occurred, and when Upolu was sighted the five men were still in irons and confined in the hot stifling atmosphere of the sail-locker, having been given only just enough food and water to keep body and soul together.

Four bells struck, and Captain Lucy made his appearance from below. The watch on deck, who had hitherto been talking among themselves as they went about their work, at once became silent, and muttered curses escaped from their lips as they eyed the tall figure of the captain standing at the break of the poop. For some minutes he apparently took no notice of any one about him; then he turned to the mate, who stood near him, and said:

"Have you had a look at those fellows this morning, Brant?"

"Yes," answered the officer. "They want to know if you're going to let them have a smoke."

A savage oath preceded Captain Lucy's reply:

"They can lie there till they die before any one of them shall put a pipe in his mouth."

"Just as you please, captain," said the mate, nonchalantly. "I guess you know best what you're doing. But there's going to be more trouble aboard this ship if you don't ease up a bit on those five men; and if I were you I wouldn't go too far. One of 'em—that youngest Rodman boy—can't stand much more of that sail locker in such weather as this. And I guess I don't want to go before a grand jury if he or any of 'em dies."

"I tell you, Brant, that rather than ease up on those fellows, I'd lose the ship. I'm going to keep them there till we strike another fish, and then I'll haze what life is left in them clean out of them."

Rough and harsh as he was with the crew of the Shawnee, Brant was no vindictive tyrant, and was about to again remonstrate with the savage Lucy, when, suddenly, the thrilling cry of "There she blows!" came from the look-out in the crow's nest; and in a few minutes the barque's decks were bustling with excitement. A small "pod" or school of sperm whales were in sight. Four boats were at once lowered and started in pursuit.

When first sighted from the ship the whales were not more than two miles distant, and moving towards her. The mate's boat was first away, and in a very short time fastened to the leader of the "pod"—a huge bull over sixty feet in length. In less than five seconds after the keen-edged harpoon had plunged deep into his body, the mighty fish "sounded" (dived) at a terrific speed; the other whales at once disappeared and Brant's boat shot away from the other three. The remaining boats were those of the captain and the second and third mates. For some ten or fifteen minutes their crews lay upon their oars watching the swift progress of the mate's boat, and scanning the sea from every point around them, to discern where the vanished and unstricken whales would rise to breathe again. At last they saw the great bull, to which the mate's boat was fast, burst out upon the surface of the water, two miles away. For a minute the mighty creature lay exposed to view, beating the sea into a white seeth of foam as he struck the water tremendous blows with his tail, and sought to free himself from the cruel steel in his body. As he thrashed from side to side, two of his convoy rose suddenly near him as if in sympathy with their wounded leader. Then, in an instant, they all disappeared together, the stricken whale still dragging the mate's boat after him at an incredible speed.

Knowing that in all probability the two whales which had just appeared would accompany the great bull to the last—when he would receive the stroke of the death-dealing lance from Brant—the captain of the Shawnee at once started off in pursuit, accompanied by the second and third mates' boats. The crews bent to their tough ash oars with strength and determination. There was no need for the dreadful oaths and blasphemies with which Captain Lucy and his officers assailed their ears, or his threats of punishment should they fail to catch up the mate's boat and miss killing the two "loose" whales; the prospect of such a prize was all the incentive the seamen needed. With set teeth and panting bosoms they urged the boats along, and presently they were encouraged by a cry from the third mate, who called out to the captain and second mate that the wounded whale was slackening his speed, and Mr. Brant was "hauling up alongside to give him the lance." In another fifty strokes the captain and the two officers saw the great head of the creature that was dragging the mate's boat along again appear on the surface, and on each side were his devoted cetacean companions, who were almost of as monstrous a size as the bull himself.

With savage oaths the captain urged his crew to fresh exertions, for just then he saw the mate go for'ard in his boat and plunge his keen lance of shining steel into his prize, then back his boat off as the agonised whale again sounded into the blue depths below, with his life-blood pouring from him in a bubbling stream.

II

On board the Shawnee the progress of the boats was watched amid the most intense excitement; and even the imprisoned seamen, in their foul and horrible prison, stretched their wearied and manacled limbs and sought to learn by the sounds on deck whether any or all of the boats were "fast"—that is, had harpooned a whale. Broken-spirited and exhausted as they were by long days of cruel and undeserved punishment, they would have forgotten their miseries in an instant had the fourth mate ordered them on deck to lower his boat—the only one remaining on board—and join their shipmates in the other boats in the chase. But of this they knew there was little prospect, for this remaining boat had been seriously injured by a heavy sea, which had washed her inboard a few days before the fight between the officers and crew. Presently, however, they heard the hurried stamping of feet on deck, and then the voices of the fourth mate and cooper giving orders to take in sail.

"Jerry," said a young English lad named Wray, to the elder Rodman, "do you hear that? One of the boats must have got 'fast' and killed. We'll be out of this in another half-hour, cutting-in. The captain won't let us lie here when there is work to be done on deck; he's too mean a Yankee to satisfy his revenge at the expense of his pocket."

But their pleasant belief that a whale had been killed, and that the ship was shortening sail while the carcass was being cut-in, was rudely disturbed a few minutes later, when the Shawnee took a sudden list over to port, and they were all pitched to the lee side of the sail locker in a heap. A squall had struck the barque.

Bruised and lacerated by the force with which they had been hurled together, the five prisoners sat up, and were soon enlightened as to the condition of affairs by the carpenter making his appearance, taking off their galling irons, and ordering them on deck.

The squall was a very heavy one, accompanied by savage gusts of stinging rain, and the old ship, with her canvas in great disorder, was every now and then thrown almost on her beam ends with its fury. After considerable trouble the officers and crew succeeded in saving her canvas from being blown to ribbons, and got the barque snug again. A quarter of an hour later the squall began to lose its force, but the rain descended in torrents, and obscured the view of the now agitated ocean to such an extent that the look-outs from aloft could not discern its surface a cable length away. All those on board the barque felt intense anxiety as to whether the mate had succeeded in killing his whale before the squall burst upon him, for they knew that had he not done so he would have been compelled to cut the line and let his prize escape ; no boat could live in such a sea as had arisen when " fast " to a sperm whale which was travelling at such a speed, even though fatally wounded and weak from loss of blood.

An hour passed, and then, to the joy of all on board, the rain ceased, a faint air came from the westward and blew away the thick clouds of tropic mist which enveloped the ship. Ten miles distant the verdant hills and valleys of Upolu glistened in the sunshine, and then one of the look-outs hailed the deck :

" I can see a boat, Mr. Newman—it is Mr. Brant's. He has killed his whale, sir."

In an instant the fourth mate was running aloft, but before he had ascended to the fore-top the look-out cried :

" I can see the other three boats now, sir, and they are all ' fast,' too."

A cheer broke from the Shawnee's hands, and, disregarding for the time all discipline, they sprang aloft one after another to gaze upon the thrilling scene. Three miles away, and plainly discernible in the now clear atmosphere, was the mate's boat lying alongside the big bull, which had just been killed, and at about the same distance were the boats of the captain and second and third mates, all " fast " to whales, and racing swiftly to windward toward the horizon.

The fourth mate at once came down from aloft and held a hurried consultation with the cooper—an old and experienced whaler. It was evident to them that the three boats had only just succeeded in getting " fast," and that, as darkness was so near, the officers in them would have great difficulty in killing the whales to which they were " fast," as the sea was still very lumpy from the violence of the squall. None of the boats were provided with bomb-guns, the use of which would have killed the whales in a very short time ; and the wind having again died away it was impossible for the ship to work up to them. Nothing, it was evident, could be done to assist the three boats, but it was decided to send the one remaining on board the barque to help the mate to tow his whale to the ship before the hordes of sharks, which would be attracted to the carcass by the smell of blood, began to devour it.

The carpenter was at once set to work to make her temporarily water-tight. By this time the sun had set, and only the position of the mate's boat was made known to the ship by a light displayed by Mr. Brant.

Standing on the port side of the poop, Martin Newman, the fourth mate, was gazing anxiously out into the darkness, hoping to see the other three boats show lights to denote that they had succeeded in killing their fish, and were waiting for a breeze to spring up to enable the barque to sail towards them. Although Newman was the youngest officer on board, he was an experienced one, and the fact that his boat had not been fit to lower with the other four had filled him with sullen rage ; for he was of an intensely jealous nature, and would rather have seen the boats return unsuccessful from the chase than that he alone should have missed his chance of killing a fish.

Presently the younger of the two Rodmans, who was his (Newman's) own boatsteerer, ventured, in the fulness of his anxiety for his shipmates, to step up to the officer and speak :

" Do you think, sir, that the captain and Mr. Ford and Mr. Manning have had to cut their lines ? "

The officer made no reply ; and could the young boatsteerer have seen the dark, forbidding scowl upon his face, he would never have addressed him at such an unpropitious moment. But imagining that his question had not been heard, the youth repeated it.

Newman turned, and seeing the lad standing in an attitude of expectancy, asked him in savage tones what he was doing there.

" Nothing, sir ; I only——"

" I'll teach you that a man doing nothing doesn't suit me when I'm in charge of the deck of this ship ! " and he struck the boatsteerer a terrific blow in the mouth, which knocked him off the poop on to the main deck.

When Ned Rodman came to, he found his head supported by his brother and young Wray, and the rest of the hands on deck standing around him in sympathetic silence. Newman was the most liked of all the officers, and the lad whom he had struck down had been rather a favourite of his, principally, it was supposed, because the two Rodmans came from the same town as himself ; and when the disturbance had arisen with the cooper, and the two brothers had been put in irons, Newman had several times expressed his sorrow to them when he had visited them in their prison. His sudden outburst of violence to Ned Rodman was therefore a surprise to the men generally ; and several of them glanced threateningly at the figure of the fourth mate, who was now striding to and fro on the poop, occasionally hailing the look-outs in angry tones, and asking if any more boat-lights were visible.

Gerald Rodman, though no words escaped his lips as he wiped away the blood which welled from a terrible cut on his brother's temple, had in his eyes a red light of passion that boded ill for the fourth mate when the time came. He was five years older than his brother, and, although both were boatsteerers, and had made many cruises in the Pacific, this was the first time they had been shipmates. Unlike Ned, he was a man of passionate and revengeful nature, and the second mate, to whose boat he belonged, had warned the cooper of the Shawnee never to meet Gerald Rodman ashore alone.

"He is a man who will never forgive an injury, and I would not care to be in your shoes if he gets you by yourself one day."

And, as a matter of fact, Gerald Rodman had sworn to himself, when he lay in irons, in the sail-locker, to have his revenge upon both the cooper and Captain Lucy, should he ever meet either of them ashore at any of the islands the barque was likely to touch at during her cruise. He was a man of great physical strength, and, for his position, fairly well educated. Both his parents were dead, and he and his brother Ned, and a delicate sister of nineteen, were the sole survivors of a once numerous family. The care of this sister was the one motive that animated the elder brother in his adventurous career ; and while his reserved and morose nature seemed incapable of yielding to any tender sentiment or emotion, it yet concealed a wealth of the deepest affection for his weakly sister, of which the younger one had no conception. And yet, strangely enough, it was to Ned that Nellie Rodman was most attached ; it was to his return that she most looked forward, never knowing that it was Gerald's money alone that maintained the old family home in the quiet little New England village in which her simple life was spent. Little did she think that when money was sent to her by Gerald, saying it came "from Ned and myself," that Ned had never had a dollar to send. For he was too careless and too fond of his own pleasure to ever think of sending her money. "Jerry," he thought, "was a mighty stingy fellow, and never spent a cent on himself—and could easily send Nell all she wanted." And yet Gerald Rodman, knowing his brother's weak and mercurial nature, and knowing that he took no care in the welfare of any living soul but himself, would have laid his life down for him, because happy, careless Ned had Nellie's eyes and Nellie's mouth, and in the tones of his voice he heard hers. So as he sat on the deck, with his brother's head upon his knees, he swore to "get even" with Martin Newman, as well as with Captain Lucy and cooper Burr, for as he watched the pale face of the lad it seemed to him to grow strangely like that of his far-off sister.

He had just completed sewing up the gaping wound in his brother's temple, when the cooper came up to the group :

"Here, lay along, you fellows ; the carpenter has finished Mr. Newman's boat, and some of you loafing 'soldiers' have to man her and help Mr. Brant to tow his whale alongside. Leave that man there, and look spry, or you'll feel mighty sorry."

III

As the cooper turned away the younger Rodman, assisted by his brother, staggered to his feet. The fall from the poop had, in addition to the cut in his temple, severely injured his right knee, and he begged his brother to let him lie down again.

"Yes, yes," whispered Gerald Rodman, hurriedly ; "lie down, Ned," and then the lad heard him speaking to Wray in eager, excited tones.

"I'm with you, Jerry," said the young Englishman, quickly, in answer to something that Rodman had said ; "where is he now ?"

"In the cabin, getting some Bourbon for Mr. Brant's boat. There is only the Dago steward with him, and if Porter and Tom Harrod will join us we shall manage the thing right enough."

"What is the matter, Jerry—what are you talking about ?" asked Ned from where he lay.

"Keep still, Ned, and ask us nothing just now ; there's a chance of our getting clear of this floating hell. I needn't ask you if you'll join us. Come on, Wray."

The fourth mate and the Portuguese steward were in the main cabin filling some bottles from a large jar of Bourbon whisky. Their backs were turned to the door, and both were so intent upon their task that they neither heard nor saw the four figures steal softly upon them. Suddenly they were seized from behind by Wray and Gerald Rodman, and then quickly gagged by Harrod and Porter before either had time to utter a cry. In a few minutes the four men had armed themselves with cutlasses from the rack around the mizzen-mast, which came through the cabin at the for'ard end of the table, Rodman also taking the captain's and chief mate's loaded revolvers out of their berths.

The fourth mate and steward were then carried into the captain's cabin, and Gerald Rodman spoke :

"Newman," he said, "we are going to take charge of this ship for a while. If you make an attempt to give an alarm you are a dead man. Wray, stand here and run them both through if they make the ghost of a sound."

Again entering the captain's cabin, he returned with two or three charts, a sextant and the ship's chronometer, which he placed on the table just as a heavy footfall sounded on the companion steps. It was the cooper.

"The boat is all ready, Newman," he said, as he entered the somewhat darkened cabin ; "who is going in her ? "

"We are," said Rodman, dealing him a blow with the butt of his pistol and felling him. "Leave him there, Wray—he'll give us no trouble. Now take every one of those rifles out of the rack and put them on the table. There's two kegs of powder and a bag of bullets in Mr. Brant's cabin—get those as well."

This was quickly done, and, calling to the others to follow him, Rodman sprang up the companion. No one but the man at the wheel was on the poop, and the leader of the mutineers, looking over the rail, saw that the boat was alongside with only one hand in her. Besides this man there were but eight other persons as well as the mutineers on the ship, including the fourth mate, cooper, steward, and carpenter.

Calling the carpenter to him, Rodman covered him with his pistol, and told him and the rest of the startled men to keep quiet or it would be worse for them.

"Two of you help my brother into the boat," he ordered. He was at once obeyed, and Ned Rodman was passed over the side into the hands of the man in the boat.

"Put out every light on deck and aloft," was his next command, and this was done by the watch without delay ; for there was in Rodman's face such a look of savage determination that they dared not think of refusing. Then he ordered them into the sail-locker.

" Now, Mr. Waller," he said, addressing the carpenter, " we don't want to hurt you and these three men with you. But we are desperate, and bent on a desperate course. Still, if you don't want to get shot, do as I tell you. Get into that sail-locker and lie low. Mr. Newman and the cooper and the steward are already disposed of. And I'm going to put it out of the power of Captain ' Brute ' Lucy to get me and those with me into his hands again."

" You won't shut us up in the sail-locker and scuttle the ship and let us drown, will you ? " asked the carpenter.

" No ; I'm no murderer, unless you make me one. If there is any one I have a grudge against it is Mr. Newman and the cooper ; but I won't do more to the cooper than I have already done. Still I'm not going to leave the ship in your hands until I have messed her up a bit. So away with you into the locker, and let us get to work."

Then, with the man from the boat, the carpenter and his companions were pushed into the sail-locker and the door securely fastened. Looking down from the skylight into the cabin Rodman saw that the cooper had not yet come to, and therefore no danger need be apprehended from him. Sending Wray below, the rifles, ammunition, and nautical instruments were passed up on deck and handed down into the boat. Then, leaving Porter on guard to watch the cooper, Rodman and the others went for'ard with a couple of axes and slashed away at the standing fore-rigging on both sides ; they then cut half-way through the foremast, so that the slightest puff of wind, when it came, would send it over the side. Then, going for'ard, they cut through the head stays.

" That will do," said the boatsteerer, flinging down his axe ; and then walking to the waist he hailed the boat :

" Are you all right, Ned ? "

" Yes," answered the youth, " but hurry up, Jerry, I think a breeze is coming."

Running aft, the elder brother sprang up the poop ladder and looked down through the skylight into the cabin. " Cut Mr. Newman and the steward adrift," he said to Wray.

Wray disappeared into Captain Lucy's cabin, and at once liberated the two men, who followed him out into the main cabin.

"Martin Newman," said Rodman, bending down, "just a word with you. You, I thought, were a shade better than the rest of the bullying scoundrels who officer this ship. But now, I find, you are no better than Bully Lucy and the others. If I did justice to my brother, and another person, I would shoot you, like the cowardly dog you are. But stand up on that table—and I'll tell you why I don't."

The dark features of the fourth mate blanched to a deathly white, but not with fear. Standing upon the table he grasped the edge of the skylight, under the flap of which Gerald Rodman bent his head and whispered to him :

"Do you know why I don't want to hurt you, Martin Newman ? When I came home last year I found out my sister's love for you ; I found your letters to her, and saw her eating her heart out for you day by day, and waiting for your return. And because I know that she is a dying woman, and will die happy in the belief that you love her, I said nothing. What I have now done will prevent my ever seeing her again, though I would lay my life down for her. But listen to me. Ned will, must, return to her, and beware, if ever you accuse him of having taken a hand in this mutiny——"

The hands of the fourth mate gripped the skylight ledge convulsively, and his black eyes shone luridly with passion. Then his better nature asserted itself, and he spoke quietly :

"Jerry, I did not know it was Ned whom I struck to-night. I was not myself. . . . I never meant to harm him. And for Nell's sake, and yours and Ned's, give up this madness."

"Too late, too late, Newman. I would rather die to-night than spend another hour on board this ship. But at least, for Nell's sake, you and I must part in peace," and the mutineer held out his hand. It was grasped warmly, and then with a simple "goodbye" Rodman turned away, walked to the poop ladder and called out :

"Into the boat, men !"

Five minutes later they shoved off from the Shawnee, whose lofty spars and drooping canvas towered darkly up in the starless night. At the last moment Gerald Rodman had hoisted a light on the mizzen-rigging as a guide to the four absent boats. As the mutineers pulled quickly away its rays shone dimly over the barque's deserted decks.

When daylight came the Shawnee was still drifting about on a sea as smooth as glass, and the four boats reached her just before the dawn. The boat with the mutineers could not be discerned even from aloft, and Captain Harvey Lucy, in a state of mind bordering on frenzy, looked first at his tottering foremast and then at the four whales which had been towed alongside, waiting to be cut-in. With the rising sun came another rain-squall, and the foremast went over the side, although Martin Newman with his men had done their best to save it. But Lucy, being a man of energy, soon rigged a jury-mast out of its wreck, and set to work to cut-in his whales. Three days later the Shawnee stood away for Apia Harbour in Samoa.

"Those fellows have gone to Apia," he said to mate Brant, "and I'll go there and get them if it takes me a month of Sundays."

But when the Shawnee dropped anchor in the reef-bound harbour, Captain Lucy found that he had come on a vain quest—the mutineers' boat had not been seen.

For seven years nothing was ever heard of the missing boat, till one day a tall, muscular-looking man, in the uniform of a sergeant of the New South Wales Artillery, came on board the American whaleship Heloise, as she lay in Sydney harbour, refitting. He asked for Captain Newman, and was shown into the cabin.

The captain of the Heloise was sitting at the cabin table reading a book, and rose to meet his visitor.

"What can I do for you, sir? Good God! is it you, Gerald Rodman?"

The soldier put out his hand. "Is my sister alive, Newman?"

"She died three years ago in my arms, hoping and praying to the last that she might see you and Ned before she died. And Ned?"

"Dead, Newman; he and Wray and Porter died of thirst. Harrod and I alone survived that awful voyage, and reached New Zealand at last. Was Nell buried with the old folks, Martin?"

"Yes," answered the captain of the Heloise, passing his hand quickly over his eyes, "it was her wish to lie with them. We had only been married two years."

The sergeant rose, and took Newman's hand in his, "Goodbye, Martin. Some day I may stand with you beside her grave."

And then, ere the captain of the whaleship could stay him, he went on deck, descended the gangway, and was rowed ashore to the glittering lights of the southern city.

CLARA MORRIS

B. 1849

THE WILD HORSE OF TARTARY

BUT there ! Just as I start to speak of my third season, I seem to look into a pair of big, mild eyes that say, " Can it be that you mean to pass me by ? Do you forget that 'twas I who turned the great sensation scene of a play into a side-splitting farce ? " —and I shake my head and answer truthfully, " I cannot forget. I shall never forget your work that night in Columbus, when you appeared as the ' fiery untamed steed ' (may Heaven forgive you !) in ' Mazeppa ' ! "

Mr. Robert E. J. Miles—or " All-the-Alphabet Miles," as he was frequently called—was starring at that time in the " horse " drama, doing such plays as " The Cataract of the Ganges," " Mazeppa," " Sixteen-String Jack," etc. " Mazeppa " was the favourite in Columbus, and both the star and the manager regretted that they had billed the other plays in advance, as there would have been more money in " Mazeppa " alone. Mr. Miles carried with him two horses ; one, for " The Wild Horse of Tartary," was an exquisitely formed, satin-coated creature, who looked wickedly at you from the corner of her blazing eye : who bared her teeth savagely, and struck out with her forefeet, as well as with her hind ones. When she came rearing, plunging, biting, snapping, whirling, and kicking her way on to the stage, the scarlet lining of her dilating nostrils and the foam flying from her mouth made our screams very natural ones, and the women in front used to huddle close together, or even cover their faces.

One creature only did this beautiful vixen love—R. E. J. Miles. She fawned upon him like a dog, and did tricks for him like a dog, but she was a terror to the rest of mankind. It was really a thrilling scene when Mazeppa was bound, his head tailward, his feet maneward, to the back of that maddened beast. She seemed to bite and tear at him, and when set free, she stood straight up for a dreadful moment, in which she really endangered his life ; then, with a wild neigh, she tore off up the " runs " as if fiends pursued her, with the man stretched helplessly along her inky back. The curtain used to go up again and again, it was so very effective.

The other horse who travelled with Mr. Miles was an entirely different sort. He would have been described—according to the State where he happened to be—as a piebald, a skewbald, a pinto, or a calico horse. He was very large, mostly of a satiny white colour, with big absurdly-shaped markings of bright bay. He was one of that breed of horses which in livery stables are always known as “Doctor” or “Judge.” Benevolence beamed from his large, clear eyes, and he looked so mildly wise one half expected to see him put on spectacles. The boy at the stable said one day as he fed him, “I wouldn’t wonder if this ol’ parson of a hoss asked a blessin’ on them there oats—I wouldn’t!”

I don’t know whether Old Bob, as he was called, had any speed or not, but if he had it was useless to him; for alas! he was never allowed to reach the goal under any circumstances. He was always ridden by the villain, and therefore had to be overtaken. Besides that he generally had to carry double, as the desperado usually fled holding the tainting heroine before him, and though Old Bob successfully leaped chasms thus heavily handicapped—for truly he was a mighty jumper—nevertheless he was compelled to accept defeat. Mr. Miles always came rushing up to the rescue on the black horse, when Bob was very lucky, indeed, if he didn’t have to roll about and die; and he was a very impatient dead horse, often amusing the audience by lifting his head to see if the curtain was not down, and then dropping dead again, with a sigh the whole house could hear.

Anyway, being continually pushed back into second place, and compelled to listen to the unearned applause bestowed upon the beautiful black, Old Bob lost all ambition professionally, and he simply became a gourmet and a glutton. He lived to eat. A woman in his eyes was a sort of perambulating storehouse of cake, crackers, apples, sugar, etc.; only his love for children was disinterested. The moment he was loose he went off on a search for children, no matter whose so long as he found some; then down he would go on his knees, and wait to be pulled and patted. His habit of gathering very small people up by their back breadths, and carrying them a little way before dropping them, always filled the air with wild shrieks of laughter. In the theatre he walked sedately about before rehearsal began, and though we knew his attentions were entirely selfish, he was so urbane, so complaisant in his manner of going through us, that we could not resist his advances, and each day and night we packed our pockets and our muffs with such provender as women seldom carry about in their clothes. All our gloves smelled as though we worked at a cider mill. While the play was going on, Old Bob spent a great part of his time standing on the first of the screened platforms connecting the runs, and as every one of us had to pass him on our way to dress, he demanded toll of all. Fruits, domestic or foreign, he received with gentle eagerness. Cake, crackers, and sugar—the velvety nose snuffed at them approvingly, and if a girl, believing herself late, tried to pass him swiftly by, his look of amazement was comical to behold, and in an instant his iron-shod foot was playing a veritable devil's tattoo on the resounding board platform. If that failed to win attention, following her with his eyes, he lifted up his voice in a full-chested "Neigh—hay—hay—haay!" that brought her back in a hurry with her toll of sugar. And that piebald hypocrite would scrunch it with such a piteously ravenous air that the girl quite forgot the satirical words her landlady had directed against her recently-acquired sweet tooth.

The dreadful night of disaster came late in the week. I don't recall the name of the play, but in that one piece the beautiful, high-spirited black mare had to carry double up the runs. John Carroll and Miss Lucy Cutler were the riders. Mr. Carroll claimed that he could ride a little, and though he was afraid, he was ashamed to own it. Mr. Miles said in the morning: "Now if you are the least bit timid, Mr. Carroll, say so, and I will fasten the bridle reins to the saddle pommel, and Queen will carry you up of her own accord as true as a die and as safe as a rock; but if you are going to hold the bridle, for God's sake be careful! If it was Old Bob, you could saw him as much as you liked and he would pay no attention, but Queen, who has a tender mouth, is half-mad with excitement at night, and a very slight pressure on the wrong rein will mean a forty or fifty-foot fall for you all!" Miss Cutler expressed great fear, when Mr. Miles surprisedly said: "Why, you have ridden with me twice this week without a sign of fear?"

"Oh, yes," she answered, "but you know what you are doing—you are a horseman!"

It was an unfortunate speech, and in the face of it Mr. Carroll's vanity would not allow him to admit his anxiety. "He could ride well enough and he would handle the reins himself," he declared.

During the day his fears grew upon him. Foolishly and wickedly he resorted to spirits to try to build up some Dutch courage. Then when the scene came on, half-blind with fear and the liquor—which he was not used to—as he felt the fierce creature beneath him rushing furiously up the steep incline, a sort of madness came upon him. Without rhyme or reason he pulled desperately at the nigh rein, and in the same breath their three bodies were hurling downward like thunderbolts. It was an awful sight! I looked at them as they descended, and for the fraction of a second they seemed to be suspended in the air. They were all upside down. All, without turning or twisting, fell straight as plummets—the horse, the same as the man and woman, had its feet straight in the air. Ugh! the striking. Ugh! never mind details. The curtain was rushed down. Miss Cutler was picked up dazed, stunned, but without a mark. Mr. Carroll crept away unaided amid the confusion, the sorrow, and the tears, for splendid Queen was doomed. Though Mr. Miles had risked his own life in an awful leap to save her from falling through a trap, he could not save her life, and the almost human groan with which she dropped her lovely head upon her master's shoulders, and his streaming eyes as he tenderly wiped the blood from her velvety nostrils, made even the scene-shifters rub their eyes upon the backs of their hands. While Queen was half-carried to the fire-engine house next door (her stable was too far away), some one went before the curtain and assured the audience that the accident was very slight, and that the lady and gentleman would both appear presently. The audience applauded in a rather doubtful manner, for several ladies had fainted, and the carrying out of a helpless person in a place of amusement always has a depressing effect upon the lookers-on. Meantime Mr. Carroll was getting his wrist bandaged and a cut on his face patched up, while a basket of sawdust was hurriedly procured that certain cruel stains might be concealed. The orchestra played briskly, and the play went on. That's the one thing we can be sure of in this world—that the play will go on. Late that night, beautiful Queen died, with her head resting on her master's knee.

Now "Mazepa" was billed for the next night, and there were many consultations held in the office and on the stage. "The Wild Horse of Tartary" was gone. It was impossible to find a new horse in one day. "Change the bill!" said Mr. Miles. "And have an empty house," answered Mr. Ellsler.

"But what can I do for a horse?" asked Mr. Miles.

"Use Old Bob," answered Mr. Ellsler.

"Good Lord!" groaned Bob's master. They argued long, but neither wanted to lose the good house, so the bill was allowed to stand and "Mazeppa" was performed with Old Bob as "The Wild Horse of Tartary." Think of it—that ingratiating Old Bob, that follower of women and playmate of children! Why, even the great bay blotches on his white old hide made one think of the circus, of paper hoops, and of training, rather than of wildness. With the hope of making him at least impatient and restless, he had been deprived of his supper, and the result was a settled gloom, an air of melancholy, that made Mr. Miles swear under his breath every time he looked at him.

The play moved along nicely, the house was large, and seemed pleased. Mazeppa fell into his enemy's hands, the sentence was pronounced, and the order followed, "Bring forth the fiery, untamed steed!" The women of the audience began to draw close to their escorts. Many of them remembered the biting, kicking entrance of the black, and were frightened beforehand. The orchestra responded with incidental, creepy music, but that was all. Over in the entrance, Old Bob, surrounded by the four men who were supposed to restrain him, stood quietly. But those who sat in the left box heard "get-ups!" and "go-ons!" and the cluckings of many tongues. The mighty Khan of Tartary (who could not see that entrance) thought he had not been heard, and he roared again, "Bring forth the fiery, untamed steed!" Another pause; the house tittered; then some one hit Old Bob a crack across the rump with a whip, at which he gave a switch of his tail, and gently ambled on to the stage. He stopped of his own accord at the centre, and, lowering his head, stretched out his neck and sniffed at the leader of the orchestra, precisely as a dog sniffs at a stranger. It was deliciously ridiculous. We girls were supposed to scream with fear of the "wild horse," and alas! we were only too obedient; crowding down at the right, clinging together in attitudes of extremest fright, we shrieked and screeched until Old Bob pricked up his ears, and looked so astonished at our conduct that the audience simply rocked back and forth with laughter. And all the time Mazeppa was saying things that did not seem at all like prayers. Finally he gave orders for the men to surround Bob, which they did, and then a sharp little spike was used—that was to make him dance about pretty lively. It pricked him on the shoulder, and the "wild horse" stood and switched his tail. It pricked him again ; he switched his tail again. The men had by this time grown careless, and when the spike was finally used at his mane, he suddenly kicked one of them clear of the stage, and then resumed his unruffled calm. The public thought it was having fun all this time, but pretty soon it knew it. Nothing under heaven could disturb the gentle serenity of that doglike old horse. When Mazeppa was brought forward to be bound upon Old Bob's back, instead of pulling away, and rearing and fighting against the burden, his one and only quick movement was his violent effort to break away from his tormentors and welcome his master joyously.

" Oh ! " groaned Miles, " kill him, somebody, before he kills me ! "

While Mazeppa was being bound on the " wild horse's " back our instructions were to scream ; therefore we screamed as before, and, being on the verge of insanity, Miles lifted his head from the horse's back, and said, " Oh, shut up, do ! " The audience heard, and—well, it laughed some more, and then it discovered, when the men sprang away and left the horse free to dash madly up the mountain, that Mazeppa had kept one foot unbound to kick Old Bob with ; and truly it did seem that the audience was going into convulsions—such laughter, pierced every now and then by the shrill scream of hysterics. Old Bob ambled up the first run all right, but, alas ! for poor Mazeppa, as the " wild horse " reached the first platform, a woman passed on the way to her room, and hungry Bob instantly stopped to negotiate a loan in sugar. Oh, it was dreadful—the wait—and when finally he reappeared, trotting—yes, trotting up the next run—Mr. Miles's foot could be plainly seen kicking with the regularity of a piston-rod, while his remarks were—well, they were irregular in the extreme !

Of course the play was hopelessly ruined. The audience laughed at the slightest mention of the " wild horse," and when the shepherds found horse and man, lying at the foot of the mountain, worn out and exhausted, the building seemed to shake with the laughter.

When the play was over at last, Old Bob walked up to his master and mumbled his hand. Mr. Miles pushed him away with pretended anger, crying : " You infernal old idiot, I'd sell you for a three-cent stamp with gum on it ! "

Bob looked hard at him a moment ; then he calmly crossed behind him and mumbled his other hand, and Mr. Miles pulled his ears, and said that he, himself, was the idiot for expecting an untrained, unrehearsed horse to play such a part, and Old Bob agreeing with him perfectly, they were, as always, at peace with each other.

GEORGE EGERTON
(Mrs. GOLDING BRIGHT)
B. 1860

A LITTLE GREY GLOVE

"The book of life begins with a man and woman in a garden and ends —with Revelations."—OSCAR WILDE.

YES, most fellows' book of life may be said to begin at the chapter where woman comes in ; mine did. She came in years ago, when I was a raw undergraduate. With the sober thought of retrospective analysis, I may say she was not all my fancy painted her ; indeed, now that I come to think of it there was no fancy about the vermeil of her cheeks, rather an artificial reality ; she had her bower in the bar of the Golden Boar, and I was madly in love with her, seriously intent on lawful wedlock. Luckily for me she threw me over for a neighbouring pork butcher, but at the time I took it hardly, and it made me sex-shy. I was a very poor man in those days. One feels one's grief more keenly then, one hasn't the wherewithal to buy distraction. Besides, ladies snubbed me rather, on the rare occasions I met them. Later I fell in for a legacy, the forerunner of several ; indeed, I may say I am beastly rich. My tastes are simple too, and I haven't any poor relations. I believe they are of great assistance in getting rid of superfluous capital—wish I had some ! It was after the legacy that women discovered my attractions. They found that there was something superb in my plainness (before, they said ugliness), something after the style of the late Victor Emanuel, something infinitely more striking than mere ordinary beauty. At least so Harding told me his sister said, and she had the reputation of being a clever girl. Being an only child, I never had the opportunity other fellows had of studying the undress side of women through familiar intercourse, say with sisters. Their most ordinary belongings were sacred to me. I had, I used to be told, ridiculous high-flown notions about them (by the way I modified those considerably on closer acquaintance). I ought to study them ; nothing like a woman for developing a fellow. So I laid in a stock of books in different languages, mostly novels, in which women played title-roles, in order to get up some definite data before venturing amongst them. I can't say I derived much benefit from this course. There seemed to be as great a diversity of opinion about the female species as, let us say, about the salmonidae.

My friend Ponsonby Smith, who is one of the oldest fly-fishers in the three kingdoms, said to me once : " Take my word for it, there are only four true salmo ; the salar, the trutta, the fario, the ferox ; all the rest are just varieties, subgenuses of the above ; stick to that. Some writing fellow divided all the women into good-uns and bad-uns. But as a conscientious stickler for truth, I must say that both in trout as in women, I have found myself faced with most puzzling varieties, that were a tantalising blending of several qualities." I then resolved to study them on my own account. I pursued the Eternal Feminine in a spirit of purely scientific investigation. I knew you'd laugh sceptically at that, but it's a fact. I was impartial in my selection of subjects for observation—French, German, Spanish, as well as the home product. Nothing in petticoats escaped me. I devoted myself to the freshest ingénue as well as the experienced widow of three departed ; and I may as well confess that the more I saw of her, the less I understood her. But I think they understood me. They refused to take me au sérieux. When they weren't fleecing me, they were interested in the state of my soul (I preferred the former), but all humbugged me equally, so I gave them up. I took to rod and gun instead, pro salute animae ; it's decidedly safer. I have scoured every country in the globe ; indeed, I can say that I have shot and fished in woods and waters where no other white man, perhaps, ever dropped a beast or played a fish before. There is no life like the life of a free wanderer, and no lore like the lore one gleans in the great book of nature. But one must have freed one's spirit from the taint of the town before one can even read the alphabet of its mystic meaning.

What has this to do with the glove ? True, not much, and yet it has a connection—it accounts for me.

Well, for twelve years I have followed the impulses of the wandering spirit that dwells in me. I have seen the sun rise in Finland and gild the Devil's Knuckles as he sank behind the Drachensberg. I have caught the barba and the gamer yellow fish in the Vaal river, taken muskelunge and black-bass in Canada, thrown a fly over guapote and cavallo in Central American lakes, and choked the monster eels of the Mauritius with a cunningly faked-up duckling. But I have been shy as a chub at the shadow of a woman.

Well, it happened last year I came back on business—another confounded legacy ; end of June too, just as I was off to Finland. But Messrs. Thimble and Rigg, the highly respectable firm who look after my affairs, represented that I owed it to others, whom I kept out of their share of the legacy, to stay near town till affairs were wound up. They told me, with a view to reconcile me perhaps, of a trout stream with a decent inn near it ; an unknown stream in Kent. It seems a junior member of the firm is an angler, at least he sometimes catches pike or perch in the Medway some way from the stream where the trout rise in audacious security from artificial lures. I stipulated for a clerk to come down with any papers to be signed, and started at once for Victoria. I decline to tell the name of my find, firstly because the trout are the gamest little fish that ever rose to fly and run to a good two pounds. Secondly I have paid for all the rooms in the inn for the next year, and I want it to myself. The glove is lying on the table next me as I write. If it isn't in my breast-pocket or under my pillow, it is in some place where I can see it. It has a delicate grey body (Suède, I think they call it) with a whipping of silver round the top, and a darker grey silk tag to fasten it. It is marked 5½ inside, and has a delicious scent about it, to keep off moths, I suppose ; naphthaline is better. It reminds me of a " silver-sedge " tied on a ten hook. I startled the good landlady of the little inn (there is no village fortunately) when I arrived with the only porter of the tiny station laden with traps. She hesitated about a private sitting-room, but eventually we compromised matters, as I was willing to share it with the other visitor. I got into knickerbockers at once, collared a boy to get me worms and minnow for the morrow, and as I felt too lazy to unpack tackle, just sat in the shiny arm-chair (made comfortable by the successive sitting of former occupants) at the open window and looked out. The river, not the trout stream, winds to the right, and the trees cast trembling shadows into its clear depths. The red tiles of a farm roof show between the beeches, and break the monotony of blue sky background. A dusty waggoner is slaking his thirst with a tankard of ale. I am conscious of the strange lonely feeling that a visit to England always gives me. Away in strange lands, even in solitary places, one doesn't feel it somehow. One is filled with the hunter's lust, bent on a " kill " ; but at home in the quiet country, with the smoke curling up from some fireside, the mowers busy laying the hay in swaths, the children tumbling under the trees in the orchards, and a girl singing as she spreads the clothes on the sweetbrier hedge, amidst a scene quick with home sights and sounds, a strange lack creeps in and makes itself felt in a dull, aching way. Oddly enough, too, I had a sense of uneasiness, a "something going to happen." I had often experienced it when out alone in a great forest, or on an unknown lake, and it always meant "'ware danger" of some kind. But why should I feel it here? Yet I did, and I couldn't shake it off. I took to examining the room. It was a commonplace one of the usual type. But there was a work-basket on the table, a dainty thing, lined with blue satin. There was a bit of lace stretched over shiny blue linen, with the needle sticking in it; such fairy work, like cobwebs seen from below, spun from a branch against a background of sky. A gold thimble, too, with initials, not the landlady's, I know. What pretty things, too, in the basket! A scissors, a capital shape for fly-making; a little file and some floss silk and tinsel, the identical colour I want for a new fly I have in my head, one that will be a demon to kill. The northern devil I mean to call him. Some one looks in behind me, and a light step passes up-stairs. I drop the basket; I don't know why. There are some reviews near it. I take up one, and am soon buried in an article on Tasmanian fauna. It is strange, but whenever I do know anything about a subject, I always find these writing fellows either entirely ignorant or damned wrong.

After supper I took a stroll to see the river. It was a silver grey evening, with just the last lemon and pink streaks of the sunset staining the sky. There had been a shower, and somehow the smell of the dust after rain mingled with the mignonette in the garden brought back vanished scenes of small-boyhood, when I caught minnows in a bottle, and dreamt of a shilling rod as happiness unattainable. I turned aside from the road in accordance with directions, and walked towards the stream. Holloa! some one before me, what a bore! The angler is hidden by an elder-bush, but I can see the fly drop delicately, artistically on the water. Fishing up-stream, too! There is a bit of broken water there, and the midges dance in myriads; a silver gleam, and the line spins out, and the fly falls just in the right place. It is growing dusk, but the fellow is an adept at quick, fine casting—I wonder what fly he has on—why, he's going to try down-stream now! I hurry forward, and as I near him, I swerve to the left out of the way.

S-s-s ! a sudden sting in the lobe of my ear. Hey ! I cry as I find I am caught ; the tail fly is fast in it. A slight, grey-clad woman holding the rod lays it carefully down and comes towards me through the gathering dusk. My first impulse is to snap the gut and take to my heels, but I am held by something less tangible but far more powerful than the grip of the Limerick hook in my ear.

" I am very sorry ! " she says in a voice that matched the evening, it was so quiet and soft ; " but it was exceedingly stupid of you to come behind like that."

" I didn't think you threw such a long line ; I thought I was safe," I stammered.

" Hold this," she says, giving me a diminutive fly-book, out of which she has taken a scissors. I obey meekly. She snips the gut.

" Have you a sharp knife ? If I strip the hook you can push it through ; it is lucky it isn't in the cartilage."

I suppose I am an awful idiot, but I only handed her the knife, and she proceeded as calmly as if stripping a hook in a man's ear were an everyday occurrence. Her gown is of some soft grey stuff, and her grey leather belt is silver clasped. Her hands are soft and cool and steady, but there is a rarely disturbing thrill in their gentle touch. The thought flashed through my mind that I had just missed that, a woman's voluntary tender touch, not a paid caress, all my life.

" Now you can push it through yourself. I hope it won't hurt much." Taking the hook, I push it through, and a drop of blood follows it. " Oh ! " she cries, but I assure her it is nothing, and stick the hook surreptitiously in my coat sleeve. Then we both laugh, and I look at her for the first time. She has a very white forehead, with little tendrils of hair blowing round it under her grey cap, her eyes are grey. I didn't see that then, I only saw they were steady, smiling eyes that matched her mouth. Such a mouth, the most maddening mouth a man ever longed to kiss, above a too pointed chin, soft as a child's ; indeed, the whole face looks soft in the misty light.

" I am sorry I spoilt your sport ! " I say.

" Oh, that don't matter, it's time to stop. I got two brace, one a beauty."

She is winding in her line, and I look in her basket ; they are beauties, one two-pounder, the rest running from a half to a pound.

" What fly ? "

"Yellow dun took that one, but your assailant was a partridge spider."

I sling her basket over my shoulder ; she takes it as a matter of course, and we retrace our steps. I feel curiously happy as we walk towards the road ; there is a novel delight in her nearness ; the feel of woman works subtly and strangely in me ; the rustle of her skirt as it brushes the black-heads in the meadow-grass, and the delicate perfume, partly violets, partly herself, that comes to me with each of her movements is a rare pleasure. I am hardly surprised when she turns into the garden of the inn, I think I knew from the first that she would.

"Better bathe that ear of yours, and put a few drops of carbolic in the water." She takes the basket as she says it, and goes into the kitchen. I hurry over this and go into the little sitting-room. There is a tray with a glass of milk and some oaten cakes upon the table. I am too disturbed to sit down ; I stand at the window and watch the bats flitter in the gathering moonlight, and listen with quivering nerves for her step—perhaps she will send for the tray, and not come after all. What a fool I am to be disturbed by a grey-clad witch with a tantalising mouth ! That comes of loafing about doing nothing. I mentally darn the old fool who saved her money instead of spending it. Why the devil should I be bothered ? I don't want it anyhow. She comes in as I fume, and I forget everything at her entrance. I push the arm-chair towards the table, and she sinks quietly into it, pulling the tray nearer. She has a wedding ring on, but somehow it never strikes me to wonder if she is married or a widow or who she may be. I am content to watch her break her biscuits. She has the prettiest hands, and a trick of separating her last fingers when she takes hold of anything. They remind me of white orchids I saw somewhere. She led me to talk ; about Africa, I think. I liked to watch her eyes glow deeply in the shadow and then catch light as she bent forward to say something in her quick responsive way.

"Long ago when I was a girl," she said once.

"Long ago ?" I echo incredulously, "surely not ?"

"Ah, but yes, you haven't seen me in the daylight," with a soft little laugh. "Do you know what the gipsies say ? 'Never judge a woman or a ribbon by candle-light.' They might have said moonlight equally well."

She rises as she speaks, and I feel an overpowering wish to have her put out her hand. But she does not, she only takes the work-basket and a book, and says good-night with an inclination of her little head.

I go over and stand next her chair ; I don't like to sit in it, but I like to put my hand where her head leant, and fancy, if she were there, how she would look up.

I woke next morning with a curious sense of pleasurable excitement. I whistled from very lightness of heart as I dressed. When I got down I found the landlady clearing away her breakfast things. I felt disappointed and resolved to be down earlier in future. I didn't feel inclined to try the minnow. I put them in a tub in the yard and tried to read and listen for her step. I dined alone. The day dragged terribly. I did not like to ask about her, I had a notion she might not like it. I spent the evening on the river. I might have filled a good basket, but I let the beggars rest. After all, I had caught fish enough to stock all the rivers in Great Britain. There are other things than trout in the world. I sit and smoke a pipe where she caught me last night. If I half close my eyes I can see hers, and her mouth in the smoke. That is one of the curious charms of baccy, it helps to reproduce brain pictures. After a bit I think "perhaps she has left." I get quite feverish at the thought and hasten back. I must ask. I look up at the window as I pass ; there is surely a gleam of white. I throw down my traps and hasten up. She is leaning with her arms on the window-ledge staring out into the gloom. I could swear I caught a suppressed sob as I entered. I cough, and she turns quickly and bows slightly. A bonnet and gloves and lace affair and a lot of papers are lying on the table. I am awfully afraid she is going. I say :

"Please don't let me drive you away, it is so early yet. I half expected to see you on the river."

"Nothing so pleasant ; I have been up in town (the tears have certainly got into her voice) all day ; it was so hot and dusty, I am tired out."

The little servant brings in the lamp and a tray with a bottle of lemonade.

"Mistress hasn't any lemons, 'm, will this do ?"

"Yes," she says wearily, she is shading her eyes with her hands ; "anything, I am fearfully thirsty."

"Let me concoct you a drink instead. I have lemons and ice and things. My man sent me down supplies to-day ; I leave him in town. I am rather a dab at drinks ; learnt it from the Yankees ; about the only thing I did learn from them I care to remember. Susan ! " The little maid helps me to get the materials, and she watches me quietly. When I give it to her she takes it with a smile (she has been crying). That is an ample thank-you. She looks quite old. Something more than tiredness called up those lines in her face.

Well, ten days passed, sometimes we met at breakfast, sometimes at supper, sometimes we fished together or sat in the straggling orchard and talked ; she neither avoided me nor sought me. She is the most charming mixture of child and woman I ever met. She is a dual creature. Now I never met that in a man. When she is here without getting a letter in the morning or going to town, she seems like a girl. She runs about in her grey gown and little cap, and laughs and seems to throw off all thought like an irresponsible child. She is eager to fish, or pick gooseberries and eat them daintily, or sit under the trees and talk. But when she goes to town—I notice she always goes when she gets a lawyer's letter, there is no mistaking the envelope—she comes home tired and haggard-looking, an old woman of thirty-five. I wonder why. It takes her, even with her elasticity of temperament, nearly a day to get young again. I hate her to go to town ; it is extraordinary how I miss her ; I can't recall, when she is absent, her saying anything very wonderful, but she converses all the time. She has a gracious way of filling the place with herself, there is an entertaining quality in her very presence. We had one rainy afternoon ; she tied me some flies (I shan't use any of them) ; I watched the lights in her hair as she moved, it is quite golden in some places, and she has a tiny mole near her left ear and another on her left wrist. On the eleventh day she got a letter but she, didn't go to town, she stayed up in her room all day ; twenty times I felt inclined to send her a line, but I had no excuse. I heard the landlady say as I passed the kitchen window : " Poor dear ! I'm sorry to lose her ! " Lose her ? I should think not. It has come to this with me that I don't care to face any future without her ; and yet I know nothing about her, not even if she is a free woman. I shall find that out the next time I see her. In the evening I catch a glimpse of her gown in the orchard and I follow her. We sit down near the river. Her left hand is lying gloveless next me in the grass.

"Do you think from what you have seen of me, that I would ask a question out of any mere impertinent curiosity?"

She starts—"No, I do not."

I take up her hand and touch the ring. "Tell me, does this bind you to any one?"

I am conscious of a buzzing in my ears and a dancing blurr of water and sky and trees as I wait (it seems to me an hour) for her reply. I felt the same sensation once before, when I got drawn into some rapids and had an awfully narrow shave, but of that another time.

The voice is shaking.

"I am not legally bound to any one, at least; but why do you ask?" She looks me square in the face as she speaks, with a touch of haughtiness I never saw in her before.

Perhaps the great relief I feel, the sense of joy at knowing she is free, speaks out of my face, for hers flushes and she drops her eyes, her lips tremble. I don't look at her again, but I can see her all the same. After a while she says:

"I half intended to tell you something about myself this evening, now I must. Let us go in. I shall come down to the sitting-room after your supper." She takes a long look at the river and the inn, as if fixing the place in her memory; it strikes me with a chill that there is a good-bye in her gaze. Her eyes rest on me a moment as they come back, there is a sad look in their grey clearness. She swings her little grey gloves in her hand as we walk back. I can hear her walking up and down overhead; how tired she will be, and how slowly the time goes. I am standing at one side of the window when she enters; she stands at the other, leaning her head against the shutter with her hands clasped before her. I can hear my own heart beating, and, I fancy, hers through the stillness. The suspense is fearful. At length she says:

"You have been a long time out of England; you don't read the papers?"

"No." A pause. I believe my heart is beating inside my head.

"You asked me if I was a free woman. I don't pretend to misunderstand why you asked me. I am not a beautiful woman, I never was. But there must be something about me, there is in some women, 'essential femininity' perhaps, that appeals to all men. What I read in your eyes I have seen in many men's before, but, before God, I never tried to rouse it. To-day (with a sob) I can say I am free, yesterday morning I could not. Yesterday my husband gained his case and divorced me ! ' She closes her eyes and draws in her under-lip to stop its quivering. I want to take her in my arms, but I am afraid to.

" I did not ask you any more than if you were free ! "

" No, but I am afraid you don't quite take in the meaning. I did not divorce my husband, he divorced me, he got a decree nisi ; do you understand now ? (she is speaking with difficulty) do you know what that implies ? "

I can't stand her face any longer. I take her hands, they are icy cold, and hold them tightly.

" Yes, I know what it implies, that is, I know the legal and social conclusion to be drawn from it—if that is what you mean. But I never asked you for that information. I have nothing to do with your past. You did not exist for me before the day we met on the river. I take you from that day and I ask you to marry me."

I feel her tremble and her hands get suddenly warm. She turns her head and looks at me long and searchingly, then she says :

" Sit down, I want to say something ! "

I obey, and she comes and stands next the chair. I can't help it, I reach up my arm, but she puts it gently down.

" No, you must listen without touching me, I shall go back to the window. I don't want to influence you a bit by any personal magnetism I possess. I want you to listen—I have told you he divorced me ; the co-respondent was an old friend, a friend of my childhood, of my girlhood. He died just after the first application was made, luckily for me. He would have considered my honour before my happiness. I did not defend the case, it wasn't likely—ah, if you knew all ? He proved his case ; given clever counsel, willing witnesses to whom you make it worth while, and no defence, divorce is always attainable even in England. But remember : I figure as an adulteress in every English-speaking paper. If you buy last week's evening papers—do you remember the day I was in town ? "—I nod—
" you will see a sketch of me in that day's ; some one, perhaps he, must have given it ; it was from an old photograph. I bought one at Victoria as I came out ; it is funny (with an hysterical laugh) to buy a caricature of one's own poor face at a news-stall. Yet in spite of that I have felt glad. The point for you is that I made no defence to the world, and (with a lifting of her head) I will make no apology, no explanation, no denial to you, now or ever. I am very desolate and your attention came very warm to me, but I don't love you. Perhaps

I could learn to (with a rush of colour), for what you have said to-night, and it is because of that I tell you to weigh what this means. Later, when your care for me will grow into habit, you may chafe at my past. It is from that I would save you."

I hold out my hands, and she comes and puts them aside and takes me by the beard and turns up my face and scans it earnestly. She must have been deceived a good deal. I let her do as she pleases, it is the wisest way with women, and it is good to have her touch me in that way. She seems satisfied. She stands leaning against the arm of the chair and says :

" I must learn first to think of myself as a free woman again ; it almost seems wrong to-day to talk like this ; can you understand that feeling ? "

I nod assent.

" Next time I must be sure, and you must be sure." She lays her fingers on my mouth as I am about to protest. " S-sh ! You shall have a year to think. If you repeat then what you have said to-day, I shall give you your answer. You must not try to find me. I have money. If I am living, I will come here to you. If I am dead you will be told of it. In the year between I shall look upon myself as belonging to you, and render an account if you wish of every hour. You will not be influenced by me in any way, and you will be able to reason it out calmly. If you think better of it, don't come."

I feel there would be no use trying to move her, I simply kiss her hands and say :

" As you will, dear woman, I shall be here."

We don't say any more ; she sits down on a footstool with her head against my knee, and I just smooth it. When the clocks strike ten through the house, she rises and I stand up. I see that she has been crying quietly, poor lonely little soul. I lift her off her feet and kiss her, and stammer out my sorrow at losing her, and she is gone. Next morning the little maid brought me an envelope from the lady, who left by the first train. It held a little grey glove ; that is why I carry it always, and why I haunt the inn and never leave it for longer than a week ; why I sit and dream in the old chair that has a ghost of her presence always ; dream of the spring to come with the May-fly on the wing, and the young summer when midges dance, and the trout are growing fastidious ; when she will come to me across the meadow grass, through the silver haze, as she did before ; come with her grey eyes shining to exchange herself for her little grey glove.

CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS

B. 1860

THE FREEDOM OF THE BLACK-FACED RAM

ON the top of Ringwaak Hill the black-faced ram stood motionless, looking off with mild, yellow eyes across the wooded level, across the scattered farmsteads of the settlement, and across the bright, retreating spirals of the distant river, to that streak of scarlet light on the horizon which indicated the beginning of sunrise. A few paces below him, half-hidden by a grey stump, a green juniper bush, and a mossy brown hillock, lay a white ewe with a lamb at her side. The ewe's jaws moved leisurely, as she chewed her cud and gazed up with comfortable confidence at the sturdy figure of the ram silhouetted against the brightening sky.

This sunrise was the breaking of the black-faced ram's first day in the wilderness. Never before had he stood on an open hill-top and watched the light spread magically over a wide, wild landscape. Up to the morning of the previous day, his three years of life had been passed in protected, green-hedged valley pastures, amid tilled fields and well-stocked barns, beside a lilled water. This rugged, lonely, wide-visioned world into which fortune had so unexpectedly projected him, filled him with wonder. Yet he felt strangely at ease therein. The hedged pastures had never quite suited him ; but here, at length, in the great spaces, he felt at home. The fact was that, alike in character and in outward appearance, he was a reversion to far-off ancestors. He was the product of a freak of heredity.

In the fat-soiled valley-lands, some fifteen miles back of Ringwaak Hill, the farmers had a heavy, long-woolled, hornless strain of sheep, mainly of the Leicester breed, which had been crossed, years back, by an imported Scotch ram of one of the horned, courageous, upland, black-faced varieties. The effect of this hardy cross had apparently all been bred out, save for an added stamina in the resulting stock, which was uniformly white and hornless. When, therefore, a lamb was born with a black face and blackish-grey legs, it was cherished as a curiosity ; and when, in time, it developed a splendid pair of horns, it became the handsomest ram in all the valley, and a source of great pride to its owner. But when black-faced lambs began to grow common in the hornless and immaculate flocks, the feelings of the valley folks changed, and word went around that the strain of the white-faced must be kept pure. Then it was decreed that the great horned ram should no longer sire the flocks, but be hurried to the doom of his kind and go to the shambles.

Just at this time, however, a young farmer from the backwoods settlement over behind Ringwaak chanced to visit the valley. The sheep of his settlement were not only hornless, but small and light-woolled as well, and the splendid, horned ram took his fancy. Here was a chance to improve his breed. He bought the ram for what he was worth to the butcher, and proudly led him away, over the hills and through the great woods, toward the settlement on the other side of Ringwaak.

The backwoodsman knew right well that a flock of sheep may be driven, but that a single sheep must be led ; so he held his new possession securely by a piece of stout rope about ten feet long. For an hour or two the ram followed with an exemplary docility quite foreign to his independent spirit. He was subdued by the novelty of his surroundings—the hillocky, sloping pastures, and the shadowy solemnity of the forest. Moreover, he perceived, in his dim way, a kind of mastery in this heavy-booted, homespun-clad, tobacco-chewing, grave-eyed man from the backwoods, and for a long time he felt none of his usual pugnacity. But by and by the craving for freedom began to stir in his breast, and the blood of his hill-roving ancestors thrilled toward the wild pastures. The glances which, from time to time, he cast upon the backwoodsman at the other end of the rope became wary, calculating, and hostile. This stalwart form, striding before him, was the one barrier between himself and freedom. Freedom was a thing of which he knew, indeed, nothing—a thing which, to most of his kind, would have seemed terrifying rather than alluring. But to him, with that inherited wildness stirring in his blood, it seemed the thing to be craved before all else.

Presently they came to a little cold spring, bubbling up beside the road and tinkling over the steep bank. The road at this point ran along a hillside, and the slope below the road was clothed with blueberry and other dense shrubs. The backwoodsman was hot and thirsty. Flinging aside his battered hat, he dropped down on his hands and knees beside the spring and touched his lips to the water.

In this position, still holding the rope in a firm grasp, he had his back to the ram. Moreover, he no longer looked either formidable or commanding. The ram saw his chance. A curious change came over his mild, yellow eyes. They remained yellow, indeed, but became cold, sinister, and almost cruel in their expression.

The backwoodsman, as he drank, held a tight grip on the rope. The ram settled back slightly, till the rope was almost taut. Then he launched himself forward. His movement was straight and swift, as if he had been propelled by a gigantic spring. His massive, broad-horned forehead struck the stooping man with terrific force.

With a grunt of pain and amazement, the man shot sprawling over the bank, and landed, half-stunned, in a clump of blueberry bushes. Dazed and furious, he picked himself up, passed a heavy hand across his scratched, smarting face, and turned to see the ram disappearing among the thickets above the road. His disappointment so overcame his wrath that he forgot to exercise his vigorous backwoods vocabulary, and resumed his homeward way with his head full of plans for the recapture of his prize.

The ram, meanwhile, trailing the length of rope behind him, was galloping madly through the woods. He was intoxicated with his freedom. These rough, wild, lonely places seemed to him his home. With all his love for the wilderness, the instinct which had led him to it was altogether faulty and incomplete. It supplied him with none of the needful forest lore. He had no idea of caution. He had no inkling of fear. He had no conception of the enemies that might lurk in thicket or hollow. He went crashing ahead as if the green world belonged to him, and cared not who might hear the brave sound of his going. Now and then he stepped on the rope, and stumbled; but that was a small matter.

Through dark strips of forest, over rocky, tangled spaces, across slopes burnt barren, his progress was always upward, until, having traversed several swampy vales and shadowy ravines, toward evening he came out upon the empty summit of Ringwaak. On the topmost hillock he took his stand proudly, his massive head and broad, curled horns in splendid relief against the amber sky.

As he stood, surveying his new realm, a low bleat came to him from a sheltered hollow close by, and, looking down, he saw a small white ewe with a new-born lamb nursing under her flank. Here was his new realm peopled at once. Here were followers of his own kind. He stepped briskly down from his hillock and graciously accepted the homage of the ewe, who snuggled up against him as if afraid at the loneliness and the coming on of night. All night he slept beside the mother and her young, in the sheltered hollow, and kept no watch because he feared no foe. But the ewe kept watch, knowing well what perils might steal upon them in the dark.

As it chanced, however, no midnight prowler visited the summit of Ringwaak Hill, and the first of dawn found the great ram again at his post of observation. It is possible that he had another motive besides his interest in his new, wonderful world. He may have expected the woodsman to follow and attempt his recapture, and resolved not to be taken unawares. Whatever his motive, he kept his post till the sun was high above the horizon, and the dew-wet woods gleamed as if sown with jewels. Then he came down and began to feed with the ewe, cropping the short, thin grass with quick bites and finding it far more sweet than the heavy growths of his old pasture.

Late in the morning, when pasturing was over for the time, the ram and the little ewe lay down in the shade of a steep rock, comfortably chewing their cud, while the lamb slept at its mother's side. The ram, deeply contented, did not observe two grey-brown, stealthy forms creeping along the slope, from bush to rock, and from stump to hillock. But the ewe, ever on the watch, presently caught sight of them, and sprang to her feet with a snort of terror. She knew well enough what a lynx was. Yet for all her terror she had no thought of flight. Her lamb was too young to flee, and she would stay by it in face of any fate.

The ram got up more slowly, turned his head, and eyed the stealthy strangers with grave curiosity. Curiosity, however, changed into hostility as he saw by the ewe's perturbation that the strangers were foes; and a sinister glitter came into the great gold eyes which shone so brilliantly from his black face.

Seeing themselves discovered, the two lynxes threw aside their cunning and rushed ravenously upon what they counted easy prey. They knew something of the timorous hearts of sheep, and had little expectation of resistance. But being, first of all, hungry rather than angry, they preferred what seemed easiest to get. It was upon the lamb and the ewe that they sprang, ignoring the ram contemptuously.

One thing which they had not reckoned with, however, was the temper of the ewe. Before one fierce claw could reach her lamb, she had butted the assailant so fiercely in the flank that he forgot his purpose and turned with a snarl of rage to rend her. Meanwhile the other lynx, springing for her neck, had experienced the unexpected. He had been met by the lightning charge of the ram, fair in the ribs, and hurled sprawling into a brittle, pointed tangle of dead limbs sticking up from the trunk of a fallen tree.

Having delivered this most effective blow, the ram stepped back a pace or two, mincing on his slender feet, and prepared to repeat it. The lynx was struggling frantically among the branches, which stuck into him and tore his fine fur. Just in time to escape the second assault he got free—but free not for fight but for flight. One tremendous, wildly contorted leap landed him on the other side of the dead tree; and, thoroughly cowed, he scurried away down the hill-side.

The ram at once turned his attention to the ewe and her antagonist. But the second lynx, who had not found his task so simple as he had expected it to be, had no stomach left for one more difficult. The ewe was bleeding about the head, and would, of course, if she had been left to fight it out, have been worsted in a very short time. But the enemy had felt the weight of her blows upon his ribs, and had learned his lesson. For just a fraction of a second he turned, and defied the ram with a screeching snarl. But when that horned, black, battering head pitched forward at him he bounded aside like a furry grey ball and clambered to the top of the rock. Here he crouched for some moments, snarling viciously, his tufted ears set back against his neck, and his stump of a tail twitching with rage, while the ram minced to and fro beneath him, stamping defiance with his dainty hoofs. All at once the big cat doubled upon itself, slipped down the other side of the rock, and went gliding away through the stumps and hillocks like a grey shadow; and the ram, perhaps to conceal his elation, fell to grazing as if nothing out of the ordinary had happened. The ewe, on the other hand, seeing the danger so well past, took no thought of her torn face, but set herself to comfort and reassure the trembling lamb.

After this, through the slow, bright hours while the sun swung hotly over Ringwaak, the ram and his little family were undisturbed. An eagle, wheeling, wheeling, wheeling in the depths of the blue, looked down and noted the lamb. But he had no thought of attacking so well guarded a prey. The eagle had a wider outlook than others of the wild kindred, and he knew from of old many matters which the lynxes of Ringwaak had never learned till that day.

There were other visitors that came and glanced at the little family during the quiet content of their cud-chewing. A weasel ran restlessly over a hillock and peered down upon them with hard, bright eyes. The big ram, with his black face and huge, curling horns, was a novel phenomenon, and the weasel disappeared behind the hillock, only to appear again much nearer, around a clump of weeds. His curiosity was mingled with malicious contempt, till the ram chanced to rise and shake his head. Then the weasel saw the rope that wriggled from the ram's neck. Was it some new and terrible kind of snake? The weasel respected snakes when they were large and active; so he forgot his curiosity and slipped away from the dangerous neighbourhood.

The alarm of the weasel, however, was nothing to that of the wood-mice. While the ram was lying down they came out of their secret holes and played about securely, seeming to realise that the big animal's presence was a safeguard to them. But when he moved, and they saw the rope trail sinuously behind him through the scanty grass, they were almost paralysed with panic. Such a snake as that would require all the wood-mice on Ringwaak to assuage his appetite. They fairly fell backward into their burrows, where they crouched quivering in the darkest recesses, not daring to show their noses again for hours.

Neither weasel nor wood-mice, nor the chickadees which came to eye him saucily, seemed to the big ram worth a moment's attention. But when a porcupine, his quills rattling and bristling till he looked as big around as a half-bushel basket, strolled aimlessly by, the ram was interested and rose to his feet. The little, deep-set eyes of the porcupine passed over him with supremest indifference, and their owner began to gnaw at the bark of a hemlock sapling which grew at one side of the rock. To this gnawing he devoted his whole attention, with an eagerness that would have led one to think he was hungry—as, indeed, he was, not having had a full meal for nearly half an hour. The porcupine, of all nature's children, is the best provided for, having the food he loves lying about him at all seasons. Yet he is for ever eating, as if famine were in ambush for him just over the next hillock.

Seeing the high indifference of this small, bristling stranger, the ram stepped up and was just about to sniff at him inquiringly. Had he done so, the result would have been disastrous. He would have got a slap in the face from the porcupine's active and armed tail ; and his face would have straightway been transformed into a sort of anguished pincushion, stuck full of piercing, finely barbed quills. He would have paid dear for his ignorance of woodcraft—perhaps with the loss of an eye, or even with starvation from a quill working through into his gullet. But fortunately for him the ewe understood the peculiarities of porcupines. Just in time she noted his danger, and rudely butted him aside. He turned upon her in a fume of amazed indignation ; but in some way she made him understand that the porcupine was above all law, and not to be trifled with even by the lords of the wilderness. Very sulkily he lay down again, and the porcupine went on chiselling hemlock bark, serenely unconscious of the anger in the inscrutable yellow eyes that watched him from the ram's black face.

When the shadows grew long and luminous, toward evening, the ram, following some unexplained instinct, again mounted the topmost point of Ringwaak, and stood like a statue gazing over the vast, warm-coloured solitude of his new domain. His yellow eyes were placid with a great content. A little below him, the white lamb wobbling on weak legs at her side, the ewe pastured confidently, secure in the proved prowess of her protector. As the sun dropped below the far-off western rim of the forest, it seemed as if one wide wave of lucent rose-violet on a sudden flooded the world. Everything on Ringwaak—the ram's white fleece, the grey, bleached stumps, the brown hillocks, the green hollows and juniper clumps and poplar saplings—took on a palpitating aerial stain. Here and there in the distance the coils of the river gleamed clear gold ; and overhead, in the hollow amber-and-lilac arch of sky, the high-wandering night-hawks swooped with the sweet twang of smitten strings.

Down at the foot of the northern slope of Ringwaak lay a dense cedar swamp. Presently, out from the green fringe of the cedars, a bear thrust his head and cast a crafty glance about the open. Seeing the ram on the hill-top and the ewe with her lamb feeding near by, he sank back noiselessly into the cover of the cedars, and stole around toward the darkening eastern slope, where a succession of shrubby copses ran nearly to the top of the hill.

The bear was rank, rusty-coated, old, and hungry ; and he loved sheep. He was an adept in stalking this sweet-fleshed, timorous quarry, and breaking its neck with a well-directed blow as it dashed past him in a panic. Emerging from the swamp, he crept up the hill, taking cunning advantage of every bush, stump, and boulder. For all his awkward-looking bulk, he moved as lightly as a cat, making himself small, and twisting and flattening and effacing himself; and never a twig was allowed to snap, or a stone to clatter, under his broad, unerring feet.

About this time it chanced that the backwoodsman, who had been out nearly all day hunting for his lost prize, approached the edge of the forest at the other side of Ringwaak—and saw the figure of the ram against the sky. Then, seeing also the ewe with the lamb beside her, he knew that the game was his.

Below the top of the hill there was not a scrap of cover for a distance of perhaps twenty paces. The bear crept to the very last bush, the ram being occupied with the world at a distance, and the ewe busy at her pasturing. Behind the bush—a thick, spreading juniper—the bear crouched motionless for some seconds, his little red eyes aglow, and his jaws beginning to slaver with eagerness. Then selecting the unconscious ewe, because he knew she was not likely to desert the lamb, he rushed upon his intended victim.

The ewe, as it chanced, was about thirty-five or forty feet distant from the enemy, as he lunged out, black and appalling, from behind the juniper. At the same time the ram was not more than twenty or twenty-five feet distant, straight above the lamb, in a direction at right angles to the path of the bear. The ewe looked up with a startled bleat, wheeled, sprang nimbly before the lamb, and faced her doom dauntlessly, with lowered head.

The ram's mild gaze changed in a flash to one of cold, yellow savagery at the sight of the great black beast invading his kingdom. Down went his conquering head. For just a fraction of a second his sturdy body sagged back, as if he were about to sit down. This, so to speak, was the bending of the bow. Then he launched himself straight down the slope, all his strength, his weight, and the force of gravity combining to drive home that mighty stroke.

The bear had never, in all his experience with sheep, encountered one whose resistance was worth taking into account. The defiance of the ewe was less than nothing to him. But as he saw, from the corner of his eye, the huge bulk plunging down upon him, he hesitated, and half turned, with great paw upraised for a finishing blow.

He turned not quite in time, however, and his defence was not quite strenuous enough for the emergency. He struck like lightning, as a bear always can, but just before the stroke could find its mark the ram's armed forehead crashed into his ribs. The blow, catching him as it did, was irresistible. His claws tore off a patch of wool and skin, and ploughed red furrows across the ram's shoulder—but the next instant he was sprawling, his breath jarred from his lungs, against a stump some ten feet down the slope.

As the bear struggled to his feet, furious but half-daunted with amazement, the ram danced backward a pace or two on his nimble feet, as if showing off, and then delivered his second charge. The bewildered bear was again caught unready, irresolute as to whether he should fight or flee; and again he was knocked headlong, a yard or two further down the slope. His was not the dauntless spirit that most of his kindred would have shown in such a case, and he would willingly have made his escape at once if he had seen his way quite clear to do so. But at this moment, while he hesitated, he heard a man's voice shouting loudly, and saw the tall backwoodsman running toward him up the hill. This sight turned his alarm into a blind panic. His feet seemed to acquire wings as he tore madly away among the thickets. When he was hidden by the leafage, his path could still be followed by the crashing of dry branches and the clattering of loosened stones.

The woodsman had seen the whole incident, and was wild with enthusiasm over the prowess of his prize. Bears had been the most dreaded scourge of the settlement sheep-farmers, but now, as he proudly said to himself, he had a ram that could "lick a b'ar silly!" He bore no grudge on account of his discomfiture that morning beside the spring, but rather thought of it with appreciation as a further evidence of his favourite's cunning and prowess; and he foresaw, with a chuckle, that there were painful surprises in store for the bears of the Ringwaak range. He had made a wise purchase indeed when he saved that splendid beast from the butcher.

Hearing the man's voice, the ram had halted in dismay just when he was about to charge the bear a third time. He had no mind to go again into captivity. But, on the other hand, for all his lordliness of spirit, he felt that the man was his master. At first he lowered his head threateningly, as if about to attack; but when the backwoodsman shouted at him there was an authority in those tones which he could not withstand, and he sullenly drew aside. With a good-natured laugh, the man picked the lamb up in his arms, whereupon the mother stepped timidly to his side, evidently having no fear. The man rubbed her nose kindly, and stroked her ears, and gave her something from his pocket which she ate greedily ; and, as the ram looked on, the anger gradually faded out from his yellow eyes. At length the man turned and walked slowly down the hill, carrying the lamb. The ewe followed, crowding as close to him as she could, and stumbling as she went because her eyes were fixed upon her little one.

The ram hesitated. He looked at the hillside, the woods, and the sky beginning to grow chill with the onrush of twilight. Then he looked at the retreating figures. Suddenly he saw his world growing empty and desolate. With an anxious bleat he trotted after the ewe, and took his docile place a few feet behind the man's heels. The man glanced over his shoulders, and a smile of pleasure softened his rugged face. In a few moments the little procession disappeared in the woods, moving toward the settlement, and Ringwaak Hill was left solitary in the dusk, with the lonely notes of the night-hawks twanging over it.

RALPH CONNOR

B. 1860

THE PILOT AT SWAN CREEK

CATTLEMEN of the Swan Creek country still speak of the winter of the big blizzard. For three days it raged over the hills and down the coolies, sweeping clean before it cattle and horses by the hundred to destruction. It was that blizzard that piled up more than a hundred and fifty of the XL cattle over the cut bank at the bend of the Little Porcupine ; and there they were found a ghastly mass, after the first Chinook had licked up the snow banks. Not for the loss of cattle do I remember it, but for a loss that cut deep into my heart.

How well I remember the springlike airs of that bright December morning. A warm Chinook blew gently down through the hazy hills from the purple mountains at the horizon, and over all the sky arched a cloudless blue. We were sitting, the Pilot and I, with the door of our shack wide open to the sunny air, when Bill rode up.

" Fine spring day," said the Pilot.

" Too spring for me," answered Bill, with an ominous glance at the sky.

" You're pretty hard to please, Bill," said the Pilot, " I could stand about six weeks of this."

" Wall, you won't get six hours of it."

" Six hours ? Why not ? "

" Wall, if I kin read signs, there's, the tallest kind of a blizzard followin' up this blasted Chinook," answered Bill.

" How do you know ? " said the Pilot doubtfully.

" Everyhow," replied Bill, before whose experienced eye the earth and sky lay like an open book. " Why, look at them hills ; look at that mist."

" You don't call that mist," broke in the Pilot—" that's a lovely haze."

" Haze, is it ? " drawled Bill ; " wall, 'taint the kind of haze I aspire to this time o' year." Then he went on, " No ! before you're six hours older you'll see a blizzard that'll blow till you can't see your feet. Coming past the cañon trail—by the way, the old man up there is laid up rather—just along by the upper trail there, you know, I seen some deer makin' fer the bluffs. The cattle are dreadful oneasy, bunchin' and sniffin'. Oh, you just bet your gold dust there ain't no slouch of a blizzard a-hustlin' on the back of that there lovely haze."

"Where are you going?" I asked.

"Well, I'm goin' to run a bunch of cattle off the open into a coolie, where they won't be drove into next week, and where we kin find them without diggin'."

"Is the Old Timer in bed?" asked the Pilot.

"Oh, jest layin' round, you know. Nothin' too serious, I guess," replied Bill.

"Wall, I'm off," he continued, wheeling his broncho, "better make this your day at home. So long!" and off he went at a lope.

"Good-bye, Bill; come back for supper," sang out the Pilot after him.

"You watch me," he called back over his shoulder.

As the morning wore on, the haze deepened over the hills, and the sun lost its kindly, genial look and glared at the world with an angry, bloodshot eye. The Chinook wind fell into a dead calm. It may have been that Bill's ominous words impressed me, but it seemed that nature was gradually steadying herself for some tremendous shock. The Pilot could not settle to his work. He wandered about the room, looking out now at the glaring sun, and again at the distant purple mountains.

"I don't like it," he said uneasily, "and Gwen is alone up there with her sick father."

"Oh, he is not very ill," I said, rather more carelessly than I felt, and I saw that he detected the false tone in my voice.

After another restless half-hour I said, "I shall run across to the Muirs'. I promised to take dinner with them to-day. I'll be back right after." He nodded his head, still looking anxiously at the sky, which was beginning to take on a crimson tint.

I could not explain my own feeling of anxiety during the next hour, and as soon as I could decently leave I hurried back to my shack. I found the Pilot gone. On the table this note lay:—

"MY DEAR CONNOR—I can't rest here; Gwen may need help, and I have determined to ride up before the storm breaks to the Old Timer's ranch. Get Bill a bung-up supper. He will be tired and hungry.—Yours, THE PILOT."

I looked out of the window. Large, soft flakes were falling out of a liver-coloured sky, and the wind was rising. I hurried down to the Stopping Place stable, and found old Latour at the door looking anxiously up at the sky.

"He's near half-way dere," he said.

"Who?"

"De Pilot. I tell heem he's fool for go, but he say he's better be fool nor coward." Old Latour was quite excited. "Dat leel gurl, he's fader go seeck. De Pilot say, 'he go up to see heem.' I say, 'he no good see heem. Dis awful beeg bleazard he's not get trou.' 'How long he las'?' he say. 'Free day, mebbe,' I say. By Georje, he's mad for go den. 'Tree day, all alone. Not moush,' he say, and pull down hees saddle. I mak heem tak Louis. Das good pony for keep de trail. He's put hees nose into de storm. Noder feller he's put hees tail. Oh dat fine pony, Louis."

It seemed to comfort the old man a good deal to feel that the Pilot was riding a pony that could put his nose into the storm and overcome the tendency of the native cayuse to turn tail to it. I was very anxious, in spite of old Latour's confidence in his pony.

"How long has he been gone?" I asked.

"'Bout half an hour, yes, more," he said.

I looked at my watch; it was three o'clock. The snow was now coming down in long, slanting lines, and beginning to bite. The sky was almost hidden, and had lost all light and colour.

"He ought to be about the cañon now," I said, "and then he'll be all right."

"Yes," said the old man, "he's all right nuff, when he's pass de upper trail. Das bad spot dere."

I knew the place well. The highest point on the whole way, where the trail to the Meredith ranch leaves the main Porcupine trail.

"He'll be der now, sure nuff," continued he, pulling out his big silver watch from his waistband.

"I hope so," I said with all my heart, for even as I spoke I heard a strange sound, such as had never come to my ears before. It was not a roar, it was too soft for that. There was a hissing, beating sound, as if unseen wings, great and innumerable, were sweeping down upon us; an awesome heart-smiting sound. A moment more and the blizzard had struck. I had to fight my way step by step to my shack, and by the time I had gained my door the world had vanished from my sight behind this whirling, shimmering curtain of choking, blinding snow. I had hardly got my fire going when the door was pushed open and in came Bill.

"Wall!" he called out, "how d'ye fancy your lovely haze now? Ain't this a sneezer?" He looked round the room, then stared at me and said, "Whar's the Pilot?"

I handed him the note, saying, "I was down at Muir's, and found this when I came back."

He heard it through slowly, and then asked, "When did he start?"

"About half-past two, old Latour said."

He said no more, but took up his leather coat which he had just laid off.

"What are you going to do?" I asked.

"I ain't goin' to sit here if I know myself, with the Pilot somewhere into this blizzard," he answered almost savagely. "Got any brandy?"

"A flask full."

"Roll up a pair o' blankets, and git me half-a-dozen biscuits. I'm goin' down to the stable. Kin you find your way down there? Bring 'em down."

I felt the bitterness in his voice, and I knew he was blaming me for not following the Pilot at once.

In ten minutes I was at the stable with the blankets done up in two rolls and the biscuits and brandy in my pocket. I found Bill saddling the Duke's black broncho, Jingo, who, having been in the stable for two weeks, was like to knock things to pieces. Bill, however, paid no attention to the antics, but stood up close to him while he cinched the saddle and lashed on the one blanket behind it. The black brute squealed and began to plunge, but Bill kept close to him, tying his tongs as regardless of his antics as if he were a lamb. When all was snug and taut he jerked the tie-line loose, flung the long bridle reins over the head of the rearing animal, then with a fierce grip he seized with both hands the rings of the bit, ran the horse back out of his stall, and, with a mighty wrench, hurled him clear off his feet on to his side.

"Git up!" he yelled, and Jingo sprang to his feet, more surprised and humbled than he had ever been in his whole previous history. "Stand thar, will you!" said Bill in a terrible voice; and Jingo stood quite still.

"What are you going to do?" asked Bill, seeing me with my horse saddled and all ready.

"Going to follow you," I said shortly, for his words and manner had so stung me that I had resolved to follow him till I dropped.

He looked at me a moment in silence, then suddenly stretching out his hand, he said in a husky voice:

"Ye're all right, pard; I take it all back," and without a word he swung himself on to his saddle and rode out into the blizzard.

The air was thick with whirling snow, the wind seemed to be blowing from every quarter at once. Every vestige of earth and sky was shut out from sight by the snow-cloud that seemed to wrap one's head about, filling eyes and throat and shutting off the breath. By what means he found and kept the trail I know not, but not once did Bill falter. On he pressed against and through that wall of blinding, choking snow. After the first quarter of a mile, during which it was difficult to keep him in sight, Jingo settled down into a long, easy, steady lope, as if he knew that serious business was in hand. Occasionally he dropped the beaten track, but a plunge or two and he was on the trail again. Keeping his black tail just before my pony's nose, I had no serious trouble in fighting my way through the blizzard. It is not the cold, nor the depth of the snow, nor the stress of the driving storm that makes the blizzard dangerous. It is its power to shut out the world and to utterly bewilder that strikes terror to the heart. Some men and some horses can make their way, however, without hesitation. Such a man was Bill, and such a horse Jingo.

For an hour we fought along, now slowly feeling our way and then breaking into a lope where the lie of the ground made the trail easier to keep. Suddenly Bill pulled up, and, dismounting, faced Jingo about and gave me his reins to hold.

"Keep 'em just as they are," he said. "I rather think the trail breaks off about here into the cañon. Mind you keep 'em just so. I don't want to lose my direction."

Even as he spoke he passed out of sight, but in a moment or two he reappeared and said :

" It's pretty tough keepin' your bearin's when you're tryin' to find a trail. I want you to count ten and then holler and keep on till I come back."

In a few minutes—they seemed hours—he came back and took his horse.

" You stay here till you hear me holler," he said, and disappeared again.

Soon his call came, and in a short time we were following the trail down into the cañon. Here the track was easier to find, and before long we were at the Old Timer's door.

" I guess I'll just peek in," said Bill in a low voice ; " there ain't no occasion to make no row, case he ain't there."

He opened the door gently and passed in, but came out almost immediately.

" The good Lord help us, he ain't been there," he said with a kind of gasp.

" You didn't see Gwen ? " I asked.

" No. Saw Joe. Look here, I'm goin' back to that upper trail," he added. " I think p'r'aps I'd be better alone."

" You go to thunder ! " I replied ; " don't lie to me. Anyway, I'm going with you."

He came close up to me.

" You're a white man," he said earnestly, " but I ain't comin' back till I find him, and there ain't no need for you——" He paused.

For an answer I turned my horse towards the gate. Bill swung himself up into his saddle, and in a few strides Jingo was leading me once more.

" Blamed if you ain't white—clear to the bone," he said, turning in his saddle towards me, and somehow his words gave me a great thrill of joy and put new courage into my heart.

Back through the cañon we rode and up to the open again. Once more Bill found the upper trail and came hurrying back to me.

" We ain't got half a minute to spare," he said anxiously. " It'll be dark in half an hour, and then God Almighty help us."

We went along at what seemed to me a reckless pace. But the black horse never swerved from his long, steady lope. After we had gone about half a mile Jingo suddenly stopped short. Before I could ask the cause, Bill was off and down in the snow exploring.

"Guess we've struck the scent," he called out. "Come here."

There, half covered by the drifting snow, lay a sleigh overturned, with its load strewn about. "Whar's the team? Whar's the driver?" Bill shouted to me. "Thar's where the Pilot is. You bet he's monkeyin' round pullin' some fool out o' the snow."

He dropped on his hands and knees, feeling all about, and finally vanishing into the darkening mist of blinding snow.

"Come on!" I heard him call; and on coming up I found him with a wisp of hay in his hand. "They've gone down the coolie, I do believe. Come on!" he cried. He was excited as I had never seen him before. He flung himself into his saddle and shouted to Jingo, who plunged headlong down the coolie. I followed as best I could, and after a few minutes' hard work came upon Bill standing at his horse's head, in the shelter of a poplar bluff. "Listen!" he said, holding up his hand, and we stood listening for our lives. But only the hissing boom of the blizzard beat upon our ears.

"I swear I heard something just as I—there——" He put up his hand again, and through the storm came the sound of a voice singing:

God in the midst of her doth dwell,
Nothing shall her remove.

Bill dropped on his knees, and taking off his cap he sobbed out: "Thank the good God! That's him. It's the Pilot." Then he sprang to his feet and yelled: "Hello! You dod-gasted fool-hunter, where in thunder an' lightnin' air you, anyway?"

"Hello, Bill! Here you are, old boy." In the bluff we found them; the Pilot livid with cold and near the last stage of exhaustion, holding up a stranger as they tramped wearily the path they had beaten around the horses to keep themselves from freezing to death.

"Oh, Bill," cried the Pilot, making a brave attempt at a smile, "you're a great man!"

Bill held him at arm's length a moment, and then said solemnly:

"Wall! I've come into contact with some fools, idjits, blanked idjits"—Bill had lost his grip of himself for a moment—"in my life, but such a blanked, conglomerated idjit it hasn't been my pleasure to mix with up to this point in my career."

The Pilot by this time was in fits of hysterical laughter. "And," continued Bill, with increased solemnity, "I cherish the conviction——"

"Oh, Bill," shrieked the Pilot, "for Heaven's sake, stop! You'll kill me if you say another word." Then Bill paused, looked anxiously into the Pilot's face, and saying, "Here! Let's get home," rolled a blanket round him and set him on Louis.

"You won't need your hands; he'll follow all right," he said as he mounted Jingo. "Come on."

"Wait, Bill!" cried the Pilot. "What about this man? He's almost played out."

"Played out, is he?" snorted Bill contemptuously. "If he's as strong as he smells he ought to get through. Any man that don't know when to leave whisky alone shouldn't travel without his keeper."

"But we can't leave him here!" pleaded the Pilot.

"Can't, eh! You watch my smoke," said Bill. "If he can't follow with two horses he can't with three."

"Oh, I say, Bill! take him along," said the Pilot earnestly.

"Look here!" cried Bill impatiently, "do you think I'm a blasted snow-plough? Come on! Every second counts. He'll follow all right." And so he did, and fighting our way through the storm, and dark, and cold now grown intense, we made the cañon, and soon after the Old Timer's door.

Bill carried the Pilot in and laid him on a pile of skins before the fire. He was not badly frozen, but he was utterly exhausted. During the three days of the blizzard he lay weak and faint, nursed by Bill day and night. With all a mother's tenderness in touch and tone, Bill waited on his every wish, breaking forth now and then in loving wrath upon his folly for going back after the stranger.

"But he would have been lost, Bill," said the Pilot gently, after one of Bill's outbursts.

"Wall, let him," growled Bill.

"Bill," answered the Pilot softly "we were lost once, you know."

And Bill turned and looked away and said not a word, remembering, I have no doubt, Him who came to seek the lost. The Pilot never was the same again, but long after, when the first bitterness of his going from us was over, Bill said one day to me: "That's how he got his death, seekin' after that lost idjit. It was all blamed foolishness, but I guess p'r'aps that's the best after all."

SIR GILBERT PARKER, BART.

B. 1861

THE CRIMSON FLAG

TALK and think as one would, The Woman was striking to see ; with marvellous flaxen hair and a joyous violet eye.

She was all pulse and dash ; but she was as much less beautiful than the manager's wife as Tom Liffey was as nothing beside the manager himself ; and one would care little to name the two women in the same breath if the end had been different. When The Woman came to Little Goshen there were others of her class there, but they were of a commoner sort and degree. She was the queen of a lawless court, though she never, from first to last, spoke to one of those others who were her people ; neither did she hold commerce with any of the ordinary miners, save Pretty Pierre—but he was more gambler than miner—and he went, when the matter was all over, and told her some things that stripped her soul naked before her eyes. Pierre had a wonderful tongue. It was only the gentlemen-diggers—and there were many of them at Little Goshen—who called upon her when the lights were low ; and then there was a good deal of muffled mirth in the white house among the pines. The rougher miners made no quarrel with this, for the gentlemen-diggers were popular enough ; they were merely sarcastic and humorous, and said things which, coming to The Woman's ears, made her very merry ; for she herself had an abundant wit, and had spent wild hours with clever men.

She did not resent the playful insolence that sent a dozen miners to her house in the dead of night with a crimson flag, which they quietly screwed to her roof, and paint, with which they deftly put a wide stripe of scarlet round the cornice, and another round the basement. In the morning, when she saw what had been done, she would not have the paint removed nor the flag taken down ; for, she said, the stripes looked very well, and the other would show that she was always at home.

Now, the notable thing was that Heldon, the manager, was in The Woman's house on the night this was done. Tom Liffey, the lumpish guide and trapper, saw him go in ; and, days afterwards, he said to Pierre : " Divils me own ! but this is a bad hour for Heldon's wife—she with a face like a princess and eyes like the fear o' God. Nivir a wan did I see like her, since I came out of Erin with a clatter of hoofs behind me and a squall on the sea before. There's wimmin there wid cheeks like roses and buttermilk, and a touch that'd make y'r heart pound on y'r ribs ; but none that's grander than Heldon's wife. To lave her for that other, standin' hip-high in her shame, is temptin' the fires of Heaven, say I, that basted the sinners o' Sodom."

Pierre, pausing between the whiffs of a cigarette, said : " So ? But you know more of catching foxes in winter, and climbing mountains in summer, and the grip of the arm of an Injin girl, than of these things. You are young, quite young in the world, Tom Liffey."

" Young I may be, with a glint o' grey at me temples from a night o' trouble beyand in the hills ; but I'm the man, an' the only man, that's climbed to the glacier-top—God's Playground, as they call it ; and nivir a dirty trick have I done to Injin girl or any other ; and be damned to you there ! say I."

" Sometimes I think you are as foolish as Shon M'Gann," compassionately replied the half-breed. " You have almighty virtue, and you did that brave trick of the glacier ; but great men have fallen. You are not dead yet. Still, as you say, Heldon's wife is noble to see. She is grave and cold, and speaks little ; but there is something in her which is not of the meek of the earth. Some women say nothing, and suffer and forgive, and take such as Heldon back to their bosoms ; but there are others—— I remember a woman—well, it is no matter, it was long ago ; but they two are as if born of one mother ; and what comes of this will be mad play—mad play."

" Ov coorse his wife may not get to know of it, and——"

" Not get to know it ! 'Tsh, you are a child——"

" Faith, I'll say what I think, and that in y'r face ! Maybe he'll tire of the handsome rip—for handsome she is, like a yellow lily growin' out o' mud—and go back to his lawful wife, that believes he's at the mines when he's drinkin' and colloquin' wid a fly-away."

Pierre slowly wheeled till he had the Irishman straight in his eye. Then he said in a low, cutting tone : " I suppose your heart aches for the beautiful lady, eh ? " Here he screwed his slight forefinger into Tom's breast ; then he added sharply : " By the holy Heaven, but you make me angry ! You talk too much. Such men get into trouble. And keep down the riot of that sympathy of yours, Tom Liffey, or

Val C. Strong.

Gilbert Parker

(Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart.)

you'll walk on the edge of knives one day. And now take an inch of whisky and ease your anxious soul. Voilà !" After a moment he added : " Women work these things out for themselves."

Then the two left the hut, and amiably strolled together to the centre of the village, where they parted.

It was as Pierre had said : the woman would work the thing out for herself. Later that evening Heldon's wife stood cloaked and veiled in the shadows of the pines, facing the house with The Crimson Flag. Her eyes shifted ever from the door to the flag, which was stirred by the light breeze. Once or twice she shivered as with cold, but instantly she stilled again, and watched. It was midnight. Here and there beyond in the village a light showed, and straggling voices floated faintly towards her. For a long time no sound came from the house. But at last she heard a laugh. At that she drew something from her pocket, and held it firmly in her hand. Once she turned and looked at another house far up on the hill where lights were burning. It was Heldon's house—her home. A sharp sound as of anguish and anger escaped her ; then she fastened her eyes on the door in front of her.

At that moment Tom Liffey was standing with his hands on his hips looking at Heldon's home on the hill ; and he said some rumbling words, then strode down on the road, and suddenly paused near the wife. He did not see her. He faced the door at which she was looking, and shook his fist at it.

" A murrain on y'r sowl ! " said he, " as there's plague in y'r body, and hell in the slide of y'r feet, like the trail of the red spider. And out o' that come ye, Heldon, for I know y're there. Out of that, ye beast ! . . . But how can ye go back—you that's rolled in that sewer—to the loveliest woman that ever trod the neck o' the world ! Damned y' are in every joint o' y'r frame, and damned is y'r sowl, say I, for bringing sorrow to her ; and I hate you as much for that, as I could worship her was she not your wife and a lady o' blood, God save her ! "

Then shaking his fist once more, he swung away slowly down the road. During this the wife's teeth held together as though they were of a piece. She looked after Tom Liffey and smiled ; but it was a dreadful smile.

" He worships me, that common man—worships me ! " she said. " This man who was my husband has shamed me, left me. Well——"

The door of the house opened ; a man came out. His wife leaned a little forward, and something clicked ominously in her hand. But a voice came up the road towards them through the clear air—the voice of Tom Liffey. The husband paused to listen ; the wife mechanically did the same. The husband remembered this afterwards ; it was the key to, and the beginning of, a tragedy. These are the words the Irishman sang :

She was a queen, she stood up there before me,
My blood went roarin' when she touched my hand ;
She kissed me on the lips, and then she swore me
To die for her—and happy was the land !

A new and singular look came into her face. It transformed her. " That," she said in a whisper to herself—" that ! He knows the way."

As her husband turned towards his home, she turned also. He heard the rustle of garments, and he could just discern the cloaked figure in the shadows. He hurried on ; the figure flitted ahead of him. A fear possessed him in spite of his will. He turned back. The figure stood still for a moment, then followed him. He braced himself, faced about, and walked towards it ; it stopped and waited. He had not the courage. He went back again swiftly towards the house he had left. Again he looked behind him. The figure was standing, not far, in the pines. He wheeled suddenly towards the house, turned a key in the door, and entered.

Then the wife went to that which had been her home. Heldon did not go thither until the first flush of morning. Pierre, returning from an all-night sitting at cards, met him, and saw the careworn look on his face. The half-breed smiled. He knew that the event was doubling on the man. When Heldon reached his house, he went to his wife's room. It was locked. Then he walked down to his mines with a miserable shame and anger at his heart. He did not pass The Crimson Flag. He went by another way.

That evening, in the dusk, a woman knocked at Tom Liffey's door. He opened it.

" Are you alone ? " she said.

" I am alone, lady."

" I will come in," she added.

" You will—come in ? " he faltered.

She drew near him, and reached out and gently caught his hand.

"Ah!" he said, with a sound almost like a sob in its intensity, and the blood flushed to his hair.

He stepped aside, and she entered. In the light of the candle her eye burned into his, but her face wore a shining coldness. She leaned towards him.

"You said you could worship me," she whispered, "and you cursed him. Well—worship me—altogether—and that will curse him, as he has killed me."

"Dear lady!" he said, in an awed, overwhelmed murmur; and he fell back to the wall.

She came towards him. "Am I not beautiful?" she urged. She took his hand. His eyes swam with hers. But his look as different from hers, though he could not know that. His was the madness of a man in a dream; hers was a painful thing. The Furies dwelt in her. She softly lifted his hand above his head, and whispered: "Swear." And she kissed him. Her lips were icy, though he did not think so. The blood tossed in his veins. He swore; but, doing so, he could not conceive all that would be required of him. He was hers, body and soul, and she had resolved on a grim thing. . . . In the darkness, they left the hut and passed into the woods, and slowly up through the hills.

Heldon returned to his home that night to find it empty. There were no servants. There was no wife. Her cat and dog lay dead upon the hearth-rug. Her clothing was cut into strips. Her wedding-dress was a charred heap on the fireplace. Her jewellery lay molten with it. Her portrait had been torn from its frame.

An intolerable fear possessed him. Drops of sweat hung on his forehead and his hands. He fled towards the town. He bit his fingernails till they bled as he passed the house in the pines. He lifted his arm as if the flappings of The Crimson Flag were blows in his face.

At last he passed Tom Liffey's hut. He saw Pierre coming from it. The look on the gambler's face was one of gloomy wonder. His fingers trembled as he lighted a cigarette, and that was an unusual thing. The form of Heldon edged within the light. Pierre dropped the match and said to him: "You are looking for your wife?"

Heldon bowed his head. The other threw open the door of the hut. "Come in here," he said. They entered. Pierre pointed to a woman's hat on the table. "Do you know that?" he asked, huskily, for he was moved. But Heldon only nodded dazedly.

Pierre continued : " I was to have met Tom Liffey here to-night. He is not here. You hoped—I suppose—to see your wife in your—home. She is not there. He left a word on paper for me. I have torn it up. Writing is the enemy of man. But I know where he is gone. I know also where your wife has gone."

Heldon's face was of a hateful paleness. . . . They passed out into the night.

" Where are you going ? " Heldon said.

" To God's Playground, if we can get there."

" To God's Playground ? To the glacier-top ? You are mad."

" No, but he and she were mad. Come on." Then he whispered something, and Heldon gave a great cry, and they plunged into the woods.

In the morning the people of Little Goshen, looking towards the glacier, saw a flag (they knew afterwards that it was crimson) flying on it. Near it were two human figures. A miner, looking through a field-glass, said that one figure was crouching by the flagstaff, and that it was a woman. The other figure near was a man. As the morning wore on, they saw upon a crag of ice below the sloping glacier two men looking upwards towards the flag. One of them seemed to shriek out, and threw up his hands, and made as if to rush forward ; but the other drew him back.

Heldon knew what revenge and disgrace may be at their worst. In vain he tried to reach God's Playground. Only one man knew the way, and he was dead upon it—with Heldon's wife : two shameless suicides. . . . When he came down from the mountain the hair upon his face was white, though that upon his head remained black as it had always been. And those frozen figures stayed there like statues with that other crimson flag ; until, one day, a great-bodied wind swept out of the north, and, in pity, carried them down a bottomless fissure.

But long before this happened, The Woman had fled from Little Goshen in the night, and her house was burned to the ground.

THE ABSURD ROMANCE OF P'TITE LOUISON

SIR GILBERT PARKER

THE five brothers lived with Louison, three miles from Pontiac, and Medallion came to know them first through having sold them, at an auction, a slice of an adjoining farm. He had been invited to their home, intimacy had grown, and afterwards, stricken with a severe illness, he had been taken into the household and kept there till he was well again. The night of his arrival, Louison, the sister, stood with a brother on either hand—Octave and Florian—and received him with a courtesy more stately than usual, an expression of the reserve and modesty of her single state. This maidenly dignity was at all times shielded by the five brothers, who treated her with a constant and reverential courtesy. There was something signally suggestive in their homage, and Medallion concluded at last that it was paid not only to the sister, but to something that gave her great importance in their eyes.

He puzzled long, and finally decided that Louison had a romance. There was something which suggested it in the way they said "P'tite Louison"; in the manner they avoided all gossip regarding marriages and marriage-feasting; in the way they deferred to her on questions of etiquette (as, for instance, Should the eldest child be given the family name of the wife or a Christian name from her husband's family?). And P'tite Louison's opinion was accepted instantly as final, with satisfied nods on the part of all the brothers, and with whispers of "How clever! how adorable! such beauty!"

P'tite Louison affected never to hear these remarks, but looked complacently straight before her, stirring the spoon in her cup, or benignly passing the bread and butter. She was quite aware of the homage paid to her, and she gracefully accepted the fact that she was an object of interest.

Medallion had not the heart to laugh at the adoration of the brothers or at the outlandish sister, for, though she was angular, and sallow and thin, and her hands were large and red, there was a something deep in her eyes, a curious quality in her carriage commanding respect. She had ruled these brothers, had been worshipped by them, for near half a century, and the romance they had kept alive had produced a grotesque sort of truth and beauty in the admiring "P'tite Louison"—an affectionate name for her greatness, like "The Little Corporal" for Napoleon. She was not little, either, but above the middle height, and her hair was well streaked with grey.

Her manner toward Medallion was not marked by any affectation. She was friendly in a kind, impersonal way, much as a nurse cares for a patient, and she never relaxed a sort of old-fashioned courtesy, which might have been trying in such close quarters, were it not for the real simplicity of the life, and the spirit and lightness of their race. One night Florian—there were Florian and Octave and Felix and Isidore and Emile—the eldest, drew Medallion aside from the others, and they walked together by the river. Florian's air suggested confidence and mystery, and soon, with a voice of hushed suggestion, he told Medallion the romance of P'tite Louison. And each of the brothers at different times during the next fortnight did the same, differing scarcely at all in details, or choice of phrase or meaning, and not at all in general facts and essentials. But each, as he ended, made a different exclamation.

"Voilà ! so sad, so wonderful ! She keeps the ring—dear P'tite Louison," said Florian, the eldest.

"Alors ! she gives him a legacy in her will ! Sweet P'tite Louison," said Octave.

"Mais ! the governor and the archbishop admire her—P'tite Louison," said Felix, nodding confidently at Medallion.

"Bien ! you should see the linen and the petticoats !" said Isidore, the humorous one of the family. "He was great—she was an angel—P'tite Louison !"

"Attends ! what love ! what history ! what passion !—the perfect P'tite Louison !" cried Emile, the youngest, the most sentimental. "Ah, Molière !" he added, as if calling on the master to rise and sing the glories of this daughter of romance.

Isidore's tale was after this fashion :

"I ver' well remember the first of it ; and the last of it—who can tell ? He was an actor—oh, so droll, that ! Tall, ver' smart, and he play in theatre at Montreal. It is in the winter. P'tite Louison visit Montreal. She walk past the theatre and, as she go by, she slip on the snow and fall. Out from a door with a jomp come M'sieu' Hadrian, and pick her up. And when he see the purty face of P'tite Louison, his eyes go all fire, and he clasp her hand to his breast.

" ' Ma'm'selle ! Ma'm'selle ! ' he say, ' we must meet again ! ' "

" She thank him and hurry away quick. Next day we are on the river, and P'tite Louison try to do the Dance of the Blue Fox on the ice. While she do it, some one come up swift and catch her hand and say, ' Ma'm'selle, let's do it together '—like that ! It take her breath away. It is M'sieu' Hadrian. He not seem like the other men she know, but he have a sharp look, he is smooth in the face, and he smile kind like a woman. P'tite Louison, she give him her hand, and they run away, and every one stop to look. It is a gran' sight ! M'sieu' Hadrian laugh, and his teeth shine, and the ladies say things of him, and he tell P'tite Louison that she look ver' fine, and walk like a queen. I am there that day, and I see all, and I think it dam good. I say, ' That P'tite Louison, she beat them all '—I am only twelve year old then. When M'sieu' Hadrian leave he give her two seats for the theatre, and we go. Bagosh ! that is grand thing that play, and M'sieu' Hadrian, he is a prince ; and when he say to his minister, ' But no, my lord, I will marry out of my star, and where my heart go, not as the State wills,' he look down at P'tite Louison, and she go all red, and some of the women look at her, and there is a whisper all roun'.

" Nex' day he come to the house where we stay, but the Curé come also pretty soon and tell her she must go home—he say an actor is not good company. Never mind. And so we come out home. Well, what you think ? Nex' day M'sieu' Hadrian come too, and we have dam good time—Florian, Octave, Felix, Emile, they all sit and say bully-good to him all the time. Holy, what fine stories he tell ! And he talk about P'tite Louison, and his eyes get wet, and Emile he say his prayers to him—bagosh ! yes, I think. Well, at last, what you guess ? M'sieu' he come and come, and at last one day, he say that he leave Montreal and go to New York, where he get a good place in a big theatre—his time in Montreal is finish. So he speak to Florian and say he want to marry P'tite Louison, and he say, of course, that he is not marry and he have money. But he is a Protestan', and the Curé at first ver' mad, bagosh !

" But at last when he give a hunder' dollars to the Church, the Curé say yes. All happy that way for while. P'tite Louison, she get ready quick—sapré, what fine things had she! and it is all to be done in a week, while the theatre in New York wait for M'sieu'. He sit there with us, and play on the fiddle, and sing songs, and act plays, and help Florian in the barn, and Octave to mend the fence, and the Curé to fix the grape-vines on his wall. He show me and Emile how to play sword-sticks; and he pick flowers and fetch them to P'tite Louison, and teach her how to make an omelette and a salad like the chef of the Louis Quinze Hotel, so he say. Bagosh, what a good time we have! But first one, then another, he get a choke-throat when he think that P'tite Louison go to leave us, and the more we try the more we are bagosh fools. And that P'tite Louison, she kiss us hevery one, and say to M'sieu' Hadrian, 'Charles, I love you, but I cannot go!' He laugh at her, and say, 'Voilà! we will take them all with us,' and P'tite Louison she laugh. That night a thing happen. The Curé come, and he look ver' mad, and he frown and he say to M'sieu' Hadrian before us all, 'M'sieu', you are married!'

"Sapré! that P'tite Louison get pale like snow, and we all stan' roun' her close and say to her quick, 'Courage, P'tite Louison!' M'sieu' Hadrian then look at the priest and say, 'No, M'sieu', I was married ten years ago; my wife drink and go wrong, and I get divorce. I am free like the wind.'

"'You are not free,' the Curé say quick. 'Once married, married till death. The Church cannot marry you again, and I command Louison to give you up.'

"P'tite Louison stand like stone. M'sieu' turn to her. 'What shall it be, Louison?' he say. 'You will come with me?'

"'Kiss me, Charles,' she say, 'and tell me good-bye till—till you are free.'

"He look like a madman. 'Kiss me once, Charles,' she say, 'and let me go.'

"And he come to her and kiss her on the lips once, and he say, 'Louison, come with me. I will never give you up.'

"She draw back to Florian. 'Good-bye, Charles!' she say. 'I will wait as long as you will. Mother of God! how hard it is to do right!' she say, and then she turn and leave the room.

"M'sieu' Hadrian, he give a long sigh. 'It was my one chance,' he say. 'Now the devil take it all!' Then he nod and say to the Curé, 'We'll thrash this out at Judgment Day, M'sieu'. I'll meet you there—you and that other woman that spoiled me.'

"He turn to Florian and the rest of us, and shake hands, and say, 'Take care of Louison. Thank you. Good-bye!' Then he start toward the door, but stumble, for he look sick. 'Give me a drink,' he say, and begin to cough a little—a queer sort of rattle. Florian give him big drink, and he toss it off—whiff! 'Thank you,' he say, and start again, and we see him walk away over the hill ver' slow—an' he never come back! But every year there come from New York a box of flowers, and every year P'tite Louison send him a 'Merci, Charles, mille fois. Dieu te garde.' It is so every year for twenty-five year."

"Where is he now?" asked Medallion.

Isidore shook his head, then lifted his eyes religiously. "Waiting for Judgment Day and P'tite Louison," he answered.

"Dead!" cried Medallion. "How long?"

"Twenty year."

"But the flowers—the flowers?"

"He left word for them to be sent just the same, and the money for it."

Medallion turned and took off his hat reverently, as if a soul were passing from the world, but it was only P'tite Louison going out into the garden.

"She thinks him living?" he asked gently, as he watched Louison.

"Yes; we have no heart to tell her. And then he wish it so. And the flowers kep' coming."

"Why did he wish it so?"

Isidore mused a while.

"Who can tell? Perhaps a whim. He was a great actor—ah, yes, sublime!" he said.

Medallion did not reply, but walked slowly down to where P'tite Louison was picking berries. His hat was still off.

"Let me help you, Mademoiselle," he said softly. And henceforth he was as foolish as her brothers.

THE SINGING OF THE BEES

SIR GILBERT PARKER

"MOTHER, didst thou not say thy prayers last night?"

"Twice, my child."

"Once before the little shrine, and once beside my bed—is it not so?"

"It is so, my Fanchon. What hast thou in thy mind?"

"Thou didst pray that the storm die in the hills, and the flood cease, and that my father come before it was again the hour of prayer. It is now the hour. Canst thou not hear the storm and the wash of the flood? And my father does not come!"

"My Fanchon, God is good."

"When thou wast asleep I rose from my bed, and in the dark I kissed the feet of—Him—on the little Calvary, and I did not speak, but in my heart I called."

"What didst thou call, my child?"

"I called to my father: 'Come back! come back!'"

"Thou shouldst have called to God, my Fanchon."

"I loved my father, and I called to him."

"Thou shouldst love God."

"I knew my father first. If God loved thee, He would answer thy prayer. Dost thou not hear the cracking of the cedar trees and the cry of the wolves?—they are afraid. All day and all night the rain and wind come down, and the birds and wild fowl have no peace. I kissed His feet, and my throat was full of tears, but I called in my heart. Yet the storm and the dark stay, and my father does not come."

"Let us be patient, my Fanchon."

"He went to guide the priest across the hills. Why does not God guide him back?"

"My Fanchon, let us be patient."

"The priest was young, and my father has grey hair."

"Wilt thou not be patient, my child!"

"He filled the knapsack of the priest with food better than his own, and—thou didst not see it—put money in his hand."

"My own, the storm may pass."

"He told the priest to think upon our home as a little nest God set up here for such as he."

"There are places of shelter in the hills for thy father, my Fanchon."

"And when the priest prayed, 'That Thou mayst bring us safely to this place where we would go,' my father said so softly, 'We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord!'"

"My Fanchon, thy father hath gone this trail many times."

"The prayer was for the out-trail, not the in-trail, my mother."

"Nay, I do not understand thee."

"A swarm of bees came singing through the room last night, my mother. It was dark and I could not see, but there was a sweet smell, and I heard the voices."

"My child, thou art tired with watching, and thy mind is full of fancies. Thou must sleep."

"I am tired of watching. Through the singing of the bees as they passed over my bed I heard my father's voice. I could not hear the words, they seemed so far away, like the voices of the bees; and I did not cry out, for the tears were in my throat. After a moment the room was so still that it made my heart ache."

"Oh, my Fanchon, my child, thou dost break my heart! Dost thou not know the holy words?—

"And their souls do pass like singing bees, where no man may follow. These are they whom God gathereth out of the whirlwind and the desert, and bringeth home in a goodly swarm."

Night drew close to the earth, and as suddenly as a sluice-gate drops and holds back a flood the storm ceased. Along the crest of the hills there slowly grew a line of light, and then the serene moon came up and on, persistent to give the earth love where it had had punishment. Divers flocks of clouds, camp-followers of the storm, could not abash her. But once she drew shrinking back behind a slow troop of them, for down at the bottom of a gorge lay a mountaineer, face upward and unmoving, as he had lain since a rock loosened beneath him, and the depths swallowed him. If he had had ears to hear, he would have answered the soft, bitter cries which rose from a hut on the Voshti Hills above him: "Michel, Michel, art thou gone?"

"Come back; oh, my father, come back!"

But perhaps it did avail that there were lighted candles before a little shrine, and that a mother, in her darkness, kissed the feet of One on a Calvary.

OLIVE SCHREINER

B. 1862

IN A FAR-OFF WORLD

THERE is a world in one of the far-off stars, and things do not happen here as they happen there.

In that world were a man and woman ; they had one work, and they walked together side by side on many days, and were friends—and that is a thing that happens now and then in this world also.

But there was something in that star-world that there is not here. There was a thick wood ; where the trees grew closest, and the stems were interlocked, and the summer sun never shone, there stood a shrine. In the day all was quiet, but at night, when the stars shone or the moon glinted on the tree-tops, and all was quiet below, if one crept here quite alone and knelt on the steps of the stone altar, and uncovering one's breast, so wounded it that the blood fell down on the altar steps, then whatever he who knelt there wished for was granted him. And all this happens, as I said, because it is a far-off world, and things often happen there as they do not happen here.

Now, the man and woman walked together ; and the woman wished well to the man. One night when the moon was shining so that the leaves of all the trees glinted, and the waves of the sea were silvery, the woman walked alone to the forest. It was dark there ; the moonlight fell only in little flecks on the dead leaves under her feet, and the branches were knotted tight overhead. Farther in it got darker ; not even a fleck of moonlight shone. Then she came to the shrine : she knelt down before it and prayed ; there came no answer. Then she uncovered her breast ; with a sharp two-edged stone that lay there she wounded it. The drops dripped slowly down on to the stone, and a voice cried, " What do you seek ? "

She answered, " There is a man ; I hold him nearer than anything. I would give him the best of all blessings."

The voice said, " What is it ? "

The girl said, " I know not, but that which is most good for him I wish him to have."

The voice said, " Your prayer is answered ; he shall have it."

Then she stood up. She covered her breast and held the garment tight upon it with her hand, and ran out of the forest, and the dead leaves fluttered under her feet. Out in the moonlight the soft air was blowing, and the sand glittered on the beach. She ran along the smooth shore, then suddenly she stood still. Out across the water there was something moving. She shaded her eyes and looked. It was a boat ; it was sliding swiftly over the moonlit water out to sea. One stood upright in it ; the face the moonlight did not show, but the figure she knew. It was passing swiftly ; it seemed as if no one propelled it ; the moonlight's shimmer did not let her see clearly, and the boat was far from shore, but it seemed almost as if there was another figure sitting in the stern. Faster and faster it glided over the water, away, away. She ran along the shore ; she came no nearer it. The garment she held closed fluttered open ; she stretched out her arms, and the moonlight shone on her long loose hair.

Then a voice beside her whispered, " What is it ? "

She cried, " With my blood I bought the best of all gifts for him. I have come to bring it him ! He is going from me ! "

The voice whispered softly, " Your prayer was answered. It has been given him."

She cried, " What is it ? "

The voice answered, " It is that he might leave you."

The girl stood still.

Far out at sea the boat was lost to sight beyond the moonlight sheen.

The voice spoke softly, " Art thou contented ? "

She said, " I am contented."

At her feet the waves broke in long ripples softly on the shore.

THE ARTIST'S SECRET

OLIVE SCHREINER

THERE was an artist once, and he painted a picture. Other artists had colours richer and rarer, and painted more notable pictures. He painted his with one colour; there was a wonderful red glow on it; and the people went up and down, saying, "We like the picture; we like the glow."

The other artists came and said, "Where does he get his colour from?" They asked him, and he smiled and said, "I cannot tell you"; and worked on with his head bent low.

And one went to the Far East and bought costly pigments, and made a rare colour and painted, but after a time the picture faded. Another read in the old books, and made a colour rich and rare, but when he had put it on the picture it was dead.

But the artist painted on. Always the work got redder and redder, and the artist grew whiter and whiter. At last one day they found him dead before his picture, and they took him up to bury him. The other men looked about in all the pots and crucibles, but they found nothing they had not.

And when they undressed him to put his grave-clothes on him, they found above his left breast the mark of a wound—it was an old, old wound, that must have been there all his life, for the edges were old and hardened; but Death, who seals all things, had drawn the edges together, and closed it up.

And they buried him. And still the people went about saying, "Where did he find his colour from?"

And it came to pass that after a while the artist was forgotten—but the work lived.

QUARANTINE

THE Doctor took the pipe from his mouth and glanced about the room.

You have been talking a lot about right and wrong (said he), and I've listened carefully. But it doesn't seem to me that it is always as easy as some of you think. There is a case in my memory illustrative. It swims to the surface of the undredged pool after nearly thirty years. You know me now as a staid and contented old fogey with a quiet practice. In those days I was a rover, and at the time I speak of I was surgeon on the corvette Seagull. The very name is antediluvian. Where are they now, the sloops, corvettes, frigates? . . . The Seagull was on the Australian station, and we popped in and out of Australasian harbours, were merrily and hospitably entertained, and enjoyed ourselves to the full. It was as good a station as any in the seven seas in my time. There was junketing, there were picnics, there were parties . . . and there were pleasant cruises in the South Seas, policing the islands, and meeting new races and seeing strange sights all the time. Well, at the time I'm talking of we were in the neighbourhood of the Solomon Islands, and it was late spring. I believe we were steaming south patrolling the Melanesian belt. Anyway, it was a beautiful still night with a moon full on the quiet sea, and I was below looking after some personal matter. Suddenly a steward knocked and entered abruptly, with an urgent message from the Captain, and I was conscious at the same time that the Seagull had slowed down. Up I skipped in excitement, for nothing had broken the monotony of the voyage for days, and I guessed that something was forward. On deck I found the Captain and other officers leaning over the side and looking down into a boat which the sailors were handling.

"What is it?" I asked.

"Castaway," said the second officer.

We watched the sailors bring something aboard in the moonlight, and there my work came in. It was a bad case, and the poor devil had suffered cruelly. When I got him down below I made an examination. He was a man of about thirty, I should guess, and with a queer suggestion of clerical attire by means of a white bow in what was otherwise the usual island rig for white men. He was unconscious when we picked him up, and his face and body were much emaciated. I saw what it all meant—privation, exhaustion, shock. From beginning to end it looked a bad case, and it proved so. I did what I could for him, and he revived, and flickered up a bit ; but the drain on his vitality had been too great, and he sank and died on the fourth day. But he was able and anxious to talk at intervals during the few days that he lingered, and was particularly urgent that we should put the corvette about for an island called Manira. I got the whole story in pieces, and I put it together in my mind when he was dead and buried ; and the thing emerges just now from my memories as vivid as if it were yesterday. . . .

His name was McCulloch, the Rev. Gavin McCulloch, and he belonged to a Methodist persuasion in Vermont or somewhere there. He had been educated at a Methodist college, and filled with Christian fervour, ideas of humanity, brotherhood, and sacrifice. You know how ardently that flame may burn in youth. It often takes a missionary direction, and that's what it took with him. He yearned to devote himself and his life to the services of barbarous savages somewhere, China or Timbuctoo—anywhere. And fate, providence, chance, what you will, sent him out to a lonely island in the Pacific black belt.

Manira is an isolated isle, outlying a scattered group, and inhabited by a Melanesian people. Altogether it seems Manira had a population of three or four hundred, and of these all were of the usual colour save a handful of white settlers on the west side. The island was of coral origin, and was no more than six or seven miles from end to end. McCulloch settled on the east end, where the bulk of the natives were, and began his work. He worked with a zeal worthy of the apostolic times, and the easy-going, simple natives respected him, got to trust him, and went to him for advice and assistance in trouble. They were adaptable in faith, and he roped in converts wholesale. On the west end was the white station, where a small partnership of four men from Sydney grew palm oil, collected bêche-de-mer and copra, and prospected around generally. They had arrived a few years before McCulloch, and had engaged some fifty natives in their commercial operations. McCulloch confessed that they treated their employés very fairly, though the system amounted to a kind of corvée, for they pressed the Kanakas into their service willy-nilly. Yet they fed them well, and used them with some kindness. McCulloch got on pretty well with the whites, though, of course, they were not much of the same way of thinking in many matters, particularly religion. He walked over, or was pulled round in a boat, occasionally, and looked after the spiritual welfare of the plantation natives. He regarded himself as pastor of a parish which was the whole island. I fancy he tried to convert the whites, but he probably got discouraged ; anyway, the Kanakas were his flock, and he preached and tended, and gave advice, and no one objected, so long as he didn't interfere with the work of the station. I gathered that in a sort of contemptuous way they had a liking for the sky-pilot, though they chaffed him a good deal. He didn't drink or smoke or play cards, and that was about all they had to do for recreation ; but he talked and he listened, and he prayed in his heart, I have no doubt. He was a man of prayer. Naturally they hadn't much in common, but they were all whites together. McCulloch looked after the body as well as the spirit, and he had a medicine case, about which he knew something. Wilson gave him brandy when he wanted it for a case of dysentery, and loaned him drugs which he lacked. Oh yes, they got on well enough together.

Manira lies pretty much in the desert of waters, so to speak, and ships mainly drift there by chance. Wilson and Co. had made arrangements in Sydney by which a boat called once in six months with stores and news, and took off their produce. This steamer had made three trips during McCulloch's residence, and was due for a fourth visit when another visitor blew in. This was a schooner that put into the little cove where the missionary's village lay, and sent a boat ashore. It was a tramp, worn and battered with years, and was homing at last. A mate came ashore on the boat, and explained his dilemma to McCulloch. They'd got a sick man aboard, and had no means of looking after him, neither medicines nor knowledge. He asked McCulloch to receive the man and do his best for him ; and McCulloch, who thought he was placed in the world to follow his Master and do good, willingly consented. The man, a Kanaka, one of the crew, was landed, and the schooner set sail. Now McCulloch was puzzled about this sickness. The mate said that no one knew what was the matter with the Kanaka, and urged that the poor devil ought to have a chance. This went right home to McCulloch, but he hung about the man, wondering what was wrong. He suspected one thing and then another, and hunted through his medical book. He had had no training in medicine, but had a smattering of picked-up knowledge. And he hunted through the pages. By and by some spots appeared, and he turned up measles ; but it did not seem to be measles. He fed the man and tended him, and observed him and studied his books for some days, and then he got an idea, and it worried him.

It was two days after that Wilson went over to the missionary village. The steamer had paid its expected visit, landed stores, loaded up, and departed, and Wilson, pretty well pleased with the results, walked over in the cool of the evening with some papers and books for McCulloch. The steamer brought these literary supplies to keep up connection with the outside world, and furnish occupation for the leisure of the settlement. Wilson strode into McCulloch's shanty, a big gaunt cornstalk of six feet three, and chucked the papers on the table.

"We might have been at war with Russia for all we knew," he said, with a laugh. "There's been a row over a place called Penjdeh or something. But that don't interest you under the Stars and Stripes."

McCulloch was looking worried, but he politely said that he hoped he was interested in the welfare of all men. Wilson noted his looks and commented on them.

McCulloch, if I'm any judge of men, was the honestest soul alive. He was simple to boot, and he had a touching confidence in the real goodness of human nature.

"Yes," said he, "I'm troubled. I had a case of illness entrusted to me from a schooner a week ago. The man's bad."

"Humph!" says Wilson. "Kanaka, I suppose? They've no real stamina."

"It's not that," said McCulloch. "It's the disease I'm afraid of. It puzzled me for a long time. But I'm pretty sure now, and it makes me very anxious. I'm afraid the man will die."

"What's he got?" asked Wilson indifferently.

"I very much fear it's smallpox," said McCulloch. Now you here, I and all of us in old countries with the evils and travails of worn centuries upon them (said the doctor), don't take much account of smallpox. We may even live cheek by jowl with smallpox isolation hospitals. Anyway, it's endemic among us. But that is not how they regard the malady south of the line, and particularly in Australia and New Zealand. I remember being in Port Lyttelton once when there was a scare of smallpox raised, not, mind you, in New Zealand, but in Sydney, five days' steam away. A case had occurred on an emigrant ship, and was promptly quarantined, but from the scare-heads of the papers, and the cablegrams flashed in all directions and thousands of miles, you would have thought the end of the world had come. Well, when Wilson heard the word he answered to it as any other colonial would have done. He rose from his seat.

"H——!" he said, and stared at the missionary with his hard grey eyes. "Where is he?" he demanded, and when he learned that the sick-room was in the next shanty he backed to the door.

"Look here, McCulloch," he said. "This won't do. I'm vaccinated, but I don't take unnecessary risks. I guess you're in quarantine, and don't you forget it. Man, you were a damn fool to take that sick man, but you're going to die a damn fool. Anyway, keep clear of us. I'm sorry for you, but we've got ourselves and our men to look after. This is Quarantine Island, and don't you forget it."

Wilson was a bluff, deliberate fellow of few fears and scruples, as I could see when I came upon him later. But the others in his company were different. O'Reilly had the temper of a savage, and Wilks was a nervous, irritable man. There was also a boy of twenty, fresh from his mother, with a lion's heart, and a fresh zest for life. He was full of cheer and sang comic songs. His companions were fond of him. Wilson's report brought the alarm to them, and they had a bad scare, and watched out for some days. At the end of that time no news had come from McCulloch, and the party began to fidget, so it ended in Wilson's rowing round with the boy, and hailing the parson from the cove. After some minutes McCulloch came down to the beach in his ducks, and told them that the Kanaka was dead. He had died the day after Wilson had paid his visit. I have said McCulloch was an incredibly honest man, and so he went on to say, "I regret there's another case developed."

Wilson's face tightened, and an ugly look seized it. "You know what quarantine is, McCulloch," he said. "You've got to keep it, by——"

McCulloch said he would do all that was possible to maintain isolation. "I'm short of some medicines," he said, and Wilson struck in :

"I'll send over what you want. We'll land 'em here, if you tell me what." And when that was over the boat paddled out, and Wilson shouted back, "I'm sorry, McCulloch, but you've got to keep the laws," and the boy, who was fresh and full-hearted, waved his hand. "So long, old man ! " he called.

The boy carried the medicines and some stores round in the boat next day, and left them on the beach, having signalled to McCulloch. "What's the news ? " he cried from the boat, and McCulloch, looking grave and quiet, answered, "There are two more cases."

"Hard luck !" said the youngster. But he did not know what more to say or do, and after a silence shouted good-bye and rowed off. McCulloch had his hands full during the next few days.

There was a native called Tommy who had picked up civilised white ways pretty quickly, and whom McCulloch employed more familiarly about him than others. Tommy rang the bell for church service, and Tommy officiated as body-servant, and interpreted between the pastor and his flock generally. McCulloch had the lingo himself pretty well. Well, Tommy, who was young and smart, had a sweetheart at the other end of the island, and, quarantine regulations being nothing to him, he paid her a visit one night when he was quit of his duties. He was seen in the vicinity of the settlement, and Wilson came over the following day, and hailed McCulloch.

"Understand, McCulloch," he said, "we can't have any monkeying about this business. I don't mind a risk, but this is a dead certainty. You've got to keep your people in quarantine bounds."

There was a stream wandering out of some hills about half-way across the island, and the hills and the stream divided the island ; so Wilson made these the boundaries, and he let McCulloch know that they must be kept.

"If that Tommy of yours or any other comes over the line," he said, "we'll deal with him."

McCulloch promised he would observe the boundaries, and the deputation returned. But the poor wretch was all alone in a nest of ignorant savages. He wanted a guard of sentinels to help him, and Tommy was a childlike native with the instinct to obey when his master's eye was on him, and the child's instinct to follow his own bent when the eye wasn't there. So Tommy, though warned and put on his honour, went over again to see his young lady. Wilson and Co. were now more on the alert, realising the danger, and Tommy was chased and all but caught in the thickets. Then came the ultimatum. Wilson and O'Reilly went to the cove, and gave warning.

"If you can't control your natives, we'll not be responsible," they told him. "And we give you fair and square notice that we won't have the plague brought over on us. So if we catch Tommy he'll be shot."

McCulloch begged them earnestly to reconsider this threat of warfare. He appealed to them as Christians, but got no response. They went back sullenly resolute to protect themselves, and McCulloch went to his house and prayed for hours on end. Things were beginning to look ugly. He talked to Tommy very gravely, and Tommy gave glib promises, and kept to them for ten days or so. There were some more cases of the disease, and McCulloch worked night and day. Meanwhile Tommy got restive, heard the call of romance, and gave him the slip. McCulloch had gone to rest for an hour, exhausted by his labours, and Tommy had been instructed to wake him. He was not called, and slept heavily, till at last he woke with a start, and looking at his watch found it was midnight. Tommy was nowhere to be found, and one of the natives who helped to nurse the sick men pointed to the hills and the darkness. McCulloch had misgivings, and he went off in the direction of the quarantine boundaries. There was a track which the natives had been accustomed to use in going to and fro, and this crossed the stream and went up the hills into the jungle, and so down to the plantations of Wilson and Co., on the farther side. McCulloch spoke with the natives in a little hamlet on his own frontier and had news of Tommy. There was no doubt that Tommy had broken parole and bounds too. McCulloch waited anxiously.

It came just before dawn. In that region there is practically no night, but a benevolent moving twilight, and the trees and scrub of the jungle were visible all through his watch. First there came a noise, faint but persistent, and it grew in intensity, till he began to recognise it as the sound of some one breaking through the jungle at a tearing pace. McCulloch in alarm ran across the dividing stream, and towards the hill. He could see no one, but he knew that some one was flying from a pursuer. And then a figure ran out of the scrub into the open flat, and came fast towards him. McCulloch heard sounds in the jungle higher up the hill. As he stood, wondering, fearing, and indecisive, a report rang out, and the man running towards him plunged heavily to the earth. McCulloch dashed forward, and reached the prostrate man. It was Tommy, shot dead through the back. McCulloch straightened himself and looked towards the hill, where a black figure stood clearly visible.

"Damn you, I'll shoot you too, if you don't keep bounds, Parson," shouted a voice he recognised. It was O'Reilly's, passionate and flamboyantly Irish. McCulloch shouted back :

"It's murder ! It's murder. God will avenge. It's cold-blooded murder !"

O'Reilly turned his back on him and walked off, and McCulloch stumbled across the stream with his burden. After that there was no Tommy to cause any trouble, and things were quiet for a week. That is to say, McCulloch heard nothing and saw nothing of the plantation people. But work crowded on his hands ; there were more cases of smallpox, and his medicine chest and stores began to give out. He found himself obliged to apply to Wilson against his will, and with two natives rowed round the island to the landing-stage. He was warned off by Wilks, who was the first to espy them, and presently three of the company were gathered together in consultation—Wilson, Wilks, and the boy.

McCulloch shouted out what he wanted, and they consulted again. The boy ran up the beach to the huts, and Wilson and Wilks kept guard.

"I can give you brandy and some other things," shouted Wilson. "But you'd a damn sight better shoot your cases, McCulloch."

McCulloch naturally didn't answer that, and he was told he could come ashore and pick up the medicines at a distance. He was glad to get them, and returned grateful thanks.

"I know your heart's in the right place, Mr. Wilson," he said. "But you have an evil associate."

Wilson grinned very grimly. O'Reilly wasn't there.

McCulloch had trained some of his flock into nursing ways, but they must have made an odd show. They were docile folk, I gathered, but stupid, vacant, and very animal. So far they had not taken alarm at the epidemic ; I suppose they were more or less used to unexpected death, if I may put it that way. Within the quarantine bounds there were about two hundred Kanakas all told, men, women, and children, and on the farther side of the dividing stream and hills somewhere about the same. Wilson and Co. employed fifty or sixty hands, and they treated them decently, as I have said. They had even gone the length of putting up a model village. That is to say, they had drafted the families out of their dirty hovels into a convenient place, established them on a sort of system, and supervised them. It paid them to do so, for they got better work out of the men, and they had them always under authority. Wilson was no fool.

A little after the missionary's visit for supplies Wilson paid him a return visit, Wilson and the boy ; and they had a passenger.

Wilson landed, and they landed the passenger on the beach, and Wilson's face was terrific. It awed even poor overworked, exhausted, and obdurate McCulloch. This was the first case of smallpox in the plantation and they had brought it round. It pointed the finger of doom, and Wilson pointed the clenched fist of menace. His language must have been appalling. The parson did not repeat it to me.

"This is war, McCulloch," said that six foot and a half of cornstalk. "This is deadly like open declaration. You have been warned before ; but there's more behind and worse. Better die by bullet than this way," and he made a gesture at the dying native. He left the body there, and rowed away cursing, and the boy said nothing, but stared at the shore as he pulled. McCulloch saw him staring.

It was inevitable that the natives should take fright in the end. The death-roll was so long and grew so fast. They must have died like flies. . . . And then the second act of the tragedy opened. The Kanakas left their homes and fled to the hills to escape the contagion. They looked upon it as the invasion of a personal and malignant devil. They took to the hills and hid in the jungle, and so some of them reached the plantation village. Wilson and his men drove them in under guns to the quarantine bounds, and there among a few huts across the stream they saw McCulloch on his knees with the sun on his hair, praying for mercy, praying for help. The plague had broken out there, and children had died of it. He prayed in the centre of the stricken place and saw and heard no one. Somehow the sight, and what it all meant in pathos, went to Wilson's heart, and what he was going to do he didn't do, as he told me afterwards.

McCulloch rose and saw the enemy, and Wilson explained suddenly what had happened. McCulloch was haggard and thin, and showed all the marks of the strain to which he had been subjected, and he stuttered out brokenly his apologies and said that he would do all he could to confine his natives to the Quarantine. Then, I take it, Wilson was moved to a certain rude sympathy.

"Look here, McCulloch," he said with bluff friendliness, "you know you're fighting a lost battle. You can't stop it; you can only prevent the ravages from spreading further, as we're trying to do. I'll tell you what. Here's an offer. Give it up and come out of that, where you're only killing yourself. Give yourself a chance. Come out, and we'll establish you in an isolation hut near the plantation, and after the usual time you can get pratique, or whatever they call it, and join us, if you're free from the disease. As for these wretches, well, Kismet! You've done all you can."

It was well meant, as I say, but it had about as much chance with McCulloch as a proposal from his satanic majesty. I gathered that he quoted scripture and garnished his refusal in that way; at which the cornstalk lost patience.

"Oh, go to hell your own way," he said as he strode off, and shouted back, "Remember, we're fighting for lives as much as you, and we'll shoot."

The immediate result of the encounter was that Wilson took precautions, as it were, against a declared enemy. He armed sentinels whom he could trust, and stationed them along the boundaries. He drew a cordon, in fact, across the hostile territory. There could be only one issue to that in the conditions prevailing. The Kanakas got more panicky, and McCulloch was helpless, though he prayed and preached day after day. Death was among them in their huts, and they broke the cordon and climbed the hills, and then they found death in the jungles—an easier death, maybe.

The armed natives, pleased with their toys, the rifles, and also with their prowess, shot whenever a chance offered, and there were a dozen dead men on the hills within the week. McCulloch, saddened and embittered, and worn to the bone, worked on. I don't know if you will call it fanaticism; at any rate, it was nobility; it was sheer self-sacrifice. It was suicide. I am getting near the climax now, and it's ugly—it's ugly even as I look back at it over a quarter of a century. It is a fatal mistake to extend to an inferior civilisation the instruments and equipments of a superior. I know that's putting it grandiosely. I'll put it tersely and bluntly. "Don't trust niggers with guns." Wilson did. The Kanakas in the missionary settlement got more scared, and made attempts to bolt. One family from the huts near the stream made a rush for it, and were shot down. There were two children. . . . Then McCulloch saw red. He was not a man of war, but then he came so near to it as to be a prophet of wrath, like a Hebrew of old, ingeminating hell. He visited the plantation, and was thrust back into the sea at the end of bayonets.

"God will smite you!" he cried. "God takes His vengeance. Vengeance is His, not man's. God shall smite you, you whited wall!"

O'Reilly laughed, Wilson swore, and the boy stared shamefacedly. Was there a curse on the settlement?

Anyway, two cases broke out next day in the plantation village, and Wilks was in desperate terror. He was a coward, was Wilks, I fancy. Wilson got panicky too; the dread thing was coming very close. They talked it over, and isolated the cases; but they had as little guarantee that the quarantine would be kept as had poor McCulloch. So in the end they rowed the patients round to McCulloch, and dumped them on him. Wilson must have felt he was doing a mean thing. McCulloch stared at him with hot, red eyes, a gaunt figure, and said no word. Wilson promised supplies, offered medicines and other necessities.

"We reckon this is hospital," he said grimly, and then O'Reilly touched him on the arm, and they spoke together in low tones so that the boy heard nothing.

"See here," said Wilson, raising his voice, "we'll leave supplies to-morrow evening at the Palm Cove yonder, and you can come for them. They'll be there by dusk."

McCulloch still answered nothing, but stooped over the stricken natives on the beach wearifully. The fact is that there and then Wilson and O'Reilly made up their minds to whole measures. They were badly frightened, and they couldn't see any way out. There was more talk at night in their quarters, and next day McCulloch was astonished to see the boy walking out of a palm tree grove towards his house. He had come across the island, and his visit was unknown to his companions. I never learnt that boy's name, or I should like to have put it on record. He was young and new to desperate deeds, and he had heard things that shocked him. But McCulloch, who thought that maybe he had brought some of the supplies with him, warned him off.

"You'd better stay where you are," he called out, "and come no nearer. We're rank bad here. Put what you've got down, and I'll fetch it."

"I haven't got anything," said the boy nervously. "I've just come to see you."

"Well, you must do no more than that," said McCulloch, and added bitterly, "You can go back and say you've seen one man trying to do his duty."

"And by ——!" broke out the boy, "you've done it."

McCulloch softened. "Sit down on that rock," said he, "and we can talk."

"What's that building there?" asked the boy. "Is that your chapel?"

"It is the chapel, and it's the hospital," said McCulloch. "The dead and the dying are there."

"It's a blooming mortuary!" said the boy, shuddering.

McCulloch pointed to the huts. This one had two dead in it; another was full of sick; three children and a mother lay dying in a third. . . . The boy swore.

"Cut it, McCulloch," he said. "Come over to us, as Wilson suggested. You've done more than enough."

"I have put my hand to the plough, and I dare not look back," said McCulloch simply.

The boy swore again, swore no doubt to cover his feelings. He stood up.

"There's something, anyway, I want to tell you, and it's what I came for," he said. "It seems a bit absurd after what I've advised. Anyway, here goes. No one knows I'm here. To-night don't go for that medicine and the stores. Take it from me, and stay away. So long!" he shouted, and stepped away briskly without looking back. Perhaps he was ashamed of his feelings.

McCulloch had practically run out of all necessities, and if he was to carry on at all he must have fresh supplies. God alone knows how he did manage through those terrible days, tending the sick, ministering, praying, encouraging, exhorting, and burying. It makes one wince to think of it. McCulloch could not afford to be without the stores; if he lacked these he must give up. He told me that he paid little heed to the boy's cryptic warning, but it was in his mind vaguely as he made his way to the cove that he might be shot down like the poor creatures who had crossed the cordon. His brain was dulled and his imagination a blur. He did not care what became of him, but realised merely that he had got to struggle on for his sick, as long as his life lasted. He got down to the cove through the scrub at dusk, and could see no one. He was a conspicuous figure for a marksman as he descended to the beach, but no one fired at him. Wilson had been as good as his word, and there were the stores and the medicine in a small cache. McCulloch rolled the stones away, and was pocketing the drugs, when suddenly he was seized from behind, and ere he could turn, his elbows were drawn back.

"Damn you, don't make it worse for yourself!" said a voice he recognised as O'Reilly's.

He struggled for all that, but a cord was inserted under his arms, and they were tied back. He was as helpless as a trussed fowl.

Now he recognised Wilson, who came up from the covert of some bushes. McCulloch protested, and demanded to know what they intended. They made no reply, but he was forced forward, arms raised behind, head down in front—the most hopeless physical attitude for any man. He perceived that they were nearing the water, and then he saw a boat. Into this he was thrown by O'Reilly, and Wilson pushed the boat off with a powerful shove. The tide was making outwards, and the boat was soon a score of yards from shore.

"You can work your arms free, McCulloch," yelled Wilson. "There's a fortnight's supplies in the boat, and no oars. And now make the best of it. You're too damn dangerous. It's our lives against a lot of niggers. Good luck to you!"

The ebb was flowing fast; McCulloch was helpless; and the boat passed swiftly out to sea and away from Manira. McCulloch never saw the island again. It was sixteen days afterwards that we picked him up.

The Doctor paused for quite a long time.

"And that was all?" asked one of the company.

No (he replied slowly), not quite; nearly. McCulloch died, as I told you. We finished the patrolling south, and the Seagull went north again. The captain decided to put into Manira, and did so. It was a pretty island, set in a prettily foaming sea, and under a sky of infinite blueness. I went ashore to inspect, and found the settlement deserted. There was nothing there but wreck, debris, and—well, you know what else. There was only one course of action, and after sending word to the captain I took it. The huts and all that they signified and held went up in one conflagration; the flames mounted to heaven, and drew down from the hills and the jungle some frightened people. These were the remnants of the population, who had taken refuge from the plague, and were ill-fed, unclothed, and demoralised. I knew nothing of their language, and could learn nothing. But we did what was possible, and put out stores and left them seeds to carry on. Later a relief ship was sent from Auckland.

Then I went round to the plantation. Fire had been busy there in patches. The village was practically wiped out, and as I landed I saw a white man's work and judgment in that. In the house there were two live men, and one was dying. This was Wilson, emaciated and motionless upon his pallet, and the live man was a native, one of those faithful hearts which we whites find now and then everywhere among inferior races, a dumb, devoted animal, tending his stricken master.

Wilson was far gone, but on seeing me he rallied, and brightened.

"Where do you spring from?" he asked with difficulty.

I told him, and spoke of McCulloch.

"Dead?" he asked, and when I assented, went on weakly, "They all died. They all began to go. I burnt the cottages. Wilks went first, and then O'Reilly. I buried the boy last of all" . . . and he sank into silence.

I did everything possible, but it was hopeless. Just before the end he lifted his head.

"McCulloch!" he exclaimed, and fixed me with his eye. "Was I right?"

I did not answer, and he repeated the question almost vehemently, "Was I right?" and then ere I could answer fell back. "Anyway, it's done," he murmured.

He never spoke again.

Well, it's easy to lay down ethical principles in the drawing-room, the study, or the church. But on the battlefield—I don't know. I have often wondered, and put that last unanswered question to myself. Which was right, Wilson or McCulloch?

From a portrait by John Langstaff in the National Gallery, Sydney

Henry Lawson

HENRY LAWSON

B. 1867

WHEN THE SUN WENT DOWN

JACK DREW sat on the edge of the shaft, with his foot in the loop and one hand on the rope, ready to descend. His elder brother, Tom, stood at one end of the windlass and the third mate at the other. Jack paused before swinging off, looked up at his brother, and impulsively held out his hand :

" You ain't going to let the sun go down, are you, Tom ? "

But Tom kept both hands on the windlass-handle and said nothing.

" Lower away ! "

They lowered him to the bottom, and Tom shouldered his pick in silence and walked off to the tent. He found the tin-plate, pint-pot, and things set ready for him on the rough slab table under the bush shed. The tea was made, the cabbage and potatoes strained and placed in a billy near the fire. He found the fried bacon and steak between two plates in the camp-oven. He sat down to the table but he could not eat. He felt mean. The inexperience and hasty temper of his brother had caused the quarrel between them that morning ; but then Jack admitted that, and apologised when he first tried to make it up.

Tom moved round uneasily and tried to smoke ; he could not get Jack's last appeal out of his ears—" You ain't going to let the sun go down, Tom ? "

Tom found himself glancing at the sun. It was less than two hours from sunset. He thought of the words of the old Hebrew—or Chinese—poet ; he wasn't religious, and the authorship didn't matter. The old poet's words began to haunt him : " Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

The line contains good, sound advice ; for quick-tempered men are often the most sensitive, and when they let the sun go down on the aforesaid wrath that quality is likely to get them down and worry them during the night.

Tom started to go to the claim, but checked himself, and sat down and tried to draw comfort from his pipe. He understood his brother thoroughly, but his brother never understood him—that was where the trouble was. Presently he got thinking how Jack would worry about the quarrel and have no heart for his work. Perhaps he was fretting over it now, all alone by himself, down at the end of the damp dark drive. Tom had a lot of the old woman about him, in spite of his unsociable ways and brooding temper.

He had almost made up his mind to go below again, on some excuse, when his mate shouted from the top of the shaft :

“Tom ! Tom ! For Christ’s sake come here ! ”

Tom’s heart gave a great thump, and he ran like a kangaroo to the shaft. All the diggers within hearing were soon on the spot. They saw at a glance what had happened. It was madness to sink without timber in such treacherous ground. The sides of the shaft were closing in.

Tom sprang forward and shouted through the crevice :

“To the face, Jack ! To the face, for your life.”

“The old workings ! ” he cried, turning to the diggers. “Bring a fan and tools. We’ll dig him out.”

A few minutes later a fan was rigged over a deserted shaft close by, where fortunately the windlass had been left for bailing purposes, and men were down in the old drive. Tom knew that he and his mates had driven very close to the old workings.

He knelt in the damp clay before the face and worked like a madman ; he refused to take turn about, and only dropped the pick to seize a shovel in his strong hands, and snatch back the loose clay from under his feet ; he reckoned that he had six, or, perhaps, eight feet to drive, and he knew that the air could not last long in the new drive—even if that had not already fallen in and crushed his brother. Great drops of perspiration stood out on Tom’s forehead, and his breath began to come in choking sobs, but he still struck strong, savage blows into the clay before him, and the drive lengthened quickly. Once he paused a moment to listen, and then distinctly heard a sound as of a tool or stone being struck against the edge of the new drive. Jack was safe !

Tom dug on until the clay suddenly fell away from his pick and left a hole, about the size of a plate, in the “face” before him. “Thank God ! ” said a hoarse strained voice at the other side.

“All right, Jack ? ”

" Yes, old man ; you are just in time ; I've hardly got room to stand in, and I'm nearly smothered." He was crouching against the " face " of the new drive.

Tom dropped his pick and fell back against the man behind him.

" Oh, God ! my back ! " he cried.

Suddenly he struggled to his knees, and then fell forward on his hand and dragged himself close to the hole in the end of the drive.

" Jack ! " he gasped, " Jack ! "

" Right, old man ; what's the matter ? "

" I've hurt my heart, Jack ! Put your hand—quick ! . . . The sun's going down."

Jack's hand came out through the hole, Tom gripped it, and then fell with his face in the damp clay.

They half carried, half dragged him from the drive, for the roof was low and they were obliged to stoop. They took him to the shaft and sent him up, lashed to the rope.

A few blows of the pick, and Jack scrambled from his prison and went to the surface, and knelt on the grass by the body of his brother. The diggers gathered round and took off their hats. And the sun went down.

THAT THERE DOG O' MINE

HENRY LAWSON

MACQUARIE the shearer had met with an accident. To tell the truth, he had been in a drunken row at a wayside shanty, from which he had escaped with three fractured ribs, a cracked head, and various minor abrasions. His dog, Tally, had been a sober but savage participator in the drunken row, and had escaped with a broken leg. Macquarie afterwards shouldered his swag and staggered and struggled along the track ten miles to the Union Town Hospital. Lord knows how he did it. He didn't exactly know himself. Tally limped behind all the way, on three legs.

The doctors examined the man's injuries and were surprised at his endurance. Of course they would take him in, but they objected to Tally. Dogs were not allowed on the premises.

"You will have to turn that dog out," they said to the shearer, as he sat on the edge of a bed. Macquarie said nothing.

"We cannot allow dogs about the place, my man," said the doctor in a louder tone, thinking the man was deaf.

"Tie him up in the yard then."

"No. He must go out. Dogs are not permitted on the grounds."

Macquarie rose slowly to his feet, shut his agony behind his set teeth, painfully buttoned his shirt over his hairy chest, took up his waistcoat, and staggered to the corner where the swag lay.

"What are you going to do?" they asked.

"You ain't going to let my dog stop?"

"No. It's against the rules. There are no dogs allowed on the premises." He stooped and lifted his swag, but the pain was too great, and he leaned back against the wall.

"Come, come now! man alive!" exclaimed the doctor, impatiently. "You must be mad. You know you are not in a fit state to go out. Let the wardsman help you to undress."

"No!" said Macquarie. "No. If you won't take my dog in you don't take me. He's got a broken leg and wants fixing up just—just as much as—as I do. If I'm good enough to come in, he's good enough—and—and better." He paused awhile, breathing painfully, and then went on. "That—that there old dog of mine has follered me faithful and true these twelve long hard and hungry years. He's about—about the only thing that ever cared whether I lived or fell and rotted on the cursed track."

He rested again; then he continued: "That—that there dog was pupped on the track," he said, with a sad sort of a smile. "I carried him for months in a billy-can, and afterwards on my swag when he knocked up. . . . And the old slut—his mother—she'd foller along quite contented—and sniff the billy now and again—just to see if he was all right. . . . She follered me for God knows how many years. She follered me till she was blind—and for a year after. She follered me till she could crawl along through the dust no longer, and—and then I killed her, because I couldn't leave her behind alive!"

He rested again.

"And this here old dog," he continued, touching Tally's upturned nose with his knotted fingers, "this here old dog has follered me for—for ten years; through floods and droughts, through fair times and—and hard—mostly hard; and kept me from going mad when I had no mate nor money on the lonely track; and watched over me for weeks when I was drunk—drugged and poisoned at the cursed shanties; and saved my life more'n once, and got kicks and curses very often for thanks; and forgave me for it all; and—and fought for me. He was the only living thing that stood up for me against that crawling push of curs when they set ont'er me at the shanty back yonder—and he left his mark on some of 'em too; and—and so did I." He took another spell. Then he drew in his breath, shut his teeth hard, shouldered his swag, stepped into the doorway, and faced round again.

The dog limped out of the corner and looked up anxiously.

"That there dog," said Macquarie to the Hospital staff in general, "is a better dog than I'm a man—or you too, it seems—and a better Christian. He's been a better mate to me than I ever was to any man—or any man to me. He's watched over me; kep' me from getting robbed many a time; fought for me; saved my life and took drunken kicks and curses for thanks—and forgave me. He's been a true, straight, honest, and faithful mate to me—and I ain't going to desert him now. I ain't going to kick him out in the road with a broken leg. I—Oh, my God! my back!" He groaned and lurched forward, but they caught him, slipped off the swag, and laid him on a bed.

Half an hour later the shearer was comfortably fixed up. "Where's my dog?" he asked, when he came to himself.

"Oh, the dog's all right," said the nurse, rather impatiently. "Don't bother. The doctor's setting his leg out in the yard."

MARY GAUNT

B. 1894

THE DOCTOR'S DRIVE

"THE Mails has got to go through."

Peter Miles was store-keeper and postmaster at Bilson's, and had been store-keeper there ever since Bilson's was any place at all, and postmaster ever since the Government had seen fit to open a post-office. His motto was, and he stuck to it, "The mails has got to go through." Rain or sunshine, flood or drought, snow or fire, "the mails has got to go through." And this January day the wind was howling like a demon possessed. Down through the narrow gully it tore, a veritable blast from a fiery furnace—the green things shrivelled up before its breath, the tall trees, their great branches tossed hither and thither like twigs, bent and snapped, and every now and then one was rent up by the roots and, falling, crashed among its fellows, and with its wide-spreading roots, which left mother earth so reluctantly, brought away part of the hillside; even above the howling of the wind could be heard the slow slipping and sliding of the loosened earth as it fell towards the roadway. No sunshine to-day, no scrap of blue sky, the heavy clouds hung low, clouds of smoke they were, and the strong smell of that smoke and the aromatic scent of burning gum leaves was heavy in the air.

Just in front of the little store stood the mail-coach, and the horses were being yoked up—only a small coach to-day, but there were four horses—four horses that were laying back their ears and kicking and plunging as if they did not like the job before them. The driver, a tall, lithe young fellow of five-and-twenty, with a slouch hat drawn down over his eyes and fastened with a leather thong under his chin, stood watching the final touches being put to the harness and the mail bags being brought out and flung into the boot and put on top of the coach. There were a good many mail bags to-day; usually the big coach would have taken them through, but the weather was so threatening that Miles on his own responsibility had decided to send them along in the little coach he kept for emergencies. "The mails has got to go through," and the sooner they got through the better on a day like this.

"No passengers?" asked the driver laconically. "You'd better send a man along to help then, case of trouble."

Peter Miles looked thoughtfully down the road and rubbed his bald forehead hard.

"I was thinking——" he began, and then hesitated, and one of the stable helps, with his hair coming through the broken crown of his straw hat, laughed ironically.

"Sweet day for a passee," he said; "the hills'll be in a blaze long before you reach Bethambia."

"Lucky if we reach Bethambia unsinged, eh, old man?" said the coach-driver grimly, as he gathered up the reins and prepared to mount the box. "Now which of you fellows is coming along?"

Still Peter Miles shaded his eyes and looked along the road. The howling of the wind deadened all other sounds, and the thick smoke and haze made it impossible to see very far; still he looked out expectantly and delayed the coach yet another five minutes. The secrets of the telegraph were his, and he could not betray them; but he knew well enough the contents of that urgent telegram he had sent along to the doctor an hour ago. There was still time for him to catch the coach, and he hesitated to let it go without him.

The horses grew more impatient, and so did the driver.

"Come, old man," he said, "give the word. You're risking our lives."

"Hold on one minute. Here he is! Here he is!"

Through the haze and smoke dashed a man on horseback.

"Here, I say, hold on a minute; I'm coming too."

"Better not, doctor," said the lean coachman, "we're going to have a hell of a time."

"Must," said Dr. Smith, dropping from his horse and throwing his bag inside the coach. "Now shall I come up in front?"

The driver nodded.

"Look after my horse, Miles," cried the doctor, scrambling to the box-seat and settling himself there.

It was lucky he was young and active, for the horses were more impatient than ever now, and the driver, with a quite unnecessary crack of his whip, gave them their heads.

"It'll be hell for leather, Mat," cried he of the straw hat, as the stable helpers jumped aside to let the swaying coach pass, and Mat nodded his head.

Up the road, straight up the hill, swept the horses right in the teeth of the wind, and Bilson's was left behind in the gathering haze.

"Where 're you goin' to, doctor?" asked Mat as they steadied down to a trot, for the hill was steep and the wind strong.

"To Coulson's—just this side of Bethambia, isn't it?"

A faint smile stole over Mat Jackson's impassive face.

"Eh, I thought they'd be wantin' you there. It's her first, you see, and Jim Coulson's mighty set on her. But it's an uncommon awkward time she's chosen."

"They always do," murmured the other out of the depths of his experience. "Never mind, they'll take it more coolly next time."

"I'd have ridden through, if I was you," said the driver. "You'd have done it easier."

But the other shook his head.

"I've been riding all the morning," said he. "And I never got to bed at all last night. I reckoned on getting some sleep in the coach once we get through this smother."

"Lordy! we ain't goin' to get through this. All the ranges are on fire way back there. I reckon we'll be lucky if we get through at all. It's gettin' worse."

"Ye gods and little fishes! It can't be worse."

"Oh, can't it? Just you wait an' see."

"I'm bound to get through."

"So's the mails. And once we top this hill it'll be neck or nothing with us. Say the word, doctor; will you go back?" And the driver slightly checked his horses.

"Can't we get through?"

He raised his head. The smoke made his eyes smart, and he pulled down his hat over them, but it was little good, it was all round them, heavy and dense. On either hand the tree-tops were shut out as by a pall, and even the leaders were only visible to the men on the box as through a dense grey haze.

Mat, the driver, took a long breath, then pushed back the flapping brim of his hat, and, standing up, took a long look round.

Nothing but dense grey smoke and trees swaying and tossing in the wind seen dimly through it.

"Well, we mout get through. I've seen it worse—only the farther we go, the less chance of getting back if it's too bad to go on. And it ain't pleasant, let me tell you, to be roasted alive without any preliminary preparation. And it's kinder anticipatin'."

The doctor smiled grimly.

"As bad as that?" he said.

"Well," drawled the driver, "it mout be, and it mout not. The wind mout drop, you know, or it mout shift, or it mout rain, or it moutn't be as bad as I think. There's a hundred chances agin things goin' wrong. But if we meet the fire two or three miles on ahead there, I tell you, doctor, it isn't much I'd give for your chance of seein' Jim Coulson's wife through her trouble. But then again, we moutn't meet the fire; but I'm telling you the truth, if I hadn't the mails behind me, it's on the back track I'd be this minute."

"And if the mails can get through, I can," said the doctor. "I reckon we'll go on, Mat."

"Right you are, boss," and he leaned over and touched the off leader, who was fretting herself into a foam over the smoke, with his long whip.

Then the doctor pulled down his straw hat over his eyes again, and in spite of the discomfort of his seat and his doubts as to the safety of his situation, fell into an uneasy doze. The heat was overpowering, the smoke grew denser than ever, and every now and then he was dreamily aware that his companion was exhorting him to keep awake, to hold up and look out that he did not fall off. He was rather afraid of this last accident himself, and grasped the iron rail of the box-seat with a firm hand, and then kept starting wide awake, thinking he had lost it. If he could only have wakened himself up thoroughly, he would have made an effort and gone inside as safer, but dead beat as he was the smoke and the heat made him drowsier than ever, and he kept putting it off and putting it off till of a sudden the horses were pulled to a standstill with a jerk that threw them on to their haunches.

"God Almighty!" he heard Mat's voice in horror and dread. "We're dead men!"

Then he sat upright in a moment, and rubbed his eyes.

It was darker now, much darker, though it was but two o'clock in the afternoon, the wind was wilder than ever as it tore shrieking through the trees, and the smoke denser and more choking; but that was not the worst, for right ahead, directly in their path, was a lurid glare thrown right on the heavy smoke banks.

The doctor sat up and rubbed his eyes sleepily, for the moment hardly grasping the gravity of the situation.

"What's the matter, Mat?"

The coach-driver pointed with his whip.

"The fire, right ahead," he said. "Both sides of the track, too. The scrub's thick and the track's narrow. We're dead men, doctor."

The doctor stood up and looked back; but the driver anticipated his thought.

"No good, doctor, we can't go back. The fire'd be on us before you could say Jack Robinson. And it would stop with us all the way. It's due south is Bilson's, and the wind's dead from the north."

The solitary passenger looked to the right and left, but the scrub was close and thick; the country was poor enough, but the messmate grew up thick and bushy, and in between was tea-tree and bracken and twining creepers and prickly shrubs of which he did not know the names. But it was close enough; there was no escape that way either for man or beast.

"It's sorter different when it comes to the point, doctor, isn't it?" said the driver. "All very well to talk o' gettin' the mails through, neck or nothing, till you have to do it; but to drive into that muck of smoke an' fire—the Lord ha' mercy upon us."

"Is it the only way?"

"The only way. We're not above three miles from Bethambia." And he brought down the whip heavily across the horses' backs. "Now then, fellows, for all you're worth."

The doctor put his hand down and gripped firmly the rail as the coach plunged forward and rocked from side to side; but he said nothing. There was nothing left for him to say.

"Let's get it over, in God's name," cried the driver, and he lashed the horses to a hard gallop. They kicked and plunged and snorted in terror, for the breath of the fire was upon them now, but the hand that held them was firm and strong, and the cruel whip came down on their backs unerringly. There was no turning back for them either.

The hot wind was hotter than ever now; the mouth of the furnace was open, and it was pouring forth smoke and flame. The reek of it was in their nostrils, and the doctor pulled his hat down closely over his face.

"Look out you don't choke and fall off," said the driver grimly. "I couldn't stop if I wanted to."

"All right," said his companion, and looking out again he noted that the air was full of burning gum leaves. They fell on the frightened horses and on the mail bags, and his own coat was already smouldering in one or two places, and right ahead was the fire. On either side scrub and bracken and tall trees were all one mass of flame, and momentarily it came nearer, borne on the fierce wind.

The horses saw it too and stopped dead, plunging and fighting to be free, and though Mat stood up in his seat and lashed them with a hand made desperate by stern necessity, they were desperate too, and they swerved aside and turned from the track to the right, bringing the coach sharply against a tree-trunk.

"Good Lord!" cried Mat in desperation. "Rats in a hole!"

"We'll have to blindfold them," said the doctor. "Give me that necktie of yours, they'll never face it as it is—and your handkerchief. Now, don't leave me behind."

It is hardly an easy matter to blindfold a horse at any time, but never surely did it take so long as that day, when the minutes were so precious. Young Willie Smith cursed the fate that had sent him out from civilisation many times, as he struggled for that plunging off leader's head, but it was done at last—all four horses were blindfolded, and he scrambled up to the box again as the driver lashed them to a gallop.

He wondered if it would be a good move. How could those terrified horses take the coach along that rough track, now scattered over with living coals as the burning branches and twigs fell upon it? But it was their only chance. Mat's hands were firm and strong, and the horses answered to the guiding rein. The fire was on either hand now, their faces were blistering under the heat, every piece of wood and ironwork was too hot to touch, and the horses stumbled every now and then where a fall would mean certain death. He bowed his head in his hands. This was the end then. All his high hopes, all his ambition, and his little sweetheart waiting for him so patiently till he could make a home for her up here among the mountains. All, all was lost; this was the end. How long now, how long? Then the driver's voice broke in on his reverie.

"The mails are afire, doctor. Couldn't you put them out? Take this waterproof apron."

The waterproof apron had been pulled up to shield their own legs; but no matter—if Mat were so faithful to his trust, he could not be less so, and with his pocket-knife he ripped it up, and turning round threw it across the mail bags. It didn't half cover them, and he had to crawl half over them and put out the blaze with his fingers. Sometimes he managed to get the waterproof in between his bare hand and the fire, but always that was not practicable, and the mails were such inflammable material, before he got one place out another would be alight. His hands grew sore and painful but he hardly noticed it, only the smoke was so choking and the heat so fierce he could only wonder they held on so long.

First one horse stumbled, then another, but the practised hand of the driver drew them to their feet again. The off leader was down on her knees once, and the coach gave such a lurch he gave up all for lost, while he mechanically laid his arm across the corner of the woodwork that burst into flame.

"Do that again," said Mat between his teeth, "and it's all up with us." But the mare, helped by his guiding hand, struggled to her feet again.

A burning branch fell right across the top of the coach, miraculously sparing the two men on the box-seat, and the doctor, with a great effort, flung it off. Another fell right in front of the horses, but the track luckily was wider here, and Mat managed to draw horses and coach a little aside. It was only clever hands that did it at that headlong pace, but it was done, and they were a little nearer the end.

How long? How long?

Eyebrows, eyelashes, hair were all singed by the flames; the curtains in the coach windows were on fire, and the horses—their scanty harness was red-hot, and the white handkerchief he had tied round the eyes of one of the leaders was already smouldering. The end must come soon now, things could not go on like this any longer.

"Woa, there. Steady, good mare. Hold up, will you?" And the whip came down with a heavy crack across the backs of the stumbling horses.

Crash! And a tall tree fell close alongside them, and men and coach and horses received the burst of sparks that flew around them.

"It is the end," cried the doctor, his lips cracked and swollen and his mouth dry and parched, yet still making one last effort to put out with his bare, burnt hands the fire that was kindling afresh among the mails.

"By the living God! no," shouted the driver. "We're through! My God! we're through!"

Then the other man turned his head and looked through the dense haze with red-rimmed, smoke-weary eyes, and he saw that his companion spoke the truth. Behind them was the fire, behind them the flames dancing yellow and red and blue in the heavy smoke, and here—here was only the path of the fire, hot wind, heavy smoke, dense and thick as ever. The breath of the fire had passed, and every living thing was dead. The tall trees were blackened, smoking skeletons, in which the red fire still smouldered, and the air was full of the soft, white, powdery ash that had once been bark and green leaves. But they were safe, safe! and in a few more yards Mat drew up the horses, and they put out the last remnants of the fire that had clung to the coach.

Then they were off again, and in another five minutes were clattering down the road into the township of Bethambia.

The township had fought for its life, and at the first roadside cottage they came across a little knot of men armed with branches and sacks, and looking scarcely less dishevelled than the newcomers themselves. These had been beating back the fire from the township.

"And it was a mighty close shave," said one of them, stepping forward. "But, lordy! Mat, whatever brought ye through on a day like this?"

"The mails, Jim Coulson," said Mat, drawing himself up with dignity, "has got to go through, an' they're through. An' here's the doctor for your missus."

Then a woman made her appearance in the doorway, winding up her hands in her long white apron.

"Is it the doctor?" she asked. "Oh, doctor, I'm that sorry, but the baby was born more than half an hour ago. Just as fine a child as ever you set eyes on, bless him!"

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

To the living authors whose work is included in this volume, the thanks of the editor are hereby tendered for their courtesy in permitting the reprinting of their copyright stories, and thanks are likewise recorded to the various publishers who have also given their consent. These items are individually acknowledged in the following list:

A Thorough Gentleman, from "A Spoiled Priest," by Canon P. A. Sheehan. Messrs. BURN & QUES, LTD., 28 Orchard Street, London, W.

The Comedy of the Old Love, from "Nell Gwyn, Comedian," by F. Frankfort Moore. Messrs. C. ARTHUR PEARSON, LTD., 17 Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

The Birthday of the Infanta, from "The House of Pomegranates," by Oscar Wilde. Messrs. METHUEN & CO., LTD., 36 Essex Street, London, W.C.

Maureen's Fairing, from "Maureen's Fairing," by Jane Barlow. Messrs. J. M. DENT & SONS, LTD., 10 Bedford Street, London, W.C.

At the Spotted Lamb, and The Meeting in the Library, from "The Yellow Domino," by Katherine Tynan.

A Nursery Tea, from "Earth to Earth," by Richard Dehan. Mr. WM. HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, London, W.C.

They that Mourn, and Th' Ould Boy, from "Ring o' Rushes," by Shan F. Bullock. Messrs. WARD, LOCK & CO., LTD., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

The Rev. Peter Flannery, and A Connemara Miracle, from "At the Rising of the Moon," by Frank Mathew.

The Twisting of the Rope, from "Stories of Red Hanrahan," by W. B. Yeats. DUN EMER PRESS, Dundrum, Ireland.

Rosanna, from "Chance the Piper," by Agnes Castle. Mr. JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, London, W.

The Bewitched Fiddle, from "The Bewitched Fiddle," and The Resurrection of Dinny O'Dowd, from "Irish Nights," by Seumas MacManus.

Priscilla, from "The Father Confessor and Other Stories," by Dora Sigerson Shorter. By permission of Mr. C. K. SHORTER.

The House of Fahy, from "Some Experiences of an Irish R.M.," by E. CE. Somerville and Martin Ross. Messrs. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., 39 Paternoster Row, London.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The Breath of Life, and The Child Saint, from "A Munster Twilight," by Daniel Corkery. TALBOT PRESS, Dublin.

The City on Mallington Moor, from "Tales of Wonder." The Assignation, and The Hen, from "Fifty-One Tales," by Lord Dunsany. Mr. ELKIN MATHEWS, 4A Cork Street, London, W. Coronation of Mr. Thomas Shap, from "Book of Wonder," by Lord Dunsany. Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, London, W.C. The Sword and the Idol, from "A Dreamer's Tales," by Lord Dunsany. Messrs. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD., 40 Museum Street, London, W.C.

Rodman the Boatsteerer, from "Rodman the Boatsteerer," by Louis Becke. Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN, 1 Adelphi Terrace, London, W.C.

A Little Grey Glove, from "Keynotes," by George Egerton. Mr. JOHN LANE, Vigo Street, London, W.

The Freedom of the Black-Faced Ram, from "Watchers of the Trail," by C. G. D. Roberts. Messrs. DUCKWORTH & CO., 3 Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

The Pilot at Swan Creek, from "The Pilot at Swan Creek," by Ralph Connor. Messrs. HODDER & STOUGHTON, 20 Warwick Square, London, E.C.

The Crimson Flag, from "Pierre and his People," by Sir Gilbert Parker. Messrs. METHUEN & CO., LTD. The Absurd Romance of P'tite Louison, and The Singing of the Bees, from "The Lane that had no Turning," by Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart. Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, London, W.C.

In a Far-Off World, and An Artist's Secret, from "Dreams," by Olive Schreiner. Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN, 1 Adelphi Terrace, London, W.C.

Quarantine, from "Chapman's Wares," by H. B. Marriott Watson. Messrs. MILLS & BOON, LTD., 49 Rupert Street, London, W.

The Doctor's Drive, from "The Ends of the Earth," by Mary Gaunt. Messrs. T. WERNER LAURIE, LTD., 30 New Bridge Street, London, E.C.

INDEX.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 1—31

- action in personam, nature of, 3
 - in rem*, nature of, 3
- advancement, as to what is considered an, 20
- ancestor, descent when traced from, 9
 - lineal, when inheriting real estate, 10
 - representation of, by lineal descendants in infinitum (descent of real estate), 10
- bona vacantia*, 27
 - in Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, 31
 - proceedings by and against Crown to recover, 30
 - when executor's right prevails against Crown, right to, 23
- borough English lands, descent of, 15
 - estate tail in, 12
- breaking descent of customary lands, 14
- brothers' shares in personalty of intestate, 22
- children, legitimacy of, how determined, 19
- children's shares in intestate's personalty, 19
- company, defunct, vesting of real estate of, in Crown, 25
 - destruction of term on dissolution of, 25
- coparceners, meaning of, 10
- coparcenery, estate in, subject to curtesy, 10
- copyholds, descent of, 14
 - estate tail in, 12
 - trust and mortgage estates, devolution of, upon death, 6
- corporation, escheat of freehold lands of, 24
- Crown, escheat to, 26
 - right of, to bona vacantia, 27
- curtesy, estate in coparcenary subject to, 10
- customary freeholds, descent of, 13
 - how broken, 14
 - equitable estates in, descent of, 13
- descent, ancestor, lineal, when inheriting, 10
 - representation of, by lineal descendants in infinitum, 10
 - definition of, 2
 - females inherit together, 9
 - half-blood, inheritance by, 11
 - males, eldest of, inherits, 9
 - over females, priority of, 9
 - merger of equitable and legal estates, 9
 - of borough English lands, 15
 - copyholds, 14
 - customary freeholds, 13
 - estate pur autre vie, 12
 - tail, 11
 - gavelkind lands, 14
 - real estate, 7
 - on death of intestate coparcener, 8, 10
 - failure of heirs of purchaser, 9
 - paternal line over maternal line, priority of, 10
 - possessio fratris*, doctrine of, 10
 - qualified heir, meaning of, 11
 - traced from purchaser, 7
 - ut antiquum*, 10
 - when traced from ancestor, 9

INDEX.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—continued.

- devise to a trustee on a trust which fails, 3
- devolution of personal estate upon death, 6
 - real estate belonging to deceased, 4
 - held by deceased as trustee or mortgagee, 5
- distribution, definition of, 2
 - of personal estate, 16
- equitable estate, escheat of, 24
 - estate in customary freeholds, descent of, 13
- escheat, 23—27
 - Crown right to, when barred, 27
 - derivation of, 23
 - effect of Land Transfer Acts on, 27
 - estate tail, none on failure of issue under, 23
 - for treason, felony and felo de se, abolition of, 23
 - lands subject to, 23
 - nature of, 23
 - of equitable estate, 24
 - freehold lands of a corporation, 24
 - incorporeal hereditaments, 24
 - on outlawry, 25
 - propter defectum tenentis*, 26
 - delictum tenentis*, 25
 - regrant of escheated lands, 26
 - to Crown, 26
 - mesne lord, 26, 27
- estate pur autre vie, descent of, 12
- tail, descent of, 11
 - in borough English lands, descent of, 12
 - copyholds, 12
 - gavelkind lands, descent of, 12
 - no escheat on failure of issue under, 23
- executor, vesting of legal estate, 5
- executors, when taking residuary personalty beneficially, 29
- father's share in personalty of intestate, 21
- fee-simple estate, descent of, 7
- females inherit real estate together, 9
 - priority of males over, in descent of real estate 9
- gavelkind lands, descent of, 14
 - estate tail in, 12
- half-blood, inheritance by, 11
- heir-at-law, share of, in personalty of intestate, 20
- heir, devise to trustees to convey to, 8
 - qualified, meaning of, 11
- heirlooms, nature of, 3
- heirs, limitation to, effect of, on rules of descent, 8
- heirship, how ascertained, 7
- husband's share in personal estate on intestacy, 16
- incorporeal hereditaments, escheat of, 24
- inquisition as to escheat, 27
- interest on advancements, 21
- intestacy, partial, definition of, 2
 - total, definition of, 2
- Intestates' Estates Act, widow's share in estate under, 16
- issue, shares of, in intestate's personalty, 19
- judicial separation, effect of, on husband's right to personal estate, 16
 - widow's right to share in intestate's estate, 17
- land, definition of, in Inheritance Act, 1833...3
- leaseholds, destruction of, on dissolution of company, 25
 - vesting order on dissolution of company, trustee of, 25
- legal estate, vesting of, upon death, 5
- legitimacy of children, how determined, 19
- males, eldest of, inherits real estate, 9
 - over females, priority of, in descent of real estate, 9
- merger of equitable and legal estates on descent, 9
- mesne lord, escheat to, 27
- mortgage estates, devolution of, upon death, 5
 - do not escheat, 25
- mother's share in personalty of intestate, 21

• INDEX.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—continued.

- nephews' shares in personality of intestate, 22
- nieces' shares in personality of intestate, 22
- outlawry, escheat on, 25
- partial intestacy, definition of, 2
- partnership, real estate, devolution of, 6
- paternal line over maternal line, priority of, in descent of real estate, 10
- personal estate, definition of, 3
 - devolution of, upon death, 6
 - distribution of, 16—23
 - advancements, 20
 - interest on, 21
 - brothers' shares, 22
 - children's shares, 19
 - father's share, 21
 - heir-at-law, share of, 20
 - husband's share, 16
 - issue, shares of, 19
 - mother's share, 21
 - nephews' shares, 22
 - nieces' shares, 22
 - portion, as to what is considered a, 20
 - relations, not specifically provided for, shares of, 22
 - sisters' shares, 22
 - widow's share, 16
- portion, as to what is considered a, 20
- possessio fratris*, doctrine of, 10
- per autre vie* estate, descent of, 12
- purchaser, definition of, 7
 - descent on failure of heirs of, 9
 - traced from, 7
- qualified heir, meaning of, 11
- real action, nature of, 3
 - estate, definition of, 3
 - descent of, 7
 - devolution of, on death, 4
 - escheat of, 23
 - of defunct company, vesting of, in Crown, 25
 - partnership, devolution of, 6
- regrant of escheated lands, 26
- relations not specifically provided for by statute, shares of in intestate's personality, 23
- sisters' shares in personality of intestate, 22
- testamentary expenses, meaning of in Intestates' Estates Act, 17
- trust estates, devolution of, upon death, 5
 - do not escheat, 25
- trustee, devise to, on a trust which fails, 3
- vesting order on dissolution of company—trustee of leaseholds, 25
- widow not one of next of kin according to Statutes of Distribution etc., 17
- widow's claim to share in intestate's estate barred by settlement or will, 18
 - share in personality, 16
 - under Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, 16

ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS ON DEATH. See title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADMINISTRATION OF BANKRUPT'S ASSETS. See title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

ADMINISTRATION OF CONVICT'S PROPERTY. See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.

CORPORATION PROPERTY, DEVOLUTION OF. See title CORPORATIONS.

CURTSEY, ESTATE BY. See titles COPYHOLDS; HUSBAND AND WIFE; REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL.

DEVISEES AND LEGATEES. See titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; WILLS.

DEVOLUTION UNDER CONTRACT. See titles BUILDING CONTRACTS; CONTRACT.

DOWER. See titles COPYHOLDS; HUSBAND AND WIFE; REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL.

INDEX.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—continued.

ELECTION, DOCTRINE OF. See title WILLS.

ESTATE DUTY. See title ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES.

FREEBENCH. See titles COPYHOLDS; HUSBAND AND WIFE; REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL.

LEGATEES. See titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; WILLS.

MARSHALLING OF ASSETS. See titles BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

PARTITION. See title PARTITION.

PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY. See title PARTNERSHIP.

PERPETUITIES. See title PERPETUITIES.

SUCCESSION DUTY. See title ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES.

TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITIONS. See title WILLS.

WINDING UP OF COMPANY. See title COMPANIES.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION AND INTERROGATORIES, 35—113 account, discovery relating to questions of, when postponed, 52

interrogatories in claim for, 98

security for costs, 54

accountant, inspection of documents by, 90 action for discovery, lies, when, 39

Admiralty actions, discovery in, 43 affidavit as to specific documents not mentioned in pleadings of which production is sought, 69

notice to produce documents mentioned in, 68

of documents, 60

not usual in commercial list causes, 44

see documents, discovery of agency, time for discovery in cases of, 52 agent, inspection of documents by, 90 knowledge of, must be stated in answer to interrogatories, 108 non-professional, communications to, when privileged, 76 privileged communications made through, 74 production of documents for inspection by, 86

reports by, when privileged, 78

anonymous letters, when privileged, 76

answers to interrogatories by corporation or company, 109

objections to making, 110

appeal, discovery ordered for purposes of, 53

from decisions as to interrogatories, 107 refusal of master or judge to order discovery of documents, 59

where costs provided for in order, 56 application for discovery of documents, 59

further and better answer to interrogatories, 112

general production of documents for inspection, 67

leave to deliver interrogatories, 106

production of specific documents not mentioned in pleadings, 69 to compel production of documents, 69 set aside interrogatories, 108 arbitration proceedings, discovery when granted in, 40 arbitrator, notes of proceedings before, not privileged, 75 assets of a deceased person, interrogatories as to, 98

attachment for non-compliance with order for discovery, 56

bailment, interrogatories in cases of, 99

bankers' books, copies of entries in, 91

bankruptcy proceedings, interrogatories in, 44

bill in Chancery, right to discovery enforced by, 38 bills of costs, how far privileged, 75

business books, copies of entries in, 91

cargo, interrogatories in action for non-delivery of, 103 case of party, documents relating solely to, production of, 87

"cause," meaning of in Judicature Acts, 39 certificate of master permitting payment out of security of costs, 56

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

- Chancery, old rules of Court of, as to discovery, 38
- Division, discovery in proceedings before masters of, 53
- character of servant, when production of, can be resisted, 84
- civil suit, danger of exposure, not a ground for resisting production, 83
- claim to seal up irrelevant portions of document, 70.
- co-defendant, discovery obtained against, 44
- commercial list, discovery rarely allowed in actions transferred to, 43
- committee of lunatic, discovery against, 48
- Companies Acts, discovery granted in proceedings under, 40
- company, answer to interrogatories by, 109
 - discovery in case of a, 46
 - liquidator of, discovery against, 47
 - member of, examination of costs of, 56
 - ordinary member of, discovery ordered against, 47
- compromises of former action, when privileged, 77
- confidential communications, 73
- conspiracy, discovery granted in actions for, 40
- copies of entries instead of inspection, 91
 - right to take, 90
- co-plaintiff, discovery obtained against, 44
- Copyright Acts, discovery granted in proceedings under, 40
- corporation, answer to interrogatories by, 109
 - discovery in case of, 46
- costs of application for further and better answer, 113
 - discovery, 56
 - appeal, 56
 - security for, 58
 - where interrogatories or answers are unreasonable, vexatious or of inordinate length, 56
 - member of company examined on interrogatories, 55
 - of further and better answer to interrogatories, 113
 - improper interrogatories, 98
 - inspection of documents, 90
 - voir dire* examination as answer to interrogatories, 113
- counsel, instructions to, briefs and opinions of etc., privileged, 74
- counter-claim, discovery obtained by party brought in by, 44
- court, inspection by, of documents claimed to be privileged, 64
 - of Chancery, auxiliary jurisdiction of, 38
 - rolls, inspection of, 92
- criminal prosecution, liability to, resistance to production on grounds of, 85
- Crown, discovery where the Crown is a party, 48
- customers, interrogatories as to names and addresses of, 94
- damages, discovery bearing only on, postponement of, 62
 - interrogatories as to amount of, 99
- defamation, discovery in action for, 51
 - interrogatories in action for, 99
- defence, discovery usually not granted to defendant before, 50
 - striking out of, for non-compliance with order for discovery, 56
- defendant (made so for that purpose only), discovery against, 46
- discovery in aid of execution. See title EXECUTION.
- dismissal of action for non-compliance with order for discovery, 57
 - want of prosecution on non-compliance with order for discovery, 56
- doctors, reports by, when privileged, 79
- documents, discovery of, 58—66
 - affidavit, inclusion in, does not necessarily import right to production, 59
 - of documents, 60—64
 - by several parties, 61
 - commercial list causes, not usual in, 44
 - conclusiveness of, 61
 - contents of, 60
 - description of documents, 60
 - King's Bench Division, 60
 - Chancery Division, 60
 - further and better affidavits, 61—64
 - when ordered by court, 62
 - inconsistencies in other affidavits, sometimes a ground for a further, 62

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued

documents, discovery of—continued.

affidavit of documents—continued.

insufficient description of documents, 64

interrogatory as to possession of particular document, when permitted, 63

not usual in commercial list causes, 44

office copy unnecessary, 61 order requiring statement on oath as to specified document, 63 to take off file, 61 privilege, claim of, when capable of being controverted, 62 privileged documents should be included in, 59 production, when ordered on ground of non-inclusion of relevant documents, 62 roving interrogatory not allowed, 63

schedules, 60

second, on application of a second defendant, 61

supplementary, 61

untruth of, evidence as to, rule as to, 61

exceptions to, 62

when permitting of attack, though sufficient in point of form, 64 appeal from refusal of master or judge to order, 59 application for, practice on, 59 disclosure in particular cases, 65 of existence of documents, when refused, 64 document, meaning of, 58

extent of, 58

inspection by court, 64

marine insurance, cases as to, 65

"matter in question," meaning of, 53

nature of, 58

order for inspection by master of documents claimed to be privileged, 64

recovery of land, disclosure of documents when ordered, 65

rule as to, contrasted with rule as to production for inspection, 69 search, careful, necessary on order for, 58 ship's papers, discovery of, in actions on policies of marine insurance, 65

underwriters, in actions against, 65 documents in custody of court of lunacy, production of, 48

general, interrogatories as to, 102

interrogatories as to contents of, 102 list of, in lien of affidavit in commercial list causes, 99 of public companies, discovery of, by mandamus, 39 documents, production of, for inspection, 67—92

accountant, inspection by, 90 affidavit as to specific documents, 69 agent, documents in possession of an, 86

inspection by, 90

non-professional, communication to, when privileged, 76

reports by, when privileged, 78

anonymous letters, when privileged, 76

application for production of specific documents not mentioned in pleadings, 69

to compel, 69

bankers' books, copies of entries in, 91

business books, copies of entries in, 91

case of party, document relating solely to, 87

character of servant, production of, resistance to, 84 civil suit, danger of exposure, not a ground of privilege, 83

claim to seal up, 70 client, waiver of privilege by, 81

collisions at sea, reports of surveys made as to, 79

communications at joint consultations privileged, 82 between parties, how far privileged, 80 to non-professional agent, when privileged, 76

compelled in what way, 69 compromise of, former action or dispute, inspection of, 77

confidential communications to legal adviser, 73 consequences of failure to produce, 91

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

- documents, production of, for inspection—continued.
- consultations, communications at, privileged, 82
- copies of entries instead of inspection, 91
- costs of inspection, 90
- court rolls, inspection of, 92
- covering up of irrelevant or privileged part, 71
- criminal cases, in. See also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.
 - prosecution, liability to, privilege on grounds of, 83
- crimination, 82
- deposit of documents in court for inspection, 89
- "documents" includes what, 68
- documents in possession of an agent, 86
 - not in the sole possession of a party, 85
 - relating solely to the case of the party, 87
- expert, inspection by, 90
- failure to produce, consequences of, 91
- forfeiture, liability to, privilege on grounds of, 83
- fraud charged in action, privilege to what extent, 80
- general application for general production, 67
- grounds for resisting production, 71
- illegality charged in action, extent of privilege, 80
- incriminating documents, 82
- inspection, the, 89
- insurance cases, reports in, when not privileged, 79
- interrogatories, information contained in privileged documents may be disclosed through, 77
- jurisdiction, discovery ordered against persons out of, 45
- Legal Aid Society, reports to, not privileged, 80
- legal professional adviser, who included in term, 73
 - privilege, 72
 - bills of costs, 75
 - communications between opposing solicitors not privileged, 74
 - solicitor and non-professional agent etc., 75
 - through agent, 74
 - counsel's instructions and briefs etc., 74
 - dispositions filed in course of action, 75
 - entries in solicitor's diary, 74
 - in cases where legal adviser is consulted merely as a friend, 74
 - indorsement on counsel's brief of judgment etc., not privileged, 74
 - notes of proceedings in open court etc., 75
 - same solicitor acting for both parties, 74
- letters, when privileged, 76
- litigation personally conducted, extent of privilege, 82
- medical adviser, communications to, not privileged, 80
- modes of procuring, 67
- nature and extent of, 67
- notice for inspection, the, 89
 - to produce documents mentioned in pleadings or affidavit, 68
- official correspondence, how far privileged, 84
- oppression, resistance to production on grounds of, 88
- order for inspection, the, 89
- patent agent, reports to, not privileged, 80
- penalties, liability to, privilege on grounds of, 83
- photographs of documents, 89
- place of inspection, 89
- "pleadings" includes particulars, 68
- power of court to unseal, 71
- privilege, legal professional, 72
- privileged documents, disclosure of information through interrogatories, 77
- protected documents, 71
- public department, objection to production by, 84
 - policy, 84
- pursuant of the Heralds' College, reports to, not privileged, 80
- railway company, cases relating to, 88
 - reports to, when privileged, 78

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

- documents, production of, for inspection—continued.
 - refusal to give, 69
 - reports by agents or servants to employers, 78
 - medical men, when privileged, 78
 - resistance to production, 70
 - right to copies, 90
 - rival company, books of, inspection of, 88
 - servant, character of, when production of, can be resisted, 84
 - sole legal possession of party, documents must be in, 85
 - solicitor, communications to, how far privileged, 73
 - specified, order as to, 63
 - spiritual adviser, communications to, not privileged, 80
 - State official, objection to production by, 84
 - statements of objection to produce, 70
 - stockbroker, books of, inspection of, 88
 - trustee, intent to which privilege can be claimed by, 81
 - waiver of privilege, 81
 - witness, inspection by, 90
- election petitions, discovery not granted in, 41
- English information, proceedings on revenue side by, discovery in, 46, 48
- evidence in support of case, interrogatories may not extend to, 93
- execution, discovery in aid of, 37
- executor, interrogatories as to assets, 98
- expert, inspection of documents by, 90
- firm, order for discovery against, 67
- foreign sovereign, discovery ordered against, 48
- forfeiture, discovery not granted merely to establish a,
 - interrogatories to prove, not permitted, 97
 - liability to, resistance to production on grounds of, 83
- form of order for giving security for costs of discovery, 54
- fraud charged in action, privilege to what extent, 80
- goods, sale of, interrogatories as to, 105
- Heralds' College, reports to pursuant of, not privileged, 80
- income tax returns, vexatious interrogatories as to, disallowed, 96
- incriminating documents, as to production of, 82
- indorsement upon order for discovery, 67
- infant, discovery where infant is a party, 48
- information, English, proceedings on revenue side by, discovery in, 46, 48
- illegality, charged in action, extent of privilege, 80
- inquiry pro interesse suo, discovery granted in, 40
- inquisitions in lunacy, discovery in, 49
- inspection by court of documents claimed to be privileged, 64
 - of documents, 67. See documents, production of, for inspection.
 - how carried out, 89
- insurance cases, reports in, when not privileged, 79
 - interrogatories in cases, as to, 102
 - marine, disclosure of documents in cases as to, 65
- interpleader proceedings, discovery granted in, 40
- interrogatories, 92—113
 - account, in claim for, 98
 - answer to, 108
 - application for further and better, 112
 - by corporation or company, 109
 - embarrassing, 112
 - form of, 111
 - incompleteness of, 112
 - knowledge of agent or servant must be stated in, 108
 - may be by vide roce examination, 113
 - objections to make, 110
 - paragraphing of, 112
 - time for delivering, 111
 - using at the trial, 113
 - when to be printed, 112
 - appeal from decision as to, 107
 - application for further and better answer to, 112
 - leave to deliver, 106
 - to set aside, 108
 - assets of a deceased person, as to, 98

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

interrogatories—continued.

- as to particular document being in possession of party giving discovery when permitted, 63
- author of a libel, interrogatories as to, as a rule not allowed, 101
- bailment, in cases of, 99
- calls upon shareholder, in case of, 99
- cargo, in actions for non-delivery of, 103
- company, answer to interrogatories by, 109
- corporation, answer to interrogatories by, 109
- costs of improper, 98
 - voir dire examination, 113
- credit, interrogatories as to, 94
- customers, as to names and addresses of, 94
- damages, as to amount of, 99
- defamation, in action for, 99
- defendant (where more than one) to answer interrogatory, should be specified in note, 107
- delivery of more than one set of, 107
- disallowance of, where information better obtained by order for particulars, 96
- discretion of master, as to, 107
- documents (in general), as to, 102
 - in possession of party, as to number of, 102
- forfeiture, interrogatories to prove, not permitted, 97
- form of, 107
- evidence in support of case may not be included in, 93
- extent of, 92
- goods, sale of, in cases as to, 104
- income tax returns, vexatious interrogatories as to, disallowed, 96
- information contained in privileged documents may be disclosed through, 77
- insurance, in cases as to, 102
- libel, in actions for, 99
 - original manuscript of, will not be ordered to be produced, 101
- lost document, as to contents of, 102
- malice, for purposes of establishing, 100
- matters in issue or directly material must be confined to, 95
- names and addresses, when proper subject-matter of, 93
- nature of, 92
- negligence, in actions based upon, 103
 - on ground of, 93
- numbering of, 107
- objections to answer, 110
- order for, in commercial list cases, 44
- other means of proving facts, not a good objection to discovery, 96
- paragraphing of answers to, 112
- patents, in actions for infringement of, 94
- payment, as to time and place of, 103
- penalty incurred, interrogatories to prove, not permitted, 97
- profits of a business, vexatious interrogatories as to, disallowed, 96
- prolix, must not be, 97
- recovery of land, in actions for, 103
- refusal to allow, by master, 107
- roving, not allowed, 63
- sale of goods, in cases, as to, 104
- scandalous, must not be, 97
- seduction, in action for, 93
 - actions for, 105
- service of copy of, 107
- setting aside of, 108
- shareholder, in case of calls upon, 99
- slander, in action for, 99
- Stock Exchange transactions, in actions as to, 105
- trade marks, in actions for infringement of, 94
- secrets, in actions as to disclosure of, 105
- ulterior purposes, may not be for, 98
- unnecessary, must not be, 97
- unreasonable, must not be, 97
- valuer, in action for negligence against, 103
- witnesses, names of, should not be the subject of, 93

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

- interrogatories—continued.
 - wrongful dismissal, in action for, 106
 - issue to be determined first, discovery where, 52
 - judgment, discovery for purposes of working out, postponement of, 53
 - Judicature Act, effect of, upon discovery, 38
 - jurisdiction, discovery ordered against persons resident out of the, 46
 - King's Proctor, discovery not ordered against, 42
 - land, recovery of, interrogatories in actions for, 103
 - Legal Aid Society, reports to, not privileged, 80
 - legal possession (sole), necessary to give rise to right of production for inspection, 85
 - professional adviser, who included in term, 73
 - privilege, 72
 - letters, when privileged, 76
 - libel, interrogatories in action for, 99
 - liquidator of company, discovery against, 47
 - lost document, interrogatories as to contents of, 102
 - lunacy, in question in, discovery in, 49
 - lunatic, discovery where lunatic is a party, 48
 - malice, interrogatories for purpose of establishing, 100
 - mandamus, enforcement of discovery by, 39
 - manor, inspection of court rolls of, 92
 - marine insurance, discovery of ship's papers in actions on policies of, 65
 - masters in Chancery Division, discovery in proceedings before, 53
 - matrimonial causes, discovery in, 42
 - "matter," meaning of, 40
 - matters of law cannot be subject-matter of discovery, 36
 - meaning of term "discovery," 36
 - medical adviser, communications to, not privileged, 80
 - men, reports by, when privileged, 79
 - multiplicity of persons a ground for ordering additional security of costs, 54
 - names and addresses, when proper subject-matter of interrogatories, 93
 - negligence, interrogatories in actions based upon, 103
 - nominal plaintiffs, discovery obtained against, 45
 - non-compliance with order for discovery, effect of, 56
 - non-party, discovery against, 45
 - notes of proceedings in court etc., not privileged, 75
 - notice to produce documents mentioned in pleadings or affidavit, 68
 - objections to production of documents, statement of, 70
 - official correspondence, how far privileged, 84
 - oppression, resistance to production on grounds of, 88
 - order, discovery for purposes of working out, postponement of, 53
 - for discovery, effect of non-compliance with, 56
 - indorsement upon, 57
 - service of, 57
 - inspection by master of documents claimed to be privileged, 64
 - particulars, disallowance of interrogatories, where information better obtained by, 96
 - requiring statement on oath as to specified document, 63
 - particulars, discovery when granted before, 50
 - partners, order for discovery against, 57
 - patent, action for infringement of, sealing up in, 71
 - agent, reports to, not privileged, 80
 - cases, discovery in, before validity established, 53
 - discovery in actions, infringement of, 43
 - interrogatories in actions for infringement of, 94
 - payment, interrogatories as to time and place of, 103
 - into court of security for costs, 55
 - out of court of security for costs, 55
 - penalties, liability to payment of, resistance to production on grounds of, 83
 - penalty, discovery not granted merely to enforce a, 41
 - interrogatories to prove penalty incurred not permitted, 97
 - pending litigation, professional privilege wider in case of, 73
 - petition (election), discovery not granted in, 41
 - of right, discovery not granted in, 41
 - photographs of documents to be inspected, 89
 - "pleadings" includes particulars, 68
 - notice to produce documents mentioned in, 68
 - policies of marine insurance, discovery of ship's papers in actions of, 65

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

- possession, sole legal, necessary to give rise to right of production for inspection, 85
- postponement of discovery, where issue to be first determined, 52
- only necessary for working out judgment or order, 53
- practice as to discovery, 37
 - ordering security for costs of discovery, 54
 - on application for discovery of documents, 59
- principal, discovery obtained against, where agent sues, 45
- privilege, legal professional, 72
- privileged documents, information contained therein may be disclosed through interrogatories, 77
 - inspection of, by court, 64
- pro interesse suo*, discovery granted in inquiry, 40
- probate actions, discovery in, 42
- procedure as to discovery, 37
- proceedings in which discovery may be granted, 39
- production of documents for inspection, 67. See documents, production of, for inspection.
 - in criminal cases. See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.
 - where lunatic a party, 49
- professional privilege, legal, 72
- profits of a business, vexatious interrogatories as to, disallowed, 96
- public documents, discovery of, by mandamus, 39
 - policy, resistance to production on grounds of, 84
- question (preliminary) to be decided, discovery where, 52
- railway company, production for inspection by, cases relating to, 83
 - reports by servants of, when privileged, 78
- receipt for payment into court of security for costs, service of, 55
- recovery of land, disclosure of documents when ordered, 65
 - discovery granted in actions for, 40
 - interrogatories in actions for, 103
- reports by agents or servants to employers, when privileged, 73
 - medical men, when privileged, 79
 - in insurance cases, when not privileged, 79
- reservation of discovery till issue determined, 52
- resistance to production of documents for inspection, 70
- revenue side, proceedings on by English information, discovery in, 46, 48
- right, establishment of, discovery not given before, 52
- roving interrogatory not allowed, 63
- sale of goods, interrogatories in cases as to, 104
- sealing up in patent and trade mark cases, 71
 - of irrelevant portion of document, 70
- secrets, trade, interrogatories in actions as to disclosure of, 105
- security for costs of discovery, 53
 - amount of, 54
 - where inspection procured by notice, 54
 - payment out of court of, 55
 - service of receipt for payment into court, 57
- seduction, action for, interrogatories in, 93, 105
- servant, character of, when production of, can be resisted, 84
- service of copy of interrogatories, 107
 - order for discovery, 57
 - receipt for payment into court of security for costs, 55
- setting aside of interrogatories, 108
- shareholders, interrogatories as to execution of subscription contract by, 99
- sheriff, discovery in actions against, 50
- ship's papers, discovery of, costs of, 54
 - in actions on policies of marine insurance, 65
- slander, interrogatories in action for, 99
- society, legal aid, reports to, not privileged, 80
- solicitor, communications with, how far privileged, 73
- sovereign, foreign, discovery ordered against, 48
- specific documents, not mentioned in pleadings etc., application for production of, 69
- performance, discovery granted in actions of, 40
- spiritual adviser, reports to, not privileged, 80
- statement of claim, discovery usually not granted to plaintiff till after, 50

INDEX.

DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES—continued.

- statement of objections to production of documents, 70
- Stock Exchange transactions, interrogatories as to, 105
- stranger to the cause, discovery not granted against, 46
- striking out of defence for non-compliance with order for discovery, 56 reasons for, 58
- testamentary capacity, discovery in cases as to, 42
- third party, discovery obtained by, 44
 - proceedings, discovery granted in, 40
- time of granting discovery, 50
- trade mark, action for discovery by owner of, 39
 - infringement of, scaling up in, 71
 - discovery in proceedings for removal of, 43
 - interrogatories in actions for infringement of, 94
- secrets, interrogatories in actions as to disclosure of, 105
- trial, discovery in cases, where not needed for, 52
- trustee, extent to which production for inspection can be resisted by, 81
- underwriters, disclosure of documents in action against, 66
- unsending of documents under direction of court, 71
- valuer, interrogatories in action for negligence against, 103
- waiver of privilege of refusing production, 81
- witness, inspection of documents by, 90
- witnesses, names of, should not be the subject of interrogatories, 93
- wrongful dismissal, interrogatories in action for, 106

ADMISSION OF FACTS. See titles EVIDENCE; PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

BANKER'S BOOKS, INSPECTION OF. See title BANKERS AND BANKING.

COMPANY, INSPECTION OF BOOKS OF. See title COMPANIES.

CORPORATION, INSPECTION OF BOOKS OF. See title CORPORATIONS.

COUNTY COURTS, DISCOVERY IN. See title COUNTY COURTS.

DEPOSITIONS. See titles CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE; EVIDENCE.

EXECUTION, DISCOVERY IN AID OF. See title EXECUTION.

INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS OF CORPORATION BY MEMBER. See titles COMPANIES; CORPORATIONS.

INSPECTION OR VIEW OF LOCUS IN QUO. See title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

MANDAMUS TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS. See title CROWN PRACTICE.

MAYOR'S COURT, DISCOVERY IN. See title MAYOR'S COURT, LONDON.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS IN CRIMINAL CASES. See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.

DISTRESS, 117—227

- abandonment by procurement of tenant, 189
 - meaning of, 188
- action for damages, 201
 - claim in, 203
 - defence to, 205
 - excessive distress, 205
 - illegal distress, 204
 - irregular distress, 205
 - jurisdiction of county court in, 207
 - double value, 191, 207
 - recovery of treble damages for rescue or poundbreach, 194
 - rescue or poundbreach, 194
 - of replevin, 202
 - on the case, tenant's remedy by, 185
- administrator, distress by, 129
- Admiralty process, goods taken under, distraint upon, 179
- adoption of unauthorised distress, 160
- Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, distraint for rent under, 159
 - settlement of disputes under, 209
- machinery, distress upon, 140
- ambassador, property of, no distress upon, 133
- amends for irregular distress, tender of, 197
- animals foræ naturæ, distress upon, 138
- appeal against issue of distress warrant for poor rate, 214

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- appeal from justice's order for double value, 191
- appraisement in case of distress for income tax, 230
 - starting of, 171
 - when necessary, 170
- appraisers, two, necessary, 171
 - who may be, 171
- arrear, rent in, meaning of, 148
- arrears, of rent, agreement to take interest, effect of, on distress, 153
 - period of limitation, 159
- assessed taxes, recovery of, 218
 - by collector advancing money, 220
 - rent reserved on, cannot be distrained for, 124
- assignment of reversion, loss of distress through, 161
 - underlease for all the residue of a term is an, 195
- assise, rents of, 120
- attornment clauses, as to, 127
 - to receiver, 130
- auction room, removal of goods to, 184
- auctioneer, goods sent to, distress upon, 136
 - when licence necessary, 184
- backing of warrant, under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 221
- bailiff, corporations distrain by a, 131
 - fees of, no distraint for, 182
 - illegal act of, ratification of, by landlord, 204
 - infant cannot be appointed, 169
 - is agent of landlord, 162
 - landlord's remedy against, in case of excessive distress, 205
 - who may act as, 162
- bankrupt tenant, distress in case of, 171
- Bankruptcy Acts, distraint for rent under, 169
- bedding, distress upon, 139
- benefice, ecclesiastical, distress by sequestrator of, 132
- bill of exchange etc., taking of, effect of, on right of distress, 153
 - sale, goods comprised in, not protected by Distress Amendment Act 1908...145
- instruments giving power of distress as security to a, 118
- bond, replevin, 201
- borough rate, recovery of, 217
- breach of security, bond in replevin, 203
- breeding stock, distress upon, 140
- caged animals, distress upon, 138
- carrier, goods in hands of, no distress upon, 136
- cattle driven off to avoid distress, distraint upon, 156
 - upon common, distress upon, 156
- certainly of rent, 122
- certificate of bailiff, 162
- certiorari*, removal of action of replevin by, 202
- charges, table of, 186
- chattels let with houses or land at one entire rent, 122
 - sums reserved for use of, 122
- chief rents, 120
- churchwarden, distress by, 131
- clandestine removal of goods, 189
- co-executors, right of distress of, 126
- co-heirs in gavelkind, right of distress of, 126
- collateral security taken, distress where, 174
- commitment for non-payment of costs under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 227
 - general district rates, 217
 - poor rate, 215
- in default of payment under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 223
- committal in default of distress under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 223
 - payment where sum recoverable by complaint, 224
- common law power of distress, 118
 - right of distress, expiration of, 162
- company, demand of poor rate from, 211
 - distrain upon, for income tax, 218
 - in liquidation, distress against effects of, 172
 - officer of, distraint by, 162

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- compensation, recovery of, by distress, 221
 - under Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, set off against rent, 159
- compulsory payment for landlord, 156
 - winding-up of company, distress during, 172
- condition precedent must be fulfilled before right to distrain arises, 121
- conditions precedent to distress, 121
- conservators, demand of poor rate from, 211
- constitutional privilege from distress, 133
- constructive seizure, 66
- contract by landlord to sell freehold, effect of, on distress, 152
 - right of distress arising from, 117
- convicted person, custody of, pending return to warrant, 222
 - distress upon goods of, 221
 - postponement of warrant of distress, 223
- coparceners, right of distress of, 126
- copyholder, distress for rent of, 127
- corn, distress upon, 133
 - hay etc., impounding of, 169
 - loose, sale of in default of replevin, 181
 - sale of, 184
- corporation aggregate, distress by, 131
 - demand of poor rate from, 211
 - sole, distress by, 131
- corporeal hereditament, rent distrainable for must spring from, 122
- costs, distress for, on certificate of non-payment, 227
 - of taxation of expenses of distress, 186
 - warrant of distress for poor rate, 215
 - recoverable by distress under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 227
- county court, jurisdiction of, in action for damages, 207
- court, leave of, necessary in case of company in liquidation, 173
- creditor, execution, payment of rent by, 178
- crops, growing, no sale of, till ripe, 183
 - severed, distraint upon (Sale of Farming Stock Act), 179
- Crown, distress by, overrides execution against tenant, 175
 - property of, no distress upon, 133
- currency of tenancy, no distress for payments agreed on during, 123
- curtesy, tenant by, right of distress of, 126
- damages for imprisonment under an illegal warrant, 225
 - in action against sheriff at suit of landlord, 173
 - case of excessive distress, 207
 - illegal distress, 206
 - irregular distress, 206
 - recoverable in action, 206
- dead rent, reservation of, in advance, 124
- debenture-holders, distraint upon goods mortgaged to, 174
- declaration under Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908...146
- deer, distress upon, 138
- defeasible reversion will support distress, 124
- defence to action for damages, 205
- definition of, 117
- demand for poor rate, 211
 - when necessary to distrain, 148
- demise, actual and existing, necessary, 121
- determination of lessor's defeasible interest puts an end to right of distress, 152
- distinct rents, distress for, 156
- district rates, recovery of, 216
- divesting of property in goods seized on sale, 192
- dogs, distress upon, 138
- doors, breaking open of, to distrain, 164
- double rent, distraint for, 159
 - value, action for, 191, 208
 - justices' order for, 191
- dower, tenant in, right of distress of, 124
- estate of grass, cannot be distrained, 132
- ecclesiastical benefice, distress by sequestrator of, 132
- electric light meters, fittings etc., distress upon, 141
- elegit, tenant by, right of distress of, 126
- emblements, rent of tenant holding over in lieu recovered by distress, 151

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, exemption under, 226
- English distress warrants, enforcements of, in Scotland, 221
- entry, forcible, to remove goods fraudulently removed, 192
 - right of, for purpose of distraint, 169
- estoppel, reversion by, supports a distress, 124
- excessive distress, 197
 - action for damages, 205
 - damages in case of, 207
 - landlord's remedy against bailiff, 205 .
- exclusive possession necessary, 122
- execution against tenant, effect of, upon distress, 175
 - overridden by Crown's right to distress, 174
 - creditor, payment of rent, by, 178
 - followed by bankruptcy, landlord's right to rent, 176
- executors, distress by, 129
- exemptions from distress, 133 - 148
 - constitutional privilege, 133
 - fixtures, 136
 - goods of undertenants, lodgers and strangers, 143
 - instruments of trade, 142
 - live animals, 148
 - miscellaneous statutory privileges, 140
 - money, 138
 - perishable articles, 138
 - things in actual use, 137
 - trade privilege, 134
 - under Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 ..226
 - Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 226
 - wearing apparel, bedding and tools of trade, 139
 - where right given by Act of Parliament, 215
- exhibition of complaint upon fraudulent removal of goods, 191
- expenses of distraint, distress for, 160
 - distress, 186
 - table of, 186
- expiration of term, distress after, 149
- express power of, 118
- fee farm rent, 120
- fees, excessive, penalty for taking, 187
 - table of, 186
 - upon distress, 186
- fixtures, 136
 - temporarily removed, no distress upon, 137
 - when a portion of the freehold, 137
 - wrongful removal of, 206
- forcible entry for distress for income tax, 219
 - re-entry, 165
- foreign princes etc., property of, no distress upon, 133
- forfeiture, notice of, under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 222
- frames and materials in textile trades, distress upon, 140
- fraudulent removal, 189
 - exhibition of complaint, 191
 - forcible entry to seize goods, 192
 - of goods, 186
 - penalty, 190
- freebench, tenant by, right of distress by, 126
- fruit exempt from distress, 138
- furniture vans etc., detention of, engaged in night removals, 192
- gas meters and fittings, distress upon, 141
- gates, breaking open of, 165
- gavelkind, co-heirs in, right of distress of, 126
- general district rates, committal for non-payment of, 216
 - recovery of, 216
- goods distrainable for poor rate, 215
 - exempt from distress, restoration of, 209
 - fraudulent removal of, 189
 - penalty, 190
 - fraudulently removed, distraint upon, 188
 - in custody of the law, no distress upon, 134

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- goods, purchase of, by landlord, 185
 - removal of, to public auction room, 184
 - seized by sheriff, removal of, 175
 - upon a sequestration, 175
 - taken under Admiralty process, distraint upon, 179
- growing crops, appraisement, 171
 - distress upon, 133
 - impounding of, 169
 - no sale of, till ripe, 183
 - not distrainable for rentcharge, 121
- guardhouse, distress by, 130
- hay, distress upon, 133
- heriot service, distress for, 127
- highway rate, recovery of, 216
- hired tools and implements, distress upon, 139, 140
- horses and carriages at livery, distress upon, 136
- house not to be locked up, upon distress, to exclusion of tenant, 169
- husband in right of wife, distress by, 129
- husbandry, instruments of, conditional privilege of, 142
- illegal distress, 195
 - action for damages, 204
 - damages in case of, 206
 - on goods of lodger or undertenant, 147
 - remedies for, 196
- impounding, 168
 - of corn and hay, 169
 - off the premises, 169
 - of goods seized under Summary Jurisdiction Act 226
 - growing crops, 169
 - on the premises, 169
 - poundbreach after, 193
 - rescue before, 193
- imprisonment in default of distress, 223
- inclosures, breaking down of, 163
- income tax on profits of manors, royalties, markets or fairs, recovery of, 219
 - tithe and teinds, recovery of, 219
 - tolls or fisheries, recovery of, 219
 - recovery of, 218
 - under Sched. E, recovery of, 219
- incorporeal hereditament, rent distrainable for, cannot be reserved out of, 122
- increased rents, as to, 122
- indictment for poundbreach, 195
- indorsement on writ claiming damages, 205
- infant, appointment of, as bailiff, 169
- inhabited house duty, recovery of, 218
- injunction to restrain distress, 208
- inner door may be broken open, 164
- instalment lodger, 223
- instruments of husbandry, conditional privilege of, 142
 - of trade or profession, conditional privilege of, 142
- interest on arrears of rent, effect of taking, 153
- inventory of goods included in distress, 66
 - of lodger or undertenant claiming protection, 143
 - seized, sufficiency of, 168
 - sale of things not included in, 196
- irregular distress, 196
 - action for damages, 205
 - damages in case of, 205
 - special damage must be shown in action for, 206
 - tender of amends for, 197
- irregularities in sale, consequences of, 182
- joint distress, 161
 - tenants, right of distress of, 126
- judgment for rent, effect of, on distress, 183
- justification of rescue, 194
- landlord, payments for, 156
 - purchase of goods by, 185
- land tax, recovery of, 218

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- law, goods in custody of the, no distress upon, 134
- Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908...143
 - declaration under, 146
- lease, termination of, distress after, 149
- leave to proceed with distress, 173
- lessee with a second and reversionary lease subletting for term longer than first lease, effect of, 152
- levying the distress, 160—168
 - bailiff, 162
 - entry, 163
 - notice of distress, 166
 - seizure, 165
 - warrant, 160
- licence, right to distrain does not spring from a mere, 122
- limitation, period of, 159
- liquidation, distress after, 172
- live animals, distress upon, 138
- livery, distress upon horses and carriages at, 136
- "lodger" distinguished from "occupier," 144
- lodger, protection of, 143
- looms, distress upon, 140
- lord of the manor, distress by, 127
- loss of the right to distrain, 151
 - by agreement, 155
 - assignment of the reversion, 151
 - conduct, 155
 - determination of lessor's term, 152
 - expiration of tenancy, 152
 - judgment for rent, 153
 - payment of rent, 153
 - previous distress, 164
 - surrender of the reversion, 152
 - tender of rent, 153
- machinery, agricultural, distress upon, 140
- manor, lord of the, distress by, 127
- married woman, distress by, 129
- merger of reversion, loss of right of distress through, 162
- metropolitan police district, distress in case of weekly etc. tenancies and small houses, 208
- milk exempt from distress, 138
- minimum rent, reservation of, in advance, 124
- money, distress upon, 138
- mortgagee in possession, no obligation on, to distrain, 129
- mortgagees, distress by, 127
- mortgagor, as bailiff of mortgagee, distress by, 129
 - distress for rent reserved on lease by, 128
- new tenancy created, as to distress after, 150
- night, distress may not be at, 149
- removal by, detention of furniture van, 192
- notice by superior landlord to undertenant or lodger, to make payments of rent to him, 147
 - of distress, 66
 - forfeiture under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 222
 - intention to replevy, 201
- nulla bona*, return of, 178
- "occupier" distinguished from "lodger," 144
- origin of, 117
- outer door must not be broken open, 164
- overplus of sale, bestowal of, 185
- overseer, distress by, 131
- parish contribution to borough rate, recovery of, 217
- Parish Officers Act, 1793, application of, to levies for duties on land tax, 220
- pawnbroker, goods pledged with, no distress upon, 186
- payment of a sum of money, enforced by distress, 221
 - rent, extinguishment of right to distrain by, 153
- payments for landlord, effect of, on amount of distress, 157
- penal rent, demand necessary in case of, 148
- penalty, enforcement of, by distress, 221

INDEX

DISTRESS—continued.

- perishable articles, exemption from distress, 138
- person, distraint in, 162
- persons who may distrain, 125
- place of making distress, 155
- poor rate, appeal against issue of distress warrant, 214
 - case for opinion of High Court, 212
 - costs of warrant of distress, 215
 - delay of issue of warrant cannot be directed, 214
 - demand of, 210
 - from company, corporation or conservators, 211
 - distress for, 210
 - proportionate part, 214
 - evidence in support of application for distress warrant, 212
 - goods distrainable for, 215
 - inquiry into nature of occupation, 214
 - non-appearance of person summoned, 214
 - non-occupation may be shown in opposition to application for warrant, 213 §
 - non-publication of, 212
 - objection that premises are not within area of rate, 214
 - objections to, 212, 213
 - "passive resistance" cases, 212
 - payment by instalments, 211
 - precise sum must be demanded, 211
 - rate book prima facie evidence of amount due, 212
 - summons for, 211
 - validity of, not to be inquired into by justices, 212
 - warrant of commitment, 215
 - distress, to whom directed, 214
- possession of tenant after expiration of term, how evidenced, 150
 - necessary to validate distress after expiration of term, 150
 - walking, 187
- postponement of right to distress by agreement, 186
- poundbreach, 193
 - 'cannot be justified, 194
 - force not necessary to constitute, 193
 - indictment for, 195
 - remedies for, 194
- pound covert, 169
 - overt, 169
- preferential payments, postponement of right to distress to, 174
- price at sale, 184
- privilege, conditional, 142
 - constitutional, from distress, 133
 - from distress, 133
 - trade, from distress, 134
- professional tools, conditional privilege of, 142
- property tax, recovery of, 218
- public trade, things delivered to person exercising a, no distress upon, 134
- per autre vie* tenant, right of distress of, 125
- quit rents, 120
- railway tolling stock, distress upon, 140
- rates and taxes, distress for, 210 221
 - assessed taxes, 218
 - borough rate, 217
 - general district rates, 216
 - highway rate, 216
 - income tax, 219
 - poor rate, 210
 - tithe rentcharge, 217
- reception, 194, 209
- receiver (appointed by court), distress by, 130
 - distraint upon goods in possession of, 180
 - order of court when necessary to distress by, 130
 - to attorn, 130
 - private, distress by, 131
 - under Conveyancing Act, 1881, distress by, 131
- re-entry, forcible, 165

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- remedies for wrongful distress, 195—210
 - action for damages, 204
 - double value, 207
 - injunction to restrain a distress, 208
 - recaption, 209
 - replevin, 199
 - rescue, 209
 - summary proceedings in special cases, 208
- removal by night, detention of furniture van, 192
 - fraudulent, 189
 - exhibition of complaint upon, 191
 - penalty for, 190
 - of fixtures, damages for, 206
 - goods, fraudulent, 156
 - wrongful, liability of sheriff for, 178
- renewal, surrender of head lease for, effect of, 152
- rent, alteration of, not amounting to demise, 122
 - application of proceeds of sheriff's sale towards, 175
 - arrears distrainable for in case of weekly etc. tenancies, 179
 - of, effect of taking interest, 153
 - at what time in arrear, 123
 - balance of, action for, where distress insufficient, 181
 - compensation under Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, set off against, 159
 - dead, reservation of in advance, 124
 - different kinds of, 119
 - double, distraint for, 159
 - extinguishment of right to distrain through payment of, 153
 - fee farm, 120
 - in arrear, meaning of, 148
 - judgment for, effect of, upon distress, 153
 - landlord's right to, upon execution followed by bankruptcy, 176
 - minimum, reservation of, in advance, 124
 - must be certain, 122
 - in arrear to permit of, 123
 - reserved as such on the demise, 122
 - of tenant holding over in lieu of cemblements, recovery of, 151
 - paid, goods not to be sold under execution till, 178
 - payable in advance, 123
 - payment of, by execution creditor, 178
 - under threat of distress, 172
 - penal, demand necessary in case of, 148
 - reserved on assignment cannot be distrained for, 124
 - tender of, upon distress, 153
 - how made, 154
 - under Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, 159
 - what things may be set off against, 158
 - when due, 148
- rentcharge, division of, 121
 - express power of distress to secure, 119
 - growing crops not distrainable for, 121
 - nature of, 119
 - tithe, recovery of, 217
- rent-seek, nature of, 120
- rent-service, nature of, 119
- rents, chief, 120
 - distinct, distress for, 156
 - of assise, 120
 - quit, 120
 - separate, separate distraints for, 189
- replevin, 181, 199—204
 - action of, 202
 - available, when, 200
 - bond, 201
 - breach of, 203
 - damages for wrongful taking or detention, 203
 - definition of, 199
 - double meaning of, 200

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

replevin—continued.

- replevy, the, 200, 201
- security to prosecute action, 200
- specific chattels, restitution of, 199
- warrant for re-delivery, 202
- replevy, the, 200, 201
- reputed ownership clause, effect of, 172
- rescous, 193
- rescue, 193
 - as a legal remedy, 209
 - justification of, 194
 - remedies for, 194
- restraint upon distress by court during winding-up, 172
- reversionary lease does not take away right of distress under first lease, 152
 - lessee taking a, effect of subletting for longer term than first lease, 152
- reversion by estoppel supports a distress, 124
 - in distrainor necessary, 124
 - loss of distress through assignment of, 151
 - parting with, prevents seizure of goods fraudulently removed, 190
 - surrender or merger of, loss of right of distress through, 152
 - suspension of distress pending completion of purchase of, 152
- "rolling stock," definition of, in Railway Rolling Stock Protection Act, 1872...
141
- sale, common law right of distress confers no power of, 118
 - insufficient proceeds of, action for balance, 181
 - irregularities in, consequences of, 182
 - mode of, 184
 - of chattels necessary to action for double value, 203
 - corn, 184
 - distress, 180
 - goods seized under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 225
 - growing crops, 183
 - things not included in inventory, 196
 - order to be observed in, 185
 - overplus of, bestowal of, 185
 - place of, 183
 - premature, 183
 - price at, 184
 - property is divested from tenant, 192
 - suspension of debt till, 181
 - time for, 182
 - extension of, 182
- samples sent to agent for exhibition purposes not privileged from distress, 136
- Scotch distress warrants, enforcement of, in England, 221
- second distress, 188
- security to prosecute action of replevin, 201
- seizure, constructive, 66
 - of the chattels, 165
- sequestration, goods seized upon a, 175
 - of ecclesiastical benefice, distress by, 132
- set-off, how far available against rent, 158
- sewing machine hired, distress upon, 139
- sheaves or cocks of corn, distress upon, 133
- sheriff, damages against, at suit of landlord, 178
 - goods seized by, removal of, 175
 - liability of, for wrongful removal, 178
- sovereign, guardians in, distress by, 180
- special damage necessary to support action for irregular distress, 206
- specific chattel, restitution of, should be sought by action of replevin, 199
- stamp on appraisement, 171
 - replevin bond, 202
 - when requisite for warrant, 161
- subject-matter of distraint, 153
- summary jurisdiction, account of costs and charges, 226
 - costs awarded by court, recovery of, 227
 - certificate of non-payment of, 227

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- summary jurisdiction, costs of appeal, 226
 - constable, execution to be by or under direction of, 225
 - execution of warrants, 225
 - exemption from distress, 226
 - impounding of goods, 226
 - service of copy of order, 225
 - tender, effect of, 226
 - warrant defective, 225
 - founded on defective order, 225
- Summary Jurisdiction Acts, committal in default of distress, 223,
 - distress under, 221
 - committal in default of payment, 223
 - where sum recoverable on complaint, 224
- summary proceedings in special cases, 208
- summons for poor rate, 211
- Sunday, distress may not take place on, 149
- sunset and sunrise, times of, must be proved, if necessary, 149
- surrender of head lease, effect of, 152
 - reversion, loss of right of distress through, 152
- suspension of distress pending completion of purchase of reversion, 152
- table of fees, charges and expenses, 186
- taxation of expenses of distress, 186
- taxes, assessed, recovery of, 218
- tenants, recovery of income tax on, 219
- tenancy at sufferance does not authorise, 121
- tenant by curtesy, right of distress of, 126
 - legit*, right of distress of, 126
 - free bench, right of distress of, 126
 - from year to year, distress by, 121
 - in dower, right of distress of, 126
 - fee, right of distress of, 125
 - tail, right of distress of, 125
 - pur autre vie*, right of distress of, 125
- tenants in common, distress by, 161
 - right of distress of, 126
- tender, authority of bailiff to accept, 169
 - effect of, under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 226
 - of amends for irregular distress, 197
 - rent, effect of, upon distress, 158
 - how made, 154
 - must be unconditional, 154
- textile trades, distress upon things used in connection with, 140
- third person, distress where goods on premises of, 195
- threat of distress, payment of rent under, 172
- time (earliest) for levying distress, 148
- tithe rentcharge, recovery of, 217
- tithe, recovery of income tax on, 219
- tools and implements of trade, distress upon, 139
- trade, instruments of, conditional privilege of, 142
 - things delivered to person exercising a, no distress upon, 134
 - tools and implements of, distress upon, 139
- treble damages, action for, 194
- trespasser, distrainer when a, 195, 197
- unauthorised distress, adoption of, 160
- uncertainty of rent prevents distress, 123
- uncertificated bailiff, distress by, 162
- underlease for all the residue of a term is an assignment, 125
- undertenant, protection of, 143
 - from distress for rent due by landlord, 143
- unfastened door, entry through, 169
- urban rate, recovery of, 216
- use, things in actual use privileged from distress, 137
- vendor landlord, distress by, after sale of property, 152
- voluntary winding up of company, distress during, 173
- "walking possession," 187
- ward lands, distress on, 130
- warehoused furniture, no distress upon, 134

INDEX.

DISTRESS—continued.

- warrant, backing of, under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 221
- for recovery of parish contribution to borough rate 217
- re-delivery of goods to replevisor, 203
- issue of, ex parte under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 224
- of commitment for non-payment of poor rate, 215
- distress, 160
 - for general district rates, 216
 - poor rate, 210
 - under Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 221
 - upon goods of convicted person, postponement of, 223
- warranty, implied, in warrant of distress, 161
- waterpipes, meters and apparatus, distress upon, 141
- wearing apparel, distress upon, 158, 139
- winding up of company, distress during, 172
- window, opening, for purpose of distraint, 165
- "work," definition of, in Railway Rolling Stock Protection Act, 1872...140
- writ, claiming damages, indorsement on, 205
- of recaption, 209
- wrongful distress, injunction to restrain, 208

AGUSTED ANIMALS. See title ANIMALS.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS. See title AGRICULTURE.

ALLOTMENTS. See title ALLOTMENTS.

CERTIFICATED BAILIFF. See title COUNTY COURTS.

CROWN, RIGHT OF DISTRESS. See title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DAMAGE FEASANT, DISTRESS. See title ANIMALS.

GROWING CROPS. See title AGRICULTURE.

IMPOUNDING CATTLE. See title ANIMALS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See title LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LORD OF THE MANOR. See title COPYHOLDS.

SMALL HOLDINGS. See title SMALL HOLDINGS.

TRESPASS. See title TRESPASS.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE, 233—348

- abandonment of easement, 278
 - owner of servient tenement cannot prevent, 237
- abatement, 331
 - of nuisance arising from obstruction of way, 296
- "access," meaning of, in Prescription Act, 1832...307
- accretions to watercourse, 318
- acorns and beech mast, right to take, 337
- act, easement does not compel to an, 237
- action for disturbance of easement, 332
 - of trespass by owner of profit à prendre, 340
- Act of Parliament, extinguishment of easement by, 283
- actus ab agendo*, 284
- aditus*, 284
- adverse user ripening into an easement, 240
- advertisement hoardings, 328
- affirmative easement (inchoate), adverse user of, 241
 - meaning of, 240
- air, easement of, 326
 - aperture must be defined, 327
 - mode of acquisition, 327
 - pollution of, 327
- alteration, extinguishment of profit à prendre by, 347
 - in dominant tenement, presumption of abandonment, 280
 - of watercourse, 319
- aperture, easement of air must be in respect of defined, 327
- apertures for receipt of light, what included in, 307
- apparent accommodation, meaning of, 255
 - easement, contract of sale of servient tenement a bar to passing of, 255
 - meaning of, 241
 - easements, implied grant of, 254
- appendant profit à prendre, 338
- appurtenancy of an easement, 243
- appurtenant easement, meaning of, 233

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

- artificial watercourse, 315
- "assigns," who are in grant of easement, 293
- benefit, incidental, to servient tenement, 236
- boulders to resist encroachments of sea, 328
- brakes, right to take, 336
- buildings, easement of light can only be claimed for, 303
 - support for, by buildings, 321
 - land, 321
- burden, increase of, effect of, 280
- business premises, obstruction of the view of is not actionable, 229
- cart bote, 339
- chapel, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- characteristics of easement, 242
- chimin common, an equivalent for public right of way, 284
 - private, an equivalent for private right of way, 284
- church, claim of light in respect of, 306
- classification of easements, 240
- company (statutory), implied easements in case of grant by, 256
- conditional right of way, 295
- construction of a right of way, 294
- continuous easement, meaning of, 241
- conveyance of easements under Conveyancing Act, 1881...250
- Conveyancing Act, 1881, transfer of easements under, 274
- cottage, claim of right to light in respect of a, 306
- county court jurisdiction, 335
- court, interference by, grounds for, 334
- covenant, creation of indefinite right by, 248
 - grant of easement by, 247
 - instrument granting easement operating by, effect of on increase of grantee's interest, 246
 - involving expenditure does not run with land, 248
 - only, easement created by, liable to be defeated by purchase for value without notice, 247
- cowshed, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- creation of easement by express grant, 245
 - implication of law, 251
 - prescription at common law, 260
 - under the doctrine of lost modern grant, 261
 - Prescription Act, 1832...268
 - way of use, 249
 - under the doctrine of prescription, 256
 - where inequitable to deny existence thereof, though informally granted, 246
- Crown, acquisition of right to light against, 309
 - grant of profit à prendre, to undefined body of persons, 344
- custom, profit à prendre when claimable by, 343
- customary rights, easements distinguished from, 239
- damages for disturbance of easement, 333
 - obstruction of way, 297
- deed, express release at common law must be by, 277
 - necessary to creation of easement by express grant at common law, 246
 - profit à prendre* at common law must be created by, 341
- denial of right, interference operating as, 333
- deviation, right of, 292
- device, implied, of easements, 252
- devolution of easement, 237
- discharge of water, 317
- distress, owner of an easement has no right to, 238
- disturbance of easements, 330
 - court, interference by, grounds of, 334
 - damages for, 333
 - injunction to restrain, 333
 - mandatory injunction, 334
 - of support, 324
 - remedies, 331
 - right of way, 295
- dominant tenement, acquisition of greater interest in, by grantee, 346
 - benefit of, easement exists only for, 236

INDEX

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

- dominant tenement, meaning of, 236
- dwelling-house, right of way to, 288
- easement, definition of, 235
- Elementary Education Acts, 1870, extinguishment of easement under, 283
- enjoyment of easement not to be rendered more difficult by owner of servient
[tenement, 237]
- enrolment of deed, presumption of, 267
- equitable easement, created by covenant only, 247
- escheat, tenement by, easements implied by law in case of, as to, 252
- estates, easements are not, 281
- estoppel, acquisition of greater interest in easement by, 245
- exception, easement is not the subject-matter of an, 249
- exclusive right of way, 295
 - use of part of servient tenement, grant of, passes property herein, 243
 - pipes or wires, 243
 - servient tenement not conferred by easement 243
- exhaustion of subject-matter of profit à prendre, 347
- ex jure naturæ*, right to water, 311
- express grant of easement, 245—251
 - acquisition of greater interest by estoppel, 245
 - ancillary rights, grant of easement includes, 249
 - by covenant, 247
 - general words, effect of, 245
 - future interest of grantor not bound by, 245
 - construction of grant, 250
 - conveyance by statutory provisions, 250
 - covenant, creation of indefinite right by, 248
 - only, defeat of interest created by, 247
 - creation of profit à prendre by, 341
 - right of support by, 322
 - to light by, 303
- deed necessary to, at common law, 246
- duration of easement, 245
- easement granted for greater estate enuring for benefit of
 - grantee acquiring greater estate in dominant tenement, 246
- estate of grantee in dominant tenement, 246
- exception, easement is not the subject-matter of an, 249
- "grant" not a necessary word, 247
- in fee simple, can only be made by owner in fee simple, 245
- injunction to restrain interference by owner of servient
[tenement, 250]
- interest grantable by tenant for life, 245
 - of grantor, must be co-extensive with interest [granted, 245]
- manner of creating easement, 246
- new species of incorporeal right cannot be created, 248
- novel rights in the nature of an easement, 248
- of easement of air, 327
- repairs, right of entry to effect, 249
- reservation, easement is not the subject-matter of an, 249
 - of an easement, true operation of, 249
- right to pollute water, acquired by, 318
- rights of way existing by, 287
- use, creation of easement by way of, 249
- user, right of, limited by conditions at time of grant, 250
- watercourse, rights to, created by, 314, 315
- what words will suffice, 247
- words of limitation, how far necessary, 247
- release at common law must be by deed, 277
 - how effected, 277
 - of easement, 276
- extinguishment of easements, 276—284
 - by alteration in dominant tenement, 280
 - destruction of either tenement, 276
 - increasing burden of servient tenement, 280
 - merger, 281
 - non-user, 278
 - release, 272

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS à PRENDRE—continued.

- extinguishment of easements, by statute, 283
 - unity of seisin, 277
 - based upon intention, 283
 - where continuance inconsistent with carrying out statutory powers, 284
- profit à prendre*, 246
 - by Act of Parliament, 246
 - alteration, 247
 - exhaustion, 247
 - release, 246
 - unity of ownership, 247
- factory, claim of light in respect of a, 306
 - right of way to, 287
- fern, heather, litter etc., right to take, 337
- fish, right to take, 337
- forty-five degrees rule, 301
- garden, easement of light cannot be acquired in respect of a, 306
- general words, 274
 - grant of easement by, 245
- grant by tenant for life, 245
 - express, creation of right of support by, 323
 - to light by, 303
 - profit à prendre* by, 341
- of easement, 245
 - see express grant of easement
 - easement of air, 327
 - profits à prendre*, 339
- right of way existing by, 287
 - to watercourse arising by, 314, 315
- implied, by grantee, 254
 - of easement, 251
 - see implied grant of easements
- lost modern, 264
 - claim of profit à prendre by, 343
 - presumption of, in cases of profit à prendre, 345
- not necessary to creation of easement, 247
- of watercourse, meaning of, 310
- prescription based on, 257
- grantee, implied grant by, 254
- greenhouse, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- gross, easement in, impossibility of, 236
 - profit à prendre* may exist in, 338
- hatch and fender in river, maintenance of, 328
- hereditament, as to whether an easement is a, 238
- hoardings, advertisement, 328
 - to prevent acquisition of right to light, 298
- hotel, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- houses, support of, 321
- Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1898, extinguishment of easements under, 283
- ice, right to take, 337
- implication of law, creation of right of support by, 323
 - to light by, 304
- easement of air, arising by, 327
 - right to pollute water arising by, 318
- implied devise of easements, 252
- grant of apparent easements, 254
 - on simultaneous disposition of both tenements, 255
 - right of way, 256
- easement, 251
 - arising from assumed intention of parties, 256
 - distinguished from implied reservation, 252
 - in case of statutory company, 256
- easements of necessity, 253, 254
 - where part of land retained by grantor, 253
- profit à prendre*, 243
- release, 278
- right of way, 286
 - to watercourse, 314, 315

INDEX:

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS A PRENDRE—continued.

- inchoate easements, 276
- Inclosure Acts, extinguishment of easements under, 283
- incorporeal hereditament, attachment of easements to, 242
 - rights, easement distinguished from other, 238
- Injunction restraining interference with easement on part of owner of servient tenement, 250
 - obstruction, 297
 - disturbance of easement, 333
- intention, extent of right of way of necessity controlled by, 290
 - extinguishment by unity of seisin based upon, 282
 - of easement by implied release based upon, 278
 - implied release and abandonment based upon, 278
- interest in land, easement is an, 237
- interference operating as denial of right, 333
 - with easement of support, 324
 - easements, 330
 - right of way, 295
- interruption to inchoate easement of light, 308
- iter, 284
- land, easement is an interest in, 237
- land-locked tenements, easements of necessity appurtenant to, 254
- Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, extinguishment of easements under, 283
- lease of easement, stamps on, 275
 - interest in a profit à prendre, 342
 - right of way of necessity arising upon a grant of, 290
- legal memory, meaning of, 260
 - origin, presumption of, 265
- letting down surface, right of, 325
- levant and couchant cattle, 339
- licence coupled with an interest, irrevocability of, 239
 - distinguished from easement, 238
 - is merely personal and does not run with the land, 239
 - (mere), distinguished from profit à prendre, 340
 - verbal, cannot be countermanded when acted upon, 277
- light, 297—309
 - "access," meaning of, in Prescription Act, 1832...307
 - of, from other sources, how far to be regarded, 302
 - acquisition of right to, 303
 - amount of, to which dominant owner is entitled, 301
 - apertures, what included in, 307
 - buildings, easement can only be claimed for, 303
 - Crown, acquisition of easement against, 309
 - custom of London relating to, as to, 305
 - easement of, how affected by union of ownership, 282
 - express grant, creation of right by, 303
 - forty-five degrees rule, 301
 - hoarding to prevent acquisition of right to, 298
 - implication of law, creation of right to light by, 304
 - interruptions, 308
 - nature of right to, 297
 - no common law right to, 297
 - nuisance, actionable, interference with must amount to, 299
 - parol agreement to grant right to, 303
 - period of enjoyment under Prescription Act, 1832...305
 - prescription, claim under doctrine of, 305
 - Prescription Act, 1832, claim under provisions of, 305
 - release (implied) in case of, 278
 - reservation of, not implied, 304
 - reversioners and remaindermen, right to light acquired against, 309
 - statutory interruptions, 308
 - written agreement, effect of, on claim to, 308
- limitation, period of, in case of easement of support, 325
 - words of, how far necessary to creation of perpetual easement, 247
- local customary rights, easements distinguished from, 239
- lost modern grant, 364
- mandatory injunction in case of disturbance of easement, 334
- merger, extinguishment by, 281

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

- minerals, support by, 320
- miscellaneous easements, 326—329
 - advertisement boardings, 328
 - air, 327
 - boulders to resist encroachment of sea, 328
 - clothes line, support of, 329
 - ecclesiastical easements, 329
 - fascia of another, use of, 328
 - kitchen, use of, 328
 - mooring posts, 328
 - nuisance, easements to create a, 327
 - pollution of air, 327
 - signposts, erection of, 328
 - smoke, passage of, 328
 - spoilsbanks, 328
 - vibration, creation of, 328
 - weir and coop, maintenance of, 329
- mode of user, right of way restricted as to, 286
- mooring posts, 328
- mortgagee exercising power of sale, conveyance by, passes easements, 274
- necessity, easement of, 241
 - easement of support not in general a, 323
 - extent of, 254
 - instances of, 254
 - reservation of, implied, 253
 - right of way arising from, 289
 - way of, definition of, 241
- negative easement, analogy of, to restrictive covenant, 247
 - creation of, by covenant, 247
 - easement of light is a, 298
 - (inchoate), adverse user of, 241
 - meaning of, 240
- non-apparent easement, meaning of, 241
- non-continuous easement, meaning of, 241
- non-user for twenty years, 279
 - may be explained by circumstances, 279
 - will not alone cause extinguishment, 278
- notice of intention to abate, 331
- nuisance, easements to create a, 327
 - interference with light must amount to an actionable, 299
- obstruction of right of way, right to deviate upon, 292
 - the view of business premises is not actionable, 298
 - way, abatement of nuisance arising from, 296
 - see disturbance
- pack way, 284
- parol agreement to grant right to light, 303
 - creation of easement, where inequitable to deny its existence, 246
- particular easements, 284—348
 - air, 326
 - ecclesiastical, 329
 - erections, 328
 - light, 297
 - nuisance, creation of, 327
 - rights of way, 284
 - support, 319
 - water, 310
- part performance, application of doctrine of, to easements, 233
- payment for user, effect of, on prescription, 263
- percolating water, right to, 313
- perpetual easement only can be claimed by prescription, 359
- pews, 329
- pheasants, right to shoot, 337
- photographic studio, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- picture gallery, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- pipes, exclusive use of, 243
- pleading a lost grant, 268
- plough-bote and cart-bote, 339
- pollution of air, 327

INDEX

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

- pollution of watercourse, 317
- positive easement, meaning of, 240
- possession of land cannot co-exist with easement over it, 243
- prescription at common law, 260
 - basis of, 260
 - continuity of user, necessary to establish claim, 263
 - requisite degree of, 264
 - enjoyment under mistake as to rights, 263
 - existence of actual grant, defeat of claim by proof of, 261
 - neo ri, quo clam, neo precario*, user must be, 262
 - non-existence at some point of time within legal memory, defeat of claim by proof of, 261
 - payment for user, 263
 - presumption from enjoyment for twenty years, 260
 - repetition of acts with knowledge of servient owner, 261
 - unity of title, defeat of claim by proof of, 261
 - user for twenty years, 260
 - must be as of right, 262
 - with knowledge of servient owner, 262
 - not be by permission, 263
 - need not be for period next before action, 261
- prescription based on grant, 257
 - claim of profit à prendre by, 339, 343
 - to light by, 305
 - easement of air arising by, 327
 - enjoyment, proof of long, 258
 - existence of a grant, bars claim by, 258
 - grant presumed to be by owner in fee simple, 259
 - in a quo estate, 269
 - gross, 269
 - knowledge of owner of servient tenement, 259
 - legal memory, meaning of, 260
 - nature of, 256
 - perpetual easement only can be claimed by, 259
 - pleading alternatively, 257
 - presumption in favour of long user, 259
 - proof of long enjoyment, 258
 - right claimed by, must be capable of being subject-matter of a grant, 258
 - to pollute water arising under, 318
 - watercourse arising by, 314, 315
 - support, creation of right of, 323
 - tenant cannot acquire an easement by, 259
 - title by, how perfected, 256
- prescription under the doctrine of a lost modern grant, 264
 - evidence as to non-existence, 266
 - grant must refer to fee simple of both tenements, 268
 - illegality, origin involving, not presumed, 267
 - impossibility, origin involving, not presumed, 267
 - instances of, 264
 - loss of document ordinarily requiring enrolment, 267
 - faculties confirming rights, 267
 - succession of modern grants, not readily presumed, 268
 - or surrender of charter from Crown, 267
 - perpetual easement only can be prescribed for, 268
 - pleading, 268
 - presumption of enrolment, 267
 - waiver of statutory provisions, 267
 - user, nature and evidence of, 266
- prescription under the Prescription Act, 1832...263
 - cessation of user, effect of, 273
 - claim for support under, 324
 - of profit à prendre under, 343, 345
 - to light under, 305
 - rights of way under, 269, 292
 - water rights under, 269
 - discontinuance, 273

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

prescription under the Prescription Act, 1832—continued.

enjoyment, nature of, 271

exclusion of period of disability, 270 exercise of right must be capable of being interrupted, 271

interruption, discontinuance not necessarily an, 273 not amounting to statutory interruption, effect of

interruptions, 273

object of, 268

obstruction, physical, 273

period not extended in case of remaindermen, 270 within which reversioners may resist claim, 270 periods of user, 269

physical obstruction, 273 profit à prendre, claim to, 345 statute only applies to prescription in a quo estate, 269 tenant cannot acquire right, 271

unexplained non-user at end of period, likely to prevent acquisition, 272 unity of possession prevents title to easement arising, 271 user, nature of, to sustain right, 272

next before action must be shown, 273

prescriptive rights of way, 291

see also way, right of, 291 presumed release of easement, 276 presumption in favour of user, 269

of legal origin, 266

prime way, 284

privacy, no easement of, 329

profits à prendre, 336—348

alteration of subject-matter of, 317

appendant, 338

appurtenant, 339

attachment of easement to, 242

common of turbary, 339

right of, 338

creation of, 341

Crown, grant by, to undefined body of persons, 344

custom, when claimable by, 343 deed, at common law must be created by, 341

definition of, 336

distinguished from easement, 238

duration of, 340

exclusive right not conferred prima facie, 342.

exhaustion of, 347

extinguishment of, 346

by Act of Parliament, 346

alteration, 347

exhaustion, 347

release, 346

unity of ownership, 347

grant, lost modern, claim by, 345

gross, in, 338

implied grant of, 343

interest in land, is an, 340

lease of interest in, 342

levant and couchant cattle, 339

licence (mere) distinguished from, 340

nature of, 336

oysters, right of taking, 337

plough-bots and cart-bots, 339

prescription, claim by, 339

to, by, 343

Prescription Act, 1832, claim under, 345

release of, 347

reservation of, effect of, 343 sale of interest in, 342 servitude, is a, 336

several right to a, 337 statute, creation of, by, 342

INDEX

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS A PRENDRE—continued.

- profits à prendre*—continued.
 - trespass, action of, 340
 - unity of ownership, 347
 - waste, right to commit, distinguished from, 341
 - what may be taken as a, 336
- prospect, no easement of, 329
- quasi*-easements, meaning of, 242
- railways, running powers over, not easements, 239
- Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, extinguishment of easements under, 233
- release by law, 278
 - owner in fee simple, 276
 - parties whose united estates make up the fee simple, 277
 - express, at common law must be by deed, 277
 - how effected, 277
 - extinguishment of easement by, 276
 - implied, 278
 - in case of light, 278
 - of easement, express, 276
 - presumed, 276
 - under Settled Land Acts, 277
 - profit à prendre*, 346
 - presumed, 279
- releasor's estate, quantum of, of importance, 276
- remainderman, right to light acquired against, 309
- remedies for disturbance of easements, 331
 - abatement, 331
 - action, 332
- repair of a right of way, 294
 - watercourses, 318
- owner of servient tenement not bound to, 237
- reservation, easement is not the subject-matter of a, 249
 - (implied) distinguished from implied grant, 252
 - of an easement, true operation of, 249
 - light, not implied, 304
 - profit à prendre*, effect of, 343
- restrictive covenant, analogy of negative easement to, 247
- reversion or remainder, suits for interference by person in, 333
- reversioners, right to light acquired against, 309
- right of way. See way, right of.
- riparian owners, rights of, to water, 311
- running powers over railways not easements, 239
- rushes, right to take, 337
- sawpit, claim of light in respect of a, 306
- season of year, right of way restricted as to, 286
- seisin, unity of, enjoyment after, referable to seisin, 282
 - extinguishment of easement by, 276
- selection of way of necessity, 290
- servient tenement, easement of owner in reversion or remainder over, 243
 - exclusive use of, not conferred by easement, 243
 - grant of exclusive use of part of, passes property in, 243
 - injunction to restrain interference by owner of, 250
 - meaning of, 236
 - not to be dealt with so as to render enjoyment of easement more difficult, 237
- (quasi-) tenement, owner of, cannot have an easement over it, 243
- servitude, easement included in, 338
- Settled Land Act, release of easement under, 277
- signposts etc., erection and maintenance of, 323
- smoke, passage of, 328
- spoilbanks, 328
- stamp on lease of easement, 275
 - transfer of easements, 276
- statute, creation of profit à prendre by, 342
 - extinguishment of easement by, 233
- statutory company, implied grant of easement in case of, 256
- stone, sand and shingle, right to take, 337
- substituted way, owing to obstruction of original, 292
- subterranean stream, right to water of, 313.

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

- support, 319—326
 - analogous rights, 325
 - buildings supported by buildings, 321
 - land, 321
 - cause of action, when arising, 325
 - damage, natural right to support only infringed by, 320
 - easement of, 322
 - not always an easement of necessity, 254
 - extent of easement, 322
 - infringement of natural right to support, 319
 - interference with easement, 324
 - limitation, period of, 325
 - lost modern grant, under doctrine of, claim for, 324
 - minerals, by, 320
 - natural right of, 319, 322
 - necessity, not in general an easement of, 323
 - Prescription Act, 1832, claim under, 324
 - repair of servient tenement, 325
 - to maintain easement, 325
 - surface, right of letting down, 325
 - water, by, 321
- surface, right of letting down, 325
- suspension of easement during union of ownership, 282
- tenant for life, grant of easement by, 245
 - years, conveyance of easements by, under Conveyancing Act, 1881, 251
- tenement, dominant, meaning of, 236
 - servient, meaning of, 236
- Thames Embankment Act, 1864, extinguishment of easements under, 283
- timber yard, claim of light in respect of, 306
- time, right of way restricted as to, 286
- transfer of easements, 274, 275
 - general words, 274
 - stamp on lease of easement, 275
 - stamps on, 275
 - under Conveyancing Act, 1881...274
- trees, thorns etc., right to take, 337
- trespass, action of, by owner of profit à prendre, 340
 - by excessive user of way, 297
 - on servient tenement, owner of dominant tenement cannot maintain action for, 238
 - owner of easement cannot maintain, 340,
- turbary, common of, 339
- turf and peat, right to take, 337
- unity of ownership, extinguishment of profit à prendre by, 347
 - possession without unity of seisin, effect of, 263
 - seisin, enjoyment after, referable to ownership, 282
 - extinguishment of easement by, 281
 - unaccompanied by unity possession does not extinguish easement of light, 282
 - unity of possession without, effect of, 283
- use, creation of easements by way of, 249
 - exclusive of servient tenement not conferred by easement, 243
- user, continuity of, necessary to establish claim by prescription, 263
 - excessive, abatement in case of, 332
 - of right of way, trespass by, 297
 - nature of, to support prescription at common law, 262
 - necessary to establish claim to profit à prendre, 344
 - sustain claim under Prescription Act, nature of, 272
 - of water by riparian owners, 312
 - payment for, effect of on prescription, 263
 - prescriptive rights of way depend upon, 291
 - presumption in favour of long, 259
 - right of, limited by conditions at time of grant, 250
 - sufficient to support presumption of lost modern grant, 266
- vaults, 329
- verbal creation of easement, where grantee alters his position on faith thereof, 246

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS à PRENDRE—continued.

- vid*, 284
- vibration, easement to create, 328
- waste, right to commit, distinguished from profit à prendre, 341
- water, 310—319
 - alteration of watercourses, 319
 - artificial watercourse created only for temporary purposes, 316
 - watercourses, 315
 - channel, in indefinite, 313
 - discharge of (artificial watercourses), 317
 - upon the land of another, 314
 - diversion of, 314
 - easements relating to natural watercourses, 314
 - extraordinary or secondary use of, 312
 - locomotives, taking water for use of, 312
 - natural right to, distinguished from easement, 310
 - watercourses, 314
 - ordinary or primary use of, 312
 - percolating, 313
 - pollution, 317
 - rain-water, discharge of, on another's lands, 310
 - repair, 318
 - right to take, 337
 - water ex jure nature, 311
 - riparian owners, rights of, 312
 - sluices, opening, to avoid flood, 311
 - subterranean streams, rights in case of, 313
 - support by, 321
 - "temporary purpose," meaning of, 316
- watercourse, accretions to, 313
 - alteration of, 319
 - artificial, 315
 - natural, 314
 - pollution of, 317
 - repair of, 318
 - see also* water
- Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, extinguishment of easements under, 283
- way, pack and prime, 284
 - ploughing up or building upon etc., 296
 - right of, 284—297
 - see also* way of necessity
 - abatement of nuisance arising from obstruction, 296
 - action for injunction or damages, 297
 - "assigns," who are, 293
 - classification, 284
 - conditional, 295
 - construction of, 294
 - damages for obstruction, 297
 - definition of, 284
 - deviate, right to, 292
 - disturbance of, 295
 - exclusive, 295
 - express grant, existing by, 287
 - general, meaning of, 285
 - grant of simpliciter, 287
 - implication of law, arising by, 288
 - implied grant of apparent, 286
 - injunction restraining obstruction, 297
 - interference with, 295
 - land-locked land, to and from, 289
 - necessity, arising from, 289
 - obstruction of, 292
 - persons entitled to use, 293
 - prescription, claimed by, 291
 - public and private, co-existence of, 288
 - repair of, 294
 - restricted (as a rule) to purposes existing at date of grant, 288
 - substituted, owing to obstruction, 292
 - trespass by excessive user of, 297

INDEX.

EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE—continued.

way, right of—continued.

user, nature and extent regulated by, 291 way of necessity, 289

definition of, 241

determination of, 291

extent of, 290

not necessarily the most convenient, 291

who may select, 290

will, right of way of necessity arising under a, 290 wind, free access of, no easement for, 329 wires, exclusive use of, 243 words of limitation in creation of perpetual easement as to necessity of, 247 sufficient to create easement, 247

ADJOINING OWNERS. See titles BOUNDARIES AND FENCES; HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND BRIDGES; MINES, MINERALS AND QUARRIES; WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

ANCIENT MONUMENTS. See title OPEN SPACES AND RECREATION GROUNDS

BOUNDARIES. See title BOUNDARIES AND FENCES.

CHURCHWAYS. See titles CUSTOM AND USAGES; HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND BRIDGES.

COMMONABLE RIGHTS. See titles COPYHOLDS; CUSTOM AND USAGES.

DEEDS. See title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS.

DRAINAGE. See title SEWERS AND DRAINS.

FAIRS. See title MARKETS AND FAIRS.

FENCES. See title BOUNDARIES AND FENCES.

FERRY RIGHTS. See title FERRIES.

FISHING RIGHTS. See title FISHERIES.

FORESHORE. See title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

GLEANNING. See title AGRICULTURE.

GRAVE, RIGHT TO. See title BURIAL AND CREMATION.

HIGHWAYS. See title HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND BRIDGES.

LICENCE TO ENTER. See titles MINES, MINERALS AND QUARRIES, REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL. See title

MANORIAL RIGHTS. See title COPYHOLDS.

MARKETS. See title MARKETS AND FAIRS.

MINING RIGHTS. See titles MINES, MINERALS AND QUARRIES; RAILWAYS AND CANALS

NAVIGATION. See titles SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

PARTY-WALLS. See titles BOUNDARIES AND FENCES, METROPOLIS.

PEWS. See title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW

PUBLIC FOOTPATHS. See titles HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND BRIDGES, WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

RECREATION, RIGHTS OF. See titles COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON; CUSTOM AND USAGES; OPEN SPACES AND RECREATION GROUNDS.

RIPARIAN OWNERS. See title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

RUNNING POWERS. See title RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

SPORTING RIGHTS. See title GAME.

STINTS. See title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON.

TOLLS. See titles FERRIES; HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND BRIDGES; MARKETS AND FAIRS.

TURBARY. See title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON.

WAYLEAVES. See title MINES, MINERALS AND QUARRIES.

INDEX.

ECCLÉSIASTICAL LAW, 349—829

- abbot, vesting of property in, 714
- ablution, ceremony of, at Communion Service, 683
- absolution, sign of cross during, 684
- accounts of church trustees, 475
 - churchwardens, 473
 - Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 801
- act of consecration, 728
 - effect of, 780
 - submission, 391
 - on petition, 618
- action of quare impedit, 586
- admission by institution or collation or by licence, 601
 - of person not in priests' orders to benefice, 635
- admonition, see monition
- adultery, marriage of persons divorced for, 694
- Advertisements of Queen Elizabeth, 674
- "advised speaking," meaning of, 664
- advocates in Ecclesiastical Courts, 502
 - barristers may be, 504
- Advocates, Society of, 503
- advowson, 564—593
 - appendant, 564
 - charitable trusts, held upon, 580
 - collation to benefice by lapse, 587
 - descent of, 584
 - duplex querela*, suit of, 588
 - effect of mortgage of, 578
 - exchange of, 584
 - with view to union, 606
 - extinguishment of right to, 590
 - in gross, 564
 - medieties, 565
 - Jew, presentation by, 827
 - ius patronatus*, process of, 588
 - limitation of action, (Crown), 590
 - time for recovery, 589
 - limited interests in, 573
 - partition of, 572
 - presentation where patron is lunatic, 573
 - Roman Catholic, see patron, 574
 - joint patron with another, 606
 - quare impedit*, action of, 586
 - refusal of presentee, 591
 - to institute, 512, 589
 - registration of transfer of, in registry of diocese, 583
 - under Land Transfer Acts, 583
 - right of presentation when benefice vacant, 585
 - sale of, by municipal corporations, 577
 - where held by class not deriving pecuniary benefit, 579
 - simony, 522, 593
 - transfer of, 582
 - trust, held upon, 578
 - trustees in perpetuity, held by, 580
 - usurpation, 585
 - see also* presentation
 - see also* patronage
- affidavit previous to grant of marriage licence, 702
- affinity, table of degrees of, 472
- age for marriage, 693
- ages requisite for admission to the various orders of the ministry, 550
- Agnus Dei*, singing of, 777
- Agriculture, Board of, approval of sale of glebe lands by, 765
 - successors to Tithe Commissioners, 747
- Agricultural Holdings Act, exercise of powers under, 783, 798
- agricultural leases, 761
- aisle, private, repair of, 782
 - separation of from private chapel, 789
- alb, wearing of, 672

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- alienation of Church property, 760—766
- aliens, ordination of, 438
- allegations, responsive, 518.
- allotments, provision for, on sale of glebe lands, 765
- alms basin and chest, provision of, 472
 - collection of, 472
- altar, 671, 672, 678
 - lights upon, 681
 - marble slabs on, 671
 - position of celebrant at, 678
 - retable, 669
 - vestments or cloth for, 471, 671, 735
- alteration of church, churchyard, or chapel, 734
 - faculties for, 540—542, 731
- ancient parish, beadle in, 479
 - churchwarden of, 462
 - parish clerks in, 475
 - sexton in, 478
 - aidemen in, 474
- parishes, 443, 716
- annates, 779
 - commutation of, 781
- apostolical canons, 378
- apparel, 402, 672—674
- apparitor, fee to, 424, 552
- appeal as to costs, 519
 - from archdeacon's court, 438, 501
 - diocesan court, 508
 - interlocutory decision, 519
 - in faculty cases, 547
 - to archbishop from bishop's decision as to pension, 631
 - court of delegates, 501
 - Judicial Committee, 511
 - Rome, 500
 - under Church Discipline Act, 1840...529
 - Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 525
 - Public Worship Regulation Act, 1879 . 531
- appearance in Ecclesiastical Courts, 515
- appointment of archbishop, 384
- apportionment of commuted charge for Queen Anne's Bounty, 781
 - endowments, 728
 - profits during vacation, 431
 - tithe, 746
 - alteration of, 747
- appropriation, meaning of, 561, 717
- archbishop, appeals from, 510, 529
 - to, 508, 529
 - appointment of Dean of Arches by, 386
 - arms of, 388
 - chaplains of, 386
 - consecration of bishops by, 386
 - in foreign parts by, 493
 - colonial bishops by, 469
 - Convocation, duties with regard to, 385
 - corporation sole, is a, 388
 - court of, 386, 508, 510, 529
 - degrees conferred by, 387
 - enthronement of, 386
 - guardian of spiritualities of vacant diocese, 386
 - how sued, 386
 - judicial duties of, 386
 - lapse of right of presentation to, 590
 - mandate of, for summoning Convocation, 391
 - meaning of, 384
 - ministerial functions of, in election of bishop, 398
 - oath of due obedience to, 386
 - in colonies, 489

INDEX.

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Archbishop of Canterbury, special privileges of, 387
 - opinion of, 682—684
 - pension of, 390
 - powers and duties of, 385
 - provision for chaplain named by, by new bishop, 386
 - resignation of, 389
 - rubrics, bound by, 388
 - salary of, 389
 - seal of, 388
 - signature of, 388
 - trials by, 385
 - vestments of, 389
 - veto of prosecutions by, 389
 - visitation by, 385
- archdeacon, benefices of, 438
 - charge of, 440
 - churchwardens admitted by, 438
 - corporation, is a, 793
 - court of, 438
 - duties of, 438
 - induction by, 602
 - of, 237
 - installation of bishop by, 399
 - jurisdiction of, 438
 - official of, 501
 - precedence of, 439
 - qualifications of, 437
 - repair of churches, duties as to, 438, 734
 - residence of, 438
 - style of, 439
 - visitation by, 439, 455
- archdeaconries, 436
 - endowment of, 436
- archdeacons, 437
- Archdeaconry Court of, 509
 - Dean of, 509, 510
 - judge of Court of, 509
- archidiaconal courts, 501
- archiepiscopal constitutions, 377
- arms of archbishop, 388
- army chaplain, 483, 647
 - district under charge of, 443
 - in India, 483, 496
 - meaning of, 483
- district, chapel of, 790
- arrest of clergyman officiating, 555
- articles, 517
 - reading of, 603
- assault in church or churchyard, 470, 539, 663
- assessment, enforcement of payment of, by sequestration, 623
 - of tithes, 749
- assessors to consistory court, 507
 - determine questions of fact, 525
 - Judicial Committee, 511
- assistant curate, 638
- associations, diocesan, 802
- asylum chaplains, 650
- atheism, deprivation for, 538
- atheist, oath by, 824
- attorney exempt from service as churchwarden, 461
- auction, sale of right of presentation by, 588
- auditor of Chancery Court of York, 509
- augmentation of benefices, 722—727, 752, 755, 774, 781, 800
 - by colleges and hospitals, 723, 755
 - Eccliesiastical Commissioners, 783, 800
 - corporations, 725
- impropriator, 727
- limited owners, 725

Index.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- augmentation of benefices by private benefactions, 732, 734
 - public officers, 722, 755
 - Queen Anne's Bounty, 781
 - the Crown, 722
- chapel of ease, 727, 752, 789
- avoidance of benefice, 627—636
 - by cession, 633
 - death, 627
 - deprivation, 635
 - exchange, 632
 - resignation, 627
- award of tithe rentcharge, 746
- bankrupt cannot be member of select vestry, 459
- bankruptcy of incumbent, sequestration on, 620
 - sequestration on, 617
- banns, certificate of, 700
 - false statement in, 699
 - fees for publication of, 717
 - forbidding of, 700
 - form of, 699
 - marriage without, 701
 - meaning of, 698
 - notice of, 698
 - place of, 694
 - publication of, 698
 - register of, 698
 - re-publication of, 700
 - time for, 698
- baptism, 684—688
 - adult, 685
 - by dissenter or layman etc., 685
 - certificate of, age not proved by, 687
 - duties of minister as to, 686
 - font for, 471
 - form of, 685
 - god-parents, 685
 - in extra-parochial place, 687
 - lay, 685
 - necessity of, 684
 - no fee for, 688
 - offences as to, 657
 - parent cannot be god-parent, 686
 - place and time for, 685
 - private, 685
 - public, 685
 - register of, 686
- baptismal-name, insertion of, in register of births, 697
- Baptist churches, rules governing, 822
- bar, Doctors' Commons, 508
- barristers can practise in Ecclesiastical Courts, 504
- bastard, ordination of a, 551
 - banns on marriage of, 699
- bastardy order a ground of deprivation, 523
- beadle, meaning of, 479
- beadles, 479
- bell, sanctus, illegality of, 671
- bells, faculty as to ringing of, 547
 - churchwardens' property in, 468
 - incumbent's control of, 468, 726
 - provision of, 736
 - ringing of, 478, 671
- benediction, sign of cross during, 684
- benefaction, transference of, to Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, 782
- benefactions, grants to meet, by Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 774
 - Queen Anne's Bounty, 781
 - private, 773
- benefice, additional, when capable of being held, 694
 - admission of person not in priest's orders to, 625

INDEX.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- benefice, admission to by collation, 602
 - institution, 601
 - licence, 602
 - notice of institution, collation, or admission, 473
 - * presentation, 595
- apportionment of duties, 614
 - endowment, 728
- augmentation of endowment of, 774. See also augmentation.
- avoidance of, 627
 - sequestration during, 624
- charges upon authorised, 755—760. See also loans.
 - forbidden, 615
- classification, 559
- collation to, by lapse, 587
- death, capable of being held by, 634
- endowment of, see endowment.
- house of residence of, 610
 - loans for, 755—760
 - necessity of, 720
 - provision of, 754
 - repair of, 768—772
- income of, during vacancy, 635
- in commendam*, holding, 633
- induction to, 602
- institution to, 601
- lapse of, 590
- lease of, 615
- licence to hold two, 604
- meaning of, 560, 769
- mode of filling, 595
- monition to reside on, 612
- non-residence in, 610
- patronage in right of, 579
 - of, 564
- pension, only to be subject to one, 630
 - under Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871, a charge on, 616
- receiver of profits of, 619
- resignation of, 627
- sequestration of, 616
- Benefices Act, 1898, court under, 512
 - agreements invalid under, 565, 583
 - notice of institution under, 601
 - refusal of presentee under, 589
 - transfer of advowson under, 537, 583
- union of benefices, 604
 - dissolution of, 608
- united benefices, disuniting of, 608
 - for more than 60 years before 14th August, 1838, dissolution of, 608
- bequest of money to be laid out in land for spiritual purposes, 773
- bequests for spiritual purposes, 773
- Bible essential basis of communion with Church of England, 486
 - provision of by parish, 471
- bier, provision of, 736
- biretta, lawful use of, 675
- bishop, acceptance of resignation of benefice by, 627
 - appointment of, 396
 - archbishop's court for trial of, 510
 - chaplains of, 400, 652
 - charge of, how far privileged, 403
 - coadjutor, 389, 405
 - colonial, 487—493
 - commissary of, 605
 - confirmation by, 688
 - of, 398
 - consecration by, 728
 - of, 397
 - to minister in colonies, 489

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

bishop—continued.

- consecration of, to minister in India, 496
 - spiritual sphere abroad, 498
 - consent to consecration of church by, 719, 729
 - corporation sole, 404, 793
 - dean, acting as, 417
 - definition of, 396
 - deprivation of, 407
 - episcopal visitation, 409, 465
 - fees payable by, 400
 - homage by, 399
 - House of Lords, seat in, 403
 - in foreign countries, 498
 - income of, 406
 - Indian, 495
 - installation of, 336, 399
 - lapse of right of presentation to, 590
 - letters patent, appointment by, 399, 491, 496
 - liability of, for waste, 768, 772
 - licence for consecration of, for service abroad, 493
 - non-residence granted by, 611
 - mandate for consecration of Colonial, 489
 - oaths taken by, 397, 489, 493, 498
 - obedience to, 406, 638, 613
 - objections to appointment of, 397
 - confirmation of, 398
 - ordinations by, 401, 519—553
 - patronage of, 406, 581
 - payments by, 400
 - petition to, for consecration, 729
 - powers and duties of, 400, 506, 528, 524, 527, 528, 530, 538, 539, 609—614, 616—626, 629, 644, 770, et passim
 - precedence of, 404
 - procurations of, 411
 - provision for chaplain nominated by archbishop by new, 386
 - public worship, powers of, as to, 406, 528, 659—662
 - qualifications of, 396
 - refusal to institute, 600
 - trial as to, 512
 - repair of episcopal property, 772
 - residence of, 401
 - resignation of, 407
 - benefice to, 627, 628
 - return to, by incumbents, 612
 - secretary of, 400
 - sequestration for failure to repair, 771
 - non-residence, 612
 - of benefice by, 616—626
 - spiritualities of, 403
 - style of, 404, 489, 498
 - suffragan, 404
 - temporalities of, 406
 - territorial limits of jurisdiction of, in colonies, 489—491, 498
 - foreign parts, 498, 499
 - title of, in colonies, 489
 - translation of, 399
 - trial of, 385, 510, 518
 - triple preconisation, 391
 - vacation of preferments, 406
 - vestments of, 402, 675
 - withdrawal of, in criminal cases in House of Lords, 404
- bishopric, colonial, creation of, by letters patent 495, 491
- black gown, legality of, 376
- blasphemy, 653
 - deprivation for, 533
- bodies, burial of, 711
 - removal of, 731, 732
- bonds, resignation, 628

INDEX.

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Book of Common Prayer, annexed to Act of Uniformity, 676
 - assent to, 601
 - depraving, 654
 - provided by parish, 471
 - refusal to use, 636
- books for registration, 472, 706, 712, 741
 - of church, custody of, 468
 - provision of, for divine service, 471
- borrowing for purchase or improvement of parsonage, 754—759
 - repair of churches, 734
- boundaries of glebe, 718, 748
 - parish, alteration of, 450, 747
- Bounty of Queen Anne, 780
- brawling, 668, 817
 - by clerk, 521
- bread and wine for Holy Communion, provision of, 472
 - description of, 677, 678
 - remaining after service, 683
- building leases, 762—764, 794
- burial, 368, 860, 478, 481, 710—712, 719, 730, 741, 776, 777
 - authority, fees fixed by, 777
 - cremation service, in case of, 711, 777
 - fees for, 712, 777
 - ground, brawling in, 869, 664, 817
 - consecration of, 731
 - control of, 541, 780
 - ratifiability of, 741
 - vesting of, 730
 - notice of intention that burial office shall not be used, 710
 - offences as to, 657
 - office, when not to be used, 710
 - of non-parishioner, fee for, 777
 - unbaptized person, 710
 - place, grant of land for, by limited owners, corporations, persons under disability etc., 723, 724, 725
 - places of Quakers, 823
 - registration of, 712
 - right of, in churchyard, 741
 - rights of parishioners to, 481, 741
- burials, service at, by clergymen other than those of the Established Church, 868, 710
- Calcutta, bishopric of, 495
- calendar, observing feasts in, 680
- Canada, Church in, 492
- candles, lighted, use of, 681
- candlesticks on altar, 681
- canon, appointment of, 427
 - benefice of, 429
 - corporation sole, is a, 427, 793
 - definition of, 426
 - deprivation of, 482
 - estates of, 800
 - honorary, 433
 - houses of residence, 432
 - income of, 481
 - installation of, 428
 - incency of, 422
 - minor, 434. See also minor canon.
 - non-residentiary prebends and officials, 433
 - patronage of, 432
 - petty, 434
 - qualification of, 427
 - residence of, 430
 - resignation of, 421
 - suspended, estates of, 80
- canon law, 377—380
 - abolition of portions of, 373
 - basis of, 377

INDEX.

ECCLÉSIASTICAL LAW—continued.

canon law—continued.

- breach of, 521
 - civil law borrowed in aid of, 377
 - continuous user of, necessary for incorporation in common law, 375
 - corpus juris canonici*, 378
 - decretales extravagantes*, 378
 - incorporated in common law, 374
 - review of, 375
 - the father of the, 378
 - canonries, additional, 429
 - in Wales, 429
 - canonry, suspension of, 428
 - vacation of, 431
 - canons, apostolical, 376
 - authority of King as to, 352
 - of 1603, as to appointment of churchwardens, 462, 463
 - conduct of clergy, 523
 - duties of churchwardens, 469, 734, 735
 - authority of, 380
 - post-reformation, 378
 - Canterbury, Archbishop of, opinion of, after hearing, 676, 677, 682, 684
 - precedence of, 387
 - salary of, 389
 - seal of, 388
 - special privileges of, 387
 - style of, 387
 - Archdeacon, Court of, 509
 - Commissary Court of, 506
 - Court of Faculties of, 510
 - dioceses of province of, 384
- capitulum*, 423
- catechism, 688
- cathedral chapters, patronage of, 578
 - control of, by chapter, 425
 - deans, 416
 - faculty not necessary for alteration in, 540
 - is parish church of whole diocese, 442
 - preferment, meaning of, 439
 - schools, 512
 - seats in, 738
 - vestments in, 673, 675
- Catholic Church, definition of, 379
 - division of, 352
 - (Roman), 303
- caveat against grant of marriage licence, 702
- cemetery, chaplain in, 650
 - control of, 541
 - service other than Church of England in, 365
 - See also burial ground.
- censures of Ecclesiastical Courts, 534
 - effect of, 533
- ceremonies, legality of, 681—683
 - nature of, 675
- certificates of banns, 700
 - conviction of clergyman, 524
 - marriage, 703
 - registrars', 703
- cession, avoidance of benefice by, 683
- chalice, cleansing of, 683
 - mixed, 678
 - provision of, 736
- chancel, insurance of, 773
 - lay rector's right to chief seat in, 802
 - mortgage for expenditure on, 734, 755
 - rector or vicar's seat in, 476
 - repair of, 732
 - repair of, by rector, 469, 732, 802

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- chancel, screen gates, 670
- seats in, 471
- chancellor, actions against, 415
 - acts that cannot be performed by, 414
 - appointment of, 506
 - assessors of, 507, 525
 - commissary of, 505
 - consistory court of, 505
 - decrees by, in London, 508
 - definition of, 412, 505
 - deputy, 415, 507
 - diocesan, 412, 506
 - doctor of the civil law enabled to be, 414
 - faculties granted by, 540—549
 - fee of, 416
 - indictment of, 415
 - London, of, 507
 - oaths to be taken by, 415
 - of a church, 483
 - the diocese, 412, 506
 - official principal of archbishop or bishop, 505
 - ordinary judge, 506
 - patent of, 413, 506
 - powers of, 413, 506, 512, 513
 - pre-Reformation, 414
 - procedure before, 515—526, 531—549
 - qualifications of, 415
 - seal of, 506
 - surrogate of, 415
- Chancellor, Lord, patronage of, 575
 - power to augment benefices, 576
- Chancery Court of York, 509
- chapel, alteration of, 734
 - consent of incumbent to erection of, 609
 - derivation of, 788
 - endowment of, 726
 - for denominational funeral services, 366
 - free, meaning of, 789
 - in Wales, 790
 - meaning of, 788
 - of army district, 790
 - case, charge for endowment of, 616
 - meaning of, 789
 - minister of, 646
 - representative, 646
 - parochial, meaning of, 789
 - private, meaning of, 789
 - proprietary, meaning of, 790
 - repair of, 783
 - royal, staff of, 652
 - school, 790
 - with chapelries attached, 562
 - districts attached, 562
- chapelry, consolidated, 444, 446
 - district, 444, 447
 - meaning of, 789
- chaplain, 647—653
 - archbishop's, 886
 - army, district under charge of, 443
 - (army), meaning of, 488
 - asylum, 650
 - bishop's, 400
 - cemetery, 649
 - endowed school, 651
 - gaol, 650
 - General of the Forces, 647
 - hospital, 651

INDEX

ECCELESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

chaplain—continued.

- institution, 651
- King's, 652
- naval, 649
- of archbishop or bishop, 652
- Missions to Seamen, 651
- the Fleet, 649
- private, 653
- public school, 651
- school, 651
- Speaker's, 652
- superannuation allowance of, 650
- territorial force, 648
- workhouse, 651
- chapter, cathedral and collegiate, patronage of, 578
 - control of cathedral by, 425
 - court, as a, 425
 - dean of, 416
 - See also* dean of chapter.
 - definition of, 423
 - division of possessions of, 425
 - general, 424
 - patronage of, 426
 - proper or close, 424
 - visitation of, 425
- charge for endowment of chapel of ease, 616
 - pension of retiring incumbent, 616
- of archdeacon, 440
 - bishop, how far privileged, 403
- charges upon benefice, 615
- charitable gifts to Roman Catholic Church, 810
- Charitable Trustees Incorporation Act, 794
- charitable trusts for benefit of Church of England, 773 preservation of, 773

of advowsons, 580

- Charitable Trusts Acts, application to places of worship, 818
- Roman Catholic charities, 810, 811 charity, ecclesiastical, meaning of, 855

chasuble, wearing of, 672

chimere, the, 402

China, Holy Catholic Church of, 499

choir schools, 812

choral vicars, 434—436, 793

christening, 685

Christian Church, recognition of, by the Empire, 856

name, alteration of, at confirmation, 689 church, acquisition of, 719

site for, 722—726

additional building when regarded as enlargement of, 731

alteration of, 540, 734

ancient manner of founding a, 720 and churchyard, maintenance and repair of, 468, 732 annexation of tithes to district, 724 assault in, 589

bells, agreements as to ringing of, 468, 547 care of, 468

control of, 452

brawling in, 665

Church Building Acts, provisions of, 443—451, 723—726, 773

Building Commissioners, 784, 801

Catholic, 858. See Catholic Church.

church, chancel included in, 732, 734

consecration of, 728

necessity of, 719

constitution of a, by Crown, 487 conveyance of land, as site for, 729 creation of, in Crown colony, 861 decorations of the, 667

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Church Discipline Act, 1840, appeal under, 529
 - commission of inquiry, 526
 - inhibition pending proceedings, 528
 - initiation of proceedings, 526
 - monition under, 529
 - offences under, 520, 521, 522, 526, 538, 654, 655
 - procedure under, 506, 520, 526, 538
 - proceedings before bishop, 527
 - summary sentence, 527
 - transmission of case to provincial court, 526
 - trial of cases under, 506
- church, donative, 564
 - effect of alteration of doctrine upon, 363
 - elective, 564
 - endowment of, 726
 - entrance to, prevention of, 686
 - erection of, before consecration of ground, 729
- Church Estates Commissioners, 795
- church, fabric of, prohibition of alteration without faculty, 655
 - fittings of, 468, 471, 667—671, 735
 - for new division or district, 721
 - foundation of a, 361
 - a parish, 715—717
 - effect of and essentials to, 720
 - freehold of ground of, must be secured, 729
 - gifts to, 722—728, 756, 775
 - under Roman law, 357
 - goods, custody of, by churchwardens, 468
 - grant by limited owner of site for, 723, 725, 823
 - of land for, by corporations, 723, 725
 - "house," within meaning of Metropolis Management Acts, not a, 732
 - inclusion of chancel in word, 722
 - identity of, how determined, 363
 - insurance of chancel of, 772
 - key of, custody of, 469
 - litigious, 586
 - maintenance of order in, 469, 663—665
 - meaning of, 355
 - missionary, recognition of, 487
- Church of Christ, visible, definition of, 370
 - England archbishop, 384
 - appointment of, 384
 - powers and duties of, 385
 - archdeacons, 436
 - beadles, 479
 - bishops, 396
 - canons, 426. See also canon.
 - chapters, 416. See also chapters.
 - church trustees, 474
 - churchwardens, 460. See also churchwardens.
 - in colonies, 483—492
 - self-governing colonies, 492—494
 - constitution of, 370
 - meaning of, 371
 - the Church into parishes, 442
 - provinces, 383
 - dioceses, 395
 - continuity of, 369
 - convocation, 390
 - deacons, 416
 - diocesan chancellors, 413
 - dioceses, see also diocese.
 - division of, 360, 370
 - Eccelesiastical Courts, 492. See also Courts, Ecclesiastical.
 - foreign parts, in, 497
 - honorary canons, 433
 - in colonies, 483
 - incumbent of the parish, 451

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

Church of England in India, 495

- self-governing colonies, 498
- intercommunion of colonial church with, 485, 486, 494
- lay reader, 480
- membership, what constitutes, 371
- minor canons, 484. See also minor canons.
- law of, 374
 - acceptance of old rule and usage, 375
 - canon law, 372.
 - corpus juris canonici*, 375
 - origin of, 374
 - post-Reformation canons, 379
- organists, 479
- parish clerks, 475
- parishes, constitution of Church into, 442, 715—717
- parishioners, 480. See also parishioners.
- property of, 718 See property.
- provinces of, 383
- Reformation statutes, 371
- royal supremacy, 380
 - coronation oath, 381
 - doctrinal declaration at coronation, 382
- select vestry, 458. See also vestry.
- separation of Church of Ireland from, 361
- sextons, 478. See also sextons.
- sidesmen, 474
- societies for religious ministrations outside England and Wales, 464
- vestry, 452. See also vestry.
 - clerks, 460
 - select, 458
- of Ireland, disestablishment of, 373
 - separation of, from Church of England, 361
- Rome, common law of, 376
 - hierarchy of, 308
 - position of, in England, 303
- Scotland in India, 497
 - Moderator of, precedence of, 373
- church, old, pulling down of, 721
- order in, maintenance of, 469
- ornaments of the, 667
 - not necessarily included in consecration, 732
- pews in, 737
- provision of land for, 723
- rate, definition of, 735
 - payable by reason of local Act, 736
 - recovery of, by legal process, 735
 - refusal to pay, 735
- rates, 734
- recognition of, by State, 356
- removal from, for disturbance, 664
- repair of, 732
 - by parishioners, 482
- rights of parishioners in, 737
- rites and ceremonies, additional, 681—684
 - effect of alteration of, 363
 - meaning of, 675
- sacrilege committed by taking goods out of, 736
- soot, 776
- secession from membership of a, 342
- site of, vesting of, in new parish, 726
- substitution of new for old, 721
- test as to whether building is or is not a, 715
- trust for building of, 773
- trustees' appointment, status and functions of, 47
 - church vested in, 726
 - registration of, as a corporation, 736
- vested in trustees, 736

‘ INDEX. ‘

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- church, voluntary association of individuals forming a, 362
- without a district, 562
- churching of women, 709
- churchwarden, admission of, 465
 - allocation of seats by, 470, 738, 740
 - alms, collection of, 472
 - appointment of, 462
 - books of church, custody of, 468
 - burial, discretion of as to place of, 730
 - choice of, 462, 464
 - church and churchyard, maintenance and repair of, 468, 734
 - goods, custody of, 468
 - churchyard, management of by, 730
 - contract, liability of, on, 467, 734
 - conviction of, effect of, 473
 - corporation (quasi-) for holding property in succession, 465, 794
 - declaration by, 465
 - disqualifications, 461
 - dissenters when not eligible as, 461, 811
 - duties of, as to irregularities in service introduced by minister, 470, 665
 - duty of, in case of brawling etc., 470, 664
 - election of, 462
 - by select vestry, 462
 - exemption from service as, 461
 - functions of, 468
 - issue of sequestration to, 621, 624
 - jurisdiction over, 513
 - legal proceedings by, 466
 - liability of, on contracts and for misconduct, 467
 - maintenance of order in church and churchyard, 469, 664
 - mandamus to admit, 465
 - marriage registers, duties of, as to, 472
 - misconduct, liability of, for, 467
 - of ancient parish, 462
 - church without district, 464
 - new parish or district, 464
 - ornaments of church, custody of, 468, 737
 - pew-renters, choice of, by, 464
 - pew-rents, alteration of, by, 787
 - collection and payment of, by, 788
 - presentments by, 473
 - provision for Holy Communion by, 690
 - of fittings and decorations by, 735
 - requisites for divine service, 471, 735
 - qualification of, 460, 464
 - recovery of visitation fees from, 465
 - removal of, 473
 - repair by, 468, 734
 - residential qualification of, 460, 464
 - resignation of, 473
 - Roman Catholic as, 807
 - seating of parishioners, 470, 738, 740
 - sequestrators as, 472, 621, 624
 - service as, by deputy, 462
 - status of, 465
 - sue, how, 466
 - sued, how, 465
 - time of appointment of, 463
 - vacancy, duties of, during a, 473
 - vacation of office by, 473
 - woman may be, 461
- churchwardens, 460—473
 - accounts by, 473
 - admission of, 465
- churchyard, acquisition of, 723, 725, 726
 - alteration of, 540, 658, 734

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL' LAW—continued.

- churoyard, brawling in, 470, 864
 - consecration of, 780
 - not essential, 719
 - enlargements of, 723, 724
 - fee of, is in abeyance, 730
 - freehold of, vesting in rector, 726, 730 •
 - licence for removal of body from, 732
 - management of, 730
 - rateability of, 741
 - right of sepulture of inhabitants of parish, 730
 - rights of parishioners in, 741
 - trees in, 768
- Cistercians exempt from tithe, 744
- citation, issue of, 517
 - to show cause against faculty, 544
- city of London, tithes in, 752
- civil power, formation of a church by direct act of, 361
 - relation of, to Church, 358—360
 - rights, trial of, in ecclesiastical courts, 513
 - suits in ecclesiastical courts, 515
- Clarendon, Constitutions of, 500
- class, patronage of a numerous class, 579
- clergy, 519
 - advowsons, 564
 - army chaplains, 647
 - assistant curates, 638
 - benefice, avoidance of, 627
 - cession of, 633
 - charges on, authorised, 755—760
 - forbidden, 615
 - exchange of, 633
 - mode of filling, 595
 - nature and tenure of, 559
 - patronage of, 559
 - resignation of, 627
 - sequestration of, 616
- beneficed clergy, 559
- benefices, union of, 605
- books trade as to, 558
- certificate of conviction of, 524
- chapels with districts or chapelries attached, 562
- chaplains, 647
- collation, 602
- colonial and extraneous, 553
- curates, 637
 - assistant, 638
- cure of souls, 609
- deacons, 552
- death, 637
- deed of relinquishment, 558
- deprivation, 635
- disabilities of, 556
- distress, privilege from, 556
- ecclesiastical duties, 613
 - offences, 653
- exchange of benefices, 632
- exemption from tolls, 556
- farming, restrictions on, 557
- House of Commons, incapacity to sit in, 557
- induction, 602
- institution, 601
- jury, exemption from service on, 556
- lecturers, 645
- licence, admission of, 602
- local government, disabilities as to, 557
- medieties, 563
- meeting of, without King's licence, legality of, 441 •

INDEX

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

clergy—continued.

- ministers in charge, 637
 - of chapels of ease, 646
 - proprietary chapels, 647
- mode of life, restrictions on, 557
- naval chaplains, 649
- obstruction of, in performance of duties 555
- orders, 549
- ordination, 549
- patronage of benefices, 563
- perpetual curacy, 562
- pluralities, 604, 605
- preachers, 645
- priests, 553
- privileges of, 555
- relinquishment of status, 558
- residence, 610
- resignation, 627
- schoolmasters etc. may be, 558
- sequestration of benefices, 616
- simony, 593
- status of, 555
- trading, restrictions on, as to, 557
- unbeneficed, 636
- union of benefices, 604
- vicarage, 561

See also incumbent, curate, vicar

- Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, appeal, 525
 - assessors, 525
 - certificate of conviction, 524
 - crime, 523
 - deposition from holy orders, 526
 - immorality, 523
 - offences within, 522
 - procedure under, 522
 - prosecution in consistory court, 524
 - sentence, 525
 - summary sentence, 526
 - trial of cases under, 506

Clerical Subscription Act, 372

- clerk, brawling by, 521
 - church, chapel or parish, trial of, before archdeacon's court, 501
 - parish, 475
 - suspension, 533
 - trading by, 522
 - vestry, 460

See also clergy.

- close chapter, 424
- cloth for communion table, 471
- coadjutor bishop, to archbishop, 389
 - bishop, 405
- collation of clergyman, 602
 - to benefice by lapse, 587
- college, name for chapter in collegiate church, 424
- colleges of university, augmentations of benefices by, 727, 755
 - dean cannot be head of, 429
 - grant of land by, 723
 - loans by, 756
 - morning and evening prayer in, 658
 - Nonconformists in, 812
 - patronage of, 577
 - Roman Catholics in, 805
 - title to orders from, 550
- collegiate chapters, patronage of, 578
 - churches, complaint to visitor of, 531
 - patronage of chapter of, 599
 - statutes in, 456, 675

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- colonial and foreign clergy, licence to officiate in England, 354
- Colonial Bishops Fund, 484
- colonial clergy, 553
- colonies, bishop, choice of, by synod, 494
 - consecration of, 489
 - bishopric, creation of, by letters patent, 491
 - Church of England in, 483
 - Colonial Bishops Fund, 484
 - creation by Crown of Ecclesiastical Courts in, 490
 - Crown, constitution of a church by, 487
 - creation of bishoprics by, 487
 - employees of State, provisions for religious ministrations to, 483
 - episcopal supervision in, 488
 - governor as ordinary in, 488
 - intercommunion with Church of England, 485, 494
 - Lambeth quadrilateral, as basis of, 486
 - letters patent, creation of bishoprics by, 491
 - licence for consecration, 489, 498
 - mandate for consecration of bishop, 489
 - meaning of, 483
 - ministers, supply of, 488, 497
 - missionary churches, recognition of, 487
 - self-governing, Church in, 492
 - societies for religious ministrations outside England, 484
 - State endowment, withdrawal of, 491
 - synods, powers of, 492, 494
 - territorial title of bishop in, 489
- commandments, table of, 735
- commendam*, benefice held in, 633
- commissaries, 412
- commissary of archdeacon's court, 438
 - bishop, 505
- commission of inquiry as to performance of duties of incumbent, 613
 - into expediency of union of benefices 607
 - on resignation of benefice, 639
 - under Church Discipline Act, 1840...526
 - review, 502
- Commissioners, Church Estates, 795
 - Ecclesiastical, see Ecclesiastical Commissioners.
- Committee, Estates, 795
- common fund of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 799
 - application of, 801
 - composition of, 783
 - creation of, 799
- common law, ecclesiastical law is a part of the, 374
 - of the Church of Rome, 376
- Common Prayer, Book of, see Book of Common Prayer.
- communicant three times in the year, parishioner must be, 481
- Communion, administration of, in private houses, 692
 - offences as to, 657, 677—693
 - to sick persons, 710
- deacon, cannot be administered by, 689
- depraving, penalties for, 692
- Holy, 689
- notice of, 680, 690
- number of communicants, 680, 692
- provision for, 677, 690
- service, ceremony of ablution at, 683
 - Elements, the, 677
 - elevation of the Elements, 679
 - manual acts, 679
 - minimum of persons, 680
 - mixing the wine with water, 678
 - notices during, 680, 690
 - offertory at, 691
 - position of the celebrant, 678
 - posture of celebrant, 679
 - repulsion from, 681

' INDEX'

ECCELESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Communion service, reservation of the sacrament, 683
 - use of lighted candles at, 681
- table, cross on, 668
 - movable marble, 671
 - second, 671
 - wholly uncovered, 671
- commutation of tithes, 745
- composition real, 744
- compulsory church rate abolition, 785
- confirmation, 688
 - alteration of Christian name at, 689
 - god-parent at, 688
 - of bishop, 398
- confirmatory faculty, 543
- congé d'élire*, appointment of bishop by, 396
 - election of dean by, 418
- consecrated ground, conversion of, to secular purposes, 540, 731
- consecration, ceremony of, 729
 - effect of, 730
 - form of, 729
 - how effected, 728
 - of bishop, 397, 489, 497, 498
 - church, 728
 - churchyard, 730
 - ornaments and fittings not necessarily included in, 732
 - petition to bishop for, 729
 - sentence of, 728
- consistory courts, 505—508
 - assessors to, 507
 - commissary court, 505
 - immorality, prosecutions for, 524
 - meaning of, 505
 - of London, 507
- consolidated chapelry, 444, 446
- constitution of Church of England, 370. See Church of England, constitution of
- constitutions, legatine and provincial, 377
- Constitutions of Clarendon, 500
- consular churches, 483
- contempt of court, 532
 - punishment for, 533
 - sequestration for, 533
- continuity of Church of England, 369
- contract, liability of churchwarden on, 467
- contributing body of persons, church built or endowed by, patronage of, 569
- conveyance of land as site for church, 729
- conviction of clergyman, certificate of, 524
- Convocation, Act of Submission, 391
 - citation of bishop, 392
 - duties of archbishop with regard to, 385
 - ecclesiastical provincial synods, distinguished from, 390
 - houses of, 392
 - Lower House of, 392
 - mandate of archbishop, 391
 - president of, 393
 - privilege of clergy going to and returning from, 555
 - members, 394
 - proctors, election of, 392
 - prolocutors, 393
 - prorogation or dissolution of, 395
 - royal letters of business, 393
 - summoning of, 391
 - taxation by clergy, discontinuance of, 393
 - Upper House of, 393
- coparceners, patronage of, 571
- cope, use of the, 493
 - when a proper vestment, 674
- corn, average price of, as basis of tithe rentcharge, 746
- rent (local), conversion of, into tithe rentcharge, 752

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- corn rents, 748
- Cornwall, Duchy of, patronage in right of, 574, 576
 - grants of land by, 723
- coronation oath, 381
 - service, 387, 388
- corporation aggregate, a dean and chapter is a, 423
 - church trustees are a, 474
 - as a, 793
 - diocesan associations, 802
 - ecclesiastical, as owners of property, 792
 - Ecclesiastical Commissioners as a, 801
 - grant of land for church etc. by, 725
 - lay, 801
 - lenses by, 794
 - minister and churchwardens in city of London as a, 794
 - patronage of churches built or endowed by, 569
 - (quasi-), churchwardens are, 463
 - sole, archbishop is a, 388
 - bishop is a, 404
 - canon is a, 427
 - incumbent is a, 563
 - vicar-choral is a, 434
- corpus juris canonici*, 378
- corrupt exchange, 633
 - ordination, deprivation by reason of, 633
- corse presents, 779
- costs of application for faculty, 547
 - proceedings in Ecclesiastical Courts, 519
- councils of the Anglican Communion, 485
 - Church, 391
- county court (old) as ecclesiastical authority, 499
 - jurisdiction as to tithe rentcharge, 718, 749
- court of archdeacon, 438
- Court of Augmentation and Revenues of the King's Crown, 574
 - First Fruits and Tenths, as to, 374
- courts, Christian, 500
 - creation of, by Crown, in colonies, 490
- Courts, Ecclesiastical, 499
 - act on petition, 518
 - advocates, 502
 - appeal from archbishop, 510
 - interlocutory decisions, 510
 - on question of law, 523
 - to Privy Council, 511, 529, 531, 547
 - provincial court, 511, 529, 547
 - appeals to Rome, 500
 - appearance in, 515
 - archbishops' court for trial of bishops and heretics, 510
 - archidiaconal courts, 501
 - articles, 517
 - assessors to determine question of fact, 525
 - barristers can practise in, 504
 - Benefices Act, 1808, court under, 512
 - brawling by clerk, 521
 - canon law, breach of, 521
 - censures, 510, 531, 539
 - certificate of correction, 524
 - Chancery Court of York, 509
 - Church Discipline Act, 1840, procedure under, 526
 - trial of cases under, 506
 - citation, issue of, 517, 544
 - civil rights, trial of, 513
 - suits in, 515
 - Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, procedure under, 522
 - trial of cases under, 506
 - College of Doctors of Law, 503
 - commissary, 505
 - court, 505

INDEX.

ECOLESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

Courts, Ecclesiastical—continued.

- commission of review, 502
- conduct of suits, 517
- consistory courts, 505
- Constitutions of Clarendon, 500
- contempt of court, 532
- costs of proceedings in, 519, 547, 548
- county court, 499
- Court of Arches, 509
 - Delegates, 501
 - Faculties, 510
 - High Commission, 502
- court under the Benefices Act, 1898...512
- courts after the Conquest, 500
 - in pre-Norman times, 499
- crime, procedure in case of, 528
- criminal suits in, 515
- declaration of, capacity to hold preferment, 537
- decrees, enforcement of, 531, 548
- deposition, 539
- deprivation, 535, 537, 539
- diocesan courts, 505
- disobedience to decree, 533
- Doctors' Commons bar, 503
- doctrinal offences, 521, 653
- enforcement of sentences, decrees and orders, 531, 548
- evidence in, 518
- excommunication, 532, 539
- faculty cases, 540
- High Commission Court, 502
- hundred court, 499
- immorality, procedure in case of, 523
- inhibition under Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874...534
- jurisdiction of, 512
- lay persons, jurisdiction over, 518
- letters of request, 508
- libels, 517
- litis contestatio*, 518
- motion for promotion of office of judge, 516
- offences triable in, 512, 653
- orders as to procedure in, 519
 - enforcement of, 531, 548
- origin and history, 499
- penalties under Pluralities Act, 1838...540
- pleadings, 517
- practice in, 515—549
 - censures, 534
 - civil suits, 517
 - conduct of suits, 517
 - contempt, 532
 - criminal suits, 516
 - declaration of incapacity to hold preferment, 537
 - decrees, enforcement of, 531
 - deposition, 539
 - deprivation, 535
 - disobedience to decree, 533
 - enforcement of sentences, decrees and orders, 531
 - excommunication, 532, 539
 - faculty cases, 540
 - general procedure, 515
 - inhibition under Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874...534
 - orders, enforcement of, 531
 - penalties under Pluralities Act, 1838...540
 - procedure in respect of ecclesiastical offences, 529
 - under Church Discipline Act, 1840...526
 - Clergy Discipline Act, 1892...522
 - Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874...529
 - punishments, 534

INDEX .

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

Courts, Ecclesiastical—continued.

practice in—continued.

sentences, enforcement of, 531

sequestration, 533

suspension, 535

present constitution of, 505

procedure in respect of ecclesiastical offences, 520

provincial courts, 508

Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, procedure under, 522

punishments, 534

rejoinders, 518

responsive allegations, 518

Rome, appeals to, 500

rules and orders, 519

sentences, enforcement of, 531

separation of, from civil courts, 500

sequestration, 533

simony, 522

Society of Advocates, 503

solicitors can practise in, 504

suspension, 533

procedure in case of, 535

trading by clerk, 522

transference of certain powers to Court of Probate and Divorce Court, 505 writ of prohibition to, 513

credence table, an ornament, 668

when lawfully placed in church, 672

creeds, as bond of union of church, 863

cremated ashes, interment in church of, 541

cremation, burial service in case of, 711

fees upon, 777

criminal suits in Ecclesiastical Courts, 515

cross, making sign of, in baptism, 645

unauthorised place in service, 584 crosses, when legal ornaments, 568

Crown appoints archbishops 384

bishops, 396

chaplain of, 652

colony, creation of church in, 361, 487 constitution of a church by, 487 creation of bishoprics in colonies by, 487

Ecclesiastical Courts in colonies by, 490 lapse to, 590

patronage, 383, 574

powers of, 382

presentation by, 596

right of, to present by reason of simony, 593

supremacy of, 380

visitor of archb shop, 382

royal peculiars, 411

crucifixes, 668

curacy, duration of, 644

sale of, is simony, 639

curate, admission to office of, 638 agreement of, as to stipend, 639

ancient meaning of, 442

appointment of, 627

as minister in charge, 637

sequestrator, 639

during sequestration, 626

vacancy of benefice, 644

incumbent being resident and performing duties, 640

on inadequate performance of duties of benefice, 642 negligence of incumbent, 614 sequestration of benefice, 643

where incumbent a lunatic, 643

in non-resident, 640

assistant, 638

. INDEX.

ECOLESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- curate, descriptions of, 636, 637
 - during sequestration, appointment of, 620
 - enforcement of delivery of house of residence to, by sequestration, 623
 - in charge, 637
 - of a parish, 638
 - Peel districts, 637
 - licence of, 638
 - record of, 645
 - requisites of, 645
 - revocation of, 641
 - notice by, 644
 - to, 644
 - obedience of, to incumbent, 640
 - perpetual, 562
 - residence of, 641
 - stipend of, sequestration for non-payment of, 623
 - two, when required, 641
- cure of souls, 609
 - during vacancy, 635
- curtain behind altar, 671
- customary select vestry, 458
- daily service at sea, 483
 - law as to, 658
- deacon, Holy Communion cannot be administered by, 689
 - marriage by, 376
- deacons, age of, 550
 - declaration by, 551
 - examination of, 550
 - functions of, 552
 - letters dimissory, 551
 - testimonial, of, 550
 - ordination of, 549
- dead, prayers for, 672
 - protection of, 731
- dean and chapter, possessions of, division of, 426
 - benefice capable of being held by, 634
 - bishop acting as, 417
 - leaves by, 760
 - of chapter, appointment of, 417
 - benefices of, 419
 - income of, 418
 - installation of, 419
 - lunacy of, 422
 - preach, duty to, 419
 - precedence of, 421
 - qualifications of, 417
 - residence of, 419
 - resignation of, 421
 - style of, 421
 - vestments of, 420
- Dean of the Arches, 509
- dean, patronage of, 579
- deans, honorary, 416
 - of chapters, 416
 - peculiars, 416
 - the new foundation, 418
 - old foundation, 418
 - provincial, 416
 - rural, 440. See also rural deans.
- death, avoidance of benefice by, 627
- debt, sequestration for, 617
- deceased wife's sister, marriage with, 694
- deciato*, 779
- declaration against simony, 594
 - as to benefices intended to be held together, 694
 - of assent, 601
 - faith by dissenting minister, 813
 - pension, 630

INDEX

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Delegates, Court of, 501
- denomination, meaning of, 356
- deposition, 539
 - from holy orders, 526
- depraving of the Prayer Book, 654
- deprivation, 535—539
 - avoidance of benefice by, 635
 - by reason of corrupt ordination, 635
 - failure to read publicly Thirty-Nine Articles, 636
 - simony, 635
 - for doctrinal offence, 521
 - immorality, 537
 - obedience to order, 537
 - offences other than against morality, 538
 - refusal to use Book of Common Prayer, 536
 - in case of inhibition, 536
 - sequestration, 536
 - unlawful trading, 537
 - of bishop, 407
 - sentence of, 537
- deputy chancellor, 415
- devise for spiritual purposes, 773
- dilapidations, 767
 - agreement to exchange livings without payment for, 769
 - inspection of, 769
 - loans for, 759
 - sequestration for non-payment of, 624
 - surveyor of, 769
 - surveyor's report, 770
 - objections to, 770
- dimissory, letters, 551
- diocesan associations, 802
 - courts, 505
- diocese, arch-priest of the, 421
 - boundaries of, 395
 - cathedral is parish church of whole, 442
 - chancellor of, 412, 506
 - definition of, 395
 - sub-divisions of, 395
 - transference of portions of, 395
 - Welsh, services in, 613
- dioceses of province of Canterbury, 384
 - York, 384
- pre-Reformation, 384
- Discipline Acts, trial of cases under, 506
- discipline, enforcement of, 366
 - of the clergy, enforcement of, 512
- disestablishment of Church of Ireland, 361, 373
- disobedience, deprivation for, 537
 - to decree of Ecclesiastical Court, 533
 - faculty, 548
- disorder in church or churchyard, 470, 663
- dispensation to hold more than one benefice, 604
- dissenters, 811—822. See Nonconformists.
- dissolution of union of benefices, 608
- distress for tithe rent-charge, 749
 - levy of, by sequestrator, 625
- district chapelry, 444, 447, 449
 - chapels, 447
- District Church Tithe Act, 727, 752
- district parish, 441, 445
 - parishes, 445—449
- districts, ecclesiastical, 443
- disturbance in church, 469, 663
- disunion of parishes, 608
- divine service, 651
- division into parishes, 718
- divorced persons, marriage of, 694

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Doctors' Commons bar, 503
- Doctors of Law, College of, 503
- doctrinal offences, punishment for, 521
- doctrine, alteration of, effect of upon Church, 563
- donative Church, 564
- dower, right of patronage by reason of, 573
- drunkenness a cause of deprivation, 522, 523
- Duchy of Cornwall, patronage in right of, 574, 576
 - Lancaster, patronage in right of, 574, 576
- Durham University freed from tests, 805, 813
- duplex querela*, suit of, 588
- easement of light and air, grant of, by faculty, 543
 - right to pew merely an, 738
- easements, creation of, by incumbent, 763
- Easter, churchwardens chosen at, 463
 - offerings, 775
- Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 794—801
 - administrative functions and powers of, 796
 - appointment of, 795, 796
 - audit of accounts of, 801
 - augmentation of endowment by, 774
 - Church Building Acts, powers under, 444—448, 723 728
 - Church Estates Commissioners, 795
 - reports of, 797
 - common fund of, 783, 799
 - constitution of, 794
 - Estates Committee, 795
 - duties of, 797
 - evidence, power to take, 797
 - exchange of lands, powers as to, 763, 764
 - instruments under common seal of, 799
 - lands, power of, to hold, 801
 - leases, powers as to, 762—764
 - loans, powers as to, 757, 758
 - meetings of, 796
 - new parishes, powers as to, 447—450
 - Order in Council ratifying scheme by, 793
 - payment to, power to enforce, 800
 - pew rents fixed by, 786
 - quorum, 796
 - report (annual) of, 797
 - sale of land, powers as to, 763, 764
 - schemes by, 798
 - tenure of office of, 796
 - transference of powers of Church Building Commissioners to, 801
 - treasurers of, 796
- Ecclesiastical Court, criminals clerks, trial of, by, 504
 - Courts in colonies, creation by Crown, 490
 - Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, 511
 - jurisdiction of, 504
 - See Courts, Ecclesiastical.
- Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Acts, 768—772
- ecclesiastical law, scope of, 355—371
- Ecclesiastical Leases Acts, 761, 762
- Ecclesiastical Leasing Acts, 762—764
- ecclesiastical offences, 553
 - persons as owners of property, 792
 - property. See property, ecclesiastical.
 - purposes, definition of, 785
 - spiritual purposes distinguished from, 448
- elective church, 564
- elevation of the Elements, illegality of, 679
- Ember weeks, 550
- emblems, 527
 - incumbent resigning not entitled to, 632
- employees of State, provision for religious ministrations to, 433
- endowed schools, chaplains of, 651
- endowment, apportionment of, on formation of distinct and separate parish, 728

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- endowment, augmentation of, by private benefaction, 774
 - by Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 727, 774
 - lay patron, 727
 - tithe owner, 727
 - of chapel of ease by charge on benefice, 616
- endowments, augmentation of, 722—727, 752, 774, 781, 783
 - construction of trusts relating to, 366, 369
 - phrasology of deed creating, 369
- engagement for resignation of benefice, 628
- enthronement of archbishop, 386
- episcopal ring, illegality of, 402
 - supervision in colonies, 488
- "established," meaning of word, 364
- Estates Committee of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 795
 - duties of, 797
- Eton, advowsons held by, 578
 - Roman Catholics may not hold office in, 805
- Eucharist, celebration of the. See communion service.
- evening prayer, 657
- evidence in Ecclesiastical Court, 518
- examination before ordination, 550
- exchange, avoidance of benefice by, 632
 - corrupt, 633
 - of advowsons, 584
- Exchequer of the Jews, 825
- excommunication, 539
- exhumation of human remains, 542
- exorcisms, 657
- extension of church, churchyard, or chapel, 734
- extraordinary tithe rentcharge, 751
- extra-parochial areas, 443
 - places, patronage in, 571
- faculties, 540—549
- Faculties, Court of, 510
- faculty, ancient lights, interference with, 543
 - appeals, 547
 - bells, erection of, 547
 - church, rebuilding or pulling down of, 542
 - citation to persons interested, 541
 - confirmatory, 543
 - costs of application for, 547
 - cremated ashes, interment in church of, 541
 - disobedience, 548
 - easement of light and air, 543
 - enforcement of, 548
 - fees for, 548
 - glebe buildings, 544
 - grant of, 546
 - human remains, removal of, 542
 - injunction, 548
 - interment, exclusive right of, 542
 - meaning of, 510
 - monition, after, 543
 - monuments, erection of, 541
 - not necessary in cathedral additions etc., 540
 - object likely to produce trouble, 545
 - opposition to, 545
 - pathway, private, 542
 - petition for, 544
 - pew, 740
 - appropriation of, 542
 - procedure to obtain, 544
 - remains, exhumation of, 542
 - removal of illegal furniture or ornaments, 545
 - repairs, 548
 - revocation of, 549
 - subject to reservation, 547
 - tablets, erection of, 541

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- faculty, tombstones, erection of, 541
- vaults, construction of, 541
- vestry, consent of, 544
- vicar, consent of, when necessary to grant of, 546
- farming, restrictions on clergyman as to, 54
- fees at visitation, 411
 - corse presents, 779
 - extortionate, taking of, 656
 - for burial, 712
 - of non-parishioner, 777
 - certificate of dissenting minister having made a declaration of faith, 813
 - churching, 709
 - faculties, 549
 - induction, 603
 - institution, collation and licence, 602
 - monuments, 777
 - ordination, 551
 - publication of banns, 707
 - searches, 779
 - for Order in Council ratifying scheme by Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 779
 - etc. in register of baptisms, 687
- in Peel districts, 778
- mortuaries, 779
- of chancellor, 416
- ecclesiastical judges and registrars, 519
- new districts, 778
- parish clerk, 476
- sexton, 478
- on cremation, 777
 - depositing certificate of registration of dissenting place of worship, 817,
 - installation of a canon, 428
 - dean of chapter, 419
 - licence to hold more than one benefice, 601
 - marriage, 707
 - searches in marriage register, 707
- payable at archidiaconal visitation, 440
 - by bishop, 400
 - honorary canon, 434
 - on collation to minor canonry, 435
- surplice, 776
- table of, 776
- first fruits, 400, 779
- ittings of church, 735
- fixtures, grants from Queen Anne's Bounty for, 782
- flowers, vases of, on holy table, 671
- font, provision of, 471
- foreign countries, Church of England in, 497
- forfeiture for failure to read Articles, 603
 - to Crown for simony, 593
- formation of churches, 361
- foundation of church, 720
- free chapel, meaning of, 789
- freehold, lay parish clerk of ancient parish has a, 476
 - of church and churchyard, 730
 - vested in incumbent, 468
 - sexton in ancient parish has a, 478
- free seats, 786
- furniture, illegal, removal of, by faculty, 545
- gaol chaplain, 650
- gates, chancel screen, 670
- general chapter, 424
- gifts for spiritual purpose, 773
 - to church under Roman law, 352
 - churches, 722
 - religious orders, 810
- glebe buildings, faculty for, 544
 - compensation to tenant of, 789

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- glebe, cultivation of, 754
 - definition of, 753
 - included in manse, 754
 - land of, investment of proceeds of sale of, 766
 - lands of, sale of, 764
 - mortgage for expenditure on, 755
- gloves, illegality of, 402
- god-parents, 685
- goods in church, sacrilege to take, 736
- gospel, singing of sentences before and after, 677
- grants from Queen Anne's Bounty, 781
- guardian of the spiritualities, 380, 390
- heresy, 653
 - deprivation for, 538
- heretics, archbishop's court for trial of, 510
- High Commission Court, 502
 - for Ecclesiastical Causes, as to, 374
- Holy Communion, 689. See Communion.
- holy matrimony. See matrimony.
- "holy orders," episcopal ordination implied in, 550
- homage by bishop, 399
- honorary canons, 433
 - deans, 416
- hospital, as an ecclesiastical corporation, 794
 - chaplain of, 651
- House of Commons, incapacity of clergyman to sit in, 556
 - right of Nonconformist to sit in, 811
 - Roman Catholic to sit in, 805
- House of Lords, right of bishop to sit in, 403
 - Nonconformist to sit in, 811
 - Roman Catholic to sit in, 804
- house of residence, 610, 753
 - dilapidations, 767
 - enforcement of delivery of possession of, to curate, 623
 - fixtures, grants from Queen Anne's Bounty for, 782
 - grant of land for, by corporations, limited owners etc., 725
 - public bodies, 723, 755
 - insurance of, 772
 - mortgage, default in payment of, 622
 - for expenditure on, 755—760
 - occupation of, by widow, 627
 - purchase of, 754
 - provision of land for, 723
 - new, by sale of old, 754
 - residence of curate in, 641
 - use of surplus pew rents for purchase of, 788
- human remains, removal of, 542, 731
- hundred court as ecclesiastical authority, 499
- hymns, interpolation of, at service, 659
- illegal agreements for resignation of benefice, 628
 - furniture or ornaments, removal of, by faculty, 545
- images, legality of, 668
- immorality, deprivation for, 537
 - procedure against clerk in case of, 523
 - prosecution for, in Consistory Court, 524
- impropriation, meaning of, 717
- impropriators recognised as lay rectors, 803
- improvements by incumbent, 764
- incapacity to hold preferment, 537
- incense, use of, 682
- income of bishop, 406
 - canon, 431
 - dean of chapter, 418
 - tax, Easter offerings are subject to, 775
- in commendam, holding benefice, 633
- incumbent, appointment of curate on negligence of, 614
 - bankruptcy of, sequestration on, 620
 - charges by, 615

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- incumbent, commission of inquiry as to performance of duties of, 613
- consent of, to erection of chapel, 609
- control of money collected in church, 601
- creation of easements by, 763
- derivation of name, 610
- dilapidations by, 768
- duties of, inadequate performance of, 613
- Easter offerings to, 755
- ecclesiastical duties of, 613
- election of, by parishioners, 456
- endowment of chapel by, 737
- estate of an, is a fee simple qualified, 754
- freehold of church vested in, 468
- improvements by, 764
- inhibition of, for negligence, 614
- leases by, 761
- lunatic, resignation of, 630
- mines, opening by, 754
- monition to reside on benefice, 612
- mortgages by, 755
- non-residence of, sequestration for, 622
- obedience of curate to, 640
- of parish, 451
- patronage of, 579
- pension of, 630
 - retired, scheme for, 788
- performance of divine service by, 661
 - without leave of, 662
- position of, during sequestration, 626
- questions as to residence and service of, 612
- residence of, 610
- resident and keeping a curate, duties of, 662
- retired, scheme for pension of, 788
- retiring, charge for pension of, 616
- right to officiate, 610
- sale of glebe lands by, 764
- sequestration in cases of default of, 622
- stipend, augmentation of, by pew rents, 787
 - of, payment of, out of pew rents, 788
- timber, cutting by, 754
- unconsecrated place, holding of services in, 602
- vote of, at vestry meeting, 455
- waste by, 768
- India, bishops in, 495
 - Church of England in, 495
- induction of archdeacon, 437
 - clergyman, 602
- infant, presentation by, 573
- infirmity, resignation with a pension on account of, 629
- inhabitants, patronage in hands of, 579
- inhibition, deprivation in case of, 536
 - of incumbent for negligence, 614
 - inferior officers during visitation, 411
 - pending proceedings under Church Discipline Act, 1842...521
 - under Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874...524
- injunction to restrain alteration without a faculty, 648
 - presentation, 586
- installation of bishop, 399
 - canon, 428
 - dean of chapter, 419
- institution, chaplain of, 661
 - of clergyman, 601
- insurance of ecclesiastical property, 772
- interment in church of cremated ashes, 541
- investment of proceeds of sale of glebe lands, 768
- Japan, Holy Catholic Church of, 499
- Jew, Crown patronage held by, 575
- Jews, 524—529

INDEX.

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

Jews—continued.

- Board of Deputies, 828
- church patronage by, 829
- concessions as to proceedings in court to, 828
- dissenters, are, 825
- disturbance of synagogue, 827
- elections on Saturdays, privileges as to, 829
- Exchequer of the, 825
- legal status of, 824
- London Committee of Deputies of British, 828
- marriage according to usage of, recognition of, 829
- minister, status of, 827
 - tenure of office of, 827
- oath of, 829
- Pentateuch, sworn on the, 828
- "Statutum Judaismo," or "de la Jenerie," 825
- Sunday labour, 829
- synagogue, disturbance of, 827
 - registration of, 827
 - secretary of, powers of, 827
- Toleration Act, 1688, did not extend to, 826
- West London Congregation of British, 828
- yeshiba*, bequest for maintenance of, 826
- joint tenants, patronage of, 571
- judge, motion for promotion of office of, 516
- Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, 511
 - powers of, 513
- judicial duties of archbishop, 386
- jury, exemption of clergy from service on, 556
 - Roman Catholic priest from serving on, 807
- jus liturgicum*, 659
- jus patronatus*, 588
- key of church, custody of, 469
- King as supreme Ordinary, 383
 - supremacy of, 380
- King's chaplain, 652
- Lambeth Conference, 485
 - degrees, 387
 - quadrilateral, 486
- Lancaster, Duchy of, patronage in right of, 574, 576
- land for sites of churches and churchyards, 721
 - in city of London, churchwardens can buy and hold, as a corporation, 466, 794
- tax, loans for redemption of, 760
- lapse, collation to benefice by, 587
 - of patronage, 590
 - presentation notwithstanding, 592
- law of Church of England, 374. See also Church of England, law of.
- lay corporation, 801
 - pation, endowment by, 727
 - reader, 480
 - rector, 717
 - vicars, 435
- lease of benefice, 615
- leases, agricultural, 761
 - building, 762
 - by corporations, 794
 - dean and chapter, 760
 - mining, 761
 - of church property, 761
- lecturers, 644
- legality of ecclesiastical practices, tests of, 666
- legatine constitutions, 377
- lesson, omission of words from, 661
- lessons, table of, 653
- letters dimissory, 547
- "Letters of Business," 393
- letters of orders, 553

INDEX. ?

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- letters of request, when issued, 508
- patent, appointment of bishop by, 399
 - creation of colonial episcopal sees by, 491
- testimonial, 550
- libel, sermons and the law of, 556
- libels, 517
- liberty of religious worship, Acts providing for, 568
- licence, admission of clergyman by, 602
 - for non-residence, 610
 - removal of body from churchyard, 733
 - of assistant curate, 638
 - chapel for publication of banns etc., 697
 - chaplain of gaol, 650
 - workhouse, 651
 - to Missions to Seamen, 651
 - curate, revocation of, 641
 - lecturer or preacher, 645
 - marriage, 701
 - minister of chapel of ease, 646
 - proprietary chapel, 647
 - to colonial and foreign clergy to officiate in England, 554
 - hold more than one benefice, 604
 - member of religious order, 607
 - officiate elsewhere than in a consecrated building, 609
 - preach where no salary is attached, 636
 - reside in house other than house of residence, 611
- light scot, 776
- lights, 681, 682
- limitation for tithe, 744, 745
 - rentcharge, 748
 - of action, 748
 - time for recovery of right of patronage, 589
- Litany, use of, 658, 659
- litigious church, 586
- litis contestatio*, 518
- loans for building parsonage, 755—758, 788
 - compensation paid to tenant of glebe, 759
 - dilapidations, 759, 782
 - expenses of commutation of tithe, 760
 - improvement of land, 759
 - parsonage or buildings of benefice, 755—759, 782
 - purchase of parsonage or land, 755—757, 783
 - redemption of land tax, 760
 - repair of chancel, 755
 - churches, 734
- sanctioned by Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, 755
- locus in choro*, 437
- London, Consistory Court of, 507
 - tithe in, 752
- Lord Chancellor, patronage of, 575
- lunacy of dean or canon, 422
- lunatic, presentation where patron is a, 573
- mandate for consecration of colonial bishop, 489
 - induction, 603
- manors, boundaries of ancient parish determined by those of, 448, 715
- manual acts at communion service, 679
- marriage, affidavit before grant of licence 702
 - at sea, 483
 - banns, publication of, 698
 - body of church, should take place in, 705
 - by deacon, 376, 704
 - person pretending to holy orders, 704
 - canonical hours of, 704
 - certificates of, 705
 - essentials to, 705
 - Jewish, recognition of, 327
 - lawful methods of celebration of, 693
 - licence, affidavit before grant of, 702

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- marriage, licence, caveat against grant of, 702
 - licences, 701
 - Nonconformists', 868, 818
 - of persons already married to one another, 705
 - divorced for adultery, 694
 - under twenty-one years, 698
 - Quakers, 828
 - place of, 694
 - refusal to celebrate, 657
 - solemnise, 694
 - registrar's certificate of, 703
 - registration of, 705
 - Roman Catholics', 809
 - solemnisation of, 704
 - validity of, 708
 - vestry, in, 705
 - with deceased wife's sister, 694
 - witnesses to, 705
 - See also* banns
- married woman, presentation by, 578
- Master of the Faculties, 510
- matrimony, holy, 692
 - certificates of marriage, 705
 - fees, 707
 - marriage licences, 701
 - place of banns and marriage, 694
 - registrar's certificate, 703
 - registration of marriage, 705
 - right of marriage, 692
 - solemnisation of marriage, 704
 - validity of marriage, 708
 - See also* marriage
- medicines, 563
- meeting of clergy, without King's licence, legality of, 441
 - places of dissenters, 817
- membership of Church of England, what constitutes, 371
- merger of tithe rentcharge, 751
- Methodist Church (United), constitution of, 822
- metropolitan, meaning of term, 387
- military station as an extra-parochial district, 443
- mines, opening by incumbent, 754
- mining leases, 764
- minister, definition of, 560
 - of chapels of ease, 646
 - proprietary chapel, 647
 - See also* clergy; curate; incumbent; rector; vicar,
- ministers, supply of, in colonies, 487
 - foreign parts, 497, 498
- minor canons, 434
 - appointment of, 434
 - income of, 435
- minors, marriage of, 693
- missionary church, recognition of, 487
- mission room, 790
- mitre, illegality of, 402, 675
- mixed chalice, 678
 - tithe, 743
- modus decimandi*, 744
- monasteries, dissolution of, 801
 - rights of, 716
- monition, civil suit may commence by, 517
 - decrees may contain, 531
 - definition of, 534
 - definitive sentence accompanied by, 529
 - enforcing obedience to, 534, 536, 537
 - faculties, when necessary after, 543
 - issue and service of, before sequestration, 623
 - preceding sequestration, 621

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- monition to reside on benefice, 612
 - under Church Discipline Act, 1840...529
- monuments, alteration of faculty for, 541
 - fees for, 777
 - inscriptions on, 672, 777
- morality, offences against, 523
- morning prayer, 657
- mortgage for providing house of residence, sequestration on default as to, 622
 - of advowson, 573
 - benefice, 615, 755—759
 - See also* loans.
 - pew rents, 615, 788
- mortgages by incumbent, 765
- Mortmain Acts, provisions of, 721
- mortmain restrictions, Ecclesiastical Commissioners, how far affected by, 801
- mortuaries, 779
- motion for promotion of office of judge, 516
- municipal boroughs, mayor, alderman or councillor in, clergyman cannot be, 557
 - patronage, 577
- music in church, 479, 677
- name, alteration of, at confirmation, 689
 - (surname), right to change, 699
- national church, meaning of, 360
- naval chaplains, 649
- nave, repair of, 732
- navy, services in, 483
- new district church, repair of, 733
 - parish, bundle in, 479
 - churchwarden of, 464
 - parish clerk in, 476
 - parishioners of, 481
 - vesting of site for church in, 726
- parishes, constitution of, 443
 - fees of, 778
 - patronage of, 568
 - vestry meetings in, 457
- next presentation, purchase of, 593
- nomination preceding presentation, 595
- Nonconformists, 811—822
 - churchwardens, when not eligible as, 461, 462, 811
 - declaration of faith by minister, 813
 - disturbance of worship of, 817
 - Jews, 822
 - liberty of worship, 368
 - locked doors, worship with, 817
 - meeting places, registration of, 369, 817
 - minister, appointment of, 814
 - dismissal of, 816
 - qualifications of, 815
 - tenure of office of, 815
 - residence of, 816
 - trustees for appointment of, 814
 - ministers, exemptions of, 813
 - privileges of, 813
 - rights of, 813
 - property of, 369, 819
 - Quakers, 828
 - registration of meeting places, 369, 817
 - schism, effect of, on Church property, 363 820
 - schools, offices in, not open to, 812
 - site for place of worship, provision for, 822
 - tests, abolition of, 812
 - Toleration Act, 367, 369, 811
 - trustees, vesting of property in, 369, 821
 - Unitarians, 824
 - universities, offices in, not open to, 812
- Nonconformists Relief Act, 813
- non-residence, penalties for, 816

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continues.

- non-residence, sequestration for, 622
 - suspension, 618
- non-residents, promotion of suit by, 667
- north side of holy table, 673
- notice of banns, 698
 - burial without use of burial office, 710
 - Holy Communion, 690
 - intention to apply to Board of Agriculture for approval of sale, 765
- notices during communion service, 690
 - divine service, 680
 - service, 600
- oath at coronation, 381
 - by atheist, 829
 - Unitarians, 829
- oaths of clergyman before institution, collation, 561, 601, 602
 - due obedience to archbishop, 386, 489, 498
 - Jews, 829
 - taken by bishop, 397, 489, 498
 - to be taken before ordination, 551
 - by Nonconformists, 811
 - Roman Catholics, 804
- offences, ecclesiastical, 653—657
 - alterations without faculty, 513, 540, 654, 665
 - articles, maintenance of doctrine contrary to, 654
 - banns of marriage, wrongful publication of, 656
 - blasphemy, 653
 - brawling, 521, 633
 - depraving the prayer book, 651
 - entrance to church, prevention of, 656, 817
 - extortionate fees, 656
 - fabric, in respect of, 540, 654, 667
 - fasts, unauthorised, 657
 - heresy, 653
 - marriage, celebration of, without banns or licence, 656, 693, 703
 - neglect of duties, 657
 - non-residence, 610, 657, 671
 - officiating in parish without consent of incumbent etc., 656
 - ordination, assumption of power of, 656
 - ornaments, in respect of, 529, 545, 655
 - preaching in place of public worship without licence, 656
 - unconsecrated building without licence, 656
 - repair, failure to, 513, 667
 - ritual, in respect of, 529, 655, 665
 - unauthorised prophecies or exorcisms, 657
 - unlawful trading, 522, 537, 557, 621
 - visitation, non-attendance at, 657
 - wearing graduate's hood without title, 657
- offering at churching, 709
 - days, 779
- offerings, Easter, 775
 - mortuaries, 779
- offertory at communion service, 472, 691
- office of judge, promotion of, 516
- "official" of archdeacon's court, 433
- official principal, 412
- officiating, right of incumbent of, 609
- open prayer, definition of, 789
- orchards, tithes on, 746
- orders as to procedure of Ecclesiastical Courts, 519
 - in council ratifying schemes by Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 796
 - letters of, 552
 - of deacons, 552
 - priests, 553
 - the ministry, 549
- ordinary, King as Supreme, 382
 - meaning of, 396, 506. See also bishop; chancellor
- ordination, corrupt, deprivation by reason of, 635
 - declaration and oaths before, 481

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- ordination, examination before, 550
 - fees for, 551
 - letters dimissory, 551
 - of orders, 553
 - of a bastard, 551
 - colonial and extraneous clergy, 553, 554
 - penalties for corrupt, 551
 - si quis*, 550
 - time and place for, 550
 - title for, in case of colonial etc. clergy, 551
 - titles to, 550
- organists, 479
- ornaments, illegal, removal of, by faculty, 545
 - meaning of, 667
 - of church, custody of, 468
 - not necessarily included in consecration, 732
 - the church, 667
 - minister, 672
 - rubric, 667
 - unlawful, 655
- oysters not titheable, 747
- painted windows, 668
- paintings, 668
- parish, alteration of boundaries of, 450
 - beadles, 479
 - boundaries determined by those of manors, 413, 715
 - determination of, 747
 - church, attendance at, 481
 - of whole diocese, cathedral is, 442
 - trustees, 474, 793
 - clerk, appointment of, 475
 - duties of, 476
 - fees of, 476
 - person in holy orders as, 476
 - qualifications of, 475
 - removal of, 477
 - trial of, before archdeacon's court 601
 - consolidated chapelry, 444, 446
 - curate in charge of, 638, 643
 - definition of, 442, 717
 - distinct and separate, 444, 445
 - district, 444, 445
 - chapelry, 444, 447
 - parish under New Parishes Act, 1856 445, 449
 - division into, 716
 - extra-parochial area, 443
 - incumbent of, 451. See also incumbent.
 - inhabitants of, right of sepulture of, 730
 - lay reader, 480
 - military station as an extra-parochial district 443
 - new ecclesiastical, 448
 - organist, 479
 - parish clerks, 475
 - parishioners, 480
 - particular district, 444, 447
 - Peel district, 444, 448
 - parish, 444, 448, 449
 - separate, for spiritual purposes, 444, 447
 - sextons, 478
 - sidesmen, 474
 - vestry, 462
- parishes, ancient, 443
 - constitution of Church into, 442, 716
 - disuniting of, 451
 - union of, 451
- parishioners, repair of nave, falls on, 722
 - rights and duties of, 440
 - of, in church, 727

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- parishioners, rights of, in churchyard, 741
- parliamentary select vestry, 458
- parochia*, meaning of, 442, 714
- parochial chapel, meaning of, 789
- parochianus*, recognition of, 717
- parson, impropriator, 698
 - meaning of, 660. See also incumbent ; rector ; vicar.
- parsonage house, definition of, 758. See also house of residence.
 - meaning of, 758
- partition of advowson, 572
- pastoral staff, use of, 403, 675
- paten, 667
- patent of chancellor, 413, 506
- path, faculty for, across churchyard, 542
- patron, paramount, King as, 893
- patronage, belonging to seller by virtue of office. sale of. 432
 - by trustees in perpetuity, 580
 - Crown, 574, 593
 - disturbance of right of, 585
 - exchange, transfer or alteration of rights of under scheme of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 584
 - in extra-parochial places, 571
 - right of benefice, 579
 - Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, 574
 - spiritual office, 579
 - lapse of, 590
 - limitation of time, 589
 - of benefices, 564
 - bishop, 406, 412, 427, 433, 437, 440
 - canons, 482
 - cathedral and collegiate chapters, 578
 - chapel without district, 567
 - chapter, 426
 - churches and chapels provided by private subscription, 568
 - built or endowed by corporations, 569
 - etc. established under Church Building and New Parishes Acts, 566
 - provided, endowed, and supplied with repair fund, 568
 - coparceners, 571
 - consolidated chapelries, 567
 - dean, 579
 - district chapelries, 567, 571
 - parishes, 567
 - incumbent, 579
 - inhabitants, 579
 - Jews, 829
 - joint tenants, 571
 - Lord Chancellor, 575
 - municipal corporations, 57.
 - new parishes, 568
 - Peel parishes, 568
 - ratepayers, 579
 - separate parish for spiritual purposes, 567
 - tenants in common, 571
 - universities, colleges and public schools, 574, 577
 - vicarages, 566
 - in gift of rector during vacancy in rectory, 579
 - refusal of presentee, 591
 - to institute, 589
 - transfer of, 582
 - transmission of, 582
 - under Church Building Act, 1831...444
 - usurpation, 585
 - where advowson held upon trust for sale, 581
 - benefice under sequestration, 579
 - See also* advowson and presentation.
- peculiars, deans of, 416
 - of Archbishop of Canterbury, 569

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- peculiars, visitation of, 411
- Parish churches, repair of, 734
 - district, curate in charge of, 637
 - fees in, 778
 - parishes and districts, 444, 448, 449
 - patronage of, 568
- peers of the realm, archbishops and bishops not, 887
- penalties for corrupt exchange, 638
 - ordination, 551
 - resignation, 638
 - non-residence, 610
 - in case of simony, 593
 - on colonial or foreign clergy officiating in England without licence, 534
 - under Pluralities Act, 1838...540
- pension, ceaser of, by deed of relinquishment, 681
 - declaration of, 630
 - derived from tithe rentcharge or glebe lands, variation of, 631
 - limit of, 630
 - of archbishop, 890
 - presentation to benefice subject to a, 642
 - resignation with, on account of infirmity, 629
 - under Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871, is a charge on revenues of benefice, 616
- pensioned clerk, status and liability of, 681
- pensions for retired incumbents, scheme for, 788
- persona impersonata*, 603
- petition, act on, 518
 - for faculty, 544
 - to bishop for consecration, 729
- petty canon, 434
- pew, 737—741
 - allotment of, under Church Building Acts, 740
 - appropriation of, by faculty, 542
 - assignment of, 738
 - definit on of, 737
 - derivation of, 737
 - faculty, 740
 - prescriptive right to, 739
 - rent, 471
 - renters, choice of churchwarden by, 464
 - rents, 786—788
 - action for, 787
 - application of surplus to augment stipend, 77
 - ceaser of, on permanent endowment, 787
 - house of residence, use of surplus for purchase, 788
 - mortgage of, 615
 - non-payment of, remedies for, 787
 - payable in advance, 787
 - payment of stipend out of, 788
 - repair of, 739
 - right to by faculty or prescription, 739
 - merely an easement, 789
 - surrender of, 741
- phraseology of trust deed, 869
- pleadings in Ecclesiastical Court, 517
- plough alms, 776
- pluralities, 604, 633
- Pluralities Act, 1838, penalties under, 540
 - Acts, union of benefices under, 608
- poll at vestry meetings, 456
- poor-box, 687. See alms basin.
- post-Reformation canons, 379
- practice in Ecclesiastical Courts, 515—519
 - articles and libels, 517
 - censures, 534
 - civil suits, 517
 - conduct of suits, 517
 - contempt, 532

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

practice in Ecclesiastical Courts—continued.

- criminal suits, 516
- declaration of incapacity to hold preferment, 537
- decrees, enforcement of, 531
- deposition, 539
- deprivation, 535, 535
- disobedience as to decrees, 533
- enforcement of sentences, decrees and orders, 531
- excommunication, 539
- faculty cases, 540—549
 - See also* faculties.
- general procedure, 515
- inhibition under Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874...534
- orders, enforcement of, 531
- penalties under Pluralities Act, 1838...540
- procedure in respect of ecclesiastical offences, 520
 - under Church Discipline Act, 1840...526
 - Clergy Discipline Act, 1892...522
 - Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874...529
- punishments, 534
- sentences, enforcement of, 531
- sequestration, 533
- suspension, 535
- Prayer Book, alteration of prayers in, 382, 659—661
 - depraving the, 654
 - form of service in, 658
 - full title of, 658
 - provision of, 471
 - unlawful addition to service in, 530
 - variation from, 659
- prayer, open, definition of, 789
 - See also* public worship and service.
- prayers for the dead, 672
- preachers, 645
- preaching, 662
 - in unconsecrated place, 609
- prebend, 427
- preconisation, triple, 397
- preferment, incapacity to hold, 537
 - meaning of, 524
- prelate, see archbishop; bishop.
- premiums on leases etc., 764
- Presbyterian Church of England, rules of, 822
- prescription in case of tithes, 744
- prescriptive right to pew, 739
- presentation, 595—601
 - belonging to seller by virtue of office, sale of, 432
 - by co-owners, 596
 - Crown, 596
 - completion of, 597
 - infant, 573
 - lay patron, completion of, 597
 - Lord Chancellor, 576
 - married woman, 573
 - pretending patron, 585
 - spiritual patron, completion of, 597
 - tenant by the curtesy, 573
 - in dower, 573
 - conditional on exchange being carried out, 622
 - form of, 596
- injunction to restrain, 586
- mode of presenting, 595
- nomination preceding, 595
- notice of refusal to present, 600
- notwithstanding lapse, 592
- of alien, 596
 - bastard, 598
 - clerk to benefice subject to a pension, 632

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

presentation—continued.

- presentee, morality of, 598
 - orthodoxy of, 598
 - physical fitness, 599
 - qualifications of, 597
 - sufficiency of learning of, 598
 - sufficient testimony of former good life, 598
- refusal of presentee, lapse through, 591
 - reasons for, 598
- to admit when church is litigious, 600
 - institute, 589
- revocation of, by death of presentee, 597
- right of, disannexed from advowson, 585
- sale of right of, by auction, 583
- self, by patron, 596
- simony, 551, 593, 628, 633
- to benefice in patronage of chapter, 599
- usurpation, 585, 589
- variation cumulado, 597
- where advowson held in trust for a Roman Catholic, 574
 - is mortgaged, 573
- patron is a lunatic, 573
- presentment by churchwarden, 473. See also advowson and patronage.
- presumption as to continuance in faith in which one was born, 558
- priest vicar, 434
- priests, functions of, 553
- primitia*, 779
- Primitive Methodist model deed, 822
- prison chaplain, 650
- private chapel, meaning of 739
 - house, administration of Holy Communion in, 692
 - marriage in, 694
- privileges of clergymen, 555
- Privy Council, Judicial Committee of the, 511
 - powers of, 383, 502, 510, 511, 515, 525, 526
- processional lights, 682
- processions, 682
- proctors, election of, 392
- procurations, meaning of, 440
 - of bishops, 411
- prohibited degrees, table of, provision of, 472
- prohibition, writ of, to Ecclesiastical Courts, 513
- prolocutors of Convocation, 393
- promoters of criminal suit, 516
- promotion of suit by non-residents, 667
- proper chapter, 424
- property, ecclesiastical, 713
 - alienation of, 760
 - chapels, 788
 - characteristics of, 713
 - church rates, 784
 - common fund of Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 783. See also common fund.
 - consecrated churches and churchyards, 718
 - dilapidation, 767. See also dilapidations.
 - dues, 776
 - Easter offerings, 775
 - ecclesiastical by reason of its ownership, 784
 - persons as owners of, 792
 - fees, 777. See also fees.
 - first fruits, 779
 - glebe, 753
 - held for spiritual purposes on behalf of Church of England, 742
 - insurance of, 772
 - leases of, 760. See also leases.
 - mission rooms, 788
 - mortgages for expenditure on house of residence or glebe or chapel, 755
 - owners of, 792
 - parishioners' rights in church, 737

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

property, ecclesiastical—continued.

- parishioners' rights in churchyard, 741
- parsonage house, 758. See also house of residence.
- pew rents, 786. See also pew rents.
- pews, 787. See also pews.
- private benefactions, 778
- Queen Anne's Bounty, 779. See also Queen Anne's Bounty.
- rat. s. church, 458, 784
- registers, 741
- sale of, 763—767
- Sunday schools, 791
- tenth, 779
- tithe rentcharge, 745. See also tithe rentcharge.
- tithes, 742. See also tithes
- property of dissenting churches, 819
- prophecies, unauthorised, 637
- proprietary chapel, meaning of, 790
 - minister of, 647
- Protestant Nonconformists. See Nonconformists.
- provincial constitutions, 377
 - courts, 508, 525, 528, 531
 - deans, 416
- provinces of Church of England, 383
- psalms, use of, 658, 659
- public auction, sale of right of presentation by, 583
 - schools, chaplains of, 651
 - Nonconformists in, 812
 - patronage of, 577
 - Roman Catholics in, 805
- worship and church ministrations, 657—712
 - ablution, ceremony of, 683
 - additional forms of service, 660
 - banns, 694. See also banns
 - baptism, 684. See also baptism.
 - biretta, 672, 675
 - brawling, 469, 663
 - burial, 348, 710
 - candles, 681
 - ceremonies, 675
 - certificates of marriage, 705
 - chancel screen gates, 670
 - churchings of women, 709
 - communion table, 671
 - confirmations, 688
 - credence table, 672
 - crosses, 668
 - crucifixes, 668
 - decorations of the church, 667
 - divine service in general, 657
 - duties and rights of incumbents, 661. See also incumbents.
 - of the clergy, 657. See also clergy.
 - Elements, the, 677
 - elevation of the consecrated Elements, 679
 - fees, 707
 - flowers, vases of, 671
 - Holy Communion, 689. See also Communion.
 - holy matrimony, 692. See also matrimony.
 - homilies, 659
 - hymns, 659
 - images, 668
 - incense, 682
 - incumbents, duties and rights of, 661. See also incumbents.
 - lessons, 658
 - lights, processional, 682
 - litany, use of, 659
 - manual staffs, concealment of, 679
 - marble communion table, 671
 - marriage, certificates of, 705

INDEX. i

ECOLESTIASTICAL LAW—continued.

public worship and church ministrations—continued.

- marriage licences, 701
 - registration of, 705
 - solemnisation of, 695, 704,
 - validity of, 709
- minister, ornaments of the, 672
- mitres, as to, 402, 675
- mixing of the wine with water, 673
- notices during service, 660
- offertory, 691
- ornaments, meaning of, 667
 - of the church, 667
 - minister, 672
- painted windows, 668
- powers of bishop as to, 406, 659—661
- prayers for the dead, 672
- preaching, 659, 662
- processional lights, 682
- processions, 682
- psalms, use of, 658
- publication of banns, 698
- register of baptisms, 687
- registrar's certificate of marriage, 713
- registration of marriages, 705
- reredos, 671
- reservation of the sacrament, 668
- rites and ceremonies, 675
- ritual offences, 665
- sanctus bell, 671
- sermons, 659, 662
- service, alterations and omissions in, 661
- services, order of, 659
- sick, visitation of the, 710
- sign of the cross, making, 684
- solemnisation of marriage, 704
- Stations of the Cross, 668
- tabernacle, 671
- vases of flowers, 671
- vestments, 376, 389, 402, 420, 672—675
- visitation of the sick, 710
- wafer, use of the, 677
- Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, appeal under, 631
 - inhibition under, 534
 - offences cognisable under, 529
 - procedure under, 529
- publication of banns, 698
- pulpit, provision of, 472
- punishments by Ecclesiastical Courts, 684
- purposes, ecclesiastical definition of, 785
 - not essential in ecclesiastical property, 713
- Quakers, affirmations by, 823
 - burial places of, 823
 - difference from other dissenters, 823
 - marriages of, 823
 - recovery of tithes from, 823
- quare impedit*, action of, 586
- Queen Anne's Bounty, 780
 - ecclesiastical repairs controlled by, 770, 771
 - fixtures, grants for, 782
 - Governors of, 780—783
 - insurance money received by, 773
 - loans sanctioned by, 785
 - objects of, 781
 - provision of parsonage houses by, 754, 755
 - rules as to grants from, 781
 - sequestration for non-payment to, 624
- rate, church. See church rate.
- ratepayers, patronage in hands of, 579

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- rates assessed on tithe rent-charge, 749
 - church, 784
 - enforcement of payment of rates by sequestration, 623
- readers, 480
- "reading in," 420, 603
- receiver during sequestration, appointment of, 619
- record of licences and revocation of licences of stipendiary curates, 645
- rector. See incumbent.
 - discipline over, 51
 - lay, 717, 801
 - repair of chancel by, 733, 802
 - suit against for non-repair of chancel, 482
- rectory, appropriate, 561, 717
 - definition of, 560
 - impreparate, 561, 717
 - sinecure, 563
 - See also* benefice.
- recusant, meaning of, 803
- redemption of extraordinary tithe rentcharge, 752
 - land tax, loans for, 760
 - tithe, 750
- register of banns, 698
 - baptisms, 686, 741
 - licences granted to members of religious orders, 807
 - of burials and baptisms, 741
- registers, provision of, 472
- registrars, 412
- registration of burials, 712
 - marriage, 705
 - meeting places of dissenters, 817
 - places of worship, 869
 - Roman Catholic places of worship, 809
 - priest, 807
 - synagogue, 825
- rejoinders, 518
- religious bodies other than the Church of England, 863—870, 803—829
 - Jews, 824
 - Protestant Nonconformists, 811
 - Quakers, 823
 - Roman Catholics, 803
 - Unitarians, 824
- houses, rights of, 716
- orders, 807
 - gifts to, 810
 - worship, Acts protecting, 869
 - liberty of, Acts providing for, 868
 - See also* public worship.
- relinquishment, cesser of pension by deed of, 631
 - deed of, 668
- remains, human, exhumation of, 542
 - removal of, 642, 731
- rentcharge, tithe, 745, 748
- rents, pew, 736. See also pew rents.
 - mortgage of, 615
- repair by churchwardens, 734
 - of chancel, 482, 513, 732, 767, 802
 - chapel, 788
 - church, 468, 782
 - borrowing for, 734, 755
 - in particular and patronage district, 733
 - Peel parishes, and districts, 734
 - episcopal property, 772
 - nave, 782
 - new district church, 723
 - parish church by parishioners, 482
 - pew, 736
 - rents applied to, 733
 - private aisle, 733

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- repairs by sequestrator, 624
 - faculty for, 643
- report of Church Estates Commissioners, 797
 - Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 797
- repulsion from communion, 691
- request, letters of, when issued, 508
- veredos, legality of, 668, 671
- reservation of the sacrament, 688
- residence house. See house of residence.
 - of incumbent, 610
- resignation bonds, 628
 - of archbishop, 389
 - benefice, 627
 - engagement for, 628
 - illegal agreements for, 628
 - in pursuance of an engagement, 629
 - on account of infirmity, 629
 - behalf of lunatic incumbent, 630
 - penalty for corrupt, 638
 - bishop, 407
- responsive allegations, 518
- "reverend," title of, not confined by law to persons in "holy orders," 655
- reverter on land ceasing to be used as school site, 724
- review, commission of, 502
- ring, episcopal, illegality of, 402
 - marriage not essential, 705
- rites and ceremonies, 675
 - effect of alteration of, 363
- ritual, historical investigation as to, 666
 - legality of ecclesiastical practices, as to, 666
 - offences, 655, 665
- rochet, the, 402
- Roman canon law, abolition of portion of, 373
- Roman Catholics, 808—811
 - advowsons owned by, 806
 - charitable gifts to church etc., 810
 - charities and charitable gifts, 810
 - church patronage by, exercise of, 806
 - churchwarden, as, 807
 - constable, as, 807
 - Crown patronage held by, 576
 - hierarchy, 808
 - High Commissioner of the Church of Scotland cannot be a, 804
 - high constable, as, 807
 - offices of State withheld from, 804
 - licence of member of religious order, 807
 - Lord Chancellor of Great Britain cannot be a, 804
 - Lieutenant of Ireland cannot be a, 804
 - masses for the dead, 810
 - overseer, as, 807
 - patronage held in trust for, 574
 - petty constable, as, 807
 - presentation by, 806
 - where Roman Catholic joint patron with another, 806
 - priest, exemptions of, 807
 - registration of, 807
 - right to sit in House of Lords, 807
 - property of, 809
 - school, offices in, not open to, 808
 - status of, 804
 - throns cannot be occupied by, 804
 - universities, offices in, open to, 805
 - void bequests and trusts, 810
 - worship, places of, 809
- Roman law, gifts to church, under, 357
- Rome, appeals to, 500
 - Church of. See Church of Rome, 376
 - scot, 776

INDEX.

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- Royal Family, prayers for, alteration of, 383
- rubric, ornaments, 667
- rubrics, archbishops bound by, 388
- rules of Ecclesiastical Courts, 619
- rural dean, duties of, 441
 - deaneries, 442
 - deans, appointment of, 440
 - qualification of, 440
- sacrament, reservation of the, 3. See also Communion, Holy.
- sacrilege by taking goods out of church, 726
- sacristan, 478
- saffron and silver cordua, tithes on, 743
- salaries of archbishops, 389
- sale of curacy, 639
 - glebe lands, 761
 - patronage or presentation belonging to seller by virtue of office, 482
- sanctus bell, illegality of, 671
- scheme for union of benefices, 607
- schemes by Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 798
- schism, deprivation for, 638
- school chapel, 790
- School Sites Acts, provisions of, 724
- school, Sunday, 791
- schools, public, patronage of, 577
- Scotch clergy, restrictions on, as to officiating in England, 555
- scribes, 412
- sea, forms of prayer to be used at, 483
- Seamen, Missions to, chaplain of, 651
- searches, fees for, 779
- seats in church, assignment of, 470. See also pew.
- secession from membership of a church, 362
- sect, meaning of, 363
- secular purposes, conversion of consecrated ground, 540
- select vestry, bankrupt cannot be member of, 459
 - by adoption of Vestries Act, 1831...459
 - local Act of Parliament, 453
 - constitution of, 458
 - customary, 458
 - election of, 459
 - meeting of, 459
 - quorum, 459
- senior vicar, 434
- sentence of consecration, 728
- sentences, enforcement of, 531
- sequestration, 533, 616—627
 - appointment of curate during, 620
 - curates during, 626
 - bankruptcy of judgment creditor, 620
 - continuance, 618
 - definition of, 616
 - deprivation in case of, 536
 - during vacancy, 624
 - for debt, 617
 - non-residence, 622
 - in cases of default by incumbent, 622
 - proceedings in ecclesiastical courts, 631
 - meaning of, 616
 - monition generally precedes, 621
 - mortgage debt, to levy amount of, 619
 - nature and occasions of the process, 616
 - on a spoliation, 621
 - avoidance of benefice, 624
 - bankruptcy, 617
 - of incumbent, 630
 - default in payment or effecting insurance under mortgage, 622
 - non-payment of curate's stipend, 623
 - to Queen Anne's Bounty, 624

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

sequestration—continued.

- on suspension for unlawful trading or dealing, 621
 - generally, 621
- patronage in right of benefice under, 579
- position of incumbent during, 626
- priority of sequestrations, 626
- receiver, appointment of, 619
- return to writ of, 619
- rights of parties during, 625
- under Clerical Residences Repair Act, 1838...626
- Pluralities Act, 1838...626
- suspension supersedes sequestration in pursuance of a writ, 619
- warrant of, 617
 - effect of issue of, 625
- sequestrator, actions etc. by, 625
 - allowance to, 619
 - appointment of curate as, 639
 - levy of distress by, 625
 - of vacant benefice, churchwardens as, 473
 - position of, 625
 - proceedings by, for recovery of profits, 625
 - profits recoverable by, 626
 - repairs by, 625
- service, alterations in, 661
 - divine, 657
 - notices during, 660
 - number of, 660
 - special and additional forms of, 660
 - unauthorised, 655
 - See also public worship.
- sermons etc. as regards law of libel, 556
- sexton, 478
 - woman may be a, 478
- ship, divine service on board, 649
- sick, administration of Holy Communion to, 710
 - visitation of the, 710
- sidesmen, 474
- simony, 522, 593
 - declaration against, 594
 - deprivation by reason of, 635
 - sale of curacy, 639
- sinecure rectory, 563
- si quis, the, 550
- site for church, conveyance of land for, 729
 - place of worship for dissenters, provision of, 822
- sites for churches and churchyards, 721
- sittings, disposal of, under Church Building Acts, 786. See also pew.
- societies for religious ministrations outside England and Wales, 484
- solemnisation of marriage, 704. See also marriage.
- solicitors can practise in Ecclesiastical Courts, 504
- soul scot, 776
- souls, care of, 609
- Sovereign, supremacy of the, 380
- Speaker, chaplain of, 652
- special licences (marriage), 701
- "spiritual purposes" distinguished from "ecclesiastical purposes," 448
- spiritualities of bishop, 408
- spoliation, sequestration on a, 621
- staff, pastoral, legal position of, 403
- stained glass windows, 668
- State endowment, withdrawal of, in colonies, 491
 - recognition of the Church by, 356
 - relations of, to the Church, 358
- Stations of the Cross and Passion, 668
- "Statutum Judaismo," 825
- stipendiary curate's declaration, 639
- strict meaning of ecclesiastical law, 853
- style of archdeacon, 439

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- style of bishop, 404
 - dean of chapter, 421
- sub-dean, 421
- suffragan bishop, 404
- suicide, burial of, 710
- suit for penalties for non-residence, 610
 - of duplex querela, 588
- Sunday schools, 791
- superannuation, in wages of in plains, 650, 651
- supremacy of the Sovereign, 330
- surname, right to change, 699
- surplice fees, 776
 - provision of, 472
- surrender of pew, 741
- surrogate of chancellor, 415
- surveyor of dilapidations, 769
- suspension, 635
 - for non-residence, 613
 - of canons, 428
 - lecturer or preacher, 646
 - sequestration on, 621
- synagogue, disturbance of, 827
 - registration of, 627
 - secretary of, powers of, 827
- synods, colonial, powers etc. of, 492, 494
 - ecclesiastical provincial synods, 330
- tabernacle, illegality of, 671
- table, holy. See communion table.
 - of fees, 776
 - lessons, 658
 - prohibited degrees, 472
- tablet inviting prayers for the dead, 672
- tablets, erection of, 541
- taxation by clergy, discontinuance of, 393
- taxes, enforcement of payment of, by sequestration, 623
- tenant by the curtesy, presentation by, 573
- tenants in common, patronage of, 571
- temporalities of bishop, 408
- tenth, 400, 779
- territorial force, chaplain of, 648
 - title of bishop in colonies, 489
 - bishops in foreign parts, 498
- Thirty-nine Articles, deprivation through failure to read publicly, 635
 - maintenance of doctrine contrary to, 654
 - reading of, 603
- timber, cutting of, by incumbent, 754
- tithes, 742—753
 - animals feræ nature are not subject to, 743
 - annexation of, to district church, 724, 752
 - parsonage or vicarage, 727
 - composition real, 744
 - exception of, out of united benefices, 606
 - great, 743
 - in London, 753
 - land exempt from, 744
 - loans for expenses of commutation of, 760
 - meaning of, 742
 - mineral, 747
 - mixed, 743
 - modus, 744
 - of fish or fishing, 747
 - mills, 747
 - owners of, meaning of, 745
 - payable out of what things, 742
 - personal, 743
 - predial, 743
 - recovery of, from Quakers, 828
 - rectorial, 743

INDEX

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- tithes—continued.
 - small, 743
 - tithe rentcharge, 745
 - vicarial, 743
- tithe rentcharge, apportionment of, 746
 - custody of, 746
 - award of, 746
 - conversion of corn rents into, 750
 - distress for, 749
 - extraordinary, 751
 - limitation of action for, 748
 - merger of, 75
 - minimum sub-division of, 747
 - nature of, 746
 - on fish, 747
 - hops, orchards and gardens, 746
 - saffron and silva cadua, 743
 - payment of, 748
 - rates assessed upon, 749
 - recovery of, 749
 - redemption of, 750
- title to orders, 550
- tolls, exemption of clergy from, 556
- tombstones, erection of, 541
- trading by clerk, 522
 - restrictions on clergyman as to, 557
 - unlawful, deprivation in, case of, 537
 - sequestration on suspension for, 621
- translation of bishop, 399
- trees in churchyard, 768
- trial by archbishop, 385
- triple preconisation, 397
- trust, advowson held in, 573
 - deed, phraseology of, 369
 - deeds creating an endowment, construction of, 366
 - (model) of Nonconformist Churches, 822
 - for building of church, 773
- trustees, church, 474
 - vested in, 726
 - diocesan associations, 802
 - for appointment of dissenting minister, 814
 - of patronage under Church Building Act, 1831...444
 - vesting of property of dissenting churches in, 821
- tunicle, 673, 674
- unbeneficed clergy, 636—656
 - assistant curates, 638
 - chaplains, 647
 - curates in charge, 637
 - lecturers, 645
 - ministers of chapels of ease, 646
 - proprietary chapels, 647
 - in charge of a district, 637
 - parish, 638
 - position and ministrations of, 636
 - preachers, 645
 - person, burial of, 710
- unconsecrated place, preaching in, 609
- union of benefices, 604
 - commission to inquire into expediency of, 607
 - dissolution of, 608
 - scheme for, 407
- churches for administrative purposes, 265
 - not differing fundamentally in doctrine, 365
- parishes, 451
- Unitarians, 824
 - declaration of faith by, 824
- Unitarians, oaths by, 824
- United Methodist Church, constitution of, 822

INDEX.

ECCLIESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- universities, patronage of, 577
 - church built or endowed by, 569
 - right of patronage of, where patron is Roman Catholic, 574
- unlawful trading, deprivation in case of, 537
 - suspension for, sequestration on, 621
 - See also* trading.
- usage, general and unbroken, title of, 677
- usurpation, 582
- vacancy of benefice, care of seat during, 685
- vacation of bishopric, 40
- canonry, 431
- vases of flowers on holy table, 671
- vault, construction of, 641
- vestments, 672
 - of archbishop, 389
 - bishop, 376, 389, 402
 - canon, 420
 - dean of chapter, 420
- Vestries Act, 1831, adoption of, 459
- vestry, the, 452—460
 - churchwardens and stewards, appointment of, by, 463
 - clerks, 460
 - consent of, to alteration, 454
 - faculty, 544
 - constitution of, 452
 - functions of, 453
 - in new parishes, 457
 - inspection of churchwardens' books by, 453
 - joint, 459
 - meeting of, 454
 - minutes etc., 457
 - place of, 455
 - poll at, 456
 - voting at, 455
 - opinion of, in case of grant of faculty, 546
 - parish clerk etc., election of, by, 457
 - quasi-vestry meetings, 458
 - rate making by, 453
 - right of women to vote in, 458
 - See also* select vestry.
 - select vestry, 458
 - vesting of ecclesiastical duties, where civil duties have been transferred to a borough council, 457
- veto of archbishops, 389
- vicar choral, 434
 - duties of, 436
 - consent of, when necessary to grant of faculty, 546
 - emoluments of, 718
- vicar-general, 412
- vicarage, 561
- visible Church of Christ, definition of, 370
- visitation by archbishop, 385
 - archdeacon, 439
 - episcopal, 409
 - fees, recovery of, from churchwarden, 465
 - of chapter, 425
 - by dean, 419
 - "peculiars," 411
 - the sick, 710
 - periods for, 411
- visitor, King as supreme, 382
 - powers and duties of, 410, 411
- voluntary association of individuals forming a church, 362
- vote in respect of tithe rentcharge, 563
- wafer, use of the, 677
- Wales, chapel in, 790
- warrant of sequestration, 617
- waste, action for, 769

INDEX.

ECCLIASTICAL LAW—continued.

- waste liability of bishop for, 768
 - in case of church property, 767
- Welsh dioceses, duties in, 618
 - language, knowledge of, 618
- Wesleyan model trust deed, chapel held by, 618, 620
- Westminster, advowsons held by, 578
- widow, occupation of house of residence by, 668
- windows, painted, 668
- Winchester, advowsons held by, 578
- wine, mixing with water, 678
 - remnant of, after service, 683, 684
- woman may be a sexton, 478
 - churchwarden, 461
 - vote of, at vestry meeting, 461
- women, churching of, 709
- workhouse, chaplain of, 651
- worship, acts preventing brawling etc. at places of, 369
 - liberty of, acts providing for, 368
 - places of, registration of, 369
 - See also* public worship.
- writ de excommunicatione capiendis, 639
 - de jure patronatus*, 600
 - de restitutione temporalium*, 408
 - fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis*, 617
 - levari facias*, 617
 - requestrari facias de bonis ecclesiasticis*, 617
- writs for convocation, 391
- York, Archbishop of, salary of, 389
 - special privileges of, 388
- Chancery Court of, 509
- dioceses of province of, 384

BURIALS. See title BURIAL AND CREMATION.

CHURCHYARDS, DISUSED. See title OPEN SPACES AND RECREATION GROUNDS.

CIVIC PARISHES. See title LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

COLLEGIATE BODIES. See titles CHARITIES; EDUCATION.

CREMATION. See title BURIAL AND CREMATION.

MARRIAGES. See title HUSBAND AND WIFE.

NOTARIES. See title NOTARIES.

RATING OF ECCLIASTICAL PROPERTY. See title RATES AND RATING.

REGISTRATION. See titles BURIAL AND CREMATION; HUSBAND AND WIFE;

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

